In this Holiday Season of the usual colds and flus, compounded with reports of overflowing and chaotic hospital emergency rooms, it seemed entirely appropriate to give Dr. Len Horowitz a call, once again, to enter into a discussion about possibilities concerning the upper respiratory problems that are plaguing so many people throughout the United States, as well as exploring some new possibilities for healing—especially of those ones locked into an apparent persistent or recurring syndrome of illness, fatigue, etc.

As could also be expected, we were not disappointed by what Dr. Horowitz had to say. Far from it! Dr. Horowitz is always on the leading edge of new healing modalities, as well as being aware of “the truth behind the shadows” concerning the designer bugs we are enduring right now. And he is not afraid to speak out on these issues,

Update From Our Editor

If you're reading this, we must have made it through the initial hoopla of Y2K without any serious bumps in the road. That doesn't necessarily mean YOU had a smooth ride, just that WE managed to get this paper out to you without a breakdown in the bucket brigade.

As I write this, not long after midnight and into the first day of the new year, there have been reports of minor problems ranging from power outages over small areas of the Midwest and Ontario, to ailing slot machines in a Delaware casino. However, nothing major SEEMS to have yet happened to upset the start of a new millennium.

The most interesting pattern I have noticed this evening is the inverse relationship between the media source and the Y2K bugs being reported. In other words, the larger or major the media source, the less we are told about anything going wrong; the smaller or minor the source, the more reports about Y2K-related glitches.

On another, very pleasant subject, we here at The SPECTRUM have received quite a few Christmas cards—wonderful, warm, and sometimes downright astonishing cards! The mostly hand-written messages which accompany these cards are filled with love and hope and optimism and thanks about our mission as a source of unique and valued information.

Sometimes we here are too close to things to see the effect of our work as you see it, as it impacts you. But we are sincerely thankful for the many notes of appreciation AND your kind gestures of financial help.

It is somewhat of a marvelous mystery, each month, how the paper comes together. We are VERY much aware of an Unseen Hand at work to Guide certain materials to us—so that we may, in turn, share them with you. And again, your confirming notes of appreciation make the whole process worthwhile—and exciting.

And speaking of which, there's a feeling of excitement in the air as this new year and new millennium get underway. Of course the doomsayers preach that it's going to be a doozy of a year; but usually these judgements are a matter of perspective. In other words, remember the old adage: "Luck favors those who help themselves."

What comes to mind, for example, are the pictures of devastation all around some single home which remains standing and untouched. Why is that? Why indeed! Answering that question is where things start to get interesting. And I think we're going to see a lot of those kinds of interesting teaching examples as this year unfolds.

In any event, whether we're prone to see the glass as half full or half empty, it would be wise to recognize when we've been the recipient of a Miracle which causes some disaster to pass by us and, instead, clobber the doomsayers.

So, as this new year and new millennium begin, we here at The SPECTRUM sincerely wish for you the same kind of Miracles which keep us going. We may not understand them any better than you do—but all of us can at least learn to recognize them and appreciate when we've been blessed with their Presence!

HOPE AND HELL IN NORTH KOREA

From the Internet, 12/26/99: [quoting]
"...current ominous trends in North Korea include: the internment of thousands of political and religious dissidents in concentration camps; the raiding of over $8 billion from Japanese credit unions; the mass counterfeiting of American $100 bills; the frantic development of biological, chemical, and even nuclear weapons, as well as the long-range ballistic missile technology to deliver them; the bogus exchange of "weapons facility" inspection rights for massive Western food aid, which in turn is stockpiled, along with oil and technology, as part of North Korea's ongoing war preparation efforts against the south."

As with China and Russia, North Korea is milking the U.S. for all it can get while undertaking massive preparations for war. Meanwhile we are being told to "be happy, don't worry". While we can (and must) pray that God's will be done to avoid this, the fact is that every indication very strongly suggests that these three nations are, in fact, preparing for a war that will happen! At this point the only thing that may prevent it is if Clinton capitulates to their blackmail and permits them to take Taiwan, S. Korea, the Spratly Islands, and Russia's former territories. According to the agreements reached by Jiang and Yeltsin earlier this month, these are the only conditions by which these three nations would not take definitive action to destroy U.S. hegemony in the world.

If Clinton capitulates (and he is likely to, since it would advance the globalists' plans), China and Russia would permit the new world government to be formed around regional economic/military blocs. These regional blocs are to be patterned after the EU. Ten economic/military blocs is what the Club of Rome planned years ago. If there are ten, the Ten Nation Confederacy prophesied in Daniel 7:7, 23-24, Revelation 13:1 and Revelation 17:3, 7, 12-13 would be fulfilled, and the last days of the Bible would soon be upon us. In any event, time may be very, very short.

It looks like we haven't got much time left before things are going to be really different upon this planet.

EGYPT CANCELS MILLENNIUM PYRAMID CAPSTONE CEREMONY FLIGHT 990 RAMIFICATIONS LIKELY REASON

1 of 2

The New World Order's beer blast and shindig scheduled to usher in some "Luciferian" Age beginning in 2000—highlighted by putting a "gold" capstone upon the Great Pyramid while Masonic symbols are projected upon the sides of the massive structure—have been cancelled—by Egypt.

It seems Egypt is still highly upset about the crash of EgyptAir Flight 990 and subsequent defamatory and unfounded insinuations by the U.S. government that co-pilot Gameel el-Batoutty crashed the plane and killed all 217 passengers in some lunatic suicide action. (From the website

EGYPT CANCELS PLANS TO CAP A PYRAMID IN GOLD FOR MILLENNIUM

12/27/1999 10:40 AM

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—In an apparent nod to public opinion, the government on Thursday canceled its plan to cap the Great Pyramid in gold for the millennium celebrations.

Egypt had planned to usher in the New Year by affixing a gold-encased capstone on the Great Pyramid, built as a tomb for King Cheops about 4,500 years ago.

The 30-foot high cap was to be lowered by helicopter at the stroke of midnight Dec. 31, making the broken pyramid whole again, if only for a night.

Culture Minister Farouk Hosni gave no reason for backing off the plan, but said the decision was made despite technical advice that it would not have damaged the monument, Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported.

Egypt's millennium celebrations feature a 12-hour concert at the foot of the Giza pyramids with 1,000 performers.

Egypt, whose recorded history goes back 6,000 years, is promoting the celebration as the start of its seventh millennium. [End quoting]

The story is far from over on this matter since the major news media were quick to say that some sort of a celebration and ceremony was still "on" for the new millennium. One suspects a tug-of-war was going on behind the scenes between the group which was determined to proceed with the gold-capstone occult ceremony and the group which was attempting to put a stop to the event. Keep a close eye on this one, though the truth of the matter may not come out for some time, especially if the occult ceremony went underground—maybe literally!

Those of you who heard Gordon-Michael Scallion on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program for New Year's Eve were treated to a great discussion of the mysteries of the pyramids, including the BURIED pyramids (several hundred feet down) yet to be revealed to the public.

"UNPRECEDENTED" HURRICANE RAGES ACROSS EUROPE— NEARLY 60 DEAD

From the Internet, SIGHTINGS, <<http://www.sightings.com>>, 12/26/99: [quoting]

PARIS (AFP)—At least 57 people were killed across northern Europe Sunday as record-breaking winds of up to 213 kilometres per hour (132 miles per hour) raged through the region.

The north of France was the worst-affected area, with at least 27 people dead. Gales there were the strongest ever recorded, according to the official French forecasting agency, Météo-France.

"In the meteorological records, there is no trace of a phenomenon as violent as this" said Hubert Brunet, chief forecaster in the agency's Toulouse station.

At least 12 people died in storms in Germany, most in accidents caused by falling trees.

"This is the worst hurricane Germany has ever had" said Petra Fechner, an official at the national meteorological office's branch in the western city of Offenbach.

At least 11 people died in Switzerland, two after a cablecar fell to the ground in the central Swiss Alps.

Seven people, including a six-year-old child, were killed by falling trees in different parts of Switzerland. One of the victims was a swimmer in a pool at Dielsdorf, near Zurich, felled by falling debris.

In Britain, at least five died, among them two sailors swept into icy seas.

In France, more than two million households experienced power cuts. Several airports and railway stations throughout the country were temporarily shut down.

Attractions in Paris were badly hit. Six people were seriously injured by falling trees in the Disneyland Paris theme park. The mayor of Paris, Jean Tiberi, called for the storm to be declared a natural disaster.

Emergency plans were launched in many towns in the region.

The 27 victims included a couple who died when the roof on their fourth-floor apartment in the Paris suburb of Argenteuil fell in. Their new-born baby survived.

A woman died when winds tore her house apart in northern France. A farmer was killed when a hay stack toppled onto him.

Ten people died in road accidents linked to the high winds.

An 80-year-old man froze to death after icy rain flooded into his damaged house in northern France. Another woman drowned in the Rhine river.

Two pedestrians and a hunter were crushed by trees in different parts of France.

In Germany, seven people in the southwestern state of Baden-Wuerttemberg were killed in accidents caused by falling trees. Two more people died in road accidents in the southern state of Bavaria.

Another man died in the state of Rhineland-Palatinate, police said.

In Britain, the Coast Guard Sunday abandoned efforts to find a 42-year-old sailor who disappeared off the northwest coast of Scotland.

Earlier, the Coast Guard in the south of England said they had halted efforts to find a Ukrainian sailor who fell from a ship in the English Channel on Saturday.

A man from Devon in southwest Britain drowned when a river burst its banks and flooded his house. Another man in the northern city of Liverpool died of a heart attack after he was blown into a cold river on Friday.

Underground railway services in London were paralyzed after power supplies to the network were cut off by debris blown into the Thames river.

A sailor died Friday on a boat off the southwest Scilly Isles, after an accident caused by heavy winds.

In Norway, seven people were rescued early Sunday after a freight ship ran aground outside Haugesund off Norway's western coast, the news agency NTB reported.

In Belgium, two people died in a road accident caused by a violent hailstorm. Heavy rain flooded roads near the southern cities of Liege and Namur. Rail services between France and Belgium were heavily disrupted.

And in freezing temperatures in Russia, five people died of hypothermia in Moscow.

Forecasters said the storm was expected to play itself out over Germany and Central Europe on Monday. [End quoting]

The intensity of these storms suggests artificial methods being employed to generate them. The REAL question is what political motives are behind this likely natural disaster warfare.

22 KILLED AS ANOTHER STORM LASHES FRANCE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 12/29/99: [quoting]

PARIS—Still struggling to pick itself up after being pounded by a fierce storm on Sunday, France was hit with another, equally fierce storm overnight that killed 22 people, raising the death toll since Christmas to at least 66, officials said Tuesday.

Storms have left more than 100 people dead in Western Europe in the last four days, but France has been hit the hardest. This latest storm sent gale-force winds tearing through the southern half of the country

Monday night and Tuesday morning, in southwestern coastal areas like La Rochelle, luxury yachts, once tied up in the harbors, were flung up on shore.

The new storm—again with winds reaching at times up to 125 mph—heaped new trouble on emergency repair crews already working around the clock to restore services knocked out by Sunday's storm. It toppled electric-line pylons, turned over trucks, flattened trees like matchsticks, and collapsed thousands of roofs.

A FIRST-HAND WEATHER REPORT FROM ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 12/27/99: [quoting]

Let's see—it's after midnight. The date just turned to Dec. 27th.

The temperature (according to the time/temp lady on the phone) is 39 degrees Fahrenheit. I'm in Anchorage, Alaska. The snow is melting and water has been running down the streets all day. This isn't the first warm "spell" we've had this unusually warm winter, either. Last week it got up into the 50s. [End quoting]

And much of the southwestern United States is breaking records for warm and dry weather, with several large wildfires raging in remote (and not so remote) areas of Southern California.

The weather is breaking records all around the world and the cause seems to be more than man playing with the weather.

There is a severe melting of the polar ice caps and I just heard on the Art Bell late-night talk-radio show that some of the islands around the Tonga area—in the South Pacific—are sinking and being evacuated.

From all that I've been reading it appears that the main cause of this—and it is predicted to get much worse over the next few years—is the approach of what Zachariah Sitchen calls the 12th planet. There are other names for it, several of which are Nibiru and Herculobus.

This planet is the one that approaches our Sun approximately every 3600 years from an orbit that takes it out around another sun and then around ours and back. It always causes severe damage to the Earth on its rounds. Noah and the flood was one of the results.

Read the book of Revelation in the Bible for a description of what to expect within the next few years as this planet gains speed and comes nearer in its orbit. About 7 years later there is predicted to be a milder disturbance as it passes beyond our Sun on its journey back to the other sun which it orbits.

The time element that I have read for this to be at its maximum damage distance is late spring/early summer 2003.

Naturally, the governments aren't telling us this, but the elite of the world are certainly scurrying in preparing to save their own necks.

MURDER IN THE GOLD MARKET: BILLIONAIRE'S MYSTERIOUS DEATH

Update by Sherman H. Skolnick <skolnick@ameritech.net> 12/8/99: [quoting]

Since my original story about the strange death of Edmond J. Safra, it was announced as if the matter is closed by the alleged confession of Safra's male nurse, stating that the nurse supposedly set the fire himself.

Please note: the Monaco police are puzzled by the following:

(1) The male nurse was hired 5 months previously. (That puts it about the time the Bank of England together with Safra's bank empire were implicated reportedly in a plot to force down the price of gold.)

(2) The Monaco police are puzzled after a psychiatric study of the male nurse. He was hired at the huge sum of 600 dollars PER DAY. Yet, the male nurse was apparently known to be deranged and unstable. He was formerly part of secret operations, as with the U.S. Green Berets, possibly as part of a reported "hit" team.

(3) Under these circumstances, the police and others are pondering whether some criminal gang, such as the Russian mafia, who had grievances against banker Safra, arranged to plant the "male nurse" in Safra's dwelling to arrange whatever caused his death. This also opens the matter to some discussion that this "male nurse" was prepared to take the rap, or be the patsy, if his story unraveled.

Can they prosecute him if he is a "mental case"? In the U.S., such a criminal suspect or defendant is sent away for "treatment" rather than put on trial. And more: was the "male nurse" planted by some intelligence agency having a motive, as in my earlier story, to snuff out banker Safra?

(4) the monopoly press, having downplayed or left out entirely these details, gives the false impression it is a simple matter and the case is closed. NOT SO.

The founder and major owner of an international financial empire, active in clandestine gold trading, was murdered. This occurred at a key point in the gold market.

Highly secretive, Edmond J. Safra died in a pre-dawn incident when two alleged masked intruders reportedly got into the heavily-secured building in Monaco, and started a fire in or near his two-story penthouse apartment. His copper-domed dwelling is atop a six-story pink stucco building containing the branch of the bank he founded and of which he was the major owner, the Republic National Bank of New York and its subsidiaries, such as Safra Republic Holdings of Luxembourg. He lived a short distance from the Grimaldi family royal palace and the Monte Carlo casino.

Safra was officially a resident of the tax-haven principality notorious for its gold smuggling and its shoreline docks and warehouses used to transfer contraband worldwide. [SEE FOOTNOTE ONE.] Ships, some reportedly without names or identification, load and unload there.

Monaco police are puzzled as to the apparent absence of his bodyguard. Was it an inside job? Safra died, suffocated from the blaze. Was the latest arson ingredient used, namely, rocket propellant, which burns furiously and rapidly, leaving little trace? Formed in 1966, Safra's banking and precious metals empire was founded and built primarily after the creation of the State of Israel, by Safra acting as the savvy money laundry expert for wealthy Sephardic Jews desiring to extract their fortunes as they were fleeing Arab countries where they resided. Safra was reportedly an expert on gold smuggling and the use of the precious metal in secret financing of covert operations, such as political assassinations, by intelligence agencies, such as the American CIA. [SEE FOOTNOTE TWO.]

During 1999, gold bullion had declined to about $252/ounce, a record low in recent years, more than $30/ounce below the COST OF PRODUCTION of the most efficient gold mines, those in Canada. South African mines, going so deep in the Earth and costly producers, complained they were being ruined. One such mine went into bankruptcy.

Gold bullion prices had a momentous upswing after September, 1999, when most of the European central banks made a surprise announcement that they are deferring, for five years, the dumping of gold which previously they had done, supposedly because they did not like to have gold in their reserves anymore.

Just prior to that, the Bank of England held a gold auction, supposedly of some of its reserves. Actually, the Bank of England was offering gold owned only on paper, not actual gold in their possession. Upon the downfall of the Soviets, corrupt former Commissars stole thousands of tons of the Soviet gold treasury and made a crooked deal with the Dutch, beholden to the Vatican.

A Dutch bank octopus, Algemene Bank Nederland, ABN, has reportedly been using that stolen gold to buy numerous banks in 15 U.S. cities. ABN's American flagship is La Salle National Bank of Chicago, a long notorious haven for secret accounts to bribe state and federal judges through offshore funds parking.

The Dutch parked this former Soviet gold at or near an airport in Switzerland, for swift, clandestine shipments anywhere on the globe.

Basically, the Bank of England was thus offering by auction Soviet gold they did not own. When currency and gold pirate, George Soros, found out, he began an attack on the Bank of England, whereby gold shot up to almost $330/ounce. This was caused, in part, by Soros pressing for actual DELIVERY of the gold offered by the Bank of England, on paper, sold to Soros and others.

The possibility of demand for DELIVERY is a key part of commodity trading, although actual delivery is seldom demanded. Caught in the middle of the squeezing of the Bank of England and other "short sellers", among those selling borrowed or stolen gold not yet in their possession was reportedly Republic National Bank and Safra's gang of gold smugglers and worldwide criminals.

One well-informed commentator on the rigging of the gold market, calling his essay "I Accuse", said the Republic National Bank was part of an anti-trust monopoly fraudulently forcing down the price of gold, damaging gold mine shareholders, and various smaller nations. [SEE FOOTNOTE THREE.]

Thus, using his inside knowledge, George Soros launched his attack, thereby fingering and blackmailing the criminal operations of the Bank of England and an accomplice, Goldman Sachs brokerage. Realizing gold is the "killer metal", and his opponents were relying on stolen gold not in their possession, Soros apparently was using the two-faced Safra and Safra's reported precious metals assassins.

Entering into this picture was Alan Greenspan and his highly conspiratorial PRIVATE BANK called the Federal Reserve, used in efforts to rescue those caught in the short-selling trap worked by Soros. Soros was demanding huge DELIVERY from Goldman Sachs, a major gold contract peddler.

To force down the price of gold by criminal means, Goldman Sachs and others had sold short, subject to DELIVERY, the equivalent of TEN YEARS OF GOLD MINE PRODUCTION worldwide! And Safra and gang were in the middle.

A default of a short-selling contract results in the "long" buyer owning everything of the short seller. Soros was about to own Goldman Sachs and have an armlock on the Bank of England.

So Goldman Sachs reportedly was considering the invoking of a seldom-used contract provision called "force majeure" that an Act of God, horrendous storm, or such, made fulfilling the gold contract impossible. Of course, under the facts, this would be a ridiculous assertion by Goldman Sachs as aided by Greenspan. (Critics call him REDSPAN, since he acts like a rotten Soviet Commissar.)

To again fraudulently force down the price of gold, in December 1999, the Bank of England conducted another "phantom" gold auction, purporting to sell what they did not possess—that is, the gold stolen by the Moscow criminals and handled by the Dutch with the aid of the Vatican and the Swiss. Just as gold started to collapse again, Edmond J. Safra was murdered.

This is not the first time such an assassination happened. At a key point in gold treachery in the 1970s, a major gold promoter who tangled with the paper-money crowd like the Rockefellers, was thrown to his death from the window of a building in Indianapolis, Indiana.

A flood of stories has developed—such as Safra was murdered by the Russian mafia because he double-crossed them on Russian ruble gambling, and that Safra's gang were going to finger the Russians with specifics of how the Moscow bandits embezzled billions of dollars from U.S. foreign aid and the International Monetary Fund, and others, and reportedly washed the sums through Safra's money ships.

Then there are the stories that the accused dope-money laundry, Bancomer, a Mexican bank empire now spread out across the world, was reportedly criminally implicated with Safra and gang—and this jointly with the money laundry experts disguising dope money as "soybeans" and "foreign currency" and "gold" dealing on the Chicago Board of Trade, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the Chicago Stock Exchange, and the Chicago Board Options Exchange.

The more likely explanation? That the French CIA, operating in their neighbor Monaco, snuffed out Safra. Remember, the French are great fanciers of gold. When real problems develop in Monaco, the authorities there call upon their neighbor, the French police. Yet in Monaco they have some 300 police officers for about 25,000 residents—a higher proportion than in nearby Nice, France. Once in a position with the secret political police to understand such things, Safra doesn't laugh anymore. Ha! Ha!

FOOTNOTE ONE: Princess Grace, once a movie star called Grace Kelly, then becoming wife of Grimaldi, the Monaco royal family, was murdered in a sabotaged car crash on a hill between Monaco and France. Some claim she was silenced. She apparently spoke too much about the traditional Italian and Sicilian mafia and their use of the warehouses on the Monaco shoreline and gold smuggling. Also, "founding father" Joseph P. Kennedy, of the Kennedy clan, lived in Monaco late in his life to be able to work secretive gold deals for his family in the U.S. where, up to 1975, gold ownership by U.S. citizens was against federal law.

FOOTNOTE TWO: In 1995 we taped a one-hour TV show, part on-location, regarding a former member of the London Gold Pool, John Tarullo, and his links to the highly corrupt First National Bank of Cicero. Tarullo was tightly wound into that bank, the dominant figure of which has been Bishop Paul Marcinkus—up to 1991, head of the Vatican Bank. Now in the U.S., Marcinkus is wanted in Italy on charges of gold smuggling and dirty money washing through the Vatican Bank, jointly with the American CIA and the traditional mafia.

Marcinkus protects himself with his Vatican passport. He was originally from the long notorious Chicago mafia-enclave suburb of Cicero—Al Capone land. For many years, Tarullo, as he admitted to us, lived near that Bank, was active there, and arranged worldwide clandestine gold deals for the American CIA and others in the secret political police. (Sort of like Edmond J. Safra.) Tarullo was found murdered on the day in August, 1995, when our public access cable TV show was aired.

FOOTNOTE THREE: As to the "I Accuse" accusations against Goldman Sachs, Republic National Bank, Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan Bank, and others, criminally manipulating gold, see Ted Butler's "I Accuse" posted at the website <www.gold-eagle.com/golddigest99/butler112299.html>, posted by Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee Inc. <www.gata.org>.

ROBERT COHEN RIPS MONSANTO OVER RBGH ON C-SPAN

From the Internet, Sightings <http://www.sightings.com>, 12/4/99: [quoting]

From Betty Martini <Mission-Possible-USA@altavista.net>.

Subject: Robert Cohen's FDA Testimony on RBGH! Stand up and cheer!

Robert Cohen appeared on an FDA panel in Washington on Tuesday, November 30, 1999. Some of you may have seen his speech on C-Span. Mr. Cohen spoke last, and each of the other panel members read prepared statements. Members of the panel also included Mildred Cody, who represented the American Dietetic Association; Mario Teisl, a professor of economics at the University of Maine; John Gray, president of the International Food Service Distributors Association; Kendal Keith, president of the National Grain & Feed Association; and Richard Caplan, an environmental advocate with the US Public Interest Research Group.

TESTIMONY 11-30-99

Hi everybody, I've got to apologize first—I don't have a prepared statement like the other panel members. All I'm going to give here is some facts.

I have a copy of the Federal Register. It says here, advertising this meeting: "FDA is not aware of information that will distinguish genetically engineered food as a class from other foods."

[ROBERT COHEN TURNS AND ADDRESSES FDA PANEL MEMBERS.]

I'm going to give you some information today, guys.

The greatest controversy in FDA history was the approval process for Monsanto's genetically engineered bovine growth hormone. We shouldn't be here today! We should not be in this room and I shouldn't be here because, in 1994, Congress HAD A BILL that was going to require mandatory labeling of all foods that were influenced by genetic engineering.

I got my Congresswoman to co-sponsor that Bill-181, congresspeople co-sponsored that bill, and you know what? I learned how Congress works that year, because in 6 months they stalled the bill; 12 members of the Dairy Livestock & Poultry Committee—they stalled the bill until the 1994 session of Congress expired and the bill died.

I was so upset, I investigated these 12 men and found that collectively they took $711,000 in PAC money from companies with dairy interests; and four of the members of the committee took money directly from Monsanto.

Now we've got a lot of political intrigue and some real science here. We've got science fiction, we've got a combination of John Grisham and we've got a combination of Stephen King.

Nikita Khrushchev said that what the scientists have in their briefcase is terrifying.

[ROBERT COHEN THEN OPENED HIS BRIEFCASE AND PULLED OUT A STACK OF PAPERS]

And I've got some interesting things in my briefcase to share with you today.

When Monsanto made their genetically engineered bovine growth hormone, they noticed a couple of problems right towards the end—right before approval. They noticed that laboratory animals were getting cancer, and they noticed that cows were getting mastitis, ulcers in their udders. They were putting more pus and bacteria into the milk.

We've heard from Dr. Maryanski this morning, and Dr. Maryanski talked about the Pure Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, but what he didn't tell you was that, in 1958, Robert Delaney, a congressman from New York, added the Delaney Amendment which was named after him.

The Delaney Amendment stated that if a food additive caused cancer, it was not to be approved—a pretty good law, right? Monsanto got their attorney, Michael Taylor, from the firm of King & Spalding. By the way, when they started in 1979, they groomed their attorney who is now in the Supreme Court, Clarence Thomas, from the same law firm.

Anyway, Monsanto's attorney, Michael Taylor, wrote and minimized the Delaney Amendment. He wrote a scientific paper that was published in the Journal Of Toxicology. Lawyers—they write in law review journals; but this lawyer wrote in the Journal Of Toxicology. "A De-Minimus interpretation of the Delaney Amendment" became the new protocol, the new standard operating procedure at FDA. They minimized cancer.

Michael Taylor was hired by the Food & Drug Administration, and became the second most powerful man there—Monsanto's attorney. He wrote the standard operating procedure. In other words, if you see cancer, ignore it. Margaret Miller and Suzanne Sechen, Monsanto's scientists, were hired by the FDA to review Monsanto's own research.

Margaret Miller knew cows were getting mastitis. The first week at the FDA, December 3, 1989, she was given broad power, and here's an effect of genetic engineering nobody has considered. She knew cows were getting sick from the genetically engineered hormone. She changed the amount of antibiotics that farmers could have in their milk. She changed it from 1 part per 100 million, to 1 part per million. This is a fact! She increased it by 100 times!

There is a hero of mine in the audience, Michael Hansen from Consumers Union—Consumers Union tested milk in the New York metropolitan area and found the presence of 52 different antibiotics in milk samples.

FDA published, on August 24, 1990, the first time ever in a peer-reviewed journal, in Science. Science was started by Thomas Edison in the 1880s. They published a review of bovine somatotropin—RBGH—the genetically engineered cow hormone. And in that review, there were seven tables of data. Five of those tables came from one study, authored by Richard, Odaglia, and Deslex. This is the famous "90-Day Study".

Guess what? This was actually a study lasting for 180 days, and when I first heard about this in 1994, I filed a Freedom of Information Act Request for that study—because I saw from the data that the average spleen of a lab animal increased 46%.

I called FDA and spoke with Dick Teske. I said: "46%? You said there were no biological effects!" He said, "That's not statistically significant." I said, "Well, let me see the raw data." He said, "It's a trade secret."

I called Monsanto; they laughed at me. They said, "It's a trade secret and you will never see it." I'm smart, I filed a Freedom of Information Act Request, but I didn't realize you can't find out the study. I went to Federal Court; I said, "Your honor—spleen increase of 46%, that's leukemia in 90 days!" I met with FDA on April 21, 1995, and found out that this was actually a 180-day study.

In Canada, they had this study. I have a letter here [ROBERT COHEN REACHES INTO HIS BRIEFCASE], an internal memorandum: "This is to advise you that the copies of reports, letters, etc. for drug submissions have been stolen from my files." This was stolen from a scientist's file in Canada. They stole the second half of the "90-Day Study". We've got real science here. I'm going to talk briefly about the real science because, when Monsanto made this hormone, they had to tell the FDA—they had to draw a chart of every amino acid—the 191 amino acids. And when FDA wrote their paper in Science magazine, they wrote that one amino acid changed—it was a different hormone than the naturally occurring one.

At the same time, somebody hired C. Everett Koop to come and say that genetically engineered milk and the good old wholesome milk are indistinguishable. Well, it wasn't. Something happened to the hormone that Monsanto made. The FDA said that there was one change in the end amino acid. It became epsilon-N-acetyllysine. FDA had written, if there was a change in the middle of the protein, there could be disastrous results. They cited Jerome Moore. I got Jerome Moore's paper. It said if there is a protein change in the middle, there could be Alzheimer's or sickle cell anemia or diabetes.

Four months after the hormone was approved, one of Monsanto's scientists, Bernard Violand, published in the July 3, 1994 issue of the journal Protein Science evidence that Monsanto made a mistake.

Oops! Monsanto created a freak amino acid. Did you ever see that movie The Fly with Jeff Goldblum when the fly comes in and he becomes half-human and half-fly? Monsanto created a freak amino acid. Monsanto admitted it, but didn't tell the FDA. [ROBERT COHEN TURNS AND POINTS TO THE FDA PANEL MEMBERS].

Gentlemen, the hormone that's on the market today is different than the one you tested for seven years. Monsanto spent $500 million, submitted 55,000 pages of information to you, and then learned, late in the process, that they created a freak amino acid. That's what was tested on laboratory animals and it didn't matter, because FDA said to Monsanto, "You know something? It's safe because, when you pasteurize milk, you destroy the hormone."

They performed this research up in Guelph, Ontario by Paul Groenewegan, and I've got his study. [ROBERT COHEN AGAIN ADDRESSES FDA PANEL MEMBERS]

To this day, FDA thinks—it's on your web page—that 90% of the bovine growth hormone is destroyed by pasteurization. But what Paul Groenewegan did, working with Ted Elasser and Brian McBride, two Monsanto scientists, was he pasteurized milk for 30 minutes at 162°F, and when I read that—I said, wait a second, milk is pasteurized for 15 seconds at that temperature—not 30 minutes. They intentionally tried to destroy the hormone; they only destroyed 19% of it! Somebody lied.

And at that moment, FDA said to Monsanto: "Because you destroy it by pasteurization, you don't have to do further toxicology studies. You don't have to develop a test for this hormone in milk. It's now safe to drink." They (FDA) developed a zero-day withdrawal—they determined it was safe to drink.

We have a lot of political intrigue here. We have an interesting situation where people have said that a revolving door policy exists at FDA. I mean, where is the ex-FDA commissioner? Guess who he is working for? He is working for Monsanto.

Bob Dole ran for President. His Chief of Staff was Donald Rumsfeld—ex-president of Searle, owned by Monsanto.

I have one last comment. [AT THIS POINT, THE MODERATOR INTERRUPTS MR. COHEN AND TELLS HIM TO WRAP IT UP AND TO ADDRESS LABELING.] I know, but we have a labeling issue here. We have a right to know. I have listened to comments about a "multi-faceted educational effort that we need". That's called brainwashing! I don't want a "multi-faceted educational effort"—I want a double helical structure [AUDIENCE APPLAUDS] on a piece of food that I'm going to buy in the supermarket because I have a right to know.

Because the bottom line is—mistakes were made, and when I hear from the American Dietetic Association [ROBERT COHEN ADDRESSES A MEMBER OF THE AMERICAN DIETETIC ASSOCIATION WHO PREVIOUSLY SPOKE AGAINST LABELING], I want to remind you that Monsanto gave you $100,000 to set up a toll-free hotline about the bovine growth hormone.

Mistakes were made! We've got political intrigue here. And the bottom line is, we have a right to know what we are eating! Thank you. [APPLAUSE]

Let's not let Monsanto get away with this any longer. They got stopped on their terminator seed and this poisoning of our milk supply can be stopped too.

And speaking of the hero that Cohen mentioned from Consumers Union, pages 36-37 of the most recent (January 2000) issue of Consumer Reports magazine (published by Consumers Union) also addresses this issue of hormone-laden cows, in conjunction with a discussion of a STEEP RISE in organic milk sales. This should come as no surprise as the public becomes more aware of government deceptions in favor of big-money agribusiness interests.

Another important issue to note is the way science and scientists are being used as paid prostitutes of big business. One would think that none of these scientists have children or other family members who drink milk. Or is the matter of conscience now completely overridden by money?

GM FOOD BANNED AT MONSANTO'S BRITISH HQ

From the Internet, 12/23/99: [quoting] Dear Health Freedom Fighters,

In an ironic turn of events for Monsanto, the company's own caterer has banned genetically modified foods from their London headquarters. Below is an article, from Reuters news service.

22 (Reuters)—U.S. biotechnology giant Monsanto Co. admitted on Wednesday that caterers at its British headquarters had banned some of the genetically modified (GM) food it is busy promoting.

The GM foods have been pulled from the firm's staff canteen in response to widespread fears in Britain about the health and safety implications of the controversial technology.

"In response to concern raised by our customers...we have taken the decision to remove, as far as it is practicable, GM soya and maize from all food products served in our restaurant," Granada Food Services, which runs the canteen at Monsanto's High Wycombe office, said in a notice to staff.

Granada said it would continue to sell pre-packaged foods, mainly confectionery, that contained GM ingredients, so long as they were appropriately labeled.

"We have taken the above steps to ensure that you, the customer, can feel confident in the food we serve," said Granada in its notice, which was posted in all the outlets it supplies.

Monsanto is at the forefront of trials of GM crops, which have stirred widespread opposition in Britain.

News of the ban, which was imposed in September, is a fresh embarrassment to the firm, which dismissed the controversy as "a Christmas story" and played down all talk of double standards.

Spokesman Tony Combes admitted the ban had been imposed, but denied it was in response to concerns voiced within Monsanto.

"One of the key points of GMs is you don't have to put so much chemicals on the crop so our staff are happy to eat food sprayed with fewer chemicals," he told Reuters.

Granada said it had pulled GM maize and soya from all its outlets and would maintain that policy at Monsanto unless requested otherwise.

"It's a blanket policy across Granada. It is not due to Monsanto customers asking us to remove GM food, but we have had requests from other customers at other operations," Lesley Potter, the group's communications manager, told Reuters.

Friends of the Earth (FoE), the environmental group that revealed the ban, said this was just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to concern about GM—albeit a deliciously ironic one.

"Of course this is embarrassing. Of course this is amusing," FoE spokesman Neil Verlander told Reuters. "But there is a serious point: the extent to which there has been an outcry against GM foods in this country." The House of Commons, the Scottish and Welsh assemblies, the European parliament, most leading British food manufacturers and top restaurant chains had all pulled GM food, he said.

Supermarkets have removed GM products from their shelves and campaigners have wrecked GM field trials due to fears the technology could harm the natural environment.

"I would imagine that a biotechnology canteen would be one of the few places you'd find GM food—but apparently not at Monsanto's UK headquarters," Verlander said [End quoting]

Monsanto has been getting a number of "black eyes" lately.

Protest does work—if it is applied with wisdom.

INFANTS AND SERVICE PERSONNEL ARE THE MAIN GUINEA PIGS FOR NEW VACCINES

From the Internet, 11/10/99: [quoting]

It isn't often that federal bureaucrats admit to embarrassment, but the New York Times reported on October 23 that it was "highly embarrassing to federal health officials" to have to admit the "causal association" between the RotaShield rotavirus vaccine and the painful condition called intussusception.

The embarrassment was aggravated "in part because the vaccine was 23 years in development and much of the work was done at the National Institutes of Health." It isn't enough, however, that these health officials admit they are embarrassed. They should be apologizing and expressing deep and sorrowful regret for the terrible damage they have done to infants. Intussusception is a bowel obstruction caused by one portion of the bowel sliding inward, like a telescope, into another part of the bowel, causing a previously healthy infant to scream in terrible pain, and often requiring surgery to repair.

The government's formal position until October 22 had been that all infants in the United States should receive three doses of the vaccine, at 2, 4 and 6 months of age, although caution was expressed by the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) on July 15 and the manufacturer withdrew the vaccine from the market on October 15.

CDC immunization spokesman Dr. John Livengood said that the health officials' decision to withdraw the vaccine recommendation reflected a stepped-up review of scientific evidence, which showed that the rotavirus vaccine appeared to cause intussusception in about 1 in 5,000 recipients, and that vaccinated babies were 25 times as likely to develop intussusception three to seven days after the first dose as those who did not receive it.

What is so shocking about this admission is that the high rate of intussusception was known before Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval in August 1998. The raw data were kept secret and the CDC went ahead with its recommendation.

Another disturbing piece of news is that, of the federal health advisory panel's 12 members, only 4 voted, all for the recommendation to withdraw use of the vaccine. We are told that the others were absent "because of emergencies or abstained because of ties to the manufacturer or other conflicts of interest". It is unacceptable that members of the advisory panel are permitted to have conflicts of interests, and it's no answer to say they merely don't vote on the decisions where their conflict of interest is immediate. Panel members should represent the public, not be beholden to the pharmaceutical companies or the CDC.

All the raw data supporting any vaccine recommendation should be made public so they can be reviewed by disinterested parties. Many infants would have been saved from the intussusception tragedy if the raw data about the rotavirus tests had been available to the public.

We are long overdue for a Congressional investigation to educate the public about the current process of mandating vaccines, the secrecy about raw data, the failure to do risk and cost-benefit analysis, and the role of the pharmaceutical corporations in lobbying for mandates. The American people have a right to know exactly how and why the CDC disregarded the danger signals in the test data and recommended the rotavirus vaccine anyway.

The Association of American Physicians and Surgeons has urged Congress to investigate the process by which vaccines are approved and recommended.

The public is entitled to know if government approval is a political rather than a scientific decision, as well as the fact that government mandates are what make vaccines so commercially profitable.

Parents are beginning to fear that the real clinical tests may be post-mandate instead of pre-mandate. When the CDC can conceal the raw data about the pre-tests and reveal only summary statistics, it's easy to distort the results, recommend a vaccine for all infants, and make the universal use of the vaccine the real test.

This process amounts to experimentation on humans without telling the recipients or their parents that the vaccine is experimental. President Clinton poured gasoline on the fires of this vaccine scandal on September 30 when he issued Executive Order 13139 requiring military personnel to receive experimental vaccines that don't even have FDA approval.

It appears that EO 13139 is an attempt to finesse Pentagon responsibility for administering the controversial anthrax vaccine to all military personnel. The Defense Department has been inoculating for inhalational anthrax even though the only FDA approval, issued nearly 30 years ago, was only for cutaneous anthrax (contact through touch).

Hundreds of servicemen (including dozens of pilots) have resigned rather than submit to the anthrax vaccine because they have observed or heard about adverse reactions in many of their peers. Dozens of military personnel have been prosecuted and punished for refusing to be inoculated, and more than 1000 are now awaiting trial.

Infants and military personnel are two groups of Americans subject to medical decisions made by others. Is our government using those two groups for human experimentation with inadequately tested drugs?

[End quoting]

While the above is shocking news in its own right, it is a story that has often been repeated within the corridors of modern medicine. The real issue has to do with how many such experiences it seems to require before people wake up to the fact that the so-called "elite" controllers of this planet don't make vaccines to help us, but to help them get richer from us, and to help them in their DEPOPULATION PROGRAM. The irony is that we get to pay for our own demise.

MARS POLAR LANDER AND WHAT "HERR GOVERNMENT" ISN'T TELLING YOU

I'll probably be killed for what I'm about to reveal, but here goes:

The Mars Polar Lander has all along been working flawlessly. Immediately after landing, a special NSA subsystem override took over operation of the craft from its normal operating software. Transmit and receive frequencies were shifted and all signals encrypted. What the NSA override software keys on is unknown, but the pictures and data coming from the probe are most telling.

- The entire landing site seems to be inhabited by small turtle-like creatures. Whether or not they are reptilian is unknown. The creatures show no interest in the probe and seem to spend their time grazing on a moss-like substance.

- The site is littered with what can only be called industrial waste. Pipe, metal cylinders, what look like I-beams, and many other miscellaneous man-made (?) objects. The NSA is sure the junk isn't Russian or American, so if it isn't ours, whose is it? The site also seems to have been deserted for many, many years.

- The Lander has twice imaged an object moving at high speed. The object is right at the edge of the resolving power of the optical system—in other words, the pictures were taken at very long range. Estimates put the speed of the object at between 40-80 km/hour. It's dark in color and seems to move like a wheeled vehicle.

This is all the information I have at this time. [End quoting]

Of course there is no way to verify the accuracy of this information, but quite a few people have awakened enough to become very suspicious when yet another Mars Lander all of a sudden "died" once it got into the vicinity of its Mars destination.

HOW MUCH WILL YOU TAKE??

From the Internet, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 12/1/99: [quoting]

[Geoff Metcalf Exclusive Commentary; he is a talk-show host for KSFO in San Francisco:]

Frederick Douglass once observed: "Find out just what people will submit to, and you have found out the exact amount of injustice and wrong which will be imposed upon them; and these will continue until they are resisted with either words or blows, or both. The limits of tyrants are prescribed by the endurance of those whom they oppress."

What will the American people submit to?

- Taxes: When the income tax was first proposed it was only for 1 percent. One percent of the camel's nose into the tent—the big lie of incrementalism.

- Fractional banking and the Federal Reserve: The Ponzi schemes of the century, DESIGNED to fail.

- The 17th Amendment: Separating U.S. Senators from the people they are supposed to represent "for the greater good"??

- Gun control: People don't need military weapons to hunt. Excuse me, the Second Amendment was designed not to grant a privilege, but to acknowledge an inalienable/God-given right! The Framers wanted the citizenry armed, specifically so as to provide the means to overthrow a tyrannical government.

- Smoking: Hey, smoking is bad. How about designated smoking sections in restaurants? Tell ya what, let's ban smoking in restaurants and move it to just the bar area. Wait—smoke moves around—if you want to smoke, you'll have to do it outside—unless you are in California, then you'll have to smoke in Nevada.

- Privacy: Gee, what have you got to hide? If you're not doing anything wrong, it shouldn't matter if your government knows everything and anything about you from cradle to grave? You can trust your government—the same government that sells classified nuclear secrets to enemies for campaign contributions.

- National ID cards linked with some flavor of biometric identifier: First it was the corruption of the Social Security number into a national ID number; next they want a thumbprint or retinal scan. Eventually (if the incrementalism is unchecked) our grandchildren will be fitted with sub-dermal biochip implants. [Already being done!]

What WILL the American people accept? Too damn much! There was a recent story about a couple of bad guys who were caught with the benefit of whiz-bang technology. An Altoona father-and-son burglary team was arrested after investigators got some help from a monitoring device that tracked their movements by satellite.

"Authorities obtained a search warrant to place the Global Positioning System (GPS) monitoring device in the suspect's car, and then matched his travels around Iowa with reported burglaries." There is a TV commercial bragging about a GPS system that can and will call you if or when you have a breakdown. Cool! Someone, somewhere knows exactly where you are all the time. That can be very reassuring and comforting—unless the folks tracking you don't have any respect for your best interest or privacy.

Technology exists, and is in use—which permits someone you may not want to—to have the power to shut off your car, find your exact location, and more. A recent caller to my radio talk-show reported of an incident in which he drove a rental car from Nevada into Arizona for some sightseeing. Moments after crossing the state line into Arizona, a NEVADA police car pulled up to inquire if he was all right, and what was he doing in Arizona? The police had been notified a Nevada rental car had crossed a state border.

On-board diagnostic systems in newer cars allow “someone” to render the car inoperable. If you don’t make a child-support payment, are late on taxes, fail to respond to a summons, etc., your car can be rendered inoperable.

Some will say “Good! Serves the deadbeat so-and-so right!” However, what if the report is a clerical error? What if the bureaucrat making the decision to stop your car is not using the tool as a champion of justice, but (as Joe Farah and the Western Journalism Center discovered about their IRS audit) the action was prompted by “political motivation”? Consider the potential for harassment.

What if every Western Journalism Center writer, every Congressional opponent, every administration critic suddenly was rendered carless. THAT might get some attention even the mainstream co-conspirators couldn’t ignore. However, what if not everyone was halted at the same time? What if “bureaucratic oversights”, administrative “whoops” were to happen randomly and periodically? The key goal and objective of the tyrant is to CONTROL. Whether it is gun control, smoker control, tax control, or control of the ability to freely move.

In order for any tyrant to oppress a people, it is necessary to control the crucial elements of their lives. Control of their money, fuel, food and water, and freedom of movement accomplishes that. In order to prevent them from rising up against a tyrannical government, it is necessary to disarm the people.

Now, before you sluff this off as the paranoid ramblings of another radical right-wing wacko, please take a moment to connect the dots.

Long ago the Army taught me to do a SWOT analysis in developing a situation report.

SWOT stands for Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats. Here is your homework assignment: Do your own SWOT analysis of our contemporary republic.

What are our remaining strengths? What are the potential opportunities? What are the current and pending weaknesses? And lastly, list the current and potential threats to the Constitution and Bill Of Rights? If you honestly and objectively complete the above assignment, you can join the ranks of those who love their country, but distrust their government. [End quoting]

The above would be very good exercise for all of us to do, especially those who think everything is just fine and the “conspiracy nuts” are simply overreacting paranoids. We here at The SPECTRUM notice that most of our best correspondence comes from those whose lives have spanned a long enough time to easily see just how much this once-great country has deteriorated.

VIRGINIA MEDICAL CENTER TO IMPLANT MICROCHIPS IN NEWBORNS!!

From FREE AMERICAN NEWSMAGAZINE, Nov. 1999: [quoting]

It was bad enough to learn that the U.S. military had already begun injecting microchips into soldiers for tracking and monitoring/I.D. in the Desert Storm Gulf War. [Some evidence suggests this has been going on since the Korean War; and also consider the mind-control implications for making good “fighting machines” according to a feature article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM] This of course allowed the generals to track every man and woman by satellite for recognizance purposes.

Now, the University of Virginia Medical Center has immediate plans to inject microchips into newborn babies against parents’ protests under the threat of jail and a fine if the parents don’t submit willingly.

Here is some additional reading material for you:

#1: The University of Virginia Med. Center will begin to implant electronic chips in babies as soon as they are born. Parents who protest may become involved in lawsuits or lose their babies!! August 9, 1999 TIME magazine.

#2: “Typical American Family in 2008: The parents, the kids, and the dogs all have microships under their skin with ID and medical data.” September 22, 1997—FORBES magazine (technology), also related article in Electronic Telegraph, January 20, 1997: “Microchips In Every Person On Earth Save Time And Eliminate Pocketbooks, Purses And Coins.” Also Electronic Telegraph, October 6, 1998: “Microchip Implants To Foil VIP Kidnaps”.

Two months ago on A&E TV on World Economics, the last ten-minute segment featured the answer to international identification and money concerns—a computer chip on the forehead of every person on Earth! [End quoting]

Again we must ask the question of how such technologies are REALLY going to be used—rather than the rose-colored-glasses way in which they are presented as being used only for good. In the wrong hands (the likely case) these are sinister methods of people control.

EGYPTAIR FLIGHT 990

Have any of you noticed that, after the government admitted that they lied about what was on the voice recorder from the plane, there has been very little news about that flight, even though almost all of the bodies as well as the main parts of the plane, were never found—if we go by the news that has been put forth.

Apparently the crooks in high places are hoping that their tried-and-true formula of silence (as much as they can get away with, without raising even more questions) is once again the best method for “helping” us to forget all about this incident. This in itself ought to tell us that some very high-up crooks are guilty of ordering the sabotaging of this plane. Go back and review our large compilation of astonishing information on this matter in the last issue of The SPECTRUM.

IS L.A. NUMBED TO OUTRAGE? POLICE CORRUPTION REPORTS ELICIT MINIMAL COMMUNITY RESPONSE

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 12/12/99: [quoting]

One of the largest police corruption scandals in the history of Los Angeles has yielded startling revelations of officers dealing drugs, planting guns on innocent people, and now even a suggestion that one officer helped plan the murder of a rap star.

But perhaps most surprising of all is the lack of community outrage in a city that spawned virulent riots in 1992 and 1965, respectively, after a jury acquitted four officers in the beating of Rodney King and after the tragic stop-gone-wrong of Marquette Frye in Watts.

“I don’t know what it is about LA” said Ramona Ripston, executive director of the Southern California American Civil Liberties Union. “I’m shocked by the lack of response.”

No officers have been charged since the corruption was uncovered, none of the lawsuits filed has been resolved, and only two officers have been fired. Yet the only visible community response has been a rally in favor of the beleaguered police division at the center of the scandal.

The internal probe focuses on former Officer Rafael Perez, who in September began telling investigators about officers in the Rampart Street division involved in beatings, planting evidence, perjury, and wrongful shootings, one of which left a man paralyzed and in prison.

Perez’s information, given in return for a reduced sentence in a cocaine theft conviction, led to the dismissal of that and 10 other cases, as well as the suspension of a dozen officers. Dozens of other convictions are in question.

This week, police documents surfaced suggesting a link between Perez’s former partner, David Mack, and the shooting death of rap star Notorious B.I.G., whose real name was Christopher Wallace.

Detectives are looking into whether Mack, now in prison on a bank robbery conviction, conspired with Death Row Records founder Marion “Suge” Knight to arrange the contract killing of the 24-year-old rapper as he left a party in March 1997.

Knight is a possible suspect in the killing, even though he was in jail at the time. Investigation notes show a witness placed Mack at the scene, and another picked him out of a photo lineup.

The police department calls the discovery of the corruption in the Rampart division a credit to its own internal oversight, while activists criticize officials for claiming the damage is limited to that division.

“If anybody thinks this is a thing that can get weeded out, they’re being naive” said the Rev. Gregory Boyle, who years ago began a project in East Los Angeles to give former gang members jobs. “This is not about weeding out the bad apples, it’s about changing the way business is done.”

The Rev. Richard Byrd, an activist with Los Angeles Metropolitan Churches, says the reason the community hasn’t protested is because the disclosures have revealed nothing new.

“Outrage comes when something out of the ordinary has happened” Boyle said. “In a community like ours, this has become part of the air you breathe.”

Lt. Sharyn Buck said the department investigates corruption whenever it becomes aware of it. [End quoting]

The truth of the matter is as the activist stated above—business as usual—so why would there be any cries of outrage from the citizenry? The only reason this kind of situation receives any sort of “we’re taking care of it” attention from the police department is when it cannot be internally contained and hidden from press and public.

Now sit back for a moment and contemplate a Martial Law-type of emergency condition (whether genuine or fabricated) wherein we lose even more of our freedoms to the directives of this calibre of law-enforcement personnel. Scary situation, don’t you think?

MMM...MYSTERY U.S. MAY ALLOW MORE SOY IN LUNCHES

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 12/24/99: [quoting] Associated Press

Worried about the fat in kids’ meals, federal officials want to let schools and day care centers serve tofu, veggieburgers, and other soy products as meat substitutes in federally subsidized lunches.

The Agriculture Department is proposing to drop its restrictions on how much soy can be used in meals. Under current rules, soy can only be a food additive and only in amounts of less than 30 percent.

President Reagan’s budget crunchers tried to make tofu a meat substitute nearly two decades ago—at the same time they tried to reclassify ketchup as a vegetable—but they beat a hasty retreat when the idea became a lightning rod for opponents of his spending cuts. USDA officials deny their motive now is to save money, arguing instead that soy is a good source of protein.

“Its time has come” said Shirley Watkins, USDA’s undersecretary for food, nutrition and consumer services. “I think people are more receptive than they would have been five or 10 years ago.”

Livestock producers have expressed concern about the move, but schools like it because they are having trouble complying with government limits on the fat content of meals. And for the fastgrowing soy industry, the $6 billion school lunch program offers a vast new market and a way to introduce families to the expanding array of new, better-tasting products that have been developed in recent years.

Although the proposal would allow schools to offer meatless entrees—tofu-stuffed ravioli is one menu possibility nutritionists say schools are more likely to use to increase the amount of soy that they blend into their standard fare: burgers, tacos and the like.

The question is whether kids will still eat them.

Market research sponsored by the United Soybean Board indicated the 26 million children who participate in the school lunch program would accept soy products. Kids, however, are notoriously finicky consumers, said Lincoln Pierce, director of nutrition programs for the Grand Junction, Colo., schools.

“If you tell kids there’s soy in it, they don’t seem to like it as well” said Pierce. “In blind tests they approve of it, but their heads haven’t caught up with their taste buds.”

Vegetarians and animal rights activists have flooded the USDA with letters and e-mail messages praising the proposal, but the change may have an impact they don’t want. Allowing a higher soy content will make it easier for schools to keep meat on their menus, said Carol Tucker Foreman, director of the Consumer Federation of America’s Food Policy institute. [End quoting]

Do you by chance think—with all of the bad publicity that large biotechnology companies such as Monsanto have received about soy (and other) products, and no doubt great hurting of their sales—that they are trying to bypass the normal consumer markets and foist these largely genetically engineered and often quite toxic products off on our children through legislation from their controlled political cronies?!!

The first clue that something is smelly about this deal is that the government claims to be worried about our children’s health. We ought to know by now that they are only attentive to their pocketbooks and maintaining control over every facet of our lives.

They’ve been made to see the light on other issues recently—what are we going to do about this one??

Go back to the various News Desk items on this subject, especially in the last issue of The SPECTRUM, and definitely re-read “The ‘Soy Toxin Team’ Story” in this past July’s issue.

NEW RESEARCH SHOWS MUSIC HAS THE POWER TO KEEP YOU HEALTHY

From USA WEEKEND, by Peggy Noonan, 12/17/99: [quoting]

Music has long been appreciated for its calming effects, but new research shows it also may have the power to restore and keep us healthy. Soothing sounds, from Tibetan chants to Beethoven symphonies, are being given scientific credit for preventing colds, easing labor pain, and even boosting anti-aging hormones. One recent study found that surgery patients who listened to comforting music recovered more quickly and felt less pain than those who did not. Sound therapy goes beyond recorded music: The International Journal Of Arts Medicine reports that infants in intensive care go home three days sooner, eat better, and gain more weight if the staff talks and sings to them.

“More doctors are seeing a connection between harmonious sound and health” says Mitchell L. Gaynor, director of medical oncology integrative medicine at New York Hospital’s cancer-prevention center and author of the new book Sounds Of Healing (Broadway Books $25); a CD and audiocassette offer the same sounds and techniques he uses in his practice.

“If we’re around very harmonious people and harmonious vibrations and harmonious sounds, we begin to feel better” says Gaynor.

“I’ve never found anything more powerful than sound and voice and music to begin to heal and transform every aspect of people’s lives” Gaynor says. “It can really change people’s lives.”

He’s not alone. Samuel Wong, a Harvard-trained physician based in New York City, plays musical instruments to help patients with brain damage and Alzheimer’s disease reconnect to the world. M.D. is the abbreviation for both his jobs—he’s also music director of the Hong Kong Philharmonic and the Honolulu Symphony.

“When brain damage (from stroke, Alzheimer’s disease, etc.) leaves a devastated mental landscape, music ‘builds a bridge’ that allows patients to reconnect with the outside world” says Wong. “The study of medicine has informed my performance of music, and my learning of music has deepened my role in healing” he says.

Recent research shows soothing music has an amazing range of healing effects. But keep it low. Sounds louder than 90 decibels cause stress and ear damage, says Pierce J. Howard, Ph.D., director of the Center For Applied Cognitive Studies, in Charlotte, N.C., and author of The Owner's Manual For The Brain (Bard Press, $24.95). Very loud music, he says, creates an altered state of consciousness akin to an alcoholic or drug-induced stupor that can become addictive.

Patients recover from surgery faster and with less pain if they can listen to music they find soothing and comfortable, according to Case Western Reserve University's May study of 500 abdominal-surgery patients.

And a study last year at Wilkes University in Pennsylvania showed soothing music may prevent colds: Participants' blood levels of an immune-system disease fighter called Immunoglobulin A rose a whopping 14.1%.

“We know that music is capable of enhancing immune function, lowering heart rate, lowering stress-related hormones like cortisol that raise our blood pressure and depress our immune systems” Gaynor says. It also trims complications after heart attack, calms anxiety, slows breathing, and increases production of endorphins, the body's natural painkillers. Consider: 80% of stimuli that reach our brains come in through our ears.

Even before we're born, music makes a difference. Hearing is the first sense to develop, when the fetus is only 18 weeks old. “We know that the unborn child hears for literally half the pregnancy and is affected profoundly by what it hears” Gaynor says. Studies show music by Mozart and Vivaldi actually can bring down fetal heart rate, calm brain waves, and reduce the baby's kicking, Gaynor reports. Rock music, on the other hand, appeared to drive fetuses to distraction, greatly increasing kicking.

Why does sound affect us so strongly? Our bodies are 70% water, and that makes them excellent conductors for sound and vibration, Gaynor explains. “We're not just hearing with our ears. We're literally feeling sound vibration with every cell in our bodies.”

Disharmony and noise, whether its from traffic, the boss yelling at us about a deadline, or a jackhammer on the street, can make us stressed, depressed, and pessimistic—all of which depress our immune systems. “That's why disharmony can eventually lead to disease” says Gaynor.

“Our own voices are very underutilized healing tools” Gaynor says. Singing is a great way to tap music's healing power. If you're self-conscious, try chanting. Anyone can do it, and “you can't do it wrong”.

Says Gaynor: “We're just seeing the tip of the iceberg as far as the incredible power of sound to affect every cell and every organ system in our bodies.”

At the website <usaweekend.com> you can link to Gaynor's website for soothing sound samples of “Daily Meditation”. Or link to the American Music Therapy Association to find a trained music therapist to help you get through labor, surgery, or other health challenges.

Soothing sound can:

- Lower cortisol, a stress hormone, as much as 25%;
- Boost endorphins, the body's natural opiates or feel-good drugs;
- Reduce pain after surgery;
- Ease labor without drugs;
- Lower blood pressure as much as 5 points;
- Help preemies in intensive care.

This area of healing therapy is finally coming into the mainstream awareness of the public. Our Front Page story for this issue of The SPECTRUM goes into more astonishing details.

Music plays an important subconscious role in the health of body and mind; no wonder the negative aspects of music, as presented through the likes of “heavy metal” rock and “rap” music, are so encouraged behind the scenes as a dietary staple for our youth—while good (healthy) music programs are being shut down in many schools across the country.

CAN YOU IMAGINE WORKING AT THE FOLLOWING COMPANY?

From an unknown source, 12/99: [quoting]

It has a little over 500 employees, with the following statistics:

- 29 have been accused of spousal abuse;
- 7 have been arrested for fraud;
- 19 have been accused of writing bad checks;
- 117 have bankrupted at least two businesses;
- 3 have been arrested for assault;
- 71 cannot get a credit card due to bad credit;
- 14 have been arrested on drug-related charges;
- 8 have been arrested for shoplifting;
- 21 are current defendants in lawsuits;
- In 1998 alone, 84 were stopped for drunk driving;

Can you guess which organization this is?

Give up?

It's the 535 members of your United States Congress. This is the same group that perpetually cranks out hundreds upon hundreds of new laws designed to keep the rest of us in line. [End quoting]

After all, we do have the best Congress and President that MONEY can buy!! Or as Mark Twain put it so well a century ago now: “There is no distinctly native, American

TINY VIBRATOR REDUCES ANGIOPLASTY RISKS

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, Dec. 1999: [quoting]

Coronary angioplasty is now the most widely used method of treating blockages of the heart and blood vessels. Depending upon the exact nature of an obstruction, surgeons restore normal blood flow by using balloons, lasers, or stents. As different as these techniques may be, they all have one thing in common: the need for the surgeon to push the device to the blockage. The harder it is for the surgeon to reach the obstruction, the greater the likelihood of complications.

Michael Rees of the Bristol Royal Infirmary in western England has developed a tool that helps surgeons safely navigate to any impasse. It consists of a motorized vibrator that jiggles the guide wire from 16 to 100 times a second.

In recent tests with animals, using the vibrator to help place guidewires proved less damaging to blood vessels than jiggling the wire by hand.

The device will need FDA approval before it can be used in U.S. hospitals. [End quoting]

The good side of this news is how the device may help avoid some of the complications and other problems experienced by those who elect to go through this kind of procedure. The bad side is always the cost. Moreover, what about the alternative-medicine techniques for cleaning out arteries (or keeping them from getting so clogged in the first place) which are shunned by the big-money powers which control conventional medicine? So often it seems we focus upon improvements to the old ice box while suppressing public awareness of and access to the electric refrigerator.

SWEET CURE FOR INFECTIONS

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, Nov. 1999: [quoting]

A spoonful of honey may do more than help the medicine go down. It could be pretty good medicine by itself.

Honey kills strains of bacteria that are resistant to antibiotics, says Peter C. Molan, a biochemist at the University of Waikato in New Zealand.

In one hospital study, a simple honey dressing was shown to be just as effective against flesh-eating bacteria as what Molan termed “aggressive surgical treatment”.

Dutch biologists at the Center for Plant Breeding and Reproduction Research in Wageningen are trying a different approach. They are genetically altering plants in a way that causes honey made from their nectar to contain drugs or vaccines.

This is all experimental. So, for the moment, take the honey with, not instead of, what the doctor orders. [End quoting]

Let's hope that the chemical pesticides which big agribusiness is so fond of employing do not completely stop the honeybee from performing its miracle for our well being.

LATEST ON AREA 51

From the Internet, Norio Hayakawa, <GroomWatch@aol.com>, 12/19/99: [quoting]

The Las Vegas Review Journal on Thursday, December 16, 1999 reported that the 38,400-acre rectangle surrounding Groom Lake (a.k.a. Area 51) is being relinquished by the Department of Energy and is being officially handed over to the Air Force for total control, ownership, and jurisdiction. The full article can be found at <http://www.lvrj.com/lvrj_home/1999/Dec-16-Thu-1999/news/12566049.html> [End quoting]

And for those of you who listen to Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program, broadcast from his home studio in little Pahrump, Nevada, just over the hill from Area 51 and Las Vegas, there was recently a humorously revealing event surrounding a long-distance telephone outage one night a few weeks ago which caused Art to suspend his program that evening. (Accident or trial run?)

It happened that the outage affected Pahrump, part of nearby Las Vegas, and "Area 51" according to the Sprint report which Art has posted on his website <www.artbell.com>. Two curious and humorous things about that Sprint report were: (1) that a certain breaker had been turned off (not tripped) which caused the outage; and (2) that it affected the above-mentioned locations, SPECIFICALLY MENTIONING AREA 51, a complex which the government continually denies even exists. Art was not going to make the report public—until, get this—it ended up being posted on an open-to-the-public government website!

SUPER IRON FOR SUPER BATTERIES

The personal electronics boom is accelerating the problem of toxic batteries in our landfills.

A new design replaces the manganese dioxide in alkaline batteries with ferrate, an unusual, stabilized form of iron combined with oxygen. Using this so-called "super iron" also makes batteries last 50 percent longer, says Stuart Licht, the chemistry professor who led the development project for Technion, the Israeli Institute of Technology.

Licht says super-iron batteries would be ideal for high-drain gear, like CD players.

Super-iron batteries are cheaper to make, so the idea could catch on with manufacturers. [End quoting]

The biggest hold-up of the electric automobile is the lack of availability of better battery technology than we have had around for almost a century. The question is: is such better battery technology in existence, but suppressed, or just not there? Many people who look forward to the electric car and who depend upon batteries for alternative, off-the-grid power systems utilizing solar panels, would really welcome a step forward from the current state of affairs.

A NEW TWIST ON BATTERIES

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, Dec. 1999: [quoting]

Exide, the world's largest producer of lead-acid batteries, has a new twist on automotive batteries. Instead of flat plates, the plates on the Orbital Select 12-volt are wound in a spiral.

Each plate is nearly 4 ft. long before being rolled and packed into its own compartment. The individual elements consist of acid-permeated vitreous separators that are wound with proprietary, corrosion-resistant grids—the end result has a cross section not unlike a jelly roll's.

Since there isn't any free-flowing acid, there is no chance of leaks. And, says Exide, there's no gassing during charging. As a result, the Orbital Select can be safely shipped through all normal distribution channels.

Besides the safety and convenience aspects of the design, there are the added benefits of longer life and increased power.

The no-leak packaging also opens up new design possibilities, by allowing the battery to be mounted on its side or upside down. To underscore this additional versatility, the Orbital Select has six terminals, rather than the two normally found on car batteries. [End quoting]

I remember reading, decades ago, that shortly after WWII some Europeans would always take the battery out of their car before they sold it because the battery would last indefinitely, and so why take a chance on the one in the new car they would buy.

Also, there has long been information circulating that certain proprietary battery technologies were utilized to manufacture MILITARY batteries for the flashlights, etc., of GIs during WW-II. Those batteries were reported to last a very long time. You don't suppose that technology just "got lost" after the war was over, do you?

MERRY CHRISTMAS STORY

From the INTERNET, 12/24/99: [quoting]

This is too good not to share—rather puts things in perspective!

This is a first-person account from a mother about her family as they ate dinner on Christmas Day in a small restaurant many miles from their home.

Nancy, the mother, relates:

We were the only family with children in the restaurant. I sat Erik in a high chair and noticed everyone was quietly eating and talking.

Suddenly, Erik squealed with glee and said, "Hi there!" He pounded his fat baby hands on the high-chair tray. His eyes were wide with excitement and his mouth was bared in a toothless grin. He wriggled and giggled with merriment. I looked around and saw the source of his merriment. It was a man with a tattered rag of a coat—dirty, greasy, and worn.

His pants were baggy, with a zipper at half-mast, and his toes poked out of would-be shoes. His shirt was dirty and his hair was uncombed and unwashed.

His whiskers were too short to be called a beard and his nose was so varicose it looked like a road map. We were too far from him to smell, but I was sure he smelled. His hands waved and flapped on loose wrists. "Hi there, baby; hi there, big boy. I see ya, buster!" the man said to Erik.

My husband and I exchanged looks: "What do we do?" Erik continued to laugh and answer "Hi, hi there!"

Everyone in the restaurant noticed and looked at us, and then at the man. The old geezer was creating a nuisance with my beautiful baby.

Our meal came and the man began shouting from across the room: "Do ya know patty cake? Do you know peek-a-boo? Hey, look, he knows peek-a-boo!" Nobody thought the old man was cute. He was obviously drunk.

My husband and I were embarrassed. We ate in silence—all except for Erik, who was running through his repertoire for the admiring skid-row bum, who in turn reciprocated with his cute comments.

We finally got through the meal and headed for the door. My husband went to pay the check and told me to meet him in the parking lot.

The old man sat poised between me and the door. "Lord, just let me out of here before he speaks to me or Erik" I prayed. As I drew closer to the man, I turned my back trying to side-step him and avoid any air he might be breathing.

As I did, Erik leaned over my arm, reaching with both arms in a baby's pick-me-up position.

Before I could stop him, Erik had propelled himself from my arms to the man's. Suddenly a very old smelly man and a very young baby consummated their love relationship.

Erik, in an act of total trust, love, and submission laid his tiny head upon the man's ragged shoulder. The man's eyes closed, and I saw tears hover beneath his lashes. His aged hands, full of grime, pain, and hard labor—gently, so gently cradled my baby's bottom and stroked his back.

No two beings have ever loved so deeply for so short a time. I stood awestruck.

The old man rocked and cradled Erik in his arms for a moment, and then his eyes opened and set squarely on mine. He said in a firm, commanding voice: "You take care of this baby." Somehow I managed "I will" from a throat that contained a stone.

He pried Erik from his chest unwillingly, longingly, as though he were in pain. I received my baby, and the man said: "God bless you, ma'am; you've given me my Christmas gift." I said nothing more than a muttered thanks.

With Erik in my arms, I ran for the car. My husband was wondering why I was crying and holding Erik so tightly, and why I was saying: "My God, my God, forgive me."

I had just witnessed Christ's love shown through the innocence of a tiny child who saw no sin, who made no judgment; a child who saw a soul, and a mother who saw a suit of clothes.

I was a Christian who was blind, holding a child who was not. I felt it was God asking: "Are you willing to share your son for a moment?" when He shared His for all eternity.

The ragged old man unwittingly had reminded me: "To enter the Kingdom of God, we must become as little children."

[End quoting]

May we all try to remember this most important lesson as we enter a new year and a new millennium. Happy New Year to all!

— Part VII Of A Series — Native American Perspectives: Learning To Live Together As One

12/25/99 RAY BILGER

The forces that have long worked to control this planet by keeping people divided against each other are rapidly losing their ability to deceive us—as each day more and more people are awakening to what is really happening in the world. We have been taught (programmed) to fear one another and it sometimes comes as a surprise to realize that the fear has no basis in fact or reality.

Rolling Thunder, the Shoshone medicine man quoted earlier in this series, relates the following interesting story of his own experiences:

[Quoting]

A long time ago, when I first started to travel, I'd get on the stage in front of three or four thousand people, and most were White-eyes. I think the Indian was born afraid of the White man, so I'd look out there and forget what I was supposed to say, as well as the songs. I'd forget everything.

But we found out later that many of those White people were afraid of us, too. Now that's a terrible thing, people being afraid of each other because of wrong teachings. It's a terrible way to live because people need each other.

After a while, I began to understand that we'd been lied to. We'd become brainwashed as children [Indian and non-Indian alike] and it took me a long time to figure out that they're just people like anybody else....

We are trying to break down a part of that Buckskin Curtain, the White man's know-it-all attitude brought to this land. There was an Iron Curtain in Europe and a Bamboo Curtain in the Far East. In this country, there has always been a Buckskin Curtain between the Indians and other people, and it was created by lies in history books. [See my book The Untold History Of America for a more accurate portrayal of historical events.]

The White man and Indians have been at war with each other ever since the pilgrims turned on the Indians three years after their arrival in the so-called New World. Our people were scalped by the White men; scalping wasn't something we introduced.

We Indians have survived under very adverse conditions.... We do not use petitions anymore. We used to take up petitions with

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business as usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House and throughout our entire Judicial system.

The Untold History Of America* was written for the specific purpose of providing a high school textbook for all American schools that would educate students about the real nature of our national situation. With a clear understanding of things as they exist in reality, students will then be in a much better position to go on in life and do something to correct our current downhill course.

This book is for those who want to know why America is the way it is today, where we went wrong, who are the responsible parties, and what we can do to bring back the American Dream our forefathers and mothers fought so hard to establish and gave their very lives to defend.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original inhabitants of America, the Native Americans. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

The first 16 parts of Ray Bilger's ongoing research are compiled into the book:

thousands of names on them and send them to Washington. Sometimes we'd get a two-line letter back, but usually not. When we would get an answer, it was referred back to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, where it likely went in the wastebasket. Those times are gone; we work in different ways now.

We Indians have been suffering for a long time.... The White men made the treaties and the laws, but they don't want to keep the treaties. The old ones have told me that the White men will eventually have to live by them.

We can no longer allow fear to be a motivating factor in our relationships with other people. This is an Age of Enlightenment and Understanding we are entering, wherein many people will become consciously aware of the cosmic "battle" between Good and Evil. They will understand The Truth and why we have been lied to for so long, and people will be (and many already are) interested in understanding each other.

We cannot prejudge others—it serves no useful purpose to have preconceived notions as to what others may be like. Although we have been programmed to respond with fear, we can choose to replace that fear with faith—a faith that others are as interested in learning about us as we are interested in learning about them. Imagine how Rolling Thunder might have conducted his presentations had he been able to proceed on this footing. But he needed to learn what he did and, thus, he is now able to share this important lesson with us.

Even though he has endured high-level pressures to keep quiet about things, Rolling Thunder has always been very instrumental in enlightening people about The Truth of what is really happening in our world:

[Quoting]

I was speaking in California the day before Mount Saint Helens blew up. I told a big audience about the volcanos that were going to erupt. When I got home I got a call from a C.I.A. [Central Intelligence Agency] man, and he told me the government is not letting people know about the volcanos and other harm across the country that is on the way. I said, "Yes, but I am."

If I don't see six or seven people get up and walk out at the first part of my talk, then I figure that my talk has had no meaning and no success. Once they leave, the air is cleared, and the people come together as one, and the understanding comes to us all.

Prior to the arrival of Christopher Columbus and the European immigrants to the North American continent, Indian history and European history shared no common ground.

Since 1492, Indian history and American history have been inextricably linked. But most Indians never recognized British sovereignty over their tribes, and some still do not recognize the sovereignty of the United States. Many tribes today proclaim themselves as sovereign nations, just as they have been for thousands of years.

The policy of assimilation (of trying to get Indians to forego their traditional ways and instead become active, functioning members of the White man's society) has never worked. Assimilation is neither possible nor desirable. Cultural identities among the Indians are deeply rooted and not easily changed, and have already stood the test of time. The rich diversity of cultures that make up the American fabric are a beautiful and healthy mixture. Cooperation and accommodation are surely preferable to incessant conflict or homogenization.

Rolling Thunder shares some thoughts on this matter:

[Quoting]

Back in 1992, the Bureau of Land Management was rounding up Shoshone cattle with helicopters and chasing the Indians across the desert with one of those helicopters. I think it was the day before Thanksgiving. One of the biggest blizzards recorded in one hundred years came and downed the helicopters because the pilots couldn't see where they were going. The blizzard stopped the big trucks that were hauling out the Shoshone cattle and horses.

Of course, I'm not superstitious, it was just a coincidence. But I think that Grandfather heard our drums going and our prayers at that time....

The White man is making a big mistake if he doesn't ask Indians for some of their knowledge. Everything is written down and hidden away because we don't believe in giving something for nothing. Sharing works two ways.

Twenty to thirty years ago we had no White friends at all. The prophecies said that we would someday find our White brothers, but they were not to be the people who signed the treaties and pushed us off our land.

Spiritual gatherings between Whites and Indians are the most important events in maybe one hundred years. It's the first time we've seen large spiritual gatherings that are interested in preserving all Nature. Indians are beginning to be recognized for what we have to offer. Some people actually hunger for our contribution toward preserving Nature.

We are the teachers now. If you come to learn, okay.... When you come among us, respect our customs. We respect other people's customs.

We have the attitude that you're here to learn, and that includes everything.... Let us work together to bring back the spirit of this land and to heal the wounds of the Mother Earth and to make us spiritually strong.... I am asking that all of you return to Great Spirit's trail....

There was a time when I couldn't point to one White man I'd call my brother. Not one. Now I can call my brothers hundreds I've met and know to be honest. But they are not in politics and they are not in office. I don't want to get involved in politics, but I am interested to the extent that I realize if we're going to have peace, we need to have someone speaking out for the poor people and the Indians.

Don't ever feel guilty unless you're part of the desecration of Mother Earth, unless you got it coming. We're not here to make people feel guilty. We're here to wake you up. We love it when other people start to join with us as one mind, one thought. It's a healing thing because once you're happy—really truly honestly happy—that's part of the healing.

If you've been living a good life and not been part of the stealing of other people's children, if you've not been part of stealing other people's lands, if you've not been ripping off your neighbor, and if you've really been living as a spiritual person, then I can tell you that you won't have anything to worry about. There's no need to be afraid.

The spiritual is always more powerful than the physical.... The time for action and bringing people together and adhering to Great Spirit's law is here and now....

Until people learn to get along among themselves, how can they respect each other? How can they have their own self-respect, keep their treaties, and make peace? The first step in getting well—for nations as well as individuals—is to be honest with oneself.

Before we can have peace in this world, we have to have understanding and compassion. I'd like to see more respect for other people's religions and other people's beliefs. The main thing that has been forgotten in the "civilized" world is respect.

The reason that nations and peoples cannot make peace is because they have lost their roots—many people have lost their contact with Mother Earth and only know how to destroy. Respect for self and everyone else should begin with Mother Earth.

There are ways we can preserve Nature, such as replanting the trees in the West where there are no trees because they have been clear-cut, and there is nothing to hold the soil and stop the floods. This would make lots of work for people, including Native Americans, and help our economy as well as our environment....

I've seen poor people sleeping under bridges and on the streets. People told me they had no home to go to.... I have seen old ladies in New York walking the streets with packs on their backs. I thought they were hitch-hiking, but my New York friends said that they were old pensioners who didn't have money to pay the rent. I asked about where they sleep, and my friends said they sleep in doorways. And this is the financial capital of the world....

It makes me angry, makes my blood boil, when I see people being abused, thrown out of their homes, because they can't afford to pay rent.... We Indians believe in maintaining our culture, but we don't go over to our neighbor, throw them off their land, and watch them go hungry.... I think that a society that allows this is crummy, shameless, and I think we are all part of it. I'm the worst for allowing these kinds of conditions in my homeland. This is my land, but not my government....

In the old days, when the tribe was travelling and there was hunger, the chief and the medicine man had to eat last after the others had been fed. Now, how would it be if your politicians had such a system? Me and my wife, Spotted Fawn, never saved a dime in our lives.... How could someone save money when someone else just a short distance away, their own people, is starving to death? I know there are some people who could, but I just never got the hang of it....

Do you know why I'm proud to be an Indian? Because even with all this going on, we still don't hate anyone, even when they fought us at a place called Wounded Knee. I've also been on both ends of the gun.

My Grandfather, a traditional chief, was murdered by soldiers and agency police. It's not part of the Indian nature to hate, and it's not the way of the Great Spirit to hold hate and malice against anyone. The fact is, we have helped many people, including non-Indians....

The Great Spirit intended for all of us to be here or we would not be here. But the Great Spirit does intend that we should live in a certain way. No one should hate anyone else, because what affects one affects all. If the White people get hurt, we get hurt....

We all belong here. There's room for everyone. I've heard the propaganda that there are too many people, and from some young people, which disappoints me. This is propaganda, and of all the places I've been, the lies are the worst here. With proper distribution and consideration of Mother Earth, there is plenty for everyone....

Our cause is the same as your cause—to survive, to get back to the spirit again, so that our people can be strong. The main thing I'm doing is bringing a message that peace and economic security are possible. The message I'd like for all people around the world to know is that American Indians are a peaceful people and that we only want to live in brotherhood and peace with all the other people of the Earth....

The battle we are fighting is for all people, and not merely for us Indians. The next thing you know, they will be treating you like an Indian, stealing your land, stealing your children. You are not going to like it—you are going to scream so that they can hear you a long way off.

But who's gonna help you? I'd like to help you....

I cannot understand why White people continue to harm their own people by dumping harmful chemicals in the water and spraying deadly poisons in the air. Now there's hardly a safe place to swim, much less water fit to drink. The air is filthy too. It just doesn't make sense....

We have much to share, and many things will have to be put back into their proper order for us to survive on this Mother Earth. We are at the edge of terrible times right now. There will be a famine because of weather changes, but the politicians will send food to other people [foreign nations] to help support dictatorships, rather than give it to you. A big revolution will be arranged so that they can pit whoever they can against each other....

Everything turns in circles. If we do good work, it comes back to us, even in our thinking. Every word should be a prayer. If enough people put their minds together as one, there would be no war, no unemployment. There would be peace in the world.

Anyone can be a spiritual person by maintaining internal harmony and compassion. When you maintain internal harmony and compassion, the answers will come to you, you will know what to do to cope with problems and how to apply yourselves to make life better for others. When you meet someone, you should always meet them as a friend, as a brother [or sister]. Think how you can help that person to feel better or get them to smile. People need to feel free to smile and do their own thing, live their own lives.... People should not be free to destroy, but rather to create. In doing so, they will create good feelings and brotherhood....

Our religion says that the land, all of Mother Earth, belongs to the Great Spirit, the Creator, and that humans are only its keepers and trustees, who are allowed to live on the soil and cultivate it. We don't think we own the land, and we certainly don't believe that anybody else can own it either. We say there's room for everyone if we all share as brothers and sisters. We all belong here in this country. We were made to live in a beautiful way.

We have all been created to learn to live together as one on this Mother Earth. And if we think about history objectively and find out about what we have not been told in our schools or on our televisions, we will see that the forces who have been manipulating all of us have made every effort to keep us hating each other and, thus, divided against each other instead of realizing our true Oneness with one another.

As those manipulating forces lose power and fall away, and we are able to come together again as one people, we need to be prepared to reach out and touch each other. Fortunately for us, our true nature as sentient human beings is to live cooperatively and harmoniously with each other. It is just that we have been lied to for so long about how we must hate each other that it may seem strangely new to experience the Oneness we were all created to share. The healing of Mother Earth and ourselves will come about from Love and Compassion for Mother Earth, for each other, and for all things, not from hate. Hate is what created the situation we have today.

History will attest to the fact that the Indians have consistently and repeatedly made attempt after attempt to live together harmoniously with the White men who first came to this land as strangers. And history will show that the Indians' attempts to establish a peaceful coexistence were repeatedly rebuffed by the White man. This year, 2000, we stand on the threshold of a new millennium, and it is time that people can at last learn to live together as one. The Native American prophecies have proclaimed that this shall be so, or there will be chaos and disaster.

The following is titled A Call To World Peace from Chief Arvol Looking Horse, a Lakota Sioux. Although this was delivered in June of 1998, the message is timeless and perhaps even more appropriate today:

[Quoting]

Mitakuye oyasin, [To all my relations,]

My name is Chief Arvol Looking Horse. As the 19th Generation Keeper of the Sacred White Buffalo Calf Pipe, I invite you to attend the Third World Peace And Prayer Day at the Sacred Pipestone quarries in Pipestone, Minnesota on June 21, 1998. Pipestone is the home of the stone from which our Sacred Pipes are created, the place that holds the blood of our ancestors.

The necessity of the gathering was first brought to us in 1994, when the birth of the first White Buffalo Calf signaled the changes that are coming and the fulfilling of the prophecies of the seventh generation. Since then, three more White Buffalo Calves have been born. Their birth relates to our ceremonies and signifies the impact of what we are facing. The prophecies have directed that we pray for four years, at sacred sites, in the four directions, on June 21st of each year.

Our prophecies tell us that we are at the crossroads. We are faced with either chaos and disaster, or we can unite spiritually in peace and harmony. It is time to bring the message of the need for peace throughout the world. As a keeper of the sacred bundle, I ask for prayers for global healing.

Our Mother Earth is suffering. Her wonderful gift of water, trees, and air is being abused. Her children the two-legged, the four-legged, those that swim, crawl, and fly, are being annihilated. We continuously see these atrocities.

Our relatives, the animal nations, reflect our well-being. What happens to them, happens to us. The buffalo, wolf, salmon, bear, caribou, eagle, and other relatives in this fragile ecosystem are all in danger and suffering. Their voices must be heard. They need our help.

This is a call to all peoples. We ask that all people join us in prayer on June 21, 1998. If you are unable to be with us, we ask that you gather at your own sacred site, wherever the Spirit guides you to pray. To those who can join us, we ask you to bring your stories and prayers. We make a special call to the wisdom and sacred bundle keepers [peace pipes are wrapped in 'sacred bundles'], our storytellers, medicine society knowledge keepers, and peace keepers. We gather so that our future generations may survive through peace and balance.

In our circle of life there is no beginning and no ending. The process of mending the sacred hoop continues. May peace be with you, my relatives.

Mitakuye oyasin,

Chief Arvol Looking Horse

Keeper of the Sacred White Buffalo Calf Pipe

We can all help to mend the Sacred Hoop of Life if each of us begins each day with a sincere prayer to the Great Spirit for guidance toward bringing peace among all peoples of Mother Earth. If we effort to do this, and consciously and diligently work toward the fulfillment of the personal instructions we are given, then our prayers will be answered and it shall be so.

When we can once again drink the waters from the rivers and lakes, and when there are no more poor, or homeless, or hungry people, and when we can all smile because we are truly happy, then we will know that the healing is being accomplished and that we are learning to live together as One.

In the next segment of this series we will continue to explore the great wisdom of Native American teachings.

Harvard Speech By Charlton Heston: Winning The Cultural War

Editor's note: The following gem of a speech is hardly in need of any introduction. The only point worth making is to call your attention to the article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM on the subject of Mind Control. In this speech is an excellent formula for overcoming the more subtle and widespread methods employed to herd we-the-sheep into the mental corral designed to maintain control over us and dampen the fires of initiative and creativity inherent within every Lighted human.

There is another, related issue addressed within this speech having to do with the central role played by education—especially higher education—in the evolvment or devolvment of the human mind and spirit. Of course the crooks in high places have, for many centuries, carefully controlled this mechanism of mind control—but this is a VERY BIG subject and requires an extensive discussion at some later date. For now, let's just keep in mind the wise admonition which Mark Twain offered almost a century ago: "Never let school interfere with your education!"

2/16/99 CHARLTON HESTON

Speech given at the Harvard Law School Forum

I remember my son when he was five, explaining to his kindergarten class what his father did for a living: "My Daddy," he said, "pretends to be people".

There have been quite a few of them. Prophets from the Old and New Testaments, a couple of Christian saints, generals of various nationalities and different centuries, several kings, three American presidents, a French cardinal, and two geniuses—including Michelangelo.

If you want the ceiling repainted, I'll do my best. There always seem to be a lot of different fellows up here. I'm never sure which one of them gets to talk. Right now, I guess I'm the guy.

As I pondered our visit tonight, it struck me: if my Creator gave me the gift to connect you with the hearts and minds of those great men, then I want to use that same gift now to reconnect you with your own sense of liberty, your own freedom of thought, your own compass for what is right.

Dedicating the memorial at Gettysburg, Abraham Lincoln said of America: "We are now engaged in a great Civil War, testing whether this nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure."

Those words are true again. I believe that we are again engaged in a great civil war, a cultural war that's about to hijack your birthright to think and say what resides in your heart. I fear you no longer trust the pulsing lifeblood of liberty inside you—the stuff that made this country rise from wilderness into the miracle that it is.

Let me back up. About a year ago I became president of the National Rifle Association, which protects the right to keep and bear arms. I ran for office, I was elected, and now I serve. I serve as a moving target for the media who've called me everything from "ridiculous" and "duped" to a "brain-injured, senile, crazy old man". I know I'm pretty old, but I sure, thank the Lord, ain't senile.

As I have stood in the crosshairs of those who target Second Amendment freedoms, I've realized that firearms are not the only issue. No, it's much, much bigger than that. I've come to understand that a cultural war is raging across our land, in which, with Orwellian fervor, certain acceptable thoughts and speech are mandated.

For example, I marched for civil rights with Dr. King in 1963—long before Hollywood found it fashionable. But when I told an audience last year that White pride is just as valid as Black pride or Red pride or anyone else's pride, they called me a racist.

I've worked with brilliantly talented homosexuals all my life. But when I told an audience that gay rights should extend no further than your rights or my rights, I was called a homophobe.

I served in World War II against the Axis powers. But during a speech, when I drew an analogy between singling out innocent Jews and singling out innocent gun owners, I was called an anti-Semite.

Everyone I know knows I would never raise a closed fist against my country. But when I asked an audience to oppose this cultural persecution, I was compared to Timothy McVeigh.

From Time magazine, to friends and colleagues, they're essentially saying: "Chuck, how dare you speak your mind. You are using language not authorized for public consumption!"

But I am not afraid. If Americans believed in political correctness, we'd still be King George's boys—subjects bound to the British crown.

In his book The End Of Sanity Martin Gross writes that "blatantly irrational behavior is rapidly being established as the norm in almost every area of human endeavor. There seem to be new customs, new rules, new anti-intellectual theories regularly foisted on us from every direction.

"Underneath, the nation is roiling. Americans know something without a name is undermining the nation, turning the mind mushy when it comes to separating truth from falsehood and right from wrong. And they don't like it."

Let me read a few examples. At Antioch college in Ohio, young men seeking intimacy with a coed must get verbal permission at each step of the process, from kissing to petting to final copulation—all clearly spelled out in a printed college directive.

In New Jersey, despite the death of several patients nationwide who had been infected by dentists who had concealed their AIDS—the state commissioner announced that health providers who are HIV-positive need not—need not—tell their patients that they are infected.

At William and Mary [College], students tried to change the name of the school team "The Tribe" because it was supposedly insulting to local Indians, only to learn that authentic Virginia chiefs truly like the name.

In San Francisco, city fathers passed an ordinance protecting the rights of transvestites to cross-dress on the job, and for transsexuals to have separate toilet facilities while undergoing sex change surgery.

In New York City, kids who don't speak a word of Spanish have been placed in bilingual classes to learn their three Rs in Spanish—solely because their last names sound Hispanic.

At the University of Pennsylvania, in a state where thousands died at Gettysburg opposing slavery, the president of that college officially set up segregated dormitory space for Black students.

Yeah, I know, that's out of bounds now. Dr. King said "Negroes", Jimmy Baldwin and most of us on the March said "Black". But it's a no-no now.

For me, hyphenated identities are awkward, particularly “Native-American”. I’m a Native American, for God’s sake. I also happen to be a blood-initiated brother of the Miniconjou Sioux. On my wife’s side, my grandson is a thirteenth generation Native American with a capital letter on “American”. Finally, just last month, David Howard, head of the Washington D.C. office of Public Advocate, used the word “niggardly” while talking to colleagues about budgetary matters. Of course “niggardly” means stingy or scanty. But within days Howard was forced to publicly apologize and resign.

As columnist Tony Snow wrote: “David Howard got fired because some people in public employ were morons who (a) didn’t know the meaning of niggardly, (b) didn’t know how to use a dictionary to discover the meaning, and (c) actually demanded that he apologize for their ignorance.”

What does all of this mean? It means that telling us what to think has evolved into telling us what to say; so telling us what to do can’t be far behind.

Before you claim to be a champion of free thought, tell me: Why did “political correctness” originate on America’s campuses? And why do you continue to tolerate it? Why do you, who are supposed to debate ideas, surrender to their suppression?

Let’s be honest. Who here thinks your professors can say what they really believe? It scares me to death—and should scare you too—that the superstition of “political correctness” rules the halls of reason.

You are the best and the brightest. You—here in the fertile cradle of American academia, here in the castle of learning on the Charles River—you are the cream. But I submit that you, and your counterparts across the land, are the most socially conformed and politically silenced generation since Concord Bridge.

And as long as you validate that, and abide it, you are—by your grandfathers’ standards—cowards.

Here’s another example. Right now, at more than one major university, Second Amendment scholars and researchers are being told to shut up about their findings or they’ll lose their jobs. Why? Because their research findings would undermine big-city mayors’ pending lawsuits that seek to extort hundreds of millions of dollars from firearm manufacturers.

I don’t care what you think about guns. But if you are not shocked at that, I am shocked at you. Who will guard the raw material of unfettered ideas, if not you? Who will defend the core value of academia, if you supposed soldiers of free thought and expression lay down your arms and plead “Don’t shoot me!”?

If you talk about race, it does not make you a racist. If you see distinctions between the genders, it does not make you a sexist. If you think critically about a denomination, it does not make you anti-religion. If you accept but don’t celebrate homosexuality, it does not make you a homophobe.

Don’t let America’s universities continue to serve as incubators for this rampant epidemic of new McCarthyism.

But what can you do? How can anyone prevail against such pervasive social subjugation? The answer’s been here all along. I learned it 36 years ago, on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington D.C., standing with Dr. Martin Luther King and two hundred thousand people.

You simply disobey. Peaceably, yes. Respectfully, of course. Nonviolently, absolutely. But when told how to think or what to say or how to behave, we don’t. We disobey social protocol that stifles and stigmatizes personal freedom.

I learned the awesome power of disobedience from Dr. King, who learned it from Gandhi, and Thoreau, and Jesus, and every other great man who led those in the right against those with the might.

Disobedience is in our DNA. We feel innate kinship with that disobedient spirit that tossed tea into Boston Harbor, that sent Thoreau to jail, that refused to sit in the back of the bus, that protested a war in Viet Nam.

In that same spirit, I am asking you to disavow cultural correctness with massive disobedience of rogue authority, social directives, and onerous laws that weaken personal freedom.

But be careful—it hurts. Disobedience demands that you put yourself at risk. Dr. King stood on lots of balconies. You must be willing to be humiliated, to endure the modern-day equivalent of the police dogs at Montgomery and the water cannons at Selma. You must be willing to experience discomfort. I’m not complaining, but my own decades of social activism have taken their toll on me.

Let me tell you a story.

A few years back I heard about a rapper named Ice-T who was selling a CD called Cop Killer celebrating ambushing and murdering police officers.

It was being marketed by none other than Time-Warner, the biggest entertainment conglomerate in the world. Police across the country were outraged.

Rightfully so—at least one had been murdered. But Time-Warner was stonewalling because the CD was a cash cow for them, and the media were tiptoeing around it because the rapper was Black. I heard Time-Warner had a stockholders’ meeting scheduled in Beverly Hills. I owned some shares at the time, so I decided to attend.

What I did there was against the advice of my family and colleagues. I asked for the floor. To a hushed room of a thousand average American stockholders, I simply read the full lyrics of Cop Killer—every vicious, vulgar, instructional word:

“I got my 12-gauge sawed off. I got my headlights turned off. I’m about to bust some shots off. I’m about to dust some cops off....”

It got worse, a lot worse. I won’t read the rest of it to you. But trust me, the room was a sea of shocked, frozen, blanched faces. The Time-Warner executives squirmed in their chairs and stared at their shoes. They hated me for that.

Then I delivered another volley of sick lyrics brimming with racist filth, where Ice-T fantasizes about sodomizing two 12-year-old nieces of Al and Tipper Gore: “She pushed her butt against my....”

Well, I won’t do to you here what I did to them. Let’s just say I left the room in echoing silence.

When I read the lyrics to the waiting press corps, one of them said, “We can’t print that!”

“I know,” I replied, “but Time-Warner is selling it!”

Two months later Time-Warner terminated Ice-T’s contract. I’ll never be offered another film by Warner, or get a good review from Time magazine. But disobedience means you must be willing to act, not just talk.

When a mugger sues his elderly victim for defending herself—jam the switchboard of the district attorney’s office.

When your university is pressured to lower standards until 80% of the students graduate with honors—choke the halls of the Board of Regents.

When an 8-year-old boy pecks a girl’s cheek on the playground and gets hauled into court for sexual harassment—march on that school and block its doorways.

When someone you elected is seduced by political power and betrays you—petition them, oust them, banish them.

When Time magazine’s cover portrays millennium nuts as deranged, crazy Christians holding a cross, as it did last month—boycott their magazine and the products it advertises.

So that this nation may long endure, I urge you to follow in the hallowed footsteps of the great disobediences of history that freed exiles, founded religions, defeated tyrants—and yes, in the hands of an aroused rabble in arms and a few great men, by God’s grace, built this country.

If Dr. King were here, I think he would agree.

Thank you.

*Golden is the rainbow which shines through and through.
Its ray of hope is the spirit and the belief in me and you.*

Dr. Len Horowitz's Healing Celebration Remedy

especially as he is always well-armed with the most eye-opening documentation to back-up his often shocking claims.

In the event you are unfamiliar with Len Horowitz, D.M.D., M.A., M.P.H., he is a Harvard graduate, independent investigator, and internationally known authority in public health education. He has authored eleven books, including Emerging Viruses—AIDS & Ebola: Nature, Accident Or Intentional? and his most recent Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse.

Additionally, for those of you with access to the Internet, Dr. Horowitz's website address www.tetrahedron.org contains a wealth of information on disease, viruses, illness, vaccines, and also has important links to other primary sources of cutting-edge information. If you would like to phone Tetrahedron directly to order any of Dr. Horowitz's books, or to inquire for other information, you may do so by dialing 1-888-508-4787, which is also good from Canada.

So, without any further introduction, let me share what Dr. Horowitz had to say during our recent telephone conversation on December 21st:

Martin: I want to focus this almost exclusively on recent developments with viruses throughout the country, and particularly on the prevalence of upper-respiratory problems.

So, let's start with upper-respiratory infections. What do you know about those?

Dr. Horowitz: There IS an extraordinary increase in upper-respiratory infections, that are resistant to antibiotics, that an extraordinary number of people are coming down with.

What seems to be odd to me is that you had this beginning way back. About a year ago this August, was when we started to see emergency rooms from hospitals being filled with upper-respiratory cases and, at the time, it was odd because that wasn't a flu season.

There's been a tremendous amount of speculation that this was associated with the sprayings and potential release of upper-respiratory pathogens through chem-trails, though there has not been adequate evidence in that realm to definitively show specific micro-organisms involved.

[Editor's note: For those of you who may not know what Dr. Horowitz is referring to, he means what most people are calling the mysterious "contrail" sprayings that have been going on all across the country since about August of last year. These are deliberate "emissions" coming out of unmarked (and unacknowledged by air traffic control) jet airplanes.]

The emissions don't act anything like the usual jet contrails we've all seen for years, which are part of normal jet airplane exhaust at high/cold altitudes. These odd contrails linger for a long time and frequently spread out into a kind of a diffuse prismatic fog, are generated usually by several aircraft repeatedly crisscrossing the sky like weaving a loose net over a town or larger geographic area, and these spraying events always seem to generate a subsequent rash of illness—particularly upper respiratory and often severe, in both humans and animals, sometimes causing death—within a few days of the observed spraying event.

Sometimes there is noted a "spider web"-like material falling from the sky after such sprayings—onto trees, shrubbery, grass, people walking dogs, etc.—and those who have tried to collect this curious stuff and have it analyzed have routinely met with very persistent and deliberate roadblocks of one variety or another.

Whatever is going on in this regard—all over the country—is being kept a very closely guarded secret from the public. You would think, by now, that at least one of apparently many pilots of such aircraft would have "spilled the beans" on, say, Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program, but so far this project has been a well-kept secret.

Some "experts" of dubious allegiance and credentials have suggested that our government is trying to quietly protect we-the-people against microbiological agents that foreign terrorists might bless us with, through a mass inoculation of the public. However, whatever is being sprayed is proving to be a sometimes deadly threat to the health of both animals and people and, from the many anecdotal reports, it doesn't seem like any area of the United States has escaped these persistent sprayings.]

But what's pathognomonic almost, of a cover-up and misdeeds on the part of the government, or "shadow-government" if you will, is the fact that they have not stated anything in regard to this sudden increase in upper-respiratory infections. They, typically, take advantage of EVERY opportunity to promote epidemics and induce fear, as well as justify their own existence, by putting out press releases regarding every little outbreak that goes on.

And so, to have a national epidemic of an upper-respiratory infection, ongoing, with virtually no official response from the Centers for Disease Control—it's highly suspicious, if not pathognomonic, of cover-up.

When I contacted, first, the United States Air Force in regard to the chem-trails, that I had even photographed over my own home in northern Idaho, they then referred me to Centers for Disease Control toxicology. There I received a formal letter from the toxicologist stating that, indeed, there is some amount of ethylene dibromide. This is a known human chemical carcinogen that used to be in the unleaded gasoline, but because of its carcinogenicity, was removed. There was, according to his letter, stating some amount of that is in the JP8 jet-fuel being sprayed out of military aircraft, but that there has not been any indication of epidemics associated with it, although no studies have been performed to date.

So, that leaves us questioning: "What is the most likely scenario going on with these upper-respiratory infections?" From my perspective, I have to conclude that it's much like the Russian biological cocktail—a name that, I suspect strongly, came about because of U.S. Government propaganda. This is the concept of mixing together biologicals as well as chemicals—that is, a number of co-factors—to obscure the pathogenic process. That is a well-founded American technique, as well as Russian—well studied—and it appears that this would be an ideal way to induce illnesses that are very difficult to trace, diagnose, and treat.

So, the agent that I believe is most highly implicated in the upper-respiratory infection that we're looking at—this chronic, long-term, maybe weeks or months, type of upper-respiratory illness that many, many people got—they were coughing and hacking for weeks—they went to physicians, they got antibiotics, and maybe they got a little bit better as the antibiotics killed-off secondary bacterial infections, but there was a primary infection that existed, which is why these conditions returned, given a little stress or the elimination of antibiotics.

The most reasonable explanation, and the most implicated pathogen, is the mycoplasma. And it is titled and patented by Dr. Lo from the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, under a U.S. Government patent, “a pathogenic mycoplasma”. We’ve reprinted that patent in our new book Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse.

[Editor’s note: See nearby for a reproduction of this most revealing and suggestive patent document from Dr. Horowitz’s superbly researched book.]

And when one reviews the patent, one sees Dr. Lo’s explanation about this particular cross between a bacteria and a virus. That’s what a micoplasma is. It has the unique ability to evade the immune system, buries itself deep within the cells and cell nuclei, is thereby very difficult to diagnose and then treat, and subsequently causes, PRINCIPALLY, an upper-respiratory infection that won’t quit.

Furthermore, Dr. Lo’s patent, and scientific literature upon which it is based, shows that these upper-respiratory infections and immune-system suppressions are not the only symptoms these infections induce. The entire array of symptoms associated with AIDS is included. And so, Dr. Lo concludes that, far more likely than the AIDS virus, HIV, that is inducing the pneumonias and the cancers unique to AIDS, this pathogenic mycoplasma appears to be the primary initiator.

So really, today, in the new millennium, the science on upper-respiratory infections and viruses has actually shifted to not SINGLE etiological factors, but multiple co-factors, including combinations of bacterias and viruses, as well as chemical co-factors, including toxins that we are exposed to through contaminated air, food, water, and elsewhere in the environment. That’s really the conclusion that I’ve reached, Rick.

Martin: Now, we have spoken before about the wheat smut and some of the spongi-form fungi.

Dr. Horowitz: Yes.

Martin: Is this related, or is this an entirely separate issue?

Dr. Horowitz: I think it’s more a separate issue, and yet it may be related in its origins to, again, the biological weapons developers and National Cancer Institute contractors who we exposed in the book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola, and then, furthermore, in the new book Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse.

We’re looking at, ultimately, a handful of individuals and agencies who have wielded a variety of new biologicals. Clearly, when Central Intelligence was investigated for its illegal development, testing, and storage of biological weapons, long after the signing of the Geneva Accord, these several organizations were then discussed in Congressional hearings.

[57]	ABSTRACT
The invention relates to a novel pathogenic mycoplasma isolated from patients with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and its use in detecting antibodies in sera of AIDS patients, patients with AIDS-related complex (ARC) or patients dying of diseases and symptoms resembling AIDS diseases. The invention further relates to specific DNA sequences, antibodies against the pathogenic mycoplasma, and their use in detecting DNA or antigens of the pathogenic mycoplasma or other genetically and serologically closely related mycoplasmas in infected tissue of patients with AIDS or ARC or patients dying of symptoms resembling AIDS diseases. The invention still further relates to a variety of different forms of vaccine against mycoplasma infection in humans and/or animals.

For example, the Army Corps of Engineers, during the Central Intelligence Agency's Project MK-Ultra, which was their mind-control and population-control program, clearly reported, as we have documented in Healing Codes, using their own declassified documents, their interest in developing fungi that were cited on the same page as crystalline structures that we today understand is the form of the prions/crystals that are linked to Mad Cow Disease and other spongiform encephalopathies, including Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease in humans.

So you're looking at a massive amount of circumstantial evidence, and related scientific evidence, that SCREAMS that these biologicals, and combinations of toxic co-factors, are not likely coming out suddenly at this time, world-wide, by accident; that the CIA's project MK-Ultra—as we also report in Healing Codes, and show in the Congressional Record to prove it—had, as one of its components, the CIA's Top Secret Biological Weapons Program, MK-Naomi.

So, in fact, ALL of the biologicals that were developed by Central Intelligence were developed under a general context of population control, including behavior control, mind control, and depopulation.

When one looks at the fungal-linked prion, one sees an agent that is linked to behavior change, to mind manipulation. That is, it induces memory loss, as well as other symptoms of encephalopathy, neurological damage of the brain, as well as, it kills people—depopulation.

Suspicious are its historic links to scientists whose agencies have clearly been linked to intelligence agencies, people like Carlton Gadiusek, the initial investigator of Kuru, which was the first name given to the Mad Cow Disease protein prion.

The fact that Kuru was being investigated by Litton Bionetics Laboratories—the Army's 6th top biological weapons contractor, being overseen by Dr. Robert Gallo—during the early 1970s is highly suspicious.

Dr. Gallo is the scientific fraud who allegedly discovered the AIDS virus in 1984. We learned in my book Emerging Viruses that he had actually HELPED TO CREATE these types of viruses, way back in the late '60s and early '70s at Litton, and that the Litton company, during that period, not only was a major military weapons contractor for the Department of Defense, but their president, Roy Ash, was Nixon's alternate for the post he gave Henry Kissinger, who, at the time, was overseeing CIA/FBI and foreign policy as National Security Advisor.

Suddenly now, when you realize it was Kissinger who authored, and then published, the National Security Memorandum 200, calling for massive 3rd-world depopulation at the behest of George Bush, who stood up in Congress in 1968 and said that U.S. national security's primary interest is on burgeoning third-world populations, and now, in the 1990s, you see that that early depopulation agenda has shifted to America—wherein the Council on Foreign Relations published Foreign Affairs Journal, in March/April issue 1996, again, in a document that we've reprinted in black-and-white in the book Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse, shows that one out of every two Americans should no longer be here, according to the Rockefeller-directed Military-Medical-Industrial-Complex Commissioners, the "shadow governors", called by other names, including globalists, international banksters, and more.

So, you have to look at what is going on here as, most likely, Genocide, with a capital "G". In essence, genocide is being defined, or has been defined, as "the mass killing of people for political and/or ideological and/or economic gain".

Martin: This next question gets into Healing Codes. There are those who believe that sound can be used to heal people, and that particularly certain tones and certain sounds can be used to fracture crystalline viruses. Are there any health practitioners using sound, at this time, that are effective?

Dr. Horowitz: Yes, and actually that gets heavily involved in my new work. In the new year we will be touring the United States doing weekend programs called "Healing Celebrations", and during these we administer these types of technologies, these new bio-resonate technologies—involving sound, light, as well as the basic, traditional spiritual healing practices that blessed Yeshua, Jesus, had initiated.

All of these plagues, and this critical time in human history, had been prophesied. If you've heard me speak in the past, frequently I will ask my audiences: "How many of you have had friends or family over the last several years develop one or more of the great plagues of modern time?" Those plagues are all linked to contaminated vaccines and/or contaminated blood.

The plagues include chronic fatigue, fibromyalgia, lupus, M.S., A.L.S., chronic crippling rheumatoid arthritis, adult and juvenile type-1 diabetes, Krohn's Disease. Then there are the encephalopathies and the childhood injuries, the brain damage and neurological damage associates with autism, and attention deficit, and hyperactivity disorders, and sudden infant death, that have been induced by the vaccines.

And then there's the unique cancers.

And that's not to mention some of the more common things, like asthma, hay fever, allergies, and these chronic, draining, ear infections that the children get because of the vaccines.

Well over 95% of my audience's hands raise; the hands go up when I ask that question. You see, that is simply witnessing to the fulfillment of Bible prophecy, as is the next question: "How many of you have had an extraordinary increase in your spiritual sensitivities over the past few months?"

And, Rick, whereas a year and a half, or two years ago, I used to ask that question. And it would only be, maybe, 65% of Christian audiences would raise their hands; now I'm looking at 85% of those audiences raising their hands. And in general audiences, I see about 65%.

So, suddenly you realize there is a spiritual renaissance going on, and at the time that the Bible speaks of these great plagues striking, every prophet said that this would herald a spiritual renaissance on this planet, and that Christ's healing ministry would be, virtually, resurrected.

And so, that's what our "Healing Celebrations" are about. And when one considers the recent revelations that God gave to Dr. Barber, that the book Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse is based on—that is, the electromagnetic frequencies that God uses to create, destroy, and produce miracles—suddenly, now, as prophesized, we've been blessed with extraordinary knowledge, virtually God's technology, for healing.

And that involves what you're asking: electromagnetic frequencies that clearly have the capacity to produce miracles, that clearly have the capacity to shatter virus structures, virus crystals, prion-crystals perhaps, and that it's simply God's technology being revealed to man.

So, what's going to be very unique in the "Healing Celebrations" is the fact that, on stage, as we're getting into the Bible, we're getting into the healing Word that God gave us, and the instructions that God provided, as we do "hands-on" healing and prayer.

But we're going to have on-stage with us some of the most advanced bioelectric technologies for sound, light, and frequency generators for healing.

So, we're going to be doing laying-on of the hands, we're going to get into the Word, into God's Word; we're going to be articulating that with our lips, which is important, as I'll get into in a minute. And, at the same time, we're going to be making use of the God-given gifts of the technology that utilize God's blessings.

So that's why the areas of, primarily, bioelectric therapies, as well as oxygenation therapies, have been suppressed by the United States Federal Government, the Food and Drug Administration—and their master manipulators, the Rockefellers and their friends, who control the international chemical and pharmaceutical cartel.

The primary reason that they've suppressed this is that not only are they inexpensive, non-patentable, and highly effective, but because it's God's technology, and they're gross Satanists.

Before we finish, I want to mention something about prayer. There's been a recent revelation for me.

Let me share with you the most powerful revelation that I've gotten in recent months that is imperative understanding for people who want to heal themselves, empower their immune systems, and make it into the Messianic Age. This involves the power of prayer, faith, and trust. It involves the issue of God's technology—that is, electromagnetics, and that, simply, is this: when one prays, with faith and trust, the articulated word that comes out of the lips has the capacity, the God-given grace and gift, to impact the electromagnetic matrix of the universe, or what the Christian and Jewish worlds call the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit is, in fact, an electromagnetic matrix of all possibilities, including those Divine. God created every single one of us as Holy Children of God, in His image.

And how did God create? Very clearly it says, in Genesis, through the spoken word. Now, as parents, we want to give our children even more than we were blessed with. And that's the same for the Father.

God wanted for us as much as He had, and even more. And so, when He created us in His image, that could also easily be interpreted, not only that we were created in the likeness of the Father, but that we were created through the use of His imagination.

Just like when, before we create anything, we first imagine it. Before we express what it is that we have in our minds to somebody else for them to understand, we are getting an image internally that we're then articulating through our lips, and then communicating that image to somebody else for their understanding.

Likewise, when God created His children, He instilled in them the capacity to use the spoken word to impact the electromagnetic matrix of the Holy Spirit, which holds the potential to manifest, virtually, anything that is imaginable. And so, currently, the great opportunity and challenge that God wants us to have is the recognition that He, and we together, are going to turn this planet around, and its going to be easy, and its happening already.

All that's virtually required is following His Laws, as was always the case. Every nation that has not followed His Laws has been doomed. The Bible makes that very, very clear. Every nation, on the contrary, that abided by His Laws, prospered and was blessed.

Likewise, our own lives can be equally blessed by following His Laws. And, at this extraordinary time in history, when there's so much doom and gloom, and so much sickness and new microbes that induce great plagues, God wants us to know now that we hold the capacity to transcend all of that by just singing His praises and following His Laws.

And that's really my most recent personal revelation. And when one thinks about it, it makes complete sense.

Martin: Sure it does.

Dr. Horowitz: Because how did God create this planet and the universe to begin with? He spoke it into being. So, before there was anything, there was God, and the Word, and the Word is sound, and sound is electromagnetics, and electromagnetics is simply based upon physics and mathematics, and mathematics don't lie.

So suddenly, you're now blessed with realizing that, as a Holy Child of God, the brothers and sisters of blessed Yeshua, the Messiah, that we were given this same access to the Kingdom of God, to the creative potential and power inherent in His Word, and that we have our own lips and our own connection through the Holy Spirit to the Great Creator.

Incredibly, as it is occurring at this time in history, simple humble servants, like myself, are being extraordinarily empowered in their healing ministries, and in their general spiritual ministries. And so that's the great message of the "Healing Celebrations".

The first one is occurring on the first weekend in February in Portland, Oregon. We have several wonderful corporate co-sponsors for the event.

Financially, it is just all falling into place, as it has been Divinely directed. You know, it is said that "Those who are righteous, their steps are ordered by God."

And that's the truth for all of us. I mean, when we're "in the flow", that is, when we're following God's Laws, miracles are happening in our lives. And I thank God for all the great blessings that my family and I have received from folks like you, and all of our supporters nationwide, because this is an extraordinary time in our lives and, I think, in so many of our lives.

Martin: Is there anywhere, in particular, that I can refer our readers to, for more information about healing through sound or tones?

Dr. Horowitz: Yes. We have a couple links on our website to organizations and individuals who deal with that. I would refer you to one of the corporate co-sponsors of Healing Celebrations. His name is Lynn Kenny. He is with a company called BioRay, Inc.

[Editor's note: BioRay produces the sound and light generators based on the work of Royal Raymond Rife. There are 2 different BioRay sound and light generators available: a 200-watt unit, suitable for the average user, at a cost of $4,500; or a 300-watt unit, with heavier-duty circuits and more power, at a cost of $6,000. The BioRay sound and light generator includes a mini-tower with electronics, light tube, light stand, light tube holder with fans, and keyboard. It comes with an operator instruction manual, a brief instruction video, frequency charts, and the 335-page Handbook Of Rife Frequency Healing by Nina Silver, Ph.D. The buyer also receives free software updates from BioRay as they become available. Lynn, I have found to be one of the most sincere and knowledgeable people in the entire field of Rife technology and electromagnetic resonance therapies. He has developed one of about a half a dozen machines that I have personally tested, and it's difficult for me to endorse any of these machines.

I, personally, use them. I can't proclaim efficacy because of the lack of published scientific evidence that's associated with the suppression of this entire field of research, but I can tell you that, theoretically, and in terms of anecdotal reports, there have been thousands and thousands of people who have claimed benefits.

I think Lynn can, beyond anyone, show you some documented evidence. In fact, I would ask him to show you some of his cases, including chest X-rays of EXTREMELY virulent and invasive lung cancers being eliminated, being resolved, through the use of bioelectrics. So, I would refer you to Lynn.

And then there are other individuals and organizations who we've been working with that are doing some very exciting work. But again, I believe that every individual needs to experiment on their own with these types of non-toxic, very, very low-risk technologies. In fact, the risk of utilizing these machines is extremely low, and certainly the potential benefit is extremely high. And, just like I've been doing, I would recommend other people experiment for themselves on a variety of different machines, just to get their own sense of whether these are helpful.

Martin: Do you have any final remarks?

Dr. Horowitz: I would like to thank everybody—first God, and then all of our supporters over these years. It has been a tremendous joy for me. I want to thank, particularly, the thousands and thousands of people who have put us into their prayers and had their prayer groups contribute to our work and protection.

Editor's note: The following discussion of the relationship of sound and music to healing was prompted by Dr. Horowitz's above comments about this most important subject. We plan to delve more thoroughly into this most interesting healing modality at a later time. For now, the following is offered to simply bring together some interesting thoughts on this subject from the perspective of a professional who has spent many years in this arena. But first, Rick sets the stage with a few suggestions of his own. We can thank Dr. Horowitz for rekindling an interest and refocusing attention upon a very ancient healing art!

Music, Frequencies And Sound Healing

12/30/99 RICK MARTIN

Some ideas just won't go away. The concept of healing the physical body, as well as the mind, through the use of music and "sound" is one such idea.

There are those in the musical field who have devoted years, even decades, to research, development, understanding, and application of healing through the use of sound and/or music.

One such prominent musician is Steven Halpern. Another is Jonathan Goldman, President of the Sound Healers Association (SHA). SHA, founded in 1982, is a non-profit organization dedicated to research and awareness of the uses of sound and music as therapeutic and transformation modalities. Jonathan Goldman is also author of the book, Healing Sounds.

I recently spoke with Jonathan Goldman, who graciously granted permission to reprint here his article titled Nine Insights Into Sound Healing. People such as Jonathan Goldman and Steven Halpern are very busy, quietly, behind the scenes, working with people of many nations, introducing their healing sounds into nations, cultures, and homes where they quietly perform their miracles without fanfare.

I recently purchased Steven Halpern & Fabien Maman's 1998 CD called The Sacred Chorde—Music For Meditation & Healing and I may honestly report that it, indeed, IS music for meditation and healing. (It is available through Steven Halpern's Inner Peace Music, P. O. Box 2644, San Anselmo, CA 94979-2644. His website www.stevenhalpern.com provides many more details.)

In my discussion with Jonathan Goldman, he advised me that his most recent CD, titled Chakra Chants, is absolutely a profoundly potent, healing, sound experience. Just as we are going to press, I have received Goldman's CD titled, Chakra Chants. Quoting now from Ethereal Music's catalog, the source for this music [Suite 300, 12640 West Cedar Drive, Lakewood, CO 80228; telephone: (303) 988-1221 or toll free 1-888-Etherean]: "Jonathan Goldman has been empowered by the Chant Master of the Dalai Lama's Drepung Loseling Monastery to teach sacred Tibetan overtone chanting. After finding that many of the chakra resonance recordings available were difficult to listen to, Goldman decided to create a release that didn't rely on computerized sounds of doubtful therapeutic value. The result is eminently listenable; gloriously rich, harmonic sound, ripe with deeply resonant overtone chanting." I may, now, confirm that this description is entirely accurate. The sound, as intended, literally goes right through the body and is very powerful. Jonathan Goldman's other music include: Trance Tara, Dolphin Dreams, Gateways, Hermetic Harmonics (cassette only), Song of Saraswati (cassette only). In addition to sending me Chakra Chants, the people at Ethereal Music were also kind enough to send me another CD, titled Cho Ku Rei. I cannot speak highly enough for the intensely beautiful harmonics of this CD.

Goldman is currently working on another CD, not yet available, titled The Missing Chorde, and he has written a book by the same title. There is a lot of information about Jonathan Goldman and the Sound Healers Association on the Internet, under the general topic of Sound Healing.

Another CD which crossed my path recently, and one that is also profound in its healing potential, is called Crystal Voices: Sounds Of Light—The Pure Tones Of Crystal Singing Bowls. (Contact: Crystal Voices at 604-222-0060.)

For those of you interested in experiencing Steven Halpern live, on January 17 he will be conducting a workshop in San Diego, California titled Music And Learning: How To Optimize The Results. For more information, call The Brain Store at 800-325-4769 or send email to: info@brainexpo.com. Steven Halpern will be performing a concert as part of A Powerful Evening With Neale Donald Walsh on February 11 in Santa Monica, California. For more information contact the ReCreation Foundation (541) 482-8806, PMB 1150, 1257 Siskiyou Blvd., Ashland, Oregon, or send email to: recreating@aol.com. In Oakland, California, April 14-16, Steven Halpern will be appearing at The International Attitudinal Healing Conference 2000—Choosing Peace Over Conflict; Choosing Love Over Fear. For more information contact the International Network for Attitudinal Healing at (888) 222-7205. And then on April 28-May 3, Halpern will be appearing at The 2000 International Conference On Science And Consciousness, where he will present: Harnessing The Healing Power Of Music For Personal & Planetary Transformation. For more information contact (505) 474-0998 or send email to: message@nets.com.

Jonathan Goldman will be presenting the 5th Annual International Healing Sounds Intensive 2000 on July 8-16 (9 days), at Sunrise Ranch, a holistic resort and conference center located in the beautiful Rocky Mountains on 360 acres in rural Northern Colorado. For information about registering for this event, call (800) 246-9764. The cost for the event is $995, not including room and board at Sunrise Ranch.

To repeat myself, sound healing is a concept whose time has come. Let's read, now, what Sound Healing expert and musician Jonathan Goldman has to say on the subject.

Nine Insights Into Sound Healing

JONATHAN GOLDMAN

Sound and music have been used since ancient times for healing and transformation. Yet there is today a growing re-emergence of interest in this field of sound healing with many different thoughts and ideas about the effects of sonics and their use as a transformative energy. Many of the major questions about sound healing are still unanswered. The following thoughts are just my own and may not be based upon the reality of anyone else. They may, however, prove to be useful insights and considerations for others.

ONE: We are all unique vibratory beings.

To begin, we address the concept that the basic principle of sound healing is that everything is in a state of vibration, including our organs, bones, tissues, etc. If these parts of the body become imbalanced, they may be healed through projecting the proper and correct frequencies back into the body. This works for imbalances and over- or under-activity in the chakras and the energy fields. I believe that this concept is correct.

I merely question whether the various frequencies that have been tabulated by numerous scientists and sound healers as being the frequency for the liver, for example, or the root chakra, are correct.

My reason for questioning this information is that, first, usually none of these frequencies that have been tabulated agree with one another. The second is, do you really believe that you have the same vibratory rate as anyone else?

When I first began this work, nearly fifteen years ago, I was involved in a project researching and investigating the effects of tone upon the chakras. I found dozens of different systems that used different sounds to achieve the same result. How could this be?

I wondered. Later on, I came across the works of different scientists who used different frequencies to achieve the same result (and, I might add, with apparent success).

This led me to create the formula: Frequency + Intent = Healing.

The only commonality in many of these different systems was that the practitioner had the intent of vibrating or balancing a particular area or field with sound. However, this formula also stemmed from my own work with students, healers, and healees.

It seemed that the more experience I had teaching and showing how to use sound as a transformative modality, the more validation I received that no one and no thing were the same. Which led to my believe that we are all unique vibratory beings, in a constant state of fluidity and flow.

On a cellular level, there may be generic tones for specific organs. However, we may be lacking certain information regarding the proper understanding of this. Along with a frequency for the structure of the organ, there may also be a modulated frequency which is the pulse of the organ (how the organ interacts with the various energy which passes through it—is it slow or fast, etc.?).

The brain, for example, pulses at different frequencies (alpha, beta, delta, theta) but these are not the frequencies of the tissues of the brain. There may be at least two very different types of sonics which influence and affect any organ.

To make the assumption that we are all at the same level of physical, emotional, mental, or spiritual development (and therefore that our chakras all behave the same and resonate to the same frequencies) is rather simplistic.

In Tibet it seems that different chakras receive different mantras as sounds to resonate them, depending upon the level of development of the student. An "Ah" sound, for example, might work for the throat chakra at one level of development, while it might work for the heart chakra at another level.

Years ago, a student of mine found a system for working with sound and the chakras which used the note "C" for the root chakra and went up the chakras diatonically (C, D, E, F, etc.) so that the seventh or crown chakra vibrated to B.

In principle, it was a very neat system, though it did not strike me as being correct for several reasons: First, it seemed that low frequencies affected my root chakra while high frequencies affected my crown. If the diatonic scale system were true, then that would mean that a low B would affect my crown chakra while a very high C would affect my root chakra, which did not seem to be the case. Also, is that note C resonating the root chakra before or after coffee? Early in the morning or late at night? Before or after meditation? It well may be that these activities and ingestions affect the frequency rate, not only of our physical body, but also of the chakras and the etheric fields.

So, to the question: "Do I believe we all resonate to the same frequency?" I answer, "No! I do not." I believe we are all unique and different vibratory beings with different frequencies for our body, brain, and energy centers. And these frequencies can change.

TWO: Because of the uniqueness of the human vibratory rate and the uniqueness of our response to music, it is difficult to accurately test the effects of music upon the human body and energy fields.

One of the most effective measurements for testing the effects of music upon the body is kinesiology, a method of muscle testing. While highly trained practitioners of kinesiology can sometimes determine profound insights, kinesiology is a very difficult and specific tool if the practitioner is not skilled or clear about its purpose. It is necessary that the persons doing the testing be well trained in the various subtleties of kinesiology, and that they be extremely clear, with nothing to prove when doing the testing. Thus, one sometimes questions the results of kinesiological testings, particularly involving music, if the person doing the testing has anything to prove.

Here is one final thought on using kinesiology to check for the positive or negative effects of music. If a practitioner checks a patient while the music is on, both parties will be influenced by the music and the results are not balanced nor accurate. However, if one of the persons wears headphones while listening to the music, it is speculated that headphones actually add their own influence into the kinesiological testing and change the results. The ultimate answer would be to use a machine that used the same amount of pressure each time. However, while such a machine does exist, it is not commonly found nor used.

THREE: The energy inherent on recordings may be as important as the sound reproduction of the recording.

As we move more and more into audiophile consciousness, with the advent of high-tech recording and playback equipment, a certain bias is developing which insists that for recorded music to be beneficial, it must be well recorded, without any distortion. There is an aspect of truth in this. "Clean", clear music, without distortion, etc., is very nice to our ears. It's great in fact, and I prefer it to poorly recorded sounds. But let's face it, clean music isn't necessarily therapeutic. If one believes that there is an energy form (we'll call it "intent" for this purpose) outside the actual frequency range of the music, then something else is also going on when we listen to music.

Have you ever heard a poorly recorded "bootleg" of a fabulous concert that absolutely sent you soaring when you heard it, then when you heard the same song released on the album that was clean and clear, it did nothing for you? I have. I have a number of recordings of chanting from various spiritual masters on which the fidelity is questionable. But the energy inherent in these recordings is marvelous and somehow the healing or transformative energies are still transmitted through the sounds.

If someone is so biased that they cannot bypass the audio fidelity of a recording, I have no doubt that these people will not allow themselves to access the energy inherent on poorly recorded cassettes and discs. This may be a problem unique unto the individual and not inherent in the actual recording. Let us not bias others with our own biases. It certainly qualifies and quantifies what's good and bad for us.

FOUR: No one recorded sound medium is better than another.

This brings us to the insight of whether analog recordings (cassettes and record albums) are more beneficial than digital recordings (or vice versa). The sonic jury is still out on this. No one knows. No doubt, both analog and digital are very different and, no doubt, they both can have positive results.

When kinesiology was first used as a method of testing the effects of music, it really seemed that digital was not beneficial. At the time, this may have been true. The early digital recordings sounded different: they were clear, but cold. Some people would develop headaches while listening to them. Still later, as digital continued to develop, I found people who believed that digital recording created sounds that were not beneficial to the cells of the body or auric field. There may be truth to this. It is difficult to accurately test the effects of music.

More recently, a friend of mine who is a fine musical magician suggested that I was anti-digital because I was afraid of new technology. "Once you stop being afraid, you'll be able to work with digital and synthesized, sampled sounds as a sonic form that can be worked with (and influenced) like any other sound." His words rang true. "Besides" he added "digital is working with quartz-based technologies and you know how you love to work with quartz crystals." I listened to my friend's advice and began to incorporate some digital and synthesized sampling technologies in my work. For example, during the recording of Angel Of Sound, I utilized both analog and digital studio techniques. In addition, during the recording, I consciously asked Shamael, the Angel of Sacred Sound, to come into the recording (regardless of whether it was analog or digital). From all reports, the Angel is there.

One last thing: Some purists tend to think of analog as being a purer sound than digital. More real. Conceptually, this is true, until you add all the other elements of recording and playback to this. When you take an analog recording, such as a cassette, and play it back through a transistorized system (which most of us have), that analog signal is significantly changed. The sounds that come out of the systems are no more "real" than anything else. Prerecorded music is in some way altered and changed from what it originally was. Therefore, no one recorded sound medium is really better than another.

FIVE: All tunings from different instrument have healing potential.

Many people believe that only harmonically related tunings are healing. Without getting too technical, let me say that the tunings of keyboards are, for the most part, tempered tunings. This means that the natural harmonically related intervals and ratios of different notes, when played together, are changed and different. On a piano, the ratios are logarithmically related, not harmonically. They don't possess the naturally occurring ratios that are a part of the harmonic series. Blame it on Bach, if you like, since he pioneered equal tempered music. It did change the intervals on the keyboard, but it also allowed players to be able to change keys without hitting "bad" notes.

There are those who feel that only music which has harmonically related intervals, created either by the voice or by instruments that are not equal tempered, have therapeutic value. As the author of a book which focuses on harmonics, I understand this belief, though it doesn't resonate with me as being true. Too many people have received healings, experienced transformations, and generally had wonderful times listening to music that was created by instruments such as the piano, which uses equal temperaments. One cannot denigrate these healing experiences by proclaiming that tunings must be harmonically related to be healing.

SIX: Both intent and frequency create the transformation experience.

In my book Healing Sounds and in the workshops which I teach, I focus a lot of energy and thought on the importance of intention: the energy behind the sound. I point out how important intention is in the healing process. Never, however would I say that intention is the only thing. Remember: Frequency + Intent = Healing.

It's not just one or the other. As the saying goes: "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." As another writer pointed out, the path between conception and execution can be quite distant. If, for example, I want to calm someone and I shout in their ear, my intent may be one thing, but the actual sound I make may be quite another thing and create quite a different effect.

Intentionality is extremely important and something that needs to be worked on consciously and consistently by sound-healing practitioners. Frequency is equally important and not to be ignored. We need to be aware of the psychophysiology of sound, how we use sound, and how sounds affects us. We are vibratory beings, and different sounds will resonate and influence us, unless we get to a level of attunement practiced by certain masters.

Perhaps it is regarding this ideal level of mastery and attunement where most people get confused. Few of us have achieved this vibratory level or the clearness of intent inherent in it. Usually, we are working at a level where we still need to clear ourselves when we're working with projecting intention. Just having a desire to be clear doesn't mean we're there yet.

Probably when one has reached a mastership of clarity, where one can truly project Divine intention—the difference between "Thy will" and "My will"—one can make any sound and have a desired effect. However, this is not often the case.

It's important, as we go through our spiritual evolutionary process when working with sound, to become aware of the effects of the sounds that we are projecting, as well as our proposed intentionality. It is the only way.

SEVEN: Sound is subtle.

We still live in the old paradigm of "more is better" and particularly that louder and longer is better. However, when working with sound, the volume, duration of frequency, and the effect of the sound are not necessarily interrelated.

We all know about how loud volumes can cause hearing loss. Also, in terms of physiological response, loud sounds do have specific and not particularly therapeutic effects. They trigger the "fight or flight" response, release adrenaline, raise heart beat, respiration, and brain-wave activity, and may interfere with immunological functions.

There are therapists, for example, who use music played at very high volumes to elicit certain responses. This is valid, but we must remember that this is a specific use of music for a specific purpose.

It may be that, when working with sound, loud volumes actually have less ability to make those changes down at a molecular level than do soft, gentle sound. Very loud sounds may be too overpowering to achieve a desired and long-lasting effect, merely passing through the body without creating change. So, louder is not better, and neither is longer necessarily better.

While we may still have a "more is better" consciousness, this is not necessarily true in terms of sound. A frequency or tone may be effective when listened to or chanted for a brief period, but the effects may nullify or even become adverse over too long a period of time.

There may be a minimum amount of sound duration that is necessary to make changes in the physical, emotional, mental, or spiritual body. Some sound-healing practitioners say that five minutes is needed for a tone to really make change. Others say ten, and others, twenty minutes. There are some sound practitioners who have people sound or listen to music for many hours.

Since we are all unique vibratory beings, I believe it differs from individual to individual. I certainly have observed extraordinary changes in individuals who have received sound for only a couple of minutes or less.

With the various sonic equipment and recordings that are now available which create specific sounds, there may be people who will be sounding or listening to a particular frequency all day long. Depending upon the individual and their needs, this may be fine, or it may not be healthful. More is not necessarily better, and with sound, too much can possibly be debilitating to the nervous system or other systems of the physical and etheric bodies. Balance is an extraordinarily important aspect of any transformative or healing work, and principles of balance should be applied to sound.

EIGHT: Sound and light/color are different forms of energy.

This thought may be quite controversial for some who believe light and sound are the same. No one really knows. My belief is that sound and light are related, but they are not the same. One way to look at this relationship is through the harmonic series. Harmonics are the notes created from a fundamental tone which display universal principles of whole number ratios. A note vibrating at 100 cycles per second will affect any note that is a harmonic of this. This means a note vibrating twice as fast at 200 cycles per second, a note vibrating three times as fast at 300 cycles per second, and so on. This is the sonic equivalent of the ancient Hermetic Principle: "As above, so below."

We can therefore conceptually take that 100 cycles per second note, and say it is harmonically related to a note at 1 million cycles per second. However, this does not mean it is the same note nor will it necessarily have the same effect.

What has happened with the sound-as-light phenomenon is that mathematical scientists have either taken the frequency of a note and then doubled it forty times, until this frequency is within the same range as a particular color of light, or taken the frequency of a color and halved it forty times until this frequency is within the same range as a sound. Then these scientists have said "This is that." It may be, but no one has actually turned a sound into light.

Different colors have been assigned to different notes, with devices like light organs, but it's still all theoretical. No one has been able to take one sound frequency and jump it up forty octaves, without relying on putting it into different instruments or computers which, of course, change the natural process of a sound wave.

It may be that, as a frequency enters a different energy state (sound would have to turn into many different types of energy, such as heat, before it became light), the frequency goes through a conversion process and the mathematics are very different. As energy is transduced, the math may become much more complicated than we know. The simple doubling process may not be relevant.

My thoughts are that sound and light are complementary energy forms, but not necessarily the same. Assigning specific colors to specific tones may be an oversimplification of a process we do not yet understand. It may be that we can encode any color upon any frequency. This is another idea that I wanted to share with you, as long as we're on the subject. No one really knows the answers to this insight at this time.

NINE: All music potentially has therapeutic qualities.

Many people believe that only New Age music is healing, or whatever type of music you want to substitute for "New Age". This gets into the same conundrum I experienced many years ago when I first began this sojourn into sound. Everybody wanted me to talk about how rock 'n' roll was the devil's music and bad. I wouldn't. It is my belief that any music, depending upon the time, the place, and the need of the individual, can have therapeutic effects. It is not that any music will have therapeutic effects, but that it can, if it is correct for the individual.

Knowledge of the psycho-acoustic effects of sound is helpful here. Certain sounds will often create similar physiological responses in many people. Slow pulsed music, for example, will have a tendency to slow down our heart rate, respiration, and brain waves. Often, fast music will have the opposite effect. If it's three o'clock in the morning, I'm tired and driving home from a party, and I put on a piece of deeply relaxing music, what happens? I become even drowsier and such music would probably be extremely hazardous to my driving. However, if I were to play some loud, up-tempo music, most likely it would stimulate me, keep me awake, and under those conditions be quite therapeutic.

This is not the same situation if it's three in the morning and I'm trying to find music to help me sleep. Very different responses required. Very different types of music are needed.

Knowing how you want to use music is extremely important, as is understanding the potential psychological and physiological effects that are inherent in the music. Slow pulsed New Age music is excellent, of course, for relaxation, but it's not ideal for dancing. Yet, if dancing (and the extraordinary energy release found by dancing) is desired, slow New Age music is not ideal.

What is your purpose for using a specific piece of music? Is it for meditation, guided imagery, dance, deep recollection, or for emotional release?

Realizing that every type of music has the ability to resonate with us on many different levels, it is possible that any type of music can have positive results. We should be open-minded about all music and the possible transformative and therapeutic results that can occur from it.

One of the best ways of working with music is to create a musical prescription for yourself. Find out what types of music you respond to best.

What specific music makes you feel joyful?

What music makes you feel sad?

Write down the different music that elicits different responses, and use this music when you want to create a feeling or a mood. No one piece of music will affect everyone the same way, especially when it comes to our emotional responses to music. You cannot expect someone else to have the same experiences as you do with any music. However, frequently, with our own experiences, if we have had a specific emotional response to listening to particular music, we will have a similar response when listening to that music again.

When working with others, you must find out what music works best for them in order to help create their musical prescription. It may be possible that a person is blocked from enjoying certain types of music because the sounds resonate with imbalances within them.

For example, one time a student could not listen to very low sounds, particularly those produced by chanting Tibetan monks. This was a response to a blockage in the lower chakras. Once this person was able to acknowledge the situation and open to the resonances created by the deep sounds, the blockages disappeared and they were able to release the imbalances. It was quite a transformational experience.

This story illustrates how it is possible to find music that we really dislike, which can actually be useful in helping us to encounter and heal imbalanced aspects of ourself.

My final suggestion is to allow the potentiality of healing to occur in every piece of music. Music can reach into aspects of our psyche that we may not have a clue even exist.

There are people working solely with classical music, or "sacred" music, or New Age music. The reality is that all forms of music, from rock, to country, to jazz, to all the world musics that are now available to us, may have the potential of reaching further into our bodies, minds, and souls to initiate healing and transformation.

Be open to all possibilities. You can never know what may transpire until you have tried.

The Unnerving Truth About Mind Control

“Forewarned Is Forearmed”

Editor's note: If you want to start an argument at a dinner party, just bring up the subject of mind control.

Some people cannot even admit susceptibility to the subtle persuasion tricks of the Madison Avenue marketing machinery which dictate clothes styles and so many other things we “just have to have” or we're not cool. For these people, the idea of any more direct and invasive kinds of mind control are simply beyond comprehension.

However, for many ones who are attracted to read this newspaper, the subject of mind control is neither something new nor something at all difficult to accept or see operating everywhere. Rather, it is a subject of great interest—especially from the point of view that “forewarned is forearmed” and thus mind control loses a lot of its effectiveness when one understands what is going on.

We have been looking for some time for an outlay of information which would be helpful both as a well-rounded source of information on mind control, as well as something which you could share with friends who have at least a somewhat open mind to the possibility. Let's put it this way: while we DON'T necessarily want to create overly heated arguments at the dinner party, we DO want to liven things up a bit with intelligent, well-documented discussion that the head-in-the-sand crowd can't easily shoot down.

Well, all of a sudden several excellent resources “just came together” and crossed our path recently. We are sharing these with you here.

The first source is the same one that brought you “Red Tide: The Chinese Communist Targeting Of America” in the last issue of The SPECTRUM. This is the publication called The News Monitor, No. 19, Volume 5/5, which got to us by mysterious means and carries no date nor any other contacting information, though it is always our desire and policy to give credit where credit is due—if we have the information to do so.

Some clues within this particular Monitor publication suggest it is from the later part of 1997 and originates from Australia. In their masthead is the statement: “Political correctness is the marketing name for mind control.” If you go to actor and longtime activist Charlton Heston's speech to Harvard Law School, elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM, you will find quite a bit of agreement with that wise counsel.

The News Monitor divided their excellent article into two parts, as is clearly noted when you read along, though it appears to be written by one person. The author, however, remains a mystery.

Meanwhile, the second source is not at all shy about publicity. She is Judy Wall, who wrote two superbly documented articles about mind control, first published in the RESONANCE newsletter. She is the Editor and Publisher of that newsletter of the Bioelectromagnetics Special Interest Group of the Mensa (high I.Q.) Society. These articles then appeared in an edited format in two different issues of NEXUS magazine—a resource all SPECTRUM readers should pay attention to for good information on a wide variety of topics (NEXUS Magazine, 2940 E. Colfax Ave. #131, Denver, CO 80206; phone: 1-888-909-7474).

Judy's first article, from the November-December 1998 NEXUS, picks up where the News Monitor's author leaves off—with questions about strange behaviors associated with the Persian Gulf war. She continued her excellent investigation with a sobering array of issues in a second article, from the October-November 1999 issue of NEXUS, wherein the mind-control threat to our civil liberties is examined in greater detail. Her documentation of sources of information is particularly commendable in a subject area such as this, so prone to hysteria and denial. According to NEXUS, Judy Wall can be contacted at: RESONANCE, 684 County Road 535, Sumterville FL 33585 USA; phone: 352-793-8748.

Again, remember that “forewarned is forearmed” where the subtle tricks of mind control are involved!

MIND CONTROL

(PART 1)

There are powerful and largely secret organisations which are funded by the international bankers that are interested in mind control. As Illuminati leader, Adam Weishaupt once stated “If you can control the head, you control the rest of the man.”

EARLY HISTORY

As anyone who cares to investigate the matter will discover, the international bankers, with their links to the petrochemical companies and the “military-industrial complex”, have profited handsomely from all the major wars of this century and have gained virtual control of all the nations of the Earth through their astronomical indebtedness, much incurred during times of war.

Prior to World War I, The Royal Institute for International Affairs (RIIA) in England did a study at Wellington House to develop techniques to condition the public into supporting war. The project was headed by Lord Northcliff, newspaper publisher, Lord Rothmore, and British intelligence MI-6 member, Arnold Toynbee; American “specialists” Walter Lippmann and Edward Bernays also attended these “brainstorming sessions”.

After a six-month study, they determined that about 87% of the population formed opinions without using critical rational processes. The English people were then subjected to such sophisticated propaganda that they were soon willing to send their sons to die in the fields of Flanders by the thousands.

The same techniques were used on the American public preceding every major war in this century. The RIIA set up a sister organisation in the United States, known as the Council on Foreign Relations [CFR], largely funded by the Federal Reserve Bank which has become the real governing power of the United States today.

The CFR later organised the United Nations, which is destined to be the “New World Order's” world government.

Many of the US Presidents since F.D. Roosevelt, many Senators and Congressmen, and many highly placed military figures are members of the CFR or its sister organisation, the Trilateral Commission [TC]. CFR members manage all the major news wire services. There are 24 CFR members on the New York Times staff. And every national TV news anchor-person is a member of the CFR. This can be easily verified by examining a CFR membership list.

Propaganda continues to this day. Preceding the recent Desert Storm war, the propaganda level in the news media was cranked up several levels and was quite obvious to all but those with uninformed or untrained minds [would that still be 87%?].

CHEMICAL MIND-CONTROL

After World War II, British MI-6 leader Lord Carrington convinced the American president Harry Truman to establish the Central Intelligence Agency [CIA]. The secret Treaty of Fort Hunt which granted amnesty to former Nazi war criminals was negotiated between the first CIA director, Allen Dulles, and former Nazi SS intelligence leader, Reinhard Ghelen. Under "Operation Paper Clip" many former Nazi SS officers and doctors were brought into the United States. A large percentage of these were employed by the CIA (some sources state as high as 50% of the early CIA employees were Paper Clip Nazis).

The CIA has had a long interest in mind control. In the 1960s, in their project MK-ULTRA, the CIA ordered thousands of kilos of pure LSD from Sandoz Laboratories in Switzerland to do chemical mind-control experiments! The CIA Technical Services Staff [TSS] decided that LSD could be used to obtain information from enemy agents and prisoners of war and could be used against the enemy on the battlefield.

Large-scale LSD tests were conducted on American soldiers at Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland; Fort Benning, Georgia; Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; Dugway Proving Ground, Utah; Fort Bragg, North Carolina; and Fort McClellan, Alabama. Some deaths and many lawsuits resulted from this military LSD testing, often on unwitting subjects in the 1960s.

During World War II, German scientists discovered that prisoners of war became more docile and obedient when trace amounts of sodium fluoride was placed in their drinking water. Apparently this poison selectively lulls brain cells in the portion of the brain that does independent thinking and tends to resist authority. Soon the Russians were also treating the drinking water of their prisoners of war with trace amounts of sodium fluoride.

Malathion was also developed by the Nazi government as a chemical warfare neurotoxin, but it was determined to be too dangerous to be used on the battlefield (but not too dangerous to aerial spray the Los Angeles area's civilians for YEARS).

[Editor's note: Not just the Los Angeles area, but large segments of the San Francisco Bay Area were aerial-sprayed at night by helicopter brigades in approximately the early 1980s, with malathion, to supposedly combat the so-called "Mediterranean fruit fly" which had appeared all of a sudden out of nowhere and threatened to ruin many fruit crops. If your car was parked outside without a cover, you risked a ruined paint finish—and that was the least of the possible hazards of these large-scale, indiscriminate sprayings over entire towns!]

While the practice of fluoridating drinking water has been outlawed in most European countries, the State of California has recently enacted legislation to require all municipalities to treat their drinking water with sodium fluoride. Also the State of California apparently doesn't share the former Nazi government's concern about the dangers of malathion in their incessant war against the "Medfly" [what the "Mediterranean fruit fly" came to be called].

ELECTRONIC IMPLANTS

Dr. José Delgado was hired by the CIA to do experimentation with miniaturised electronic implants. In a speech recorded in the February 24, 1974 edition of the Congressional Record, No. 26, Vol. 118, Dr. Delgado had this to say:

"We need a program of psychosurgery for political control of our society. The purpose is physical control of the mind. Everyone who deviates from the given norm can be surgically mutilated.

"The individual may think that the most important reality is his own existence, but this is only their personal point of view. This lacks historical perspective.

"Man does not have the right to develop their own mind. This kind of liberal orientation has great appeal. We must electrically control the brain. Someday armies and generals will be controlled by electric stimulation of the brain."

The uninformed may think this sounds like science fiction, but in the May 17, 1965 issue of the New York Times, Dr. Delgado had reportedly successfully connected electronic implants to the motor nervous system of a bull and could stop the charging bull in its tracks by radio control. In another report, Dr. Delgado had surgically implanted a cat with an electronic implant which could transmit everything the cat was seeing and hearing to a nearby TV monitor. Who would ever suspect the cat was a "surveillance bug"?

Well, considering the tremendous advances in large-scale integrated circuits, electronic implants have come a long way since the 1960s.

Some electronic implants are smaller than a grain of rice and can be injected into the subject via a hypodermic needle. A recent law was passed in Los Angeles that any lost pets picked up by the pound had to be injected with a telemetry implant before being released.

These telemetry implants are electromagnetically connected to the Global Positioning Satellite [GPS] system so that, if the pet is ever lost again, they can be immediately located by GPS monitors.

Similar implants are now placed into newborn children at many hospitals. The selling point to the parents is that the children can be easily located if they ever become lost.

Ronald Kane, Vice President of CUBIC corporation, a major manufacturer of implantable chips, while remarking on the chips' profitability, has said: "If we had our way, we'd implant a chip behind everyone's ear in the maternity ward."

Similarly, the Desert Storm troops were implanted with telemetry chips so that their positions could be located on the field of battle to assist in rescue operations and minimise "friendly fire" casualties.

THE I.B.M. 2020 NEURAL IMPLANT

But, in view of the early work of Dr. Delgado for the CIA, the question remains what else might these electronic implants be capable of doing? Some idea might be gained from excerpts of a confidential memo covertly obtained in October, 1995 from: INTELLI-CONNECTION, A Security Division of IBM, 1200 Progress Way, Armonk, New York 11204:

"CONFIDENTIAL, LIMITED DISTRIBUTION ONLY, LEVEL COMMUNICATION, 2020 NEURAL CHIP IMPLANT....

"Federal regulations do not yet permit testing of implants on prisoners, but we have entered into contractual testing of our product. We have also had major successes in privately owned sanatoriums with implant technology....

"In California, several prisoners were identified as members of a security threat group, EME, or Mexican Mafia. They were brought to the health services unit at Pelican Bay and tranquilised with advanced sedatives developed by our Cambridge, Massachusetts laboratories.

"The implant procedure takes about 60-90 minutes, depending on the experience of the technician. We are working on a device that will reduce that time by as much as 60%. The results of implants on 8 prisoners yielded the following:

"Implants served as surveillance monitoring devices for threat-group activity. Implants disabled two subjects during an assault on correctional staff. Universal side effects in all 8 test subjects revealed that when the implant was set to 116 MHz, all subjects became lethargic and slept an average of 18-22 hours per day. All subjects refused recreation periods for 14 days during the 116 MHz test evaluation....

"Each subject was monitored for aggressive activity during the test period, and the findings are conclusive that 7 out of the 8 test subjects exhibited no aggression, even when provoked. Each subject experienced only minor bleeding from the nose and ears, 48 hours after the implant, due to initial adjustment. Each subject had no knowledge of the implant for the test period, and each implant was retrieved under the guise of medical treatment.

“The security windfall from the brief test period was tremendous. Security officials now know several strategies employed by the EME that facilitate the transmission of illegal drugs and weapons into their correctional facilities.... In Massachusetts, the Department of Corrections has already entered into high-level discussions about releasing certain offenders to the community with the I.B.M. 2020 neural chip implants....”

[Editor's note: It would be wise for those UFO researchers out there chasing exotic, aliens-did-it theories for "abductions", which frequently involve the discovery of just these kinds of implants in the victims, to begin to look a little closer to home planet shenanigans for their answers. How convenient to blame aliens and thereby deflect attention away from the TRUE culprits! Unfortunately, those researchers on the right track frequently experience life-ending "accidents" while those blathering nonsense remain well-funded and regulars on the conference lecture circuits.]

ELECTROMAGNETIC MIND-CONTROL

(PART 2)

Mind control can be used with limited success via the methods discussed in the first part of this article, i.e., media propaganda, mind-altering drugs and chemicals, and miniaturised electronic implants. However, these methods require the intended victims to first be subjected to these various modalities. The Illuminati organisations [NSA, CIA, MI-6, KGB] saw greater possibilities in using electronic technology for mind control.

In the 1930s, Russian scientist Dr. L.L. Vasiliev, experimentally proved that electromagnetic radiation can stimulate the brain.

The infamous Russian “Lida Machine” used during the Korean War put out a 10 Hz ELF signal that made prisoners of war more susceptible to interrogation.

In the 1970s, the Russians were experimenting with low-level microwave radiation on US embassy personnel working in the Moscow embassy. The US ambassador developed a leukemia-like disease, suffered bleeding from the eyes, and suffered chronic headaches.

The CIA knew of and monitored this microwave testing on US embassy personnel under a project code-named “Pandora” for a 10-year period before informing the embassy personnel. Later, Project Pandora data was turned over to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency [DARPA] while US personnel at the Moscow embassy were awarded a 20% hardship allowance because of their unhealthy microwave radiation exposure.

DARPA and Livermore Laboratories have developed a “brain bomb” which used microwaves to incapacitate the minds of soldiers in the field of battle. Some of these “nonlethal weapons” are tested at Los Alamos National Laboratories in New Mexico.

Dr. Raw Adey, formerly of the Brain Research Center at the University of Southern California, worked on Project Pandora and demonstrated that a 147 MHz microwave carrier, modulated by a 16 Hz ELF signal, would cause a release of calcium ions from brain tissue at power densities as low as 0.8 milliwatts per centimeter. This would have the effect of impairing brain memory processes.

[Editor's note: Without going into the details here, does anyone care to speculate upon what may be happening to people's health with the widescale use of cellular (and other portable) telephones—and the towers which support that system????!! Let's just say it might be prudent to be especially cautious about the newer, smaller cellular phones where the antenna is positioned within a few inches of the skull during use.]

The CIA was also interested in the work of a Professor Anthony Deutsch of New York University. Deutsch had discovered that the use of radio waves could cause the brain to produce excessive acetylcholine, which would interfere with memory processes. The CIA took Professor Deutsch's work further in the 1970s, combining it with biofeedback techniques and refined “Electronic Dissolution Of Memory” [EDOM] into a process that could selectively, electronically erase portions of a person's memory. Operatives sent out on highly secret missions could have their whole memory of the secret mission erased with EDOM, but retain all their other memories.

THE NEUROPHONE

In his book Pyramid Power, Patrick Flanagan describes his invention of the Neurophone, which allows deaf people to hear. The Neurophone uses an electromagnetic carrier oscillating at about forty thousand cycles per second, amplitude modulated with the audio signal to be heard by the deaf subject. The signal is fed to conducting ear pads on both sides of the brain. The emotional state of the subject will cause the brain receiver frequency to drift slightly from 40 kHz, so the Neurophone has to be tuned before the sounds can be heard inside the head.

With the Neurophone that I have tested in Sedona in 1988, the electrodes could be held in the hands, or anywhere on the body, and the sounds could still be heard inside the head.

In his book Beyond Pyramid Power Patrick Flanagan describes an experiment where he places copper screening in the ceiling and below the floor, creating a capacitor in a room.

The Neurophone carrier signal is then applied to the upper and lower plates of this room capacitor through an Automatic Frequency Control [AFC] circuit which automatically tuned the 40 kHz carrier to the resonant frequency of the brain of whoever entered the room.

He then could modulate the Neurophone carrier wave with music, walk into this experimental room, and hear music inside his head. He later noted that whenever two persons were in this experimental room, they could start trading each other's thoughts. He didn't care to elaborate any further on this fascinating subject in his book. About that time, the Neurophone patent (# 3,393,279) that he had obtained from the US patent office was placed under a National Security freeze, and he was forbidden to disclose any more about the Neurophone. After long and expensive litigation, the National Security freeze on the Neurophone was finally lifted.

I'm sure that the CIA studied the Neurophone technology thoroughly and has developed means to electromagnetically create “voices” inside a person's head and use electromagnetic telepathy as part of their Radio Hypnotic Intercerebral Control [RHIC] experimentation.

Another interesting area is the highly classified military intelligence Remote Mind-Control Technology [RMCT] under project names like “Scangate”, “Grill Flame”, “Center Lane”, “Sun Streak”, and “Stargate”.

Here, the technology uses complex computer analysis of human brain-wave patterns to decode them into thoughts, emotions, and motor-control functions. Target subjects could then be remotely manipulated with highly directional microwave MASER transmissions, ELF modulated by highly sophisticated computer-synthesised signals. Their brain functions could be monitored by interrogative RMCT MASERS.

There is not enough space to go into a full report on the subject of mind control in this short article. A good book on the subject of Remote Mind-Control Technology is available from: INFORMATION UNLIMITED, P.O. Box 716, Amherst, NH, 03031-0716 USA.

One large, secret, government electromagnetic mind-control project using a SAGE radar antenna was carried out at decommissioned Fort Hero near Montauk, Long Island, from 1979 to 1983. Part of the testing was done on the unsuspecting citizens of the city of Montauk. A series of books about this Montauk Project, written by Preston Nichols (who worked on the project) and Peter Moon, is available from Sky Books, Box 769, Westbury, NY 11590-0104 USA.

Electronic mind-control technology has even been commercialised. One interesting company is Consumertronics. Among other things they market Neurophone devices to electronically transmit your thoughts into another person's mind, and electronic devices to jam and neutralise mind-control attacks.

SCALAR ELECTROMAGNETICS

Thomas Bearden, Lt. Col. (retired) and former NSA consultant, has written several books describing Scalar Electromagnetics. Scalar Electromagnetics was first experimented with by Nikola Tesla and later secretly developed by the US at Los Alamos National Laboratories and by the Soviets at secret remote locations in the USSR.

Scalar Electromagnetics can penetrate conducting mediums like sea water and Electromagnetic Pulse [EMP]-hardened military sites. Scalar Electromagnetics can be weaponised and is part of the SDI research and development program. Scalar Electromagnetics can also be used to trigger earthquakes and control the weather.

Although Thomas Bearden doesn't claim that Scalar Electromagnetics can be used for mind control, he does claim that it can be used to transmit biological effects [such as broadcasting viruses or other illnesses to small or large, targeted populations], can make the human unconscious, and can cause death in high enough fields. Since Thomas Bearden had taken national security secrecy oaths, he is very careful to reference all of his writings to already published scientific work, in order to avoid possible imprisonment. Because of this precaution, his writings are well documented.

HAARP

Last year Popular Science published an article on the HAARP project near Fairbanks Alaska [refer to our News Monitor No. 16, Volume 5/2, pp. 1-7, for a basic introduction to this High-Frequency Active Auroral Research Program—HAARP. - Ed.]. According to Popular Science, the High-Frequency Active Auroral Research Program will be capable of weather control, detecting underground military installations, submarine communication, and total disruption of normal electromagnetic communications on a world-wide basis—in short, all of the things Thomas Bearden claims for “Scalar Electromagnetics”.

Since Scalar Electromagnetics can be converted back into normal electromagnetics by using interference or nonlinear phenomena—the two halves of the human brain can act as a nonlinear interferometer. Therefore, all electromagnetic mind-control technology can be converted to a “Scalar Electromagnetics” mind-control technology. Then there is virtually no place to hide since scalar waves can penetrate the Earth itself.

According to Preston Nichols, there are two important “window frequencies” in mind control: 1080 MHz, a subharmonic of DNA, and 435 MHz, the window to human consciousness. Both frequencies are found in the HAARP signal—which means both mind control and genetic manipulation on a world-wide scale could very likely be part of a secret agenda of the HAARP project.

During the Desert Storm war, many new weapons systems were tested on the field of battle—some unreported and highly classified.

As our [US] troops were advancing, black Sky Hawk helicopters equipped with advanced electronics flew over the enemy bunkers without firing their [visible] weapons. Soon, thousands of enemy troops streamed out of the bunkers, their hands held high in the air as a sign of surrender.

Why did these battle-hardened soldiers surrender in hoards without the least sign of resistance? Could they possibly have been the target of electronic mind-control weapons?

Military Use Of Mind-Control Weapons

PSY-OPS WEAPONRY USED IN THE PERSIAN GULF WAR

For years, rumors have persisted that the United States Department of Defense has been engaged in research and development of ultra-sophisticated mind-altering technology. Confirmation of this came to me recently in the form of two ITV News Bureau Ltd (London) wire service bulletins. [1]

The March 23, 1991 newsbrief, “High-Tech Psychological Warfare Arrives In The Middle East”, describes a US Psychological Operations (PsyOps) tactic directed against Iraqi troops in Kuwait during Operation Desert Storm. The maneuver consisted of a system in which subliminal mind-altering technology was carried on standard radio-frequency broadcasts. The March 26, 1991 newsbrief states that among the standard military planning groups in the center of US war planning operations at Riyadh was “an unbelievable and highly classified PsyOps program utilising ‘silent sound’ techniques”.

The opportunity to use this method occurred when Saddam Hussein's military command-and-control system was destroyed. The Iraqi troops were then forced to use commercial FM radio stations to carry encoded commands, which were broadcast on the 100 MHz frequency. The US PsyOps team set up its own portable FM transmitter, utilising the same frequency, in the deserted city of Al Khafji. This US transmitter overpowered the local Iraqi station.

Along with patriotic and religious music, PsyOps transmitted “vague, confusing, and contradictory military orders and information”.

Subliminally, a much more powerful technology was at work: a sophisticated electronic system to “speak” directly to the mind of the listener, to alter and entrain his brainwaves, to manipulate his brain's electroencephalographic (EEG) patterns and artificially implant negative emotional states—feelings of fear, anxiety, despair, and hopelessness. This subliminal system doesn't just tell a person to feel an emotion, it makes them feel it; it implants that emotion in their mind. [2]

I noticed that the ITV wire service was from outside the United States. Readers of RESONANCE may recall that in the Electromagnetic Weapons Timeline in issue no. 29, reference is made to the documentary video Waco: The Big Lie Continues, which contained video footage of three EM weapons. This segment of the film was from the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC). I wondered if there was any significance to this.

At the library I pulled up back issues of my local newspaper for the same time-period of the Gulf War to see what the American wire services had said, if anything, about the use of this special PsyOps weapon. There was nothing said about it directly, but three news articles seemed related. In a news release from Associated Press during the same timeframe of the Gulf War truce, I read:

“The American pilot who shot down the second Iraqi warplane in 48 hours said Friday that continued Iraqi flights suggested that US warnings were not filtering down to Iraqi pilots.... He said he hopes Saddam gets the message now. ‘It's really too bad that these people have to die for their unwillingness to heed our warnings.... What I really think is, they don't communicate down to the people,’ he said. ‘If they have a communications problem, I suggest they fix it.’” [3]

That may have been coincidence but two earlier news articles, dated March 1, 1991, apparently have a common origin with the ITV news bulletin. The first article [4] tells us that approximately 100 members of the US 101st Airborne Division, fluent in Arabic, talked the enemy into surrendering. These soldiers rode in the Apache helicopter gunships that were involved in the longest helicopter-borne assault in history. They told the Iraqi troops that they would be slaughtered if they didn't give up.

“They got the point” one soldier is quoted as saying.

This all sounds very unremarkable, except when you read the editor's note: “The following dispatch was subject to US military censorship.” Now why would they want to censor such a mundane tactic, except out of embarrassment that the US Army fighting forces had fallen to the level of a cheer-leading squad—in which case they would have nixed the thing entirely?

But upon re-reading the article, we may pick out certain key phrases (emphasized in italics):

“He [the soldier interviewed] was one of dozens of Arabic speakers that played a key role in the allied ground attack against Iraq, and part of an attempt by the US Army to use finesse, intelligence work and tactics to complement brute strength.”

If we fill in the missing blanks with such descriptions as “the megaphone was used to direct psychoacoustic frequencies that engaged the neural networks of the enemy’s brain, causing him to think any thought and feel any emotion that the Americans chose to lay on him”, then it starts to make sense. And it would no longer seem so surprising that one soldier could talk 450 enemy soldiers into surrendering. The possibilities are there, and, as the next article [5] documents, that is exactly what happened. Iraqi troops gave up en masse.

We quote: “They were surrendering in droves, almost too fast for us to keep up with...”; “...two Iraqi majors, both brigade commanders, who gave up their entire units...”; and “...one of them gave up to an RPV [remotely piloted vehicle]. Here’s this guy with his hands up, turning in a circle to give himself up to a model airplane with a camera in it.”

Irrational? Not if there was also a voice being beamed into his head from that little flying toy, saying, “Give up, give up!” Otherwise, how do we account for the editor’s note at the beginning of the article: “The following is based on pool dispatches that were subject to military censorship.” Without that note, we could smugly think that the Iraqi soldiers were cowards or crazy, but why censor that idea?

MIND CONTROL WITH SILENT SOUNDS

The mind-altering mechanism is based on a subliminal carrier technology: the Silent Sound Spread Spectrum (SSSS), sometimes called “S-squad” or “Squad”. It was developed by Dr. Oliver Lowery of Norcross, Georgia, and is described in US Patent #5,159,703: “Silent Subliminal Presentation System”, dated October 27, 1992.

The abstract for the patent reads:

“A silent communications system in which nonaural carriers, in the very low or very high audio-frequency range or in the adjacent ultrasonic frequency spectrum are amplitude- or frequency-modulated with the desired intelligence and propagated acoustically or vibrationally, for inducement into the brain, typically through the use of loudspeakers, earphones, or piezoelectric transducers. The modulated carriers may be transmitted directly in real time or may be conveniently recorded and stored on mechanical, magnetic, or optical media for delayed or repeated transmission to the listener.”

According to literature by Silent Sounds, Inc., it is now possible, using supercomputers, to analyse human emotional EEG patterns and replicate them, then store these “emotion signature clusters” on another computer and, at will, “silently induce and change the emotional state in a human being”.

Silent Sounds, Inc. states that it is interested only in positive emotions, but the military is not so limited. That this is a US Department of Defense project is obvious.

Edward Tilton, President of Silent Sounds, Inc., says this about S-squad in a letter dated December 13, 1996:

“All schematics, however, have been classified by the US Government and we are not allowed to reveal the exact details.... We make tapes and CDs for the German Government, even the former Soviet Union countries! All with the permission of the US State Department, of course.... The system was used throughout Operation Desert Storm (Iraq) quite successfully.”

The graphic illustration, “Induced Alpha-To-Theta Biofeedback Cluster Movement”, which accompanies the literature, is labelled #AB 116-394-95 UNCLASSIFIED” and is an output from “the world’s most versatile and most sensitive electroencephalograph (EEG) machine”. It has a gain capability of 200,000 as compared to other EEG machines in use which have gain capability of approximately 50,000. It is software-driven by the “fastest of computers” using a noisenuencing technology similar to that used by nuclear submarines for detecting small objects underwater at extreme range. [6]

The purpose of all this high technology is to plot and display a moving cluster of periodic brainwave signals. The illustration shows an EEG display from a single individual, taken of left and right hemispheres simultaneously. The readout from the two sides of the brain appear to be quite different, but in fact are the same (discounting normal left/right brain variations).

CLONING THE EMOTIONS

By using these computer-enhanced EEGs, scientists can identify and isolate the brain’s low-amplitude “emotion signature clusters”, synthesize them, and store them on another computer. In other words, by studying the subtle characteristic brainwave patterns that occur when a subject experiences a particular emotion, scientists have been able to identify the concomitant brainwave pattern and can now duplicate it. “These clusters are then placed on the Silent Sound™ carrier frequencies and will silently trigger the occurrence of the same basic emotion in another human being!”

SYSTEM DELIVERY AND APPLICATIONS

There is a lot more involved here than a simple subliminal sound system. There are numerous patented technologies which can be piggybacked individually or collectively onto a carrier frequency to elicit all kinds of effects.

There appear to be two methods of delivery with the system. One is direct microwave induction into the brain of the subject, limited to short-range operations. The other, as described above, utilizes ordinary radio and television carrier frequencies.

Far from necessarily being used as a weapon against a person, the system does have limitless positive applications. However, the fact that the sounds are subliminal makes them virtually undetectable and possibly dangerous to the general public.

In more conventional use, the Silent Sounds Subliminal System might utilize voice commands, say, as an adjunct to security systems. Beneath the musical broadcast that you hear in stores and shopping malls may be a hidden message which exhorts against shoplifting. And while voice commands alone are powerful, when the subliminal presentation system carries cloned emotional signatures, the result is overwhelming.

Free-market uses for this technology are the common self-help tapes, positive affirmation-relaxation-meditation tapes, as well as methods to increase learning capabilities.

In a medical context, these systems can be used to great advantage to treat psychiatric and psychosomatic problems. As a system for remediating the profoundly deaf, it is unequalled. (Promises, promises. This is the most common positive use touted for this technology over the past 30 years. But the deaf are still deaf, and the military now has a weapon to use on unsuspecting people with perfectly normal hearing.)

OFFICIAL DENIALS

In fact, the US Government has denied or refused to comment on mind-altering weapons for years. Only last year, US News & World Report ran an article titled “Wonder Weapons”—basically a review of the new so-called “non-lethal” or “less-than-lethal” weapons. [7] Not one word about S-squad, although the technology had been used six years earlier!

Excerpts from the article read:

“Says Charles Bernard, a former Navy weapons-research director: ‘I have yet to see one of these ray-gun things that actually works....’”; and “‘DARPA (Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency) has come to us every few years to see if there are ways to incapacitate the central nervous system remotely' Dr. F. Terry Hambrecht, head of the Neural Prostheses Program at NIH, told US News, 'but nothing has ever come of it' he said. 'That is too science-fiction and far-fetched.'"

It may sound "science fiction and far-fetched" but it is not. However, that is just what the powers-that-be want you to believe, so as to leave them alone in their relentless pursuit of—what?

The idea behind non-lethal weapons is to incapacitate the enemy without actually killing them, or, in the case of riot control or hostage situations, to disable the participants without permanent injury, preferably without their knowing it. The electromagnetic mind-altering technologies would all fall into this class of weapons, but since they are all officially non-existent, who is to decide when and where they will be used?

And why should selected companies in the entertainment industry reportedly be allowed access to this technology, when the very fact of its existence is denied to the general public?

As recently as last month [February], this stonewall approach of total denial or silence on the subject still held fast, even toward committees of the US Congress!

The Joint Economics Committee, chaired by Jim Saxton (R-NJ), convened on February 25, 1998 for the "Hearing On Radio Frequency Weapons And Proliferation: Potential Impact On The Economy". Invited testimony included statements by several authorities from the military:

- Dr. Alan Kehs, of the US Army Laboratories, discussed the overall RF threat.
- Mr. James O'Bryon, deputy director of operational testing and director of live fire testing for the Office of Secretary of Defense at the Pentagon, discussed the role of live fire testing and how it plays a role in testing military equipment with RF weapons.
- Mr. David Schriener, Principal Engineer of Directed Energy Studies with Electronic Warfare Associates and recently retired as an engineer with a naval weapons testing facility, talked about the difficulty in building an RF weapon and about the terrorist threat.
- Dr. Ira Merritt, Chief of Concepts Identification and Applications Analysis Division, Advanced Technology Directorate, Missile Defense and Space Technology Center, Huntsville, Alabama, discussed the proliferation of RF weapons, primarily from the former Soviet Union.

Although these statements gave information of technical interest, they are perhaps more important for the information they did not give: information on the existence of radio-frequency weapons that directly affect the human brain and nervous system.

KGB PSYCHOTRONICS

This technology did not spring up overnight. It has a long history of development and denials of development—by the US Government and probably half of the other governments of the world as well.

We know that the former Soviet Union was actively engaged in this type of research. In a previous article we reported that during the 1970s the Soviet KGB developed a Psychotronic Influence System (PIS) that was used to turn soldiers into programmable "human weapons". The system employed a combination of high-frequency radio-waves and hypnosis. The PIS project was begun in response to a similar training scheme launched in the US by President Carter, according to Yuri Malin, former security adviser to USSR President Gorbachev. [8]

In my Electromagnetic Weapons Timeline [9] I covered a period of 60 years of interest and development in EM weapons—information gathered from the many articles and news clippings sent in by readers of RESONANCE. In my article on synthetic telepathy [10] I traced the development of the "voice in your head" technology dating back to 1961, all my references coming from the open scientific literature.

POWER OF THE MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

Jan Wiesemann has written an apt description of the situation which now exists in the United States, about the "forces that be" and how the situation came about:

"During the Cold War the United States not only engaged in a relatively open nuclear arms race with the Soviet Union, but also engaged in a secret race developing unconventional weapons. As the intelligence agencies (which prior to the Second World War had merely played a supporting role within the government) continued to increase their power, so did the funds spent on developing techniques designed to outsmart each other.

"And as the US intelligence community began to grow, a secret culture sprang about which enabled the intelligence players to implement the various developed techniques to cleverly circumvent the democratic processes and institutions....

"Like many other democracies, the US Government is made up of two basic parts: the elected constituency, i.e., the various governors, judges, congressmen and the President; and the unelected bureaucracies, as represented by the numerous federal agencies.

"In a well-balanced and correctly functioning democracy, the elected part of the government is in charge of its unelected bureaucratic part, giving the people a real voice in the agenda set by their government.

"While a significant part of the US Government no doubt follows this democratic principle, a considerable portion of the US Government operates in complete secrecy and follows its own unaccountable agenda which, unacknowledged, very often is quite different from the public agenda." [11]

Jan goes on to quote one of the United States' most popular war heroes: Dwight D. Eisenhower, who served as Supreme Commander of Allied Forces during World War II and was later elected 34th President of the United States. In his farewell address to the nation in 1961, President Eisenhower said:

"We have been compelled to create a permanent armaments industry of vast proportions. Added to this, three and a half million men and women are directly engaged in the defense establishment. We annually spend on military security more than the net income of all United States corporations.

"This conjunction of an immense military establishment and a large arms industry is new in the American experience. The total influence—economic, political, even spiritual—is felt in every city, every state house, every office of the federal government. We recognize the imperative need for this development. Yet we must not fail to comprehend its grave implications. Our toil, resources, and livelihood are all involved; so is the very structure of our society.

"In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist. We must never let the weight of this combination endanger our liberties or our democratic processes."

INTERNATIONAL CONCERNS OVER NEW WEAPONS

The United Nations was established in 1945 with the aim of "saving succeeding generations from the scourge of war". In 1975 the General Assembly considered a draft first proposed by the Soviet Union: "Prohibition Of The Development And Manufacture Of New Types Of Weapons Of Mass Destruction And New Systems Of Such Weapons".

In 1979 the Soviet Union added a list of some types of potential weapons of mass destruction:

1. Radiological weapons (using radioactive materials) which could produce harmful effects similar to those of a nuclear explosion;
2. Particle beam weapons, based on charged or neutral particles, to affect biological targets;
3. Infrasonic acoustic radiation weapons;
4. Electromagnetic weapons operating at certain radio-frequency radiations which could have injurious effects on human organs. [12]

In response, the US and other Western nations stalled. They gave a long, convoluted reason, but the result was the same.

In an article entitled "Non-Lethal Weapons May Violate Treaties" [13] the author notes that the Certain Conventional Weapons Convention [14] covers many of the non-conventional weapons—"those that utilize infrasound or electromagnetic energy (including lasers, microwave or radio-frequency radiation, or visible light pulsed at brainwave frequency) for their effects".

Harlan Girard, Managing Director of the International Committee Against Offensive Microwave Weapons, told me he believes the strategy behind the government's recent push for less-than-lethal weapons is a subterfuge. The ones that are now getting all the publicity are put up for scrutiny to get the public's approval. The electromagnetic mind-altering technologies are not mentioned, but would be brought in later under the umbrella of less-than-lethal weapons.

These weapons were recently transferred from the Department of Defense over to the Department of Justice. Why? Because there are several international treaties that specifically limit or exclude weapons of this nature from being used in international warfare.

In other words, weapons that are barred from use against our country's worst enemies (notwithstanding the fact that the US did use this weapon against Iraqi troops!) can now be used against our own citizens, by the local police departments, against such groups as peaceful protestors of US nuclear policies.

TOWARDS GLOBAL MIND CONTROL

The secrecy involved in the development of the electromagnetic mind-altering technology reflects the tremendous power that is inherent in it. To put it bluntly, whoever controls this technology can control the minds of men—all men.

There is evidence that the US Government has plans to extend the range of this technology to envelop all peoples, all countries. This can be accomplished, is being accomplished, by utilising the nearly completed HAARP project [15,16] for overseas areas, and the GWEN network now in place in the US. The US Government denies all this. [Editor's note: Remember that this was written in early 1998 before the HAARP project was fully operational. Heaven only knows what all is being broadcast to attempt to affect us mentally and physically now, almost two years later! Keep in mind that HAARP is only one of many disguised broadcasting centers functioning around the world. It is certainly of value to focus on HAARP, as an example of a general technology at work, but it would be a gross oversight to ignore, say, the many cellular telephone towers all over the globe which are capable of performing similar mental and physical conditioning, if not necessarily on such a high-powered scale as is HAARP.]

Dr. Michael Persinger is a Professor of Psychology and Neuroscience at Laurentian University, Ontario, Canada. You have met him before in the pages of RESONANCE where we reported on his findings that strong electromagnetic fields can affect a person's brain.

"Temporal lobe stimulation" he said "can evoke the feeling of a presence, disorientation, and perceptual irregularities. It can activate images stored in the subject's memory, including nightmares and monsters that are normally suppressed." [17]

Dr Persinger wrote an article a few years ago titled "On The Possibility Of Directly Accessing Every Human Brain By Electromagnetic Induction Of Fundamental Algorithms". [18] The abstract reads:

"Contemporary neuroscience suggests the existence of fundamental algorithms by which all sensory transduction is translated into an intrinsic, brain-specific code. Direct stimulation of these codes within the human temporal or limbic cortices by applied electromagnetic patterns may require energy levels which are within the range of both geomagnetic activity and contemporary communication networks. A process which is coupled to the narrow band of brain temperature could allow all normal human brains to be affected by a subharmonic whose frequency range at about 10 Hz would only vary by 0.1 Hz."

He concludes the article with this:

"Within the last two decades a potential has emerged which was improbable, but which is now marginally feasible. This potential is the technical capability to influence directly the major portion of the approximately six billion brains of the human species, without mediation through classical sensory modalities, by generating neural information within a physical medium within which all members of the species are immersed.

"The historical emergence of such possibilities, which have ranged from gunpowder to atomic fission, have resulted in major changes in the social evolution that occurred inordinately quickly after the implementation. Reduction of the risk of the inappropriate application of these technologies requires the continued and open discussion of their realistic feasibility and implications within the scientific and public domain."

It doesn't get any plainer than that. And we do not have open discussion because the US Government has totally denied the existence of this technology.

Aerial Mind-Control The Threat To Civil Liberties

USAF COMMANDO SOLO: AERIAL MIND-CONTROL BROADCASTS

The United States Air Force uses aerial mind-control broadcasts against civilian populations as well as enemy troops. Some of these actions against civilians are done with the intent of influencing public opinion and the outcome of elections.

In a previous article ["Military Use Of Mind-Control Weapons", NEXUS magazine, October-November 1998], we examined mind-control technology, especially that utilizing Silent Sounds™, in which radio-frequency broadcasts carry subliminal patterns that entrain the listener's brainwaves into a pre-selected emotional state. According to ITV wire service reports, this technology was used during Operation Desert Storm in 1991, as part of the US Psychological Operations (PsyOps) directed against Iraqi troops. [1,2]

To the Desert Storm offensive we can now add several other incidents. Alex Horvat, editor of The Probe, calls to our attention the 1998 video Exotic Weapons Of Mass Control, produced by Bob Fletcher.

"The excerpt played on Fletcher's video is from TLC (The Learning Channel) and clearly states that Commando Solo was used in Haiti for what was called Operation Uphold Democracy. As the general populace was violently opposed to Aristide and most in favor of his ouster, it took nearly a year of this clandestine counter-programming to get them to change their minds.... Instead of butchering a population physically, we can now manipulate them mentally, virtually enslaving their thoughts with a criss-cross pattern of flights by an EC-130 (which is just a C-130 heavily laden with electronic hardware)." [3]

We were not at war with the citizens of Haiti, yet the U.S. Government directed military weapons against this friendly, or at least neutral, civilian population. The U.S. Government sanctioned the "rigging" of the Haitian election by mental control of the people, programming them to cast their votes for the Americans' favored candidate. And they had the nerve to call it "Operation Uphold Democracy". Some sense of humor! Stalin would have loved it. Hitler would have loved it. Why is the U.S. Government doing this? Who is behind this flagrant violation of civil liberties? Is it the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), which has a long history of interfering in foreign government politics? Or has this become standard military procedure?

The rationale is always the same: "to make the world safe for democracy". Yet what is democracy if not freedom? Freedom to think your own thoughts; freedom to express your own opinions; freedom to vote for the candidate of your own choice.

Fletcher's video also mentions that the same technology was used against the Bosnia population for a week to influence their election. [4] This was probably done during Operation Joint Guard in 1995. [5]

The questions arise: If they have used mind-control broadcasts against foreign civilian populations to influence elections, will they use them against American citizens—or have they already? What other countries may be the recipients of this innovative technology?

Just what is this EC-130E Commando Solo? The United States Air Force has helpfully published a Fact Sheet that describes the Lockheed-built aircraft. [6] This 1995 bulletin states that the "unit flyaway cost" is more than US $100 million each, and that there are eight in the inventory. Its primary function is "psychological operations broadcasts". The crew consists of four officers (pilot, copilot, navigator, control chief/EWO) and seven enlisted members (flight engineer, loadmaster,

According to the Fact Sheet:

"Air Force Mission: Commando Solo conducts psychological operations and civil affairs broadcast missions in the standard AM, FM, HF, TV and military communications bands. Missions are flown at maximum altitudes possible to ensure optimum propagation patterns. The EC-130 flies during either day or night scenarios with equal success, and is air refuelable. A typical mission consists of a single-ship orbit which is offset from the desired target audience. The targets may be either military or civilian personnel.

"Secondary missions include command and control communications counter-measures (C3CM) and limited intelligence gathering.

"Air Force Features: Highly specialized modifications have been made to the latest version of the EC-130. Included in these modifications are enhanced navigation systems, self-protection equipment, and the capability of broadcasting color television on a multitude of worldwide standards throughout the TV VHF/UHF ranges....

"Air Force Background: Air National Guard EC-130 aircraft flown by the 193rd Special Operations Group were deployed to both Saudi Arabia and Turkey in support of Desert Storm. Their missions included broadcasts of 'Voice of the Gulf' and other programs intended to convince Iraqi soldiers to surrender.

"The EC-130 was originally modified using the mission electronic equipment from the EC-121, known at the time as the Coronet Solo. Soon after the 193rd SOG received its EC-130s, the unit participated in the rescue of US citizens in Operation Urgent Fury, acting as an airborne radio station informing those people on Grenada of the US military action.

"Volant Solo, as the mission is now known, was instrumental in the success of coordinated psychological operations in Operation Just Cause, again broadcasting continuously throughout the initial phases of the operation...."

Operation Just Cause? This is another propaganda name, applied to the U.S. invasion of Panama to take out that country's leader, General Noreiga, the CIA's erstwhile partner in drug smuggling. Apparently the General had made someone mad—how else to account for the massive invasion of this tiny tourist country? To wit: "A superpower whipped the poop out of 10% of the police force of a Third World nation. You are supposed to be able to do that. It was done well, and I credit those who did it. But it is important that we draw the right lessons from it", according to an anonymous US Marine. [7]

Our Commander-in-Chief had another point of view: "...the roll call of glory, the roster of great American campaigns—Yorktown, Gettysburg, Normandy, and now Panama.”—President George Bush, March 1990. [8]

MILITARY PSYOPS AGAINST CIVILIANS

In a phone call to the USAF Special Operations Command Public Affairs Office, I questioned the legitimacy of using these subliminal broadcasts against civilian populations. [9]

I was told that it was all perfectly legal, having been approved by the U.S. Congress (!). It may be okay by Congress, but I sincerely doubt that it would be approved by the recipient populations.

That conversation also elicited more information concerning the Commando Solo units. For instance, the Air National Guard of the individual states in the U.S. can also operate Commando Solo aircraft, should the Governor of a state request assistance. That means the PsyOps mind-control technology can be directed against U.S. citizens.

The Commando Solo aircraft have participated in the following missions—possibly more, as the early missions of Volant Solo 1 were not known to the spokesperson:

- Operation Urgent Fury (Grenada, Oct-Nov 1983, Jan-Jun 1985);
- Operation Just Cause (Panama, late December 1989);
- Operation Desert Shield (Kuwait, Iraq, from August 1990);
- Operation Desert Storm (Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Iraq, 1991);
- Operation Uphold Democracy (Haiti, 1994-1995);
- Operation Joint Guard (part of a UN operation in Bosnia-Herzegovina, 1995);
- Operation Desert Thunder (part of a UN operation in Iraq);
- Operation Desert Fox (Iraq, 2 to 3 days in December 1998).

Other countries are known to have a similar aircraft, but the PR officer declined to identify them, suggesting that I check out Jane's Defence Weekly for such information. Not having access to that particular publication, I searched through my copy of Jane's Radar And Electronic Warfare Systems 1993-94. [10] The Commando Solo unit was not listed, but a browse through the book was informative as to the numerous types of electronic offense and defense systems available. These include stationary and mobile land units (many housed in large trucks), shipboard and airborne models, as well as space-based technology. If the military is spending US $100 million per airborne unit (times eight, we're talking US $800 million here), I think it is safe to assume that they have tried out mind-control equipment with less expensive, roving land units (trucks), but use the airplanes to cover wider areas and hard-to-reach locations of the world.

And I might add, we can assume that they have tried out the efficacy of this mind-control technology. Even the US military would not waste $800 million on something unless it has been proven to work, and work effectively, even under the adverse situation of military combat. This is an important point.

The initial research into mind control in the USA was conducted under the auspices of the CIA. The flagrant abuse of human rights in experimenting on unsuspecting persons was based on the supposition that the veracity of experiments would be compromised if a subject knew that he was participating in an experiment. In the case of mind-control technology, this supposition might very well be true. But that does not justify its use—or so said the Nürnberg Code, the tenets of which were used as a legal basis to prosecute Nazi scientists for war crimes. However, the US seems to have excused its own military and scientific community from adhering to that Code. [11]

MANIPULATING MIND AND BODY BY SATELLITE

The next logical step in mind control would be to incorporate this technology into satellite communications. Since other countries are known to have similar capabilities, there could occur a situation in which electronic mind-control warfare is waged against a civilian population, receiving conflicting mental manipulation from both sides. What would be the mental state of individuals so targeted? Would it cause a rise in mental aberrations and schizophrenia? And what are the limits of mind manipulations? Can people be forced to commit suicide? Can physical ailments or psychosomatic illnesses be induced?

A March 1990 report from Bosnia-Herzegovina in the former Yugoslavia suggests the latter may have already happened. The report concerns 2,990 ethnic Albanians who were admitted to hospitals with complaints of lung and skin problems for which doctors could find no physical cause. [12]

It is not a far step from manipulating a person's emotional state to influencing bodily functions. Indeed, much of the literature documenting microwave effects on biological systems deals with precisely this phenomenon. In fact, studies of the physical effects of microwave exposure (including radio frequencies) generally preceded studies of mental effects.

A meeting sponsored by Defense & Foreign Affairs and The International Strategic Studies Association was held in Washington DC in 1983. High-level officials from many countries met for this conference. They discussed psychological strategies related to government and policymaking. A summary of the agenda reads: “The group will be discussing the essence of future policymaking, for it must be increasingly clear to all that the most effective tool of government and strategy is the mind.... If it's any consolation to the weapons-oriented among defense policymakers, the new technologies of communications—satellites, television, radio, and mind-control beams—are ‘systems’ which are more tangible than the more philosophically-based psychological strategies and operations.

“But we should make no mistake; it will be the ‘psychologically based’ systems which determine the world's fate in coming years: the condition of the minds of populations and leaders. And we should not ignore the fact that the USSR [this was in 1983] is working on electronic systems to ‘beam’ messages directly into the brain. What good, then, are conventional systems if these types of weapons are not countered? And, on a more basic level, what good is a weapon system if public opinion or political constraints prohibit its deployment?” [13]

It is obvious that they found the answer to that last question. If the public does not know about a weapon system, it cannot prohibit its deployment. This is the situation that applies to mind-control technology.

MIND CONTROL AGAINST “POTENTIAL” ENEMIES

The US military is aware that certain actions or procedures may not be acceptable to the American public. Metz and Kievit express these concerns in their paper “The Revolution In Military Affairs And Conflict Short Of War”: [14]

“The use of new technology may also run counter to basic American values. Information age—and, in particular, information warfare—technologies cause concerns about privacy.... American values also make the use of directed-energy weapons...morally difficult, perhaps unacceptable. The advantage of directed-energy weapons over conventional ones is deniability. Against whom is such deniability aimed?... Deniability must be aimed at the American people.”

Later they state: “We must decide whether innovative military capabilities are, in fact, acceptable and desirable. That can only happen through open debate. The military must be a vital participant, but not the sole one.”

But there has been no open debate.

On July 21, 1994, the US Department of Defense proposed that non-lethal weapons be used not only against declared enemies, but against anyone engaged in activities that the DOD opposed. That could include almost anybody and anything. Note that the mind-control technology is classified under non-lethal weapons. [15]

A 1998 news item states that US Air Force General John Jumper “predicts that the military will have the tools to make potential enemies see, hear, and believe things that do not exist” and that “The same idea was contained in a 15-volume study by the USAF Scientific Advisory Board, issued in 1996, on how to maintain US air and space superiority on the battlefields of the 21st century”. [16,17]

It seems that, in military parlance, a “prediction” means: “Don’t be surprised when you find out we’ve already got this, but it’s classified and we can’t admit to it just yet.”

Notice that General Jumper predicts that mind-control technology will be used against potential enemies. The military and government agencies may apply this term to any group or individual they perceive as a threat to their own interests. Potential enemies may be counter-culture individuals, those of opposing political viewpoints, economic or financial competitors, biological undesirables, etc. It is part of the military agenda to identify potential threats so as to be prepared to meet them. Experience has shown that the US Government (the CIA and FBI, for example) has moved against these people or groups, slandering, harassing, even killing them, without adequate cause or legal sanction.

A weapon that can be used in secret lends itself to abuse by unethical individuals in positions of power. The military and secret services have shown themselves often to be lacking in ethical constraints. After all, the job of the military is war; it is killing people; and so, just how this is accomplished may be considered irrelevant. Lesser evils, like mind control, pale by comparison.

Of course, it can be argued that it is far more humane to brainwash a person via mind-control technology than it is to torture or kill them. Others vehemently deny this. They’d rather be dead than a mental slave to Big Brother! That is what revolutions are about. And if I recall correctly, that is the idea behind the US Bill of Rights.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT WARNS OF DANGERS

Awareness of the existence of mind-control technology, and hence its dangers and possibility for misuse, seems to be more prevalent in Europe than in other areas. The European Parliament recently passed a “Resolution On Environment, Security, And Foreign Policy”. [18] This document includes these articles:

“23. Calls on the European Union to seek to have the new ‘non-lethal’ weapons technology and the development of new arms strategies also covered and regulated by international conventions....

“27. Calls for an international convention introducing a global ban on all developments and deployments of weapons which might enable any form of manipulation of human beings.”

The United States will ignore these resolutions, of course, as it has other EP requests; for example, as mentioned in the same document:

“24. Considers HAARP (High Frequency Active Auroral Research Project) by virtue of its far-reaching impact on the environment to be a global concern and calls for it’s legal, ecological, and ethical implications to be examined by an international independent body before any further research and testing; regrets the repeated refusal of the United States Administration to send anyone in person to give evidence to the public hearing or any subsequent meeting held by its competent committee into the environmental and public risks connected with the HAARP programme currently being funded in Alaska....”

One of HAARP’s potential uses is as a communications system. The military officially acknowledges two communications-related applications: (1) to replace the existing Extremely Low Frequency (ELF) submarine communications system now operating in Michigan and Wisconsin; (2) to provide a way to wipe out communications over an extremely large area, while keeping the military’s own communications systems working. [19]

As we have seen, the mind-control subliminal messages are carried on radio-frequency broadcasts. The HAARP facility could be used to broadcast global mind-control messages, or such messages could simply be inserted into existing systems.

Dr. Igor Smirnov, of the Institute of Psycho-correction in Moscow, says in regard to this technology: “It is easily conceivable that some Russian ‘Satan’, or let’s say Iranian [or any other ‘Satan’], as long as he owns the appropriate means and finances, can inject himself [intrude] into every conceivable computer network, into every conceivable radio or television broadcast, with relative technological ease, even without disconnecting cables. You can intercept the [radio] waves in the aether and then [subliminally] modulate every conceivable suggestion into it. If this transpires over a long enough time period, it accumulates in the heads of people. And eventually they can be artificially manipulated with other additional measurements, to do that which this perpetrator wants [them to do]. This is why [such technology] is rightfully feared.” [20]

A WORLDWIDE MIND-CONTROL MISSION

To return to the USAF Fact Sheet, it concludes: “In 1990 the EC-130 joined the newly formed Air Force Special Operations Command and has since been designated Commando Solo, with no change in mission. This one-of-a-kind aircraft is consistently improving its capabilities. The next few years should see continued enhancements to the EC-130 and its worldwide mission.”

RA: Humble Messenger Of The Law Of One Knowing Our Karmic Past May Help Us Understand The Present

Editor's note: In the November 2, 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM, Commander Hatonn brought to our attention some earlier communications that he and others of the "Confederation of Planets in Service of Infinite Source" were responsible for bringing forth in the early 1980s, called The Ra Material.

Here we are reprinting two sessions from the first book, in a series of five, titled: The Ra Material: An Ancient Astronaut Speaks. This material builds on each of the earlier sessions and it is not easy to select sessions that are "stand alone" without the need to reference earlier information. The following is a segment of that material which we feel you might find interesting.

As the back cover of Book I states: "Almost twenty years of experimental work with telepathy led to the 'breakthrough' contact recorded in this book." This body of information covers a broad range of subjects. And as the back cover puts it, this information includes answers to questions such as: "Who are the ancient astronauts? Why did they first come to Earth? Why are they returning now? What part did they play in building the great monuments of antiquity? What part did they play in the formation of present and earlier civilizations? With what other beings do we share our universe? And where does the Earth fit into the cosmic scheme of things?"

The "questioner" is Don Elkins; the "instrument" (the one in trance, bringing forth the messages from Ra) is Carla Rueckert. A third member of the small team, who was always present during the sessions, was Jim McCarty, who contributed energy necessary for the contact to be made. There was an apparent multiplication of energy between the three that enabled the Ra contact to occur, and each of these three played a vital role in bringing forth The Ra Material.

Those of you interested in obtaining the five books which comprise The Ra Material can do so through the following source: L/L Research Publications, P.O. Box 5195, Louisville, KY, 40255-0195; phone/fax: 502-245-6495. They also have Internet access via the website address www.llresearch.org wherein is more complete ordering information. These ones do not accept credit cards. They offer a number of publications besides the five Ra volumes. All of the Ra volumes cost $11.50 each to produce. Any donations above this minimum cost is greatly appreciated and is used to keep their material in print and fund future projects, and is tax deductible.

One final matter to take note of is the way the Ra entity insists upon frequent identification. Many of the spiritual messages presented in these pages and collected in the series WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach emphasize that same point, and the Higher Authors/Teachers responsible for those messages are very clear in their identifications and very willing to provide same whenever there is a question.

When a receiver gets sloppy in this regard is when dark entities slip onto the airwaves and derail the presentation of Lighted information. This is an important lesson to keep in mind as many ones effort toward improving their own personal connections to Higher Teachers and Guides, as the Lighted Messengers frequently urge each of us to do.

SESSION 9 January 27, 1981

RA: I am Ra. I greet you in the Love and the Light of our Infinite Creator. We communicate now.

QUESTIONER: The healing exercises that you gave us are of such a nature that it is best to concentrate on a particular exercise at a certain time. I would like to ask what exercise that I should concentrate on tonight?

RA: I am Ra. Again, to direct your judgment is an intrusion upon your space/time continuum distortion called future. To speak of past or present within our distortion/judgment limits is acceptable. To guide rather than teach/learn is not acceptable to our distortion in regards to teach/learning. We, instead, can suggest a process whereby each chooses the first of the exercises given in the order in which we gave them, which you, in your discernment, feel is not fully appreciated by your mind/body/spirit complex.

This is the proper choice, building from the foundation, making sure the ground is good for the building. We have assessed for you the intensity of this effort in terms of energy expended. You will take this in mind and be patient, for we have not given a short or easy program of consciousness learn/teaching.

QUESTIONER: The way that I understand the process of evolution is that our planetary population has a certain amount of time to progress. This is generally divided into three 25,000-year cycles. At the end of 75,000 years the planet progresses itself. What caused this situation to come about with the preciseness of the years in each cycle?

RA: I am Ra. Visualize, if you will, the particular energy which, outward flowing and inward coagulating, formed the tiny realm of The Creation governed by your Council of Saturn. Continue seeing the rhythm of this process. The living flow creates a rhythm which is as inevitable as one of your timepieces. Each of your planetary entities began the first cycle when the energy nexus was able, in that environment, to support such mind/body experiences. Thus, each of your planetary entities is on a different “cyclical schedule” as you might call it. The timing of these cycles is a measurement equal to a portion of intelligent energy.

This intelligent energy offers a type of clock. The cycles move as precisely as a clock strikes your hour. Thus, the gateway from intelligent energy to intelligent infinity opens regardless of circumstance on the striking of the hour.

QUESTIONER: The original, first entities on this planet—what was their origin? Where were they before they were on this planet?

RA: I am Ra. The first entities upon this planet were Water, Fire, Air and Earth.

QUESTIONER: Where did the people who are like us, who were the first ones here, where did they come from? From where did they evolve?

RA: I am Ra. You speak of third-density experience. The first of those to come here were brought from another planet in your solar system, called by you the Red Planet, Mars. This planet’s environment became inhospitable to third-density beings. The first entities, therefore, were of this race, as you may call it, manipulated somewhat by those who were guardians at that time.

QUESTIONER: What race is that, and how did they get from Mars to here?

RA: I am Ra. The race is a combination of the mind/body/spirit complexes of those of your so-called Red Planet and a careful series of genetical adjustments made by the guardians of that time. These entities arrived, or were preserved, for the experience upon your sphere by a type of birthing which is non-reproductive, but consists of preparing genetic material for the incarnation of the mind/body/spirit complexes of those entities from the Red Planet.

QUESTIONER: I assume from what you are saying that the guardians transferred the race here after the race had died from the physical as we know it on Mars. Is that correct?

RA: I am Ra. This is correct.

QUESTIONER: The guardians were obviously acting within an understanding of the Law of One in doing this. Can you explain the application of the Law of One in this process?

RA: I am Ra. The Law of One was named by these guardians as the bringing of the wisdom of the guardians in contact with the entities from the Red Planet, thus melding the social memory complex of the guardian race and the Red Planet race. It, however, took an increasing amount of distortion into the application of the Law of One from the viewpoint of other guardians, and it is from this beginning action that the quarantine of this planet was instituted, for it was felt that the free will of those of the Red Planet had been abridged.

QUESTIONER: Were the entities of the Red Planet following the Law of One prior to leaving the Red Planet?

RA: I am Ra. The entities of the Red Planet were attempting to learn the Laws of Love, which form one of the primal distortions of the Law of One. However, the tendencies of these people towards bellicose actions caused such difficulties in the atmospheric environment of their planet that it became inhospitable for third-density experience before the end of its cycle. Thus, the Red Planet entities were unharvested and continued in your illusion to attempt to learn the Law of Love.

QUESTIONER: How long ago did this transfer occur from the Red Planet to Earth?

RA: I am Ra. In your time this transfer occurred approximately 75,000 years ago.

QUESTIONER: 75,000 years ago?

RA: I am Ra. This is approximately correct.

QUESTIONER: Were there any entities of the form that I am now—two arms, two legs—on this planet before this transfer occurred?

RA: I am Ra. There have been visitors to your sphere at various times for the last four million of your years, speaking approximately. These visitors do not affect the cycling of the planetary sphere. It was not third-density in its environment until the time previously mentioned.

QUESTIONER: Then there were second-density entities here prior to approximately 75,000 years ago. What type of entities were these?

RA: I am Ra. The second density is the density of the higher plant life and animal life which exists without the upward drive towards the infinite. These second-density beings are of an octave of consciousness just as you find various orientations of consciousness among the conscious entities of your vibration.

QUESTIONER: Did any of these second-density entities have shapes like ours—two arms, two legs, head, and walk upright on two feet?

RA: I am Ra. The two higher of the sub-vibrational levels of second-density beings had the configuration of the biped, as you mentioned. However, the erectile movement which you experience was not totally effected in these beings who were tending towards the leaning forward, barely leaving the quadrupedal position.

QUESTIONER: Where did these beings come from? Were they a product of evolution as understood by our scientists? Were they evolved from the original material of the Earth that you spoke of?

RA: I am Ra. This is correct.

QUESTIONER: Do these beings then evolve from second density to third density?

RA: I am Ra. This is correct, although no guarantee can be made of the number of cycles it will take an entity to learn the lessons of consciousness of self which are the prerequisite for transition to third density.

QUESTIONER: Is there any particular race of people on our planet now who were incarnated here from second density?

RA: I am Ra. There are no second-density consciousness complexes here on your sphere at this time. However, there are two races which use the second-density form. One is the entities from the planetary sphere you call Maldek. These entities are working their understanding complexes through a series of what you would call karmic restitutions. They dwell within your deeper underground passageways and are known to you as “Bigfoot”.

The other race is that being offered a dwelling in this density by guardians who wish to give the mind/body/spirit complexes of those who are of this density at this time “appropriately engineered physical vehicles” as you would call these chemical complexes, in the event that there is what you call nuclear war.

QUESTIONER: I didn’t understand what these vehicles or beings were for that were appropriate in the event of nuclear war.

RA: I am Ra. These are beings which exist as instinctual second-density beings which are being held in reserve to form what you would call a gene pool in case these body complexes are needed. These body complexes are greatly able to withstand the rigors of radiation which the body complexes you now inhabit could not do.

QUESTIONER: Where are these body complexes located?

RA: I am Ra. These body complexes of the second race dwell in uninhabited deep forest. There are many in various places over the surface of your planet.

QUESTIONER: Are they Bigfoot-type creatures?

RA: I am Ra. This is correct, although we would not call these Bigfoot, as they are scarce and are very able to escape detection. The first race is less able to be aware of proximity of other mind/body/spirit complexes, but these beings are very able to escape due to their technological understandings before their incarnations here. These entities of the glowing eyes are those most familiar to your peoples.

QUESTIONER: Then there are two different types of Bigfoot. Correct?

RA: I am Ra. This will be the final question.

There are three types of Bigfoot, if you will accept that vibratory sound complex used for three such different races of mind/body/spirit complexes. The first two we have described.

The third is a thought-form.

QUESTIONER: I would like to ask if there is anything that we can do to aid the instrument's comfort.

RA: I am Ra. This instrument will require some adjustment of the tender portions of her body complex. The distortions are due to the energy center blockage you would call pineal.

I leave you in the Love and the Light of the One Infinite Creator. Go forth, therefore, rejoicing in the Power and the Peace of the One Creator. Adonai.

SESSION 10 January 27, 1981

RA: I am Ra. I greet you in the Love and Light of the Infinite Creator. I communicate now.

QUESTIONER: I think that it would clarify things for us if we went back to the time just before the transfer of souls from Maldek to see how the Law of One operated with respect to this transfer and why this transfer was necessary. What happened to the people of Maldek that caused them to lose their planet? How long ago did this event occur?

RA: I am Ra. The peoples of Maldek had a civilization somewhat similar to that of the societal complex known to you as Atlantis in that it gained much technological information and used it without care for the preservation of their sphere, following to a majority extent the complex of thought, ideas, and actions which you may associate with your so-called negative polarity or the service to self. This was, however, for the most part, couched in a sincere belief/thought structure which seemed to the perception of the mind/body complexes of this sphere to be positive and of service to others. The devastation that wrecked their biosphere and caused its disintegration resulted from what you call war.

The escalation went to the furthest extent of the technology this social complex had at its disposal in the space/time present of the then time. This time was approximately 705,000 of your years ago. The cycles had begun much, much earlier upon this sphere due to its relative ability to support the first-dimensional life forms at an earlier point in the space/time continuum of your solar system. These entities were so traumatized by this occurrence that they were in what you may call a social complex knot or tangle of fear. Some of your time passed. No one could reach them. No beings could aid them.

Approximately 600,000 of your years ago, the then-existing members of the Confederation were able to deploy a social memory complex and untie the knot of fear. The entities were then able to recall that they were conscious. This awareness brought them to the point upon what you would call the lower astral planes where they could be nurtured until each mind/body/spirit complex was able to finally be healed of this trauma to the extent that each entity was able to examine the distortions it had experienced in the previous life/illusion complex.

After this experience of learn/teaching, the group decision was to place upon itself a type of what you may call karma alleviation. For this purpose they came into incarnation within your planetary sphere in what were not acceptable human forms. This then they have been experiencing until the distortions of destruction are replaced by the desire for a less distorted vision of service to others. Since this

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provides a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

"Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk."

was the conscious decision of the great majority of those beings in the Maldek experience, the transition to this planet began approximately 500,000 of your years ago, and the type of body complex available at that time was used.

QUESTIONER: Was the body complex available at that time what we refer to as the ape body?

RA: I am Ra. That is correct.

QUESTIONER: Have any of the Maldek entities transformed since then? Are they still second-density now, or are some of them third-density?

RA: I am Ra. The consciousness of these entities has always been third-density. The alleviation mechanism was designed by the placement of this consciousness in second-dimensional physical-chemical complexes which are not able to be dexterous or manipulative to the extent which is appropriate to the working of the third-density distortions of the mind complex.

QUESTIONER: Have any of the entities moved on now, made a graduation at the end of a cycle and made the transition from second-density bodies to third-density bodies?

RA: I am Ra. Many of these entities were able to remove the accumulation of what you call karma, thus being able to accept a third-density cycle within a third-density body. Most of those beings so succeeding have incarnated elsewhere in The Creation for the succeeding cycle in third density. As this planet reached third density, some few of these entities became able to join the vibration of this sphere in third-density form. There remain a few who have not yet alleviated through the mind/body/spirit coordination of distortions the previous action taken by them. Therefore, they remain.

QUESTIONER: Are these the Bigfoot that you spoke of?

RA: I am Ra. These are one type of Bigfoot.

QUESTIONER: Then our human race is formed of a few who originally came from Maldek and quite a few who came from Mars. Are there entities here from other places?

RA: I am Ra. There are entities experiencing your time/space continuum who have originated from many, many places, as you would call them, in The Creation, for when there is a cycle change, those who must repeat then find a planetary sphere appropriate for this repetition. It is somewhat unusual for a planetary mind/body/spirit complex to contain those from many, many various loci, but this explains much, for you see, you are experiencing the third-dimension occurrence with a large number of those who must repeat the cycle. The orientation, thus, has been difficult to unify, even with the aid of many of your teach/learners.

QUESTIONER: When Maldek was destroyed, did all the people of Maldek have the fear problem or were some advanced enough to transfer to other planets?

RA: I am Ra. In the occurrence of planetary dissolution, none escaped, for this is an action which rebounds to the social complex of the planetary complex itself. None escaped the knot or tangle.

QUESTIONER: Is there any danger of this happening to Earth at this time?

RA: I am Ra. We feel this evaluation of your planetary mind/body/spirit complexes' so-called future may be less than harmless. We say only the conditions of mind exist for such development of technology and such deployment. It is the distortion of our vision/understanding that the mind and spirit complexes of those of your people need orientation rather than the "toys" needing dismantlement, for are not all things that exist part of The Creator? Therefore, freely to choose is your own duty.

QUESTIONER: When graduation occurs at the end of a cycle, and entities are moved from one planet to another, by what means do they go to a new planet?

RA: I am Ra. In the scheme of The Creator, the first step of the mind/body/spirit/totality/beingness is to place its mind/body/spirit complex distortion in the proper place of Love/Light. This is done to ensure proper healing of the complex and eventual attunement with the totality/beingness complex. This takes a very variable length of your time/space. After this is accomplished, the experience of the cycle is dissolved and filtered until only the distillation of distortions in its pure form remains. At this time, the harvested mind/body/spirit/totality/beingness evaluates the density needs of its beingness and chooses the more appropriate new environment for either a repetition of the cycle or a moving forward into the next cycle. This is the manner of the harvesting, guarded and watched over by many.

QUESTIONER: When the entity is moved from one planet to the next, is he moved in thought or by a vehicle?

RA: I am Ra. The mind/body/spirit/totality/beingness is one with The Creator. There is no time/space distortion. Therefore, it is a matter of thinking the proper locus in the infinite array of time/spaces.

QUESTIONER: While an entity is incarnate in this third density at this time, he may either learn unconsciously without knowing what he is learning, or he may learn after he is consciously aware that he is learning in the ways of the Law of One. By the second way of learning consciously, it is possible for the entity to greatly accelerate his growth. Is this correct?

RA: I am Ra. This is correct.

QUESTIONER: Then although many entities are not consciously aware of it, what they really desire is to accelerate their growth, and it is their job to discover this while they are incarnate. Is it correct that they can accelerate their growth much more while in the third density than in between incarnations of this density?

RA: I am Ra. This is correct. We shall attempt to speak upon this concept.

The Law of One has as one of its primal distortions the free-will distortion, thus each entity is free to accept, reject, or ignore the mind/body/spirit complexes about it and ignore

The Creation itself. There are many among your social memory complex distortion who, at this time/space, engage daily, as you would put it, in the working upon the Law of One in one of its primal distortions; that is, the ways of love. However, if this same entity, being biased from the depths of its mind/body/spirit complex towards Love/Light, were then to accept the responsibility for each moment of the time/space accumulation of present moments available to it, such an entity can empower its progress in much the same way as we described the empowering of the call of your social complex distortion to the Confederation.

QUESTIONER: Could you state this in a little different way—how you empower this call?

RA: I am Ra. We understand you to speak now of our previous information. The call begins with one. This call is equal to infinity and is not, as you would say, counted. It is the cornerstone. The second call is added. The third call empowers or doubles the second, and so forth—each additional calling doubling or granting power to all the preceding calls. Thus, the call of many of your peoples is many, many-powered and overwhelmingly heard to the infinite reaches of The One Creation.

QUESTIONER: For the general development of the reader of this book, could you state some of the practices or exercises to perform to produce an acceleration toward the Law of One?

RA: I am Ra.

Exercise One: This is the most nearly centered and useable within your illusion complex. The moment contains love. That is the lesson/goal of this illusion or density. The exercise is to consciously see that love in awareness and understanding distortions. The first attempt is the cornerstone. Upon this choosing rests the remainder of the life-experience of an entity. The second seeking of love within the moment begins the addition. The third seeking empowers the second, the fourth powering or doubling the third. As with the previous type of empowerment, there will be some loss of power due to flaws within the seeking in the distortion of insincerity. However, the conscious statement of self, to self, of the desire to seek love, is so central an act of will that, as before, the loss of power due to this friction is inconsequential.

Exercise Two: The universe is one being. When a mind/body/spirit complex views another mind/body/spirit complex, see The Creator. This is a helpful exercise.

Exercise Three: Gaze within a mirror. See The Creator.

Exercise Four: Gaze at The Creation which lies about the mind/body/spirit complex of each entity. See The Creator.

The foundation or prerequisite of these exercises is a predilection towards what may be called meditation, contemplation, or prayer. With this attitude, these exercises can be processed. Without it, the data will not sink down into the roots of the tree of mind, thus enabling and ennobling the body and touching the spirit.

QUESTIONER: I was wondering about the advent of the civilizations of Atlantis and Lemuria, when these civilizations occurred, and where did they come from?

RA: I am Ra. This is the last question of this working. The civilizations of Atlantis and Lemuria were not one but two. Let us look first at the Mu [Lemurian] entities.

They were beings of a somewhat primitive nature, but those who had very advanced spiritual distortions. The civilization was part of this cycle, experienced early within the cycle at a time of approximately 53,000 of your years ago. It was a helpful and harmless place which was washed beneath the ocean during a readjustment of your sphere's tectonic plates through no action of their own. They sent out those who survived and reached many places in what you call Russia, North America, and South America. The Indians [Native Americans] of whom you come to feel some sympathy in your social complex distortions are the descendants of these entities. Like the other incarnates of this cycle, they came from elsewhere. However, these particular entities were largely from a second-density planet which had some difficulty, due to the age of its sun, in achieving third-density life conditions. This planet was from the galaxy Deneb.

The Atlantean race was a very conglomerate social complex which began to form approximately 31,000 years in the past of your space/time continuum illusion. It was a slow growing and very agrarian one until approximately 15,000 of your years ago. It reached quickly a high technological understanding, which caused it to be able to use intelligent infinity in an informative manner. We may add that they used intelligent energy as well, manipulating greatly the natural influxes of the indigo or pineal ray from divine or infinite energy. Thus, they were able to create life forms. This they began to do instead of healing and perfecting their own mind/body/spirit complexes, turning their distortions toward what you may call negative.

Approximately 11,000 of your years ago, the first of the, what you call, wars caused approximately forty percent of this population to leave the density by means of disintegration of the body. The second and most devastating of the conflicts occurred approximately 10,821 years in the past according to your illusion. This created an Earth-changing configuration and the large part of Atlantis was no more, having been inundated. Three of the positively-oriented of the Atlantean groups left this geographical locus before that devastation, placing themselves in the mountain areas of what you call Tibet, what you call Peru, and what you call Turkey.

Do you have any brief questions before we close this meeting?

QUESTIONER: Only one, other than what we can do to make the instrument more comfortable. I would like to have your definition of galaxy, the word "galaxy" as you have used it.

RA: I am Ra. We use the term known to your people by the sound vibration "galaxy". We accept that some galaxies contain one system of planetary and solar groups. Others contain several. However, the importance of the locus in infinite time/space dimensionality is so little that we accept the distortion implicit in such an ambiguous term.

QUESTIONER: Then the nine planets and Sun which we have here in our system, would you refer to that as a galaxy?

RA: I am Ra. We would not.

QUESTIONER: How many stars would be approximately in a galaxy?

RA: I am Ra. It depends upon the galactic system. Your own, as you know, contains many, many millions of planetary entities and star bodies.

QUESTIONER: I was just trying to get to the definition that you were using for galaxy. You mentioned a couple of times the term galaxy in reference to what we call a planetary system and it was causing some confusion.

Is there any way that we can make the instrument more comfortable?

RA: I am Ra. This instrument could be made somewhat more comfortable if more support were given the body complex. Other than this, we can only repeat the request to carefully align the symbols used to facilitate this instrument's balance. Our contact is narrow-banded, and thus the influx brought in with us must be precise.

I am Ra. I leave you in the Love and the Light of The One Infinite Creator. Go forth, therefore, rejoicing in the Power and Peace of The One Creator. Adonai.

The Mechanism Behind An Upcoming Major Global Economic Crisis

Editor's note: For those of you who are not already familiar with Nick Guarino, let's just say he is probably one of the most astute—if not THE most astute—Wall Street watcher and economic advisor in America.

Nick has, for a long time, published a newsletter called The Wall Street Underground (1144 Booth Street, Kansas City, KS, 66103; phone: 913-342-6400). It is loaded with gems of down-to-Earth insight and common sense about the often crazy financial shenanigans going on around the world—and especially close to home at our own premier “insane asylum” for such antics in New York City.

When something truly outrageous or time-sensitive happens, Nick also publishes, usually by email and fax, a quick-turnaround service called a Wall Street Underground Special Report. The following is from this latter service and is SO important that it MUST be shared with as wide an audience as possible at this time.

As Nick points out, it will surely be the small, honest investor, who is saving for retirement or a child's college tuition, who will be most hurt in the trap that has been set—not the big players who are in on the scam.

Nick stops short of using the words “purposeful conspiracy” but regular readers of this newspaper will easily be able to connect the dots in that respect. Nothing happens by accident, especially where ever-more-tight control of we-the-people is concerned. And how better to control than through the fear and paralysis of financial devastation. It is certainly a time to act carefully and wisely in navigating the financial arenas, since all are laden with traps purposely set.

We would like to sincerely thank “M”, who is a longtime reader and most gracious supporter of The SPECTRUM, for alerting us to this most important financial information about a situation which will likely cause serious problems as we enter the first few months of the new year. As “M” said, with great empathy, maybe this news will save some of you (and your assets) from the ticking bomb purposely engineered to explode just as ones begin to let down their guard about Y2K.

12/14/99 NICK GUARINO

The Fed's incredible action that:

1. Lit insanity into the stock market;
and
2. Will crash the market and economy early in the New Year.

Some critical information has just come to light that you need to know.

I've been screaming about the grossly overvalued stock market for some time. I said it has to end in wipeout. In October, the market started to aggressively move down. The market fell over 1300 points, and touched just under 10,000. Then it miraculously stopped its slide.

At that time, we recommended you use stops to control your positions as the stock market rallied back. Unfortunately, we did not recommend you get out of all your positions and take profits on the lows, as we have done in the past. So you did not make any money either.

The decision was simple. The market was collapsing. The economy was red hot. The Fed was raising rates.

It appeared to be a rally-back. But now it has turned into another leg up in this wild bull market. As you'll see in this report, this one is unlike any leg up any market has ever experienced. That is why we have made no further recommendations. We are waiting for the market to blow itself out.

Before you kick yourself in the butt, or me either, this did not occur because the public decided they wanted more stocks. It did not occur because of any new paradigm. It occurred because of a key event you and I did not know at the time.

The Fed opened the floodgates. They swamped the market with hundreds of billions of new dollars. For reasons I will explain in just a moment, they made the biggest money supply increases in history.

Thanks to leveraging, those hundreds of billions have turned into trillions. They are rolling the dice in Wall Street's final, out-of-control, insane feeding frenzy—all on borrowed money from the Federal Reserve.

But that is only half the story. The Fed did not add permanent liquidity to the system, like it usually does. This money is being put into the system TEMPORARILY. It has to be returned, starting in January.

You may have noticed that every week, for the past few months, I've posted the money supply figures. The U.S. money supply is making its biggest increases ever, by far. By year's end, the M3 money supply—the broadest measure of money in the U.S.—will have skyrocketed by a stunning $1 trillion.

All this money has come from the Fed. It has poured into the stock market, and driven valuations to even bigger, absurd, record highs. It has lit the incredible insanity of the blow-off top we're now seeing.

Why would the Fed do such a crazy thing? Their job is to smooth the excesses in the system. They are supposed to flatten the peaks and fill the valleys—certainly not ignite the biggest bubble stock market the world has ever seen.

The answer is that the Fed is at cross purposes. On the one hand, they talk about the runaway, out-of-control stock market, and the red-hot U.S. economy. They even aggressively raise interest rates. All because they fear runaway consumer spending and out-of-control job growth will spark inflation.

At the exact same time, behind the scenes, the Fed has manufactured the biggest increases in money supply in history. That is the most inflation-creating event of all. And it's global. Central banks the world over have worked with the Fed, and done the same. This started earlier this year to a minor extent, but has been out of control since October. Now I am seeing the biggest infusion of cash into the system ever.

The Fed had targeted money supply growth of 3% to 5% for 1999. That was their stated target range. But money supply growth will hit 20%+ this year. Never in U.S. history has the Fed pumped so much money into the economy—not in times of peace, of war, or of financial crisis—especially not during the hottest economy ever. This is the stuff hyper-inflation is made of. Even worse, it's about to create an economic tragedy that could bring down the entire U.S. financial system.

Again, the question is “Why?” Why are they taking such incredible risks? In October the Fed knew the stock market was going to crash. They decided to postpone that event for exactly one reason. Here is that reason.

High-level sources tell me the Fed is deeply concerned about Y2K. I’m on record that Y2K is not a problem. And it’s not—for the U.S. But the Fed has information that third-world countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America may have a bigger problem than they are letting on.

So the world’s major central banks have all agreed to pump vast amounts of money (liquidity) into the world economy. From Tokyo and Beijing, to London and New York, the world has seen the greatest amount of money creation ever. The U.S. has led the way. The printing presses are running ahead at full speed.

Now, remember: there is no such thing as free money. Otherwise everyone would be fabulously wealthy.

Suppose Bill and Hillary Clinton decided to get rid of poverty in America. How? By giving $1 million to every person in America on welfare. They do this by having the Fed create the money out of thin air, just like it’s doing now.

Overnight, poverty would seem to be wiped out. It would be one hell of a party. The U.S. economy would seem to boom, as this largesse worked its way through the system. Poor people would be like super-lottery winners. They would buy new homes, cars, consumer goods. The economy would prosper, at least for a time, like it is now.

Only one problem: The Fed just printed this money. There is nothing to justify it. No real wealth to back it up. And after the newfound prosperity passes, that enormous money creation would have to be drained out of the system. Otherwise we would end up with hyper-inflation.

Hyper-inflations in the past have started just like we are seeing now. Central banks create too much money. They do this in the mistaken belief they can bail out some kind of crisis—in this case Y2K—a crisis no one is even sure will really happen.

There ARE welfare recipients of this insane money creation—none other than our friends collectively known as Wall Street. Actually, not just Wall Street, but also Tokyo, London, Mexico City, Sao Paulo, Paris, and Berlin. This is why stock markets around the world are rallying. They are putting-in record highs on record volume—with no other justification than everyone wants to play in the casino.

One thing and one thing only caused this stampede: The Fed’s huge money creation has gone, in great part, to stock market manipulators. Wall Street is gorging itself on the easy money from the Fed. That’s why the market has gone insane.

You might have noticed that the combined volume on the NYSE and the NASDAQ has nearly doubled. Until recently, that volume was averaging around 1.5 billion shares a day. An incredible number by itself. Now, in this insanity, volume is close to hitting 3 billion shares a day. Total shares in some companies are turning over five times in a single day.

Reason is, the stock market runs on cash—and the Federal Reserve is flooding the markets with cash. That cash “easy money” has got to find a home. The stock market is it.

The type of cash they are adding makes this even more dangerous. Let me explain.

The Fed creates different kinds of money. Usually the Fed adds money to the system by buying U.S. Treasury Securities. These are called “coupon passes”. They permanently add money to the U.S. economy. The Fed prints money to buy U.S. government securities. It gives that new money to the banking system which, because of leverage, expands it over and over again. You see, Fed money is high-powered, concentrated money. In essence, the banks add water, and $1 billion becomes $10 billion, $20 billion, or even more.

This time the Fed is not buying Treasuries. It is using instruments called “repurchase agreements” or repos. Repos again multiply the amount of the money geometrically. But there is a key difference: Repos are loans. Unlike coupon passes, repos have a strict time limit on them. When the time limit is up, they drain the money back out.

The repos the Fed is using now have changed. They last 30 to 90 days. Before, they were overnight to 2 days, and no more than 15 days. Repos have to be repaid with interest.

In other words, the Fed is not putting permanent reserves into the system. This money that is fueling the Wall Street drunken orgy has to come back out. And very soon. Starting in mid-January, ending in March, it must all be paid back.

A huge amount of this money is being loaned to short-term traders on Wall Street. It is fueling the insanity you are seeing in the markets. In essence the Fed has created this last leg of the great bubble. They have brought on the very event they warned about, and did not want to have happen.

So Y2K WILL wipe out the stock market after all. But not for the reasons anyone thought. Y2K will wipe out the stock market because of the incredible amount of liquidity the Fed put in the financial system to prevent a Y2K meltdown. These repo agreements guarantee a stock market wipeout when the money comes back out. And, starting in mid-January, it must come back out.

You and I are not crazy. We expected the market to collapse in October. Sheer weight and exhaustion started to bring it down. But the Fed made an incredible mistake. They decided NOT to face a Y2K crisis and a stock market crash at the same time. They pumped in this incredible amount of money. That postponed the crash for a few months, until after the millennium passed. Y2K first, then a stock market wipeout.

Now the Fed has two options. Number one, they can leave the huge money they’ve created in the system. They can do that by issuing more repos. That will touch off hyper-inflation. It will destroy the financial system and the stock market. Number two, they can take out this money. This will collapse the stock market. They hope that, by doing this, they can spare the banking system.

Actually, they have no choice. If the Fed leaves the money in, this red-hot and out-of-control economy generates inflation at a rate never seen before. The stock market collapses anyway. And the financial system comes down with it.

The Fed is a creature of the banking system, not the stock market. Their number-one goal is to save the financial system. So if guaranteeing an even bigger stock market bubble—and then wipeout—is the price they must pay to try and preserve the financial/banking system, that’s what they will do—which means next year America enters its biggest economic slowdown ever. Guaranteed. And the stock market collapses. Guaranteed. These events will take place as the repos expire and the Fed removes the incredible amount of money it provided.

But there’s more: The Fed has to also slow the economy. That means they have to raise interest rates, as well as drain the excess money the repos created. Wall Street and the U.S. economy are about to receive both barrels of a double-barreled shotgun blast between the eyes.

The Fed was hoping Wall Street would discipline itself, knowing the money would have to come back out. Instead, Wall Street went on a buying spree, such as has never been seen before. I can tell you for a fact that the Fed’s plans are the following: first, get through Y2K; avoid a financial panic that any kind of liquidity crisis the world over could cause.

After the first few weeks in January, that fear should pass. Then the Fed will drain this excess liquidity out of the system. The other central banks around the world will drain the excess money they created. The huge amounts of short-term money will be paid back.

Remember: this money was only LOANED to the system. It is not permanent. Market players who borrowed this immense money leveraged it to play casino games on Wall Street. They will have to sell stock to get the cash to pay their loans back.

This market is already teetering on the edge of a cliff. It won't take a lot of selling to push it over.

This will be going on in every major stock market and central bank the world over—and most importantly, in the U.S.

This has to be the most insane action ever taken by the world's central bankers. On the one hand, they are warning that the markets are grossly overvalued; they are raising interest rates to cool off the craziness. At the exact same time, they also flood the system with money because of Y2K.

This huge money creation has gone to hedge funds, day traders, big Wall Street firms, investment bankers, even big bank proprietary trading desks. They are leveraging it even more—with options, futures, and derivatives. They have created the biggest party ever seen in the financial markets, as the millennium ends. Early in the new year, the party is over. Without a doubt, it is time to pay the piper.

My worst nightmare has now occurred. The runaway bubble market turns into an insane feeding frenzy that ends in a wipeout—all because the Fed misjudged the situation. In fact, they have dropped gasoline on a raging forest fire.

This gets back to the original analogy about Bill and Hillary erasing poverty by making millionaires out of everyone on welfare. Suppose they did that—with one caveat: At the end of 90 days, the welfare recipients have to give the money back. How many would be able to do that?

It would be one hell of a party—for 90 days. Then payback day would come. Things would get very ugly. That's what is happening right now.

Where is the money going to come from to pay back the loans? Someone has to get burned. Who do you think that will be? Ma and Pa Mutual Fund Holder, and Joe Day Trader. Remember: the Fed will still have to raise interest rates. Along with the repos expiring, this is the one-two punch that decks this market.

There you have it. The stock market crash that started in October was postponed till the beginning of the new year. Greenspan was so concerned about a Y2K collapse that he was willing to pay the price of an even bigger, runaway, out-of-control stock market in the interim—and hope against all hope that they can somehow bring down the stock market slowly.

Oh, by the way, have a Merry Christmas. Come the new year, it will be a much different world out there. Be ready for the biggest stock market wipeout in history. I'm sorry we did not get the wipeout in October like we figured. But, to make it up to you, the Fed will stage an even bigger wipeout in the new year.

This is truly the last fat Christmas America will see for many years in the future. This is the last hurrah.

Unspoken Details, Part I

Editor's note: The following quite interesting report is receiving wider-than-usual circulation around various "conspiracy"-oriented Internet websites and came to our attention through our News Desk editor, Dr. Al Overholt. Considering the names and events which Skolnick does not hesitate to specifically target, there is much for the serious investigator to pursue here. For more information on this and related subjects, see the websites <skolnick@ameritech.net>, <www.skolnicksreport.com>. 12/11/99 SHERMAN H. SKOLNICK

Over a period of more than four decades, my associates and I have learned a lot about two activities in particular: About reporters and journalists in the mass media. And about various movements and persons supposedly promoting equal rights.

Self-taught in law and legal research, but not comfortable to become a member of the Bar, I became widely known in the 1960s. In Illinois, in the federal courts, I brought and won a whole series of voting cases to re-do malapportioned voting districts. Some voting districts had 50% more people than other districts, diluting their vote. Although not an attorney, I was grudgingly allowed to represent the entire class of aggrieved voters. Because of various court hearings, I was often, for a minute or so, on the evening TV local news.

I constantly risked jail for so-called "contempt of court". Why? I often put the judges' financial corruption in their faces in court. I documented, for example, how the Chief District Judge, in one of my numerous voting cases, was an official of a so-called "foundation" set up as a money laundry by a known hoodlum, and thus the Chief Judge was subject to blackmail. (The Albert Parvin Foundation, of which a U.S. Supreme Court Justice, William O. Douglas, was the President.)

When I confronted the Chief Judge in court,

he had two court bailiffs suddenly grab my wheelchair and try to turn it upside down. This was witnessed by 18 news reporters in court for the voting case. Their stories about this, if any, never got on the air or in print. My suit against the bailiffs for assault and battery was torpedoed by the banker-judges in Chicago's federal appeals court. They alleged in their published ruling (Skolnick vs. Guadagno et al.) that the law does not permit damage cases against court personnel.

I became known as "Mr. One Man, One Vote"—a take-off on the slogan for reapportionment. In those days this type of case required a special three-judge panel in the U.S. District Court. With such cases, I tied up 24 judges, more than all they had in the courthouse. The judges were sore at me.

Media types, who I got to know by way of such cases, seeing I am an independent, surviving on a shoe-string, and not tied to corporate interests, confided in me. In effect, I became their "Father Confessor". They knew I would risk jail but would never give out their identity in their lifetime. They communicated with me on the sly, sometimes at an out-of-the-way, all-night eatery. I found out and fingered:

1. A CBS network bigshot with a sideline of illegally selling babies from Europe to couples in the U.S. who could not have children.

2. An NBC network vice-president in the dope traffic. Hushed up, it was publicly instead blamed on a lower-level technician who was railroaded into prison as a scapegoat.

3. Hot items reporters are working on which they know endanger their jobs and their career in the media. They knew and know that, off the record, I will aid them in some way.

4. The buying and selling of TV jobs. One TV reporter with a three-year contract said he cannot be fired, but was. "I bought my job; it is mine, dammit! Don't you know of a lawyer that will sue?" He thus protested to me. Sensitive to his plight, I quietly told him such suits are not allowed, being against Public Policy—sort of like a bankrobber himself robbed by corrupt police on the way from the stick-up; he cannot sue for theft.

As I found out from him and others, it is a widespread media policy: you have to pay 15% up front, in cash, of the first year's contract. One-third goes to the union business agent. One-third goes to the "celebrity" lawyer specializing in arranging such deals. (I fingered six such lawyers in Chicago.) And one-third of the bribe goes to the station manager or news director. The IRS is well aware of all this, but uses the details as blackmail to get the mass media to say nice things about America's fearful Gestapo, the IRS.

In 1988 I got into a big ruckus with 60 Minutes' CBS program boss Don Hewitt by confronting him with the details. His team vowed to keep me off the air forever and to shut me up. (Without public access cable TV, I would not be seen "on the air".)

An honest, hard-hitting reporter, Ted Smart, who I knew from NBC's Chicago outlet, WMAQ-TV, Channel 5 confided to me: "I got the goods, Sherman. I can prove it. The FBI was implicated in the assassination of Dr. King." I responded by saying: "Ted, it's a death warrant and you know it. Cool it." My pal, Ted Smart, was murdered on the night before July 4, 1970. Another journalist, Louis Lomax, on the track of the same data, was murdered about three weeks later.

Playing an evil role as to the murder of Dr. King and its aftermath, was Rev. Jesse Jackson. He falsely claimed he had been up on the motel balcony and that Dr. King died in his arms.

In 1975, Barbara Reynolds, a reporter for the Chicago Tribune, wrote a book about Rev. Jackson called The Man, The Myth, And The Movement. It was loaded with eye-opening details. It surely painted Jesse as a charlatan and scoundrel—such as the tricks he used to reportedly put the arm on local businesses, and the tricks he used to replace Dr. King. Some claim the reputed Dr. King's blood on Jesse's shirt was actually chicken blood.

As the book was coming out, I spoke to Barbara Reynolds. She met me at a restaurant near Tribune Tower. She kept looking apprehensively at the door. "Jesse is going to run me out of this town. I can't stay here anymore" she told me. Someone came to the door and looked right at her. Frightened, she fled our table. Three weeks after the publication of her book, it was withdrawn. I have one of the few copies of the original book.

In the early 1990s, Barbara Reynolds finally went public with what happened to her and her long-suppressed book. The Establishment had been plainly protecting their man, Rev. Jackson. She told of her plight while on the Tony Brown's Journal TV program. About that time her book was reissued, but not widely mentioned.

A former U.S. Justice Department official, who once held a key position, responded to my questions about the Rev. Jesse Jackson. "I examined Jesse's secret file, locked up in our office. I shouldn't be talking about this" he leaned over and spoke in a low voice. "It was a stack of paper several feet high" he added. Impatient, I asked "So what did it show?" And he confirmed what I found out from other sources over the years: "Jesse has been an FBI informant most of his adult life." "So he's a government fink" I added. "Absolutely. My boss knew and I knew it" he said as he cut-off the discussion.

Starting about 1970, my associates and I became very knowledgeable about the financial dirty business of Rev. Jackson. We had volunteered as consultants to a group made up of 25,000 would-be home owners, Afro-Americans. They called themselves the South Side Contract Buyers League.

In those years, mortgage companies "red-lined" certain neighborhoods, such as where Blacks lived. No mortgages were to be issued in such areas. So, desperate to live in their own home instead of an apartment, the Blacks were forced to buy "on contract". An examination of the area and the contracts showed the Blacks were paying TWICE THE MARKET PRICE for the homes they were occupying. It was blatant racial discrimination.

The South Side Contract Buyers League had an office a few feet away from Jesse Jackson's office, which was an abandoned movie theater. For a while, Jesse paid no attention to them. He failed their repeated requests for aid. The Buyers League members organized a payment boycott.

One morning the Cook County Sheriff, Joe Woods (brother of Rose Mary Woods, Nixon's secretary who reportedly doctored-up the mysterious 18-1/2 minute Watergate tape) was set to evict Buyers League members, all at once, for engaging in a payment boycott. For that purpose, the Sheriff arranged with the phone company and the electric company to shut-off the entire area so Blacks would have no lights and could not communicate with each other about the mass eviction. Residents in the area who were not even members of the group also had their phones and electric all cut off. After the eviction, the whole area looked like a war zone: Household goods were scattered on the street; fronts of houses were crashed in; windows and doors were smashed all around the house.

The leaders of the Buyers League found out that my associates and I were investigating and researching the lawyers who sold them out in court, the banker-judges trying to control the Blacks and such. So I was invited to be the guest speaker at a huge mass meeting in a large church. There were about 650 people packed in there. I detailed to them the dirty financial forces and public officials who were their sworn enemies, and what I suggested be done.

As I continued to make suggestions and show up at most every session in court, Rev. Jesse Jackson pulled a trick on the leaders of the Buyers League, to get them falsely jailed. He had a group of ruffians, he called "Black Men Moving", who filled up the courtroom and shouted slogans and would not be still, and stood next to the leaders of the Buyers League. Instead of blaming Jesse, who was present, the judge arrested the leadership and had them locked-up in the basement of the courthouse. At that point, Jesse crossed the street to the mayor's office, apparently to work a deal to take over the Buyers League now that the leaders were jailed.

A group of Buyers League women showed up as I was sitting in front of Jesse in the mayor's outer office. I said, "Rev. Jackson, you do not represent the Buyers League". Jesse must have thought I was just another wilted, foolish "liberal", and snarled at me and shouted, "What are you doing here, White face?" Although angered about how he was trying to psych me out with Black-White slogans, I simply said, "Rev. Jackson, the leaders have told me that you repeatedly refused to help them. Why?"

Jesse went into the mayor's inner office as the women, by now alarmed, pounded on the mayor's office door. "Jesse, come out of there! YOU are NOT our leader!" they screamed at the door. As Jesse came out, he walked past me, and with a vicious look, turned to me, "I am going to get you for this!" Little if anything about this was mentioned in print or on the air. But my confronting Jesse on his trick apparently got the Buyers League leaders released from the court basement jail.

The various strategies that I suggested resulted in the Buyers League members being issued mortgages at HALF the price of the contracts. That is, a mortgage for the true, not inflated, value of the homes.

Resentment built up, however, against Rev. Jesse Jackson in the Black community. Well-informed Black businesspeople began meeting me on the sly. I became an authority on Jesse's rise to be a multi-millionaire. We compiled files with details. The Federal Government apparently gave him a 16-room house to live in, in a swank neighborhood not far from the University of Chicago. The pressfakers often said Jesse lives in the "ghetto". They never showed a picture of his mansion.

Jesse reportedly owned a private garbage truck business, Cross City Scavengers. The traditional mafia apparently made a deal with him, allowing him to horn in on their trade. They reportedly allowed him to empty off his garbage trucks in dumps under the control of the mob.

Jesse reportedly shook down a major food-store chain in Chicago, claiming "discrimination". They apparently set him up in numerous businesses as a pay-off, concealed from the IRS. He reportedly got a major interest in a dairy that supplied—now get this—grade “B” milk instead of grade “A”, foisted by strong-arm methods on certain stores and restaurants. He likewise used his gangster-like methods to reportedly force his orange juice company products on various stores.

As a mobster-type shakedown, Jesse began marching his troops on a near lakefront restaurant that had a Black cook who was quite satisfied, well paid, and had no grievance. Jesse demanded the restaurant owner use his Grade “B” milk, which the owner refused. Jesse demanded that the owner use Jesse’s garbage removal services at TWICE THE RATE PER BARREL as charged by others in the industry. Jesse demanded that the restaurant use his pesticide services.

The restaurant owner told me how he got rid of Jesse’s shakedown. He matter-of-factly pointed out: “The owner of this building where I lease space for my restaurant is a known hoodlum. He threatened to have Jesse’s office bombed. You know, gangster versus gangster—stay out of my territory, you understand?” That ended the problem. A gangster firm itself took over the restaurant later and the nearby motel.

A downtown bank which had Jesse’s secret accounts interested me: Amalgamated Bank and Trust. They are a long-time, highly-political, reputed mob front. At great risk to themselves and their jobs, some of the bank clerks, on the sly, informed us of how Jesse pulls up in his Rolls Royce, is taken downstairs by a bank Director especially assigned to reportedly hide Jesse’s transactions, and everyone who works at that bank is warned that they see nothing.

A small, elite team of federal agents were interested in all these financial rackets. About 1972, using our numerous details and witnesses, they got Rev. Jesse Jackson indicted on federal criminal charges of massive tax evasion and extortion done in the name of human rights. Jesse’s cronies reportedly paid $850,000 to the Nixon White House to secretly quash the indictment. The money reportedly was conveyed through an Indiana GOP National Committeeman. The Chief Federal Prosecutor, set to proceed with the prosecution, was forced out of his office.

I and two friends of mine in the media came to a secret meeting. A former member of the elite federal team ticked off to us how they got Jesse indicted, how he corruptly squelched the charges, and how the matter was covered up. One of the media people got himself a good job with the Wall Street Journal and never wrote what he found out. (Do some get their jobs by blackmailing others?) The other reporter, from the ABC network, died in a sabotaged plane crash enroute to a Middle-East assignment. His friends are mad how he was steered onto that doomed plane.

And I dare mention all of this.

In session 1975-76 was the House Subcommittee on Assassinations, delving into the murders of President Kennedy and Dr. King. A staff member who I knew told me of records they had which will be locked up and not included in the Subcommittee’s report. The records show, he said, that the FBI hand-picked Rev. Jesse Jackson to replace Dr. King BEFORE King was assassinated BY THE FBI, and that Dr. King opposed the Viet Nam war and was threatening to interfere with U.S. foreign policy.

Dr. King, in a speech he made exactly one year prior to his death, said he planned to go to Viet Nam to tell Black GIs they should not be killing Yellow-skinned people in someone else’s civil war. The staff member led me to understand that the records take the position that Rev. Jesse Jackson is acceptable to federal agencies like the FBI and CIA, and Dr. King, perceived as a national security risk, was not. These bombshell disclosures will not be publicly divulged for thirty years, he told me.

So, was the late Ted Smart, a murdered reporter, correct? What did Louis Lomax, another murdered reporter, find out?

Oh, so you’re naive and you think reporters are only murdered in Mexico and Third World countries? Is Barbara Reynolds correct in her book? Rev. Jesse Jackson has plenty to consider and plenty to conceal. Reports are circulating that a key Chinese witness is set to testify that the Clinton White House demanded he come up with several million dollars from Beijing, for the political ambitions of Jesse’s son, Jesse Jackson, Jr., a U.S. Congressman from Chicago’s south side. Junior, before becoming a Congressman, worked for the mafia-linked Hotel Workers Union. When grilled on this, on a radio show, Jesse Jr. said he never heard of the mobster who headed the Union for which Junior worked. Yet Junior was paid $59,000 a year as an alleged “organizer”. Some contend Junior performed little, if any, work.

The bottom line: was reputed FBI stool pigeon, Rev. Jesse Jackson, complicit in the murder of Dr. King, whose position Jesse coveted? Stay tuned. More details in further stories on this subject.

What Are Some Clues For Truly Finding Your Purpose?

1/1/00 HATONN

Good evening, my friend. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in Service to the Radiant One Light of Creator Source—The One Light. Be at peace.

All is continuing to unfold in perfection. Allow for the many distractions of day-to-day living to pass through your experience. Hold not your focus upon those things that you find upsetting, but rather look toward the good that can be borne from the experience itself. Use each emotionally charged experience as the opportunity for which it is intended—an experiential catalyst for growth.

If the situation is emotionally frustrating to you, then it is indeed YOU who have been afforded an experience wherein you are being challenged to remain in a state of connectedness (through the inner heart connection to Source) despite the apparent dichotomy of the situation. Remember always that YOU, along with all fellow cohabitants of your current experience, ARE ONE WITHIN THE WHOLENESS OF CREATOR.

Those who appear to be casting stones at you are, in actuality, casting stones at themselves, though by their own actions they show that they do not yet see or understand this basic Truth. Be the wayshower by setting an example.

If you find yourself quick to anger, then be as diligent to forgive yourself for allowing your inner connection to Source to be temporarily “broken”. Actually the inner connection to Source cannot be broken, but rather diminished rapidly, and to such a great extent that it quickly moves out of the frequency range of conscious perception. From the conscious perspective of the individual who experiences same, the net effect is a disconnect from the nurturing and balancing Guidance forever being offered to you.

Perhaps a useful perspective to hold onto would be to view one another as players in a play who have agreed to “PLAY” the various roles so that you ones can generate amongst yourselves the many contrasting ideas and beliefs so as to intentionally spark great thought-provoking debates and thus bring forth newness of experience and thought.

There is truly nothing that you ones can do for which you cannot be forgiven. In every case, Creator understands PERFECTLY all aspects of your challenge and knows that you are each created in PERFECTION. It is YOU who are always the last to forgive self. Creator never views your experiences as anything that needs to be forgiven, for He knows you will find your way back into balance.

Your current growth environment is created in Perfection. As a whole it is constantly seeking and achieving balance within Creator's Perfection.

You cannot fail in the experience of "life". No matter how "bad" your life experience may seem to be, you will naturally choose to re-enter the "game" so that you may continue to experience the newness of growth and thereby perfect the inner balance that is innate in all of Creator's creations.

Let us move from this subject. Though this first portion of this writing is fully intended for the one who sits and pens this message, we see that it has general value to many ones who will be reading this message. We ask that it be left in this writing. We now move on to another topic.

Your world, according to its present accepted calendar system, has moved into a new century, as well as a new millennium. This calendar is, in a relative sense, arbitrary in nature. The celestial cycles of movement through what you ones term "space" is of a much more significant nature than is your present calendar system. Let not the printed numbers on a page distract you from getting your mission completed.

Many a new reader may be asking: "What exactly is this 'mission' of which you speak?"

Each one's "mission" is unique to the individual experiencing, and yet there are similar aspects that will result in quite parallel paths for some. Each of the Ground Crew members who come forth, do so freely and in an effort to be of service to those who call out to God for assistance and understanding.

You each have an innate desire to help others, and yet you also inevitably find yourselves in need of assistance. When you go within and seek inner Guidance, and then use the gift given to help another to recognize (remember) their inner connection to Source, you have in some way performed your chosen duty/responsibility that you have set forth to do.

The "mission", in a general sense, is one of Light infusion into the planetary consciousness. The term "Light" can be replaced with the term "Love" in this last statement. Light (with a capital "L") is used herein as a symbolic representation of true understanding and conscious awareness of origin from Creator Source, versus the opposite, which would be darkness, or more simply, ignorance.

There is a very real challenge that you ones face. It is, as has been previously stated, that there are those ones who are desperately trying to keep the masses of the planet in a deliberate state of ignorance (darkness) concerning their true Lighted origin and their unlimited creative potential which derives from that Source.

These suppressive ones are most often referred to as the "elite controllers" of your world. These ones effort, through a large array of tricks resting upon mind control, to keep the masses in a defocused state of confusion and fear, as these controllers, in essence, usurp the freedom of the masses—all the while trying to maintain the illusion of freedom.

You who are awakened enough to realize the "game" being played are not as susceptible to the mind-numbing tactics that these "negative" elements are trying to foist upon the masses, and therefore YOU are often viewed as a very big threat. Thus there will come the accusations and ridicule from those who are being constantly programmed to reject ideas of conspiracy, of the true nature of your vast spiritual heritage, and thus of the knowledge that will help them to set themselves free from the "trap" of ignorance.

This complete picture offers to you a very real challenge. This challenge is a perfect opportunity for you ones to experience wherein you will build within yourselves a great desire to inform, question, and thereby change the "status-quo".

This is, to a great extent, why you chose to incarnate into the physical, rather than stay in the Higher Dimensions—from which most of you come who are drawn to this publication and thus to reading messages such as this. By coming into the physical format, you are able to—that is, you are given or have earned the right to—effect the desired change (upward shift in awareness) that would not otherwise be ethically possible from a non-interference point of view from the Higher Dimensional perspective.

YOU EACH CHOSE THIS MISSION! Along with that choice you accepted, knowingly, that you may very well become part of the planetary karmic experience wherein you may have to continue with same until you have balanced out any "energy ridges" or entanglements you may have created while serving as a member of what we have come to call, through this source, Ground Crew.

Regardless of the distractions that you will inevitably experience along your current journey—especially as a result of the threat you represent to the so-called "elite controllers" and to the dark, satanic, higher-dimensional forces who overshadow these third-dimensional elite—we of the Hosts of God, in Service to The One Light, suggest that you ones keep the largest perspective that you can hold in conscious thought regarding the nature of your involvement and purpose at this time.

We monitor you ones closely and we see that one of the larger distractions you ones seem to have is the wanting to know what YOUR "purpose" is. Your purpose is in alignment with those actions you take that resonate deep within you as "being truly satisfying". In other words, you can know your purpose by the very nature of your honest inner response. How do you feel when you see someone mistreat an animal or small child? Based on your feeling, do you think that this is in alignment with YOUR purpose in life? How do you feel when you interact with another and add value or understanding to their life? Is this, based on your deep feeling response, more in alignment with who you are and what you feel to be important and useful? Perhaps this is the nature and direction of YOUR purpose!

Do not be confused or distracted by wants and desires of a superficial, dishonest, or transient nature. For example: "I think my purpose is to sit on the beach in Hawaii and watch the waves come in. After all, I feel good sitting there!"

Oh? For how long?

Do you FEEL, down deep, a growing and satisfying sense of purpose from your actions? ALL chosen paths have the potential of being contributory to the larger, en-Light-ening educational mission underway on this planet. However, it would be wise to allow for flexibility and changes in plans, and to deep-down HONESTLY recognize that what you really wanted (which is different from what you necessarily needed) was, in this example, a temporary rest!

When you are on track with your "purpose" there will always be an inner sense of satisfaction experienced, for your soul-being is more fully brought into the arena of conscious awareness as a natural result of the increase in your vibratory rate. YOUR PURPOSE WILL ALWAYS, IF YOU ARE GROUND CREW, BE OF A NATURE TO BE OF SERVICE TO OTHERS. You will innately teach this by your words, thoughts, and actions.

It should be noted here that often, when ones begin to become more fully aware of their purpose and start actively pursuing those endeavors that are in alignment with their purpose, there will be a seemingly bumpy road manifest. Family members are often a great challenge to overcome, and will in many cases cause a struggle within the Lightworker's heart.

How do you step outside the mental conditioning of those who have, in most cases, been the ones reinforcing the limiting beliefs and ideas on you, possibly since you were born? How do you do this without being labeled a cult member, a sadist, a dupe, or such? These are very trying situations that will, in all likelihood, cause you great inner conflict.

All ones wish to be accepted for who they are and not judged harshly for thinking "differently" than does the "status-quo". For most of you, you did not choose to enter your current environment so that you could be molded and conform to it. Rather, you entered into this environment to creatively express your understanding, love, and compassion in such a manner as to become one who LIBERATES the thinking of those who are "stuck" and restless, searching for that "something more" that is seemingly missing yet just outside of their conscious awareness.

You have all been there at one time or another, and you know that to help liberate another, who is asking, from their own ignorance—and thus help them to connect with that “something” (their inner connectedness to ALL through the Love and Light of Creator Source) that had seemingly been eluding them—is immensely satisfying within, as there will inevitably come a great energy surge as a fellow co-creator comes into the greater understanding of the vastness of who they really are.

You each are on an evolutionary path that will inevitably “bump into” experiences that will challenge any areas of incomplete or erroneous understanding. Often these errors will seem small and insignificant. However, no truly lasting structure will ever be built upon an unstable foundation.

Often ones will seemingly reach a “plateau” wherein little or no movement, in terms of growth, is perceived. There are several factors that may cause such a condition to persist. At the heart will always be an error in personal belief regarding an unresolved personal issue that one believes to be resolved, but in fact has only been ignored, tucked away, dismissed somehow as a “non-issue”.

In such circumstances your Guides will often try to assist you in creating experiences wherein you will be caused to again look at this area of incomplete understanding or non-resolve. This often occurs when it is determined, at a higher level of consciousness, that your current level of understanding will not safely support the next level of responsibility with its required level of understanding.

Incomplete issues often manifest as energy blockages in the various energy centers of the body. These blockages must, in most cases, be cleared prior to the next level of awakening, for there comes with each level of awakening a greater ability to flow the Infinite Potentials of Creator’s Love and Light. To continue without the proper alignment of the energy centers would cause great harm to the physical apparatus, and thus, in many cases, illness would result, and in extreme cases the physical apparatus would cease to function altogether.

[Editor’s note: The writing elsewhere in this paper from Violinio St. Germain addresses in more detail this important issue of energy blockages and their clearing.]

Many are teetering on the edge of awakening to a new, higher level of awareness, but still have personal issues left unresolved that, unless dealt with in a conscientious and loving manner, will only serve as a stumbling block. Look for those things that you may be carrying around for years, such as the broken heart resulting from a “lost” loved one. Or anything that sort of just “sits there” because you can’t seem to find that which gives you resolve on the issue.

Often these things will be those which you carry around with you for years as a grudge, self pity, guilt, anger or such. Often we see you ones becoming quite comfortable with your pain, until it seems to just become a part of who you are, while you, for all intents and purposes, accept it, and in some cases nurture same through elaborate justifications to self.

Some actually equate the pain of such experiences with the “reality” of being alive. This is much like ones who would say “Pinch me so I know I’m not dreaming.” Do you use heart pain in order to prove that you are indeed alive? Do you feel guilty if you are not continually punishing yourself for past mistakes?

These are far more common experiences among Ground Crew members than many of you may want to believe. If you perceive that you have hurt another, then please forgive yourself and realize that you needed the experience in one way or another. Eventually it will, if viewed properly, serve as a springboard for future growth—often in an area in which you did not realize you were lacking in understanding.

Remember the wise words of the Master Teacher: “Forgive those who trespass against us.”

But also remember to forgive yourself, if YOU are the one who has “trespassed” against self.

Keep in mind that ALL ARE ONE, and “What you do to the least of mine, so too have you done unto me.” Bottom line: learn to truly forgive YOURSELF and any others whom you perceived have hurt you, and then you will inevitably be helping all parties to heal and move on. In doing so, you will be opening doors of opportunity to further be of service to humanity, your planet, and all of the seen and unseen participants in the learning environment in which you now find yourself.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in Service to Creator Source—The One Light from which ALL LIFE extends forth and makes up The Creation and all of its Infinite opportunities to explore.

I freely serve the greater Will of Creator, recognizing my own will is thus served in harmony, balance, and great joy. May you each find your purpose, and thus find similar fulfillment.

In Light and Love—blessings and peace to you all! Salu.

Forgiveness Is The Key To Transformation

1/2/00 GERMAIN

Good evening, my scribe. It is I, Violinio St. Germain, come in Service to THE One Light—Creator Source. I come as a representative of the Violet Ray, the Ray of Transmutation and Transformation. Be at peace and be still, for all is well within the perfection of the evolutionary cycles of the Infinite Creation.

Your current planetary cycle is coming to a completion. With every completion of a cycle there is always change, as the old gives way to the new, and there is the subsequent rebirth into yet another cycle experience. Your world is nearing the end of a current MAJOR cycle in terms of celestial movement, as well as concerning planetary and personal growth.

For many this will not be recognized as having significance because the masses are still, for the most part, in a slumber-like condition of hypnotic distraction. For those who have awakened to the greater perceptual understanding, these times are being recognized as a tremendous opportunity to both prepare for and take the next step forward in the evolutionary growth of the soul.

This time would be most appropriately referred to as a time of “graduation” from one school grade-level to the next. Only those who have diligently prepared (studied) will be ready to take the next step forward. Those who are in need of still more experiential learning in the third-dimensional classroom will naturally find it necessary to continue elsewhere in a similar environment that you ones recognize as the physical environment.

The most prominent factor left to be dealt with, for the majority of you ones who will be reading this message, is the continuing upward frequency shifts that are well underway. This single one factor is the greatest external catalyst for facilitating forward spiritual growth that can be experienced in the physical.

The frequencies of Light (Love) that are now bathing your planet are but the fringes of what is coming. This time in which you are now experiencing is a “warm-up” period wherein you are afforded the opportunity to acclimatize prior to the larger shifts that are coming. As you ones continue to adapt, there will naturally come to your attention any and ALL emotional blockages that have not yet been resolved.

It is now recommended that all of you regularly spend quiet time in meditation, deep personal thought, or whatever terminology you feel comfortable with in describing the introspective process of self examination. Examine with humility all of your thoughts, beliefs, and ideas—especially those that trigger within you emotional pain of any sort—such as: apathy, grief, guilt, sorrow, shame, frustration, anger and so forth. Any such emotional condition that you can truly view as a CHRONIC condition should be looked at the closest. Forgive me for being blunt here, but YOU ARE, IN EVERY SUCH CASE, PUNISHING YOURSELF!

Whether it be a rough childhood, a broken marriage, a lost loved one or so forth, I recommend that you stop reliving the past pain and realize that it is now time to forgive yourself and others so that you can effect the healing that you deserve, and thereby remove the blockages that these emotional energy “ridges” tend to cause.

These blockages are restrictions that cut off the natural flow of energy to you and through you. These types of emotional blockages are far more responsible for the various forms of cancer that have become so prevalent in your world than are any and all of the dietary, genetic, or chemical considerations combined.

The physical manifestation of “dis-ease” always comes as a result of emotional blockage and the subsequent constriction of the nurturing Life Force energy that would otherwise flow to the affected part of the body. There is a great effort underway at this time, by we of the Lighted Realms dedicated to helping those who send out the call for assistance, to stress the importance of FORGIVENESS and the role it plays in both healing and spiritual growth in general.

Forgiveness is, for the majority of you, THE KEY to the self-imposed shackles that you have placed upon yourselves. Your future will be greatly affected by your understanding and application of this basic Truth.

For many of you, forgiveness is not as simple as just saying “I’m sorry” and then all is well. True forgiveness will come when one can look at the situation that is the source of chronic emotional distress or discomfort and recognize the value in the experience for self as well as for others. Perhaps the experience served as a focusing mechanism that helped you to define for yourself what is NOT a productive path to follow. Thus it may have helped you to eliminate one of your choices and therein allow you to be able to better focus on what is right for you.

Do you have a tendency to hold a grudge, anger, grief, etc.? If so who are you helping by doing so? Who is likely to become angry or upset from you holding such low-frequency emotionally-charged memories? Is such an act truly serving you and helping you to survive, or is it an energy-depleting action you take?

Learn to ask yourself these sorts of tough questions. BUT MORE IMPORTANTLY LEARN TO HONESTLY ANSWER THESE SAME QUESTIONS FOR YOURSELF!

Is something that another did to you in the past worth holding onto emotionally, so much that you miss a rare opportunity for making what would be considered, by many, a quantum leap forward in terms of growth and understanding? Regardless of your perceptions, current level of understanding, and justifications that seem so important, YOU are responsible for ALL of your emotional responses, reactions, reasonings, and their subsequent manifestations in your life. Only YOU can take steps towards understanding these sources of blockages—and thus, by so doing, modify, change, or even erase the emotional impact associated with them.

Talking about these sorts of things is a proven method of helping to relieve the emotional charge and bring about understanding. Perhaps equally important is being the one who listens while allowing another the opportunity to dissipate their emotional charges. This is always done more effective if the one listening can refrain from making judgmental suggestions, such as commonly start with the phrase: “If I were you I would ...”. This sort of evaluation should be left up to the one who is trying to find their own answers. A good listener will ask simple questions that will help the other to focus rationally upon various aspects of the emotionally-charged situation.

These might be questions like: When did this happen? How old were you then? (A 60-year-old person reliving the traumas of a 12-year-old can be quite revealing and sometimes cause startling realizations on the part of the one still looking for sympathy.) How many years has it been since this happened? Where there any other similar experiences in your life to the one you have just described? (Looking for patterns can be very effective to help ones to see for themselves a history of chronic self-punishment.)

Please do not go out and seek to counsel another. Allow the other to find you. The other must truly trust you in order to freely open-up to you. Be quick to recognize when this happens, for it will in most cases be quite unscheduled and unannounced.

If you have things that you would like to “get off your chest” (and thus unclog the heart energy center), then seek out one you feel comfortable with and politely ask them for some of their time.

Together you each can help one another to find the forgiveness within yourself and for yourself. In doing so you will be casting off the anchors that tend to keep your emotional frequency from rising to the level where it would naturally “float” in your present environment.

These upward frequency shifts bathing your planetary environment will naturally enable the greater activation of the higher energy centers in the one who is relatively free from blockages in the lower energy centers—and thus is well grounded in both worlds, the spiritual and the physical. This is to say that you will find greater and greater numbers of ones who are having increased numbers of premonitions, intuitions, and other “psychic” types of experiences. This is quite natural and to become commonplace within the environment that is emerging.

For now, the transformation process is of primary concern. Great numbers of the ones now incarnate on your planet are struggling with these preliminary changes in frequency. Many are simply struggling to control the inner surges of emotional energy so as to not “blow their stack” in a manner of speaking.

I tell you now it is far better, in the long run, to blow-off the steam than it is to continue to suppress these emotional surges. You may not feel comfortable doing so, but if you feel you have no other avenue of venting, it is better than the long-term effect of suppressing the energy. Often these sorts of emotional surges are the result of (or compounded by) previous events wherein suppression of the emotional energy was your chosen solution.

If such an outburst has been part of your recent past, then use that situation as a focusing mechanism wherein you may look at what was going on inside of you, so that you might be able to more fully understand the true mechanism behind what ignited the emotional surge. With careful and diligent searching, you will find insights into the nature of the self-torture you may be chronically subjecting yourself to.

Once you recognize and understand the cause of such outbursts, all you need to do is forgive yourself and anyone else who may seem to bear responsibility in creating the experience that led to the unnatural behavior on your part. (“Unnatural” in that it is quite unnatural, from the perspective of your Higher-Knowing Self, to linger in any emotional state other than pure Love.) Again, forgiveness is the key to transformation.

May you find within these words the inner recognition of the intent towards helping you ones to find the inner peace, understanding, and most importantly, Joy that you are innately looking to find and to maintain.

I am Violinio St. Germain, come in Service to The One Light and to all of you whom this message reaches out to. Blessings and peace to all of you who diligently seek; it is through your heart that you will find what you are seeking. Salu.

Do you know what a rainbow is? Yes, a beautiful bow of colors in the sky. Do you know what a warrior is? A warrior is a brave person. One who has courage instead of being afraid. Now let me ask you a question: Do you love animals or hate animals? Do you love trees or hate trees? Do you love people or hate people? Do you love the rainbow or hate the rainbow? Well, if you love animals and trees, people and rainbows, then maybe you are a “Warrior of the Rainbow”.

Prophecy “Warriors Of The Rainbow”

There was an old lady from the Cree tribe named “Eyes of Fire” who prophesied that one day, because of the White man’s or Yo-ne-gis’ greed, there would come a time when the fish would die in the streams, the birds would fall from the air, the waters would be blackened, and the trees would no longer be—mankind as we would know it, would all but cease to exist.

There would come a time when the keepers of the legend stories, culture rituals, and myths, and all the ancient tribal customs would be needed to restore us to health.
They would be mankind’s key to survival;
they were the “Warriors of the Rainbow”.

There would come a day of awakening when all the peoples of all the tribes would form a New World of Justice, Peace, Freedom, and recognition of the Great Spirit.

The “Warriors of the Rainbow” would spread these messages and teach all peoples of the Earth or “Elohi”. They would teach them how to live the “Way of the Great Spirit”.
They would tell them of how the world today has turned away from the Great Spirit and that is why our Earth is sick.

The “Warriors of the Rainbow” would show the peoples that this Ancient Being (the Great Spirit) is full of Love and Understanding, and teach them how to make the Earth or Elohi beautiful again.

These Warriors would give the people principles or rules to follow to make their path right with the world.

These principles would be those of the Ancient Tribes.

The Warriors of the Rainbow would teach the people of the ancient practices of Unity, Love, and Understanding. They would teach of Harmony among people in all four corners of the Earth.

Like the Ancient Tribes, they would teach the people how to pray to the Great Spirit with love that flows like the beautiful mountain stream, and flows along the path to the ocean of life.

Once again, they would be able to feel joy in solitude and in councils.

They would be free of petty jealousies, and love all mankind as their brothers—regardless of color, race, or religion.
They would feel happiness enter their hearts, and become as one with the entire human race.

Their hearts would be pure and radiate warmth, understanding, and respect for all mankind, Nature, and the Great Spirit.

They would once again fill their minds, hearts, souls, and deeds with the purest of thoughts.

They would seek the beauty of the Master of Life—the Great Spirit!

They would find strength and beauty in prayer and the solitudes of life.

Their children would once again be able to run free and enjoy the treasures of Nature and Mother Earth, free from the fears of toxins and destruction, wrought by the Yo-ne-gi and his practices of greed.

The rivers would again run clear, the forests be abundant and beautiful, the animals and birds would be replenished.
The powers of the plants and animals would again be respected, and conservation of all that is beautiful would become a way of life.

The poor, sick, and needy would be cared for by their brothers and sisters of the Earth.
These practices would again become a part of their daily lives.

The leaders of the people would be chosen in the old way—not by their political party, or who could speak the loudest, boast the most, or by name-calling or mud-slinging,
but by those whose actions spoke the loudest.

Those who demonstrated their love, wisdom, and courage, and those who showed that they could and did work for the good of all, would be chosen as the leaders or Chiefs.

They would be chosen by their quality and not the amount of money they had obtained. Like the thoughtful and devoted Ancient Chiefs, they would understand the people with love, and see that their young were educated with the love and wisdom of their surroundings.
They would show them that miracles can be accomplished to heal this world of its ills, and restore it to health and beauty.

The tasks of these “Warriors of the Rainbow” are many and great.

There will be terrifying mountains of ignorance to conquer and they shall find prejudice and hatred.

They must be dedicated, unwavering in their strength, and strong of heart. They will find willing hearts and minds that will follow them on this road of returning Mother Earth to beauty and plenty—once more.

The day will come, it is not far away.
The day that we shall see how we owe our very existence to the people of all tribes who have maintained their culture and heritage, those who have kept the rituals, stories, legends, and myths alive. It will be with this knowledge, the knowledge that they have preserved, that we shall once again return to harmony with Nature, Mother Earth, and mankind. It will be with this knowledge that we shall find our “Key to our Survival”.

This is the story of the “Warriors of the Rainbow” and this is my reason for protecting the culture, heritage, and knowledge of my ancestors.

I know that the day “Eyes of Fire” spoke of—will come!
I want my children and grandchildren to be prepared to accept this task, the task of being one of the “Warriors of the Rainbow”.

Lelanie Fuller Stone “The Cherokee Lady” relates the above story that her grandmother told her when she was a young girl.

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The Blockbuster of all Blockbusters!! With Stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions and documents the suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu "sanusi" or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now."

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli" to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of travelling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

"This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words". — David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

Update From Our Editor

Well, here we go again—for some of you. As we were well into preparing the material for this issue of The SPECTRUM, we began to receive inquiries from some of our non-U.S. subscribers about not yet receiving last month's SPECTRUM! One enthusiastic reader in Canada finally received her paper, intact in its envelope, on January 24—only about three weeks late! We have no idea what happened.

Possibly they were being held-up at the border, but we've received no ransom notes about such kidnappings, or other evidence of detainment. The usual inquiries only resulted in the usual chorus of "I don't know" from all the likely suspects. Everybody in the delivery bucket-brigade claims to have gotten the enveloped papers out their door in a timely manner at the beginning of the month.

It reminds me of one of comedian Bill Cosby's routines from thirty years ago now about kids and the word "Idunno". The typical scenario goes something like this: Billy was swinging a baseball bat in the den rather than, as Mom asked him, to go outside. Awhile later, Mom comes into the den and asks Billy why the aquarium is cracked, leaking water all over the floor, fish gasping, carpet squishing underfoot. Billy, now absorbed in a TV show, looks up blankly and says "Idunno" as the dripping bat sits next to Billy on the floor.

At least you readers maintain a sense of humor and encouragement despite the unexpected bumps in the road. We float upon a steady stream of nice notes, such as M.P. sent from BC Canada: "Thank you all for your love and dedication to The Truth" and "The January issue is GREAT! May the Creator bless all of you greatly" as wrote M.A. in Seattle WA, and "...with GREAT-full thanks for all your hard work" from M.G. in Pennsylvania.

And then there arrived a more "News Desk" kind of note a few days ago from M.S. warning how "The article in SPECTRUM is right on target." This refers to The Mechanism Behind An Upcoming Major Global Economic Crisis in our January issue. M.S. closely monitors "insider" numbers associated with the stock market and other money matters, and said those numbers show our money system is on very, very thin ice: "The last time this happened was during the Gulf War. It is called an inverted yield curve. Wall Street and knowledgeable folks are very aware that this is the key sign of an impending economic recession. If this persists for a period of one quarter or more, the market may read this as the sign of full-blown depression." Now, whether or not the Federal Reserve pranksters will prop-up the "booming economy" façade for a bit longer, say to coincide with some political agenda, who knows, but things really don't look good.

And speaking of financial matters, while your encouraging notes sure help us to maintain our commitment of getting out The Truth to you, we've tried using them to pay, say, the telephone bill, but the phone company just doesn't seem to appreciate their value—or our sense of humor.

To put things in perspective for you, subscription revenues cover about 10% of monthly operating costs, and the majority of donations cover another 10% in a good month of your generosity. This is not to imply that we are not enormously grateful for your help, especially in response to my recent request at Christmastime. However, in order to keep this paper going—while the word continues to spread and new subscriptions come in—there is JUST ONE generous source that has been kindly making up the difference between what we have and what we need to pay the monthly bills. And such a large imposition cannot be expected to go on!

After all, our website is free and carries all but the most recent issue of The SPECTRUM, out of respect for those who do provide us with subscription money support. And with that subscription base growing at a healthy rate, we will eventually cover our costs. Even donations scale-up with the population of the subscription base. But what about right now and what about the extra debt piling-up monthly?

To address this hemorrhaging problem as directly as possible, we have decided to put into place the machinery to accept selective advertising, as another source of revenue.

Many of you newer readers probably are not aware that our philosophy and policy has always been to NOT accept any paid advertising, even though there are requests on a regular basis for us to do so. Any information in The SPECTRUM which may look like advertising is simply that—information—freely given, which we feel may be of interest to our readers, often in tandem with the subject matter of feature articles.

We hope to have the advertising machinery in place for the next issue of The SPECTRUM. At that time we should be able to list rates and conditions, etc., for such an offering. This will probably include Classified and Personal ads. So if you know anyone who might like to advertise in The SPECTRUM, please let us know; our readership is widely varied and all over the world.

With that said, we hope to continue to be able to bring you "the full spectrum" of Truth as no other source of information can. You should see the interviews lined-up with those who admire our philosophy and are anxious to be heard through this forum. Stay tuned!

An Interview With Christine Maggiore

down and embark her on a quest for knowledge about this “disease” that would, ultimately, throw into question almost everything being said about this subject through public sources.

Let me begin by quoting from her book What If Everything You Knew About AIDS Was Wrong? in order to set the background and tone of this discussion: “Can you imagine receiving a fatal diagnosis without being told the diagnosis is based on an unproven idea and an uncertain test? Being instructed to take powerful, experimental drugs without being told these drugs compromise health, destroy functions necessary to sustain life, and were approved for use without adequate testing? Being informed that you have, or should expect, deadly illnesses without being told that these same illnesses are not considered fatal when they occur in “normal” people?

“For anyone who tests HIV positive, getting all the facts is a matter of life and death. The important decisions a person makes should be based on thorough, verifiable data. All of us need, and have the right to receive, honest and complete information about HIV and AIDS.

“Almost every AIDS organization in the country offers free instruction for people who test HIV positive. Standard information includes how to prepare a will, how to collect disability, health insurance, and public benefits, what drugs and tests to take, and which diseases to anticipate—all based on the assumption that HIV positives are, or will be, ill and do not have long to live.

“Information on AIDS that is free from bias, that accurately describes tests and drugs and offers facts that support a will to live, participate in society, and cultivate a healthy future are rarely, if ever, mentioned. Some AIDS groups even lobby to limit public access to data that undermine their dire presentations of HIV and AIDS.”

One gets the strong impression of a hidden agenda at work behind the HIV support community. Does the “business” of AIDS bring in a lot of money to the so-called health practitioners who treat this “disease”? Why so much misinformation broadcast as scientific fact? Could such misinformation and disinformation be used to create a “fog” which obscures (and thus protects) the not-so-nice origin and hidden agenda behind the HIV virus? Are we being led to focus upon causes or upon effects?

Quoting once again from her book, we read that:

“Contrary to popular belief, AIDS is not new and is not a disease. AIDS is a new name given by the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) to a collection of 29 familiar illnesses and conditions including yeast infection, herpes, diarrhea, some pneumonias, certain cancers, salmonella, and tuberculosis. These illnesses are called AIDS only when they occur in a person who also has protective disease-fighting proteins or antibodies that are thought to be associated with HIV.

“A person is diagnosed with AIDS if they have one or more of the 29 official AIDS-defining conditions, and if they also test positive for antibodies associated with HIV. In other words, pneumonia in a person who tests HIV positive is AIDS, while the same pneumonia in a person testing HIV negative is pneumonia. The clinical manifestations and symptoms of the pneumonia may be identical, but one is called AIDS, while the other is just called pneumonia. None of the 29 AIDS illnesses are new, none appear exclusively in people who test positive for HIV antibodies, and all have documented causes and treatments that are unrelated to HIV. Prior to the CDC’s creation of the AIDS category, these 29 old diseases and conditions were not thought to have a single, common cause.”

Aside from being the author of a very controversial book on AIDS, Christine Maggiore is now head of an AIDS organization, which she started, called The American Foundation For AIDS Alternatives, 11684 Ventura Blvd., Studio City, California 91604; phone: (877) 92-ALIVE, and email at: AFAA@aliveandwell.org. For information about how to obtain a copy of her book, see the information box later in this interview. [All footnotes in charts refer to her book.]

[Editor’s note: For you more informed readers who already have a good picture of the “business world” of modern medicine—the vast amounts of money to be made and the fierce battles to keep “alternative” (and much cheaper) healing modalities away from the public’s attention—as well as you who have an appreciation for the larger, hidden agenda of the so-called “elite” controllers, a plan which is the exact opposite of a “health”-promoting enterprise, what you are about to read is STILL quite revealing in terms of illustrating the extent to which the modern, conventional “health” system enterprise has become astonishingly bold and degenerate. It is one thing, for instance, to launch fear-laden propaganda campaigns via the media to try to coerce you into getting dubious flu shots (see the News Desk column’s article on this subject); it is quite another matter to impose the kinds of forceful, yet lawful, shenanigans which Christine relates here. And if this kind of nonsense is happening in the area of AIDS medicine, what do you think about other areas?! It's not a very pleasant thought.]

With that said, let's now move directly into a discussion with Christine Maggiore about the very misunderstood subject of AIDS and HIV.

Martin: Obviously this is a hot and complicated subject. Let's clarify some misconceptions right off the bat by starting with the trigger that sets off a chain-reaction in people's lives, namely "the AIDS test". What is the so-called AIDS test? Is it accurate? What does it indicate? And, how did you find out all about it?

Maggiore: The AIDS test isn't a test for AIDS. It's not even a test for HIV, which is information that I found very surprising after having been diagnosed HIV positive, myself, in 1992. And, based on that test, was told that I had an infection with HIV, which was a "lethal" virus that would cause me, one day, to develop AIDS, specifically within a 5-7 year time frame.

The test, I later found out through my own experience, is not reliable for even testing for the presence of HIV antibodies. It uses proteins to identify the presence of HIV antibodies, but none of those proteins are able to specifically identify HIV proteins. That is, none of the proteins in the test kit belong exclusively to HIV, and are, in fact, shared by a number of antibodies that a person can produce in response to a variety of illnesses and conditions that often affect normal, healthy people.

Antibodies are something we want our body to produce, because they protect us from viral illnesses, and so we carry around with us, as protection, many antibodies that can cause an HIV test to falsely register positive in a person who's never been exposed to HIV. Now, antibody tests are used routinely in diagnostics, with a degree of reliability, but that reliability has been established through a process that was not used in developing the HIV antibody test and has never been established to this day.

And what that is, a positive antibody test should have been checked against the presence of the actual virus in the people who tested positive, at the very beginning of this, and any time a new test kit is developed. If, say, simply for the simplicity of mathematics, out of 100 people who test HIV-antibody positive, 99 have the actual virus, then you can call the test 99 percent accurate. But all the claims of accuracy for the HIV-antibody test are based on either reproducibility—that means how many times can we get the same answer, in the same person, running the same test—or with the presumption that it's always correct in a person who has symptoms and illnesses that are considered AIDS—which is a pretty big assumption to be making. Nobody has ever done what a good doctor, a good scientist should do, which is to verify, in people who test HIV-antibody positive, that in fact they have correlation to the presence of actual virus.

So, what is the test testing for? Nobody knows. That's one of the biggest problems with the whole HIV paradigm—it begins, as your question so accurately asks, with the whole notion that a positive reaction on an HIV-antibody test indicates something to us about the presence of a virus that is, allegedly, the cause of a collection of diseases called AIDS. And that's not anything that the test can tell us.

There are new tests now, called "viral load", but these tests don't tell us about the presence of virus either. They, actually, look for fragments of genetic material—RNA or DNA—and these are not able to identify virus. In fact, they're not approved by the FDA, which, I sometimes think, will approve anything when it comes to AIDS. They're not approved by the FDA, these tests for diagnostic use, and very clearly the manufacturer states that the test is not to be used as a screening test for HIV or to confirm the presence of HIV infection. So, again, we are using a test as a diagnostic tool, when it's contra-indicated for that, and using that to give people a life or death diagnosis.

That's why I wrote my book. Having found out this information, I felt it was valuable and important enough to share with people, whether they test positive or not, so people can make some accurate assessments about the AIDS information we're given.

I should mention here, my own experience is that, a year into my HIV-positive diagnosis, I was already a public speaker and an educator, and a board member for several prominent AIDS organizations. At the recommendation of a doctor, I retok my HIV-antibody test and my results came back in the following order: indeterminate, positive, negative, and positive.

And that was what set me on the road that took me outside mainstream AIDS thinking, and caused me to, really, stumble upon the scientific and medical data that I put forth in the book.

Martin: This is just an aside, really, not something I had planned on asking: Did your search, at any point, take you to the Tijuana clinics?

Maggiore: You know, I had lots of people, concerned friends, sending information my way about various "cures", but at no time did any doctor tell me that I was in imminent danger. It was always something that was going to occur to me, that was going to occur at some "future" date. I would become sick; I would become ill.

But, I was told repeatedly, by every doctor I saw, that I was in amazingly good health, so I didn't feel the pressure to be running around like so many people I knew, trying anything and everything that came my way, whether it was natural or allopathic. I really was able, thankfully, to take my time and examine everything, and I ended up never taking any kind of AIDS treatments, natural or otherwise.

Martin: Let's talk about the societal stigma associated with being HIV positive.

Maggiore: It sucks. (Laughter) It's terrible. The stigma is very powerful.

First, it affects how you view yourself. Suddenly, you're no longer able to rely on your own perceptions about your health, because you're told that understanding that is out of your realm, that you need to rely on these diagnostics, all of which function in the same manner with regard to AIDS or the HIV antibody test. They're all using surrogate markers, indirect means of expressing ideas about health that are, from my research and true or false?

- ❶ AIDS is a new disease.
- ❷ HIV is the virus that causes AIDS.
- ❸ The "AIDS test" is extremely accurate.
- ❹ The rate of HIV infection in America increases every year.
- ❺ AIDS is our nation's biggest health threat.
- ❻ AIDS is a growing risk for women, heterosexuals, and teenagers.
- ❼ The African continent is being devastated by AIDS.
- ❽ HIV causes AIDS years after infection.
- ❾ New AIDS drugs are responsible for recent declines in AIDS.
- ❿ Without medical intervention, pregnant women who test HIV positive will give their children AIDS.

All ten of these statements are false! Surprised?

from my personal experience, not indicative of much of anything.

So you learn, first of all, to deny your own health, basically. If you're in good health, you learn to question that, and doubt that, and live in fear that it's all falling apart in ways that will become clear at some future date—but in the present moment are unknown to you, which is frightening. You live in almost a constant state of panic.

Then you have this stigma that the doctor gives you. Even if you're healthy, when you test HIV positive—some people are ill, most people are not—but if you're healthy and test HIV positive, your doctor doesn't regard you as healthy anymore. You are a-symptomatic. That means you're just waiting for the symptoms to kick-in. Nobody else in the world is described as a-symptomatic, except people who test HIV positive. Everybody else who feels good is "healthy".

Your doctor will also speak to you, generally, and I'm talking about having seen about 12 or so AIDS doctors, personally, myself; they use the IF, WHEN, and YET words.

They say "When you get pneumonia". "Oh, you haven't had a yeast infection, yet?" "Well, if you're not feeling ill now, you certainly want to take precautions for when you do."

You get into this system that is not at all about health care, but about illness anticipation and illness prediction. And so, you're again stigmatized as a person who may feel good today, but, somehow, insidiously, unknown to you exactly where, perhaps, your body is completely falling apart and it's only a matter of time until you get all the terrible things that they're constantly looking for.

You live with a social stigma. You are considered a danger to yourself and other people. You have, according to the HIV-AIDS paradigm, a lethal virus. Somehow, testing positive for non-specific antibodies is viewed as harboring a lethal virus that can be spread, according to news reports, very easily from one person to another.

Of course, I've found this to be terribly exaggerated, and downright incorrect. The longest and largest study that was ever conducted was between what are called sero-diverse couples; that is, one person in the couple tests HIV positive, the other HIV negative.

This study followed a large group of couples for more than 10 years. These couples did not consistently practice what would be called safe sex. And after 10 years, not a single HIV-negative person, within these sero-diverse couples, became HIV positive—not one!

So, from this they decided that it took at least a thousand sexual contacts with a person who is HIV positive in order for another person to become HIV positive. They found nothing at all, except they had to come up with something after 10 years. So, you live with the social stigma.

Now, the chances—and this is not calculated by me but by actuaries—of testing HIV positive after a single sexual encounter with a person outside an AIDS-risk group is 1 in 7 million. That's less than the chance of dying of food poisoning at a fast-food restaurant, less than the chance of being injured in an elevator ride, and much less than the chance of being struck by lightning—yet we're told every day it takes once, only once.

And we're also told that it can happen to everyone, when, in fact, 88% of the American AIDS cases are very strictly confined to two groups, as categorized by the Centers for Disease Control: men who have sex with men, and IV drug users.

The social stigma that you get is that you're infected with something; it's causing your health to decline, even though perhaps, in the moment, you can't feel it or see it. Anything that you have or other people have is suddenly attributable to your presumed HIV infection. While you're waiting to fall apart and die of AIDS, you should stay the heck away from other people because you can infect them with this terrible thing.

Then you have the benign kind of things that go on, socially, with your friends coming up to you. This used to happen to me a lot.

I'd show up at the last minute for a dinner party in jeans and a T-shirt, and everyone else would be dressed up. No matter how I looked when I walked in the door, I always heard: (gasp) "You look so great!"

Martin: (Laughter)

Maggiore: "Oh, my goodness! I'm so glad to see you!" Which translates to: "She's not dead yet. She's got flesh on her bones. She's still alive." And then they'd whisper in my ear, as they're hugging me tightly: "How are you?"

"Fine" no longer suffices. (laughter)
I should be carrying my medical records with me, or something, or about to divulge that "the end is near". It's really annoying.

Martin: (Laughter) Excuse me.

Maggiore: (Laughter) And then, if you end up in a situation like I did a couple of years ago—I was pregnant and I also had a positive HIV status. Try to get around THAT stigma!

Martin: That's one of my questions. We're jumping ahead, but let's talk about HIV-positive pregnant women and the misconceptions.

Maggiore: Oh, my goodness. Pregnancy is one of 60 conditions noted in the scientific and medical literature that can cause a positive reaction on an HIV antibody test. So, right there, there's a problem with the whole notion of wide-spread HIV testing among expectant mothers!

Another problem with that—and we can go into this later, if you like—is that any time you apply a diagnostic tool, however reliable, to a population that does not have the problem—in this country, less than 1/10 of one percent of child-bearing-aged women ever have a diagnosis of AIDS, so it's not a widespread problem—you apply that diagnostic test to this population and the result is widespread FALSE positives.

It's just a mathematical law. Even when a test is really accurate, the same thing happens. It falls apart when it's applied to a population who do not suffer from the conditions being tested for in large numbers.

So, that's a big problem. For example, women contact me who have tested positive. Most recently a woman who has had three relationships in her life. None of the men who she's had relationships with test HIV positive. None of the men have any of the symptoms of AIDS. None fall into any risk group category for AIDS—yet, and this would be her second pregnancy, she tests HIV positive. This is taken as "gospel" that she is HIV infected.

And she's told that she cannot have a baby in a hospital facility without taking AZT drugs.

AZT is a failed cancer chemotherapy drug that works by destroying DNA chains as they're forming, which leads to cell death.

She cannot have a baby without taking experimental protease-inhibitor drugs—without delivering by cesarean section. Without a 12-hour, or so, infusion of AZT during labor, which is, essentially, the same thing that a cancer chemotherapy patient gets—a big old infusion of chemotherapy—during labor!

And, without agreeing to

Formula for AIDS
Pneumonia	+	Positive HIV Test	=	AIDS
Pneumonia	+	Negative HIV Test	=	Pneumonia
Tuberculosis	+	Positive HIV Test	=	AIDS
Tuberculosis	+	Negative HIV Test	=	Tuberculosis
This formula creates the illusion of a perfect correlation between HIV and AIDS.

feed her baby formula during its infancy—no breast milk. So that's what this unreliable test leads to when it's applied to pregnant women. It's a terrible thing.

And I was very fortunate to circumvent that system by finding the only, the last remaining hope in my general area—and I had to drive some 35 miles to get to her—a certified nurse mid-wife who agreed that even a dying woman had the right to have a baby.

I figured, if I get in on that “clause” and it's good enough for me (laughter)—we'll straighten out the details later that I'm not dying. And I was able to deliver, naturally, my son without medical interference of any kind.

My son, now almost 2½ years old, has never had any serious health problems—minor colds, I think two times, a fever once or twice, and has never had so much as an ear infection. He's gloriously healthy.

That, I find, is a VERY common experience among HIV-positive mothers who made decisions similar to mine. What's unfortunate is when they are forced into a health-care system that, literally, mandates that they do things which, from my experience and my research, make absolutely no sense and are, really, a threat to life and well-being—such as taking these chemotherapy drugs and other experimental drugs during pregnancy and during labor.

And the new thing—the new trend, the new fad—is AZT therapy for 6 weeks for any baby born to an HIV-positive mother, whether that baby is HIV positive or HIV negative at birth. So, even healthy HIV-negative babies, if you want to give any credence to the HIV test, are being given routine chemotherapy in their formula bottles because their moms aren't allowed to breast feed for their first six weeks of life, which is another unspeakable tragedy.

There was recently a case in Eugene, Oregon, of a perfectly healthy woman, no risk factors. Her husband is HIV negative. They've been together for more than a decade. They have a daughter, I think 8 or 9 years old. These two were HIV negative.

She suddenly tests HIV positive. She decided she did not want to take the drug therapies, after trying them and becoming ill. She concluded her pregnancy without any kind of therapy, but ended-up in a hospital delivery room to have her baby.

The day the baby was born, within hours they sent in an infectious disease specialist. The infectious disease specialist went through the laundry list of what she needed to do, which was, of course: no formula—AZT therapy.

And she said “No, thank you” to both. She felt that she was well-informed and had come to a reasonable conclusion, based on her own study of the scientific and medical evidence. The infectious disease specialist left and came back a couple of hours later with a court order.

The state of Oregon had taken custody of her child. They mandated AZT therapy for six weeks, and barred her from breast feeding, while she was still in the delivery room. And, as a matter of fact, I just heard from her yesterday—first time in a long time.

On December 29th, which is a year and some months after her son was born—a perfectly healthy, HIV-negative son, by the way—on December 29th of last year, the State of Oregon, finally, gave her back custody of her son.

Martin: I was going to say, it sounds like a case for the American Civil Liberties Union.

Maggiore: You know what? They're not interested.

Martin: No kidding?

Maggiore: No, I tried, and so have a couple of other people, approaching them on this. The unfortunate thing is, so many intelligent, well-informed people, who question a lot of information about health, about political and social issues, turn-off their brains, take off their thinking caps when it comes to AIDS. For some reason, even alternative health practitioners who question allopathic treatments for cancer, for heart disease, for infectious illnesses of any kind, do not question AIDS; do not question the government's information; do not question the Health Department's information; do not question media reports.

This is probably one of the most difficult aspects of this—that for open-minded people, or people who like to consider themselves open-minded, AIDS is a way to express your compassion. If you support AIDS, you support compassion. If you support AIDS, you support the people who are diagnosed with AIDS, that is, some people who tend to be marginalized from our society at large, such as gay men and IV-drug users.

So, to question AIDS suddenly becomes: you're against certain groups of people, or you're a conspiracy theorist. It doesn't occur to otherwise really brilliant (laughter) brilliant people—I've talked to some of the greatest minds of our time—and I am very disappointed, many, many times, that there is no room in their hearts and in their minds to question government, media, AIDS organizations, AIDS information.

As it stands now, it is required in the state of New York, which has—AIDS cases are primarily divided up into about 4 states: New York, Florida, California, and Texas, I think. It is now required in the state of New York that a woman who is having a baby report to the hospital with evidence of her HIV status.

And a lot of people who contributed their personal accounts to my book, mostly women, were HIV tested during the course of prenatal screenings, or during birth procedures at the hospital, without their permission and without their knowledge. You can't even rest assured that, by living in a state where this isn't required, or by declining what's explained as a “voluntary test”, if you voluntarily decline, there is no guarantee that your wishes will be adhered to. Many of the women who gave their stories for the book talked about being told it was a test for anemia, being told it was a routine diagnostic, just run for whatever reason after a woman has a baby, no worries—and then later, called and told “This is so-and-so, you tested positive, or, you have AIDS”.

That's another thing about the whole HIV-AIDS issue—that it is considered outside the realms of our civil liberties, of our privacy. It is not a personal issue. It's considered a public health threat, and so that suddenly changes all matters of how the tests are administered and how people are allowed to conduct themselves.

What is AIDS? I think it becomes more clear when you understand that AIDS isn't a disease. AIDS is a collection of previously known, and even common, illnesses that have been categorized as AIDS. But when these same illnesses and conditions occur in someone who has not tested HIV positive, they are called by their old name.

AIDS is 29 conditions such as: tuberculosis, yeast infections, certain kinds of cancers, certain pneumonias. None of these conditions or illnesses called AIDS are exclusive to people who test HIV positive. All of them have causes and treatments well known, that are completely unrelated to HIV,

AIDS in America

- AIDS is a category, not an illness
- There are 29 familiar conditions in the category including pneumonia, yeast infections, salmonella, and certain cancers.
- None of these conditions are new.
- None of these conditions appear among people who test HIV positive; all appear among people who test HIV negative.
- All AIDS conditions have documented causes and treatments that are unrelated to HIV.

and are only called AIDS when they happen to someone who also has a positive HIV-antibody test.

If you have a yeast infection, which is a pretty common thing, and you're HIV negative, you've got a yeast infection. Everybody knows it's caused by an imbalance of friendly bacteria. If you are HIV positive, and you have a yeast infection, that's AIDS. And while we acknowledge, on one plane, that it's caused by an imbalance of friendly bacteria, because you've tested HIV positive, you're thrown on lifelong prophylactic antibiotics—which, most of the time exacerbate the yeast infection—and that is considered a hallmark of AIDS.

So, AIDS isn't even a disease, it's a category, it's a collection of previously existing conditions that occur among people who test HIV negative and people who test HIV positive.

So why do these conditions occur? There's a lot of different reasons, almost as individual as the people. But to correlate all of those with a positive antibody test, on a test that's not specific, and to claim that they're caused by an infection with a virus, is, in my opinion, irresponsible.

Another important thing to understand about AIDS is, because it's not a disease, because it's a definition, the definition of what AIDS is changes from country to country. And this really makes for an interesting situation.

Our definition of AIDS is slightly different from that of Canada, our neighbors to the North. In 1993, here in the United States, we changed the definition of AIDS. We added to it 4 illnesses, and we added 1 non-illness which is having a T-cell count, T immune cells—that's a laboratory measurement—if one time that shows your T-cells are less than 200. If you have that, if you have no symptoms, no illness, but you have a T-cell count, one time from a lab, of 200 or less, and you're HIV positive, you have an AIDS diagnosis.

Since 1993, more than half of all the newly diagnosed AIDS cases in this country are among people with no symptoms or illnesses, who have what's considered a low T-cell count.

In Canada, they never adopted that definition, which means that there are more than 180,000 Americans with an AIDS diagnosis who could be cured of that diagnosis of AIDS if they were to drive across the border into Canada, where a low T-cell count is NOT considered the diagnostic criteria for an AIDS diagnosis.

In Africa, it's something else, again. We don't have a list of 29 illnesses, and no HIV test is required. An AIDS diagnosis in Africa can be based on: fever, persistent cough, weight loss that's involuntary and greater than 10 percent, and diarrhea. In Africa, that suffices for an AIDS diagnosis.

Of course, those clinical symptoms are also the clinical symptoms of most things that trouble the African continent: poverty, malnutrition, leprosy, tuberculosis, malaria, the effects of drinking unsanitary water. Yet, in Africa, those symptoms are enough for an AIDS diagnosis. In this country, that wouldn't be acceptable. This is the only "disease", supposedly, where you can cure yourself by moving, or become sick by relocating. (Laughter) Don't ever go to Africa if you've got a cough and a fever; you'll find yourself in big trouble!

Martin: You mention in your book, also, that the designation AIDS is actually a surveillance tool. What did you mean by that?

Maggiore: I didn't mean anything by that. What I got that from was a report from the National Institutes of Health, when they produced a Summary Report on AIDS in an attempt to answer critics of the HIV-AIDS hypothesis, and in that they mention that they call AIDS, that's just a direct quote, a "surveillance tool". That's what it is. It's a category that's used to survey, count, quantify certain illnesses, but only when they occur in people with a positive HIV-antibody test. Nobody's running around counting yeast infections, outside of the HIV-antibody tests.

Martin: Have you come across any—how do I want to term this—informed doctors or clinics or labs that you actually WOULD recommend for AIDS testing?

Maggiore: Well, there is no such thing as AIDS testing, based on the HIV-antibody test.

What there are tests for, are comprehensive tests that can give you an assessment on how your body is doing as a whole, functioning, interrelated system. And, if you're facing health challenges, these give you some information as a tool to getting better, and monitoring the progress of some doctors who use health-enhancing, immune-supporting therapies that rely, primarily, on non-toxic modalities that can restore a person to health or prevent somebody who's at risk of getting sick from ever becoming ill.

But an AIDS test, which is really an HIV-antibody test, or what is called a viral load test, does not give reliable, useful information, in my opinion, from my research and experience.

Martin: Let's talk about who is, statistically, more at risk for AIDS in this country. Men or women, and why?

Maggiore: How AIDS cases break down in this country is that 88% fall into two categories: men who have sex with men—and these are categories determined by the Centers for Disease Control, and they only take into consideration their own categories. If you fall outside of this category, you are usually put into heterosexual contact or, sometimes, "risk unknown". But, the Centers for Disease Control don't count any category of health risk, such as IV-drug use, on its own, is not considered a risk for your health—malnourishment, chronic, constant use of antibiotics or steroids, is not considered a risk to the immune system, only having sex with another man or using IV-drugs.

So, 88% fall into those two risk categories. 90% (or close to—actually it just shifted in the last couple of years to 85%) are among men.

So, it is disproportionately divided, even within those risk groups, among men—1% hemophiliacs, 1% transfusion recipients, I think it's 4% among people who claim heterosexual contact (I'll look at my own book here) with an IV-drug user, and 6% among people who just say "Hey, I slept with somebody".

By the way, all of these responses are voluntary and are unverified. When they go back and ask people, again, who say "Hey, I just slept with somebody. I don't know what happened", they find that between 60% and 90% of those people suddenly remember falling into the two top-risk categories: men who have sex with men or IV-drug users. So it isn't a widespread health risk, by any means.

Martin: Certainly not a widespread health risk for women.

Maggiore: No, no, no. And also, too, if you look at how many people die of AIDS and compare

Why HIV Cannot Cause AIDS²²

- HIV is a retrovirus. Retroviruses are not cytotoxic; they do not kill cells.
- HIV shares the same genetic structure as all other known retroviruses. Hundreds of retroviruses are normally found in healthy human beings.
- Even if HIV could kill T-cells, it only infects on average 1 in 1,000 T-cells which is not enough to deplete T-cells and cause AIDS.
- Most healthy people have had infections with cell-killing viruses like those that cause herpes and mononucleosis. These viruses infect millions of T-cells—up to half of all immune cells—without causing T-cell depletion and without causing AIDS.

that to other causes of death among Americans—well, first of all, one thing, before we even begin with that—AIDS deaths are counted among anyone with AIDS who dies, whether they die of what's called AIDS, in a car accident, if they're hit by a piano, if their medicines kill them, it's all thrown in. So that's another thing to remember.

If you are given a diagnosis of AIDS and die in a car accident, you don't end up in the car accident category, you're an AIDS death. It's actually, officially, called "death among persons with AIDS", a very carefully constructed category title there. And, despite that and despite all the emphasis on AIDS, we have, every year, three times as many deaths each year from heart disease than the total of all the people who have ever died of AIDS. You have more people dying from cancer in a year than have ever died of AIDS. You have more people, in the period known as the AIDS epidemic, who have died from the correct use of properly prescribed prescription drugs. You have more people who have died of suicide, and more people who have died in car accidents, than you have who died of AIDS. Suddenly, it's not America's biggest health threat.

HIV infection in the United States, according to the Centers for Disease Control, the number of people testing HIV positive has not increased once since 1985 when the test was made available for general use.

Martin: That's amazing.

Maggiore: Let me just look at my book so I can give this to you exactly:

- You have more than 13½ million cases of gonorrhea during this period of time;
- 6 million cases of genital herpes;
- 4.3 million cases of chlamydia;
- 1.5+ million cases of syphilis.

In the whole period of time known as the AIDS epidemic in this country, we have 655,000 AIDS cases, as of the last Centers for Disease Control tally, Year-End Report. And, if you recall, 182,000 of those AIDS diagnoses were given to people who are not even ill.

Martin: Have you found, since you've been "out there", that there are others in the AIDS field doing the kind of questioning of existing definitions that you are? Or, have you found that people are just locked-in to the "status-quo" of information?

Maggiore: I could have never saved my own life or written this book were there not other people out there doing this, to whom I am eternally indebted. Their work is what I base my work on. Yes, thankfully, there are. There are not enough of them, though.

Martin: Who are some of those people? Are there any particular people or organizations that come to mind?

Maggiore: The Group for the Scientific Reappraisal of the HIV-AIDS Hypothesis is one group.

Martin: And where are they?

Maggiore: They're based in La Jolla, California, but they have a toll-free national phone number that's listed in the book: 877-256-6406. They are a group of, primarily, MDs, Ph.D.s, and include a couple of Nobel Laureates, who not only question the HIV-AIDS hypothesis, but publish a monthly newsletter called Rethinking AIDS, that you can find at their website: rethinkingaids.com which is a wonderful source of information.

There is a team of doctors in Australia who've done some just fantastic work on eliminating the flaws of HIV-antibody tests, and their works are found at the great virusmyths.com website. In there you can find all sorts of articles and information—by subject category, by author, contributed by the many people around the world who work at bringing about public awareness of these very important questions. And there are a number of doctors and health practitioners and people who, given a chance to think about this, realize, rather quickly, that what they've been told doesn't add up.

It's just that not often are we given an opportunity to think about this from a new perspective. We usually are bombarded with warnings, with UN "estimates"—and, this year, in honor of World AIDS Day, the UN dropped the word "estimate" from their report. So, now when they give us estimates of AIDS cases or estimates of AIDS deaths—which are so completely out-of-line with actual diagnosed cases—I think they said some 16 million people died of AIDS last year, worldwide. Last year, the total for all cases diagnosed EVER in the ENTIRE WORLD during the period known as the AIDS epidemic is 2.2 million. Now there are 7 times as many deaths as we've ever had diagnoses?

And then they say there are 33 million people, worldwide, infected. I mean, they're just constantly throwing these things at us and, prior to World's AIDS Day this last year, 1999, they at least gave thinking people a chance to consider that their numbers were estimates. Now they just dropped that, entirely, and they're just given to us as: "The UN says..."

The UN says that AIDS is causing the devastation of Africa. Africa has 2½ times the population of the U.S. and we have about the same number of AIDS cases. So, if AIDS is devastating Africa, why the heck isn't it really devastating the U.S.? There's a report coming out of the UN, one I cite in my book, it's almost comical. If it weren't so sad, it would be funny. A Reuters report, based on the UN estimates—they left the word in, that year—that "a Kenyan dies of AIDS every 3 minutes". If you multiply that out, that makes more dead Kenyans in one year than there have ever been AIDS diagnoses in Kenya. And if you multiply that out to the whole AIDS epidemic, you end up with a total greater than all AIDS cases ever diagnosed in the world.

Maggiore: Yeah. I mean, I wish I could get away with that for other stuff, like my bank account: "I estimate I have 4 million dollars."

Martin: Ok, if it's not HIV, what causes AIDS?

Maggiore: Well, what causes these 29 diseases? Depending on what country you're living in, in Africa it's maybe 4 or 5. Conditions that lead to collapse of the immune system that have been known in the medical literature for about 70 years. In my book, I break them down to categories that I describe as: physical risk factors, chemical risk factors, biological risk factors, and psychological risk factors. And I explain how these factors apply to AIDS. What makes my job easier than trying to explain this—

Martin: And those were very good descriptions in the book, by the way. I was very impressed with that.

Maggiore: Oh, thank you. What makes my job a little easier with this is that there is not one case of AIDS described in the medical literature that does not include one or more of these immune-destroying health-risk factors, and there is not one case of AIDS documented in the medical literature in a person who's full risk is exposure to HIV.

When you consider that HIV is a retrovirus with no known cell-killing mechanism—retroviruses don't kill cells—yet AIDS is supposed to be the depletion, the death of immune cells?

HIV does not explain the loss of immunity or immune cells associated with AIDS. These other factors, that I go into detail about in the book, are able to, and have been able to in the past, before we adopted the AIDS categorization, explain and also relieve immune suppression, which is really a big issue.

When you're treating immune-suppressed people, or allegedly immune-suppressed people, with chemicals that CAUSE immune suppression, you're not going to arrive at a happy outcome.

And when you're stigmatizing starving people in third-world countries as having uncontrollable sexual activities—notice how, in every other country of the world, except the United States, Canada, and Europe, AIDS is suppose to be something equally divided between men and women, therefore insinuating that there's something about the sexual practices of non-European, non-White people. That's a terrible stigma to be living under. It does nothing to help prevent the TRUE health risks, which are often, in these third-world countries and developing nations: poverty, malnutrition, rampant disease such as tuberculosis, malaria, leprosy, measles—measles kills more than AIDS.

AIDS is not the leading cause of death in any African nation. Measles, malaria, tuberculosis—individually many, many times top diagnosed cases of AIDS and death.

So, if we talk about if it's not HIV, what is it? When you look at other things, it not only broadens the scope of what is called immune suppression, but it opens up the discussion to include things that actually help people to improve the quality of their lives and the quality of their health, and get better.

Martin: Let's get back to the effectiveness of the so-called "treatment modalities" such as chemotherapy. Can you comment further on existing treatment modalities and their toxic effects?

Maggiore: Current therapies involve a combination of chemotherapy and protease-

Current therapies involve a combination of chemotherapy and protease-inhibitor drugs. Its manufacturer acknowledges that it causes 5 of the official 29 AIDS-defining illnesses, including T-cell depletion, muscle wasting, diarrhea, dementia, and lymphoma. When it travels from a lab to a pharmacy, it comes with a package that has a label with a skull & crossbones on it and the word TOXIC very prominently displayed.

Testing shows that it's incorporated into our cells' DNA. It disrupts the mitochondria, which is the energy factory of cells. It's designed to terminate DNA chains. In addition to causing those 5 AIDS-defining illnesses, it also causes nausea, liver damage, headaches, dizziness, sexual dysfunction, hair loss, seizures, neuropathy—which is, if your arms or legs fall asleep, you get that tingling. Well, image that all the time, except it hurts really bad; that's neuropathy. That's caused by the damage to the nervous system. It is very destructive to the digestive system, which is why it causes the diarrhea and the nausea.

We know chemotherapy does that when it's given to cancer patients—yet chemotherapy, when it's given to AIDS patients, it's somehow supposed to be "surprising" when people no longer have the ability to absorb nutrients and digest their food.

This is a powerful, powerful toxin. And the idea is "Well, what else is there? We've got to do something. These people are infected with HIV", which brings us back to the test.

Remember, the test doesn't even tell you accurately that you've been infected. And people don't get the kind of information readily that we're sharing today, upon which to base a decision to take this toxic stuff.

And then it is also being given to children, many of whom are HIV negative, but born to an HIV-positive-testing mother—and provided in such a way that its consumption is mandated. That is, a single mom, because she's HIV positive, is relying on the public health system; if she wants the benefits, she's got to take the drugs. If she doesn't, they take the kids!

And even people outside, even families outside the public health system, are threatened with loss of custody if they don't put their children on the drug. So, it's not just a matter for consenting adults, it's a matter of people not being given enough information to make informed choices, and children being forced to take these drugs.

The new protease inhibitors have been added to the chemotherapy regime, which uses various chemotherapy drugs to one protease inhibitor, plus a handful of various assorted antibiotics. These new protease inhibitor drugs are showing to be extremely toxic to the liver, causing liver damage, elevating lipid levels, to the degree where—I just read an article that said men who should otherwise not be having heart attacks are having heart attacks, sometimes fatal. It's causing physical deformities because it causes problems with the absorption and distribution of fat in the body. People are getting things called "buffalo humps", which are large fat deposits on the back of their necks, or "crick bellies", which come from one of the brand names, cricksidan, which is a huge, distended belly, while at the same time losing muscular tone and fat from the face, the arms, the legs, and the posterior—that's also known as "crick's butt"—and this is described, in the medical literature, sometimes, as having "stick-like limbs". And women are also experiencing huge, huge chests; the fat in their breasts increases. And those are just the "cosmetic", supposedly, effects of the drugs!

These drugs also lead to a lot of digestive problems and diarrhea, for many people; and insomnia; and for many people, many people begin suffering from episodes of psychosis; also diabetes. Some scientist said that these drugs may unmask opportunistic infections. And I'm probably leaving a few things out.

This is what we know after just a couple of years. These drugs were first brought into use in the last months of 1995. If you look in my book, there are charts which show that AIDS cases were already on the decline, and leveled off, actually, in about 1991. It increased once, in 1993, when that new definition of AIDS came in, which included people who were ill, and it's been declining ever since.

AIDS deaths were already declining when these new drugs were released, and it is often claimed that not enough people are taking them. Many reports will attribute the decline in AIDS deaths to the drugs, and at the same time, in the same article, they will often lament that not enough people are taking them.

One very well known AIDS expert, Dr. James Corran, who I think was the former head of the Centers for Disease Control, reported last year, I believe it was, on CNN, that less than 10% of HIV-positive Americans who need the drugs are on them. Yet, at the same time, he attributes the drugs to the decreases in death. Also, new reports are showing—and this is also from the UN and other sources—it is now widely cited that the drugs failed to work in half the people who take them, and another 10%-20% must quit due to the unmanageable side-effects.

So, when you talk about “wonder” drugs, you’ve really gotta wonder (laughter) how drugs that were released after the downturn began, that not enough people are taking, that a large percentage of people can’t take, that another significant percent of the people have no benefit from taking—are affecting anything that is a current trend with downturns in AIDS!

And then, recent reports also show, I think it was December, in the New England Journal Of Medicine, an article that shows that these drugs actually shut-down functions of the immune system that are considered necessary for survival!

Martin: The real “wonder” is that people buy this stuff.

Maggiore: Well, when it’s billed to you that this is the only hope for your survival, and even “I’m not going to work with you unless you’re going to work with me.” You know, you get in a situation where people are taking these drugs because they’re scared, they’re scared!

Martin: Sure they’re scared.

Maggiore: They’re living in a constant state of panic and fear. They’ve been told that the presence of their virus can be measured with this new “viral load” test. When it’s up, they need to take the drugs. When it’s down, they should keep taking them anyway.

Martin: Can we talk more about the “viral load” test?

Maggiore: Well, I’d like to tell you one thing: when I took the viral load test in 1996, I had a viral load, the first time, of 330,000. At 10,000 it’s considered pretty urgent that you start taking medicine. So, I was way beyond that. I should have been very, very ill and I was not.

About a month later I took another one, and it, inexplicably, dropped to 980, which is considered low, and I’m well. And right after that I got pregnant and went through a period of—what would be acknowledged by I think just about everyone—a natural time of immune suppression, when a woman is pregnant, without having ANY complications or symptoms of immune suppression. My HIV-negative cohort passed a typical problem, such as yeast infections. I mean, two women HIV negative got toxoplasmosis while pregnant, which is an AIDS defining illness, due to their lowered immunity. I had none of that.

Every time I tell you about myself, I want to make it very clear, I am not an exception to the rule. I am only an exception to the rule in that I speak out. There are just so many people like me, it is ridiculous that the media has expressed no interest in bringing our stories into the discussion. My book endeavored to do that with some of the stories. As I call it in my book, it’s the tip of a very large, yet largely overlooked, iceberg that the media and the AIDS organizations either downplay or ignore.

Martin: One thing that may be a surprise to our readers, or it may not be: What is the number-one cause of immune deficiency diseases worldwide?

Maggiore: Malnutrition. It’s been that way for many, many years. And one of the primary spokespersons acknowledging that, up until 1985, was Dr. Anthony Fauci, who is a very well-known AIDS expert, head of NIAD—National Institutes Of Allergies, etc. You have 3 million people who die, worldwide each year, from just poverty and diarrhea. And, in some 20 years, we’ve had a little over 2 million AIDS cases throughout the world, and a good percentage of those are among people who are still alive and well.

Oh, I used one of my bad words—still.

Martin: How has your reception been among the less informed groups that you’ve spoken with?

Maggiore: You know, when I can speak to somebody who does not have an investment in AIDS—and I don’t mean just financial—because I think we all have an investment, to a certain degree, in what we've been told, because it's affected every single one of our lives. Our world-view has been shaped by this.

When I can talk to somebody who is not heavily invested in that world view, who perhaps hasn't had the devastating emotional experience of losing friends to what is called AIDS, who doesn't work in any kind of capacity related to HIV causing AIDS, who hasn't been 10-15 years prescribing AIDS drugs to people, believing with all their heart they're helping. When I can talk to somebody like that, it usually comes pretty easily.

The tough part is in reaching people who have the investment: emotional, financial, reputation, careers—then it gets tougher, but it's not impossible. And I have a pretty good rate of success, I think, because while I'm certainly not among the most well informed on this topic; I've had a direct personal experience that often can mean more than the scientific data. That's why I've included those personal stories from people in my book, because there's something about being able to touch the life of another person with your own that, often times, has greater value and meaning than all the other stuff.

Maggiore: No, no. And having been through the ringer in so many ways—here, there, up, down, positive, negative. I speak from a wide range of experiences. (Laughter) I've had HIV. I've had it go away. I've had a tremendously high viral load. I've had a non-existent one, practically.

Just before I got pregnant in 1996, I had pneumonia, and that is considered an AIDS-defining illness when it occurs in somebody who is HIV positive. Loosely, any pneumonia, but specifically pneumocystis pneumonia, will be considered AIDS-defining in somebody who tests HIV positive. I did not go in for an analysis of specifically what pneumonia I had, but it was very clear I had pneumonia.

I used natural therapies and got better, and did so in 3 weeks—while my brother, who is HIV negative, 5 years younger, and a surfer, if you can imagine the lung-capacity that takes, it's tremendous—got the same pneumonia and was laid-up for 3 months, lost so much weight he looked like an AIDS victim. So, I've kind-of had the gamut of experiences here that I can share with people. And I think that helps me to be a spokesperson to urge people to consider new views and new information, and think about, with some degree of critical thinking, what they've been told.

Martin: You're like a lightning rod.

Maggiore: You could also call me Job. (Laughter)

Martin: Has there been any recurring theme or concern among audiences you've addressed, both AIDS organizations and the general public?

Maggiore: The general concern expressed by most organizations is—when they just want to shut down the discussion, they call this “dangerous information”. I've heard that so many times, I can't even tell you.

Martin: Really?!

Maggiore: Yeah. And for a while, I was calling our video-tape series of our meetings with guest speakers Dangerous Information: Volumes I, II, & III. But that's a common thing I hear, when people just want to exclude it.

Another thing I hear is “Well, what you're saying is that you're advocating that people practice unsafe sex.” And, at NO point, in any of my talks, the articles I write, my book, do I EVER advocate ANYTHING about sex because, frankly, it's none of my business.

Martin: If we can digress here for a minute. Previously, we've published information about the AIDS virus and that, just from a physical-size standpoint, they jump through prophylactics like basketball hoops.

Maggiore: There was something in Time magazine or Newsweek, I can't remember which, many years ago, when herpes was a big scare. They said that the only course of prevention was abstinence, because viruses are smaller than the pores in a condom.

Martin: That's right.

Maggiore: There's no way to protect yourself. Suddenly, with this, you've got a different rule. I don't understand that.

Martin: There's such a myth about “safe sex”. There's no such thing as safe sex, other than abstinence.

Maggiore: The thing is, it's “safer”, in a way, to kind-of back-peddle on

Keep in Mind These Helpful Facts About Testing HIV Positive:

- Viral antibodies alone do not cause or predict illness; in fact, they are an indication of a normal, healthy immune response and provide protection from disease. There is no evidence to indicate that HIV antibodies differ in any way from helpful, protective antibodies.
- Since HIV antigens cross-react with antibodies produced in response to numerous diseases and microbes commonly found in normal, healthy people, a positive HIV test result does not confirm past exposure to HIV.
- Since HIV antibody tests have never been calibrated against virus isolation, their true accuracy has never been established, which means that there is no substantiation for the claim that testing HIV positive indicates a present infection of HIV.
- People in AIDS risk groups are at high risk for testing false positive on HIV antibody tests. Injection drug users, hemophiliacs, blood transfusion recipients, people from areas of the world where malaria, hepatitis, tuberculosis, leprosy, and parasitic infections are endemic, and certain gay men have been exposed to many foreign antigens and infectious agents documented to give false positive results on HIV tests.
- Actual HIV is never directly detected in people who test positive on the antibody test.
- Viral load tests cannot diagnose illness, measure HIV infection, or determine state of health. Viral load tests do not detect actual viruses and are not approved by the FDA for diagnostic use. As the manufacturers' own literature states, the test “is not intended to be used to confirm the presence of HIV...”.
- No type of viral load test has ever been verified by virus isolation.
- In the only published study that compares viral load results against the finding of HIV by co-culture, more than half of the people with detectable levels of viral load had zero virus.²³⁰
- It is possible to receive an AIDS diagnosis even though you are not ill or suffering from any symptoms of immune suppression.

that.

Martin: It isn't, really.

Maggiore: The thing is, when you look at the chart in the book, it shows the difference between the rate of venereal disease infections, truly sexually transmitted infections—

Martin: Right. Well, it does cut that down.

Maggiore: —and what is called a “sexually transmitted disease”. You see that there ARE reasons that one would want to consider practicing what's known as safer sex, certainly.

Maggiore: But, as one doctor who I respect very much, Dr. Peter Duesberg, who's a professor of molecular and cell biology at U.C. Berkeley, who is the man who introduced me to this information, says: “It doesn't help much to tell people to wear a gas mask to protect themselves from machine-gun fire.”

If you're wearing a condom to try to protect yourself from immune suppression, while at the same time you're not eating properly, you're using intravenous drugs, staying up all night, and having all sorts of infections, that's like wearing a gas mask to protect yourself from machine-gun fire. It's not going to work.

Martin: Right. So, again, common concerns among general audiences have been?

Maggiore: Usually it just falls into two categories: (1) we can't talk about it because it's dangerous information; if you tell this you'll undo all the years of AIDS education and safe-sex campaigns; that's usually what I get. And then some people throw out: (2) “Oh, you're a homophobe.”

Martin: In your book you also mention “Incorrect information about HIV-AIDS costs lives.” Can you explain what you mean by that?

Maggiore: Test HIV positive, and believe that you're infected with a virus, and all sorts of terrible things can happen to you. If you accept the idea that testing positive on an HIV-antibody test means that you are infected with a lethal virus, then it can do much damage—if you accept that as true, and begin living as if that were true, and essentially begin living as if you are dying.

In Western society we tend to downplay the damaging effects, and sometimes even the positive affects, of what we hold to be true. Yet all medicines—in responsible testing—are tested against placebos. Placebos are inert substances given to people, without them knowing they're inert substances, because we know that the power of expectation can cure people.

There's one study that I cited in the book in which patients who adhered to their placebo regime, while others taking the same placebo did not, the ones who adhered to their placebo medicine, what they believed would help them, actually lived longer than the ones who didn't regularly take their placebo. That's how powerful is what we believe, and that's acknowledged right in the medical literature. So, if that alone can cost a life, then taking powerful, powerful chemotherapy drugs, spending years on non-specific antibiotics, taking experimental protease inhibitor drugs, that can cost your life.

Another kind of damage may be in deciding not to have a child. I can give you many examples of women who, during prenatal screening, came up positive, and who then decided to abort the child. One case, in Canada, did not involve an abortion, but a woman who was told that she was HIV positive, and when she was in the hospital delivering her baby, she gave the baby up for adoption, and had surgery so she could never have children again.

It was later discovered that she was not HIV positive; the test was wrong. And so, she's sterile, without the child because of that. This affects lives on a very deep level!

When you have to do what a woman who called me on New Year's Day does, she had to check herself out of a hospital “against medical advice”, take her son, and flee the state because she wound up in the hospital, they found out she was HIV positive, and that she was nursing because she had to pump her breast milk. And they made motions to take her son away from her, and declare her “incompetent”, mentally incompetent.

They gave her one of those psychological evaluations where they asked her if she'd rather be a race-car driver or a florist. (Laughter) I mean, really dumb stuff like that, and determined she was incompetent. She was placing her son's life in danger because she'd never had an HIV test done. That affects somebody's life. She had to leave the state, on New Year's Day, or as soon as she could get out of the hospital, and she can't go back.

It costs lives in Africa, where people with malaria are not given malaria treatment if they also test HIV positive because there's not enough medicine to go around. And if you test HIV positive, well, you're going to die anyway, so you don't get the malaria treatment.

This is not really an intellectual discussion or semantics about categories and illness. Every single day somebody's life is affected by this in profound and irrevocable ways. And everyone should have access to ALL the facts about this.

That's why the organization that I run does not take any contributions from the pharmaceutical industry, any level of government, or any entity that limits our access to information about HIV, AIDS, and health.

Martin: That's also one of my next questions. Let's talk about your own foundation.

Maggiore: We're here to provide information. This is not about a “belief system” or a “philosophy”, or “you always hang-out with us, you'll always be healthy”. This is about providing people with information so they can make important decisions about their lives and health—and emphasize: make up their own minds.

We're here to help people avoid these sorts of situations that the woman found herself in on New Year's Day. We're here to help people out of those sorts of situations—to recommend, whenever and wherever we can, empathetic and enlightened health practitioners who regard them as individuals, rather than impending statistics.

And we're also raising money to conduct many of the scientific and medical studies that should have been conducted years ago. We talked about one at the beginning of this interview, which is verifying if a positive HIV-antibody test, how often, if ever, that correlates with the presence of the actual virus. We are also raising money to do that.

And we hope, this year, to verify or refute a few of the popular assumptions about these diagnostic tests, including T-cells and viral load. So we work on a lot of different fronts, and we're constantly trying to create awareness among health persons, critical thinkers, health activists, other advocates of compassion and social change, trying to introduce them into this discussion, and bring them the information that they probably haven't had a chance to look at or consider. We also do that, too.

And we provide, at a local level, free public meetings, community events, classes, support groups called “Not Another Support Group” for people who test HIV positive and want to ask questions that go outside the confines of mainstream AIDS thinking.

And we also have groups that we support who advocate, and make possible, informed choice. We support them with our resources, and that includes our materials and our monetary forces, throughout the country and Canada, and also we have a couple of groups in Africa, now. Each group works under its own name. We don't ask people to adopt our name.

Martin: Where in Africa?

Maggiore: We have one in South Africa, Cape Town; there are a couple of people in Kenya, Zambia, and Tanzania. These are people who come to us. We don't go out recruiting, generally speaking, because we don't have time.

Martin: This is an aside. Have you heard anything about the so-called “Indigo Children”, some of whom have been born HIV positive, only to later test negative for any disease?

Maggiore: Well, 35% of the time a child born testing HIV positive will go on to test HIV negative, without any medical intervention. And that's because the child discards the antibodies passed on from the Many experts now contend that AIDS is not a fatal, incurable condition caused by HIV, and that the symptoms associated with AIDS are treatable using nontoxic, immune-enhancing therapies that have restored the health of people diagnosed with AIDS and have allowed those at risk to remain well.

The American Foundation for AIDS Alternatives questions the HIV=AIDS=Death paradigm based on a growing body of scientific, medical, and epidemiological data and promotes awareness of life-affirming facts to HIV-positive diagnosed persons and concerned citizens worldwide. We are a 501(c)3 nonprofit corporation founded by HIV positives who have learned to live in wellness without AIDS drugs and without fear of AIDS.

In addition to sponsoring medical research into practical, health-enhancing approaches to resolving AIDS and funding scientific studies that objectively examine the HIV hypothesis, we work locally by providing a yearly calendar of free community events and classes, and work globally by sharing our resources with other groups and associations throughout the world that promote informed choices for people affected by HIV and AIDS.

The American Foundation for AIDS Alternatives is one of the only AIDS organizations anywhere that does not solicit or accept funding from the pharmaceutical industry, the US government, or any entity that may limit public access to factual information about HIV, AIDS, and health.

mother as they develop their own immune system. So, I could introduce you to a lot of Indigo Children, (laughter) many, many Indigo Children.

Martin: Are you familiar with the term?

Maggiore: No, I haven't heard that, actually.

Martin: There's a book called The Indigo Children, which is about the new "super kids" who are being born now around the world, just super bright, intuitive, extremely talented, and really, basically, a handful.

Maggiore: Hey! That describes my son! (Laughter)

Martin: Yes, I kind-of figured it did. The book is called The Indigo Children, by Jan Tober and Lee Carroll. It's really a very cool book, and that is my next interview, with that author. I will send you that interview when it's done.

Maggiore: I'd love to see that. My son, at 18 months, had a vocabulary that exceeded 200 properly used words. He's just amazing, and quite a handful, bless him.

Martin: If you had to distill it down and make some closing remarks to our readers, who, by the way, are extremely thoughtful people, what ideas would you like to leave them with? In what ways can they be helpful, in this general subject?

Maggiore: How they can be helpful is to become informed. First of all, the first step to becoming informed is to give this a chance. And I know, for a lot of people who are compassionate and well-informed, this may come as a great surprise, even a shock, perhaps even seem at first glance like this just couldn't possibly be true. How could so many people be wrong? That's another one of those questions.

Martin: I'm sure that question comes up.

Maggiore: Yeah, but you know, consensus was never meant—just because people agree on an idea doesn't make it true or good. I would ask people to consider that. And just because somebody has never heard of something, doesn't mean that something is wrong or incorrect.

I think that most good people, given a chance, most thinking people given a chance, will examine this information and feel moved, will understand that things are not as they have been told. And I think what they can do is become informed themselves, then become a source of information for others, and then do what I once heard a character in a film say:

"Touch the lives of people whose paths you cross"—that is, if they don't feel like getting involved on a larger scale.

My book is inexpensive and brief enough where anybody could get an extra copy and donate it to a public library, send it to a friend, a doctor, a church official, a politician, just spread the word. When enough people are aware of this, then things will change.

And until that time, unfortunately, the small—I admit, it's a small number of people who test HIV positive in this country and are affected by this—but they are people and they are people like me with feelings and children and lives. It's really hard to live with everybody's bad ideas and prejudices in the public health policies, and even laws, constructed around this bad idea.

I still—and I guess until my son is 18, perhaps—live with the fear of the knock on the door in the middle of the afternoon, somebody coming to tell me that I'm an irresponsible parent, and taking my son from me. That's not right. That's not the way it should be.

Martin: Is that where you'd like to end it?

Maggiore: Sure, yes.

Martin: Thank you for a great interview!

Finding Your Natural State Of Inner Energy Balance

1/28/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in service to The One Light—Creator Source. Be at peace.

Allow for the changes in your environment to unfold as they will. There are many, many variables at this time impacting and molding the physical condition of your planet. Not the least of these is the mental and emotional states of you who are directly experiencing in and upon your orb.

As a scientist and as Geophysical Commander with the Intergalactic Federation Fleet monitoring and guiding the transition of your planet at this critical time of cleansing and upward frequency shifting, I am often challenged to find compassion about what I witness being attempted by the ignorant and arrogant scientists directing ever more destructive experiments utilizing their secret technologies.

Pay close attention, for example, to the storms that are getting more and more unusual (such as the recent 8-pound, and larger, hail balls falling in parts of Europe) and KNOW that Mother Earth is not simply accepting of what is being done to her without regard for her desire for cleansing, balance, and harmony. Please send her your Light and Love and know that these are the strongest forces which govern the entirety of the Omniverse.

All life can be viewed in terms of quanta of energy. All energy can be traced back to its origin—back to Creator Source. All change comes about due to shifts in energy flow. The emotional energy "feelings" of joy are experienced when there is achieved, within one's own perceptual space of experience, a harmonious balance between seemingly opposed energy extremes. Hence, we of the Lighted Realms of Creation often offer the advice that the best route towards survival and growth is balance. SEEK FIRST BALANCE WITHIN, PRIOR TO MAKING ANY MAJOR DECISION.

We have also told you ones, time and time again, that if you can't do a thing with love in your heart, then it is better to not do it until you can. Love and appreciation are natural byproducts when TRUE balance is achieved between the heart and the head (the emotional and the mental).

It is a most worthy endeavor to seek and find balance on any subject that causes you difficulty. In doing so, you will be, in essence, on a journey of deliberate self-discovery. The primary purpose of the physical environment is that of a schoolroom. Each of you are both a student and a teacher—with something to learn and something to give to others. That "something" is always related to the greater understanding of who you (the immortal soul-you) are. With understanding will also be the need to balance the responsibility that comes along with this knowledge.

Many of you ones have experienced that you can direct your energies toward others and effect change. Most ones do this through compassion, faith, and prayer, wherein direct responsibility for the energies set into motion can be attributed to their deity of choice. Some of you have learned that visualization nicely focuses energy to effect desired change, and are willing to accept responsibility for your energy flows.

Most are not consciously aware of the nature of the energy they put forth. Again, all energy can trace its origin back to Creator Source. This energy has INFINITE potential when it is deliberately focused by the mind and heart of a truly balanced entity.

One of the most overlooked, but very observable, conditions in place in your current physical environment is the Law of Return. This has been called many things, such as the Law of Cause and Effect or the Law of Karma. In essence—that energy which you send forth will go out to the far reaches of the Creation, become amplified, and be reflected directly back to YOU. In other words, if you dwell upon a state of balance and peacefulness, and you send this energy out to the world and universes beyond, this energy will be reflected back to you, amplified, and the result will be greater perceptual ability to find, maintain, and achieve balance, and its natural byproduct, peace.

There are entities who thrive upon usurping another's energy. One of the most successful tactic used by these ones is that of DISTRACTION. Seemingly small distractions can keep one preoccupied, and thus focused in such a way as to miss the point of view that will allow the answer to come forth for the given challenge with which one is faced in the moment. It can be in the form of the annoying fly that seems to keep pestering you. Or the troublesome thought that keeps you from falling into restful sleep. Or any number of other distractions.

Unfortunately, we observe that most of you see not the subtle techniques of these ones who constantly try to manipulate any and all who may be susceptible to same. Often those who do recognize this subtle game of manipulation are not directly affected by it—but rather, those around them are constantly stirring up confusion, anger, frustration, and such.

The natural state for ALL of God's creations is one of balance and peace, for all are born of infinite Love. Those who choose or have chosen to deliberately focus energy in such a manner as to disrupt this natural balance will quickly become restless and agitated as they naturally would prefer balance and will, in some cases, thrash about seeking to find what they have seemingly lost—all the while leaving confusion and "hard feelings" in their wake.

Personal balance always comes from within. You may very well perceive that you are somehow the victim of another's actions. I say that, if you study the situation closely, you will ALWAYS find that your experience is a direct result of YOUR energy flows that are being reflected back to you—ones that you have originated anywhere from recently to long past.

For example, if you excessively worry about being attacked, and you are constantly allowing your imagination to mock-up scenarios of being attacked, you are in essence creating the necessary circumstances that will result in your "worst nightmare". Likewise, a positive focus on what you hold in your heart to be good, balanced, and peaceful, will result in more of the same.

Do you EXPECT balance in your life? I say to you ones that it is the NATURAL state of your true self!

Each of you have very real challenges to face. Each challenge is well within your ability to handle. Allow for the Creative Energies to flow to you, and through you, at all times, and you will find that there is truly nothing that you cannot handle or face.

Fear is the result of disconnecting self from the balancing and nurturing energy of Creator Source. The natural state is that of connectedness to All That Is. In the moment that a distraction becomes impacting enough for you to “forget” to stay connected, you have greatly diminished your ability to tap into the Creative Energy that would naturally allow for the balanced solution to present itself.

Ah! But such is the nature of the challenges of the 3rd-dimensional schoolroom environment called Earth. You are given free will to choose as you will, and yet so quickly we see ones distracted by the “shocking” news, the distorted “gossip”, the annoying fly buzzing around the ear. Be quick to recognize even the smallest of distractions for what they are. Even extremely good news can serve as a distraction if you are not careful! Again, seek to achieve and maintain BALANCE in all your experiences.

Do not worry about the past distractions that you have “fallen” for; they are gone and provided experiential data from which to draw upon. Look for those experiences around you wherein you begin to feel yourself shifting toward less-than-balanced thoughts. Are there ones who deliberately and constantly try to impress you with “shocking” news or gossip? If so, what is your FEELING response? Do you recognize the very subtle downward frequency shifts that occur within you? How about while you are watching the evening news? Are these shifts truly worth the “price” of allowing yourself to be distracted from more productive endeavors?

I am not saying: “Don’t watch the evening news.” I am, however, trying to point out to you the relative ease with which many of you allow yourselves to become distracted, and lose your focus and goals.

Learn to observe your own reactions to external stimulation. Learn to interpret the meaning of your reactionary feelings. Do you habitually go back for more “shock therapy”, say from a gossipy neighbor or every evening when the television news comes back on? We have stated, many times past, that your current mass media sources do not have your best interests in mind!

It is possible to watch your televisions without becoming influenced by what you are observing, but it is indeed very difficult to do so. Many ones are quite susceptible to the overt impact upon your conscious mind—let alone the MANY covert subliminal messages being programmed directly into your mind without being examined at the conscious level.

[Editors note: See the eye-opening News Desk articles elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM about the children’s Pokémon cartoon program if you want a good example of what Soltec speaks about here. This kind of subliminal mind-control is routinely taken to quite sophisticated levels (though rarely admitted) in both print and broadcast media advertising, with the justification for such sneaky avenues of impact being the expense of, say, even a short Super Bowl spot.]

Just as important are those with whom you are interacting on a regular basis who do not even begin to suspect that they are being used as pawns of manipulation. Often these ones may very well be within your own family circle.

Many of you who are drawn to the type of information like you are now reading, from we of the Higher Realms, have been “persecuted” to some extent by friends and family for having such “ridiculous” beliefs. Can you look upon these ridiculing ones with compassion, and see that their fears are generated and exploited by the programming from the dark ones who do not wish to have their games of control and manipulation come to an end?

In almost all cases, the ones who are awake enough to attack you—because you think and believe differently than the so-called “norm”—are the very ones who you have most come to assist. If you have participated in emotional debates with loved ones who have pronounced you a “duped fool” or a member of a “cult”, please know that these criticizing ones are responding to you as they have been programmed to do—usually from an early age.

Most often these very judgmental proclamations will come as a result of you destabilizing their mental conditioning. Their only recourse of action will seem to be to attack, in a reactionary emotional episode of anger, ridicule, taunting or such.

A person who is truly beyond the manipulation of the adversarial forces will never stoop to ridicule, taunting, anger, etc. A truly balanced person will always find a way to stay connected, and compassion will always be offered as a response. Driving wedges of anger between people only serves to divide, and thus separate, in most cases, the student and the teacher. Be quick to spot these subtle games and be as compassionate as you can with those who do not see or understand the nature of the games being played.

The planetary transformation WILL occur—regardless of who does or does not choose to accept the natural evolutionary energy shifts. Our mission—as Guides and Teachers, and in association with the Intergalactic Federation Fleet supervising your current planetary transformation—is to offer, to all who will hear, the information that will help them to understand what exactly is taking place at this time on your orb.

Never underestimate the enormous potential you each possess. Never count another “out” for there are still great “surprises” yet to unfold that will make your current experience quite grand as the spontaneity of Life and Living are continually molded and modified.

Remember that you each are contributors to the “perceptual reality play” in progress all around you. That play is forever changing, while constantly shifting upward in frequency in response to the high-frequency energies bathing your planet at this time with greater and greater intensity. With the higher energy shifts come a faster and faster turnaround time in the completion of the cycles of the “Law of Return”. It would be wise to keep this in mind as incentive for seeking balance in all that you do!

Learn, please, to appreciate all of the experiences you have as being SELF-generated. If you do not care for what you are now experiencing, then perhaps it is time to move away from the old “habits of thought” and re-write the programming. This is much easier said than done. However, anything truly worth accomplishing will naturally present itself as a challenge.

Compassion, Love, and Forgiveness are perhaps the greatest tools at your command which will transmute any negativity into truly helpful experiences for all involved. Compassion, Love, and Forgiveness will dissolve any “wedge of anger” between ones, and help to fortify the natural connection between you and all of God’s creations.

We are ALL energy manifestations of Creator’s Desire. Within this Desire we are all ONE!

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come forth in the Radiance of The One Light of Creator Source. I am Friend, Guide, and Teacher, in Service that those who desire these messages of inspirational guidance may have the “tools” in order to find the inner balance and peace they seek. May the Energy (Love) behind these written words help you to find this natural state of balance.

In Light and Love—Salu.

A person who is truly beyond the manipulation of the adversarial forces will never stoop to ridicule, taunting, anger, etc. A truly balanced person will always find a way to stay connected, and compassion will always be offered as a response.

Colloidal Silver: Exploring A Great Healing Legacy

Editor's note: If you've been paying attention to the news lately, emergency rooms in many locations are filled to overflowing with people suffering from "resistant strains of super-bugs" which conventional antibiotic treatments "won't even touch" according to the candid admissions of the panicky physicians themselves. Even people who normally "never get sick" are coming down with, especially, upper respiratory (and sometimes cardiac) problems of a quite severe or persistent nature. Some people are simply "run down" and don't know why they have no energy. Others say they just have "the flu" as a way to dismiss a vague array of aches and pains and fevers and other discomforting symptoms.

Our immune systems are trying to do their best in a very hostile environment compounded over the past year and a half by mysterious aerial chemical/pathogenic "contrail" or "chemtrail" sprayings going on. That hostile environment in which our immune systems are expected to still function has long included: diminished nutritional content of food (through demineralized soil, irradiation, genetic manipulations, and the generally deplorable methods of modern agribusiness), chemical additives, artificial sweeteners, nasty air and water pollutions, purposeful (secret) electronic bombardments denying many people a good night's sleep, and a generally more intense pace of living (due to those who control our economy) that sees more and more people under increasing amounts of job and home stress with little time to unwind and enjoy life.

Along with vitamins, trace minerals have long been known to play a critical role in maintaining good health. Food products—particularly fruits and vegetables—once supplied all of the trace minerals and other trace elements in easily assimilated forms. But not anymore. How can they when so many fruits and veggies are themselves "starving" due to the artificial and aggressive farming methods of modern agribusiness?

If you could dig out the research on any vegetable's food-value analysis for the years of, say, 1910-1940-1970-1999, you would be alarmed at how "empty" our foods have gradually become since the turn of the century—and especially since modern agribusiness has replaced "old-fashioned" farming techniques. Thus, there is an ever increasing need for supplements in order to achieve and maintain nutritional balance from which our bodies can further synthesize its wide range of specific needs.

A subset of these trace minerals or elements have long been known and used (before antibiotics were forced onto the scene by the large pharmaceutical companies) to combat illnesses and infections of many kinds. Elemental silver is the most well known and outstanding among this category and deserves a closer examination—especially as those emergency rooms fill up and the doctors wring their hands and shake their heads in bewildered panic.

After all, most modern physicians have been well trained (or better yet, mind controlled) by the pharmaceutical companies to follow a specific path which heavily utilizes their expensive products—and heaven help the doctors if they stray from that path of Big Medicine. No wonder so many people are taking health matters back into their own hands and are searching for alternatives to the conventional "wisdom" of "Dr. Drugs". Go back and read Dr. Richard Schulze's comments in our December 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM for excellent background on this subject of alternative healing modalities and the true miracles which can often be achieved through that route. Or as Dr. Schulze put it: "There's no cure for so many diseases today. Medicine has been a big failure." Oops!

We are sharing the following information with you as a "do it yourself" refuge should you have a need for such. Or even if you simply have a curiosity concerning this subject. After all, it is a most practical avenue of healing which seems to have been purposely hidden from public awareness many decades ago as part of a larger, darkly motivated agenda having little to do with promoting good health and much to do with making money while indirectly decreasing the population—as has been one of the New World Order gang's goals, stated all the way back in their secret Club of Rome reports from the early 1950s.

1/15/00 NOREY LATONA

Many of you regular readers will recall, maybe with a feeling of some alarm or anger, the short article Dr. Overholt ran in his News Desk column in the September 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM (page 9) regarding the Food & Drug Administration's "crackdown" on colloidal silver. After several years of begrudging tolerance, the FDA has taken steps to classify colloidal silver as a drug. This—in conjunction with other devious tactics—will, in all likelihood, lead to making colloidal silver very difficult to obtain and the price going up through the roof. This seems to be an ongoing goal of the FDA—ever since colloidal silver was rediscovered in recent years and has become steadily more popular.

For the complete report, go to the Federal Register Online via GPO Access (http://www.access.gpo.gov/su_docs/aces/aces140.html) and search the words "colloidal silver" in the 1999 records. Open the text document titled "fr17au99R, Over-the-Counter Drug Products Containing Colloidal Silver". Federal Register: August 17, 1999 (Volume 64, Number 158); Rules and Regulations, Page 44653-44658.

Keep in mind that the following information on colloidal silver is being offered as educational material only. Neither The SPECTRUM newspaper nor myself make any claims or accept any liability regarding one's personal choice to make or use colloidal products. The reader may want to consult with professional medical advice prior to taking any health-related product.

Before we get into the specific details of making your own colloidal silver, let me set the stage of introducing this subject by offering the following good article. Other articles are available on the Internet (mostly being used by ones selling colloidal silver) and can be found by searching "colloidal silver". This article provides a short but detailed and well-documented (with references included) history of usage of colloidal silver. I am sharing this important background information for those of you who may not be familiar with colloidal silver or its many remarkable attributes.

[QUOTING:]

Report On Colloidal Silver

by Dr. Dellyn Hansen of Orem, Utah

Silver is a powerful, natural prophylactic/antibiotic, used for thousands of years, with no side effects. It is a catalyst, disabling the particular enzyme that all one-celled bacteria, fungi, and viruses use for their oxygen metabolism; they suffocate.

Yet it is of no harm to human enzymes or any part of the human body chemistry. And it kills all disease-causing organisms, in six minutes or less, upon contact—even those pleomorphic, no matter how they mutate. Resistant strains fail to develop, and the body doesn't develop a tolerance.

Colloidal silver is both a remedy and a prevention of infections of any kind. Having sufficient colloidal silver in your body is to have a superior, second immune system.

It was in common use until 1938. Great grandma put a silver dollar in the milk to keep it fresh at room temperature. (Ref: 1,9)

ESTABLISHED USAGE

Oral Formula (4-oz. bottle): After taking one teaspoon daily for four days, take one half-teaspoon daily, as adults (and proportional, by body weight, for children), or apply directly to cuts, scrapes, and open sores, or put a few drops on a small Band-Aid and wear over warts, cuts, abrasions, or any open sore, or dab directly onto eczema or such itchy areas, or acne, mosquito bites, or any skin problem.

Water is purified by adding one half-teaspoon per gallon, shake well, wait six minutes, and shake again, wait six minutes, and drink. Mix it this way (it's tasteless) and drink two quarts, over a day's time, especially with meals, as a great digestive aid, because it eliminates fermentation.

It is the ideal food preservative, because it is also good for you. Use in canning at one-quarter teaspoon per quart.

Those already using colloidal silver report that they catch milder, and fewer if any, colds or flu. The emphasis is on the prevention of all infections.

There are never any side effects. It never does any harm to the liver, kidneys, any other organ, system, or any part of the body.

No one has ever overdosed, regardless of the amount, as it is not at all an allopathic poison.

The Intravenous Formula (1/2-oz. bottle/adult, proportional) is often preferred as it is more long-lasting and, for some people, works better. Syringes are available from veterinary suppliers, like IFA. (Ref: 1,7,9)

RECOGNIZED REMEDIES

The following is a partial list of the more than 650 diseases that colloidal silver has been used successfully against: acne, acne rosacea, AIDS (Ref: 2), allergies, appendicitis, arthritis, athlete's foot, tuberculosis, bladder inflammation, blood parasites (cause gray hair), blood poisoning, boils, bubonic plague, burns, cancer (Ref: 7,8), candida, chilblains, cholera, colitis, conjunctivitis, cystitis, diabetes (Ref: 1), dysentery, eczema, fibrositis, gastritis, gonorrhea, hay fever, herpes, impetigo, indigestion, keratitis, leprosy, leukemia, lupus, lymphangitis, lyme disease, malaria, meningitis, neurasthenia, parasitic infections (both viral and fungal), pneumonia, pleurisy, prostate, pruritus ani, psoriasis, purulent ophthalmia, rhinitis, rheumatism, ringworm, scarlet fever, septic conditions of the eyes, ears, mouth, and throat, seborrhea, septicemia, shingles, skin cancer, staph infections, strep infections, syphilis, thyroid, tonsillitis, toxemia, trachoma, trenchfoot, dermatitis, all forms of virus, warts, whooping cough, yeast infections, stomach ulcers, and also canine parvovirus and other veterinary uses. Also in all bacterial, fungal, and viral attacks on plants. Simply spray diluted silver on the leaves and add to soil water. (Ref: 1,2,3,4,7,8).

ADDITIONALLY

There has never been a drug interaction with any other medication. Colloidal silver has been found to be both a remedy and a prevention for all colds, all flu, all infections, and all fermentation due to any bacteria, fungus, or virus, especially staph and strep, which are found present in every disease condition.

Through simple high school biology studies we learn that all living things exist in the colloidal form. The body can more readily use medications already in the colloidal form, as opposed to crystalline. Colloidal silver is the most useable form of the most effective disease fighter there is. The body actually needs colloidal silver to fight disease-causing organisms, and to aid healing.

The adult RDA for silver is 400 milligrams. Taken orally each day, it's like having a second immune system. Older folks feel younger because their body energies are used for something other than fighting disease, and digestion is better.

Medical research has proven that silver promotes rapid healing, with less scar tissue, even in the case of severe burns. Silver aids the developing fetus in growth, health, and eases the delivery and recovery. Fantastic successes have been reported in many cases previously given up by establishment doctors. Colloidal silver is tasteless and won't sting, even baby's eyes, and won't upset the stomach.

It is produced today by a modernized original process, at a tiny fraction of the pre-1938 cost, and is more concentrated. The product contains no free radicals, as the silver acts only as a catalyst, and is stabilized. This is not a chemical compound containing silver, but pure metallic silver of submicroscopic clusters of just a few atoms, held in suspension, in pure water, by the tiny electric charge on each atom.

It is absolutely non-toxic (except to some one-celled plants and animals) and non-addicting. Colloidal silver is the remedy for all infections, even the non-apparent, low-grade general body infections most people have. Parasites are also killed, as they have an egg-stage in their reproductive cycle which is one-celled and therefore killed in six minutes or less).

It is a good idea to keep colloids from freezing, and in a cool, dark place. (Ref: 1,2,9)

Ref. 1: Use Of Colloids In Health And Disease. Colloidal silver is proven particularly effective in cases of intestinal troubles. Dr. Henry Crooks found that silver in the colloidal state is highly germicidal, quite harmless to humans, and absolutely non-toxic. Rather than in chemical compounds, the silver in the colloidal state may be applied in a much more concentrated form, with correspondingly better results. All fungus, virus, bacterium, streptococcus, staphylococcus, and other pathogenic organisms are killed in three or four minutes; in fact, there is no microbe known that is not killed by colloidal silver in six minutes or less, at a dilution of as weak as 5 parts per million, though there are no side effects whatsoever from high concentrations.

Ref. 2: Provo Herald, 13 Feb. 92, pg. D1: "Colloidal Silver As A Cure For AIDS".

Ref. 3: American Drug Index, the section on Inorganic Pharmaceutical Chemistry recognized silver for its germicidal action, calling a stabilized form "mild silver protein". There are several forms of mild silver protein.

Ref. 4: The Condensed Chemical Dictionary, 6th Edition: mild silver protein is listed for medical use (the "protein" is the trace used as a stabilizer).

Ref. 5: The FDA has stated that because colloidal silver is (by fifty years) a pre-1938 drug, it may continue to be marketed. A 13 Sept. 1991 letter received from consumer safety officer Harold Davis, U.S. Food & Drug Administration. Moreover, the FDA has no jurisdiction regarding a pure, mineral element.

Ref. 6: The Environmental Protection Agency's Poison Control Center reports no toxicity listing for colloidal silver, considering it harmless in any concentration.

Ref. 7: Dr. Robert Becker, author of The Body Electric, recognized a correlation between low silver levels and sickness. He said the silver deficiency was responsible for the improper functioning of the immune system. Dr. Becker's experiments conclude that silver works on the full spectrum of pathogens without any side effects or damage to any cells of the body. He also states that the silver was doing something more than killing disease-causing organisms. It was also causing major growth stimulation of injured tissues. Burn patients and even elderly patients noticed more rapid healing. And he discovered that all cancer cells change back to normal cells. All strains of pathogens resistant to other antibiotics are killed by silver. Yet at that time he couldn't find a silver supplement on the market.

Ref. 8: Dr. Bjorn Nordstrom, of the Karolinska Institute, Sweden, has used silver in his cancer cure method for many years. He says the whole thing is quite simple. This brought rapid remission in patients given up by other doctors.

Ref. 9: "Silver, Our Mightiest Germ Fighter", Science Digest, March 1978. As an antibiotic, silver kills over 650 disease-causing organisms; resistant strains fail to develop. Silver is absolutely non-toxic. Silver is the best all around germ-fighter we have. Doctors are reporting that, taken internally, it works against syphilis, cholera and malaria, diabetes, and severe burns. Richard L. Davies, executive director of the Silver Institute, which monitors silver technology in 37 countries, reports: "In four years we've described 87 important new medical uses for silver."

Ref. 10: "Colloidal Preparations Of Silver In Pharmacy", British Medical Journal, Feb. 1923. Pure silver is entirely non-irritant. In tests, at very high dilution rates, exceeding two-hundred to one, it has been shown repeatedly that the rapidly exerted disinfectant action is of considerable therapeutic value.

A very important note: There are some manufacturers who have come out with a colloidal silver product of greater concentration in an attempt to improve it's effectiveness. They are operating under a false premise; the reverse is true. It is less effective and, in some cases, can even lead to toxicity. Please don't be fooled by claims of the benefits of greater concentration.

While the above is just one of many, many articles available on the subject of colloidal silver, it is representative of the general attributes being reported.

Another article from the Internet (<http://www.eurekaweb.com/col-s.htm>) includes more background research about colloidal silver, including what the U.S. Navy and the FDA (yes, the same FDA now going after colloidal silver) had to say about the subject years ago. It will be interesting to see how the crooks trying to take colloidal silver away from the public are going to contend with the already available scientific information praising silver. Here are some excerpts from that article.

Suppressed Health Remedy Re-Discovered

Silver has been used in healing as far back in recorded time as 4000 BC. Persian records mention the practice of keeping water in silver vessels. The ancient Babylonian and Greek civilizations were aware of silver's ability to disinfect. Colloidal silver was used as a remedy as far back as ancient Egypt. It continued to be used in the Middle Ages to treat wounds.

The Romans reported the use of silver compounds for medical treatment. Before the days of refrigeration, silverware or a silver coin was kept in the drinking water and the milk to retard spoilage. Silverware became prized for the preparation, serving, and storage of foods because it was recognized that food processed in silver vessels stored longer and was less likely to cause illness.

According to the 1991 Grolier encyclopedia: "The element silver exhibits bactericidal properties not fully understood, although these are thought to be a result of its ability to absorb oxygen. Colloidal silver is used as an antiseptic, germicide, astringent, caustic, and for water sterilization and to arrest hemorrhaging by coagulating the blood. Astringents act by shrinking tissues and reducing the permeability (passage of gas or liquid) of membranes. They may be used internally to diminish mucous secretion in a sore throat, check diarrhea, or reduce stomach acid secretion. Externally, they are used for conditions such as cold sores, poison ivy, or hemorrhoids and as antiseptic deodorizers eliminating odor-causing microorganisms."

A sol is a colloidal system consisting of a solid dispersed in a liquid. If the dispersing medium is water, it may be called a hydrosol.

The colloidal state is a condition in which one substance is dispersed in another.

Colloids are distinguished from suspensions essentially by the small size of the dispersed particles: colloidal particulate size is approximately 0.5 to 0.001 microns. Colloidal particles do not settle and cannot be filtered by ordinary techniques (as is the case with suspensions). Because of their size, colloid particles diffuse slowly. Between suspensions and solutions lies the colloidal state; no clear distinction can be made between fine suspensions and systems of colloid particles that are close to the upper limit of the colloid range.

The Handbook Of The Hospital Corps of the United States Navy, 1953, published by the Bureau Of Medicine And Surgery under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, NavMed P-5004, United States Government Printing Office, page 417, stated:

"Silver compounds have a wide variety of uses as caustics, astringents, antiseptics, and germicides. Their activity resides in the silver ion, which is a protein precipitant. It is toxic to bacteria by precipitating the protein in the bacteria protoplasm. Colloidal silver preparations, in which the silver does not exist to any large extent as free ions, act by the milder and sustained antiseptic effect brought about by the formation of a protein silver compound which slowly liberates small amounts of ionic silver. Colloidal silver compounds contain very little ionizable silver. Use of any silver preparation over a long period may cause permanent blue discoloration of the skin and mucous membrane, known as Argyria. The colloidal silver preparations contain high concentrations of silver, largely in non-ionized form. Their antiseptic value depends on the activity of the free silver ions and not on their content. They do not precipitate protein but penetrate the tissues. Those mentioned here are silver proteins and silver halides.

"Colloidal silver preparations are used as antiseptics, particularly for application to the mucous membranes of the eye, nose, throat, urethra, bladder, and colon. They are commonly used for infections of the upper respiratory tract. They are also effective as prophylaxis against gonorrhea, in urethral irrigations about 1 hour after exposure. They are prepared in the form of solutions, ointments, swabs, suppositories, and tampons."

It is known that prior to 1938 colloidal silver was administered in just about every way that modern drugs are used today. These uses included intravenously, orally, and topically, i.e. throat gargle, eye drops, douche, open wounds, and burns—for which it is particularly effective due to its combined disinfectant and astringent properties. It protects the highly susceptible burn tissue from infection while promoting rapid healing.

of colloidal silver include: acne, athlete's foot, burns, cancer (Dr. Bjorn Nordstrom of the Karolinska Institute, Sweden, has used silver in his cancer cure method for many years. Dr. Robert O. Becker MD, in extensive research and experiments with silver, discovered that all cancer cells changed back to normal.), conjunctivitis, diphtheria, diabetes, ear "affections", eczema, gastritis, impetigo, intestinal ailments, leprosy, lymphagitis, menier's symptoms, neurasthenia, canine parvo virus, pleurisy, pruritus ani, ringworm, scarlet fever, septicemia, shingles, staph infections, syphilis, tonsillitis, trachoma, ulcers, whooping cough, arthritis, bladder inflammation, blood poisoning, cholera, cystitis, dermatitis, dysentery, fibrositis, gonorrhea, herpes, influenza, keratitis, lupus, malaria, meningitis, pneumonia, prostate problems, rheumatism, rhinitis, seborrhea, skin cancer, soft sores, strep infections, tuberculosis, toxemia, trench foot, viral warts, yeast infections (i.e. candida), and many others.

Though there is no known (to this author) data regarding A.I.D.S. (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome), Dr. Gary Smith, a medical researcher, suggests that silver may be linked to the proper functioning of the immune system. While analyzing hair samples, Dr. Robert Becker noticed a correlation between low silver levels and sickness. He believed that a silver deficiency was the reason for the improper functioning of the immune system. Dr. Becker's experiments concluded that silver works on a wide range of bacteria without any adverse side effects and without damage to the cells of the body.

Dr. Becker also states that, in the presence of the silver ion, cancer cells change back to normal cells, regardless of their location in the body.

The March 1978 issue of Science Digest had an article called "Silver, Our Mightiest Germ Fighter" in which they stated that more than half of the world's airlines use silver-treated water as the method of choice for protecting passengers from water-borne diseases." Additionally, the article quoted Dr. Harry Margraf, St. Louis Missouri, as saying "Thanks to eye opening research, silver is emerging as a wonder of modern medicine. An antibiotic kills perhaps half a dozen different disease organisms, but silver kills some 650. Resistant strains fail to develop...silver is the best all around germ fighter we have."

Indeed no known bacteria have developed an immunity to silver. The comeback of silver in medicine began in the 1970s. The late Dr. Carl Moyer, chairman of Washington University's department of surgery, received a grant to develop better treatment for burn victims. He and Dr. Margraf sought an antiseptic strong enough, yet safe enough, to use over large areas of the body without reacting violently with body tissues. As a result of their efforts, many important new medical uses for silver were discovered.

Colloidal silver has been used successfully against 650 diseases. Colloidal silver can be applied to cuts, scrapes, bug bites, and skin conditions such as acne and eczema, and is so safe that it is a common practice in American hospitals for doctors to put a few drops in the eyes of newborn babies to kill bacteria that can cause blindness.

Bacteria are developing immunities to modern specialized antibiotics at an alarming rate. The medical community has acknowledged this publicly for years. The Los Angeles Times reported, in an article titled "Arsenal Of Antibiotics Failing As Resistant Bacteria Develop" for October 23, 1994: "But in the last decade, a broad resistance to antibiotics has begun to emerge. And because bacteria can transfer genes among themselves, experts only expect the resistance to grow. The potential nightmare is an Andromeda Strain, a super-microbe immune to all antibiotics that could wreak havoc." UCLA Medical Center has reported that "colloidal silver...killed every virus that was tested in the lab."

Colloidal silver is considered by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to be a pre-1938 drug. As stated in a September 13, 1991 letter by Food and Drug Administration consumer safety officer Harold Davies, the FDA has no jurisdiction regarding a pure, mineral element.

Contemporary medical tests indicate no known adverse effects, including Argyria, from the use of properly prepared colloidal silver. Argyria is the only known side effect of prolonged ingestion of large particles of silver, such as was experienced by workers in the mining and photography industry. Argyria is a cosmetic condition resulting in the permanent blue discoloration of the mucous membranes. There are no known adverse health effects of Argyria.

There has never been a recorded case of drug interaction or reaction with any other medication. Colloidal silver successfully reduces the length and severity of infectious disorders. This is of immense importance in view of recent reports that infectious disease is the third largest killer on the planet.

Silver occurs naturally in the soil as a trace mineral and is one of the essential elements required by plants, animals, and man. In the past we obtained silver and other necessary minerals from the food we ate. This is no longer the case. With most of our crops grown on highly depleted, chemically fertilized soils, these minerals are no longer readily available to us except through the use of mineral supplements.

Colloidal silver consists of molecules of pure silver suspended electrically in clean drinking water. Today it is made by driving electricity into fine silver. This process tears the silver molecules apart and deposits them with a high electrical charge into the water. The highest grade colloidal silver is made from 0.999 silver in 99% distilled water.

Colloidal silver destroys bacteria and simple infections, viruses, yeast, fungi, and parasites (in their egg stage), while protecting the natural enzymes of the body.

It is accepted fact that the best (and usually the most expensive) water treatment system filters contain silver. Recent advancements in water treatment systems for the booming home spa and pool industry incorporate silver in the filter element in the intake, as well as a device which utilizes a floating solar photovoltaic cell which energizes silver elements to make colloidal silver continuously while exposed to the Sun's rays. While both of these methods dramatically reduce the cost of pool upkeep, they are unsuitable for our purposes, due to the use of ALLOY elements.

Today, with advances in technology, the manufacture of colloidal silver is far advanced and superior to the antiquated "grind" method that was most popular pre-1938. The ONLY form of silver that can be used safely as a dietary supplement is colloidal silver. The most advantageous and highest quality colloidal silver is a result of the electro-colloidal non-chemical procedure using the electric current technique. This method allows for the concentration of colloidal silver to be measured in parts per million (PPM). The best way to ascertain if a product is a true colloidal silver is by reviewing the ingredients. Additives or stabilizers may make the product unsuitable. Refrigeration may indicate that there is an ingredient (additive) that might spoil at room temperature. Longterm stability is an important aspect of colloidal silver.

Trying to impress the public, some companies go for a higher concentration (thousands of parts per million) of the silver, but then necessity requires that they use stabilizers or a protein to bond the silver. The major problem with the use of stabilizers and proteins is that they reduce the antimicrobial benefits by bonding to the silver, and so therefore require higher levels of silver to compensate for this reduced effectiveness. This is where great caution should be taken. Consuming hundreds of times the recommended amount of stabilized silver may result in Argyria, a cosmetic condition with no known ill-health effects.

There are no known documented cases of Argyria from the use of pure (no stabilizers or additives) electro-colloidal silver. Of special note: there is an inherent electrical charge in the hydro-carbon molecule of plastic containers. This draws the silver out of solution, binding it to the walls of the container, though this effect is slow. Plastic containers are suitable for short term storage of high potency colloidal silver. It is also sensitive to light and heat. Therefore storage of colloidal silver should be in colored glass, in a cool, dark place, but not necessarily in the refrigerator. Our preliminary tests indicate amber glass or other dark glass containers to be the most suitable.

Colloidal silver is not "germ specific" like the prescription antibiotics available today. It has a long shelf life (as long as it is stored properly), and possibly the best thing about colloidal silver is that it is available without a visit to your doctor!

That last point in the above article probably has a lot to do with the FDA's renewed attack on colloidal silver. Meanwhile, the following article is excerpted from the http://www.fordsmtm.com/why_use_colloidal_silver.htm website. It addresses several commonly asked questions, provides some useful tips for using colloidal silver, and at the end, relates a most dramatic example of silver's effectiveness in tackling nasty challenges.

Colloidal Silver: The Rediscovery Of A Super Antibiotic

Why use silver as opposed to other antibiotics?

Pain! In the burn ward of any hospital, the number-one priority is fighting infection. Because other disinfectants are too painful when applied to large areas, and because of silver's long-lasting properties, silver sulfadiazine is the most used disinfectant for treating burns in hospitals.

Alcohol, iodine, and hydrogen peroxide are other substances used to disinfect wounds. All of them have one distinct disadvantage as a disinfectant when compared to silver: they STING!

Imagine you have fallen on pavement while bicycling or running, and the skin on the palm of both hands as well as your knees is completely raw to the point that the wounds throb with your pulse. Now imagine how much worse it would feel to pour iodine or alcohol over your tender flesh! Colloidal silver will spare you the extra agony!

In addition, a fairly large percentage of people are allergic to iodine, although they may not have become aware of it yet. Alcohol is useful for sterilizing objects, but it is just plain poisonous to humans and germs alike! By comparison, silver is toxic to microbes but actually beneficial to humans.

Silver is completely nonirritating and without side-effects.

Why is colloidal silver so popular?

Interest in colloidal silver has increased recently because illness-causing organisms do not build up a resistance to colloidal silver the way they do to antibiotics. Antibiotics are becoming less effective as pathogenic organisms develop increasing resistance to them. Because of something called "phage" transfer of antibiotic resistance, reported more than 20 years ago, researchers expect this trend of pathogens' resistance to antibiotics to continue to grow.

Fortunately, the timely re-emergence of colloidal silver due to new technology and greatly reduced costs of production, may prove to be one of the best developments in modern medicine.

Why silver?

Dr. Robert Becker noticed a correlation between low silver levels and sickness. People who had low levels of silver were frequently sick, had innumerable colds, flu, fevers, and other maladies. He believes a silver deficiency is the reason for the improper functioning of the immune system.

[Editor's note: This statement is widely quoted by those promoting colloidal silver products, and it may well be exactly what Dr. Becker believes. However, a more comprehensive hypothesis would be that, with silver present in the body to help with the control of invading "bugs", there is less of a load upon the immune system's machinery, and thus the immune system can get around to dealing with healing/repair projects that otherwise have to sit on the "back burner" while it fights invading bugs. Therefore, silver may help the immune system, not by acting as some sort of "vitamins" to charge-up the immune system, but by taking-on some of the load that the immune system would otherwise have to deal with.]

Silver has benefited mankind's health for literally thousands of years. In ancient Greece and Rome, people used silver to keep liquids fresh. American settlers traveling across the West put a silver dollar in milk to delay its spoiling. A silver compound, silver sulfadiazine (Silvadene®), is used in all major burn centers in the United States.

Colloidal silver is non-toxic, non-addictive, and has no known side effects. The body develops no tolerance and one cannot overdose. Colloidal silver cannot cause harm to the liver, kidneys, or any other organ in the body.

It is safe for pregnant and nursing women and even aids the developing fetus in growth and health, as well as easing the mother's delivery and recovery. Colloidal silver is odorless, tasteless, non-stinging, harmless to the eyes, contains no free radicals, is harmless to human enzymes, and has no reaction with traditional medications.

Colloidal silver improves digestion, aids in the regeneration of damaged cells and tissues, and helps prevent colds, flu, and other diseases caused by pathogenic organisms.

What does colloidal silver NOT do?

Silver does not interact with other medications. It does not upset the stomach, but rather is a digestive aid. Ulcers have been shown to be caused in many cases by a bacteria, which would be destroyed by colloidal silver.

Medical journal reports of documented studies spanning more than 100 years indicate no known side effects from oral or intravenous administration of colloidal silver in animal or human testing. Colloidal silver has been used with good results in the most demanding of healthcare circumstances.

If silver is so effective as a germ fighter, why hasn't it been used before now?

Wrapping wounds in silver foil was a common treatment around the turn of the century. Doctors and scientists have long been aware of the germ-fighting properties of silver compounds. Most of these compounds are known as "silver salts" or silver combined with another chemical that gives it a positive charge. Silver salts can be irritating and bring various side effects, such as staining the skin. Pure colloidal silver attacks germs in the same fashion that silver salts do, but without the side effects.

Much of the attention that silver received as an antibiotic was diverted with the advent of a penicillin-type drug, coupled with the fact that the process of making colloidal silver used to be very expensive.

PRODUCT QUALITY

Many brands of colloidal silver are inferior. The highest grade is produced by the electro-colloidal/non-chemical method where the silver particles and water have been colloidized, i.e., dispersed within and bound to each other by an electric current. The super-fine silver particles are suspended indefinitely in demineralized water.

The ideal color of colloidal silver is a golden yellow. Darker colors indicate larger silver particles, which tend to collect at the bottom of the container and are not true colloids. If a product contains a stabilizer or lists trace elements other than silver, or if it needs to be shaken, it is inferior. If a product requires refrigeration, some other ingredient is present that could spoil. The container and dropper must be glass, as plastic cannot preserve the silver in liquid suspension for any length of time. Some brands are actually unsafe. High concentrations of silver do not kill disease germs more effectively than the safe range of 3 to 5 parts per million (ppm).

INGESTING COLLOIDAL SILVER

Taken orally, the silver solution is absorbed from the mouth into the bloodstream, then transported quickly to the body cells. Swishing the solution under the tongue briefly before swallowing ensures fast absorption. In three to four days the silver will have accumulated in the tissues sufficiently for benefits to begin. Since colloidal silver is eliminated by the kidneys, lymph system, and bowel after three weeks, a regular daily intake is recommended as a protection against dangerous pathogens.

In cases of minor burns, an accumulation of colloidal silver can hasten healing, reducing scar tissue and infection. The lives of millions of people susceptible to chronic low-grade infections can be enhanced by this powerful preventative health measure.

CHRONIC OR SERIOUS CONDITIONS

Take double or triple the recommended amount for 30 to 45 days, then drop to the maintenance dose. If your body is extremely ill or toxic, do not be in a hurry to clear up everything at once. If pathogens are killed off too quickly, the body's five eliminatory channels, i.e., the liver, kidneys, skin, lungs, and bowel, may be temporarily overloaded, causing flu-like conditions, headache, extreme fatigue, dizziness, nausea, or aching muscles. Ease-off on the colloidal silver to the maintenance amount and increase your distilled water intake. Regular bowel movements are a must in order to relieve the discomforts of detoxification. Resolve to reduce sugar and saturated fats from the diet, and exercise more. Given the opportunity, the body's natural ability to heal will amaze you.

TOLERANCE TO DISEASE ORGANISMS

It is impossible for single-celled germs to mutate into silver-resistant forms, as happens with conventional antibiotics. Therefore, no tolerance to colloidal silver ever develops. Also, colloidal silver cannot interact or interfere with other medicine being taken. Inside the body, silver forms no toxic compounds, nor reacts with anything other than a germ's oxygen-metabolizing enzyme. Colloidal silver is truly a safe, natural remedy for many of mankind's ills.

SATISFIED USERS

Satisfied users have taken one tablespoon daily, for four days, to establish a level, then one teaspoon daily for maintenance (proportional to body weight for children). Also, colloidal silver can be applied directly to cuts, scrapes, and open sores, or on a bandage for warts. It can be applied on eczema, itches, acne, or bug bites.

To purify water, add one tablespoon per gallon, shake well, and wait six minutes. Mixed this way, it's tasteless. It is not an allopathic poison.

feel younger because their body energies are used for other than fighting disease, and digestion is better. Medical research has shown that silver promotes rapid healing, with less scar tissue, even in the case of severe burns. Fantastic successes have been reported in many cases previously given up by established doctors. Colloidal silver is tasteless and won't sting even a baby's eyes, and won't upset your stomach. It is produced today by a modernized, original process, at a tiny fraction of the pre-1938 cost, and is more concentrated. The silver acts only as a catalyst and is stabilized. It is absolutely non-toxic, except to one-cell plants and animals, and is non-addicting. It also kills parasites because they have a one-cell egg stage in their reproductive cycle.

COLLOIDAL SILVER:
THE REDISCOVERY OF
A SUPER ANTIBIOTIC, KILLS BACTERIA, VIRUSES, AND FUNGI

Since the 1940s the human immune system has been gradually breaking down. A good immune system should be able to withstand common ailments of a cold, flu, or candidiasis. Even the more serious illnesses of cancer, chronic fatigue syndrome, and AIDS could be deterred if the human immune system were strong and vital.

The modern immune system is overtaxed daily with the constant bombardment of chemical pollutants in the air, water, and even our food. Before 1940, most of our food was grown using organic, natural fertilizer. The soil and natural fertilizer contained many trace chemicals necessary to the human body which supported its natural defense system.

Today, the soil itself is far less vital and the fertilizers are synthetic, chemical versions which have none of the trace elements found in organic fertilizer. One of those elements which has been disappearing from our food supply is silver.

A cancer researcher named Dr. Gary Smith stated, in an unpublished paper: "While analyzing hair samples and questioning the parties involved, I noticed the correlation between low silver levels and sickness. People who showed low silver levels in their hair analyses were frequently sick. They seemed to have innumerable colds, flu, fevers, and various other sickness. I believe that a silver deficiency may be the key to the improper function of the immune system."

journal in the world for new phenomena, NATURE, describing a device I had invented. It was something like a Geiger Counter, which actually was responsive as a detector of MENTAL energies, especially those associated with healing. It evolved from original work with Kirlian Photography. The data was overwhelmingly and astonishingly convincing, else I would not have even submitted the paper. Its publication was denied, and the reason for denying publication was—get this: "Clearly what you state is not possible, therefore you must have done something wrong." And the Earth is flat, don't you know?!

I learned an important lesson at that time about the "religion" of science—especially when the TRUE agenda (of keeping important discoveries suppressed) is controlled from behind the scenes—just as in the case of all the other "churches" both within and without the arena of so-called "higher" education.]

So, over time, our immune systems have been getting weaker. At the same time that our bodies' natural defense system has weakened, the destructive, illness-causing microbes have been getting stronger due to the overuse of prescribed antibiotics.

An antibiotic kills the harmful bacteria. However, some of the bacteria survive to breed stronger cells, which then become resistant to the antibiotic. There are now strains of super-microbes that are unkillable by any known prescribed antibiotic.

[Editor's note: The above is true and fine and scary enough—as far as it goes as an explanation. But regular readers of this newspaper will be quick to point out how much the assault situation has been helped along by "superbugs" purposely engineered to be unleashed at this time upon a mostly unsuspecting world populace.

After all, population control and a massive depopulation of the planet have long been agenda items of the so-called "elite" New World Order gang. The trick is to accomplish this goal without waking up too many of the sleeping public to a state of actually taking action against these crooks in high places. Remember the frog in the pot of nice, warm water who doesn't know he is being boiled into soup because the temperature is being turned-up ever so slowly!]

Obviously, there is a crisis brewing in the condition of the human body. We no longer have a strong enough internal immune system to fight off disease, and the external support we've relied upon for decades is now realized to be doing more harm than good. The drugs we've been treating ourselves with have actually created stronger strains of bacteria that are resistant to common antibiotic treatment.

There is a solution to both problems—known as liquid colloidal silver. Silver is one of the 92 natural, chemically-pure elements. It was a medical remedy used in both Britain and the US until the late 1930s. In articles published in the prestigious medical journals of the time, silver was found to be effective against many different infectious diseases. It was toxic to all species of bacteria, fungi, protozoa, parasites, and many viruses. However, it was not found to be toxic to the human body.

A letter from the University of California, Los Angeles Medical Center, written in 1988, outlined their findings on colloidal silver research. Dr. Larry Ford stated:

"With regards to the silver solutions that you sent me, I tested them without dilutions, using standard antimicrobial tests for disinfectants. The silver solutions were antibacterial, for concentrations of ten to the fifth; that's one hundred thousand organisms per milliliter of streptococcus, pyogenese, staphylococcus aureus, neosorheae gonorrhea, gardnerilla, vaginalis, salmonella, and other enteric pathinogens and fungicidals for Candida albicans and Candida globata." Because of its wide-spread effectiveness, silver could be looked upon as a secondary immune system.

SOME TIPS FOR USING
COLLOIDAL SILVER

1. Take a daily dose of colloidal silver in 8 oz. of water for prevention against all types of infections. One half to one teaspoon a day is a good long-term preventative dose.

2. When applying to a wart, cut, etc., moisten a bandage with colloidal silver and apply to the desired surface. This will make the effects of the silver longer lasting.

3. Take colloidal silver on camping trips to treat drinking water. Allow several minutes after adding the silver before drinking.

4. Put colloidal silver in emergency storage water to prevent the growth of algae and bacteria.

5. Use colloidal silver in home canning or freezing as a food preservative. This will vastly improve the shelf life and freshness of the food.

THE "HEALING CRISIS"
VERY IMPORTANT!

After using colloidal silver, many people experience what is called the "healing crisis". The healing crisis is from the result of your body detoxifying. You may experience rashes or similar things of this nature.

Your personal symptoms may seem like they are getting worse, but this is not the case. Your body is actually clearing up that problem and it will usually only last for a short time. Example: Eczema sufferers experience their rash getting worse, but then clearing up for good. Expect your body to cleanse from taking this product.

COLLOIDAL SILVER GENERATOR

Parts needed to make this unit: Four 9-volt battery connection terminals, four 9-volt batteries (not shown), 5 crimp-type connectors (note: wires can be soldered or simply twisted together and taped), two alligator clips, approximately 1-2 feet of wire (18 gauge or larger), 8-ounce (or larger) clear and clean glass container, approximately one foot of 99.9% silver wire (makes one set of 6-inch electrodes), and an optional piece of cardboard or plastic used for mechanical support and electrode spacing (approximately 2 inches apart). Note: see near end of article for ordering information on silver wire and commercially-produced colloidal-silver generator kits.

HERE'S A DRAMATIC EXAMPLE OF WHAT SILVER CAN DO

In a demonstration that took place in Nebraska in 1978, fifty gallons of raw sewage was pumped into a swimming pool that contained no disinfectant. A bacteria count was taken, measuring 7000 E. Coli cells per milliliter of water. Swallowing any amount of this water would have resulted in severe illness resembling food poisoning. The water was then flushed through silver plates that carried a small electrical charge. Within three hours, the water was completely free of E. Coli bacteria!

[END QUOTING]

Needless to say, colloidal silver seems to have a much more commendable track record than any of the expensive so-called “wonder drugs” we have been coerced into utilizing for the last half century. Doesn't this make you wonder why the FDA is trying to make colloidal silver (among other natural remedies) hard to get?! And that leads into the next matter—how to make your own colloidal silver.

The following article addresses the manufacture of colloidal silver and the various details which are essential to making a consistently good product. By the end of this article you will have enough information to be able to make your own colloidal silver, costing just a few pennies per ounce.

This following article is likewise from the Internet (the <http://www.elixa.com/silver/lindmn.htm> website). More scientific in nature than the previous material, this article is commendable for its depth of understanding and explanation—for you really inquiring minds!

A Closer Look At Colloidal Silver

by Peter A. Lindemann

[Editor's note: Lindemann is the developer of the CS-300C and CS-300D colloidal silver generators—commercially available. Please see near the end of this article for ordering information.]

During the last two years, a number of books and articles have appeared in public on the subject of colloidal silver. Some of these include: the Bio-Tech News Special Report “Hi-Yo Silver”; Colloidal Silver, The Natural Antibiotic Alternative by Zane Baranowski; Colloidal Silver by Tonita d'Raye; and Banishing Disease With Three Nine-Volt Batteries, Parts I & II, by Mark Metcalf. Literally hundreds of other newsletters and small publications have repeated the information in these articles without checking the content for accuracy.

The appearance of these materials two years ago was the first wave of public education concerning colloidal silver. Today, most health food stores carry and sell several brands of colloidal silver, scores of companies have colloidal silver products in their lines, and prices are starting to drop. While it is still possible to spend as much as $10/oz for colloidal silver in health food stores, prices can be as low as $5/oz. Some mail order catalogs sell it for as little as $2.50/oz, and I have seen small classified ads selling it for under $1/oz. The trend is definitely toward a lower price.

One of the phenomena driving the price down is the appearance of the devices that allow people to make their own colloidal silver. At this time (spring of 1997) the cottage industry of colloidal silver generators is starting to penetrate the larger market. This is starting to cause alarm in high places. One major commercial manufacturer of colloidal silver has recently issued a warning statement to its customers, alerting them to the dangers of the “inferior quality” of colloidal silver made by these devices. CNN and other major media have also tried to scare the public away from colloidal silver by showing a blue-skinned person who “suffers” from Argyria, a cosmetic condition caused by the build-up of silver compounds under the skin. Even JAMA (the Journal Of The American Medical Association) has run articles warning of Argyria and the toxicities associated with “colloidal silver proteins”.

On January 16, 1997, new labeling guidelines concerning colloidal silver went into effect, issued by the FDA. Other FDA rulings on “safety and effectiveness” are still pending. With all of these developments, it doesn't take a rocket scientist to see that the whole situation around colloidal silver is heating up!

The purpose of this article is to raise the level of public knowledge to a higher degree of accuracy. Knowledge is power, and the public needs to know the truth about colloidal silver.

The first thing people need to know is that there are at least FOUR different products on the market being called "colloidal silver".

The first type of product is the classic, original kind, usually called "electro-colloidal silver". This product is made either by the "electro-arc" method in deionized water, or by the "low-voltage electrolysis" method in distilled water. This product is usually found in concentrations between 3-5 ppm (parts per million), but sometimes as high as 100 ppm. Properly made, this product consists of microscopic particles of pure, elemental silver suspended in water, with no other elements present. Each particle of silver carries a positive electrical charge. Colloidal silver made this way appears either transparent-clear or transparent-light yellow.

Incidentally, for you more technical readers inclined to pursue the matter out of curiosity, the subject of how such suspended particles produce colors is a fascinating—if scientifically involved—story which includes the answer to why the sky is blue. How's that for a teaser?!

The second is called "mild silver protein". This product chemically binds microscopic particles of silver to a protein molecule. It is usually found in concentrations between 20-40 ppm. Its appearance may be transparent-clear or amber.

The third are "silver salts". These products can be made either chemically or electro-chemically and usually create a form of silver that DISSOLVES in the water. Concentrations range between 50-500 ppm. Its appearance is transparent-clear. The silver particles do carry a POSITIVE electrical charge, but almost invariably these products contain elements or compounds other than silver.

The fourth is sometimes referred to as "powdered silver". This product was developed by the Russians and is made when a pure silver wire is rapidly disintegrated by a high-voltage electrical discharge, similar to an old photographic flash bulb. The microscopic silver dust is collected, and either dissolved in water or added to salves and creams for topical use. Concentrations range from 100-500 ppm.

All of these products work, to one degree or another, as a broad-spectrum germicide, because they all contain microscopic particles of silver. That said, it is important to understand a number of things:

1) all of these products are not “colloidal suspensions” of silver,

2) these products DO NOT all behave the same in the body or in laboratory tests,

3) effectiveness and dosage varies from product to product,

4) quality varies from product to product and from batch to batch with the same product, and

5) they are NOT all uniformly safe and non-toxic.

There are no industry standards that manufacturers voluntarily follow to assure quality control, and there is no governmental regulation of the industry.

On the other hand, there are millions and millions of satisfied colloidal silver users who would like to have continued, free access to the product, and a growing number of manufacturers entering the market with a wide variety of new products.

The critical factors that make a “good” colloidal silver product are particle size, purity, concentration, and cost. The only way to authoritatively determine the first three is by laboratory analysis. The best way to determine particle size is by electron microscope photograph. The best way to determine purity is by mass spectroscopy or by x-ray diffraction analysis. The best way to determine concentration is by chemical analysis of total dissolved solids. The cost of the product should be calculated in reference to the total quantity of silver present, such as: $5.00/oz of 100 ppm is equal to 25¢/oz of 5 ppm (the first has 20 times more silver by volume and costs 20 times more by volume).

MAKING YOUR OWN

The simplest way to control these factors is to make the colloidal silver yourself. By doing this, you will not know exactly what is there unless you do laboratory testing, but you will have a pretty good idea. (Even with laboratory testing of commercial products, you don’t know much more where they are concerned, either, because the quality control from batch to batch is loose with most brands.) Also, by making it yourself, you will end up with genuine “colloidal” silver, which is the product referred to in most of the literature.

If you are already making your own colloidal silver, please pay special attention to this section because much of the information you now have may be incorrect.

The simplest way to make real colloidal silver at home is by the “low-voltage electrolysis” method. A few batteries may be connected to some silver electrodes and placed in a glass of water. This process will cause small particles of silver to be sintered off the electrodes and enter the water. This deceptively simple method is very easy to do WRONG, and most people who are making colloidal silver at home are making an inferior product.

IT’S IN THE WATER

When you do this yourself, it is very important to control the purity of the water, [emphasis added] because the purity of the water is one of the factors that controls how small the particles of silver will be. Only high quality DISTILLED water should be used. You cannot use purified or filtered water because it still has too many dissolved minerals in it. You cannot use deionized water because it doesn’t conduct electricity well enough to start the reaction. Distilled water is just perfect to start the reaction, slowly, and let it proceed properly.

Another variable that influences particle size is the water temperature. The warmer the water, the faster the reaction will take place, and the smaller the particles will be.

PLEASE PASS THE SALT

Regardless of what anyone has said to the contrary, silver chloride will ALWAYS form if any amount of salt is present. Never add anything to the water that will make the water conduct electricity better. Never add salt, sea salt, or Celtic sea salt to the distilled water because the salt puts chloride ions in the water that react with the silver to form silver chloride.

Another serious problem arises when making colloidal silver with salt in the water. The presence of salt increases the electrical conductivity of the water and this dramatically speeds up the reaction. As the reaction speeds up under these circumstances, it produces larger particles [not desirable—smaller is better]. The product so produced is invariably cloudy-white in appearance. Actual electron-microscope photographs of this material show silver particles in the range of 0.05 to 0.15 microns. These particles are TOO LARGE to form a colloidal suspension, and the proof is that the material will settle to the bottom of the container in a very short period of time. Therefore, this home-brewed “colloidal silver” product may be dangerous to consume internally for two reasons: the presence of silver chloride and the production of large particles.

THE BEST IS YET TO COME

The very best voltage for the reaction is about 30 volts, because the electrodes run the cleanest at this voltage. If you have a small power supply, set it for 30 volts. If you are running on batteries, it is best to start at 36 volts (three 12-volt batteries or four 9-volt batteries) and let the batteries drain down from there. Holding the silver electrodes at a uniform distance away from each other yields a better product. [Editor’s note: See the diagram accompanying this article for a good picture of how to put your own colloidal silver generator together. Also see the photo of a quickly assembled version of the diagram’s apparatus which was used to make a batch of about 12 oz. of product in less than an hour.]

When 30 volts is applied across silver electrodes held uniformly apart in distilled water, a totally different event happens. First, the reaction proceeds very slowly. Often, for the first 15 minutes, nothing seems to be happening. [Emphasis added—be patient!] Then, finally, a faint yellow mist will begin to form. Within a few minutes, the reaction will speed up, but the particles produced will be a golden-yellow as viewed with a flashlight. Using this method, 8 ounces of distilled water at room temperature can be made into a 3-5 ppm colloidal silver preparation in 20-25 minutes.

Made this way, colloidal silver can cost under 10¢/oz. Electron microscope photographs of this product show a silver particle size in the range 0.001 to 0.004 microns. During manufacturing, the particle cloud is a golden yellow. These particles will hang in the water at the level they are produced, and for the most part, will not fall to the bottom of the glass. This is what a “colloidal” preparation of silver looks like.

After the particles disperse, the water will look clear again, but may turn a light yellow if the concentration is high enough and after the particles have become evenly dispersed.

THE YELLOW COLOR

There has been a fair amount of controversy in the public literature concerning the appearance of the “yellow” color. A lot of well meaning people have told me that “yellow is bad”, “silver isn’t yellow”, “yellow is sulfur contamination”, “yellow is iron contamination”, and lots of other things. I finally found what I believe to be the answer to this question in a book titled Practical Colloid Chemistry, published in London in 1926. In the section on the “Colours of Colloidal Metals”, subsection on the “Polychromism Of Silver Solutions” on page 69, I found the following statements: “The continuous change in colour from yellow to blue corresponds to a change in the absorption maximum of the shorter to longer wavelengths with a decreasing degree of dispersion. This is a general phenomenon in colloid chemistry illustrating the relation between colour and degree of dispersion.”

[Editor’s note: The above statement is correct and complete in describing the main phenomena involved in causing the colors that are noted. However, as I (E.Y.) commented in an earlier note about this matter (and what makes the sky blue), the underlying subject is quite complicated to deal with from a theoretical point of derivation from first principles and depends upon a number of factors not easily measured.]

This section goes on to describe the colors that show up in a wide variety of colloidal metal solutions. Interestingly, they ALL have a yellow phase. For true “electro-colloidal” silver, the particle size range that can appear yellow is 0.01 to 0.001 microns (10 to 100 angstroms) because that is the size of silver particle that best absorbs the indigo light, leaving only its inverse color, yellow, to be observed. The final transparent-yellow appearance only shows up after the particles have become evenly dispersed.

THE BROWN GLASS BOTTLE

Once you have gone to the trouble of making colloidal silver particles as small as 0.001 microns, it is important to protect them. The particles stay away from each other in suspension because they each have a positive electrical charge (+) and these “like charges” repel each other. Anything that can strip this charge off the particles will degrade the quality of the colloidal silver by a process called re-coagulation, where the particles clump together again to form larger aggregates. Ultraviolet light from the Sun, and many plastics can cause this process to occur. Therefore, colloidal silver is best stored in dark glass containers. The two kinds of glass container that are suitable for this are the dark amber and the cobalt blue.

[Editor’s note: This is a little “far out” from the subject under discussion here, but—if you can find cobalt blue (dark blue) bottles, they would be more desirable than amber because of the higher-frequency vibration of “etheric charge” imprinted upon the water due to their color. This is not something you are going to find in current physics books—but then, neither are you going to find the actual “tuning fork” frequency mechanism of operation of the silver which causes it to be germicidal!]

the blue is supposed to make the silver “fall out” of suspension. Looks like it’s time for some experimentation!]

THE SAME DIFFERENCE

The biggest “secret” about the manufacture of high quality colloidal silver is that it is nearly impossible to standardize the product. Silver is apparently reactive to a number of natural forces that have yet to be identified. Even when the voltage, the water, and the water temperature are identical, different batches will proceed at different rates on different days. The speed of the reaction can vary by over 100% depending on the day. On “normal” days, the reaction is proceeding well after 15 minutes, with a visible cloud of particles. On “slow days” it may take 30 minutes before any visible production of yellow particles begins [emphasis added—again, be patient]. Because of this variation, it is always wise to observe the reaction with a flashlight shining through the liquid so you can see how quickly the reaction is happening. Once the yellow cloud starts forming, time the batch for 5 more minutes. This is the best way to standardize your home-brewed colloidal silver.

COLLOIDAL OR IONIC?

Another big controversy surrounds the question of whether this method produces “colloidal” silver or “ionic” silver. Most people have been told that colloidal silver is “good” and ionic silver is “bad”. Once again, the truth might be unpopular.

The word “colloidal” refers to a condition where, in this case, a solid particle is SUSPENDED in a liquid (silver in water). The solid particles are too large to be considered DISSOLVED, but are too small to be filtered out.

This colloidal condition is most easily detected by what is called the “Tyndall effect”, where a narrow beam of light is shined through the liquid to produce a cone-shaped dispersion of the light. The particles so illuminated also exhibit a random, zig-zag activity called “Brownian motion” when observed under a microscope. When something is completely dissolved, both the Brownian and Tyndall effects disappear.

The word “ionic” refers to a condition where a particle has an electric charge. In the case of “electro-colloidal” silver, this electric charge is ALWAYS positive. Silver will not form a negatively charged ion. So, the truth is that electro-colloidal silver is BOTH colloidal and ionic. It is considered colloidal because of the particle SIZE, and it is considered ionic because of the particle CHARGE.

In fact, most of the biological studies suggest it is colloidal silver’s ionic characteristics that make it such a good germicide. It is also interesting to note that the old chemistry books make no distinction between the colloidal and ionic states of the electro-colloidal metals.

PURITY OF SILVER

The quality of your finished product depends entirely on the purity of the water you start with, and the purity of the silver you start with. Most of the current literature suggests that only 99.9999% pure silver can be used. Most home-brew systems use 99.9% pure silver. So, what is the difference?

To find out, I contacted Academy Metals, a company in Albuquerque, New Mexico, that produces commercial silver. The total allowable impurities in 99.9% (.999 fine) silver is 1000 ppm or 1 part in 1000. These impurities and their maximums are: (1) copper, 800 ppm; (2) lead, 250 ppm; (3) iron, 200 ppm; and (4) bismuth, 10 ppm. This product is readily available in wire form and costs about $3.00 above the market (spot) price of silver.

When this product is used to make electro-colloidal silver at a concentration of 5 ppm, the total impurities from the silver drop to 4 ppb (parts per billion) copper, 1.25 ppb lead, 1 ppb iron, 0.05 ppb bismuth. With all allowable impurities at these low levels, there is a reasonable argument for not being concerned.

Still, sometimes small things make a big difference. 99.99% silver (.9999 fine) has total allowable impurities of 100 ppm of the same metals in the same ratios, and costs (in wire form) between $50-$90 above the spot price of silver. 99.999% silver (.99999 fine) has total allowable impurities of 10 ppm, and in wire form costs about $250 above the spot price. 99.9999% silver, in wire form, costs more than gold, and is very difficult to find commercially.

In one sample of 10 ppm colloidal silver which we sent out for total analysis (made with 99.9% silver electrodes), the primary impurities found were: (1) sodium, 470 ppb; (2) calcium, 260 ppb; (3) manganese, 70 ppb; (4) potassium, 50 ppb; and (5) magnesium, 24 ppb. Since none of these impurities could have come from the silver, it suggests that the purity of the water should be of greater concern to the person making their own colloidal silver, than spending extra money on purer silver.

CONCENTRATION

The concentration of silver in the water is usually measured in parts per million, or ppm. While this is the standard convention, ppm is a “ratio” and not an indicator of quantity.

When a laboratory tests colloidal silver for concentration, they report the findings in milligrams per liter (mg/L). Milligrams per liter is an actual measurement of weight per volume, and therefore is a real quantity measurement. In the metric system, one liter of water weighs 1000 grams, and one milligram is one thousandth (1/1000) of a gram, so 1 mg/L is the same as 1 ppm, as long as we are talking about water. Silver weighs a little more than water, but the equivalence is very close, and the terms are often used interchangeably. With this in mind, we can calculate that one teaspoon of 5 ppm colloidal silver has about 25 mcg (micrograms) of silver in it.

DOSAGE

In 1940, R. A. Kehoe reported that, under normal circumstances, the average daily intake of fruits and vegetables would provide between 50-100 mcg of silver as a trace element. Since that time, the commercial farm soils of this country have become extremely deficient in trace minerals. Although I do not have authoritative figures for silver, according to the Earth Summit Report, issued in 1992, the levels of soil-based minerals in North America have dropped over 85% in the last 100 years.

[Editors note: Rather alarming, isn't it?! A whole other article could be written regarding these last couple of sentences. And it would be extremely naive to come to the superficial conclusion that the soil depletion problem is merely a byproduct of modern, intensive agribusiness. How convenient for the power-and-control agenda of the so-called "elite" that we-the-people are slowly starving to death without realizing it. What does that do to our bodies and minds? Who makes money from our resulting illnesses? Consider, again, the analogy of the frogs in water where the temperature is being turned-up ever so slowly; those frogs never notice they're the prime ingredient in the soup pot!]

Assuming that our ancestors' diet used to contain trace silver, and that our diet probably has greatly reduced levels, there is a reasonable argument for supplementing with colloidal silver. Two teaspoons of 5 ppm colloidal silver provides about 50 mcg of silver and could be considered a "nutritional" amount, if taken on a daily basis. Any amount above four teaspoons a day (or 100 mcg) should be considered a "therapeutic" amount.

That said, it should not be assumed that electro-colloidal silver is equivalent to, or has the same metabolic effect as, receiving trace silver from dietary plant sources. But since there are very few plant sources of trace silver available today, colloidal silver is probably the best substitute. If you want to experiment with taking colloidal silver for an extended period of time, stay within the amounts considered to be nutritional. If you want to experiment with larger doses, do so with caution, and only for a day or two at a time.

SAFETY AND TOXICITY

Silver can act as a heavy-metal poison in the body. It can also act as a trace mineral nutrient. The difference is in the particle size, NOT the concentration. Colloidal silver with a particle size of 0.001 microns has particles 100 times smaller than a preparation of silver with a particle size of 0.1 microns.

The smaller the particle, the less likely it will behave as a toxin. Typically, the worst toxic reaction from metallic silver, cited in the medical literature, is a condition called Argyria. Argyria is primarily a cosmetic condition characterized by a permanent, bluish discoloration of the skin. Argyria causes no physical discomfort, and does not have any other known side effects. Your skin just looks bluish-gray.

In fact, the term "blue bloods" in reference to the royal families of Europe, probably refers to a mild, argyrial condition caused by the constant eating of food from silver plate settings. It is interesting to note, however, that there has never been a case of Argyria reported from the use of electro-colloidal silver, free of salts or other impurities.

Argyria, while not being a deadly condition, certainly is undesirable. It is usually caused by the massive intake of silver salts, such as silver nitrate, silver sulfate, and silver chloride.

To determine just how toxic these substances are, I contacted the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry through their on-line information service (at <http://atsdr1.atsdr.cdc.gov:8080/ToxProfiles>). All of these silver salts are talked about as toxins, but the only consequence of even high exposure in humans that is listed is Argyria.

The EPA issues a "control code" for each toxic substance it tracks that can cause human illness. Silver nitrate and silver sulfate have control codes, but silver chloride does not. I received essentially the same information when I spoke with Dr. Eidson at the Department of Epidemiology in Santa Fe, New Mexico. Apparently, the government thinks silver and silver compounds are toxins that essentially have no significant toxic effects other than the ability to discolor your skin.

EFFECTIVENESS

In a study done, in part, by the Institute of Microbiology in Rome, Italy, and published in Applied And Environmental Microbiology, in December 1992, various forms of silver were tested for their ability to kill micro-organisms. Pure electro-colloidal silver out performed silver nitrate, silver chloride, and silver sulfadiazine as a broad-spectrum germicide. For all classes of bacterial, fungus, and mold samples tested, pure electro-colloidal silver worked better, and at much lower concentrations. They concluded that any additives reduced the effectiveness of the pure silver ion, the silver salts being as much as 100 times less effective.

Electro-colloidal silver's effectiveness as a broad-spectrum germicide is directly related to the number and size of the particles. The same volume of space taken up by one silver particle 0.1 microns in size, will hold about 10,000 silver particles 0.001 microns in size. This reduction in particle size not only allows for a greater distribution of the silver, but it also greatly increases the total surface area of silver available for interacting with the environment. These, plus the stability of the electrical charge, are the most important factors when considering the effectiveness of colloidal silver.

[Editor's note: Moreover, if one were to look upon each of the little silver particles as a tiny "tuning fork" which emits frequencies which irritate the life out of a vast array of low-frequency critters such as are reported are incapacitated by silver, then it becomes much easier to picture (and understand) why a lot of smaller silver particles are more effective than one larger clump.]

THE REGULATORS

While silver has been shown to be a very effective germicide—killing gram-negative bacteria, gram-positive bacteria, yeasts, molds, and viruses in laboratory experiments—this does not mean that it will invariably cure disease conditions in the body caused by these organisms. Colloidal silver is a fantastic adjunct to the home, but it is by no means a "cure-all".

The biggest obstacle to using colloidal silver as a "home remedy" is the lack of information in the public domain on how to use it effectively in any given situation. The FDA has tested colloidal silver extensively and found that different micro-organisms succumb to its action at a wide variety of concentrations and exposure times. If any of this information entered the public domain, the FDA would consider their own research "unsubstantiated medical claims" and reason enough to classify colloidal silver as a "new drug". The "new drug" classification would be "required" because "new use protocols" had been developed that did not exist before 1938.

Here is an example of the problem. It is now estimated that one in four women will develop breast cancer in their lifetime. I have spoken to two women who claim to have cured themselves of breast cancer with colloidal silver. They were both diagnosed by biopsy. After the diagnosis, they took 2 teaspoons of colloidal silver a day, until their surgery. One took a home-made product, the other took a silver protein product. In both cases, the biopsy of the removed breast tissue and lymph nodes was cancer free.

The question is, will colloidal silver work this well for all cases of breast cancer?

Probably not, but in the current legal and political environment, we may never know. No pharmaceutical company can control or monopolize ownership of colloidal silver, so none of them will ever fund the testing, which currently costs over $10 million and takes 10 years.

FDA says that if you claim colloidal silver cures breast cancer, that would classify it as a new drug, and the public cannot be given access to new drugs without proper testing. Using the FDA model, it could cost the public $1 billion to "prove" to the FDA what the FDA already knows about colloidal silver. Politics has definitely entered this picture.

FDA does not want to be exposed as an enforcer for the drug companies, or be seen as an agency clearly not acting in the public's best interest. While these ideas are not new to some of us, it would be a startling revelation if a large portion of the population began thinking this way. FDA would certainly like to avoid this "public relations" embarrassment.

Now with 2 extra battery sets, 1 set electrodes, 2 amber bottles, and free Priority Mail Shipping (US and Canada).

The CS-300C produces colloidal silver solutions equal to or better than the finest available on the market. We have improved the design without increasing the cost. It takes about 15 minutes to make premium, ultra-fine yellow solutions, with particle size in the range considered optimal (0.005 - 0.015 microns in diameter). The CS-300C comes complete with 3 sets of batteries, 1 set of .999 silver electrodes, and instructions that tell you everything you need to know to start making colloidal silver at home. All you need to add is water (distilled works best, available at most markets for approx. $1/gal).

If you calculate the cost of batteries and electrodes and water, you should arrive at a cost per ounce of $0.08 for the finest solution money can buy. And you can make it fresh, on demand, wherever you are!

BATTERY LIFE:

The CS-300C can make up to 15 eight-ounce batches of 3-5 ppm (.005 micron particle size range) before you will need to change the batteries. Replacement 12-volt batteries are available at Wal-Mart and Target stores for about $1 each and you will need 3. Radio Shack carries similar batteries for about $2.50 each.

ELECTRODE LIFE:

The electrodes ($10 replacement cost) should make around 100 (20 minute) batches of 8 oz. of 3-5 ppm (particle size in the .005 micron range). These solutions will be yellow in color if you use proper distilled water.

The fact is, FDA has never spent our tax dollars discovering something important, and then published their findings for the benefit of the public-at-large, especially when it involved something that was powerful, safe, and inexpensive for the public to make for themselves. Obviously, empowering the population to be self-reliant and frugal in relation to their own healthcare is not the FDA's responsibility.

Colloidal silver clearly has some extraordinary capabilities and hundreds of legitimate uses. But without standardization, quality control, and extensive medical testing, the public will never know how best to use colloidal silver in a given situation.

FDA may yet try to restrict public access to colloidal silver, claiming it is unsafe, even though they know how "safe and effective" it CAN BE when used properly.

[Editor's note: This article was obviously written prior to the actions taken by the FDA on August 17, 1999 to attempt to restrict the sale and use of colloidal silver. Go back and re-read the important News Desk item on page 9 of the September 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM for the details on the sleazy maneuver pulled by the FDA. Now is certainly a good time to have a private means to maintain a stock of this very useful item!]

In the absence of the release of this authoritative testing data, the public is left just experimenting and groping for the answers. A big fight over the public's access to colloidal silver may be looming because the cost of healthcare in this country is out of control, and the public is looking for inexpensive solutions that work. In that sense, colloidal silver could be "just what the doctor ordered".

DIGESTIVE INTERACTIONS

Colloidal silver is apparently able to kill nearly all micro-organisms, including the "friendly flora" your digestive system needs for proper function. I have spoken with hundreds of people who have taken colloidal silver on a daily basis and have noticed no digestive upset, even after prolonged use. I have also spoken to two individuals who reported digestive upset after taking colloidal silver one time. So, in my experience, the die-off of friendly flora is possible, but rare.

There are a number of strategies that can reduce the probability of digestive interactions. The simplest one is to swish the colloidal silver around in your mouth for 30 seconds before swallowing. This promotes an absorption of the colloidal silver into the body, away from the intestinal tract. Another strategy is to take smaller doses, multiple times per day, or with meals. Either way, if you do experience a die-off of friendly flora, they can be re-populated by taking any of the acidophilus products on the market.

yogurt product will also accomplish the same goal of re-populating your intestinal tract with the good critters it needs, if you find yourself experiencing some digestive disorders—usually from an overdose of poorly made colloidal silver. Just look at the ingredients label on the yogurt culture packages in the dairy section of your grocery store. For example, the Continental brand of yogurt products has long been an excellent choice due to the wide range of "good stuff" in their culturing medium.]

SEPTIC TANKS

Septic tanks are like your home's intestinal tract. They only work when populated with friendly flora. If you live in a rural area with your house on a septic system, and you are making your own colloidal silver, make sure you don't throw a lot of it down the sink, or your septic system may stop working properly. This problem can be handled by using a product like RID-X periodically, which is a good idea anyway.

CONCLUSIONS

Colloidal silver is an extraordinary product. It can enhance your health and the health of your family in hundreds of ways.

EVERYONE SHOULD LEARN HOW TO MAKE HIGH-QUALITY COLLOIDAL SILVER, AND HAVE THAT CAPABILITY IN THEIR HOME, IN CASE THE REGULATORS RESTRICT ITS AVAILABILITY AT SOME POINT IN THE FUTURE. THIS COULD BE THE BEST "HEALTH INSURANCE" POLICY YOU EVER IMPLEMENTED!

[Editor's note: The SPECTRUM couldn't agree more—and that is the reason both for the emphasis added above, and for the sharing of this important information article with you at this time.]

If you buy one of the colloidal silver makers on the market, make sure it can make the "yellow" particles. When you make it yourself, make sure you are making the "yellow" particles. If you have any doubts about the quality of the product you are making or buying, you can send samples to any of the following laboratories for definitive testing.

[END QUOTING]

The above is one of several very well done general documents regarding colloidal silver that can be found on the Internet by ones wishing more information of this type. Note how often the research materials cited in the references are from early in the 1900s, before the pharmaceutical companies "redirected" our attention in the direction of their expensive antibiotic products.

Since a picture is worth a thousand words, I have included herein both a diagram based on the description in this last article and a photo of a system I quickly put together from the diagram in order to illustrate the simplicity of a typical colloidal generator. All parts (except the silver electrodes) are readily available at your local Radio Shack or other electronics supply store for under $30, including the four 9-volt batteries. If you are not sure exactly what these basic parts are, then take the diagram with you to your nearest Radio Shack or electronics supply store and ask them to help you. Even the larger hardware stores usually carry these basic parts.

(There is an additional cost for the pure silver wire electrode material. Please see the box near the end of this article for suggestions of sources for 99.9% pure silver wire, as well as for already-built colloidal silver generator units available from commercial vendors.)

The diagram depicts a simple, inexpensive, and very useful method of building a colloidal generator. A large drinking glass, clear glass Pyrex measuring cup, or even a glass coffee pot make very convenient containers. The latter two have a handle and pour spout, so that you can easily transfer the finished liquid product into storage bottles after it is made. Glass is a must since you will need to see the reaction. Plastic and metal containers are to be avoided as they may cause undesirable silver compounds to be formed. Wash the container prior to each use as you would any food preparation utensils. Rinse it with a little distilled water just prior to use.

A NOTE ABOUT VOLTAGES

The preceding article states that 30 volts is a nominal voltage that keeps the electrodes running clean. However, both lower voltages and higher voltages can be used. If you run at lower voltages, it will take longer to get the reaction started and the batch completed. Higher voltages will likely result in larger particle size (not good) along with reduced process times. Many articles recommend three 9-volt batteries in series (27 volts), rather than four (36 volts), and this too is acceptable and will work.

A caution to be aware of—for you experimentalists who are inclined to try the route of “more power!”—is that if you want to scale-up the reaction container size or push the reaction too fast with high-amperage DC current (generated, say, by automobile batteries or a DC arc welder's power supply) you will likely cause the formation of larger, less useful (and more wasteful) silver particles, and also run the risk of dissociating water molecules into their primary elements—oxygen and hydrogen.

This is NOT good, and can be very dangerous! In a confined area the released hydrogen could cause fire or explosion. It is safer to just use 3 or 4 of the small transistor radio batteries, in the voltage range of 27-36 volts, as the diagram illustrates. And for the sake of the batteries, try to keep the silver wire electrodes from touching each other and shorting-out the battery power. Small 9-volt transistor radio batteries can take some of this kind of abuse, but it only runs them down prematurely.

Only consider .999 fine (99.9%) or purer metals for colloidal use.

ANOTHER NOTE ABOUT WATER

Find a good brand of distilled water, as all are not equivalent. The lower the conductivity, the cleaner the water is, though many of you are not in a position to measure this parameter. The ARROWHEAD brand of distilled water is the best among the various brands readily available in our particular local area grocery stores. Or, if you have a good water distiller at home, use that water.

Let me emphasize again: Never use regular "drinking" or "spring" water to make your colloidal silver, as there are generally dissolved minerals and mineral compounds in drinking water that will cause silver salt compounds to be formed which will reduce the effectiveness of your colloidal silver liquid.

Deionized water should NOT be considered either, as this water is the least conductive due to the removal of ionic charges; it will be very difficult to start the colloidal reaction in this water.

The bottom line: Use only a good quality of DISTILLED water to make your colloidal silver.

EXPANDING YOUR COLLOID CHOICES

You can expand your supply beyond just colloidal silver. Colloidal gold, copper, titanium, and platinum can be generated just as easily with the appropriate electrode substitutions.

[Editor's note: While it is beyond the scope of this article to outlay reasons WHY these other metallic colloids may be useful, it can be suggested that the "tuning fork" frequency of some of these—say titanium and platinum—may well be effective in combating superbugs which have been purposely engineered to withstand silver's frequency. In the case of gold and copper, there is already some research literature available describing their observed benefits.

The overall problem here is that so-called "modern" medicine does not yet recognize the "tuning fork" frequency picture of subtle energy interactions, and thus, to use an analogy, we are stuck with attempting to explain how walkie-talkie radios work when "modern science" only knows about tin cans & string communication devices. Of course there have been those, like Rife many years ago, who have discovered The Truth—but one way or another they have found that they must proceed very quietly with their work or incur the wrath of the FDA and AMA watchdogs.]

The purest source of gold readily available to the general public (gold wire is hard to find) has been the Canadian Gold Maple Leaf coin, which can be purchased at any reputable coin dealer. Since gold is expensive, you could buy one coin and cut it in half. But keep in mind that the larger the surface area of the electrodes, the quicker will be the reaction rate of the colloidalizing process. Moreover, gold coins are a relatively sound investment so, if you have the necessary financial resources, buy two (or more) Canadian Gold Maple Leaf coins. They are one ounce each and can always be sold back to a coin dealer at a later time (if they have not been cut or damaged).

As far as PURE titanium and platinum, the sources are quite limited. Scientific equipment suppliers are a good direction in which to look. (If anyone knows any better sources for these metals than I have listed, please write to me in care of The SPECTRUM or send e-mail to me in care of: thespectrum@tminet.com and we will share the information in a future issue.)

Now, to make things even more interesting, I am aware of a "finishing" technique where, after a batch of colloidal silver is made and the silver electrodes are removed, two gold electrodes (such as gold coin halves) are momentarily inserted into the solution with current applied to the electrodes for about 10-15 seconds for a 16-ounce batch. It is believed by some that the addition of the small amount of gold to the silver increases the frequency of the entire solution and thus enhances its effectiveness.

FINAL THOUGHTS

If you do not feel comfortable building your own apparatus, then I recommend you find a friend or relative to assist you, or that you purchase a commercially-built unit. Some units are well made and offered for a fair price, while others are underbuilt and overpriced.

And you can always simply purchase your colloidal products from the marketplace. One source of reasonably-priced good-quality colloidal products is a company called HomeCure, Inc. (P.O. Box 13927, Scottsdale, AZ 85267; 1-800-559-2873; or see www.homecure.com website).

There are many differing opinions, ideas, and theories as to how to make the "best" colloidal products. You will quickly observe this if you shop the marketplace.

The method offered here for making your own colloids is simple and economical for the average person. You may find that your own creations of colloidal silver vary in quality from batch to batch. There will always be some variability in the product due to variations in battery voltage, electrode material, water quality, and a lot of other variables.

There are devices being sold that cost several hundred dollars, employing various exotic techniques which the manufacturers promote with great gusto. Some may be good, others are no better than the simple process discussed here. The choice is yours as to the route you wish to pursue in order to insure having colloidal silver (and other colloids) available for your use.

Again, this information is offered as EDUCATIONAL material ONLY. What you do with this information is entirely up to you. Neither I nor this publication assume any liability or responsibility concerning your own choice to make or use your own colloids.

While there is no way to predict if the FDA will get away with this latest gestapo maneuver, without the public rising up in protest (like has happened with some past shenanigans of theirs), it may be a source of comfort to you and your family to know how easily you can produce all that you want of a product the FDA is trying so hard to "protect" you from having!

BIG BROTHER INTERNET: Nameless & Faceless In Cyberspace

Editor's note: On Tuesday evening, January 18, 2000, Dr. Nick Begich was the featured guest on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program. Many readers of this newspaper will recognize Nick as the author of the superb book Angels Don't Play This HAARP which warns about the very large antenna system quietly built and "hidden" in Alaska that is pumping out huge megawatt signals of a very dubious nature. (See Nick's great www.earthpulse.com website.)

Art's program was getting rather "dangerous" as to the kinds of information and accusations Nick was discussing—not what you'd hear on the evening news through the controlled media prostitutes. And then the program just went dead.

For over a half hour the signal feed from Art's home studio to the broadcasting destination was interrupted. Art implied, when commenting on the subject the next evening, that he did not believe the lame excuses offered by the technical people in response to his probing technical inquiries. (Remember Art is a longtime ham-radio operator and also knowledgeable about network linkages via satellites and related equipment.)

Was that incident an accident, as we are told? Or was it a matter of "editing"—since we don't use the politically incorrect "censorship by Big Brother" wording, else we are accused of irrational paranoia.

A more subtle form of the same kind of "editing" has been noted and reported for some time concerning the Internet. Few realize how vulnerable the Internet is to all kinds of tamperings and monitorings. Moreover, as the Internet continues to become more completely integrated into modern life, it is no big leap of the imagination (excuse me, paranoia) to speculate upon how sophisticated and complete may be the covert monitoring and "editing" of this communication medium.

Sherman Skolnick has recently written on this subject from personal experience and, it seems, from noting what happened to Art Bell recently—though Sherman does not name any names specifically.

The following provides some sobering food for thought for all of us, as well as some investigative directions to those who may feel inclined to pursue answers to some of the questions he has posed.

1/21/00 SHERMAN H. SKOLNICK

Many feel the Internet is a great blessing. Outspoken activists can set up their own homepage or website and mouth off, while muttering to themselves: "To hell with the news networks!" Electronic mail goes out and back like in a flash. (Or does it? Read on.)

Politically incorrect commentators, once kept in the shadows, can now be read worldwide. With "video streaming" on the Internet soon to blossom, they may be heard and SEEN worldwide.

Feel-good types chirp: "The genie is out of the bottle!" (Or is it?)

Cynics darkly sneer: "Don't you understand? America's bulb is getting brighter, just as it is about to blow out, Hitler-style!"

Are old-timers the only ones who remember the bad old days? During the civil rights and peace movements of the 1960s and 1970s, the FBI was in active opposition to them. Supposedly forbidden by statute to do domestic operations, the American CIA nevertheless had their domestic units doing dirty tricks on U.S. citizens.

The CIA's excuse? They did it upon the default or neglect of the incompetent FBI. Maybe the FBI, as America's secret political police, was just too busy framing labor activists and union organizers on charges of plotting bombings and other violence against corporate dictators.

In the 1970s, an official of the CIA admitted to a Congressional committee that the spy agency had, for many years, been screening U.S. mail and telegraph transmissions to overseas locations. Somehow, they never brought themselves to admit, even to Congress, that they had been spying as well on mail and other communications WITHIN THE U.S.

Now, if you post something really too hot about the secret police on your homepage or website, the FBI, WITHOUT A COURT ORDER, reserves the right to shut off your transmissions.

First Class mail, domestically, was supposedly, by regulation, sacrosanct. A top-level U.S. postal inspector once bent my ear with his off-the-record, candid complaint: "We believe dope is being sent into Chicago in First Class packages. By regulation, we cannot open First Class packages unless we have definite prior proof of illicit shipment."

He was talking to ME, not George Orwell, author of 1984, the epic book on the total police state. I could have countered the postal inspector by mentioning that major dope enters the U.S. with the blessings of the highly corrupt DEA, and for espionage purposes of the American CIA.

(On our cable TV show, we talked about the dope warehouse in Chicago where it is piled up like so many bags of produce. Every six weeks, we said, the dope comes in on a sizeable truck, escorted by corrupt local police. We decided not to give the exact address, for fear the place would be bombed and innocent people injured. A week after our cablecast, a similar warehouse, much smaller, was identified in the monopoly press.)

Who bothers to tell you that the one for years having the monopoly on domain registration for websites, Network Solutions, Inc., is a sinister creature of the intelligence agencies. I am probably not the only one who can finger them from personal experience.

All during the U.S. War against Serbia and their province of Kosovo, in the spring of 1999, Network Solutions blocked my website. Network Solutions' phone was constantly on busy signal. They failed to respond to my many complaints by e-mail (electronic mail, e-mail for short). They even failed to respond to my complaints sent to their headquarters by Registered Mail, Return Receipt Requested, via the U.S. Postal Service.

Did someone give Network Solutions a list of loudmouths to be censored? Were YOU on their list?

Some say the Internet is like fire-ants. Texans know, you can pour lighted fuel on fire-ants, yet they continue to march on. (At least that is what some Texans have told me.)

Most people have become so accustomed to e-mail that they even use it from their office for personal notes, on their company's machinery. Some have been fired for cause, based on company secrets and other inappropriate communications sent, accidentally or otherwise, as personal notes to pals. Retrieved from the system by an employer, the e-mail becomes a document of accusation. Many employees have long known the company phones are bugged by the boss. So why would anyone expect the e-mail was exempt?

Something seems to happen when you send e-mail about something REALLY HOT, politically or spy-wise. In July, 1999, following the death of John F. Kennedy, Jr., I sought to post what we understood was the FBI's secret preliminary report on the aircrash, showing an explosive device blew off the tail of the plane, making it a death warrant. (The how, when, and why is in our four-part series called What Happened To America's Golden Boy at the www.skolnicksreport.com website.)

My e-mail transmissions took four days on our REALLY HOT, four-part story. To be certain, I sent some twice. Friends told me both e-mails arrived at the same time—four days after the date I sent them!

I sent the same e-mails to myself. Same result. Sending the information via the U.S. Postal Service (called "snail mail" in current lingo) would most likely have arrived sooner, and supposedly not been screened or spy-tampered.

I once got on the phone with the Technical Support of my Internet Service Provider. The one answering was quite polite and seemed well-informed. They might give their first name, but rarely, if ever, their last name. So, whatever is said, they remain NAMELESS AND FACELESS, typical of the government bureaucracy, many large corporate offices, public utilities, and such. I outlined the problem of politically REALLY HOT e-mails of mine delayed for several days.

"As your server, we don't screen e-mail" she tried to assure me. But then she added: "On the other hand, OUR server, I believe, does screen." She outlined to me how her company, as my server, had THEIR own server.

She was not sure if THEY had a phone number where you could call them.

Just to perform my sarcastic test, I asked Directory Assistance for the 800-number of "Big Brother Internet". "One moment, sir." And then came the answer: "I show no listing".

I then asked Directory Assistance about the same name in Virginia. "Where in Virginia?" she asked. "McLean, Virginia" I answered: "You know, operator, under the listing (if any) for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency."

The office of Network Solutions, Inc., I smiled to myself, was not far away. (Do they want Directory Assistance operators to have a sense of humor or recognize sarcasm?)

America On Line (AOL) has plenty I think they do not tell you. They are NOT an Internet Service Provider (ISP), but an online service, sort of a middleman TO AN ISP. That technical or lawful difference reportedly justifies them having a screening or censorship committee—in other words, a NAMELESS, FACELESS CENSORSHIP BOARD.

Who are THEY? Under WHAT circumstances do THEY reserve the right or "authority" to block your postings and transmissions? What, if any, is your remedy or recourse? Are they—what is known in public utility and other law as—a Common Carrier, or are they a different animal?

Suppose the U.S. has a very serious decline, even a collapse, in the stock and other markets. And suppose, as well, that at such a time there is a run on the banks. Would the various Internet Service Providers and the Online Services function as before?

Or would they obey a secret government directive to silence loudmouths by blocking their e-mail and other transmissions? On the one hand, the Internet and the World Wide Web and e-mail seem to be a great blessing, countering censorship. On the other hand, great numbers of folks have become overly dependent on such electronic communication. Thus created is a dilemma.

With the phone company, you have a choice to be listed or unlisted. With the Internet, there are services that purport to be directory listings. Whether your website and such is listed there, is a matter of political consideration and quite arbitrary.

Under state regulations, you would have a remedy, of sorts, against the phone company for refusing to list your phone in their regular directory. What remedy or recourse do you have NOW against these other "directories" that somehow fail to list you? Can you actually reach a real PERSON at these electronic directories, to express your complaint at not being listed?

Some radio talk-shows [like Art Bell's show] are also available, by "audio streaming", on the Internet, either live or can be retrieved at any time later. AND, some radio talk shows, on the Internet, if they get on a REALLY HOT topic, suddenly are blanked out. By whom? Under what lawful regulations are they censored?

So, on the one hand, the Internet has been a blessing. On the other hand, it is also part of a NAMELESS, FACELESS BIG-BROTHER IN CYBERSPACE.

If this takes four days to get to you, or never arrives at all—well, it is just Big Brother Internet doing his thing. Stay tuned.

Remember To Look At The View

Editor's note: We are not sure if we're starting some kind of a trend here.

In the January issue of The SPECTRUM we presented a Harvard Law School speech by renowned actor and activist Charlton Heston. His words created as much of a stir to action as it generated warm praise—for its uninhibited honesty and call for imparting values in our lives.

The following heartfelt words come from novelist Anna Quindlen's address given at Commencement (graduation) ceremonies at Villanova University last year. From a different point of view, Anna provokes a similar pause, as Heston did, to consider what is truly important in our lives. She also hints at the same thought about the inescapable lessons of "schoolroom Earth" that so many of the Master Teachers have expressed in these pages and collected in the two WISDOM OF THE RAYS books of spiritual messages.

We'll see, next month, if the trend continues with another such address. Enjoy!

6/19/99 ANNA QUINDLEN

It's a great honor for me to be the third member of my family to receive an honorary doctorate from this great university. It's an honor to follow my great-Uncle Jim, who was a gifted physician, and my Uncle Jack, who is a remarkable businessman. Both of them could have told you something important about their professions, about medicine or commerce.

I have no specialized field of interest or expertise, which puts me at a disadvantage, talking to you today. I'm a novelist. My work is human nature. Real life is all I know. Don't ever confuse the two—your life and your work. The second is only part of the first.

Don't ever forget what a friend once wrote Senator Paul Tsongas when the senator decided not to run for reelection because he'd been diagnosed with cancer: "No man ever said on his deathbed 'I wish I had spent more time in the office.'"

Don't ever forget the words my father sent me on a postcard last year: "If you win the rat race, you're still a rat."

Or what John Lennon wrote before he was gunned down in the driveway of the Dakota: "Life is what happens while you are busy making other plans."

You walk out of here this afternoon with only one thing that no one else has. There will be hundreds of people out there with your same degree; there will be thousands of people doing what you want to do for a living.

But you will be the only person alive who has sole custody of your life. Your particular life. Your entire life.

Not just your life at a desk, or your life on a bus, or in a car, or at the computer. Not just the life of your mind, but the life of your heart. Not just your bank account, but your soul.

So here's what I wanted to tell you today:

get a life! A real life, not a manic pursuit of the next promotion, the bigger paycheck, the larger house.

Do you think you'd care so very much about those things if you blew an aneurysm one afternoon, or found a lump in your breast? Get a life in which you notice the smell of saltwater pushing itself on a breeze over Seaside Heights, a life in which you stop and watch the way a baby scowls with concentration when she tries to pick up a Cheerio with her thumb and first finger.

Get a life in which you are not alone. Find people you love, and who love you. And remember that love is not leisure, it is work.

Each time you look at your diploma, remember that you are still a student, still learning how to best treasure your connection to others. Pick up the phone. Send an e-mail. Write a letter. Kiss your Mom. Hug your Dad.

Get a life in which you are generous. Look around at the azaleas in the suburban neighborhood where you grew up; look at a full Moon hanging silver in a black, black sky on a cold night. And realize that LIFE is the best thing ever, and that you have no business taking it for granted. Care so deeply about its goodness that you want to spread it around.

All of you want to do well. But if you do not do good, too, then doing well will never be enough. It is so easy to waste our lives—to take for granted the color of the azaleas, the sheen of the limestone on Fifth Avenue, the color of our kids' eyes, the way the melody in a symphony rises and falls and disappears and rises again. It is so easy to exist instead of live.

Well, you can learn all those things, out there, if you get a real life, a full life, a professional life, yes—but another life, too, a life of love and laughs and a connection to other human beings.

Just keep your eyes and ears open. Here you could learn in the classroom. There the classroom is everywhere. The exam comes at the very end.

I found one of my best teachers on the boardwalk at Coney Island. It was December, and I was doing a story about how the homeless survive in the winter months.

He and I sat on the edge of the wooden supports, dangling our feet over the side, and he told me about his schedule—panhandling the boulevard when the summer crowds were gone, sleeping in a church when the temperature went below freezing, hiding from the police amidst the Tilt-a-Whirl and the Cyclone and some of the other seasonal rides.

But he told me that most of the time he stayed on the boardwalk, facing the water, just the way we were sitting now, even when it got cold and he had to wear his newspapers after he read them.

And I asked him why. Why didn't he go to one of the shelters? Why didn't he check himself into the hospital for detox? And he just stared out at the ocean and said: "Look at the view, young lady. Look at the view."

And every day, in some little way, I try to do what he said. I try to look at the view.

And that's the last thing I have to tell you today—words of wisdom from a man with not a dime in his pocket, no place to go, nowhere to be.

Look at the view. You'll never be disappointed.△

Native American Perspectives: Facing Our Destiny

1/23/00 RAY BILGER

Speaking Wind, a Pueblo Indian author, lecturer, and publisher, and friend of Robert Ghost Wolf, died suddenly of a “heart attack” on December 22, 1998. At the time, he was a healthy, middle-aged man who showed no signs of being susceptible to a heart attack.

He was, however, very outspoken about what is really happening in the world and who is orchestrating events, and he had just recently made an appearance on Art Bell’s late-night talk-radio program on December 9, 1998. Knowing the penchant of the dark, so-called “elite” World Controllers for silencing effective public speakers who share too much Truth, it doesn’t take a great deal of imagination to figure out what happened to Speaking Wind. (For more information, see his excellent <http://www.energymedicineassn.com/speakingwind/> Internet website.)

Speaking Wind and his two brothers, Cheeway and Nahe, were raised in the mountains of northern New Mexico. For almost twenty years, they were taught the ways of the spirit by Grandfather, Two Bears, and White Eagle. These teachings were to be put asleep for a time and were not to be remembered until the time was right. The time became right in 1993, and since then Speaking Wind has imparted a vast body of information that can help to provide insight and guidance for all of us.

Among his works, Speaking Wind wrote several manuscripts. These manuscripts “are based on events that have taken place. However, because character portrayals, site locations, and names have been changed, these manuscripts must be presented as fiction.”

The manuscripts are written in story form that makes very interesting reading, and they contain information that the One World Controllers, often known as the Illuminati, surely would rather we were not told. Let us take a look at some of this fascinating and compelling work. Here are some excerpts from Lumen.

[QUOTING]

Cheeway, and his party, were successful in activating the second ancient sacred site under Los Alamos Labs, New Mexico. They also found a way of keeping anyone from ever drilling into the sacred cave again, which if violated would cause a sleeping giant to rise into the world and bring destruction. However, the Illuminati developed another plan—one that would make the sleeping giant rise and spread his lava over most of the southwest lands.

Cheeway was told to activate twelve ancient sites in order for mankind to consciously leave the two-dimensional way of thinking and seeing—a two-dimensional process that had led so many to follow leaders telling them what to do, how to live, and how to die.... Unless all twelve stones were returned to these ancient sites that were built 40,000 years ago, there would be no hope for mankind to leave its world of illusion—the world of illusion that had been kept over them by the teachings from the Illuminati.

The very moment the twelfth stone was put in place, a worldwide grid would be activated and allow all humanity to see past the illusion that had been forced over them throughout history. But Father Sanchez and his brotherhood, the Illuminati, did not want this to happen. Their plans did not include the human race ever knowing there could be more to their life than what they presently have.

Because of what my brother Cheeway was attempting to do from ancient prophecy, the Illuminati, through their menacing representative, Father Sanchez, continued to peruse Cheeway and his party. Cheeway not only had to find the locations for all twelve ancient sites, but he had to stay one step ahead of Father Sanchez, who believed his brotherhood could only be saved by killing my brother.

Cheeway discovered the third ancient site. It was just to the southeast of Mexico City. However, he also discovered that the Illuminati were spreading rumors that vast amounts of oil were located a few miles below the surface in northern New Mexico. And many drilling companies were investigating the possibility of drilling in those lands the sleeping giant was placed to guard. If the sleeping giant was disturbed before his time, he would raise out of the Earth and spread his blood over the lands. His blood is the lava, and his reign is from Los Alamos in the north to White Sands Missile Range in the south of New Mexico.

Cheeway had discovered the location of the third ancient site, but in order to get to it, he had to find an entrance to the ancient passage. The ancient passage was a great underground river that connected North America, Central America,

South America, Asia, Africa, Europe, Australia, and Antarctica. However, the last passage had been blocked by a late 1800s earthquake, but parts of it were still usable.

When Cheeway and his party neared Mexico City, they met up with Xumal, one of Father Sanchez’s bodyguards who had befriended them, and the purpose of their mission. He told them the Illuminati were designing a drilling system that was supposed to tap into the heat from underground lava near Mexico City. He said they wanted to tap into the geothermal activity, then use it as an alternative energy source. But that was only what they were saying on the surface of things. Their real purpose was to destroy the second ancient site by causing the sleeping lava giant to cover the lands with fire, then wake the two twin volcanoes near Mexico City, Popocatepetl (Popo), and Iztaccihuatl (Izta), which would destroy the third ancient sacred site as well.

The Illuminati knew the prophecy of what would happen when the twin volcanoes would erupt simultaneously. They would wake the Grandmother volcano, which is directly under Mexico City. She would erupt and literally blow Mexico City into the air, and her trembling would cause the tail of the turtle, Central America [the Native American name for North America is Turtle Island], to fall into the ocean. Her eruptions would cause the Grandfather, Mt. Rainier, to erupt and release the western [tectonic] plates, which will create the anticipated earthquakes that cause the majority of California to fall into the ocean.

Once Mt. Rainier erupts, the great Fire Bird comes to life and ignites the Ring of Fire in the Pacific Ocean. The heat within the water kills all life, melts the ice cap at the North Pole, and the rotation imbalance causes the Earth to tilt 14 degrees [further than it is now, which is then more than enough to precipitate a major axis instability flip].

Xumal told Cheeway the Illuminati had already begun the design phase of the project and plan it to be operational by the 5th of May, 2000. [Note that this date is also significant as marking a major planetary alignment.] If they were successful in their plan, that date would mark the beginning of the end for life as we presently know it.

Cheeway and company begin their next adventure with three missions. To stop people from drilling for oil in northern New Mexico, to cause the Illuminati to stop drilling between the two twin volcanoes near Mexico City, and to locate the third ancient prophecy site and set the activation stone in place.

[END QUOTING]

The complete manuscripts are available through the website mentioned earlier, or contact The Energy Medicine Association, P.O. Box 5287, Kingwood, TX 77325; phone: 281-510-3972.

The above story, along with some apparent symbolism, brings into focus activities and events not normally seen or heard about by the average person. For example, the activation stone could be put in place, and humanity could begin to truly awaken, and it could all be done by the diligent work of people who must remain behind the scenes and live without public recognition.

Such is the nature of the multi-faceted, many-leveled play we call life on planet Earth. How many times in the past do you suppose that great things may have been accomplished in this manner?

When Speaking Wind appeared on Art Bell’s program on December 9, 1998, he said that in September of 1998, five planets lined up with the Earth and the Sun, and “they opened up a big bunch of energy” that “set in motion a worldwide purge of all living things”. He then said:

[QUOTING]
The nine brothers, or the planets, align themselves on the 5th of May, 2000, and from that date until the last day of the fourth world, which is December 22, 2012, everything will undergo a purge. And if we’re not willing to let go of the illusion and the lies, they’re going to be stripped away....

Neither the Earth, nor the life on it is going to end, but it’s going to change. And it will be a change of such tremendous proportions [that] it’s going to seem as if we’re about to become extinct.

[END QUOTING]

Whether or not the changes begin in earnest on May 5, 2000, we’ll have to wait and see. It would seem unwise to think that there will not be danger to watch out for, but we must remember that it is by being alive to danger that one may be able to avoid danger. If you can go within and listen to your heart, you may well get through these times and also be a guide to others who will be totally confused about what is happening all around them.

Our Mother Earth is centered within an electromagnetic energy field that is a part of this living, breathing, conscious planet. On the surface of Mother Earth this energy field crisscrosses the planet in grid lines creating energy vortices at the intersections of these energy lines. A vortex may be defined as a spinning energy wheel, but looking more like a funnel or tornado in three dimensions—such as the way water looks when you pull out a stopper and the water exits down your sink drain.

We are surrounded by these vortices, and our Milky Way galaxy is but one big example. Sedona, Arizona is one of the places with vortices that many people are aware of, but Mother Earth has many, many such locations, like Stonehenge in England, the Great Pyramid in Egypt, and Big Horn Medicine Wheel in north-central Wyoming, to name just a few.

The Illuminati would-be World Controllers know well many of these locations and, through a wide array of disguised projects, attempt to utilize them to influence Mother Earth toward their own selfish goals. They do much harm in these undertakings, partly from ignorance, but Mother Nature is teaching them a great lesson in strength—that, as the old margarine commercial used to say, “It’s not nice to fool with Mother Nature!”

These natural vortices have long been recognized by Native peoples as “power points” and always regarded as sacred sites. The San Francisco Peaks, just north of Flagstaff, Arizona, compose a major vortex. The Hopi and the Navajo have always considered the Peaks as sacred. These mountains generate very powerful energy. In his book, American Genesis, published by Summit Books, Jeffrey Goodman comments upon the San Francisco Peaks.

[QUOTING]
The Hopi refer to these mountains as their traditional home. They have a number of shrines in these peaks. It is there that the Kachina people live, the spiritual beings who the Hopi say have helped them over the ages. In their ceremonies, the Hopi dress up in the costumes of the various Kachinas. Interestingly, these peaks contain geologic evidence for the destruction of three previous worlds as described in myth. The destruction of the past, or third, world by water could correspond to the flooding that occurred in the San Francisco range approximately 25,000 years ago. The destruction of the second world by ice could represent the glacial activity that took place in the peaks approximately 100,000 years ago. And the destruction of the first world by fire could represent the violent volcanic activity that erupted in the mountains approximately 250,000 years ago.

[END QUOTING]

This information may be helpful in verifying the Hopi’s legends of past Earth changes, and thus provide some measure of confirmation that the current Earth-changes

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business as usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House and throughout our entire Judicial system.

The Untold History Of America* was written for the specific purpose of providing a high school textbook for all American schools that would educate students about the real nature of our national situation. With a clear understanding of things as they exist in reality, students will then be in a much better position to go on in life and do something to correct our current downhill course.

This book is for those who want to know why America is the way it is today, where we went wrong, who are the responsible parties, and what we can do to bring back the American Dream our forefathers and mothers fought so hard to establish and gave their very lives to defend.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original inhabitants of America, the Native Americans. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

prophecies are indeed accurate. It is also interesting to note that just about every comprehensive source of myth and legend contains an account of an ancient flood.

The Four Corners area is another powerful energy vortex location. This is where the states of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, and Colorado meet. It is home to the Hopi and the Navajo, and it is the area where the Hopi have been continuously living for the past 4,000 years. This area is known as the “Heart Center” of Mother Earth, where the pulse of our Earth Mother is centered. There is a power generated there that helps Mother Earth regenerate herself. It is sadly ironic that this is also the area that the White man has chosen to exploit for its resources of oil, coal, uranium, etc.

As we look around us, it is not difficult to see that many (if not most) people have fallen into a false sense of security during their lives on this planet. In our modern world, where so many amenities are provided, the attitude of most Americans seems to be to take things for granted—to assume, for example, that the grocery stores will always have food in them, the water taps will always flow, and utilities will always provide gas, electricity, telephone service, etc. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Although we constantly see on the TV news where others are the victims of various natural or man-made disasters, if it does not affect us directly, then we generally tend to think it won’t happen to us. “Civilized” humanity, by and large as a whole, simply cannot comprehend the sheer magnitude of what appears will soon come down all around us.

The Native prophecies tell us that we will return to the ancient ways and teachings and enter a time of great spiritual awareness and understanding, where all the four races of mankind will be guided by the Great Spirit to live and work together as brothers and sisters. But that time must first be preceded by the Great Purification—the time, it appears, we are about to enter in the very near future.

This is not doom and gloom; it is change, and change that leads to a better world for all of us. These events are going to happen (according to Speaking Wind), but it is our perception of, and reaction to, them that will either see them as healthy change, or as something bad.

Let us look at another of the manuscripts of Speaking Wind, written before Lumen. The following is from The Brotherhood.

[QUOTING]

Cheeway made a second expedition to the Yucatan Peninsula.... He had to find the map room in order to locate a second ancient site—a site where not only the last three commandments were recorded, but the final warning for what the ancient prophecies called mankind’s approaching disaster. The warnings had been left so humanity would know what could be done to avert certain disaster to the planet they had been given to live on....

Father Sanchez, and his Brotherhood, have been called the Illuminati throughout history. They have been responsible for keeping truth hidden from humanity for just one reason—to keep everyone under their control by promoting fear-based governments around the world. However, what is contained in the original eleven commandments posed a threat to their control, and their way of life.

They had been searching for the undiscovered second version of the Bible for thousands of years. But now that we discovered the second ancient site where the last three commandments and final warning were recorded, the Brotherhood stepped up their efforts to kill everyone involved, before the information could be made public. But in the wake of the Illuminati’s search, millions of people lay dead along their historical path. And to them, a few more would not be significant. [Was Speaking Wind—either unconsciously or knowingly—also writing about his own demise?]

Just before Cheeway discovered the location of the second ancient site, he heard it was about to be violated. If that happened, a great disaster would occur—one that would affect the entire planet. The Brotherhood directed Father Sanchez to stop Cheeway from reaching it, for they had other plans for its use. They wanted to create a contained global disaster that would obliterate thousands [or millions] of people. For them, this would be the first step in getting all world governments to unite under one authority—theirs....

Cheeway was not aware of their plan until he was about to enter The Ancient City Of Prophecy [in the Yucatan Peninsula of Mexico] for the second time. He was met by a man he knew earlier in Peru named Nauti, who informed Cheeway of the Brotherhood’s plan.

But Nauti revealed a forgotten chapter in mankind’s history and legacy. He spoke of speaking stones that came from what used to be a great wall. They were used, by the old ones, to access information. The wall would speak of things like the beginning of our creation, healing, how to change stone into metal, and water into food, and much more, but Nauti did not go further into it. He said there would be time for that later.

The stones were located in The Cave Of The Winds, and Nauti insisted Cheeway and his party accompany him to its secret location in Peru. Cheeway made the connection from what Nauti told him about the speaking stones, and what he had seen them do. When he shared this information with his party, Roberts disclosed a more conventional name for them—one that has been used by many cultures throughout history. He said this had to be the once great Philosopher’s Stone—a great stone, perhaps as large as the wailing wall in Jerusalem, that held all the secrets of time. It was said to have broken into hundreds of separate pieces, thousands of years ago, when the last of its creators was killed by the greedy ones of this Earth.

The creators of the great Philosopher’s Stone were called The Watchers From The Light, and the greedy ones who controlled others through fear and ignorance were called The Watchers From The Shadows. But when the ancient prophecy was fulfilled, and The Watchers From The Light returned, the separate pieces of the Philosopher’s Stone would reunite into what they once were. And when they did, not only would all of the secrets of time be known, but a white powder would rise out of the Earth and assist mankind in remembering what needed to be done.

The white powder Nauti spoke of has been used, and recorded, by many ancient cultures throughout history. It was called White Gold Powder. They used it to transform themselves, then ascend, to leave this Earth with their body and no longer need to go through the birth or death process again.

Nauti informed us he achieved this over four thousand years ago. And now he, and many like him, return to assist others in need. But they only return when, as he said, events of biblical proportions are about to unfold. And when the White Gold Powder is seen coming up through the Earth, it will mark the beginning of events he spoke about. And it would mark mankind’s last chance to save itself from a self-imposed disaster by understanding what they were doing to themselves and the world....

The White Gold Powder that Nauti spoke of was discovered coming out of the Earth in 1996, and has been commercially marketed for the past eighteen months. And there are accounts of individuals using it and raising their spiritual consciousness to levels unknown of before.

Nauti said, by using the White Gold Powder and reading the information we discovered, humanity will remember its destiny—one they may freely choose to follow, or ignore. But a destiny, nonetheless, that will show them what is needed so they may put their lives in balance, not only with the Earth, but with the One who gave them life.

[END QUOTING]

The phenomenon of living for thousands of years is well documented in a series of books titled Life And Teachings Of The Masters Of The Far East, by Baird T. Spalding, DeVorss Publications, P.O. Box 550, Marina del Rey, CA 90294.

It appears that at least a part of our destiny—those who have chosen to be here at this time—is to experience the Great Purification on a personal level, as well as experiencing it as a collective consciousness. Overnight we shall see around us, and experience within ourselves, profound changes that most of us have hitherto never dreamed of. It will be an experience that will be difficult to describe in words, and will actually have to be lived to fully appreciate and understand its infinite and eternal significance.

As you may have already realized, this is exactly why we have been lied to for so long about all of this—and we all had to be tested until our faith was strong enough for us to be able to get to this point without first giving up. The future we will all share together, beyond the Earth changes, will more than make up for what we are about to go through. But actually getting there is the real test.

We have not yet seen the worst of what is to come, so we must all be strong as the events of the immediate future unfold. We all made the conscious free-will choice to be here on Mother Earth at this time, because we know, somewhere inside ourselves, that we are about to learn the biggest lessons of our lives.

The future we have collectively created will be regarded as a terrifying experience by many people. However, we must remain confident in the ways of the Great Spirit and not give in to fear. Remember, the seeds of fear are the fastest growing seeds, taking but an instant to germinate in the consciousness. Once the fear begins inside of you, it can expand quickly and becomes difficult to shake off. Such fear cuts off our ability to go within for Guidance.

The Dark Brotherhood knows this and thus continually precipitates events which generate fear—and that is enough to confuse us as to what is real and what is not. We must face our destiny with a firm confidence in and reliance upon The Spirit That Moves All Things.

Let us conclude this segment with the wise and encouraging words of Rolling Thunder, who has been heard elsewhere in this series:

[QUOTING]

We know what we're doing, and we know what we're looking for. We know the trail we travel, and we hope that someday there will be many of you ready to travel with us. We travel many places nowadays and we move like the whirlwind when we travel to spread the message of the Great Spirit, and how it was in the beginning all around the world. We travel to find our brothers. We never overlook our people, who are all Great Spirit's people, whatever race they come from....

When we traveled across the Great Waters, we were welcomed wherever we went, and far more than some places in America even today. These people were hungry for the knowledge of their past, and it was like a breath of fresh air to bring it back to them. Discovering their original way of life and culture was taken seriously—such as getting back to more respect for the Mother Earth; learning about their native plants and animals; learning the meaning of the waters and the wind, and of the many things that are lost and not taught at all in modern civilization....

When you are among the Indians, you go by our customs. We respect non-Indian religions and customs whenever we travel among you. Everyone is tested when they go into an Indian camp, nowadays especially. One of the tests might be that a person is taken to where some feathers are hanging on the wall to see if the person will touch them before being invited. Most of the time people do not know when they are tested.

[END QUOTING]

Most people today do not realize we are all being tested by the Great Spirit, and by our own Higher Self, all the time. Just how well we do with our testing will determine what we do and where we go when we proceed along the path of our destiny beyond here. We'll continue with this thought in the next segment.

Letting Grow By Letting Go

1/28/00 HILARION

Good evening, old friend. It is I, Master Hilarion, come as a representative of the Emerald-Green Ray of The Creation. I come in, and I am of, The One Light of Creator God. Be still and find peace within your heart, for you know me well!

Your planet, along with all of its inhabitants, are in the Great Transformation process as we speak. The time is at hand for those who have earned same, through past and current practice, to graduate into the next level of learning.

This past Awakening Cycle has been to awaken the heart energy center within those experiencing on your planet. Many have successfully completed this work and are merely awaiting their next placement. Those who have not yet done so are, for the most part, the ones who are currently incarnate on your planet. This is so that those who have not yet done so may have the opportunity to awaken and understand the importance of balancing the energies associated with the heart energy center.

There is a great desire at this time by we of the Higher Realms to offer our support for those who continue to struggle with this “final exam” of sorts, wherein ones must demonstrate their understanding through ACTIONS taken, and not just through empty words and glibness of thought. In other words, the actions, along with the emotional energy content of same, are what will determine the future placement of many ones experiencing at this time.

Many are aware of the concepts stated above in terms of knowing what is the “right” thing to do, and yet still we see these very ones, who state that they “know” better, still acting according to the lower energies of the more primal, ego-centered, animalistic, survival-oriented focus.

This is not to be taken as an insult in any way. This is merely an observable phenomenon taking place on your planet.

The challenges associated with using the FINER energies is not in the least an “easy” task, nor is it a particularly difficult one. The biggest problem that we see ones encountering is related to the perception of time. By this I mean that for the most part ones want to see an “instant return” for their efforts, or they will quickly lose interest.

When operating in the more primal modes of animalistic experience, when you are hungry, you go and hunt food, and within a short time you are eating. When you are tired, you lay down and sleep, and so forth. It is a simple, “straight-line” path of desire and reactive behavior.

Those who have learned to balance the emotional (heart) energies will naturally begin to work on the higher levels of consciousness and will often be the ones who become the clairvoyants, seers, prophets and such. Many of those who have demonstrated their understanding through their actions are not in the physical so as to make room for those who have been reluctant students—so that as many as is possible will “graduate” with the rest of the class.

The higher, more intellectual evolutions of the third-density experience require the use of reason for survival, rather than reaction. This shift, for some, is a difficult one to make, as there is a struggle that naturally takes place as a species becomes self aware. The struggle is for freedom from the reactionary “mentality” and movement into one of reason. The struggle is a battle to tame the reactionary, ego-based energies that were at one time essential for the survival of the species, and balance those energies with reason, compassion, and understanding that comes with true awareness of self and the connection with others.

In your current environment this is indeed a difficult task. When the heart center is fully balanced and operating in optimal condition, there will naturally come the answers to the perplexing and seemingly contradictory events that you ones must eventually come to grips with. These include ideas like the fact that there are Greater Forces at work, that exist outside the physical senses, but which can be sensed consciously on a feeling (emotional wavelength) level. The heart is the gateway to opening the higher energy centers which will evolve more fully in the next level of learning and growth.

Those who have learned to balance the emotional (heart) energies will naturally begin to work on the higher levels of consciousness and will often be the ones who become the clairvoyants, seers, prophets and such. Many of those who have demonstrated their understanding through their actions are not in the physical so as to make room for those who have been reluctant students—so that as many as is possible will “graduate” with the rest of the class.

As we have spoken many times in past lessons, BALANCE is the key to mastering the challenges of the heart. Many of you ones “suffer” from a “broken heart”. The perception of suffering is merely an indicator that you have not yet learned to take responsibility for your thoughts, actions, and choices. The perception of emotional pain (“heartache”) is the magnificent bio-electric feedback mechanism of your internal guidance system doing its job to let you know that, when you dwell upon the subjects that result in the feeling of “heartache”, you are moving in a direction counterproductive to understanding and growth. In reality, this most painful experience is due to STAGNATION.

Your primary objective is the same as for all of Creator’s creations—go forth and experience newness and growth. Stagnation is in direct opposition to this primary, innate directive.

When ones incessantly dwell upon the past “mistakes” that resulted in pain, and insist upon living in the past where no real change can be effected, they are disconnecting from (ignoring) the yearnings of the heart to move forward. This stagnation is indeed painful and quite counterproductive to the soul’s desire for experiencing newness and growth.

How many times have we, of the Lighted Realms of Creation, suggested to you ones to “Let go of the past!”? We say these basic statements in an effort to help you to discover for yourselves the importance of doing so. It is for your personal well-being and happiness that we suggest these things, for we know that you, as a unique aspect of Creator, have a very real and purposeful contribution to make that will inevitably unfold and profoundly contribute to ALL aspects of The Creation!

THE RAYS volumes, with a third volume in production for publication later this year.]

We also know that within you lies part of us, and some of our eventual experiences of newness and growth are directly connected to yours. To assist you ones is truly to assist ourselves, and therein lies great value to all ones everywhere.

It is with great passion and compassion that we offer ideas that will help you to find answers that will eventually allow you to heal yourselves from past pains. The compassion comes from Knowing and Understanding, for we too have walked the path you are now on.

We know the healing power of Understanding—that it will help to realign energies in such a way as to allow your energies to flow uninhibited. The pain comes from unnatural energy pathways or severe constriction of the energy flows through you.

Many ones will rightfully explain how much more emotional pain hurts than does physical pain. If you can identify with this last statement, then know that there is truly no need to hold onto this sort of pain. It is, quite bluntly, a form of self-punishment and is quite counter-productive to what you are trying to accomplish there in the physical.

The key is to find understanding as to why these things are so difficult to let go of in the first place. For many, it is shame. Shame that you have hurt another. Shame that you weren't a better person. Shame that you could have been so ignorant as to not see what you were doing.

For those of you who believe you were the victim and did nothing wrong, and yet you were still "hurt" by another, I say to you that you need to look closely at what is truly "hurting". Most often the IDEA of having been judged (by another) as being somehow inadequate causes the greatest pain. Denial of your responsibility as a co-creator of any given experience will also add complications to an already unpleasant situation.

Please understand that the seeming bluntness of my statements is deemed appropriate at this time, as we see that many are simply choosing to ignore our offerings and denying that such have any relative importance to their situation. For a very few this may indeed be the case. However, this message is as much for the one who scribes it as it is for many of you ones who have come forth as Ground Crew. In general you ones are deeply caring beings who are very sensitive to the misuse of energy. Learn to forgive yourselves as you would naturally forgive others.

The greatest risk you ones take by coming into the physical as Ground Crew is that you may once again become part of the karmic condition (of the experiencing group of souls) that may need to be worked out in future incarnation cycles.

Embrace, if you will, the idea and knowing that you accepted this risk, knowing that it is well worth it. Please do not dwell upon past mistakes. Learn from them and move forward. The worst that can happen is that you will become part of a group karmic condition and have need to reincarnate with them at a future time—something that most of you would likely do anyway out of compassion and a desire to be of service to those in need. Let go of the past and learn to live in the now!

I am Master Hilarion. I represent the heart energy, the Emerald-Green Ray of Creator's Spectral Expression of Love. I come in Service to The One Light, Creator God, and as a member of the Brotherhood of Light, to assist those who desire such assistance.

In Love and Appreciation for ALL of God's unique creations—Salu.

The greatest risk you ones take by coming into the physical as Ground Crew is that you may once again become part of the karmic condition (of the experiencing group of souls) that may need to be worked out in future incarnation cycles.

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provides a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

"Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk."

When Disclosure Serves Secrecy

Editor's note: The following is a powerful open letter from emergency room physician, and the Founder and International Director of CSETI (the Center for the Study of ExtraTerrestrial Intelligence), Dr. Steven M. Greer. Dr. Greer's longtime persistence and dedication to this subject has opened a number of otherwise closed and confidential doors to him, but not without incurring the hazards of recent "unusual" bad health—both for him and for several other courageous ones around him. Some of you may have heard him speak on several occasions on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program over the past several years. Within the bounds of good taste, he is refreshingly blunt and to-the-point.

Regular readers of this newspaper will find much in Dr. Greer's position that resonates with their feelings on this subject. He makes many excellent points in a very brief fashion and is not afraid to relate important aspects of this subject, entrusted to him confidentially, which the controlled so-called "UFO community" of researchers do not dare put forth—for both economic and "health" reasons.

Dr. Greer has amassed a large number of scientific colleagues who, under the right conditions of protection, stand ready to "spill the beans" on what they personally know about the longstanding UFO coverup. Much of Dr. Greer's work is focused upon reaching this goal.

The apparent access he has earned to "confidential" information is not to automatically imply that all of it is necessarily correct. After all, how better to disseminate disinformation than through credible sources all along the bucket-brigade path. However, when drawing upon your own Inner Guidance for discernment, it is likely that much of what Dr. Greer states herein will resonate as true. Remember that he is reporting a number of ongoing plans revealed to him, and often one immersed in such a sea of details is so close to all of the "trees" that the contours of the much larger, entire "forest"—the Big Picture—are harder to see, especially if other factors of that Big Picture are either not known by him or not recognized as being connected to the ongoing UFO coverup agenda which is his focus.

In other words, the fundamental, overall premise of utilizing all manner of fear tactics to lower people's frequency and thus disconnect them from Higher Guidance, from clear thinking and insight, and make them ripe for all manner of mind control, is central to the struggle going on in the world at this time. Only ONE facet of that fear agenda employs the UFO phenomena, but it is still an important mechanism nonetheless—yet potentially dangerous because, if the dark ones' negative spin on UFOs can be caused to backfire, then many people could quickly awaken to our true position in a universe teeming with life.

In slightly different words, Dr. Greer's final point is that God wins in the end. No argument there! The important call put out herein is for more good people who know The Truth to stand together in The Light and override what the dark so-called "elite" have planned in this UFO arena. And that, of course, is the testing now in progress on this schoolroom Earth: will good people do nothing out of fear, and allow evil to prevail, or will there come forth a renewed, concerted dedication to The Truth? We'll find out soon enough.

10/21/99 DR. STEVEN M. GREER

Ending the secrecy surrounding the UFO/ET subject is a laudable goal. It is long overdue. It would transform the world in ways both simple and profound.

And yet it is fraught with danger.

The covert projects which have been running UFO-related programs for nearly 60 years are not interested in a disclosure which upsets their apple cart. They want such a disclosure to transform their apple cart into a freight train. And they potentially have the power and connections to do it.

There are multiple scenarios attending the disclosure of the UFO subject—and not all of them have the best interests of humanity at heart. Elsewhere, in the new book Extraterrestrial Contact: The Evidence And Implications, I write about the kind of disclosure the world needs. An honest one. An open one. One which replaces secrecy with democracy. A disclosure which is peaceful, scientific and hopeful.

[Editor's note: Dr. Greer's excellent and comprehensive book is available on the Internet, at his website, or from: Granite Publishing, P.O. Box 1429, Columbus NC 28722; phone: 828-894-3088.]

But then there is the disclosure the Powers That Be would like to see:

Manipulated. Calculated to consolidate power and engender fear. Configured in such a way that chaos and a deepening need for Big Brother is carefully inculcated into the masses.

We have seen the plans and it is not a pretty picture.

I write this as a warning. A warning that the wolves in sheep clothes are very cunning indeed. And have almost limitless resources. Most who work with them do not even know they are wolves. Indeed, it is likely that many of the wolves have been convinced that they are sheep.

The UFO matter is not so much a mystery as a matter deliberately obfuscated and mystified. Confusion and a lack of clarity serves the larger covert goal of keeping it off the long-range radar of society while power and plans are consolidated quietly. And the one thing more dangerous to society than all this secrecy is a planned, contrived disclosure run by the keepers of the secrets.

For years such plans have been made—to be unfurled at just the right time. During a time of great expectation. Of social confusion. Perhaps of millennial madness?

I have personally met with a number of people who are very involved with such plans. I do not speculate here. Be aware: The disclosure of UFO reality is being planned very carefully. It will assiduously follow a scheme to spin the subject in just the right way—the only way which will further contribute to the glory and power of the secret-keepers. It will be a false disclosure—one born out of the age-old bane of human existence: selfishness and greed. Greed for power. Greed for control. Greed for domination.

We must be mature and informed on such matters. Only a vigilant and informed public can see through such deceit—and correct it should such a plan be unfurled. Every citizen needs to know that great good can come from the truth being known. But the mature citizen must also recognize how the "truth" can be spun and spun again—until the goals of those who crave secret and overt power are met.

Consider: One scenario for disclosure is that the UFO and Extraterrestrial subject is acknowledged in a way which is scientific and hopeful. Excessive secrecy which lacks executive branch and congressional oversight is ended. Humanity begins to entertain open contact with other civilizations, with peaceful engagement as the goal. Technologies which are currently suppressed are allowed to be disseminated: Pollution ends. An economy of abundance and social justice is firmly established. Global environmental destruction and mind-numbing world poverty become a faint memory. Zero-point-based energy devices transform the world. Electro-gravitic devices permit above-ground travel without paving over the world's precious fertile farm land. As an ET once told Colonel Philip Corso, "It's a new world, if you can take it...". This is the disclosure which we are working for.

I (E.Y.) can personally vouch for the curious, "there's more here than meets the eye" history behind the evolution of the transistor. Not only was one of the Nobel Prize-winners for "inventing" the transistor a personal friend, but so too are/were others who have long and deep roots in the technologies which started Silicon Valley. There are just some very curious and unusual patterns in the transistor's evolutionary progress which I've noticed are all conveniently absent from both the general history books and the scientific literature. So, while there are plenty of planted, so-called "experts" around, mouthing-off about the lunacy of Corso's book, THE TRUTH of the matter is much more supportive of his astonishing assertions! There is likely some very interesting "truth behind the shadows" of this subject.]

But the disclosure envisioned above could have happened in 1950. It did not. Why?

Such a disclosure would lead to the total transformation of the status quo. Centralized energy systems would be obsolete. Oil would be useful only for lubricants and synthetics. The geo-political order of today would be a thing forgotten: Every country and people on Earth would have such a high degree of progress and advancement that all nations would have a seat at the global table. Power would need to be shared. Peaceful acknowledgment of life from elsewhere would make the Earth seem like the very small, organic homeland which it is. The vast trillion-dollar global military-industrial sector would be reigned in. And a universal spirituality might dawn.

But remember, there are hugely powerful interests who dread this scenario. For them, it is the end of the world as they know it. The end of centralized, elite power. The end of a controlled geo-political order which today leaves nearly 90% of the people of Earth barely one step out of the stone age. And they do not wish to share the power they wield.

Now, let me describe the "disclosure" which would make these covert control programs happy. This is the false or contrived "disclosure" which has only one clear goal: The further consolidation of their power and their paradigm. It has to do with fear, not love. With war, not peace. With division and conflict, not unity. It is the dominant paradigm—but it is slipping away slowly. And a carefully orchestrated disclosure of the "facts" of the UFO and ET subject could secure their power. This is the disclosure which is to be dreaded. This is the disclosure to watch out for. This is the disclosure which is already occurring.

My meetings over the past 9 years with covert operatives who have worked on UFO-related programs have introduced me to some characters right out of a spy novel—and then some. Whether in private high-tech industry, at the Pentagon, or at a midnight meeting in a private mansion, a theme has emerged. It is one of immense, though currently hidden, power. It transcends government as we know it. (At this point, the government of "we the people" has been made irrelevant on this issue.) And the theme has two main strands: the eventual covert militarization of the ET subject, and a weird covert religious strain which can only be viewed as bizarre.

Here we find some very strange bed-fellows indeed. War mongers and militarists in cahoots with industrialists who share a certain bizarre eschatological bent: A dark view of the future, featuring an extraterrestrial "Armageddon"—or at least the threat of it. Such a theme supports retrograde and fanatical religious causes, as well as deeply covert military-industrial plans to expand the arms race into space.

In fact, the big players in the so-called "civilian UFO community" are tied into such beliefs and agendas. It strains credulity, I admit, but here is what we have found by penetrating these operations.

From a military-industrial perspective, the disclosure of choice is one which frames the UFO/ET issue in a threatening manner. If a threat from space can be established (as President Reagan liked to say), then the entire world can be united around the need to fight such a threat. This would ensure trillion-dollar-plus military-industrial spending, well into the next century, and beyond. If you think the cold war was costly, wait until you see the price tag for this "protection" from the "threats" in space: The trillions spent on the cold war will look like a blue-light special [at K-mart].

Retrograde and fanatical religious groups, similarly, have great vested interests in fulfilling the promise of "Armageddon". An eschatological paradigm, well enshrined in the belief systems of those running covert UFO projects, is supported by the portrayal of a cosmic conflict in the heavens. Voila! We have the necessity of spinning the UFO/ET issue in the evil invading aliens (translates in religious terms as demons) direction. Indeed, this has already been accomplished, courtesy of the "civilian UFO community" and the tabloid media (which at this point is virtually all media).

Additionally, there is a subtext which can only be viewed as thinly veiled racism. You will note that part of the "new myth" regarding UFOs involves the "good ETs", which invariably are described as "Pleiadians" who are "handsome", White, blue-eyed Aryan-appearing types. Naturally, those "evil, bad ETs" are darker, shorter, look funny, and smell funny. Please. Such clap-trap would have us trade age-old human racism for an extraterrestrial variety. This nonsense and propaganda could only make Hitler proud.

But—that same oversimplification will, as he suggests, likely be exploited as one feature of many (like Project Blue Beam holographic projections in the sky) in creating an overall orchestrated fake-alien-invasion "pageant" to help drive the general, uninformed public into a state of frequency-lowering fear and thereby make it easier for a vast array of mind-control techniques to keep the public under the so-called "elite's" control. After all, far too many ones are beginning to wake up, and something has to be done about this growing, dangerous uppity population which could act, in turn, as a catalyst for awakening a much larger percentage of the sleeping sheep.]

In one lengthy meeting with a multi-billionaire, I was told that he gave great support to UFO activities which propel the so-called "alien abduction" subject into public awareness because he wanted humanity to unite around fighting this "alien threat". Later, this very influential figure informed me that he believed these demonic ETs were the cause of every setback in human history since Adam and Eve. Sound familiar?

Military interests, which are heavily involved in covert projects which hoax ET events, such as human military-related abductions, have a shared goal of demonizing the UFO/ET phenomenon. Doing so lays the foundations for the fear and dread necessary for an organized opposition to all things ET. And this also serves the long-term need to provide a rationale for an expanding global military, even should world peace emerge. In fact, under this scenario, “world peace”—or strictly speaking, peace on Earth—could be secured by the world uniting, eventually, against the “threat from space” referred to by President Reagan. (By the way, personally I believe Reagan was the victim of disinformation specialists who surrounded him and who manipulated him into the statements he made on this subject.)

Under this scenario—currently being gamed and “disclosed” courtesy of the trial-balloon UFO “community”—we would get peace on Earth in exchange for inter-planetary conflict. One step forward, ten steps back. Wonderful.

Such a false and contrived “disclosure of the truth” regarding UFOs and ETs would, then, subserve agendas held by powerful covert interests in both the military-industrial sector, and those of a strange collection of religious fanatics, who pine for Armageddon—and the sooner the better.

[Editor’s note: For you readers who may not be aware of this, it is ALWAYS instructive to look carefully at the roots of these so-called fanatical religious cults. More often than not, following the hidden money trail will lead to covert, government-orchestrated mind-control creations put in place so as to be later utilized for just such “excuses” as Dr. Greer suggests above. Thus, usually this “strange collection of religious fanatics”, as Dr. Greer puts them, are not so really strange at all; they are as contrived and purposeful as are the rest of the players in such an engineered, large-scale pageant.]

Lest the reader think such a strange amalgam of militarists and cult-like religious interests are unlikely, remember the weird views of the Third Reich. Or more recently, the views of one US Department of the Interior cabinet secretary during the Reagan years named James Watt. It was he who, not knowing a microphone was still on and recording his comments, stated in the 1980s that we did not need to worry about all these environmental problems, since Armageddon was coming soon and the world would be destroyed anyway. This bizarre view, held by a man who shaped and applied policy for the Interior Department of the US Government, was later reported in the general media. At the time a comical footnote perhaps. But what does it say about the degree to which such beliefs may be shaping covert UFO policy—and specifically, disclosure plans? We have found that such views—bizarre as they may seem to most—are heavily represented in covert policy development on the UFO subject.

And most disconcerting of all: This strange mixture of military cosmic saberrattling and bizarre religious beliefs are the dominant forces shaping both the “civilian UFO community” and the planned eventual “spin” on UFO disclosure. Let the buyer beware.

[Editor’s note: Remember that the actual, highest-level controllers need a lot of arms and legs to carry out their TRUE plans of complete world control. In that practical context, such a “strange” policy as Dr. Greer relates above no longer is so strange; it acts as a galvanizing cover to motivate without question many non-thinking, fanatical types—the ideal ones you would want to recruit as your arms and legs! Of course, money from a bottomless supply helps oil the machinery too.]

To the rational and intellectual, such views seem ridiculous. Why, you might ask, would anyone want a cosmic war in space, an Armageddon, and the destruction of the Earth? To comprehend this, you have to get inside the head of people who hold such beliefs—people like James Watt. In his case, why worry about a little bit of deforestation, air pollution, and areas of dead oceans, if the entire world is going to be destroyed in a couple of years anyway?

But the thinking goes further than this. Such fanatical thinking has within it the concept that, as a result of the Armageddon, we will see the return of Christ—and with it the good people’s salvation. Now, people are free to believe what they want. But what we have found is a deliberate influencing of covert policy on UFOs by such beliefs. Some of these people want Armageddon—and they want it ASAP.

Strictly speaking, the militarists and warmongers, itching to “kick some alien butt” as it was said in the movie Independence Day, may actually only want a pretext to justify their existence and get the world to eventually spend huge sums of money on a perceived (if contrived) threat from space.

But in some cases—high up on the food chain of the covert entity running UFO secrecy—the two views meet. A place where militarism and eschatology merge. Where Star Wars and Armageddon join.

In tracing the history of both the UFO civilian community and the covert policy-making group concerned with UFOs, we have found a growing penetration of the latter into the former. So much so that, at this point, there are projects which ostensibly are innocent civilian initiatives, but which in reality are totally controlled and financed by “cut-outs” from ultra-secret projects.

Moreover, our careful penetration of such projects yielded the disturbing finding that deep-cover black-project operatives are working closely with alleged civilian researchers, journalists, and UFO glitterati. CIA and military intelligence operatives are working with civilian “think tank” heads, alongside very wealthy business people who are eschatologists, and being advised by “civilian” technologists and scientists—who are themselves proponents of bizarre religious belief systems involving the end of the world and ETs.

Thus, the new “chosen ones” have been assembled. They are planning your disclosure on the UFO/ET subject. They are owned by the money whores and power brokers doing the bidding of the secret entity which runs UFO projects to begin with. And it all looks like a civilian initiative. So innocent. So well-intended. So “scientific”. And by the way, the sky is falling, courtesy of ETs, and we need your money and your souls to defend against it.

Do not be deceived. You need to be awake to the darker scenarios which some would like to thrust upon the world. And you need to know that there are alternatives. If a “disclosure” is unleashed on the world which is xenophobic, militaristic, and terrifying, know that it comes from the spinmeisters of secrecy—regardless of how respectable the person or group may appear to be.

And remember: Part of this disclosure plan involves the use of UFO look-alike devices made by humans in an attack on Earth or military assets of Earth. This would be a well-orchestrated use of advanced human technologies to hoax an ET attack—all for the purpose of disclosing “the truth” with the desired military-oriented spin. In such a scenario, most of humanity will be deceived into believing the threat from space has arrived—and that we must fight it at all costs. This is nothing more than long-term social security for the military-industrial complex. There must be people who can expose this fraud.

But why should we wait for these darker scenarios to be unleashed on an unsuspecting world?

Here is another idea: Why don’t we-the-people unite and launch a disclosure which resembles the first one described above? An honest one. One which leads to peace, not war. To a sustainable and beautiful world, free of pollution, and brimming with abundance of all types. One which reaches out into the unknown, instead of firing particle beam weapons into the darkness of space.

Additionally, we welcome those who can come forward with first-hand knowledge of the machinations referred to in this paper, and who wish to expose such madness, to contact us at the www.cseti.org website address. The one thing the darkness of secrecy cannot tolerate is a spotlight shining right on it. And the more of us holding The Light, the better.

Evil steps in when good people do nothing. This is a lesson taught through thousands of years of human history. We stand at the beginning of a new time, and a new world awaits us. But we must embrace it, and help create it. For if we are passive, others will have their way—at least in the short run.

CLINTON ORDERS HUGE ANTI-IRAQ BUILDUP

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 1/24/00: [quoting]

Is Clinton building up the military in Kuwait to start another war in the Middle East? Is he trying to overcome a legacy plagued by "Monica syndrome"?

by Mike Blair

President Bill Clinton may be preparing U.S. military forces for another Middle East war, perhaps an all-out effort to topple Iraqi strongman Saddam Hussein, intelligence sources tell The SPOTLIGHT.

According to sources, the Air Force is dispatching men and equipment to Kuwait, where airfields and other military installations are being improved. In addition, a permanent brigade headquarters is being established in Kuwait to provide command and control for units sent there, the sources said.

KEY ROLE

According to sources, if any major war against Iraq is undertaken, Kuwait would play a key role in the action, particularly as a jumping-off point in an invasion of Iraq.

Clinton is aware of the fact that his predecessor, President George Bush, will long be remembered for his leadership during his lightning-quick victory over the forces of Saddam, even though the Iraqi leader survived the war and emerged a popular enemy of the United States.

"Clinton could be envisioning himself and his place in history if he could do what Bush failed to do—complete the task of pushing Iraq farther back into the Stone Age and getting rid of Saddam" a source told The SPOTLIGHT.

Kuwait was invaded and occupied by Iraq, triggering the 1991 Persian Gulf War against Iraq.

Other possibilities are major strikes at Algeria and Afghanistan. That may be triggered by any purported "Middle East terrorist attack" against American targets abroad or within the United States.

Clinton alerted the Pentagon just before Christmas that any terrorist act directed from the Middle East would be answered with prompt strikes against Algeria and Afghanistan, where anti-American terrorists are claimed to be taking refuge, a reliable source told The SPOTLIGHT.

Many observers believe that Clinton, whose legacy as president will likely be his impeachment and sexual misadventures, may be seeking something spectacular during his remaining days in office to bolster his standing in the history books.

"With Democrat Party members distancing themselves from him, critics writing of his failed policy in the Balkans and the recent defeat of his nuclear test ban treaty by the Senate, Bill Clinton is acting strange" Military magazine reported in its January issue.

The magazine has close ties, through an "ole boy network", with U.S. military intelligence.

"European writers are questioning his actions, like a recent lone session on a golf course, in the rain, slashing at the ball, as a man in deep depression who sees his legacy becoming one he never imagined," the magazine noted. "They fear he may start a war in the Middle East or some place in order to preside over a quick victory." [End quoting]

Don't forget the overheard quote that he made at a White House function when the comment was made that he could win reelection by getting World War III started even if it is now unconstitutional to be reelected for a third term—either that or more likely declare himself in control (becoming the dictator). Do you think he can be stopped under the recent conditions in this country???

LATEST Y2K OIL & GAS NEWS

From the INTERNET, "CJM" <CJM@dreamsoft.com>, 1/21/00: [quoting]

It's been awhile since I've checked the news and stuff. After about 2 weeks of not looking, I check-in to find that the Oil & Gas biz has been Very Active! Whatever the real "Reasons" for what is happening, there seems to be an undeniable shortage of world oil supply as indicated by the following report(s) from the International Energy Association (IEA) and others as repeated from <Yahoo.com/news>.

The last time prices of crude were this high was during the Gulf War, the time before that was during the '70s oil embargo. Why now, in the year 2000? Is there a war? An oil embargo? What? Could it be that there is a significant drop in world-wide oil capacity due to unreported Y2K disruptions in the oil and gas infrastructures? Who knows. But there is a drop nevertheless!

Check out these headlines of interest (all within the last couple of days or so):

IEA: Oil Shortage Looming—LONDON (AP)—Global demand for oil increased much faster than supplies at the end of last year, pinching inventories and driving up prices as buyers hoarded crude ahead of feared Y2K-related disruptions, a respected industry study said Thursday[1/20/00].

"The numbers show markets that are tight and getting tighter," said the monthly report by the International Energy Agency.

Signs that OPEC will extend its production cuts in output beyond March have added to upward pressure on oil prices. Prices for the benchmark oils of Europe and the United States rose by more than 4 percent in December and surged further this week. West Texas Intermediate crude in the U.S. was flirting with $30 a barrel, a level not seen since the January 1991 outbreak of the Gulf War. Oil Strengthens As Fears of Shortage Revive—LONDON (Reuters)—Buoyant oil prices pushed higher Monday amid expectations of supply shortages after OPEC signaled it would prolong curbs on exports beyond March. LINK: <http://dailynews.yahoo.com/h/nm/20000117/bs/markets_oil_18.html>.

Oil Prices Touch Post-Gulf War High—LONDON (AP)—Petroleum prices surged Wednesday to the highest levels seen since the Gulf War, raising concerns about worsening inflation and a possible threat to the economies of poor, oil-importing nations. LINK: <<http://>

by Stuart H. Rodman
<www.stuarthrodman.com>

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com/politics6/petro.htm>>, 1-25-2000: [quoting]

Remember that old expression? If it looks like a duck and it quacks like a duck, it's---well, you know.

Recent revelations about the oil and gas industry may be making that old expression especially meaningful for many. Since January 1, 2000 accidents or glitches in the industry may have suddenly nearly tripled in number when compared to the entire year of 1998! Based on a new analysis, unplanned plant shutdowns, fires, and explosions may be occurring now on an exponential curve.

No formal explanations have been offered yet for this sudden epidemic of mishaps, but many observers had expected to see such problems in an industry widely believed to have been unprepared to face the Y2K computer bug that has been officially declared "squished".

And, hey, brace for impact! What's suddenly happened to the price of crude oil?

Since January 1, 2000 it has skyrocketed to a near ten-year high, recently threatening the $30-a-barrel levels last seen during the Gulf War.

So far there has been no panic at the gas pumps, but then again, most retailers are still selling the relatively cheap gas they bought just a few weeks ago. Wait until they have to price-factor-in the latest news.

The refinery in Venezuela, which is the largest supplier of refined crude to the U.S., has broken down unexpectedly and may remain off-line until March. How come? They call it an "act of God"!

It might all just be a big, ugly coincidence, but trend-line projections for accident occurrences might be shattering on the desktops of statisticians all around the world as you read this.

Consider these numbers, though still perhaps tentative, as reported from other sources by Marcia L. Peters. The data reflect known incidents within the petroleum industry for factory, generating plant, pipeline explosions, and fires as displayed on her website <<http://nckodokan.com/charts/crude.html>>:

Summary:

1990 - 3 reports

1991 - 1 report

1992 - 1 report

1993 - 1 report

1994 - 1 report

1995 - 2 reports

1996 - 6 reports

1997 - 5 reports

1998 - 29 reports

2000 - As of TODAY there have been 64 reports since 1/1/2000!!!!!! [That would calculate out to an average of well over 800 reports for the entire year at the current rate!]

Did you think they are planning to call a news conference to tell us that they have been having problems with the automated systems that control these processes because they really are not, in fact, Y2K compliant?

Fat chance.

The sudden outbreak of unexplained equipment failures in the oil and gas industry might have nothing to do with Y2K. But even if it does, special Year-2000 laws enacted by Congress, like Public Law 105-271, all but assure that Y2K-related disclosures from huge corporations will never see the light of day.

Going public to admit a deficiency may defeat that same shield of liability protection that the special interests have lobbied so long and hard to obtain for themselves. With the Year 2000 finally upon us, we might instead expect to be hearing a lot more about "swamp gas".

Getting to the truth will not be an easy task. The newly enacted federal Year-2000 statutes make information about corporate Y2K disclosures to government agencies "non disclosable", even under the Freedom of Information Act!

Does it really matter?

Some think we may find ourselves with plenty of time to ponder that question while we wait in long lines to fill our gas tanks later this winter.

In the meantime, NY Governor Pataki has called for a federal investigation into rising fuel prices, and several Senators, including the co-chairman of the Senate Select Committee on the Year-2000

Technology Problem, Christopher Dodd, have called for a preemptive sale of oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

Rising demand for heating oil, brought on by the severe cold in the Northeast, is further complicating the problem, and spot shortages of refined products may not be far off.

Fire up that freeze dried food, and plan to set a spell.

Oh yeah! Don't forget that down-filled comforter though. Whatever the truth, it's going to come in handy. [End quoting]

This subject and related data is more tricky to analyze than it appears on the surface. Sure, there may be some true Y2K-related problems adding to the total number of accident reports. But if that were the only answer, then why such an increase in 1998 and especially in 1999?

What if "we" have been planning another serious war in the Middle East (or anywhere), and "they" did not want such to occur, and had the available technology (such as space-based charged-particle beam-weapons) to cripple fuel production facilities worldwide if need be? Advanced, secret technologies are utilized all the time for geopolitical reasons usually hidden from the public eye.

And the next item is likely another example of such "warfare". Wonder what chess game is going on that involves France?

300 MILLION TREES DOWNED IN FRENCH STORMS "A CATASTROPHE"

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.sightings.com>>, 1/4/00: [quoting]

The two storms which devastated France last week destroyed about 300 million trees, the National Forestry Office (ONF) said Tuesday. "It is a catastrophe without precedent" said the ONF's technical director Jacques Trouvilliez.

Across the country, vast swathes of woodland have been smashed or uprooted—from the orchards of Normandy to the great parks of Paris, to the vast plantations in the northeast.

As always, I appreciate the many contributions you readers make to this column. God

In the Vosges mountains, 35 percent of public forestry has been destroyed, and aerial pictures show huge areas of pine trees laid out like corn, a few bare trunks bearing witness to the vanished landscape.

In the grounds of the palace of Versailles, 10,000 trees have been uprooted, including two 200-year-old cedars, totally transforming the vista created by Louis XIV's gardener Le Notre.

And at the arboretum of the Natural History Museum outside Paris, the winds felled ten percent of the trees, which have been collected there over generations from all corners of the world. "It's back to square one; 40 years have been lost. Some of these trees we will never be able to replace" said Yves-Marie Allain, director of cultivation.

The impact for many is a highly emotional one, with the disappearance of a well-loved old oak or a line of poplars down a country road.

But for the half-a-million people in France whose jobs depend on the forestry business, the storms present a direct threat to their livelihood.

The immediate concern is a sudden fall in the price of wood, as the estimated 10 million cubic metres are sawed up. "If a tree has been uprooted, it is not so serious" explained Sylvie Benda Alvarez, of the ONF economy department. "The wood is undamaged and it can be stored for maybe a year in water.

"The real problem is where trees have been smashed, because the wood is unusable for building, and goes for pulp or wood fibre.

"A good oak will nominally get you 800 francs (120 euros, dollars) per square metre. If it is damaged, it will get perhaps 35 francs (5.5 euros, dollars)."

Agriculture Minister Jean Glavany visited the worst hit area, Lorraine in the northeast, on Monday and said an aid package would be announced.

The government will also co-ordinate with producers to make sure as much of possible of the wood is kept off the market, and released gradually to ensure price stability.

Forestry experts have said it will take up to 100 years to re-establish the destroyed woodland, and the emphasis will be where possible on letting forests regenerate naturally. "We know that, the more diverse a forest, the better it can withstand violent storms like last week's" said Benda Alvarez. "So unless a forest has been totally massacred, we won't replant—just let the various seeds germinate themselves."

The importance of diversity of forestry is one lesson being drawn. Another is that younger trees appear to be weaker than older ones.

Experts say trees are growing much more rapidly today than 100 years ago, thanks to greater quantities of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, with the result that they are ganglier and weaker.

One side-benefit is that younger trees replacing the destroyed parts of the forest will consume more greenhouse gases, thus helping the fight against pollution.

The sheer scale of the disaster to France's woodland was spelt out by historian Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie.

Looking back in the Figaro newspaper over official forestry records going back to the early 17th century, he said no similar catastrophe has ever been mentioned. "The forests were extremely closely inspected because of their importance for the navy, but...since 1660 there is no mention of a macro-phenomenon on this immense scale" he said. [End quoting]

We also saw what happened in France just a few days later, when they had the massive snow and cold.

In Venezuela, a few days before this, they had massive floods, and all around the world there are unprecedented types of disasters. No matter where you're located, it would be wise to be prepared to "weather" some kind of disaster.

SCIENTISTS GROW FROG EYES AND EARS, TECHNOLOGY THAT COULD BE USED TO GROW HUMAN ORGANS

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 1/4/00: [quoting]

Japanese researchers have grown frog eyes and ears in a lab using the animal's own embryo cells, technology a scientist said Monday could eventually help doctors replace lost or damaged human sensory organs using cells from the patients' bodies.

Makoto Asashima, a biologist at prestigious Tokyo University, said the process is an alternative to donor transplants.

The team cultivated thousands of embryo cells in a retinoic acid solution for five days to produce the organs, he said.

Varying the concentration of the retinoic acid somehow brings forth different genetic instructions in the cells, Asashima said. A lower concentration activates a set of genes producing eyes, while a higher concentration activates genes producing ears.

The researchers used embryonic stem cells, the ancestral cells that develop into the tissues and organs in the body.

The procedure is different from cloning, in which a single cell from an organism grows into a copy of the original, he said.

Asashima said his team is the first to produce the eyes or ears of an animal in a test tube.

In a similar, simpler procedure, the researcher said he previously grew frog kidneys and transplanted them into other frogs.

The recipient animals lived for more than a month, he said. The team did not test the survival rate of frogs with transplanted natural kidneys, he said.

Hideyuki Okano, a professor of neural development at Osaka University's Graduate School of Medicine, said Asashima's work was "extremely striking".

Okano, who has been following the research, said it could eventually help scientists reduce reliance on donors for rare organs.

Scientists are already able to grow human skin from patients' own cells, and such transplants are carried out in the United States, Europe, and Japan, Asashima said.

Asashima said he plans to submit his findings, which were first reported in Monday's Mainichi newspaper, to one of two Japanese scientific journals, Zoological Science or Developmental Growth And Differentiation. [End quoting]

The fact that these kinds of announcements are now being routinely made in the publicly visible media should be a big clue as to the TRUE, much more advanced state of such research "behind closed doors". What kinds of moral or ethical checks and balances do you suppose are governing such advanced, secret research? There's a thought to help you sleep peacefully at night!

FLU SHOTS DO THEY REALLY WORK?

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, Oct. 2000: [quoting]

The answer to that question depends upon whom you rely upon for your information. If you believe public health professionals who rather blindly accept the assurances of flu vaccine manufacturers and who depend upon the flushot flow of money for a living, then, yes, flu shots work. If, on the other hand, you believe that field experience, peer reviewed studies, and actual statistics published by the Morbidity And Mortality Weekly Report, as reported by entities such as the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, then the answer is no—flu shots don't work.

By Kristine A. Severyn, R.Ph., Ph.D.

Every autumn the elderly and other high-risk groups are encouraged to receive influenza vaccine (flu shots). Congress authorized Medicare funding for flu shots in 1993, believing that vaccination costs are less than hospitalization costs related to influenza complications. Was Congress misled when it authorized this $80 million per year Medicare flu shot entitlement? Have vaccine recipients been misled?

Although influenza is associated with more disease, hospitalization, and death in "at risk" populations, no adequate controlled studies exist which prove that influenza vaccine reduces the incidence of influenza in these groups.

CDC CRYSTAL BALL

Influenza virus strains mutate, necessitating a new vaccine each year. Technicians affiliated with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) collect influenza viruses from pigs and people in foreign lands, e.g., China. CDC personnel then attempt to predict which viruses will infect people in the U.S. the following year—the CDC crystal ball. These CDC-selected viruses are distributed to vaccine manufacturers early in the year for influenza vaccine production, for administration that autumn. [End quoting]

The controversy over flu shots seems to get more stirred-up each year, rather than being resolved. Many people report personal experiences which would suggest staying as far away from these shots as possible. Do you really know what is in them? Our Front Page story this issue ought to awaken many from the slumber of blind trust in the pronouncements of the medical community.

It is most important to call to mind the classic, well-researched 1988 book by Eustace Mullins called MURDER BY INJECTION: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy Against America. (If you're interested in this gem, as well as other eye-opening research by Eustace Mullins, write to: Ezra Pound Institute Of Civilization, 126 Madison Place, Staunton, VA 24401 for a list of his currently available books and their prices.) Many antics of the medical arena come into a sharper (if harsher) focus in light of the documented foundation which Eustace provides.

PROBLEMS CONTINUE TO PLAGUE
ANTHRAX VACCINATION PROGRAM FOR MILITARY PERSONNEL

From THE SPOTLIGHT, by William Carmichael, 1/3/00: [quoting]

Cost Overruns, Safety Concerns Plague Vaccination Program.

Good news for GIs: The government hasn't been able to force a controversial, unproven vaccination on all the nation's troops.

The government thinks it's bad news, but many people disagree.

Defense Secretary William Cohen's goal of inoculating all 2.4 million active-duty service members and reservists against anthrax remains a distant one. The Pentagon says 383,000 service members have now received anthrax, vaccinations—far from the 100 percent goal announced by the Department of Defense a year ago.

David Oliver, deputy undersecretary of defense for acquisition, technology, and logistics said: "We underestimated how difficult this was going to be."

A number of servicemen have refused the injection, resulting in courts martial. The total number of "refuseniks" remains a Pentagon secret, however.

According to a report released Dec. 13, the Pentagon said that obtaining a reliable supply of the vaccine remains a problem. The lack of Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval is one of the complaints of those service personnel refusing the inoculations.

MORE MONEY

Only one company is manufacturing the vaccine, BioPort Corp. of Lansing, Michigan. And it has been plagued with production problems and cost overruns.

Even though it has built a new plant in Lansing to produce the vaccine for the military, it has not yet obtained FDA approval to begin production there.

According to published reports, the Pentagon agreed in August to pay more per dose and to make an $18.7 million advance payment to BioPort to enable the company to pay off creditors. Now, an additional $7 million to $10 million from the federal government may be needed, Oliver said. [End quoting]

Not just a "problem" in the United States, military personnel in at least Canada, Britain, and Europe are likewise suspicious of the anthrax vaccine and refusing to be inoculated. If we have no way of really knowing what's been put in a flu shot, imagine the latitude that the military has in "customizing" their inoculations. One wonders just what the need is for these shots, all of a sudden, and many military personnel question what else may be the true motive for the injections—such as the possible inclusion of the latest versions of small electronic chips to "help" them be "better" soldiers.

UNCONTROLLABLE TREASURY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 1/17/00: [quoting]

The Treasury Department is "clearly out of control" concluded a report by Alan Balaran, an investigator appointed by U.S. District Court Judge Royce Lamberth in Washington, D.C. Last January, Treasury lawyers failed to keep the agency from shredding 162 boxes of documents related to a lawsuit by American Indians, according to Balaran. He noted that the lawyers covered up the shredding for more than 14 weeks and misled Lamberth about it. A month later, then Treasury Sec. Robert Rubin and Interior Sec. Bruce Babbitt were cited by Lamberth for contempt of court. [End quoting]

Considering the international banking interests who have been in control of our U.S. Treasury ever since the late-night, sneaky passage of the Federal Reserve Act in 1913, one might look to the Italian Mafia for a more honestly run organization. So, just imagine the resistance to be met when there is being conducted a sincere investigation of the Treasury Department, and that investigation, furthermore, may have to do with matters concerning the Native Americans. It would be easier to probe the dark secrets at the Vatican!

To understand more about this subject, read another classic gem of a book by Eustace Mullins, called Secrets Of The Federal Reserve. QUESTIONS AND SPECULATIONS
CONCERNING HARRISON STABBING

From the INTERNET, ©2000 NewsHawk® Inc. <hawkeye@saber.net>, dated 1/4/00: [quoting]

On December 30, less than two days before the beginning of the year 2000, former Beatles' member George Harrison was attacked and stabbed in his home outside London. Harrison would very likely have been killed if his wife Olivia hadn't smashed a lamp on the attacker's head.

Considering what happened to Harrison's former band-mate, John Lennon, on the streets of New York almost exactly 19 years before, and considering the Beatles' key, pivotal role in the mass social experimentation carried out by Britain's Tavistock Institute in conjunction with covert intelligence agencies like the CIA, NSA and Britain's MI-5/MI-6, we'd say there is a strong likelihood that Harrison, like Lennon, was NOT the victim of some random act of senseless violence.

In fact, Lennon was murdered shortly after he gave an interview to Playboy magazine in which he blew the lid off the fact that the Beatles were part of massive experimentation in social control/engineering unleashed by Tavistock and intelligence agencies, as was the deliberate introduction of drugs like LSD into the burgeoning "counterculture" scene during the 1960s and 1970s. The Playboy interview was published not long after Lennon's death.

We'd say it's a good possibility Harrison was targeted to be bumped off by some of the same forces responsible for rubbing out Lennon, using MK-Ultra/Manchurian Candidate-type mind-controlled assassin Mark David Chapman.

Perhaps Harrison had likewise done something to incur the wrath of his former "programmers" or perhaps it's just "company" procedure to terminate operatives of whatever designation at some point in time, lest they somehow become an unnecessary security risk.

Perhaps George Harrison had been designated as some sort of "sacrificial victim" by the demented, obsessed, criminally insane, ritualistically-oriented Illuminati power-brokers operating behind the scenes of so many events in the world. Perhaps there was some connection between this attempted "sacrifice" and the end of the 20th century/beginning of the new millennium (even though that REALLY begins next year).

The Beatles' movie HELP! kept coming to mind.

Right off the bat, we wondered if perhaps the near-fatal assault on Harrison was linked to elements of the covert government, and there were some indications this may have been the case.

Few pop bands had as much impact on the latter half of the 20th century as did the Beatles. How ironic, then, that less than 48 hours before what was generally considered the end of this century, Harrison was nearly killed in a rather ritualistic fashion—by a knife.

The number “33”, a very significant number in Masonic symbology, seems to pop up with more than random frequency as having been a factor—somehow or other—in many events or incidents which have ritualistic, cult-like aspects. To name but one such recent event, there was a WEALTH of 33s which figured in the crash of Egyptair Flight 990 (33x3x10).

Sure enough, we find some 33s showing up in the Harrison stabbing incident.

The attacker, Michael Abram, is 33 years old.

And even more freaky, the attack was said to have occurred at THREE-THIRTY in the morning (London time).

The DATE of the attack was 12.30.99. In numerology, the numbers of this date tally up to SIX, which is THREE plus THREE.

Some similarities have emerged between the knife attack upon Harrison and the New York City street-shooting of Harrison's ex-bandmate John Lennon in December 1980.

As with Chapman (the mind-controlled assassin who killed John Lennon), the person who wielded a 7-inch knife against Harrison and his wife Olivia on Wednesday night in their home near London, a Michael Abram, is shaping up as some kind of fanatical lunatic who had only fairly recently become “obsessed” with the Beatles, according to Abram's mother, Lynda. She also said that her son “hates” the Beatles and believes them to be “witches.”

What she describes about her son's “beliefs” regarding the Beatles sounds to us like Michael Abram was subjected to Manchurian Candidate/ MK-Ultra/Monarch/Montauk-style belief-system conditioning, inculcated in the target subject by such means as drug- or EM/ RF-assisted hypnotic trance induction or the like, as part of an overall mind-control program.

There are other anomalous and peculiar aspects to the entire incident—some of which George Harrison has already commented upon publicly. Harrison said the man “was certainly not intent on burglary”.

The attacker, in fact, seemed quite proficient at wielding a knife, stabbing Harrison four times—the most serious wound was only an inch from Harrison's heart.

For another example, one of the more inexplicable aspects is how the attacker, now charged with two counts of attempted murder, was able to penetrate what Harrison's neighbors describe as “Fort Knox”-like security at the Harrison residence. Police have repeatedly noted their amazement that Abram was able to penetrate the extensive, elaborate security in place around Harrison's house.

Obviously this was, in some way or other, an “inside” job.

And furthermore, we'd really like to know whether slasher Abram was carrying a copy of J. D. Salinger's Catcher In The Rye, as were both Lennon's murderer Chapman and would-be Reagan assassin John Hinckley—NOT to mention the MK-Ultra mind-controlled assassin “Jerry” played by Mel Gibson in the surprisingly revealing movie Conspiracy Theory.

Salinger, a quite accomplished and well-respected author whose book Catcher In The Rye is required reading for a great many high school students in the U.S., had extensive ties to the CIA throughout most of his adult and professional life, including his stint as a university professor.

We're very relieved to hear that neither of the Harrisons were seriously injured in the stabbing assault. [End quoting]

In order to truly appreciate the above information and speculation, it is helpful to have the important background information provided in, say, David Icke's books (see later in this News Desk) and Dr. John Coleman's outstanding CONSPIRATORS' HIERARCHY: The Story Of The Committee Of 300 (available from: Joseph Publishing, 2533 N. POKÉMON—SNATCHING A PEEK AT YOU

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, David W. Hodges, <<http://www.txdirect.net/~dwhodges/pokemon.html>>, 1/21/00: [quoting]

What could be sinister about a cute animation which once sent hundreds of Japanese children into seizures with flashing lights, strobing from a character's eyes? It has been suggested that Pokémon may be a part of the quiet new frontier of electronic influence, the science of adjusting, or retuning, consciousness using light pulses and/or specific sound frequencies. If this is, in fact, a hidden truth of Pokémon, it only worsens the impact of the dirty little secret which rests within plain sight, a secret which anyone with a VCR can confirm. There is a pedophiliac undercurrent within the animated Pokémon series, and it all begins in each episode with a sneaky little Pikachu.

WHERE TO LOOK & STILL-FRAME WITH YOUR VCR

Within the middle of every episode's startup introduction, there is a sequence of character presentations which are not episode clippings. This particular sequence of the introduction begins with the main character, Ash Catchem, joined a second later by his companions, Misty and Brock. Next comes the image of the antagonistic team Rocket (Jessie & James), displaced immediately by their 3 Pokémon, centered upon the cat “Meowth”. Then comes the image of Ash Catchem's arch-rival, Gary, followed by receding views of 3 different Pokémon in succession as the camera seems to pull backwards very rapidly.

Next, you see Ash standing in a road, bouncing a Pokéball in his hand, while in the background Pikachu is running towards the camera very fast.

Ash quickly fades back and out of view. He is replaced by a young girl standing, feet spread, wearing leg warmers, an extremely short green skirt, an orange blouse, and a really huge red bow at her collar. (This girl has no role in the show.) Suddenly Pikachu comes charging forward, running between her legs with its tail held high. Pikachu's tail lifts the little girl's skirt and displays her uncovered vaginal cleft for 3 brief frames. The remaining frames of the little girl show her looking downward, with her knees suddenly brought together and both hands holding down her skirt, all this while Pikachu completes a center screen leap into a light.

This pubic “peek-at-you” portion is immediately followed by a brief scene showing the 4 main authority figures, standing together, giving a single, synchronized nod to the viewer, as if they are condoning what the subconscious just saw. The introduction then proceeds into more clippings from various episodes. Gotta catch'em all! Gotta catch'em all! Who is really “them”—fictional Pokémon, or the children watching?

Once you clearly glimpse the intentional illustration of the little girl's vagina, Pikachu suddenly makes much more sense when you listen to the way the name sounds, which is “Peek-at-you”.

As soon as I am able to purchase the necessary hardware or gain someone's assistance, I will post the “peek-at-you” video frames on this website, but until then, you will have to rely upon a VCR and frame-by-frame advance, if it has that feature. If it does not, I suggest you record the introductory segment in SP (Standard Play) mode to maximize both image quality and frame count. You will then have to catch one of the frames I have described to you by using the “pause” button and a sense of timing.

“Pocket Monsters” began as a video game, and when it expanded into an animated series, the name was shortened to “Pokémon”. Knowing this, set aside the Pokémon connection for a moment, and consider the impression made by someone saying that they have a monster in their pocket. There is culturally inherent sexual innuendo involved in the idea of having, or showing, a “pocket monster”. It seems the sort of ploy that depravity would use trying to seduce a child.

One could try to argue that there is no connection, but the very fact that there is connection enough to argue about should be connection enough to concern any parent or guardian of a young, impressionable mind. It is a curious thing that, within the world of Pokémon, one is either battling to become a “master” or aspiring to be a “breeder”. To be a breeder is the noblest goal, according to the show. Gotta catch ’em all! Gotta catch ’em all!

In Japan, Japanese animation is primarily adult-oriented. It often contains violence, eroticism, and sexuality. Even so, why have such things been woven into what is unquestionably a children’s animated series? Although I cannot provide an answer to this, I can provide more evidence of it.

The mons veneris (Latin for “hill of Venus”, Roman goddess of love) is the pad of fatty tissue that covers the pubic bone below the abdomen but above the labia. The mons is sexually sensitive in some women and protects the pubic bone from the impact of sexual intercourse.

Knowing this, consider what is implied by “pokie mons”. Though “Pokémon” is minus the s, I would argue that the monster is still there, subtly woven sexual innuendo within the show’s infrastructure. Is this just another coincidental connection children will probably miss consciously, or another intended furrow in seed-rows of the subconscious? The subconscious mind doesn’t miss a beat, but consciousness grabs maybe 1 beat out of 15 on a good day, where beats are bits of information.

“Got-ta catch ’em, gotta catch ’em all! Gotta catch ’em all, Pokémon!” These are a few words from Pokémon’s theme song, and as often as they are repeated, one is apt to remember or react to them. Gotta “catch ’em”. Gotta “catchem”. Catchem seems the verb, the action; or, perhaps, an order to act.

Gotta catch ’em all! Gotta catch ’em all! You hear this over and over and over, in the opening, in the closing, and in the ads. Once in awhile “Catchem” gets stuck behind “Ash”, and I cannot help wondering what, exactly, I am supposed to catch. It is a name with contextual bias; it seems slightly out of place. I have tried replacing “h” with “s” in “Ash” for insight into the murky motivations of this profitable, socially invasive programming, but I failed to reach a conclusion.

Where pokéballs fit into the analysis is not a topic I have invested energy into deciphering. Pokéballs are home to captive pocket monsters.

“THE KANGASKHAN KID”

One of the more disturbing episodes in the Pokémon series is called “The Kangaskhan Kid”. The story is set in a Pokémon reserve, and it involves a young, boomerang wielding wild boy, Tomo, who has been adopted by a herd of Kangaskhan. As the show progresses, a man and his wife are introduced; the man, called “papa”, is short, and wears a mustache which gives him an Adolph Hitler look. This couple explains that they have come searching for their son, Tommy. In a flashback sequence, we watch papa suspended a very young boy outside of his moving helicopter, to give the child a better view. We then watch papa drop Tommy, to his wife’s dismay; then he blames her for not holding the child.

After some pleading, the main characters volunteer to help the couple search for Tommy, and in the next scene, the protagonists struggle and complain as they carry the couple upon a pole-suspended platform. Mama said, “I apologize for this. Papa doesn’t get outdoors much, and he’s not in the best of shape.” Never does she offer to walk and lighten their load. Papa then pipes in with “I admit it!”

Tomo, or Tommy, soon finds the group as they try to help a young, injured Kangaskhan. Mistaking their intentions as being hurtful, Tomo throws his boomerang and strikes Ash in the head, only to be screamed at and berated by Misty for doing so. Mama begins trying to get Tomo to remember them, but without success. Papa suddenly bashes the boy on his head with a club, knocking him unconscious. Soon after Tomo regains consciousness, Mama again prompts him to remember them. Papa then begins undressing himself as he speaks to the boy saying “Tommy, remember Papa”? Misty quickly strikes Papa on the head with a club, and as she drags his body away, she says “One memory at a time!”

As the episode progresses, confrontations with the evil Team Rocket occur as the result of their latest plan to steal and create mayhem with a huge, armed, metal replica of a Kangaskhan. Papa eventually saves the day by crashing his helicopter into the monster; then Tommy remembers them as he views the wreckage, believing they are dead. His parents were not killed, however, and Tommy then faces a dilemma of not wanting to leave his Kangaskhan family. The show ends with the entire family, dressed in animal skins like Tomo’s, tucked within the pouch of a very large Kangaskhan.

M Y S T Y ’ S F I S T

I have read nationally syndicated articles praising Pokémon as being a wholesome, nonviolent, value-filled animation, but I can only imagine that such opinions came from the Pokémon production propaganda press-release package.

Pokémon do not battle with the level of violence which the human characters exhibit, specifically the two lead, redheaded females, Misty & Jessie.

While you would expect the antagonist (Jessie) to be hot-tempered, she is only occasionally violent. Misty’s temper, however, explodes regularly.

Sometimes her head enlarges to 5 times its normal size as she SCREAMS with an enormous mouth of fanged teeth. More often, Misty’s temper results in physical violence when someone aggravates her, creating a huge, raised knot on the head or face of her victim, usually her friends, Ash Catchem or Brock. (Brock’s character just left the show, and someone new should be joining the little team.)

Consider the message that is being transferred by scenes of lashing out in anger, the message of a female striking a male friend, especially since the relationships and violence are closer to realism than any of the super-hero battlings or ray-gun-blasting-type cartoons. There is certainly realistic personality development and interaction between the protagonists. Apologies are never offered, but the huge knots Misty inflicts on her friends do disappear quickly.

Perhaps exposing that there is underlying sexuality and occasional, unjustifiable violence will encourage more adults to watch this show.

It is only wise, especially these days, to be vigilant about monitoring what our children are watching on television—or do we, by neglect, want to see them programmed to be good New World Order robots, as the so-called “elite” desire and are accomplishing with their many methods of mind control?

SPECIAL REPORT REVEALS “THE SECRETS OF POKÉMON”

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.sightings.com>>, 1/4/00: [quoting]

By Jon Kelly <jon@retropics.com>

Are hidden messages in the soundtrack for the Pokémon TV show, teaching violent behavior to children? Analysis shows clearly audible references to guns and dysfunction in the speech of the show’s characters. Are these messages appropriate for a young viewing audience? What values are being taught through children’s television programming?

Do you ever wonder what your children are watching on television? If they are like millions of other children in North America, they are probably watching the hit cartoon series Pokémon.

The primary goal in Pokémon is to find, capture, and train various monsters, all in an effort to become the world’s greatest Pokémon trainer. “You teach me and I’ll teach you” as the show’s theme song tells us. But children are learning other lessons as well.

In December 1999 Britain's Telegraph reported: "The latest craze to hit toyshops in Britain has been denounced by US police as 'America's most dangerous hobby' after causing a surge in child crime. Children across the US are stabbing, beating and robbing each other to steal Pokémon trading cards.... [In Philadelphia] six children have been arrested for separate attacks on classmates to steal cards.... Prosecutors in Orange County, California, have filed charges against a 13-year-old boy who is accused of stealing a classmate's Pokémon cards and then running him over with his bicycle."

Why are children responding with such violent behavior? We've applied Retropics speech analysis to an episode of the Pokémon television series called "The School of Hard Knocks". This approach has revealed startling new information hidden within the spoken dialogue.

The Retropics approach to speech analysis utilizes audio recording and editing technology to reverse and slow down recordings of speech. Concentrated listening to the modified recording reveals intelligible words and phrases hidden backwards within spoken communications.

These expressions communicate the beliefs, memories, and feelings of the speaker in mundane and archetypal language that can be accurately interpreted through rational and intuitive analysis.

Expressions are documented in audio format, presenting the forward context within which the expression appears, followed by the hidden expression played back at 100%, 60% and 40% of the original speed.

Subjective listening procedures, such as those utilized by the American National Standards Institute, are still considered by audio engineers as the best measure of speech intelligibility. Retropics expressions are documented as authentic, intelligible speech by a computer-audio systems expert with two years of practical daily experience in the recording and application of these specific speech phenomena.

Recent Caltech research shows that our minds can hear and interpret backwards recordings as intelligible speech. The expressions presented in our report are therefore unconsciously identified, interpreted, and memorized by the viewers.

Do these hidden messages form a part of what Pokémon teaches children about how to get along with others? Consider the following examples posted to <www.retropics.com>:

THEY'RE PLAY FAMILY. This expression is found in the theme song. Does Pokémon provide a quality family experience?

GET A GUN. Two children are involved in a dispute. Has this girl been taught to resolve conflicts through the escalation of force?

WE SCREW YOU. Two characters express their affection towards one of the Pokémon creatures. The male character gives this expression, but is it appropriate?

To hear the audio files, visit <www.retropics.com>. Listen to these expressions and decide for yourself: are these the lessons we want to teach young children? [End quoting]

The above is, unfortunately, just one of many possible examples of the kinds of sophisticated subliminal programming techniques being employed today for a wide variety of no-good reasons. One wonders, for example, what may be injected into the so-called background music being played in grocery and other stores. Refer back to the unsettling and somewhat overwhelming report covering various mind-control techniques just presented in the January issue of The SPECTRUM.

SATELLITES TO STOP CARS FROM SPEEDING

From the INTERNET, <http://www.sightings.com>, 1/4/00: [quoting]

Drivers might be automatically stopped from speeding by an electronic device that could be fitted to all cars within 10 years.

The system uses satellite navigation to pinpoint the location of each vehicle, an in-car computer loaded with a road map and the speed limits for each street in the country, and a device to cut-off the fuel supply if the speed limits are exceeded.

Any attempt to introduce such a sophisticated device for controlling speed automatically would see the biggest row over state interference in road freedom since seatbelt legislation. It is also likely to be resisted by auto manufacturers who rely heavily on images of fast cars to sell new models.

However, researchers predict that the equipment, which would cost only a few hundred pounds per car, will come to be widely accepted as a life-saver, just as seat-belts were despite initial fierce resistance.

The trials were commissioned by the Department for Environment, Transport, and the Regions, and were carried out by a team at Leeds University, together with the Motor Industry Research Association.

Their final report is expected to recommend a 10-year phasing-in period with the system initially voluntary for older models, compulsory for all new cars by 2005, and mandatory by the end of the decade. The report will claim that the benefits will become evident once 60 per cent of vehicles have been fitted with the device, which will slow the overall speed of traffic.

The system offers the possibility of slowing down traffic not just to observe speed limits, but to cope with particular circumstances such as outside schools, during traffic jams, following accidents, or in dangerous weather conditions like fog.

Dr. Oliver Carsten, head of the Leeds team, predicted the system would soon be standard across the EU. "The idea that people should have freedom to flout the law is an odd concept when it is a legal requirement that you comply with the speed limit. When you drive the car, you hardly notice the speed limiter unless you are deliberately trying to push things too fast."

The Department of Transport said: "There are considerable benefits that could be had in accident reduction and fuel savings, but it might also mean that people find other ways of speeding."

The Deputy Prime Minister will be told that extensive trials have been such a success that a phased introduction of speed restricters would also dramatically reduce road congestion and cut pollution. [End quoting]

Do you think "Big Brother" is going to use such a system only for the nice reasons being talked about in this hype? Every one of these kinds of announcements suggests the rope tightening ever so slightly yet smoothly around our necks.

FDA ATTACKS THE INTERNET

From the INTERNET, 1/9/00: [quoting]

Please forward far and wide.

FDA is a rogue agency like BATF—a semi-autonomous little branch of gestapo government. Time to ABOLISH the FDA.

They are rife with criminal conspiracies, many of which involve Monsanto/Searle, the falsification of data, and other federal crimes. This is the agency charged with "safeguarding" the public against dangerous food additives/drugs. The murderous fraudsters have struck again with killer Viagra. They are furiously stonewalling and covering up the deadly aspartame/nutrasweet fraud which is of MAJOR proportions. rBGH is another CLEAR example of fraud and alienation of the public trust.

Contact your Congressmen regarding this issue, please.

FDA is an unconstitutional rogue agency which has illegally formed its own "swat police", and it should be abolished. Get them before they get YOU or your freedom to choose healthcare alternatives.

Subject: FDA Attacks The Internet; FDA Seeks To Destroy Alternative Health Websites
By William Faloon

The FDA's history is one of incompetence, fraud, deceit, and the continuous striving for more power. Over the past 25 years, the Food and Drug Administration has sought to gain authoritarian control that Congress never intended it to have. In every attempt to seize this kind of power, the FDA has been beaten back by a swell of public protest.

The FDA has just launched a disinformation campaign to deceive Congress into believing that the agency needs to “protect” the public from health information on the Internet. The FDA is seeking ten million tax dollars a year to attack alternative health and pharmacy websites.

If the FDA convinces Congress to give it the power and money to do this, American consumers will be denied access to innovative therapies, and will be forced to pay a good deal more for the nutrient and drug therapies the FDA allows them to buy over the Internet.

One of the FDA’s proposals is to be able to fine Internet pharmacies $500,000 every time they dispense a drug without a prescription authorized by the agency. With this kind of excessive fining power, the FDA will be able to bankrupt any online pharmacy it targets.

To make it easy for them to shut down large numbers of websites, the FDA wants the power to issue subpoenas without first obtaining a court order, a totalitarian tactic the American public revolted against when the agency proposed it in 1990.

Finally, the FDA says it wants to set up “a rapid response team” to identify, investigate, and prosecute websites. In other words, the FDA is seeking to establish an army of cyberspace storm-troopers to enable it to shut down large numbers of websites quickly.

The alleged purpose of these new powers is to “target and punish those who engage in illegal drug sales over the Internet”. This may sound reasonable to the average person, but as members of The Life Extension Foundation well know, the FDA’s history is one of ineptitude and corruption that has caused millions of Americans to suffer and die needlessly.

In 1994, the FDA Museum was established to document FDA malfeasance, and show that the agency hasn’t the scientific legitimacy to be allowed to police the healthcare of the American people. A flagrant example of FDA deception can be found in their current attempt to control the Internet.

The FDA has identified one person who died after obtaining Viagra from a web pharmacy without a prescription. The FDA is using this one death as an example of why the FDA needs to impose dictatorial power over all health websites.

One problem with this position is that, as of November 1998, at least 130 Americans died from taking Viagra legally prescribed by their doctors. (The total number of Viagra-related deaths for 1999 has not yet been calculated.) The FDA approved Viagra as being safe, even though many Americans have died when the drug has been legally prescribed.

The FDA failed to detect this lethal side-effect of Viagra, yet it is now seeking gestapo-like power to attack any Internet health company it wishes to, without due process. It’s time for the public to speak up again to let Congress know that this kind of FDA tyranny will not be tolerated by taxpayers.

WHY INTERNET REGULATION IS DOOMED TO FAIL

The powers the FDA is seeking are unconstitutional, and the agency has neither the competence nor the integrity to police the Internet. But even if it did, it would be impractical for the agency to do so.

There are currently an estimated 8,000 health sites on the Internet. If Congress gives the FDA $10 million a year, the best the agency could do is shut down a couple of hundred sites a year. Within a few years, the FDA would create a litigation monster whose appetite would far exceed their $10 million annual budget. The FDA would be bogged down in a quagmire of judicial proceedings, while thousands of new health websites would be springing up that the agency would be at an utter loss to control.

The end result of the FDA’s war against the free flow of information on the Internet would be tens of millions of tax dollars wasted, with less so-called consumer “protection” than exists today.

THE FDA ALREADY HAS THE LEGAL POWER IT NEEDS

The charade the FDA is parading before Congress is that they need more money and stricter laws to regulate e-commerce. The facts are that the FDA already has the regulatory structure to “protect” the consumer on the Internet. Much of what the FDA wants is already covered by existing Federal and State law, but the agency is seeking to add another bureaucratic layer of law and money to suppress the dissemination of health information.

AN ALTERNATIVE PROPOSAL

The FDA has its own website <<http://www.fda.gov>>. For a fraction of the cost of becoming the health police of the Internet police, the agency could post its own evaluation of alternative health websites that it thought were promoting fraudulent or dangerous products. Americans would then be free to make their own decisions about whether to believe what the FDA says about health websites.

However, the FDA has no interest in trying to persuade Americans with evidence. It wants (and has always wanted) authoritarian powers and as much money as possible from Congress because it is a political organization rather than a scientific one. As a result, FDA suppression of information has been, historically, the leading cause of death in the United States, while adverse reactions to FDA-approved drugs is currently the 4th-to-6th leading cause of death. Clearly, the FDA lacks the constitutional authority, the competence, the integrity, or the scientific credibility to be given additional power and money to police the Internet.

A HISTORY OF VICTORIES OVER THE FDA

The Federal Courts, Congress and the public have dealt the FDA severe losses over the past 25 years. The first citizens’ victory occurred in the 1970s when the FDA tried to turn vitamin supplements into prescription drugs. An uproar from the public resulted in Congress unanimously rejecting FDA’s brazen arguments that vitamins are so “dangerous” that they should only be prescribed by doctors. This blatant power grab came at a time when the vast majority of doctors had little or no knowledge of the health benefits of vitamins.

In 1990, the FDA tried to have a law passed that would have enabled the agency to make summary seizures of products from companies, and institute wire taps without a court warrant. The public again defended the Bill of Rights by inundating Congress with so much mail that the FDA’s proposed law was abandoned.

In 1993, the FDA stated that it wanted to classify all amino acids and many minerals as prescription drugs. The public expressed such a high degree of outrage over the FDA’s draconian proposition that Congress passed the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act (in 1994) that significantly limited the FDA’s authority to regulate dietary supplements.

Since 1994, the FDA has circumvented the will of the people and Congress by seeking to censor what the public is allowed to hear about supplements and drugs. The FDA has been defeated repeatedly in the courts, and has been forced to retreat because of an onslaught of public opposition to all forms of censorship the agency has proposed.

ORWELLIAN COMPUTER ROBOTS

A nightmare scenario sometimes portrayed in science fiction novels involves a totalitarian government using advanced computers to monitor the activities of citizens. In these novels, people who don’t behave according to government standards are targeted for persecution or summary elimination. The Orwellian prophesy is becoming reality as the FDA is proposing to spend a million dollars a year on artificial intelligence computer robots that would scan the Internet for phrases such as “prevents cancer” and “prescription drug” so the FDA could “swiftly gather the information needed to prosecute”.

The new law the FDA is proposing would mandate that on-line pharmacies first receive FDA approval to operate. Pharmacies are currently regulated by the States, but the FDA is seeking to impose a new Federal bureaucratic layer that will greatly increase the cost of purchasing products on the Internet.

The FDA needs to convince Congress that American citizens should be subjected to Orwellian investigative tactics, and that taxpayer dollars should be appropriated to pay for these web robots to assist the FDA in detecting words it does not want Americans to read.

American citizens who cherish their constitutional rights against undue government intrusion should contact their members of Congress and demand that the FDA not be given the money, nor the legal authority to control the Internet. This is more than just a health freedom issue. The FDA's orwellian proposals are unprecedented and would lead to a serious breakdown of our civil liberties if enacted into law.

JUST TELL CONGRESS TO SAY “NO” TO THE FDA

The FDA is using the free-flowing popularity of the Internet in a ploy to deceive Congress into appropriating ten million tax dollars a year to fund an unconstitutional witch hunt against free speech. The new powers the FDA is seeking are blatantly un-American and resemble the kinds of police-state tactics employed by totalitarian regimes such as communist China.

The FDA's latest fabrication will fail if Americans tell their Congressional representatives to say NO to any new proposal or law that would give the FDA more power or money.

Washington, D.C. 20515

The Fiscal Year 2001 budget to be submitted by the Executive Branch of the government contains a provision whereby the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is to be appropriated ten million dollars a year to police the Internet. I AM VEHEMENTLY OPPOSED TO MY TAX DOLLARS BEING USED TO FUND THE FDA FOR THIS PURPOSE! I believe that additional FDA power and funding would be used to deprive the American people of valuable health information and health products.

In the FY-2001 budget proposal, the FDA is asking Congress to pass new laws that would give the agency repressive powers that would restrict the free flow of information on the Internet. I ASK THAT YOU VOTE AGAINST ANY PROPOSED LAW THAT GIVES THE FDA MORE CONTROL OVER WHAT I AM ALLOWED TO READ AND PUT INTO MY BODY! Some of the unconstitutional authority the FDA is seeking includes:

(1) Issuing subpoenas without a court order. Giving the FDA this new power is unconstitutional, and would create a litigation monster whose annual appetite would rapidly exceed the ten million dollars a year the agency is seeking.

(2) Fining Internet pharmacies $500,000 every time they sell a drug that does not meet the FDA's definition of a legal prescription. This type of excessive fine would enable the FDA to bankrupt any online pharmacy it decides to target in a capricious and arbitrary manner.

(3) Setting up a "rapid response team" to identify, investigate, and prosecute websites, i.e., the FDA is seeking to establish an army of storm-troopers to summarily shut down any website it chooses.

Please do not be misled by the FDA's attempts to convince you that they are trying to protect the health of the American people by regulating the Internet. According to the April 15, 1998 issue of the Journal Of The American Medical Association, adverse reactions to legally-prescribed FDA-approved drugs are the fourth-to-sixth leading cause of death in the United States! Since this article was published almost two years ago, the FDA has done nothing to reduce the number of Americans dying from dangerous drugs, yet the FDA now seeks ten million tax dollars a year to attack health and pharmacy websites.

Respectfully,

SUPREME COURT GIVES US ANOTHER "YES TO PRIVACY" VICTORY

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, by William Safire, LOS Angeles, 1/18/00: [quoting]

[He's writing about the misuse of driver's license information by the government.]

....The state of South Carolina challenged Congress' right to pass such a law, saying it infringed on states' rights to regulate driving. A federal appeals court agreed, ridiculing a right to privacy in personal information such as a birth date on a license "often needed to cash a check, board an airplane, or purchase alcohol".

Because the Rehnquist court has been powerful in stopping Congress' three-generation habit of snatching power from the states, the betting was that this case would continue that anti-centralist trend.

But to the relief of those who think personal freedom worth preserving, the anti-centralist majority on the court, despite its states' rights predilections, stretched its reasoning to find that "Congress did not run afoul of the federalism principles". The liberal minority joined in, resulting in a stunning 9-0 decision upholding privacy. That means that the strengthening of the act by Sen. Richard Shelby, supported by Frank Wolf in the House, will also pass muster. They changed the weak "opt out" clause to a tough "opt in"—meaning that motor vehicle bureaus everywhere must soon seek drivers' written consent before selling marketers photos and information about age, domicile, or disability. Shelby said the decision "will help protect women from stalkers, keep telemarketers from interrupting dinner, and give people peace of mind that private information collected by the government is secure".

Presidential candidates (Steve Forbes excepted) fail to see privacy as a gut principle to defend, but the Supreme Court does. As hope glimmers, pay cash and don't give out your Social Security number.

William Safire writes a column for The New York Times. [End quoting]

Don't give up. We still are able to win some victories, even if minor. The constant attempts by "big business" to intrude upon our privacy for their commercial gain are only one reason for the need for vigilance. The business intrusion is used, at another level, as a diversionary smoke screen by more covert operations—Big Brother—to snoop for the purpose of controlling more completely we-the-people's lives.

TRANSFORMERS ADD LIFE TO APPLIANCES

From UNKNOWN source: [quoting]

New transformers that smooth out the uneven voltages that plague the nation's electric power grid would prolong the lives of light bulbs and appliance motors, says the consortium that is developing the technology.

The new transformers would replace the copper coils and iron cores, found in conventional transformers, with solid state technology.

Once commercialized, they'd make obsolete the pole-mounted canisters, ground-level metal boxes, and underground units that electric utilities currently use to "step down" higher distribution voltages to 120 volts.

Several homes typically feed off the same transformer. Asea Brown Boveri Ltd., the German utility industry supplier that owns the patent, may begin selling the transformers to utilities within a few years.

[End quoting]

The old fashioned type of transformer has been quite durable and forgiving of a wide range of abusive conditions. One wonders if this new design will turn out to really be an improvement or, like so many other disappointments marketed as better, be a source of even more annoying power outages!

SUNSCREEN FOR YOUR CLOTHES

Don't assume that your shirt protects you from the harmful rays of the Sun just because it covers your skin. As much as 50 percent of ultraviolet rays penetrate clothing—enough to cause, over time, wrinkles, age spots, and skin cancer. That's especially true for white or pastel colored clothes, as well as for loosely woven or stretchable fabrics, including silks and nylons. And white bleached cotton and crepe are practically transparent to UV rays; they have a Skin Protection Factor equivalent to only 6 or 7, which is much less than the SPF 15 recommended by the Skin Cancer Foundation.

To combat this deficiency, CIBA Specialty Chemicals has developed a sunblock for fabrics that you launder into clothing in your own washing machine. The sunblock increases levels of UV protection with each washing, starting with an SPF of about 8, after one washing, and leveling off at an SPF of about 25, after 10 washings.

The laundry additive works in hot or cold water, is harmless to fabrics, and doesn't wash out or lose its effectiveness over time. Perspiration has no effect on the chemical, unless the clothing becomes so soaked that it becomes almost see-through. CIBA also says the additive is nonallergenic, nontoxic, and biodegradable.

The company hopes laundry detergent and fabric softener makers will begin including the additive in their products this year. According to CIBA, it would cost consumers only pennies per washload. A version of the additive can be manufactured into clothing as well, which would provide the Sun protection equivalent of 100 or more for garments made from the treated fabric. — Noda Mongioletti [End quoting]

Hopefully it will be as good as they say, but the salesman's hype today is usually a good distance from the truth. And one wonders what effect these chemicals in the washing machine's discharge water may have on other systems like septic tanks.

THE MORMONS AND THE JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES ARE THE SAME ORGANISATION

From the INTERNET, by David Icke, dated 1/15/00: [quoting]

It's amazing how everything fits together in the world of the Illuminati if you are prepared to dig deep enough.

The people and organisations who attack and abuse each other in public, or appear to be in competition, turn out, over and over, to be different masks on the same face. Take the Mormons and the Jehovah's Witnesses (if we must).

We are told they are different organisations which stand for different "beliefs" and the followers of both would be aghast at the thought that they could be connected in any way. But then the mass of unthinking followers in any religion are merely the fodder and the screen behind which the real business goes on.

The founders of both “faiths”, the Mormons and JW’s, were of the Illuminati bloodline. Charles Taze Russell, who founded the Watchtower Society (JW’s), was of the Illuminati Russell bloodline, which also founded the infamous Skull and Bones Society at Yale University.

Charles Taze Russell was a Satanist, a pedophile according to his wife, and a friend of the Rothschilds. Indeed it was the Rothschilds who funded the Jehovah’s Witness operation into being, along with other Illuminati bankers, through “contributions” by organisations like the Rothschild-controlled B’nai B’rith. This was proven in a court of law in 1922.

One of the key people involved in this was Frank Goldman, who later became President of B’nai B’rith. Why would an organisation set up (in theory) to help Jewish people and promote the Jewish faith, be funding into existence the Jehovah’s Witnesses?? I think the name Rothschild answers the question.

Russell was also a high degree Freemason and Knights Templar. He promoted Zionism, another Rothschild creation, on behalf of his friends and backers. [See the next article in this News Desk: Was Hitler A Rothschild?]

Joseph Smith, along with Hiram Smith and Brigham Young, were the key figures behind the creation of the Mormon religion. They were of the elite of the elite Illuminati bloodline, the Merovingian or “Holy Grail” line, and were all high-degree Freemasons. They were also Satanists and formed their “church” as a front for Satanic activity which very much still goes on today. Why wouldn’t it, that is what it is there for.

The Mormon empire was funded into existence by the Rothschilds, through their Kuhn-Loeb bank, which also funded the Russian Revolution and Adolf Hitler, and yet again B’nai B’rith—the Rothschild intelligence arm and defamer of genuine researchers—was involved.

Notice any similarities between these two religions??

Again the followers of these mind-control cults would be shocked to think that the upper levels of these “religions” would engage in Satanic activity and human sacrifice of children, but it is about time they knew.

Russell’s family was formerly known as Roessel and went to Scotland from Germany. Of course, Germany is a massive occult centre, from which the Rothschilds emerged, and Scotland is one of the key areas of the world for Illuminati bloodlines. From the start, Charles Taze Russell used his new Watchtower Society, based at Bethel, Brooklyn, New York, as a front for black magic, or Enochian magic as his brand of Satanism was called.

He put the flying Sun disk on the front of his books, an ancient Illuminati symbol going back to Egypt and Babylon. The Watchtower magazine has always been a mass of subliminal and less subliminal occult symbolism, and the very name, Watchtower, is part of Illuminati and Freemasonic legend and code.

To them, watchtowers are areas of the “magical universe”. The unseen realms. Russell was buried under a pyramid in the United States after being ritually killed on Halloween, 1917. These leading Satanists of the Illuminati are ritually killed when their time comes in line with their obsession with ritual. To them, everything is ritual. Again and again the Jehovah’s Witness church is named by survivors of trauma-based mind control as being involved in these unspeakable mind-control projects.

The Mormons were also created as a front for Satanism and, like the Watchtower Society, Enochian magic. When I spoke in Salt Lake City, near to the Mormon Temple, I came across the fascinating book by William J. Schnoebelen called Mormonism’s Temple Of Doom.

Schnoebelen was initiated into the Wicca

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious “Angel of Death” in the Nazi concentration camps, and when he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

religion, then into Freemasonry, before going through the Mormon initiation in the Salt Lake temple. He shows in great detail that all three initiations were the same. The same oaths, secret handshakes, and garb.

Of course they are. We are looking at one face here, hidden by many masks. The Salt Lake temple is covered with Illuminati symbols, like the All-Seeing Eye, and it is built with granite, a rock which has been used throughout the ages for temples on Earth power-centres and for esoteric initiation.

The Mormons also use the bee symbol, a classic symbol of the Merovingian bloodline, which people like the author, Sir Laurence Gardner, want to kid us goes back to “Jesus”, when in fact it is the “Holy Grail” bloodline of the Illuminati, the “purest” reptilian line.

Joseph Smith carried a dove medallion given to him by an English Masonic lodge. The dove is Illuminati symbolism for Queen Semiramis, the female deity in their Babylonian trinity.

The Mormon Church, like the Watchtower Society, is also a front for trauma-based mind control. Many survivors have told of their horrific torture in Salt Lake City, in Mormon buildings and centres. The Mormon genealogy operation is also a front behind which the Illuminati keep track of the reptilian bloodline—who has it to a “pure” enough level and who has not.

You won’t be surprised to know, therefore, that the Mormons and the Jehovah’s Witnesses are the same organisation at the top level, where the elders of the Mormons and the leaders of the Watchtower Society operate a very different agenda to the one their followers believe.

But what chance have you got of knowing what is happening within your “church” when you refuse to think or question? “Have faith”, the mantra of these religious conmen through the ages, really means: “Don’t think and don’t question.”

I was taken around the Mormon Temple site (not the Temple, which is only for initiates) by two lovely girls from Thailand and Hong Kong. They had worked their asses off for years to pay their own fare to America and to pay for their own accommodation and living expenses for the privilege of serving this unbelievably wealthy organisation, as “guides” (recruiters) for the faith. On the way ’round, I asked them what they thought the significance was of the founders of the Mormon church all being high-degree Freemasons. They looked at each other for a moment in bewilderment, and then one said: “What’s Freemasonry?”

And a few can’t control the world??

I want to give people the opportunity here to tell their stories about the Mormons and the Jehovah’s Witnesses—and any other religious fronts—both to expose what is happening and to give people still in those “faiths” the chance to see what is really going on around them. If you want to contribute your experiences on these subjects, please sent them to this website and we will start a new archive if there is a big enough response. You may have seen two contributions about the Watchtower Society already. Have faith! DAVID ICKE

WAS HITLER A ROTHSCHILD??

Excerpted from the INTERNET, by David Icke, <<http://www.davidicke.com>>, 1/15/00: [quoting]

David Icke E-Magazine January 15, 2000—Volume 9:

Official history is merely a veil to hide the truth of what really happened. When the veil is lifted, again and again we see that not only is the official version not true, it is often 100% wrong.

Take the Rothschilds, the bloodline formerly known, among other names, as the Bauers, one of the most notorious black-occult bloodlines of Middle-Ages Germany. It became known as Rothschild (red-shield or rotes-schild in German) in the 18th century when a financial dynasty was founded in Frankfurt by Mayer Amschel Rothschild, working in league with the Illuminati House of Hesse and others. They took their name from the red shield or hexagram/Star of David on the front of their house in Frankfurt.

The Star of David or Seal of Solomon is an ancient esoteric symbol and only became associated with Jewish people after the Rothschilds adopted it for themselves. It has absolutely no connection to “David” or “Solomon”, as Jewish historical sources confirm. The Rothschilds are one of the top Illuminati bloodlines on the planet, and they are shape-shifting reptilians (see my book The Biggest Secret).

Guy de Rothschild, of the French House, heads this bloodline dynasty today. He is one of the most grotesque exponents of trauma-based mind control, indeed the top man according to many of those who have suffered mercilessly under his torture.

I am always loath to use the word evil, but if evil is the reverse of live, Guy de Rothschild is thoroughly evil. He stands for the opposite of life. He has been personally responsible for the torture and death of millions of children and adults, either directly or through those he controls. He conducts satanic rituals, as all these bloodlines have always done, and goodness knows how many human sacrifices he has been involved in.

If what I am saying is wrong, Guy de Rothschild, then take me to court and let’s reveal the evidence. You are a multi-billionaire and you control the courts and the media. I have next to nothing. I should, therefore, be a pushover. So come on, Mr. Rothschild, let’s have you. Let’s take these claims into the public arena, and have you and me in the witness box. Make my day.

Already I can hear the clamor gathering to condemn me as “anti-semitic” because the Rothschilds claim to be “Jewish.” Organisations like the Anti-Defamation League and B’nai B’rith have already made strenuous efforts to label me in this way for exposing the Rothschilds and to stop me speaking in public.

How funny then that both organisations were created by, and continue to be bankrolled by, the Rothschilds. Just a coincidence, nothing to worry about. B’nai B’rith means, appropriately, “Sons of the Alliance” and was established by the Rothschilds in 1843 as an intelligence arm and to defame and destroy legitimate researchers with the label “anti-semitic”.

Many of their speakers openly supported slavery during the American Civil War, and today they seek to condemn some Black leaders as “anti-semitic” or “racist”! Every year, the Anti-Defamation League award their “Torch of Liberty” (the classic Illuminati symbol) to the person they believe has served their cause the most. One year they gave it to Morris Dalitz, an intimate of the notorious Meyer Lansky crime syndicate which terrorised America. Perfect choice.

Of course, the strength of feeling that fans the flames of condemnation against anyone dubbed “anti-semitic” today is the sickening persecution of Jewish people by the Nazis of Adolf Hitler. To expose or question the actions of the Rothschilds or any other Jewish person or organisation is to be called a “Nazi” and “anti-semitic”, that all-encompassing label which has discredited so many researchers and stopped them having the opportunity to speak in public because of protest by unthinking robot radicals and the refusal of venues to host their meetings.

I have had this from time to time, not least in eastern Canada, thanks to a campaign by B’nai B’rith and the Anti-Defamation League (which spends it’s entire time trying to defame people). Both organisations, I repeat, are Rothschild created and controlled.

How strange then, that as I have documented in my books And The Truth Shall Set You Free and The Biggest Secret, along with endless other researchers and scholars, Adolf Hitler and the Nazis were created and funded by the Rothschilds. It was they who arranged for Hitler to come to power through the Illuminati secret societies in Germany, like the Thule Society and the Vril Society, which they created through their German networks; it was the Rothschilds who funded Hitler through the Bank of England and other British and American sources, like the Rothschild’s Kuhn-Loeb bank, which also funded the Russian Revolution.

The very heart of Hitler’s war machine was the chemical giant, I.G. Farben, which had an American arm that was controlled by the Rothschilds through their lackeys, the Warburgs. Paul Warburg, who manipulated into existence the privately-owned “central bank” of America, the Federal Reserve, in 1913, was on the board of American I.G. Indeed, Hitler’s I.G. Farben, which ran the slave labour camp at Auschwitz, was, in reality, a division of Standard Oil, officially owned by the Rockefellers, but in truth the Rockefeller empire was funded into existence by the Rothschilds. (Again, see my books And The Truth Shall Set You Free and The Biggest Secret for the detailed background of this and other aspects of this story.)

The Rothschilds also owned the German news agencies during both World Wars, and thus controlled the flow of “information” to Germans and the outside world. Incidentally, when Allied troops entered Germany, they found that the I.G. Farben factories, the very core of Hitler’s war operation, had not been hit by the mass bombings, and neither had Ford factories—another Illuminati supporter of Hitler. Other factories nearby had been demolished by bombing raids.

So, the force behind Adolf Hitler, on behalf of the Illuminati, was the House of Rothschild, this “Jewish” bloodline which claims to support and protect the Jewish faith and people. In fact, they use and sickeningly abuse the Jewish people for their own horrific ends.

The Rothschilds, like the Illuminati in general, treat the mass of the Jewish people with utter contempt. They are, like the rest of the global population, just cattle to be used to advance the agenda of global control and mastery, by a network of interbreeding bloodlines, impregnated with a reptilian genetic code, and known to researchers as the Illuminati.

Indeed, the Illuminati are so utterly obsessed with bloodline, because of this reptilian genetic code, that there was no way that someone like Hitler would come to power in those vital circumstances for the Illuminati, unless he was of the reptilian bloodline. If you look in my books, you will see how the same bloodline has held the positions of royal, aristocratic, financial, political, military, and media power in the world for literally thousands of years.

This is the bloodline that has produced ALL 42 of the Presidents of the United States since and including George Washington in 1789. It is the bloodline of the runaway favorite to win the 2000 election, George W. Bush. The World War Two leaders, Roosevelt, Churchill, and Stalin, were of the bloodline and also Freemasons and Satanists. They were manipulated into office, and their country’s war effort funded, by the Rothschilds and the other Illuminati bloodlines.

So are we to believe, therefore, that although this same group provably funded Adolf Hitler’s rise to power and his war machine, that he would be the odd one out, a leader of crucial importance to the agenda who was NOT bloodline?

But hold on. Hitler couldn’t be the same bloodline as, say, the Rothschilds because, as we all know, the Rothschilds are defenders of Jewish people and Hitler slaughtered them, along with communists and gypsies and others who opposed him or he wanted to eliminate. The Rothschilds are Jewish, they’d never do that.

Oh really.

According to a book by a psychoanalyst, Walter Langer, called The Mind Of Hitler, not only was Hitler supported by the Rothschilds, he WAS a Rothschild.

This revelation fits like a glove with the actions of the Rothschilds and other Illuminati bloodlines in Germany who brought Hitler to the fore as dictator of that nation. He was also supported by the British Royal Family, the House of Windsor (in truth the German House of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha), and these included the British Royal “war hero”, Lord Mountbatten, a Rothschild and a Satanist.

Their royal relatives in Germany, who you would never have thought would normally support an apparent guy from the street like Hitler, were among his most enthusiastic supporters. But, of course, they knew who he really was. There is no way in the world when you do any study of the Illuminati obsession with bloodline that Hitler would not have been one of them. Langer writes:

“Adolf’s father, Alois Hitler, was the illegitimate son of Maria Anna Schicklgruber. It was generally supposed that the father of Alois Hitler (Schicklgruber) was Johann Georg Hiedler. There are some people who seriously doubt that Johann Georg Hiedler was the father of Alois (an Austrian document was prepared that proved Maria Anna Schicklgruber was living in Vienna at the time she conceived). At that time she was employed as a servant in the home of Baron Rothschild. As soon as the family discovered her pregnancy, she was sent back home...where Alois was born.”

Was Hitler’s determination to take over Austria anything to do with his desire to destroy records of his lineage? It appears that he learned of his Rothschild bloodline after he became Chancellor of Germany.

The Rothschilds and the Illuminati produce many offspring out of wedlock, in their secret breeding programmes, and these children are brought up under other names with other parents. Like Bill Clinton, who is almost certainly Rockefeller-produced in the same way, these “ordinary kids from ordinary backgrounds” go on to be extraordinarily successful in their chosen field. Hitler, too, would have produced unofficial children to maintain his strand of the bloodline, and there will obviously be people of his bloodline alive today. [End quoting]

The documentation that David Icke has amassed in his books is truly astonishing, and he’s got the nerve to tell it like he sees it—and let the so-called “elite” and other liars sweat as many enquiring minds begin to awaken to The Truth.

THE FOGGING OF AMERICA OR THE TELEPHONE COMPANY CON

I called Jack Koenig—who wrote the previous articles on The Fogging Of America—and he graciously agreed to simplify his information, make it more concise, and to give more details about the long list of charges on your bills, and how to eliminate any of them, if at all possible.

From the INTERNET, by Jack Koenig, dated 1/18/00: [quoting]

If you use 50 minutes of long distance a month, did you know that AT&T’s heavily advertised One Rate 7-Cent will actually set you back 24.7 cents a minute? Or that MCI’s Five Cents Any Day rate will cost you 30.9 cents a minute if used during the day? And how about Sprint’s Sense 10 Cents per minute rate? Bite your tongue—that can actually cost you 77.8 cents!

This report will help you understand how all carriers, but in particular AT&T and MCI, have used the 1996 Telecommunications Act to deceive the public by masquerading a portion of their rates as federally mandated taxes.

It will also show how you can counteract these manipulations and achieve savings in your phone bill whether or not you use long distance.

Years ago, when AT&T (Ma Bell) ruled the roost, there wasn’t any need to isolate the different components of a long-distance call. After all, they all ended on the same bottom line. But in reality, there were three distinct legs in each long-distance call:

The first leg carries your phone call over the local lines between your phone and your local carrier’s office.

The second leg carries your phone call over a long-distance carrier’s lines from your local carrier’s office to the receiver’s local carrier’s office.

The third and final leg carries your call from the receiver’s local carrier’s office to the destination user’s phone.

After Ma Bell was broken up into AT&T and the Baby Bells, these three distinct components of a long-distance call became very meaningful.

The Baby Bells, which were restricted to carrying local traffic, complained that FCC regulations forced them to absorb expenses associated with carrying the beginning and ending portions of a long-distance call over their lines. In 1996, the Congressionally passed Telecommunications Act began to address these and other concerns by isolating long-distance phone costs into the three different components.

Once these costs were identified and isolated, the FCC issued rules changing the method in which the Baby Bells could charge long-distance carriers for usage of their lines. The old method, charging long-distance carriers a flat per-minute rate, was replaced by a combined LOWER per-minute rate, PLUS a flat monthly user line charge called a Presubscribed Interchange Carrier Charge (or PICC for short). It should be noted that the COMBINATION of these replacements was actually LOWER than the original flat per-minute rate.

Then to help the Baby Bells make up for any loss of revenue from the LOWER COMBINED charges to the long-distance companies, they were allowed to charge the consumer a new item called a Subscriber Line Charge. By instituting this new charge, the FCC actually shifted an additional part of the long-distance carrier's cost to the consumer.

AND THIS IS WHERE THE SMOKE AND MIRRORS BEGINS!

The Subscriber Line Charge generally appears in the local section of your phone bill as the Federal Subscriber Line Charge, the implication being that it is some new type of federally mandated item. In reality, this is in no way a federally mandated charge: it is an allowed charge. The Baby Bells claim they call it a Federal Subscriber Line Charge because it was allowed by federal regulators as opposed to state regulators. But by using the designation Federal, consumers have been led to believe it is just another federal tax, which of course it isn't. Not one cent goes to the federal government or any governmental agency. The local companies are not forced or mandated to charge any amount!

BUT THIS IS ONLY THE BEGINNING OF THE SMOKE AND MIRRORS GAME!

Not to be outdone, the long distance companies were just as quick to capitalize on the confusion. They took the flat monthly line charge (the PICC) and placed it in the long-distance section of your bill as the National Access Fee. Once again, especially with all the Gore Tax talk, consumers were led to believe this was just another federal tax. But once again, it "ain't" so!

BUT WAIT—THE FCC WASN'T FINISHED!

In 1997, the FCC implemented rules to address that portion of the 1996 Telecommunications Act mandating free or reduced telecommunications services for schools, libraries, rural health care providers, high-cost rural areas, and the less fortunate. These FCC rules are referred to as the Universal Service Order and directed interstate long-distance carriers to fund this quest by paying what they termed a Universal Access Fee (also called the Gore Tax).

Although the FCC set the Universal Access Fee to be slightly less than 4% of a carrier's long-distance revenue, with a proviso for quarterly adjustments based on projected demand, they did not mandate that it be passed onto the consumer.

But no business can survive by absorbing additional non-productive expenses, and as a consequence, most (if not all) long-distance carriers opted to pass the Gore Tax onto the consumer.

But after adding their handling charges to this fee, the Gore Tax is no longer a simple 4%. Instead, it is passed on to the consumer either as a flat rate, of so many dollars per month, or as a percent of the user's total long-distance charges. Depending on the carrier, this fee can run the gamut from $1 to $8 per month, or from 4% to 9.5% of the user's total long-distance charges. Because of this variance and the arbitrary method in which it is passed on, the Gore Tax, along with the PICC (National Access Fee) should always be taken into consideration when evaluating long-distance carriers' rates.

The bottom line with all these deceptions is that even folks who seldom use long distance are beginning to see red! With all the hidden charges, it's not unusual for them to receive a monthly bill exceeding $9 for a simple five-minute call! That comes out to $1.80 a minute! Worse yet, even if you don't use any long distance, you can still end up paying a Carrier Line Charge, the Universal Access Fee (Gore Tax), a National Access Charge, and in many cases a monthly minimum charge!

So how do you fight these guys?

Although these charges can't be totally eliminated, they can be minimized.

Here are several easy ways to cut your expenses:

If you have multiple lines in your place of business or home, and use over 50 minutes per month, consider eliminating long-distance service on as many extra lines as possible. This can be accomplished very simply by contacting your LOCAL carrier and advising them you don't want any long-distance service on such and such a phone number. This will reduce your monthly Carrier Line Charge, the Universal Access Fee (Gore Tax), any minimum charges, and possibly your local carrier's National Access Charge. If you attempt to make a long-distance call on a line that hasn't any pre-subscribed long-distance carrier, you will simply receive a message stating that you can't use that line.

For those using less than 50 minutes of long distance per month, consider refusing to sign up with any long-distance provider at all! As stated above, simply call your local carrier and tell them you don't want any long-distance provider. This legal maneuver frees you of the Carrier Line Charge, any monthly minimum charge, a lowered to non-existent Universal Service Fee (Gore Tax), and sometimes a reduction in the National Access Charge.

If and when you require long distance, use one of the popular 1010 services. But be careful, each 1010 service has its own peculiarities and hidden charges! Our recommendation is 1016-868 (and no, we have no affiliation with this service). They charge 7.9 cents per minute, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The only additional charge is a Universal Access Charge (Gore Tax) for those months in which you use their service. To use, simply dial 1016-868 before the area code and phone number of your recipient.

For those using 50 minutes or more of long distance per month, use the Internet to search out low-cost carriers. For those without time on their hands, you can get a bird's eye view of different choices by visiting Senitel Communication's website at <www.senitel.com>. We believe Senitel is the only place on the Internet in which long-distance rates have been reconstituted to include all hidden costs including the Carrier Line Charge, National Access Fee, Universal Service Fee, monthly minimums, monthly line charges, etc. By doing so, Senitel lets you compare apples with apples!

For those with only e-mail access, contact Senitel at <info@senitel.com> and request their latest advisories on the rapidly changing long-distance market.

For those with neither Internet access nor e-mail service, contact Senitel at their toll-free number of 877-853-9700 and request their FREE quarterly newsletter sent via the postal service.

If you have a traveling family member, children away at school, or out of state customers whom you would like to hear from more often, consider getting an 800 number. Many long-distance carriers offer this option for a slight additional monthly fee. The Unitel/Qwest network, for example, only charges $2.50 per month for this service plus 4.9 cents per minute for stateside long-distance calls.

Basically, when someone dials an 800 number, the call is forwarded to a number designated by you. There is no need for an extra phone to handle the calls. By using your 800 number, family members, friends, and business associates can save big-time by calling at reduced rates.

Data for this report was taken from FCC documents, interviews with various long-distance operators, and other sources on the Internet. [End quoting]

I thank Jack very much for this report and hope it makes it quite clear to you how some of the biggest phone companies are scamming us royally. Don't you think it's about time we let our voices be heard on this??

These are the trying times predicted many years ago. One way or another, on schoolroom planet Earth, we are destined to learn what is important and what is not.

THINGS ARE SELDOM WHAT THEY SEEM

From the INTERNET, 1/22/00: [quoting]

A man and his dog were walking along a road. The man was enjoying the scenery, when it suddenly occurred to him that he was dead.
 He remembered dying, and that the dog had been dead for years. He wondered where the road was leading them.

After a while, they came to a high, white stone wall along one side the road. It looked like fine marble. At the top of a long hill, it was broken by a tall arch that glowed in the sunlight.

When he was standing before it, he saw a magnificent gate in the arch that looked like mother of pearl, and the street that led to the gate looked like pure gold. He and the dog walked toward the gate, and as he got closer, he saw a man at a desk to one side.

When he was close enough, he called out,
 "Excuse me, where are we?"

"This is heaven, sir" the man answered.

"Wow! Would you happen to have some water?" the man asked.

"Of course, sir. Come right in, and I'll have some ice water brought right up." The man gestured, and the gate began to open.

"Can my friend," gesturing toward his dog,
 "come in, too?" the traveler asked.

"I'm sorry, sir, but we don't accept pets."

The man thought a moment and then turned back toward the road and continued the way he had been going.

After another long walk, and at the top of another long hill, he came to a dirt road which led through a farm gate that looked as if it had never been closed. There was no fence. As he approached the gate, he saw a man inside, leaning against a tree and reading a book.

"Excuse me!" he called to the reader. "Do you have any water?"

"Yeah, sure, there's a pump over there."
 The man pointed to a place that couldn't be seen from outside the gate. "Come on in."

"How about my friend here?" the traveler gestured to the dog.

"There should be a bowl by the pump."

They went through the gate, and sure enough, there was an old fashioned hand pump with a bowl beside it. The traveler filled the bowl, gave some to the dog, then he took a long drink himself.

When they were full, he and the dog walked back toward the man who was standing by the tree waiting for them.

"What do you call this place?" the traveler asked.

"This is heaven" was the answer.

"Well, that's confusing" the traveler said.
 "The man down the road said that was heaven, too."

"Oh, you mean the place with the gold streets and pearly gates? Nope. That's hell."

"Doesn't it make you mad for them to use your name like that?"

"No. I can see how you might think so, but we're just happy that they screen out the folks who'll leave their best friends behind."

[End quoting]

A very good lesson, don't you think?!

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The Blockbuster of all Blockbusters!! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents the suppressed science which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background of the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world". No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu "sanusi" or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now."

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli" to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of travelling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribespeople have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

"This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words".

—David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

Amazing Confirmation that a reptilian extraterrestrial race controlled the world for thousands of years

Update From Our Editor

No sooner did I announce in this column, in the last issue of The SPECTRUM, that we would soon be accepting advertising, than several of you out there in readerland quickly contacted us about exploiting that possibility. On page 47 there is an outline of the rates and procedures for those of you who may be interested in such a venture.

It has taken some time and thought to arrive at reasonable advertising rates for a publication of our unusual profile and scope. We are told that most all of our readers save their issues of this paper, like a growing reference library, and many also share their paper with quite a few other sets of eyes.

Call our offices if you have any questions and someone from our new Ad Department will assist you as promptly as they can. And while I'm on the subject of phones: Please be thoughtful and use our toll-free number ONLY for the expedient conducting of business matters. Our monthly phone bill is not a very pretty sight!

The offering of classified ads (in addition to the more usual kinds of ad presentations) provides an avenue to solve a longstanding problem for some of you. We often get requests from people: "Can you please tell me if there is some other reader(s) in my geographic area with whom I might talk or socialize?" The answer has always had to be "No" for basic privacy reasons. We wish we could, but it becomes a legal and logistics nightmare pretty fast. But now there is nothing stopping any of YOU from placing such a request in a classified ad.

Since our Editorial Board will always retain the right to refuse any advertisement request which is considered inappropriate, we expect to maintain our usual high standards of quality and information service in the process of generating some much needed cash flow.

And speaking of cash flow, note that subscription rates have been increased slightly to help cover a bit more of the actual costs of printing and postage for a publication of this size and scope.

I have often commented that an Unseen Hand seems to Guide the coming together of each issue of this newspaper. Let's be honest here: We're not THAT smart to achieve this unique end result on our own, nor are we very flush with resources to be able to coordinate such an effort. But it happens anyway.

This issue of The SPECTRUM is no exception, beginning with our provocative Front Page story concerning the Indigo Children. In some ways I feel we have only managed to address the very tip of the iceberg where this important subject is concerned, though the articles on Ritalin, on MSG, and on Vaccinations contribute and connect in such a way as to give some hint of what sinister shenanigans lie hidden beneath the surface.

We will be focusing on several of these topics in upcoming papers and, where our children are concerned, there can never be too much information presented which may help in creating a better world for them—rather than the deplorable world that the crooks in high places have planned for all of us under their New World Order agenda.

As Commander Hatonn comments in his multi-faceted message, the dark ones must work feverishly at this time since so many of us are awakening and questioning the status quo that their illusion "house of cards" is about to collapse and disintegrate in the Light of ever growing awareness. It doesn't take that many awakening ones to throw a large wrench into their flimsy machinery, and that awareness is the biggest fear being wrestled with by these so-called "elite" controllers—and their other-dimensional puppet-masters who truly pull the strings and use these dark "elite" dupes.

While the prices of oil and gasoline, for example, are kept artificially high right now, for reasons of a global political agenda, how much longer will these crooks in high places be able to suppress the kinds of "free energy" technologies such as we address in our feature article on Cold Fusion? Once THAT cat is out of the bag, you won't be able to GIVE away the "black soup" from those old, greasy dinosaur remains. And that couldn't happen a moment too soon from the point of view of fresh air and water supplies critical to sustaining ALL life on the surface of patient and longsuffering Mother Earth. Why should our children have to endure such a filthy mess for the sake of the greed of a callous few?

And speaking of greed, don't miss Ray Bilger's outline of the stirrings for independence by our Native American brothers and sisters. That's another "house of cards" which is about to collapse. His article this month, while challenging in itself, sets the stage for a unique interview that will hopefully appear in our next issue on this most heart-wrenching and volatile of topics.

Meanwhile, we have been receiving some much appreciated praise as a result of both a recent expo in Northern California (at which we had a booth and met many fine people), and due to an invitation (originating from that expo) to appear on a popular cable-TV program with an additional wide (international) tape distribution audience. There will be more to say about these blessings at a later time.

For now, check out our masterfully renovated website and KNOW that your many prayers and good wishes (and financial assistance) on our behalf are working! Amen.

SILVER HELPS REGROW HUMAN TISSUE

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 2/11/00: [quoting]

"It is only from a truth-filled state of consciousness, the willingness to speak the truth and know the truth, that we can build a firm, lasting, and truly loving relationship with ourselves and others. Anything less than this is not love. It is fear." —Iyanla Vanzant

Silver Helps Regrow Human Tissue—Physician Patents Technique Using Silver Ions; July 27, 1999.

Washington, D.C.—Silver, the same commodity used in coins and in the manufacture of jewelry, silverware, mirrors, and electronics, helps regenerate human cells that have been destroyed by disease or damaged in accidents, according to a recently released report in this month's edition of Silver News, a bi-monthly newsletter published by The Silver Institute.

Clinical tests indicate that the silver-based procedure is so successful that one patient who had sustained three crushed fingers in an accident grew new tissue rapidly. Within 2-1/2 months, skin coverage was complete and there was normal full sensation, good blood supply, and all joints had a normal range of motion. If left untreated, the 30-year-old electrician's fingers would have fallen off after turning black from gangrene, and he would have been left with a totally useless hand. Ironically, his orthopedic surgeon recommended amputation of all three fingers, but the patient requested silver-ion therapy, which proved successful.

The mechanism by which silver ions help rebuild tissue has been studied for more than a decade by Dr. Robert Becker of Becker Biomagnetics in New York.

Dr. Becker initially reported his findings at The First International Conference On Silver And Gold In Medicine, co-sponsored by The Silver Institute in 1987. In the decade since, this technique has been used in clinical settings where hundreds of patients with various wounds have recovered. In addition, a laboratory study conducted by the U.S. Army Institute for Surgical Research in Houston, Texas, showed that laboratory animals with burn wounds, treated under controlled conditions, experienced shortened time for reconstruction with silver-nylon dressings.

Recovery of skin function was faster when electric current was applied, compared to no application of electric current. Last fall, Dr. Becker received a U.S. patent (5,814,094) for the devices, materials, and techniques involved in regeneration of tissue using silver ions.

After several hundred cases, Dr. Becker believes that the technique works in three stages. The first stage is the chemical combination of highly active free silver ions with all bacteria or fungi present in the wound which are inactivated within 20 to 30 minutes. The second stage occurs over the next few days. Silver acts on fibroblast cells to cause them to revert to their embryonic state, becoming stem cells. These cells are universal building blocks whose role is to reconstruct new tissue. In the final stage, silver ions form a complex with the living cells in the wound area to produce immediately convertible stem cells. The end result of this conversion is that the stem cells supply all the building blocks necessary to completely restore all anatomical structures.

No other known treatment provides sufficient numbers of the embryonic or stem cells required for true regeneration of damaged or destroyed tissues in humans and animals. The success indicates that there is the potential not only for the healing of near-surface wounds, but for regenerative repair of internal organs such as the heart, liver, brain, and the spinal cord. [End quoting]

This sounds like a very big breakthrough that is important to be brought to public attention. This may be what Christopher Reeves has been looking for as a breakthrough for the healing of his spinal cord.

If you haven't read last month's special feature article on silver colloids, be sure and do so. Back issues are available.

I am preparing an article for next month that will include information by Dr. Bob Beck, who also provides useful instructions on silver colloids and the use of electro-pulsing techniques.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE—Please Distribute Widely

CRUMPLED COKE CAN

The photo of a crumpled can of Diet Coke told the story in the Atlanta Journal Constitution, Coke's hometown paper. Fitting, poetic, just, but tragic for the company once rated "The most admired business in the world".

Today Coke wouldn't even make the list. Sales are down, profits collapsing, and 6,000 employees soon will be gone.

(To make room for 6,000 defense attorneys?) The tragedy is stupendously larger than 6,000 jobs; it affects hundreds of millions of unwarned, innocent, afflicted consumers across the broad face of planet Earth.

This crisis can't be solved by belt tightening, greater efficiency, more advertising, etc. It's so bad Coke can't say the word; to pronounce it will bring instant cataclysm.

That word is ASPARTAME, and their only recourse is denial, denial, denial, though every ad and commercial builds higher the scaffold upon which Coke shall surely hang.

Reality is in that twisted Diet Coke can.

It's poison. It's killing the unborn, raining tumors and seizures on the population, destroying children, incapacitating workers, mimicking MS, erasing memory and blinding.

Inexorably Diet Coke visits a plague of 92 symptoms listed by our FDA on a secret report they'll never show which names diet soda as the first source of aspartame disease. And yes, DEATH was one of the 92.

Diet Coke is poison. And it's addictive; some victims drink several liters a day and keep it on their nightstands. If Coke changes the formula to remove aspartame, the world will heal and the surge of hatred and vengeance by the disabled and bereaved shall certainly destroy Coca Cola.

The poison in Diet Coke is aspartame. As a member of the National Soft Drink Association, Coke opposed FDA approval of aspartame for beverages.

Their objections, running to several pages and published in the Congressional Record of 5/7/85, said aspartame is uniquely and inherently unstable and breaks down in the can.

It decomposes into formaldehyde, methyl alcohol, formic acid, diketopiperazine, and other toxins.

In a study on 7 monkeys, 5 had grand mal seizures and one died, a casualty rate of 86%.

Coke knew; and knowing, broke their good faith contract with customers, a breach exhibited by the recent plot to program vending machines to raise the price with the temperature.

Dissatisfied with selling flavored sugar water plus phosphoric acid, they switched to pushing an addictive formula called "Diet".

Addictive substances multiply markets, so Diet Coke soared off the sales charts, spreading obesity in its flight. We're fatter because aspartame suppresses serotonin and makes us crave carbohydrates.

So why is aspartame/NutraSweet/Equal/Diet Coke/Diet Pepsi/etc. on the market and in thousands of foods? Can you say CORRUPTION? One FDA Commissioner and one acting Commissioner have changed sides to work in the NutraSweet industry, plus 6 underlings and two federal attorneys assigned to prosecute NutraSweet for submitting fraudulent tests to get it approved.

"It's like a script for Abbott & Costello" lamented an honest FDA scientist writing to Senator Metzenbaum.

It works like this: "Approve our poison, and when you stop being a bureaucrat, we'll make you a plutocrat! After it's licensed, we'll pay off the American Dietetics, the American Diabetes Association, the AMA, and anyone we need who's for sale."

The jig's up! Worldwide consumer action has exposed aspartame, and millions have kicked the habit. Coke's profits are down 37%, and for a year Monsanto has been trying to sell the NutraSweet company.

Finally they sold NSC, producer of the phenylalanine in NutraSweet for $125 million. Now Monsanto faces a $71 million lawsuit for exaggerating profits.

Monsanto stock is in the toilet, but they may have found a buyer in the Swiss firm Pharmacia-Upjohn. P.U. for short! The deal won't finalize for a year.

The plans are to ditch the Monsanto name as its stench is unendurable.

CEO Bob Shapiro may soon be history, like Doug Ivester of Coke who just resigned. Will the last one out please turn off the lights! [End quoting]

The public is finally awakening—and not a moment too soon! And for an encore:

MONSANTO ANNOUNCES SALE OF TABLETOP SWEETENER BUSINESS

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 2/4/00: [quoting]

Monsanto announced February 4 the signing of a definitive agreement related to the sale of our tabletop sweetener business, including the Equal, Canderel and NutraSweet tabletop brands, to Tabletop Acquisition Corp. (TAC), whose institutional investors are led by Pegasus Capital Advisors, L.P. and MSD Capital, L.P. Under terms of the agreement, TAC will pay $570 million cash for the business.

All tabletop sweetener people will be offered employment by the new owners. The tabletop-sweetener management team will remain in place following completion of the transaction.

The divestiture of the tabletop business is part of a restructuring plan announced by Monsanto that includes selling businesses that are not core to our long-term strategy.

"TAC is acquiring a solid, established business with highly recognizable brands, a sound customer base, and a quality, experienced management team" said Gary Crittenden, Monsanto's chief financial officer. "As we stated last year, the tabletop sweetener business, as well as the sweetener ingredients and biogums businesses, are excellent revenue-generating businesses that are not in line with Monsanto's strategic direction. We're pleased that TAC is investing in the tabletop sweetener business and intends to further enhance its competitive position in the marketplace."

Monsanto Today is an email newsletter published on Tuesdays and Thursdays for Monsanto people. Please contact Corporate Communications (314/694-5291) for help or information about reproduction or retransmission of Monsanto Today. [End quoting]

One wonders if they are "selling" these, since they are probably highly profitable, because they are getting so much bad publicity that they don't want it to rub off on the Monsanto name any further. And thus they "sell" the offending businesses to a shell corporation where the same real owners still remain in control behind the scenes and still get the profits. But if the lawsuits start to really hit them, only the shell corporation falls.

YOUR FAVORITE HEALTH FOOD STORE MAY SOON HAVE TO CLOSE

From SPIRAL—THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES, Feb. 2000: [quoting]

ALERT—WHY? WHY? WHY?

GOOD NEWS: Last April of this year (1996) Congress passed, and the president signed into law, the Health Insurance Bill. The Health Insurance Bill was hailed as a great victory for we-the-people, however...

BAD NEWS: The Bill contained what is termed a "rider", a small amount of information that was passed quietly, without much fanfare, that undid everything we worked for recently to keep the FDA from interfering in our use of vitamins and herbs and alternative health products. This "rider" was not from the FDA, but from the World Health Organization Codex Program.

The FDA now has the authority to close down all health food stores and now require us to obtain a medical doctor's prescription for vitamins, herbs, and other food supplements. The FDA is presently working on implementing this new law. IT IS A DONE DEAL. It will likely cause the eventual closure of health food stores across the country and there is absolutely nothing we can do about it. This rider is part of the United Nations W.H.O. Alimentarius Commission's program to CONTROL all food supplements worldwide. The program is REQUIRED by all signatories to the GATT Treaty. Commission members are all from the giant drug companies and we-the-people have ZERO input or representation. Not long ago the country of Norway passed into law this identical program and already their government has closed down over half of their health food stores, and the closings continue as this is being written.

QUESTION: Is there any way to reverse this law?

ANSWER: No.

QUESTION: Is there anything we can do? This appears to be a total and absolute affront to all of us and is extremely repressive to people seeking to attend to their health needs.

ANSWER: This can turn out to be the straw that breaks the camel's back in turning the masses against the United Nation's globalists' agenda and their numerous programs and encroachments into the freedoms of individuals in this country. If all of the health field and industry and people concerned about health care should turn their anger toward this Bill and toward the United Nations World Health Organization, their program to gain CONTROL over us may be a complete reversal. They may have won a battle over a law, but by doing so they may possibly turn the tide of the war against them. Please jump in and help in whatever way you can. We are all greatly needed. IF NOT YOU, THEN WHO?

While this assault on health food stores has been expected for some time, it can't succeed unless concerned citizens simply look the other way. Flood your Congressional representatives with your thoughts on this matter, and let all your neighbors and friends know what is going on, too.

PHYSICIST INVENTS WORLD'S FIRST STEALTH CAR!

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 2/13/00: [quoting]

By the year 2001, some American automobiles may be equipped with an astonishing new stealth device—an option that makes the cars invisible to radar!

But the feature is not without its critics, who say the idea is dangerous and call its manufacturers irresponsible.

The technology was created and developed by physicist Dr. David Galberon who often consults with the Pentagon on top-secret military projects. Dr. Galberon says the idea was inspired by the stealth bomber, which is invisible to standard radar.

“Like the famous war plane, the cars will be made out of a Kevlar-like material. The paint is also similar to that used on the stealth” Dr. Galberon says.

“When the driver pulls a lever in the car’s interior, properties in the material and in the paint render the car invisible to radar.”

The noted researcher says the invisibility feature will come as standard equipment in most police cars in the year 2001 and will be available to all drivers as an option.

“For most people, it will be a novelty item” Dr. Galberon says, “a fun feature that will allow a driver to breeze past radar traps on highway like a ghost car.

“But for police, it will be of tremendous value. They will be able to catch speeders, sneak up on criminals and, in effect, create a deterrent to crime by virtue of the fact that no gangster or drug dealer will know when the police are nearby, even with the latest high-tech equipment.”

But opponents are horrified at the idea of invisible cars.

“Dr. Galberon’s argument overlooks one obvious fact” says automobile-safety advocate Wilma Jurno. “If police can use invisibility to their advantage, so can criminals. Bank robbers, hit-and-run violators, drunk drivers—all kinds of lawbreakers—can commit their crimes and simply disappear.”

Mrs. Jurno says she and her advocacy group, Citizens For Safe Roads And Highways, plan to fight the automobile industry on this matter, all the way to the Supreme Court. [End quoting]

Something is wrong with this picture. Can you really believe that we would be able to buy stealth cars so we can just bypass the speeding tickets and the cops?

CHINA URGES WORLD TO ACCEPT IT WILL ABSORB TAIWAN

China urged the world on Sunday to accept its goal of absorbing Taiwan along the lines of its unification with Hong Kong and Macau—or else risk consequences “you don’t want to see”.

China has always been a sleeping giant and a world power to be reckoned with. This type of situation can break out into a horrifying display of force very fast. For instance:

CHINA THREATENS TO STRIKE US WITH ICBMS IF TAIWAN DEFENDED

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 3/1/00: [quoting]

China stepped up its war of words over Taiwan yesterday, bluntly threatening to fire long-range nuclear missiles at the United States if it defends the island.

The warning, published in the official People’s Liberation Army newspaper, comes as a U.S. aircraft carrier and two cruise-missile destroyers recently began exercises off Japan. Defense officials said the warships could be sent to the Taiwan Strait in a crisis.

The official military newspaper, Liberation Army Daily, stated in a commentary made public in Beijing that U.S. intervention in a conflict between China and Taiwan would result in “serious damage” to U.S. security interests in Asia.

The military then warned that China could resort to long-range missile attacks on the United States during a regional conflict. “China is neither Iraq nor Yugoslavia but a very special country,” the newspaper stated.

While China is a permanent member of the Security Council of the United Nations, “on the other hand, it is a country that has certain abilities of launching a strategic counterattack and the capacity of launching a long-distance strike” the article said. “It is not a wise move to be at war with a country such as China, a point which the U.S. policy-makers know fairly well also” the newspaper said. “The U.S. military will even be forced to [make] a complete withdrawal from the East Asian region, as they were forced to withdraw from southern Vietnam in those days” the paper said.

The article was unusually harsh, according to Pentagon officials familiar with the translation, and echoed a private warning made in 1995 by Chinese Lt. Gen. Xiong Guangkai.

Gen. Xiong, the PLA’s top intelligence and foreign policy official, told a former Pentagon official at that time that Washington would not help defend Taiwan because it cared more about Los Angeles than Taiwan. The remark was reported to the White House as a threat to use nuclear weapons. [End quoting]

ALASKA AIR PILOTS, CREW SAY NTSB CRASH STORY IS ‘BS’

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 2/27/00: [quoting]

Notes From John Quinn & Anthony J. Hilder’s Newspad.

From NewsHawk Inc. <hawknews@saber.net> 2-27-00.

Alaska Airlines pilots and crews aren’t buying into the National Transport Safety Board bureaucrats’ “cover-up story” on how AK Air’s Flight 261 went down for the final count, killing all 88 aboard.

Scuttlebutt has it that employees are deeply disturbed by the fact that the airline isn’t furnishing any information to their staff people. An inordinate amount of personnel have been absent the first three weeks after the crash due to “emotional trauma”.

“We’re not buying the NTSB’s bull s--t” says one source. “The Feds have tossed a foul ball and we are not hitting it.” The airline’s mechanics are near unanimous in the belief that the “air holocaust” wasn’t because of any “faulty” stabilizer screw. In the words of one mechanic with Alaska Air: “That’s so much hokum!”

Moreover, in talking to one employee who knew Fl. 261’s pilots Bill Tansky and Ted Thompson, they said: “They were two of our most experienced pilots.” But when asked why they headed out to sea, turning away from the airfield at Point Mugu with its open and immediately accessible runway, they didn’t have an answer. “I just don’t know why they bypassed the runway; no one here can explain it” our source divulged with tears in their eyes. “I was crying for a week and I haven’t been able to sleep ever since. I knew eight of the people on board personally. They were my friends.” We know for certain that a number of the Hilder/Quinn articles were circulating in various Alaska Airline offices around the country. Apparently some of Alaska Air’s flight attendants made copies. They have been seen from Puerto Vallarta to Anchorage and all spots in-between.

The articles, including “It Defies All Logic”, have been picked up by other major websites, including Robert Sterling’s <Konformist.com>, Jeff Rense’s <sightings.com>, Kent Steadman’s <Cyberspaceorbit.com>, and Doug Pooley’s FlashRadar. The articles have been seen by millions at this point.

Attorneys across the country representing those who died needlessly in the crash have also been availed of the information and are taking a CLOSE LOOK at what was going on at the U.S. Navy's Pt. Mugu Weapons Testing Center on February 1st.

One of our sources at Alaska Air says: "When I came into the employee's room, there were five people reading it at the same time. I was busy and didn't have time to read it until the next day." The source said: "One girl (a flight attendant) was concerned that we are not being given the truth." Our contact went on to say: "Everybody is asking why we (the flight) didn't land at Point Mugu. They had plenty of opportunity. But who knows what happened? They're not telling us anything." Three weeks later, it's still "mum's the word". As to the NTSB's "spin story", the widely-prevailing view within Alaska Air is "No way! It didn't happen that way." [End quoting]

This is too long of a story so please get a friend who has a computer to get it for you if you don't have one. It is a very good story. We would have used the space for the story but it is quite similar to the other recent "accident cover-ups" although each have their own twists and turns. However, it should strike you as more than coincidence that 2 "accidents" in a very short space of time would have tail problems and that both lost parts or all of their tails before hitting the water.

Good questions are: Were they shot off by a weapon or blown off by enclosed explosives? Was there somebody "important" on that airplane? Or—after hearing the cover-up stories—first the explosive and then an outside weapon source to finish the job when crews tried to recover the ailing craft. And, what if there occurred some kind of mishap involving super-secret technologies from any of several nearby military installations?

SEVERE FLOODING IN QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA

CNN Headline News on Feb. 28, 2000 had a big report on the very, very severe flooding there and much of the area is a disaster.

Stan Deyo, who publishes reports on weather, quakes, ocean temperatures, volcanos, etc., and is a regular guest on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program, has put out a report that parts of Australia are under severe drought in contrast with this latest report about the Queensland area. <<http://www.millennium-ark.net>>

This is—as most of us know—not just happening in Australia, but all over the world. The controlled media are keeping much of this activity quiet so as not to awaken us to a state of questioning what is going on—and why.

BROADCASTERS SEEK TO KILL NEW "LOW POWER FM"

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 2/8/00: [quoting]

This is an update to last month's article in this column.

Turn off that radio!

In the last 12 months we've seen a veteran radio broadcaster removed from his place of work by armed guards (Dennis Bernstein at KPFA in Berkeley) and writers being prosecuted by the federal government on serious—and trumped up—charges (Peter McWilliams, David Hoffman and James Sanders).

One ray of sunshine was the recent and surprising FCC decision to approve low-power FM radio stations for community broadcasting.

Well, it ain't over 'til it's over.

Broadcasters Seek To Kill Low-Power FM, from JWFoster97@aol.com, Union Democracy <<http://www.uniondemocracy.com>>.

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) approved a low-power FM radio service on January 20, 2000. This new FM service will allow community-based organizations and groups to license low-power 100 and 10 watt radio stations in their community.

This new FM service was endorsed and supported by the AFL-CIO, CWA, IUE, and other labor organizations. Unions can use this new service for many useful purposes, such as organizing and providing important information to their community.

Mike Oxley, Congressman from Ohio, has introduced H.R. 3439, "The Radio Preservation Act Of 1999". This bill would repeal and kill this new FM radio service.

This Bill is very important to me and should be to members of the labor community. Please let everyone know that they should make every effort to oppose and defeat this Bill by contacting their representatives in Congress immediately, and go on record in favor of this new low-power FM radio service.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely, Jim Foster, member UAW 249 Kansas City, Missouri <jwfoster97@aol.com>.

SAMPLE LETTER TO MEMBER OF CONGRESS

January 28, 2000

Dear Representative/Senator,

H.R. 3439, titled the "Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act of 1999", was introduced on November 17, 1999 by Representative Michael Oxley. The stated purpose of this Bill is "To prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from establishing rules authorizing the operation of new, low-power FM radio stations".

The Rep. Oxley Bill is a serious betrayal of the public trust. For over a year, the FCC has been conducting a Notice of Proposed Rule Making [NPRM] regarding the proposed establishment of these new stations. This NPRM was initiated in response to a significant national movement advocating new classes of FM stations in response to extensive radio media consolidation and loss of radio media localism in the wake of the Telecommunications Act of 1996. Proposals for the initial NPRM have been distilled and published by the Commission and two iterations of comments from literally hundreds of participants are presently on file.

Mr. Oxley now seeks to circumvent the FCC's statutory rulemaking with special interest legislation. H.R. 3439 was introduced at the behest of the National Association of Broadcasters [NAB]. This group claims new LPFM stations are technically incompatible with existing FM stations and with the proposed In-Band On-Carrier [IBOC] digital transmission standard. These arguments have been refuted in comparative studies and in a published system evaluation by IBOC developer USADR itself. In any event, such technical matters must be scrutinized and ruled on by the FCC, where the relevant expertise resides, and not by congressional fiat.

It appears that the NAB pressured Rep. Oxley into introducing this special-interest legislation because established radio broadcasters fear the potential for added competition. Although Mr. Oxley has long been a champion of selective deregulation and has often adopted the NAB's peculiar interpretation of public-interest standards (such as allowing majority foreign ownership of U.S. broadcast media), this legislation is so contrary to the public interest that it defies rational explanation.

I would therefore greatly appreciate it if your office would seek an immediate and thorough explanation from Mr. Oxley regarding the public-interest aspects of his anti-LPFM legislation and his rationale for preempting the FCC's rulemaking process.

I also strongly urge you to request that Representative Oxley withdraw his ill-considered legislation and, should the legislation not be withdrawn, my sincere request is that you actively oppose this legislation on the grounds that it seeks to circumvent the statutory rule-making authority of the Federal Communications Commission.

Thank you for your consideration and I look forward to hearing from you regarding your position on this matter.

Sincerely,

Your name and address, phone, email.

[End quoting]

Remember that the radio frequencies are generally not available to the majority of desenters of the status quo. This is supposed to give desenters a better chance at getting their voices heard—not just labor unions. This is the same kind of opposition that FM faced when first introduced, since the Powers That Be had just completed their acquisitions of all controlling aspects of the AM band. The story of how FM's inventor, the great (but largely unknown) Edwin Howard Armstrong, was driven to the point of suicide is an insightful, if nasty and disgusting, chapter in the history of radio. Power and greed always seem to follow closely on the heels of invention.

ARIZONA MAKES PREPARATIONS FOR SECESSION

Excerpted from the INTERNET, 2/6/00: [quoting]

An Arizona state legislative committee has approved a resolution calling for the dissolution of the federal government in the event that it abolishes the U.S. Constitution, declares martial law, or confiscates firearms—scenarios some say are not unrealistic. Critics of the resolution, however, call the measure a “total waste of time”.

Karen Johnson is an Arizona state representative (<http://www.azleg.state.az.us/members/kjohnson.htm>). Rep. Karen Johnson, a Mesa Republican and chair of the House Committee on Federal Mandates and States' Rights, authored the resolution which the committee approved 3-2. Only the committee's vice-chair, Republican Rep. Gail Griffin, abstained from voting.

Specifically, House Concurrent Resolution 2034 outlines the origin of the United States, emphasizing the sovereignty of the states and their constitutional right to “establish a new federal government for themselves by following the precedent established by Article VII, Constitution Of The United States, in which nine of the existing thirteen states dissolved the existing Union under the Articles Of Confederation and automatically superceded the Articles.”

It also articulates constitutional violations committed by the federal government as justification for the measure, saying “...the fifty current principals, or signatories, to the [Constitution] have done well in honoring and obeying it, yet the federal agent has, for decades, violated it in both word and spirit.

The many violations of the Constitution Of The United States by the federal government include disposing of federal property without the approval of Congress, usurping jurisdiction from the states in such matters as abortion and firearms rights, and seeking control of public lands within state borders” says the resolution.

By adopting HRC 2034, Arizona states its intention to dissolve the current federal government with the approval of 34 other states and, in essence, start over. Participating states would re-ratify and re-establish the present Constitution “as the charter for the formation of a new federal government, to be followed by the election of a new Congress and President and the reorganization of a new judiciary” in keeping with the original intent of the “founding fathers”. Individual members of the military will return to their respective states and report to the governor until a new president is elected.

In addition, each state will assume a prorated portion of the national debt and will own all land within its borders. After the new government is formed, the remaining 15 states will be permitted to join the revised union upon application, as was the case with the original union.

A three-year veteran to the Arizona Legislature, Johnson told the Sierra Times the resolution is an “insurance policy”.

“If the federal government declares martial law or attempts to confiscate guns, the states shouldn't have to put up with that” she said. [End quoting]

If this is for real, maybe it will begin to shake up some of the parasites controlling the federal government. We can always hope! We do know the so-called elite controllers don't have a whole lot of time left before their dastardly and cowardly deeds catch up with them. Too many people are awakening—whether it be to aspartame in diet soda, closing down health stores, or usurping any of a dozen other basic rights and privileges of our original constitutional republic.

POSSE COMMITATUS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 2/7/99: [quoting]

According to radio personality Alex Jones and reporter Linda Witt of The Granger County News, on Jan. 15, National Guard troops, along with sheriff's officers, maintained a “DWI checkpoint for four hours in Granger County, Tenn., on 11 W Highway. During that time, there were 12 arrests, two cars impounded, and two ‘seizures of property’.” The sheriff's office reportedly doesn't want to talk about it. [End quoting]

This probably is another test to see how far they can push us into the illegal use of the National Guard without much complaints. Are we going to just ignore these actions??

BOTTOM LINE OKAY

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 2/7/99: [quoting]

While people the world over have a choice of paying exorbitant heating oil prices or staying cold, Exxon Mobil Corporation's fourth quarter earnings last year jumped 34 percent higher than even Wall Street expected them to. Meanwhile, Merrill Lynch & Co.'s profits for the same quarter more than doubled to a new record due to what the company calls “a boom in mergers and equity underwriting increased investment banking”. [End quoting]

Does anybody see a correlation to all the mergers and what is happening to prices and our freedoms?

Also the news tells us there is really no shortage of oil—OPEC is holding tight control of the shipping of it. Think the so-called elite controllers could have this tight of control if it wasn't for all of these mergers?

TAX CODE ABOUT TO ENDURE MORE ABUSE

CLINTON'S PLAN ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF POLITICAL GOALS
CAUSING CHAOS

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, by Daniel J. Mitchell, 2/14/00: [quoting]

The Internal Revenue Code is America's national nightmare: Its 17,000 pages of fine print law and regulations have spawned 721 different forms.

The paperwork mailed out each year by the Internal Revenue Service could circle the Earth 28 times. Even the “simple” 1040EZ return requires 32 pages of instructions.

Taxpayers squander more than 5.4 billion hours every year in a futile effort to comply with tax laws that have changed more than 6,000 times since 1986. Yet, if President Clinton has his way, the tax system will become even more complicated and unfair.

His final budget contains 221 new proposals, including 93 tax increases, 42 “user fees”, 27 new credits, five new exclusions, three new deductions, and two new marriage penalties, with perhaps “a partridge in a pear tree” in the fine print.

Who wins from this game? Certainly not the taxpayers. If all of the administration's changes are approved, tax collections over the next five years are estimated to be $10.825 trillion, compared with $10.829 trillion if the tax laws are left unchanged.

In other words, the president is only willing to cut taxes over the next five years by $4.4 billion, an infinitesimal reduction of four-hundredths of 1 percent. While taxpayers get a pittance, politicians and lobbyists come out winners.

Politicians win because they can rake in campaign cash by rewarding friends with new tax preferences. Lobbyists win because they can bill hundreds of dollars for each hour spent getting new loopholes in the tax code or making sure their clients are not affected by the multitude of tax increases the president has proposed.

Indeed, the president's budget is a perfect example of why our tax code has become such a mess. From its beginnings as a simple, two-page form in 1913, the income tax has grown into a monstrosity because politicians have been unable to resist the temptation to use it for political purposes. [End quoting]

Remember that the IRS is the extortion arm of the equally illegal Federal Reserve—both of which came into existence in 1913 by secret, underhanded means, with the blessing of the puppet-president Woodrow Wilson. It appears that the entire entity is about to bury itself in the complications of its own greed. One can but hope.

ONE NIGHT OF DRINKING CAN DAMAGE UNBORN CHILDREN

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 2/11/00: [quoting]

A single drinking binge by a pregnant woman can be enough to permanently damage the brain of her unborn child, according to a new study of the effects of alcohol on babies.

Although experiments in the study were conducted on laboratory rats, experts said the findings offer an explanation of why children born to drinking mothers can suffer learning disabilities and other brain disorders.

The study indicates that rats, and presumably humans, are most susceptible to alcohol-related neurological damage during a period when developing brain cells are furiously building the connections needed for memory, learning, and thought. In humans, this brain growth spurt starts in the sixth month of gestation and continues for two years after birth. In rats, it comes in the two weeks after birth.

"We call this a brain growth spurt period" said Dr. John W. Olney, a Washington University School of Medicine researcher and senior author of the study appearing today in the journal Science.

During this brain growth spurt, said Olney, a single prolonged contact with alcohol lasting for four hours or more is enough to kill vast numbers of brain cells.

"There is a massive wave of cell suicide after the brain is exposed to ethanol (alcohol)" said Olney. "The cells die by the millions and millions."

The "binge" used in the study gave the rats a blood alcohol level of .20, or 200 milligrams of alcohol per deciliter of blood. Such a level in people is twice the legal standard of drunkenness in many states.

Dr. David Lovinger of the Vanderbilt University School of Medicine said in Science that the study carries a powerful message: Drinking in late pregnancy "is really unsafe for the brain". [End quoting]

Hopefully you will help broadcast this important message far and wide to expectant mothers.

ARKANSAS HIGH COURT LOOKS TO STRIP CLINTON OF LAW LICENSE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 2/11/00: [quoting]

The Arkansas Supreme Court has given President Clinton 30 days to respond to two ethics complaints seeking to strip him of his law license because of his conduct in the Monica Lewinsky scandal.

The court's Committee on Professional Conduct notified the Southeastern Legal Foundation, which filed one of the complaints, that it is notifying Clinton of the deadline and he is entitled to have a public hearing.

"If the attorney (Clinton) takes exception to the committee's decision, he has a right to request a public hearing" the committee's executive director, James Neal, wrote the foundation on February 3.

Lawyers told The Associated Press that Clinton has received notification of a second complaint seeking to revoke his license and must respond within 30 days, although Clinton can seek a 30-day extension. The lawyers spoke on condition of anonymity.

The second complaint specifically cites as evidence against the president U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright's ruling that Clinton gave intentionally false testimony about his sexual relationship with Lewinsky in the Paula Jones civil lawsuit.

The court's decision resurrects a controversy that Clinton hoped was put behind him at an impeachment trial last year. His lawyers will now have to defend his license at a time when Clinton is trying to close out his presidency with initiatives ranging from tax cuts to new benefits for Medicare recipients.

Clinton attorney David Kendall declined to comment Thursday. [End quoting]

FDA DECLARES ALOE VERA ILLEGAL!

From CALIFORNIA SUN newspaper, Millenium Issue: [quoting]

By Ron Wert

Aloe has had a long history of therapeutic uses for burns, reduction of pain, as well as antiviral and antibacterial applications. Now a new highly concentrated form of aloe in a product called T-Plus is capable of boosting the body's immune system with a vengeance!

In 1995, Allen Hoffman, Ph.D., discovered that high concentrations of aloe vera were able to increase T lymphocytes and attack cancer, AIDS, herpes, and other viruses like nothing else before it. Developed and produced exclusively under the direction of Dr. Hoffman, T-Plus has the incredible attributes of being natural, nutritional, and non-toxic, as well as extremely powerful. We're not talking about diluted aloe vera juice or concentrate you buy at your local healthfood store. T-Plus takes sixty-four gallons of organic aloe vera juice just to make one teaspoon!

What actually happens is that T-Plus builds up the number of T-4 and T-8 lymphocytes in the body, which in turn produce cytokines which destroy microbes and cancer cells. It doesn't matter if you are involved in conventional treatment or not. T-Plus is a totally natural, nutritional substance, and will not cause any harm.

The health value of aloe vera comes as no surprise to Dr. Wendell Winters, associate professor of Microbiology at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio, who has been researching aloe vera for the past 16 years. He authored his first major scientific paper on the plant in 1981. Dr. Winters, who also heads the Phytobiology Research Department, says "We think of aloe as a pharmacy in a plant."

Another report from the Maryland Anderson Cancer Center suggests that aloe vera gel can stop immune system damage caused by sunburns. Over one hundred studies in the past ten years show the efficacy of this extraordinary plant in a myriad of problems.

Among the one hundred forty substances contained in aloe, there are several that reduce inflammation, along with some that promote tissue growth and healing. In the past ten years, researchers around the world have confirmed the ability of aloe, in a highly concentrated solution, to stimulate the growth of white blood cells.

FDA APPROVED ALOE

In 1994, aloe vera was approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for human testing against the human immune deficiency virus, HIV. Furthermore, the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act of 1994 allowed public access to the use of naturally occurring substances for medical use. So what went wrong?

WHY THE FDA IS PUBLIC HEALTH ENEMY #1

Apparently, the FDA wasn't expecting an aloe vera concentrate to work so well. As word spread throughout the natural healing community about a new aloe vera concentrate, the testimonies came flooding in. In 1998, the state of Maryland (Hoffman's home base), at the urging of the AMA and using their legal arm, the FDA, indicted Hoffman for promoting an unapproved HIV and cancer therapy. As is normally the case, patients and doctors appearing on Hoffman's behalf were not allowed to testify as to the rapid medical benefits they experienced. The judge constantly reminded all witnesses that the court's only concern was to focus on whether or not there was a "rule" violation. Medical results were not relative to the "rules" issue, the basis for the indictment. Subsequently, Hoffman was fined $3.7 million for not following the rules. Our "protective" government then went after the farmer, charging him with 5 counts of growing aloe for unapproved medical use. In addition, they went after a Dr. Donald Mackay, charging him with 10 counts of using T-Plus as an unapproved cancer therapy. Dr. Mackay experienced miraculous results from using T-Plus on his cancer patients, but was not allowed to testify in court as to these benefits.

GESTAPO TACTICS

AMA and FDA tactics are not new. Famous brain cancer specialist, Dr. Stanisloff Berzynski in Texas (see The Sun, May 1997), was under attack by the FDA and indicted a record 72 times before he finally defeated the FDA in federal court. Being interviewed on HeartBeat, Radio Free America, Berzynski said: "I come from Poland and I'm helping people with cancer and I refuse to give in to the 'Gestapo' tactics of the FDA."

ALOE VERA ON TRIAL

In March of 2000, Dr Hoffman will stand trial again for continuing to promote T-Plus. As he has said to this reporter: "I'd rather go to jail than let people die not knowing the benefits of a safe, natural product like T-Plus. Not a single AIDS or cancer patient has to die since all that is truly necessary is to properly and effectively stimulate the immune system. T-Plus does that and more."

It is through the courage and dedication of doctors like Allen Hoffman that this country's health system will make the shift from toxic modalities to natural healing, immune building herbs, and substances. Currently Dr. Hoffman needs your funding and support.

For more information on T-Plus or to order a cassette tape of Dr. Hoffman's interview on HeartBeat, Radio Free America, contact Heart to Heart Media Group at (805) 646-8269 or (888) 230-7505. [End quoting]

It is certainly time that both the AMA and FDA are put in their place. Their version of "protecting" us is getting to be old and continually more damaging to the good health of we-the-people. The one technique which works with bureaucrats who are acting as puppets for special interests (in this case, the large drug companies) is to overwhelm them with the spotlight of protest in any way you can legally do so—including alerting the media and your congressional representatives.

DIGITAL RADIO DAYS

From PC MAGAZINE, 3/7/00: [quoting]

Digital radio was one of the hottest topics at the recent Consumer Electronics Show, even though it won't reach the open market for over a year. The buzz isn't surprising, considering that radio is one of the most popular broadcasting media (if not the most popular) in the U.S. There are over 550 million radios in the U.S. right now, 6.1 per household, according to the Consumer Electronics Society. All these radios are tuning in to analog broadcasts, full of static and interference. That's about to change.

Some stations have begun testing digital radio technology and will start transmitting digital signals in the second quarter of next year. That's plenty of time for manufacturers to start building digital radio receivers into all sorts of devices beyond alarm clocks and portable tape players. You're likely to see cellular phones, PDAs, and PC cards with built-in digital radios.

While radio broadcasts transmit only sound via the airwaves, digital audio broadcast (DAB) technology can also transmit data in bit form. And the broadcasts are received in an enhanced audio format along with the digital information, using what is called in-band, on-channel (IBOC) DAB technology. As a result, AM radio will have FM quality, and FM sound will be equivalent to that of CDs.

IBOC lets broadcasters transmit digital audio and data simultaneously over existing AM/FM frequencies. The data will include information such as station, song, and artist identification, as well as news, stock, traffic, and weather updates. Eventually, you may be able to receive instant messages, e-mail, and calendar information.

Two companies are now developing competing versions of IBOC DAB technology. Lucent Digital Radio uses its version of the Perceptual Audio Coder (PAC), originally developed by Bell Labs, to convert analog audio signals to digital. USA Digital Radio uses Advanced Audio Coding (AAC). Both versions are currently under review by the FCC.

Rockin' Radio: USA Digital Radio recently demonstrated a digital AWFM radio from Kenwood that receives text data as well as audio.

I'd think more about this news item if there was imposed a reasonable limit on advertising time for transmissions over the radio airwaves. We are supposed to own the airwaves, but to listen to them, about all we get is 10-12 minutes of show per 30 minutes of airtime for many programs worth listening to—even the Art Bell Show. All the rest of the air time is filled with commercial messages of one kind or another.

NO EXCUSE FOR 63,000 BUGS

Excerpted from the INTERNET, 2/10/00: [quoting]

According to an internal Microsoft memo, as reported by my colleague Mary Jo Foley, the company has identified some 63,000 potential problems to be addressed in the next release of the product.

That's a staggering number.

To be sure, Win2K is staggeringly huge, and defect rates, not absolute numbers, are a better measure of likely reliability in practice. At less than two defects per 1,000 lines of code, Win2K is 80% better than the threshold that software-quality guru Steve McConnell suggests as the signal for a ground-up redesign. Not that I find this entirely comforting, since McConnell also observes that defect distribution is far from uniform; one IBM study, he reports, found 57% of the software errors in only 7% of the studied modules.

But it's Microsoft's stockholders who have the most reason to be troubled by the notion that defects are acceptable in a shipping software product, and that fixing them in a subsequent release is a viable strategy. One Microsoft comment on the 63,000-bug memo was that "bugs are inherent in computer science", which is patently false in theory and bad economics in practice.

THE COST OF BUG FIXES

By most estimates, the cost of repairing a software bug after a rollout is three to 10 times as great as the cost of defect prevention and 50 to 200 times as great as the cost of a more rigorous requirements definition before coding even begins. If Microsoft, optimistically, spends about $1,000 per item to resolve those 63,000 potential problems (that's only 10 hours of professional staff time plus overhead), then ship-and-fix is costing the company at least an extra $40 million—perhaps $60 million—compared with defect prevention. And perhaps those numbers should be at least 10 times greater.

In addition to the costs that go straight to the bottom line, Microsoft faces revenue delays due to poor customer confidence in the company's initial releases—not to mention loss of customers to other platforms, such as AS/400, that have solid reputations for getting it right the first time.

Moreover, development teams and their managers need to realize that schedules slip more, rather than less, when attention to quality is compromised. The need to ship the product is the most-often-cited excuse for cutting corners, but McConnell observes that the corner you cut today is followed by testing and integration of code that will later be discarded.

[End quoting]

Is it any wonder so many people hate Microsoft? Can you imagine what would happen to a car company or most other companies if they put out such half-baked products? The people and the courts would be all over them. This shows us how much power Bill Gates exercises over the computing markets. It's time something was done about it, even if it's suing Microsoft for false advertising and for refunds for knowingly selling faulty products all over the world.

THE DANGER OF THE MAGNETIC BUZZ

From CALIFORNIA SUN newspaper, Millenium Issue: [quoting]

By Ilonka Harezi

In recent years, much has been written about the benefits of using magnets on the human body. Companies are getting rich selling magnets, with consumers using magnets at an alarming rate. Promotion is focused on the benefits, with little attention given to proper use of the magnet, its limitations, hazards from over use, or using the wrong type of magnet for the problem area.

After years of research, the unmistakable bottom line is: which end is which? The Southern Hemisphere electron spin differs from the Northern Hemisphere spin. The Indians don't agree with the Japanese. There is no room for guessing. If you don't use magnets correctly, YOU CREATE MORE DAMAGE THAN IF YOU HADN'T DONE ANYTHING!

No one wants to tell the public about this technology—it is a double-edged sword of the sharpest kind. If the person using magnets is untrained, he/she can only follow the directions on the box—putting the magnets on a body with no regard for the polarity. However, ALL diseases or maladies require specific pole use for organs, at a specific time, and as the condition improves, a reversal of the magnetic field may be indicated to speed up the healing process. If the wrong pole (north or south) is used, the problem can become aggravated.

When an organ or part of the body becomes injured, it immediately turns negative in an attempt to retard growth of infectious materials. Later, as it begins to repair itself, it will turn positive in an attempt to speed up the healing. Thus, the eventual switch of polarity. However, if a germicide is used as soon as the injury occurs, and it can be determined there is no chance of infection, the positive may be used from the start. This action, in most cases, will stop the pain faster than with the negative polarity and will dramatically speed-up circulation and healing.

A passive, static magnetic field causes the metabolism to be heightened. This effect stops the pain and causes adrenaline and endorphins to be produced. These are both natural painkillers, which will afford greater relief from whatever problems happen to be causing the pain. After a few month use, however, the body acclimates to the magnetic field, because of the continued use of the magnet. When the body begins to overcome the field produced by the magnet, metabolism drops and the user not only goes into a deep depressive state, but their physical pain problem is heightened when the body is no longer receiving "endorphine" rush.

Many tests have been done in Germany and demonstrate that a static magnetic field boosts the metabolism, but does not oxygenate the body. A pulsed electromagnetic field causes oxygenation to the system. Do not be confused! Many "experts" confuse the effects of a static magnetic field with a pulsed electromagnetic field. To be electromagnetic, the field must contain magnetic component as well as an electric component. Bone healing, as well as other medical applications, are electromagnetic fields—not a static magnetic field. Read the experiments put forth on work done by Drs. Becker and Marino. These experiments are performed with electromagnetic fields—not magnetic fields produced by magnets! Promoters tend to use electromagnetic research, Robert O. Becker's book THE BODY ELECTRIC, and other electromagnetic studies to prove their point for using magnets. This is incorrect!

If the user has been applying the wrong polarity, they may shut down certain areas of the body by depolarizing the cells themselves. Remember, all cells have a spin, and polarity is much like a top put in motion. A strong magnet (200 gauss plus) applied to the body over a period of time will alter the shift of the "diseased" cell and cause it to wobble. When this happens, these cells are no longer able to perform their normal functions. If a certain field can polarize a cell, why not depolarize? Blood and the oxygen it carries are dependent on the action of hemoglobin, a very iron-rich fluid. Iron is highly influenced by the application of magnetic fields.

Our bodies are like tiny universes. Each cell or blood platelet has a spin much like the Earth itself. Even the frequency of the brain has been shown to be in tune with the Earth's natural resonant frequency of 7 to 9 hertz. When disease strikes or the body takes a hard blow, the cells begin to teeter and their polarity becomes reversed. Like a small magnet, the cells attract each other and form a thrombus, tumor, blood clot, etc. The Earth's magnetic field is only .05 gauss and that is all the field strength required to be biologically effective and cause a change in our cells.

Greedy manufacturers are creating huge "gimmick" products to sell to the unsuspecting public. Beds with 6,000 to 12,000 gauss, and magnets of 2,000 to 6,000 gauss, to be used on each side of the head, have enough strength to cause brain ionization. Some shoe pads and other body pads have 2,000 gauss each. This is pure overkill! But even worse, these magnets can be used with the wrong polarity and create a new problem or aggravate an existing one. No two bodies are alike, so there is no such thing as a common magnet.

The "bipolar" magnet can be a real killer. All researchers know that one must never use both polarities at the same time. That is worse than the wrong polarity. Yet, bipolar magnets are being sold to the unsuspecting public.

Magnets DO work—applied by professionals with years of study and experience. The professional can best determine the gauss strength, polarity and length of time to use the magnet. In the hands of inexperienced users, magnets become a dangerous biological weapon. [End quoting]

There are always the charlatans out there to take your money, so please research any method for boosting your health. Magnet therapy is quite old but just now is being rediscovered.

This is the first article I've come across where someone is trying to wake up the public to the possible dangers of misusing magnets, which are being sold from millions of magazine ads.

I agree that magnets, USED PROPERLY, can be a big asset to the maintenance of a healthy body.

BIG BROTHER ALWAYS HAS ANOTHER TRICK!

DATAGLYPHS CAN BE PROGRAMMED INTO EVERY PRINT DEVICE WITHOUT YOU KNOWING IT, SO THAT EVERYTHING WE PRINT CAN BE TRACED BACK TO THE MACHINE THAT PRINTED IT!!

From the INTERNET, 2/20/00: [quoting]

DataGlyphs are a new technology for encoding machine-readable data onto paper documents or other physical media. They encode information into thousands of tiny, individual glyph elements. Each element consists of a small 45-degree diagonal line, as short as 1/100th of an inch or less, depending on the resolution of the printing and scanning that is used. Each one represents a single binary 0 or 1, depending on whether it slopes to the left or right. Sequences of these can be used to encode numeric, textual, or other information.

The individual glyphs are grouped together on the page, where they form unobtrusive, evenly textured gray areas, like half-toned pictures. One of the reasons for using diagonal glyph elements is because research has shown that the patterns that they form when massed together are not visually distracting.

DataGlyph technology allows ordinary business documents to carry thousands of characters of information hidden in these unobtrusive gray patterns that can appear as backgrounds, shading patterns, or conventional graphic design elements. Often, their presence will go completely unnoticed. (The entire Gettysburg Address will fit in a DataGlyph about the size of a small US postage stamp.) DataGlyph areas can be printed on a document as part of its normal printing process. The information to be put in the DataGlyphs is encoded as a sequence of individual glyphs, and these can be printed either directly by the encoding software (for instance, by a computer laser printer) or via a conventional printing process, such as offset.

The glyphs are laid down on a finely spaced rectangular grid so that the area is evenly textured. In addition, each glyph area contains an embedded synchronization lattice or “skeleton”—a repeating, fixed pattern of glyphs which marks the boundaries of the glyph area and serves as a clocking track to improve the reliability of reading.

Before data is placed into the synchronization frame, it's grouped into blocks of a few dozen bytes and error correcting code is added to each block. The amount of error correction to be used is chosen by the application, depending on the expected quality of the print-scan cycle.

Higher levels of error correction increase the size of the glyph area needed for a given amount of data, but improve the reliability with which the data can be read back. This can be very important in environments where there's a high level of image noise (for example, fax) or where the documents are subjected to rough handling.

As a final step, the bytes of data are randomly dispersed across the glyph area, so that if any part of the glyph area on the paper is severely damaged, the damage to any individual block of data will be slight, and thus easy for the error correcting code to recover. Together, error correction and randomization provide very high levels of reliability, even when the glyph area is impaired by ink marks, staples, and other kinds of image damage.

DataGlyphs are a Trademark of Xerox Corporation. [End quoting]

EGYPTIANS FIND TOMB OF ANCIENT GOD OSIRIS

From the INTERNET, courtesy of Calvin Burgin, <wrldline@texas.net>, 2/20/99: [quoting]

By Tony Snow, The Independent

Sinking water levels in the land of the pyramids have led to an unprecedented discovery—a granite sarcophagus of the ancient Egyptian god Osiris.

Osiris was one of the most important gods of ancient Egypt. His sarcophagus was found in a 98-foot-deep tomb at the Giza pyramids.

According to mythology, Osiris was murdered by his wicked brother Seth. He was buried by Isis, his sister-wife, and brought back to life as judge of the dead and ruler of the underworld.

Egyptian archaeologist Zahi Hawass said the sarcophagus, which he dated to 500 BC in the New Kingdom, was surrounded by the remains of four pillars built in the shape of a hieroglyphic “Bir” or “House of Osiris”.

The excavation unearthed 3,000-year-old bones and pottery found in the underground water, he said.

“I never excavated this shaft because it was always full of water. But when the water went down about a year ago, we started the adventure” he said.

After dirt and most of the remaining water were cleared from the shaft, located between the Sphinx and the Pyramid of Chefred (Khafre), archaeologists found three underground levels, with the submerged Osiris sarcophagus at the lowest.

“Many people believed there were tunnels going to the Sphinx and another leading to the Great Pyramid, but only when we sent a young boy into a tunnel in the west wall of the tomb shaft did we find this exciting discovery” said Hawass. [End quoting]

There are likely to be many more such surprises. The question is—how many will be made public?

PERFUME—CUPID'S ARROW OR POISON DART?

Joint release issued by the Cancer Prevention Coalition and the Environmental Health Network.

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 2/13/00: [quoting]

The following was released today by Samuel S. Epstein, M.D., Professor of Environmental Medicine, University of Illinois School of Public Health, Chicago, and Chairman of the Cancer Prevention Coalition, and Amy Marsh, President of the Environmental Health Network, Larkspur, California:

Lovers looking for the perfect Valentine's gift should think twice before giving a bottle of toxic chemicals to their sweethearts. Recent analysis of Calvin Klein's “Eternity Eau de Parfum” (Eternity) by an industry laboratory specializing in fragrance chemistry revealed 41 ingredients. These include some known to be toxic to the skin, respiratory tract, nervous, and reproductive systems, and others known to be carcinogens; no toxicity data are available on several ingredients, while data on most are inadequate. Additionally, some ingredients are volatile and a source of indoor air pollution. Since 1995, several consumers have complained to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) of neurological and respiratory problems due to Eternity.

The analysis was recently commissioned by the Environmental Health Network (EHN) as many members had complained of asthma, migraine, sensitization, or multiple chemical sensitivity when exposed to Eternity. Based on this analysis, EHN filed a Citizen Petition with the FDA on May 11, 1999, which was subsequently endorsed by the Cancer Prevention Coalition. The petition requests that the FDA take administrative action and declare Eternity “misbranded” or “adulterated” since it does not carry a warning label as required by the terms of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act. Grounds for requesting the warning label include FDA regulation 21 CFR Sec. 740.10: “Each ingredient used in a cosmetic product and each finished cosmetic product shall be adequately substantiated for safety prior to marketing. Any such ingredient or product whose safety is not adequately substantiated prior to marketing is misbranded unless it contains the following conspicuous statement on the principal display panel: Warning: the safety of this product has not been determined.”

Since May, over 700 consumers with health problems from exposure to various mainstream fragrances have written to the FDA supporting EHN’s petition. The FDA responded on November 30 to the effect that they had been unable to reach a decision on the grounds of “other priorities and the limited availability of resources”. The petition is thus still open for further public complaints and endorsements. [End quoting]

Maybe this is a good incentive to support natural fragrances rather than those concocted in a laboratory.

SEVERE BURNS CAUSED FROM HEATING WATER IN MICROWAVE OVEN!

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 2/20/00: [quoting]

I feel that the following is information that anyone who uses a microwave oven to heat water should be made aware of.

About five days ago, my 26-year-old son decided to have a cup of instant coffee. He took a cup of water and put it in the microwave to heat it up (something that he had done numerous times before). I am not sure how long he set the timer for, but he told me he wanted to bring the water to a boil. When the timer shut the oven off, he removed the cup from the oven.

As he looked into the cup he noted that the water was not boiling but instantly the water in the cup “blew up” into his face. The cup remained intact until he threw it out of his hand, but all the water had flew out into his face due to the buildup of energy.

His whole face is blistered and he has 1st and 2nd degree burns to his face which may leave scarring. He also may have lost partial sight in his left eye. While at the hospital, the doctor who was attending to him stated that this a fairly common occurrence and water (alone) should never be heated in a microwave oven.

If water is heated in this manner, something should be placed in the cup to diffuse the energy such as a wooden stir stick, tea bag, etc. It is however a much safer choice to boil the water in a tea kettle.

Please pass this information on to friends and family. [End quoting]

Though they are accepted as part of almost every kitchen these days, microwave ovens sometimes induce any of a number of strange and undesirable effects in foods and beverages. The action of the microwaves themselves on the molecules of the food or drink can impart locally high energy levels which can then lead to effects such as the kind described above.

EXPRESSIONS OF LOVE

From A REGULAR E-MAIL CONTRIBUTOR, 2/16/00: [quoting]

My grandparents were married for over half a century, and played their own special game from the time they had met each other.

The goal of their game was to write the word “shmily” in a surprise place for the other to find.

They took turns leaving “shmily” around the house, and as soon as one of them discovered it, it was their turn to hide it once more.

They dragged “shmily” with their fingers through the sugar and flour containers to await whoever was preparing the next meal. They smeared it in the dew on the windows overlooking the patio where my grandma always fed us warm, homemade pudding with blue food coloring.

“Shmily” was written in the steam left on the mirror after a hot shower, where it would reappear bath after bath. At one point, my grandmother even unrolled an entire roll of toilet paper to leave “shmily” on the very last sheet. There was no end to the places “shmily” would pop up. Little notes with “shmily” scribbled hurriedly were found on dashboards and car seats, or taped to steering wheels.

The notes were stuffed inside shoes and left under pillows.

“Shmily” was written in the dust upon the mantel and traced in the ashes of the fireplace. This mysterious word was as much a part of my grandparents’ house as the furniture.

It took me a long time before I was able to fully appreciate my grandparents’ game. Skepticism has kept me from believing in true love—one that is pure and enduring. However, I never doubted my grandparents’ relationship. They had love down pat. It was more than their flirtatious little games; it was a way of life. Their relationship was based on a devotion and passionate affection which not everyone is lucky enough to experience. Grandma and Grandpa held hands every chance they could. They stole kisses as they bumped into each other in their tiny kitchen. They finished each other’s sentences and shared the daily crossword puzzle and word jumble.

My grandma whispered to me about how cute my grandpa was, how handsome and old he had grown to be. She claimed that she really knew “how to pick ’em”. Before every meal they bowed their heads and gave thanks, marveling at their blessings: a wonderful family, good fortune, and each other. But there was a dark cloud in my grandparents’ life: my grandmother had breast cancer. The disease had first appeared ten years earlier. As always, Grandpa was with her every step of the way.

He comforted her in their yellow room, painted that way so that she could always be surrounded by sunshine, even when she was too sick to go outside.

Now the cancer was again attacking her body. With the help of a cane and my grandfather’s steady hand, they went to church every morning.

But my grandmother grew steadily weaker until, finally, she could not leave the house anymore. For a while, Grandpa would go to church alone, praying to God to watch over his wife. Then one day, what we all dreaded finally happened. Grandma was gone.

“Shmily.” It was scrawled in yellow on the pink ribbons of my grandmother’s funeral bouquet. As the crowd thinned and the last mourners turned to leave, my aunts, uncles, cousins, and other family members came forward and gathered around Grandma one last time.

Grandpa stepped up to my grandmother’s casket and, taking a shaky breath, he began to sing to her.

Through his tears and grief, the song came, a deep and throaty lullaby. Shaking with my own sorrow, I will never forget that moment.

For I knew that, although I couldn’t begin to fathom the depth of their love, I had been privileged to witness its unmatched beauty.

S-h-m-i-l-y: See How Much I Love You.

Pass this on to some of your friends and family and tell them how much you love them, for there may not be another day that you will talk to them.

Purposeful Con-fusion

Surrounding Cold Fusion

Editor's note: I (E.Y.) have been wanting to present in this newspaper forum a good general overview article and "state of the art" summary on the intriguing subject of so-called "cold fusion" for a looong time. Ever since the University of Utah scientists, Pons and Fleischmann, first announced their findings on March 23, 1989, and then, in short and mysterious order, were subsequently "run out of town", the developments in this area have been most fascinating—if largely censored from the public media outlets.

I remember around January of 1992 when a huge explosion occurred one night at the very secretive Stanford Research Institute, near Stanford University, where one scientist died. It was hushed pretty well, except for we locals, and I'm sure it was "inconvenient" for them to have to admit the explosion's epicenter was a cold fusion experimental laboratory there at SRI—while the world had been told, over and over again, for several years by that time, that there was nothing to cold fusion.

The subject of cold fusion is one aspect of "free energy" or "over unity" devices—ways of seemingly achieving something for nothing. This is not actually the case; it only seems that way to conventional scientific thinking. Rather, it is a matter, figuratively speaking, of knowing how to fashion the right kind of "paddlewheel" to put in a particular kind of always flowing "stream". It only SEEMS like magic because we don't have a very good picture of reality in our so-called modern physics—for many reasons.

Naturally the true owners of the big oil, gas, and electric companies (the world's so-called "elite" families who control all the natural resources of this planet) would really rather you not have any such free avenue for obtaining something that they have so completely monopolized and metered to their benefit. These same ones have even gone to great lengths to make sure the physics textbooks have been well sanitized from carrying anything which could lead an inventive, creative young mind down any of a number of roads which would all lead to the development of "free energy" devices.

Starting before the turn of the century, the great electrical scientist, engineer, and inventor, Nikola Tesla, was mightily persecuted because of the danger he posed to the status quo due to his insights in this most fundamental area of energy exchange. And in our more modern era, there have been many, many gifted, creative ones who have suffered all kinds of life-threatening and life-ending "situations" engineered to give the impression of them being crackpots.

Moreover, considering the mind control (disguised as higher educational schooling) which the vast majority of the scientific community has been subjected to, myself included, is it any wonder that there are few equipped to understand, much less stand up for, those who have unlocked one of Mother Nature's free energy secrets?

Two excellent articles on this most intriguing subject recently crossed my desk. The first one, which is "tuned" more for a general (rather than scientific) audience, was generously offered for our use by Mr. Wayne Green. Mr. Green is a widely talented and accomplished and articulate person, who many of you have heard periodically on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program over the years. Mr. Green does such a good job of providing background about himself and this subject, in the process of telling the story, that it is best to simply turn over the podium to "professor" Green in our first article below. We are also providing an information box telling how to contact Mr. Green and/or order some of his wide range of interesting materials.

Then, while this first article was being prepared for publication as a stand-alone piece, another dynamite article "just happened" to fall open under my nose from one who is highly credentialed to speak on this subject—professional scientist Hal Fox.

We thank NEXUS magazine (2940 E. Colfax, PMB #131, Denver CO 80206; phone: 1-888-909-7474) for first presenting this material in their December 1999-January 2000 issue, and we strongly endorse this fine publication.

Hal's gem is in two sections. The first section is an update (from 10/18/99) on the unarguable reality that is the current state of cold fusion research, and the second section (from 8/6/99) courageously relates his first-hand knowledge concerning the relentless and diabolical covert effort desperately working to suppress cold fusion research. (Mr. Green's article chooses to overlook the conspiracy aspect of the cold fusion subject—an aspect which only makes the more aware observer all the more sure of The Truth, like when the FDA intervenes to "protect" us by removing useful items from the healthfood store shelves.)

Well, let's shed some more Light on this important scientific area—and see if we can't help to keep it alive and well and actively threatening to lower our power bills!

Cold Fusion Overview

SPRING, 1996 WAYNE GREEN

I came to the cold fusion controversy as neither a true believer nor a skeptic (aka non-believer). In my chosen role in life as an editor and publisher, I try to approach controversy pragmatically. However, I do have to admit to a bias. When I see any establishment group fighting a new idea, I tend to side with the bringers of change. This is a non-conservative side to my nature, which is otherwise strongly conservative.

For instance, I've found little evidence in life to support the basic concepts of socialism, and endless affirmation of the power of capitalism. And while democracy has some serious shortcomings, they're not as many as its competitors. So I'm resistant to socialized medicine and our American socialized school system.

Never have I seen any establishment group to be progressive. Indeed, history provides endless examples of the establishment fighting off new ideas and technologies. So when I discovered that the scientific elite was trying to prevent research in cold fusion, my natural instinct was to suspect that the elite were going to be wrong again. I wanted to find out more about this new field of research.

My publications helped the cellular telephone industry grow from the experimenting of a few amateur radio enthusiasts into a new industry, where I was the only publisher covering this field. I did this by publishing hundreds of articles in my amateur radio magazine on repeaters, then publishing a series of books, and finally by publishing a magazine devoted to the subject (The Repeater Bulletin).

I held a series of conferences around the country to get this new technology organized and standardized.

I repeated this when the personal computer was first invented by starting the first microcomputer publication (Byte), followed by the first computer-specific publication (80-Micro), and many more publications and software. I organized the first computer industry standards conference.

My success with cellular telephones and computers encouraged me to support the newly introduced compact disc with publications (Digital Audio, CD Review, Music Retailing, the Independent Music Producer's Society Journal), helping to make this become the fastest growing consumer electronics product in history.

Once I'd talked with a few of the scientists researching cold fusion, I felt that a dedicated publication might be able to help this grow into an industry. But this industry would be even more far reaching in its impact on the world than the personal computer.

As I talked with researchers and read their papers, I realized that Professors Pons and Fleischmann had discovered something of enormous potential. The researchers who initially were unable to replicate the P&F experiments apparently had been either careless or, expecting nothing to happen, accepted this result without question. But I also found that several researchers had confirmed the excess heat reported by P&F. As a side note, when the Department of Energy (DOE) issued an edict that any laboratory doing any cold fusion research of any kind would be denied any government funding for any of their research, this quickly stopped all further thought of cold fusion research by universities and any other even partially government funded labs.

When I got interested in cold fusion I remembered reading in the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Review that students there had early on sought to confirm the P&F experiments and had, indeed, been able to replicate the reported excess heat. But when I wrote to the new president of RPI, he refused to answer my letters on the subject. In retrospect I can understand why. RPI is heavily dependent on government funds for research, so the last thing they need is to admit to having done cold fusion research. That could cost them millions of dollars.

As I looked into the state of cold fusion further, I found that as a result of the DOE chill on cold fusion research, one of the leading American researchers in the field was Professor Dennis Cravens, a young physics teacher at a small community college in Vernon, Texas, who was experimenting in his garage. Dennis had invested around $5,000 of his own money in his lab and was successfully generating excess heat using the P&F approach.

Could the scientific establishment be wrong? Again? History told me that this was not just possible, but probable. Sure enough, researchers all around the world were making progress. They'd found that not only palladium, but also rubidium, rhodium, titanium, and platinum could also be made to generate excess heat. Even nickel! Some labs were reporting success with plain water, so the reaction didn't even require the use of the much more expensive "heavy" water used by P&F.

Researchers were exploring different temperatures, metals, electrolytes, pressures, radio-frequency excitation, magnetic fields, and so on, experimentally seeking higher ratios of output to input energy. They had to go by intuition because there was as yet no accepted theory explaining the reaction.

Meanwhile, other sources of apparent excess heat were turning up. Were they in some way connected to the P&F phenomenon? Sonoluminescence, hydrosonics, ball lightning, all seem to, in some way, be defying Newton's Third Law, producing more energy out than in.

If these sources are real, do they involve some sort of nuclear reaction, or can they be drawing energy from the fabric of space (whatever space is)?

I found myself in a new world of N-machines, magnetic motors, and zero-point energy. Alas, none of the research reported seemed to have significant substantiation beyond the enthusiasm of adherents.

Where does science end and science-fiction begin? I'm still pragmatic, so I'm waiting to see how all this shakes out.

The heralded end of the oil age is still off somewhere in the future. I don't doubt that researchers will continue to improve the efficiency of the P&F phenomenon as they develop more data and understand better what's going on. But generating heat is only the first step.

Power companies have settled for steam turbines for turning heat into electricity. Maybe it's time to look for a more direct and efficient method.

As I understood the situation, when Dr. John Huizenga, the head of the DOE, put the hex on cold fusion, complete with his book Cold Fusion, The Scientific Fiasco Of The Century, he also contacted the US Patent Office and got their cooperation to reject all cold fusion patent applications. I'd heard rumors that one applicant had managed to get around this blanket ban via applying as a senior citizen, and thus going through a different route in the Patent Office. Sure enough, on December 12, 1994, Dr. James Patterson of Sarasota, Florida, was issued a patent for his microsphere approach to generating heat. This was the first cold fusion patent!

Jim already had patents for his process of making microspheres, so that simplified his cold fusion patent application. No, "cold fusion" was not mentioned anywhere in the patent application. But the data presented did clearly show that substantially more energy was being detected coming out of the Patterson microsphere cell during tests than energy was being put in.

By coating microspheres of polymer first with copper, which adheres to the polymer much better than palladium, then a coating of nickel for strength, and then adding a coating a few molecules thick of palladium, followed by another coating, also very thin, of nickel to keep the palladium from flaking off under pressure or heat, the surface area of metal is at a maximum for the volume taken by the microspheres. This, in turn, greatly speeded up the ability of the nickel and palladium sandwich to absorb hydrogen. With this approach to loading the hydrogen into the metal lattice of the metals, it could be accomplished in minutes instead of taking days to weeks.

Once the metal lattice had absorbed over 85% of its volume with hydrogen, the mysterious excess energy phenomenon could be reliably started. Patterson, 76, is anxious to supply his patented microsphere cold fusion cells to researchers, to simplify their experiments with various metals, electrolytes, and other parameters.

The more I've tried to find out about what may be going on to produce the excess energy, the more I've run into scientific controversies over atomic structure, and even implications with cosmology. It turns out that once we get beyond what we can see in the micro and macro, we're off into a welter of theories. We don't know how the universe started. We don't know how life started. We don't know why the force constants are what they are, except that, if they weren't precisely what they are, we couldn't be here, and neither could the universe. Wow, talk about luck!

In the past, every time scientists developed the means for extending their vision into either the micro or the macro, they invariably discovered that the previously accepted theories had been wrong.

Having been involved with the microcomputer since its inception, I see many parallels with what's going on in the cold fusion field. I started the first microcomputer magazine even before any manufacturer was able to ship a microcomputer that actually worked. Seeing the potential this new invention promised, I decided to do my best to help turn a laboratory curiosity into an industry.

When the minicomputer was first developed, the mainframe manufacturers laughed at it, and ignored it. Soon almost all of them were out of business and minicomputers had taken over. The minicomputer offered computing power at about one-tenth the cost of the mainframe. History has shown us that, any time there is a ten times improvement in a product, it will be successful.

Then came the microcomputer (the personal computer). The minicomputer firms sneered at this “toy” and ignored it. They were led down this garden path by Computerworld, the major industry publication, which led the ridiculing. The microcomputer, providing computing power at a tenth the cost of minicomputers, has almost put the minicomputer firms out of business. Data General, Wang, Digital Equipment Corporation, and Prime are all basket cases.

In our field we’ve seen the mainline journals ridiculing cold fusion mercilessly. It’s a scam, a fraud, a fiasco. It almost reminds me of Galileo trying to get his fellow scientists to at least take a look through his telescope. And failing. Pasteur suffered the same fate with his microscope. As did Royal Rife with his super-microscope.

The critics are right, there’s not enough nuclear ash or radiation to explain what’s going on by the old nuclear reaction theory. But where theory and experiment diverge, it’s theory that should give way, not experimental research. And in this case we have a large and growing body of carefully executed experiments which confirm the data, even though it conflicts with cherished theory.

One of the first things Dr. Patterson did when he received his patent was to invite Dennis Cravens to redo his experiments to confirm his data showing that excess heat was being generated. Which Professor Cravens was quickly able to do. When you consider that Dr. Patterson had been getting 200% excess heat dependably, and up to 7000% at times, his approach seems viable. And keep in mind that he was not even bothering to measure the heat lost through venting hydrogen and oxygen from his cell, nor the substantial heat that would be generated if these two elements were reunited to produce water.

When I predicted in 1976 that we would eventually have laptop computers with more power than minicomputers, I got a big laugh. This was just a year after the first crude microcomputer kits had been developed. It was a year before the first practical microcomputers reached the market, made by Commodore and Radio Shack. It was seven years before the first laptop computer.

Today predictions of a new energy source which will replace oil, gas, coal, hydropower, and so on, are just as unbelievable for most people. I believe we’ll be seeing as much progress in developing new energy sources as we have seen in computers and communications, but that this will change the world far more than any previous technologies have. Cold fusion promises power at less than a tenth of today’s costs, so it cannot fail to prevail. The energy companies which try to ignore cold fusion could eventually find themselves in the position of the disappeared mainframe computer manufacturers, or in the precarious shape of Wang and Data General. Very few things or even industries last forever.

The cold fusion discovery comes at a good time. Scientists have been becoming increasingly concerned over the depletion of fossil fuels, as well as over the pollution burning these fuels is producing. These fuels will become increasingly expensive as natural gas, oil, and coal reserves peter out, leaving the Earth pretty well stripped of resources for future generations. It’s time to move on. But how many oil companies have plans reaching 25 and 50 years into the future? How many power companies are planning on how to survive when transmission wires are no longer needed? Will we even need gas stations in ten years?

What will the power sources of the future be? We can no more predict what they may be than we could predict the PowerPC or Pentium chips when the first transistors were invented. But I won’t be surprised if our wrist communicator/watches are self-powered by minuscule cold fusion cells. Today’s rockets are mostly huge fuel tanks with only a small space left for the astronauts. Substantially lower energy costs will make many manufacturing processes economical that aren’t now.

It’s too easy to rhapsodize over the what-ifs of cold fusion. If it turns out to be even 10% of what is expected of it by today’s dreamers, this will be by far the most important discovery of the 20th century.

It is probably too much to hope that the “establishment” scientists learn from their mistake of passing judgment on cold fusion with too few facts, and thus make it easier for scientists to make progress in other forbidden areas. The other potential sources of low-cost energy should be more carefully researched to make sure that the establishment hasn’t blundered again in counting them out. But that holds true in a wide variety of areas where research has been seriously underfunded because they were not in the mainstream.

If scientists would treat anomalies as red flags, waving to attract their attention, instead of sweeping them under their mental carpets, we’d have far more progress in many fields. The work and ideas of Tesla, Rife, Reich, Velikovskiy, Rhine, Backster, O’Leary, Naessens, Bob Beck, and many others needs to be more carefully investigated. I wish I had the time to start magazines to help more new fields develop. The greatest shortage I face is in finding people interested and willing to work and help. For instance, in the medical field alone I see areas which could be developed which could cut our healthcare costs by about 90%.

Cellular phones, microcomputers, and compact discs probably would have been unstoppable new technologies without my contributions, but then I look at the distressing number of potential new technologies which have been successfully stopped by the establishment, and I wonder.

Patterson and Cravens took the Patterson cell to the Fifth Cold Fusion Conference in Monaco in April ’95 and demonstrated it, sitting there on a tabletop, generating from 200-600% excess heat for the four days of the conference. At the University of Illinois conference in October, just six months later, the Patterson cell was producing 100 times more energy out than in, as observed by scientists from 35 countries. The cold fusion movement was now unstoppable.

The cellular telephone, pioneered by radio amateurs, has changed communications world wide. And we haven’t seen anything yet! Look at the impact the personal computer has had on the world. It’s changed the structure of businesses. It’s opened up endless new industries. Now we’re seeing the compact disc developing into a data transfer device, and now we’re even seeing movies on ’em (DVD). I have the entire country’s phone numbers listed on just five CD-ROMs.

And I helped. Now—what have you done to help move the world along? Or are you one of the people who are doing your best to stop progress? Or are you just along for the ride? It’s fun to reach out for that brass ring instead of just riding life’s merry-go-round. Sure, it takes some extra effort. But you’ll be surprised at how little extra effort it takes before you find yourself out in front.

1997 - UPDATE:

In the two years since the Monaco Fifth International Conference on Cold Fusion (ICCF-5), Jim Patterson and Dennis Cravens have been very busy. Dennis has left his Vernon, Texas teaching position to pursue cold fusion research full time from a laboratory he set up in New Mexico.

The result is that on June 11, 1997 Jim demonstrated his cell working in a prototype hot water heater on the Good Morning America (ABC) show. It was running at about 150% efficiency, but I expect they’ll surpass that by the time a commercial model reaches the market.

But even more astounding was Jim’s demonstration of his cell decontaminating radioactive uranium. Here was the promise of a solution to the multi-trillion-dollar nuclear waste problem. You may be sure that this got some attention in high places and had a number of scientists looking up crow recipes.

The scientific community had already been shaken by a NASA research report (N96-22559) which confirmed the generation of excess heat using nickel and plain water. Heat far beyond anything possible via a chemical reaction. This report, which is “no longer available” from NASA, has been reprinted in issue #22 of Elemental Energy.

Yes, cold fusion is not just real, it's impossible to sweep under the rug for even the most reactionary of critics from the physics "establishment".

But why is all this happening? It defies current atomic theory. So theory is just going to have to change, no matter how resistant the establishment is to this. There are no more straws for Doug Morrison, Gary Taubs, or John Huizenga, the most voluble of cold fusion's skeptics, to grasp.

One theory that I like is that the too small amount of helium which is being detected, presumably from the transmutation of hydrogen, can be explained by some transmutation of the palladium to silver, and some of the lithium electrolyte to boron. Where potassium is used as the electrolyte, this could be transmuting to calcium. This effect is explained in rather good detail in the Michio Kushi book The Philosopher's Stone. (The book is $10 from One Peaceful World Press, Becket MA 01223, for those willing to do their homework.)

The transmutation of elements may be an anathema to some physicists, but only if they are able to ignore a mountain of evidence going back several centuries. This is cold fusion, not cold fission, so we may be moving elements up the periodic table, not down. Thus the lack of radioactivity observed.

Recent spectrographic tests by Prof. Miley at the University of Illinois have confirmed this explanation for the generation of excess heat.

GRAVITY & INERTIA

The "standard model" for the atom has generated some impossible situations, but that hasn't yet forced the true-believer scientists to rethink their theory. Well, that's what they were taught in college, and it's the model they've lived with ever since. It even influenced Einstein in his thinking. And may have led him seriously astray. The old paradigm-shift problem.

As I explained in my editorial in Cold Fusion, after reading Eric Lerner's The Big Bang Never Happened, and seeing his model for the creation of the solar system, the galaxy, and then the super-galaxies, and its application to known plasma experiments and ball lightning, I remembered the model for the sub-quark, as published in 1908 by Besant & Leadbeater in their book Occult Chemistry, and then followed up in 1980 by Stephen Phillips in his Extra-Sensory Perception Of Quarks.

These models applied the laws of fluid dynamics, the same laws drawn upon by Maxwell for his equations. And we know from super-collider experiments that all particles have spin, but for some reason the next seemingly obvious step of reasoning hasn't happened. If electrons, protons, etc., all have spin, then they are all much like miniature gyroscopes. A group of spinning particles (wavicles?) is thus much like a box full of tiny gyroscopes, all with different orientations so they cancel precession. We know that when we push a gyroscope it resists changing direction. And when it starts moving it tends to maintain its direction and momentum. And that's what we observe as inertia.

Now, each of the spinning wavicles (Feynman) is holding itself together with a force generated by the energy (whatever that is) spinning around the outside of the ball and up into a vortex at the top, then back out the bottom. The suction formed by the tight vortex, just as we have in fluid dynamics, holds the energy ball together. But this force also extends to nearby balls, tending to attract them with this small force. And this we perceive as gravity.

Don't you like that explanation better than Einstein's concept of gravity being a deflection of the space-time continuum? Well, it sure is easier to understand the concepts involved.

Now, I hope a math expert will apply the equations to the system for us. I make no pretense of math expertise, nor do I intend to spend the time to develop any. I've found that while math is helpful to some scientists in dealing with abstractions, in my publications it has been a barrier to explaining complex matters to newcomers in any field. My feeling is that if a scientist is unable to explain a concept without equations, then he doesn't really understand what he's trying to write about.

In 47 years of publishing technical magazines and books, I've always insisted on authors using a minimum of math. It's been difficult for some authors, but the result has been the opening of one new technology after another to masses of newcomers, and their growth into new industries.

COLD FUSION 1998

Most of the papers being submitted for publication in Elemental Energy by foreign authors seem to be concentrating primarily on theoretical discussions. The nuts and bolts researchers, other than Dr. Patterson, are either making little progress or keeping their results secret. The work of Drs. Pons and Fleischmann has been kept very close. I suspect they are hiding an embarrassing lack of progress. Dr. F. bailed out and is back in UK. There are rumors that Toyota has lost its enthusiasm for the project and is looking for some other company to buy them out.

The most visible success in the field is the Patterson Patented Cell, as promoted by Clean Energy Technology Inc. (CETI). Laboratories or universities interested in getting more information and prices for research cells should contact Jim Reding at 941-951-2384.

Patterson has been granted a series of patents (which I've been publishing in Elemental Energy) covering both the generation of excess heat and the amelioration of radioactivity. It looks as if we'll be able to turn thousands of tons of radioactive waste into heat and electricity!

The most recent International Conference on Cold Fusion was held in April 1998 in Vancouver, where not much really happened. The previous ICCF in Sapporo, Japan in 1996 was a similar dud. The problem seems mostly to be in the unprofessional approach to organizing these conferences, where every effort seems to have been made to exclude and discourage the media.

The 1998 conference was organized by Eneco, whose major contribution to the field so far seems to be the sale of their stock. Efforts to get information about their activities have been ignored.

PAPERS REQUESTED

Papers are particularly requested from researchers in the field as a way to help others avoid dead ends, and to provide visibility for possible funding.

RICHES GALORE!

Thus, as I hope you can see, the field is still wide open for pioneers. The Patterson microsphere cell seems to me to be more complicated than is necessary. Jim has proven that the action is a surface phenomenon, so the obvious next step, it seems to me, is to use finely powdered metals which should start the reaction faster, be more dependable, and provide greater efficiencies.

As Dennis has proven, it doesn't take a multi-million-dollar lab to be a cold fusion pioneer, any more than it took that to be a personal computer pioneer like Bill Gates, Paul Allen, Steve Jobs, and Steve Wozniak. They all started out on shoestrings.

Of course, if your pioneering spirit has been totally crushed by our truly dreadful school system, then all you can do is read about the adventures the pioneers are having and be jealous of their resulting riches.

Pioneering opportunities are wide open for the adventurer at every turn. We know very little about magnetism, water, and hundreds of anomalies which have been ignored by scientists.

Right now, if you wanted, you could start from almost zero and learn enough about cold fusion to do your own research at home and have a good chance at making a breakthrough.

Opportunity is always there, knocking quietly on your door. Now, with a new multi-trillion-dollar industry about to get started, the rapping is getting louder. Will you be able to sleep through it, lulled by your TV and ball games? No problem, right?

Yes, researchers are going to constantly improve elemental energy systems as they experiment with different metals, electrolytes, temperatures, SAF and RF excitation, and other parameters. But right now the technology has advanced enough for manufacturers to start building small home or water heating units. I'd like to see a hundred entrepreneurs producing the first commercial products using this technology. And, as with personal computers, we'll be seeing improved models being marketed every few months.

NOW, LET'S TACKLE THE BASICS

This "Letter to Emma" was written to my granddaughter to help her in a science project.
— Talbot Chubb

Dear Emma,

Thank you for your letter suggesting that I help you with your independent study project about cold fusion. It sounds like a good idea, but it will require some work on your part since you will need to have a certain level of understanding about chemistry and physics. As you know cold fusion is a very controversial subject. If it is real, which I happen to believe, it will change many things in the world, probably even in my lifetime.

First it is important to recognize that there are 4 distinct types of energy production: (1) chemical energy, that powers our cars and most of our civilization, (2) nuclear fission energy, as used to generate about 15% of our electricity, (3) hot fusion nuclear energy, which powers the Sun and most stars, and (4) cold fusion nuclear energy, which appears as unexplained heat in a few experimenter's laboratory studies and which most scientists believe is impossible. The three types of nuclear energy produce 10 million times as much heat per pound of fuel than occurs with chemical energy.

How do these types of energy differ? To understand this question, you need to know some chemistry and physics.

Nature has provided us with 2 types of stable charged particles, the proton and the electron. The proton is heavy, normally tiny, and has a positive charge. The electron is light, normally large and fuzzy, and has a negative charge.

The positive charge and the negative charge attract each other, just like the north pole of a magnet attracts the south pole of a magnet. When you bring 2 magnets together with the north pole of one facing the south pole of the other, they pull together—bang! When they bang into each other, they release a little bit of energy in the form of heat, but it is too small an amount to easily measure. To pull the magnets apart you have to do work, which is another way of saying you have to use up energy.

It's almost like rolling a rock down a hill. Rolling the rock down a hill actually creates a little heat, and pulling the rock back up the hill takes energy.

In the same way, the positive charge of the proton pulls on the negative charge of the electron and they stick together, releasing energy in the process. The result is a hydrogen atom, designated H.

A hydrogen atom is nothing but a fuzzy electron hugging a compact proton. The proton is the nucleus of the hydrogen atom. If you knock the electron off the hydrogen atom, you get a positive ion H^+ , which is nothing more than the original proton. An ion is the name applied to an atom or molecule that has lost or gained one or more electrons, and hence is no longer electrically neutral.

LESSON 2

As you know, Nature has provided us with more than one type of atom. We have oxygen atoms, nitrogen atoms, iron atoms, helium atoms, etc.

How do these atoms differ? The answer is that they all have different types of nuclei (plural of nucleus, from the Latin). And these different nuclei all have different numbers of protons inside them, which means they all have different plus charges.

The nucleus of the helium atoms has 2 protons inside it, hence has plus-2 charge, and requires 2 electrons to neutralize its charge. When 2 electrons stick to it, it becomes a helium atom.

The oxygen nucleus has 8 protons and has charge 8. When 8 electrons stick to it, it becomes an oxygen atom. The nitrogen atom has 7, and the iron atom has 26.

But all the atoms are built more or less the same way, with a compact, positively charged nucleus embedded in a cloud of fuzzy electrons. The difference in size between the compact nucleus and the fuzzy electrons is enormous. The Sun has a diameter only about 100 times that of the Earth. The electron cloud on an atom has a diameter which is about 100,000 times that of the nucleus. Cube these numbers to get the difference in volumes.

We now are in a position to understand what chemical energy is. The atoms, all electrically neutral, can actually join with each other and release more energy. This is another way of saying that they can join into more stable configurations.

The electrons in an atom try to snuggle up to their nuclei as close as possible, but their fuzzy nature requires that they take up a certain volume of space. However, if they join together with the electrons of another atom, they can usually find a tighter configuration that leaves them closer to their beloved nuclei.

For example, 2 hydrogen atoms can join together in a snuggler configuration if each hydrogen atom contributes its electron to a 2-electron cloud, which the separate protons share. In this manner they form a grouping of the two electrons in a single cloud, together with the two isolated protons spaced apart from each other but still within the electron cloud. The result is a heat-producing chemical reaction $H + H \rightarrow H_2$. (The \rightarrow means "goes to" or "becomes".)

The H_2 configuration is the hydrogen molecule, and when you buy a tank of hydrogen gas, H_2 molecules is what you get. Furthermore, the 2 electrons of the H_2 molecule and the 8 electrons of the O atom can find a still snuggler configuration by combining their electrons to create the water molecule H_2O , plus heat.

The water molecule is really a single cloud of electrons in which are embedded the three point-like nuclei to form a minimum energy configuration. So when we burn oil or coal we reconfigure the electrons to produce more stable configurations of point-like nuclei embedded in electron clouds, liberating heat. So much for chemical energy.

We have slid over one point in the above discussion. How does Nature make a nuclei containing two or more protons in the first place?

After all, each of the protons has a positive charge, and the positive charges repel each other very strongly when they are separated by a distance equal to the distance across a nucleus. The repulsion of like charges is just like the repulsion between the north poles of two magnets when they are pushed together the wrong way. Something must overcome this repulsion, or else the only kind of atoms we would have would be those of hydrogen.

Fortunately, this is not what we observe. The answer is that there is a second kind of force which acts on protons, the nuclear force. The nuclear force is very strong but requires particles to almost sit on each other to have any effect.

And also there is a second kind of heavy particle, which is just like a proton, except that it has no positive or negative charge. This other kind of particle is called the neutron, since it is electrically neutral. A peculiar fact of life is that it exists in stable form only inside a nucleus. When not in the nucleus, it changes into a proton and electron and a very light neutrino in about 10 minutes. But it lasts forever inside a nucleus.

Anyway, the neutron and the proton really love each other once they can get close enough together, and then they combine to form a very stable pair called a deuteron, which we designate by D^+ . Moreover, two deuterons will embrace each other even more tightly if brought into contact, despite the push apart by their two positive charges. They then fuse to form a doubly charged particle consisting of two protons and two neutrons. This particle is the nucleus of the helium atom, designated He^{++} . When neutralized by two electrons, it becomes the helium atom.

The single deuteron, when it combines with a single electron, forms the heavy hydrogen atom called deuterium, designated D. Larger groupings of neutrons and protons exist in Nature and serve as the nuclei of carbon, nitrogen, oxygen, and iron, etc. atoms. All of these groupings are made possible by the very strong nuclear force, which is felt between particles only when they are in contact or partially occupy the same volume of space.

We can now understand normal nuclear energy, which is really nuclear fission energy. In the explosion of massive stars, lots of different types of nuclei were formed and exploded back into space. Second and later generation stars and planets were formed from this mix, including our Sun. In the explosion process, probably every possible stable configuration of protons and neutrons has been produced, plus some almost-stable groupings, such as the nucleus of the uranium atom.

There are actually 3 different types of uranium atom nuclei, called uranium 234, uranium 235, and uranium 238. These “isotopes” differ in their number of neutrons, but they all have 92 protons.

The nuclei of all uranium atoms can go to a lower energy configuration by ejecting a helium nucleus, but this process occurs rarely, so that the uranium has already lasted over 4 billion years.

But the uranium nuclei are unstable in another way. In general, groupings of protons and neutrons are happiest if they have about 60 protons-plus-neutrons. The uranium nuclei contain more than three times this number. So they would like to split in two, which would release a lot of heat.

But Nature doesn’t provide a way for them to split apart, because they would have to go to a higher energy configuration before splitting in two. However, one of the three forms of uranium nucleus found in Nature, called uranium 235 and designated ^{235}U , can be given this energy if it captures a neutron. The energized nucleus that results from neutron capture then splits apart with enormous energy release, and incidentally with release of additional neutrons. The additional neutrons can then split more uranium nuclei, keeping the reaction going.

This is what happens in nuclear power plants where the heat, which is the end product of the nuclear splitting process, is used to boil water, generate steam, and turn electrical generators. (One also gets lots of radioactive products, which are a nuisance to dispose of safely.)

We are now also in a position to understand hot fusion nuclear energy. As mentioned in Lesson 5, the groupings of protons plus neutrons is most comfortable when the numbers of neutrons and protons approximate those found in the nucleus of an iron atom. Just as uranium has too many neutrons plus protons to be comfortable, so the light elements like hydrogen, helium, carbon, nitrogen, and oxygen have too few. If they can be made to snuggle up under proper conditions, they can combine to create more stable groupings, plus heat.

This is the process of fusion. Nature has found a way of doing this in stars, like the Sun. All Nature has to do is heat compressed hydrogen hot enough, and wait long enough, and hot fusion will occur. If Nature were to start with deuterium, which already has a paired proton and neutron, the task would be relatively easy in a star.

Temperature is a measure of how much speed an atom of a given type has as it bangs around inside a cloud of such atoms. The higher the temperature, the higher the speed and the closer the atoms get to each other momentarily during a collision. In a star, the temperatures are high enough that all the electrons quickly get knocked off the atoms, so one is really dealing with a mixed cloud of electrons and nuclei. At very high temperature the nuclei occasionally get close enough during collisions for the pulling-together short-range nuclear force to turn on. Then the nuclei can stick together and go to a lower energy configuration of protons plus neutrons, releasing heat.

Hot fusion nuclear energy is an attempt to carry out this process in the lab, using deuterium and mass-3 hydrogen (whose nucleus is a compact grouping of 1 proton and 2 neutrons) as the gas. Hot fusion requires that the gas be contained at temperatures of hundreds of millions of degrees, which can be done with the help of magnetic fields, but only for 1 or 2 seconds.

The hope is to contain the gas for longer times. During the period of high temperature containment, nuclear reactions occur during collisions. The main form of energy release is ejection of high-energy neutrons and protons. The proton energy quickly converts to heat. The neutron energy can also be converted to heat, but makes the equipment highly radioactive. It then becomes difficult to repair the equipment, which could make hot fusion a poor candidate for commercial power production.

In any case, hot fusion power is a dream that is still probably at least 50 years away. But most scientists view hot fusion as the only way to achieve fusion power, which produces less radioactivity than fission power, is environmentally benign, and has a virtually limitless fuel supply on Earth (many millions of years at present energy usage rates).

So now we come to cold fusion. Cold fusion may provide an easier and non-radioactive way of releasing nuclear fusion energy.

Cold fusion relies on a different way of letting protons and neutrons in nuclei snuggle up so that the nuclear force can bring them into a more stable configuration. The requirement for any nuclear reaction to occur is that the reacting nuclei occupy the same volume of space. This condition is called particle overlap.

In hot fusion, particle overlap is brought about briefly by banging the nuclei together so as to overcome momentarily the repulsion of the two positive charges which try to keep the particles apart. In cold fusion, particle overlap conditions are achieved by making deuterium nuclei act as fuzzy objects, like electrons in atoms, instead of like tiny points.

When either light or heavy hydrogen is added to a heavy metal, it occupies positions inside the metal where it is surrounded by heavy metal atoms. This form of hydrogen is called interstitial hydrogen.

With interstitial hydrogen, the electrons of the hydrogen atom become part of the pool of electrons of the metal. Each hydrogen nucleus oscillates back and forth through a negatively charged electron cloud provided by the electrons of the metal. They can be thought of as moving back and forth like the pendulum in a grandfather clock.

This vibration exists even at very low temperature, due to a peculiarity of a branch of physics called quantum mechanics. The vibration is called zero-point motion.

The nucleus then becomes a fuzzy object, like the electrons in an atom. But this amount of fuzziness is not enough to permit a hydrogen nucleus to share volume with another hydrogen nucleus.

To get two or more hydrogen nuclei to share the same volume, one must go one step further. In a metal, electrical current is carried by electrons that act more like stationary matter waves than like point particles. If electrons did not become wave-like inside solids, there would be no transistors and no present-day computers.

This wave-like kind of electron is called a Bloch-function electron. [Editor’s note: This model is named after Felix Bloch, who was one of the contributors to the mathematical development of quantum mechanics in the 1920s and 1930s. Besides what is mentioned here about a “wave-like kind of electron”, a number of unusual or counter-intuitive scenarios are connected with that mathematics. As we come to better understand the way matter is REALLY put together, and how it actually manifests in our physical space, some of those seemingly outrageous concepts and experimental findings from early quantum mechanics will make more sense. It is all an issue of the relative frequency of vibration between interacting “bits” of matter and readily leads to such applications as invisibility cloaking, shifting in space and time and, say, one object passing through another solid object like a wall or closed box. But this is getting off the subject under discussion here!] The secret of cold fusion is that one needs Bloch-function deuterons: one needs wave-like deuterons inside a solid in order that two or more deuterons share the same volume of space.

But once the Bloch-function deuterons are created, the nuclear force comes into play and the protons and neutrons making up the deuterons can rearrange themselves into a more comfortable configuration, with a release of heat. To study cold fusion, the experimenter has to force deuterons to assume the wave-like form and keep them in the wave-like state.

The successful cold fusion experiments show that this can be done. But at present only one scientist team knows how to do it reliably. These scientists are Drs. Yoshiaki Arata and Yue-Chang Zhang. They work in a university laboratory in Japan. Since cold fusion promises millions of years of energy without the problems of global warming or radioactivity, a real effort should be made to learn from them how to reliably release cold fusion energy.

WAYNE SAYS:

Chubb has done a nice job of explaining something complicated. But perhaps I can help a little when it comes to the last step, the cold fusion phenomenon, which isn't very difficult to understand, with or without Bloch waves. (Lordy!)

Back in 1989, Pons and Fleischmann discovered that when they put some palladium in heavy water and passed a current through it, eventually it would start to heat up and produce more heat energy out than the electrical energy going into the system. Since this was happening at around room temperatures, as opposed to hot fusion at several million degrees, they called it cold fusion.

The scientific establishment had no theory to explain this, so they branded P&F as either fools or rascals, forcing them to leave the country.

Subsequent research has shown that a number of the metals which have a lattice-like structure can be made to produce excess heat. Metals such as rhodium, rubidium, platinum, and nickel have all performed well.

It was discovered that it was necessary for hydrogen from the water to be absorbed in the metal's lattice, which acts like a sponge, before the reaction could take place. This led to the use of a thin film of the metal being deposited on tiny plastic spheres (by Jim Patterson) or the use of powdered metal, both of which provide a maximum of surface area per unit of volume, and thus allows the hydrogen to fill the metal lattice faster. With this advance, the “cold fusion” reaction could be made to start up in minutes instead of taking hours to days, as it had for P&F. It also made it possible to use nickel instead of palladium, which is much cheaper, and plain water instead of the far more expensive deuterium (heavy water).

What seems to be happening is that the hydrogen is absorbed into the metal's lattice. Then, when an electric current is passed through the metal, the hydrogen atoms get very agitated, which is understandable (who doesn't get agitated when an electric current is passed through them?) and, the hydrogen, constrained by the lattice, has nowhere to go, and the trapped neutron triggers a reaction which produces energetic particles to start a breeding

Wayne has a plethora of information available at very reasonable prices. Here are just a few brief examples of what Wayne offers:

Cold Fusion Journal — $30/six issues +s&h

I predict this will be one of the largest industries in the world in a few years. Power at about a tenth the cost of oil, coal, or natural gas! Even cheaper than hydro, solar or wind power! My Journal publishes the patents and theory involved in this new field of solid-state physics and the transmutation of elements. For $5 I have an Overview available which explains the history and, in simple language, how and why cold fusion works. Or you can get a sample issue for $10. I publish about six issues a year, but that depends on the rapidity of new developments. Oh yes, this Journal won the Folio Magazine prize as the best designed new technical publication.

Secret Guide to Wisdom — $5 +s&h

This is a review of a bunch of books which our school system should have encouraged you to read. No, I don't sell these books—that would be a conflict of interest. I'm recommending them because they are critically important to helping you understand what a sham most of the things we've been brought up to believe in are. I've had to read thousands of books to find these few gems. You don't.

Yes, I'm an iconoclast—that's someone who challenges conventional or cherished beliefs and institutions as being false or harmful. Hey, that's me, and I want to enlist you in my crusade.

But to do that I need you to understand more about the world—the stuff they don't teach you in school. This guide will, I predict, turn out to be one of the most treasured reference books you'll ever get.

After reading these books you'll be death to any party because you'll know more about almost anything than anyone else. You'll be a social pariah unless you learn to keep your mouth shut—a skill I have not yet mastered. But it is fun to be able to go on talk-radio shows like Art Bell, Sightings, and Laura Lee and talk knowledgeably about a wide range of subjects.

Secret Guide to Health — $5 +s&h

We are all brought up to believe in doctors. We eat and breathe what we want, including a bunch of poisons such as caffeine, nicotine, alcohol, and aspartame, and when we get sick as a result, we turn the responsibility for our health over to our doctor. What the AMA, the FDA, and other groups don't want you to know is how totally the pharmaceutical industry is in control of the health industry. Well, sickness industry, actually. There are several well researched books which blow the whistle on this whole mess. The American healthcare system is (a) the most expensive in the developed world and (b) one of the worst in terms of longevity and infant survival.

The Secret Guide to Health will help you avoid the poisons which are making you sick and help you add 30 to 60 healthy years to your life. You need to learn about what foods to eat and which to avoid. You need to know about the importance of drinking enough pure water. You'll learn the truth about vaccinations, dental amalgams, root canals, and other health threats. Or you can do like most people and die of cancer, a stroke, a heart attack, or hobble around a nursing home as an Alzheimer's veggie like my mother did.

Secret Guide to Wealth — $5 +s&h

There are no known benefits to being poor, yet most people settle for careers which will never net them much money—such as working for a big company, the government, or teaching. The basic secret to making money is to own your own company. My book explains how you can get others to happily pay you to learn what you need to know to be an entrepreneur, and do it even though you have no college degree, resumé, or even any experience! And do it from 17 to 70.

An Inc. Magazine survey of America's most successful entrepreneurs showed that virtually none of them ever completed college. They either never bothered to waste the time and money or, like Bill Gates, they dropped out. I spill the beans on the whole job scam. If you work for someone else for more than a couple of years, you're a sucker. When I finally figured out what was really going on, I started my own company, and within a couple of years I was buying the toys of the rich—like a yacht, an Arab horse, a plane, and a couple Porsches.

My guarantee: If you follow my instructions and aren't a millionaire within seven years, you get your $5 back. Now, I realize that gratitude is the least felt of all human emotions, but maybe you could send me a check for the $5,000 I should charge for this book when you make your first million? I'll send you the $5 change.

73 Magazine — only $25/year (a steal)

Most of the ideas in my books are first tried out on my 100,000 73 Magazine readers. As far as I know, I write longer editorials than any other editor in the world—and I've had over a thousand published down through the years. Long editorials? The 216-editorial 1997 reprint ran 260 pages! 1998 was only 248 pages, but that's because I reprinted one of the three-volume set in smaller type. They cover any subject I think should interest you.

Oh yes, in addition to my editorials, there's a complete ham radio magazine, with simple construction projects, reviews of new ham equipment, and a bunch of columns on special ham interests. Amateur radio has provided me with a lifetime of excitement and adventure, so I encourage everybody to get involved. The new no-code license is a snap to get for starters. Heck, we have kids of four getting their license and girls of eight getting the Extra, which is the top class license, so how difficult can it be? Once you're licensed you can talk with people anywhere in the world. And go and visit them, if you want to. On my recent visit to Iceland I met 28 of the local amateurs and we had a great party. But then I've partied with hams in South Africa, Kenya, Sudan, Lebanon, and countries all around the world. How about Nepal? Swaziland? Sabah?

These examples just scratch the surface of what Wayne has to offer, and these descriptions were taken from his website where you can get a much more detailed description of what Wayne has to offer.

reaction, so the hydrogen neutron is forced into the nucleus of one of the metal atoms, changing it's atomic weight, making it a new element. For instance, let's take nickel, which has a weight of 58.7, picks up five nucleons, bringing it up to 63.7. Copper has a weight of 63.5, so that leaves 0.2 that is turned into heat.

By the time we stick that into Einstein's $E=mc^2$, the mass of 0.2 is multiplied by the speed of light squared, so the resulting energy released is enormous for a very tiny bit of matter converted.

The leading theoretician in the field, Professor Hideo Kozima, calls the process Trapped Neutron Catalyzed Fusion (TNCF), and he has done the field a great service by showing that the research data from labs all around the world all agree when this model is used for calculations.

And when we look at the nickel (or palladium) with an electron microscope after it's been used in a cell to generate heat for a while, we can clearly see the craters left where the mass has exploded, releasing energy (heat).

It's much like microscopic hot fusion reactions. And indeed, the temperatures involved in the conversion of mass to energy are in the millions of degrees, but only for a nanosecond or so, but it's enough to overcome the nuclear repulsion force.

This process of changing one element to another is called transmutation, and the old-line physicists and chemists get really upset when such a thing is suggested. Harumph, that's alchemy! Yep, sure is. Oh well, the scientific establishment has, throughout history, unfailingly ridiculed and fought every major new discovery. Please let me know if you are aware of any exceptions.

[Editor's note: Shortly after the turn of the century, one of the other pioneers of quantum mechanics, Max Planck, said that the only reason science moves forward is because the current generation of scientists dies off, and the younger ones, having grown up with what was heresy to the oldsters, accept the new ideas!]

Scientists at several universities are now taking elemental energy cells that have generated excess heat and are examining them with their mass spectrometers to see what new elements have been created, and they're finding a bunch of them.

Not that the transmutation of elements is very difficult to prove, even on your kitchen table. All you have to do is take two pieces of pure carbon and rub them together with an electric current passing through them. Save the carbon powder that rubs off and then check it with a magnet. Presto, you'll find the magnet moves some of the particles.

How come? Some of the carbon has been changed to iron. How'd that happen? Easy, simplifying the reaction described by the TNCF model, we have two carbon atoms (weight 12 each), plus two oxygen atoms (weight 16 each), added together give a weight of 56, which is the weight of iron. Tell the physicists to stick that in their ear.

René, in his Skeptic book, showed how he and a friend transmuted elements when they inadvertently created a miniature volcano.

There's a great little book on the subject, The Philosopher's Stone. It's only $10 and worth it's weight in embarrassing your chemistry professor. (The author is Michio Kushi; the book is $10 from One Peaceful World Press, Becket MA 01223.)

Successes With Cold Fusion & New-Energy Experiments

FALL, 1999 HAL FOX

As a professional scientist, I have spent the past ten years (plus), since the announcement of "cold fusion", tracking down, investigating, and reporting on a variety of proposed new-energy devices. Our group (Fusion Information Center and Trenergy, Inc.) has published hundreds of articles and collected, read, and reported on over 3,000 professional papers on various new-energy devices, systems, proposals, and theories. In a capsule, here are the results:

1. Cold fusion does work. Over 600 papers from over 200 laboratories in 30 countries have reported successes. However, none of the varieties of cold fusion devices (as yet) is robust and easily replicated, so there is no threat to the hot-fusion community.

2. The Cincinnati Group has shown both excess thermal energy and nuclear reactions from a special electrochemical configuration. The most important finding is the ability to reduce the radioactivity in some aqueous solutions.

We have replicated and extended this work in Trenergy's laboratory and have reported the results in a meeting of the American Nuclear Society. Some similar (but different configuration) low-energy nuclear reactions have been accomplished and fully reported by Professor George Miley, editor (until 1999) of Fusion Technology, the international journal of the American Nuclear Society.

This work is now being extended to the on-site stabilization of high-level, radioactive, spent-fuel pellets by the Trenergy group. This work is being performed with private funds so that the intellectual property rights are preserved. Several patents are pending.

3. The newest work of Prof. Ruggero M. Santilli has shown that a special type of underwater arcing can produce a combustible gas from carbon-containing wastes (sewage and other types of contaminated water). This gas can be produced to provide two-and-one-half times as much energy output as energy input to create the gas. Patents are pending. The work is being supported and commercialized by Touns Technology Licensing, Inc. of Florida.

4. Dr. Randell Mills has shown that energy can be obtained by the collapsing of the hydrogen atom below its normal ground-state. For further information, including a paper presented before the American Chemical Society in early October 1999, see the www.blacklightpower.com website. Patents are pending.

5. Kenneth Shoulders (see US Patent No. 5,018,180) has shown how the use of high-density charge clusters can produce both excess thermal and direct electrical energy. Up to now, the devices have been small (about one watt per device). Plans have been made and private funding is being used to scale up these thermal and direct electrical output discoveries. According to the patent, the excess energy apparently comes from tapping the vacuum energy of space.

These are the unemotional facts about new energy. There are several other developments that could be cited. However, these are the patented (and patent-pending) discoveries that are being commercialized. In all cases, the research and development has been done with private funds (except possibly for some work done by Prof. George Miley). The US Department of Energy has yet to discover and officially announce these new-energy processes.

Anyone who desires to condemn all new-energy projects as fraudulent is, of course, either vastly misinformed or working under someone else's agenda. The genuine, new-energy development program is vigorous, scientific, privately funded, patented, and (as with the above items 3, 4, and 5) is being commercialized.

There is nothing that the new-energy detractors can do that will prevent the increasingly rapid commercialization of new-energy devices and systems. The most important aspect is the following: there is no need for government funding. Government funds only delay projects and add to paperwork.

The end result is that the Department of Energy will find it increasingly difficult to get funds for energy development when it has been so reluctant to fund anything but hot fusion for so many years. It has really failed in its assigned mission to develop new energy sources.

COLD FUSION CONSPIRACY?

The following is edited from a briefing paper by Hal Fox, President of the Fusion Information Center, submitted to an inquiry by the US Commerce Department's Office of the Inspector-General. The department is investigating complaints that the Office of Patents and Trademarks is not allowing any patent applications for cold fusion or low-energy nuclear reactions to be processed beyond being rejected. - Ed.

BACKGROUND

As the director of the first research laboratory at the University of Utah Research Park, I was intensely interested in the March 23, 1989 announcement of cold fusion, called by the University of Utah administration (not called by Pons and Fleischmann). The announcement of a new source of energy was most exciting to me. That day I began the plans for trying to be of some help (systems engineering background, missile system specialist for several years). By mid-April 1989, we had organized the Fusion Information Center and obtained offices at the University of Utah Research Park.

By July 1989, we had decided that information-gathering and publishing such information would be our best role. Our first edition of Fusion Facts was published in July 1989 and continued as a monthly publication for several years before being incorporated as part of the Journal Of New Energy, a peer-reviewed, quarterly, scientific journal (abstracted from the first issue by Chemical Abstracts, the world's foremost scientific abstracting organization).

ATTACKS ON COLD FUSION

By the fall of 1989, it was apparent that someone had organized and was carrying out a campaign against the new technology of cold fusion. All of this was done in secrecy (except for the ERAB [Energy Research Advisory Board] Subcommittee). Here are the facts, insofar as we have been able to gather and publish them.

A subcommittee of the Energy Research Advisory Board traveled to various laboratories where successes in cold fusion had been claimed. If the researchers were measuring neutrons, they were told that it was background radiation. If the researchers were getting tritium, they were told that it was contamination. If excess heat was being produced, they were told that they didn't have proper calorimetry. Except for one small paragraph, demanded by one of the honest members of the committee, the ERAS final report was entirely negative about cold fusion.

An arrangement was made for someone in the Office of Patents to ensure that no cold fusion patent application was accepted for patenting (whether any type of coercion or reward was involved is unknown). Each person, as far as we have been able to determine, was sent the same information: a copy of a newspaper article from the New York Times, saying that cold fusion doesn't work, and a copy of the paper by 16 PhDs from MIT [Massachusetts Institute of Technology] stating that they could not replicate cold fusion (this is the paper where the authors removed the data showing that they did get a small amount of excess heat).

A person (representing powers-that-be in Washington, DC) called many of the physics and chemistry departments at major universities in the United States. Here was his message as relayed to me from one such department: "If you have so much as a graduate student working on cold fusion, you will get no contracts out of Washington."

All editors of the major scientific journals were contacted and were instructed not to publish articles on cold fusion. All editors but one then set up barriers against cold fusion publication. The one editor who did not accept that type of instruction was Professor George Miley of Fusion Technology.

An amount of US $30,000 (or $40,000 according to different sources) was given to Random House to have a "hatchet job" done against cold fusion. The result was the widely acclaimed (by orchestration) book by Gary Taubes, Bad Science: The Short Life And Weird Times Of Cold Fusion (1993). For one knowledgeable about cold fusion developments, it is obvious that this book was a deliberate hatchet job.

In addition to the above well-orchestrated activities, some appointed or self-appointed scientists have been very active in traveling to conventions, etc., and doing their best to challenge any positive cold fusion results. Two of these are (were) Dr. Douglas R. O. Morrison (CERN, Switzerland) and Professor John R. Huizenga (University of Rochester), chairman of the ERAB subcommittee (if my memory is correct).

One of the most active protagonists has been Robert Parks, with some association with the American Physical Society. (The current president of the American Physical Society denied in a recent conversation that Robert Parks speaks for the Society.) Parks was instrumental in preventing a recent conference from being held in a proffered auditorium in a government facility. Parks has an email list of many people in the Department of Energy and, about once a month or more often, sends out statements that ridicule any cold fusion or low-energy nuclear reaction experiments, papers, books, etc.

Please recognize that this anti-cold fusion program was a very well planned and orchestrated scheme to destroy cold fusion. These were clever and well-executed operations. We have been told that, were it not for Fusion Facts and its rapid exchange of information of successes in various parts of the world, cold fusion would have been dead. That is more credit than we deserve.

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business as usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House and throughout our entire Judicial system.

The Untold History Of America* was written for the specific purpose of providing a high school textbook for all American schools that would educate students about the real nature of our national situation. With a clear understanding of things as they exist in reality, students will then be in a much better position to go on in life and do something to correct our current downhill course.

This book is for those who want to know why America is the way it is today, where we went wrong, who are the responsible parties, and what we can do to bring back the American Dream our forefathers and mothers fought so hard to establish and gave their very lives to defend.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original inhabitants of America, the Native Americans. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

The first 16 parts of Ray Bilger's ongoing research are compiled into the book:

The Untold History Of America, Vol. 1.

Vaccination: An UnGodly Practice

Editor's note: The following message is more or less self-explanatory for those of you who are exploring religious and moral avenues to counter the kinds of vaccination strongarm tactics which are in full force at this time. In addition to an awakening population-at-large, we have all been hearing for months now, even on the controlled major print and broadcast media outlets, about the refusal of many, many military personnel around the world to accept vaccinations—no matter how ominously the coercion sales-pitch is made. These military people would rather lose their jobs, pensions, livelihood, and go to jail if necessary, than accept the latest “mandatory” vaccinations. What do you think they know that the average school nurse and parent doesn't?!

Dr. Horowitz has specifically asked that we share the following message with you. Len is certainly no stranger to the pages of this newspaper, having shared outstanding information with us on several occasions—and most recently giving us a “flu bug” update for the Front Page story of our January, 2000 issue. His scientific credentials are, to say the least, of the very highest calibre. Moreover, he has long championed The Truth and he has found it in some of the most interesting documentation this side of the secret Vatican underground archives!

In the event you are unfamiliar with Len Horowitz, D.M.D., M.A., M.P.H., he is a Harvard graduate, independent investigator, and internationally known authority in public health education. He has authored eleven books, including the dynamite Emerging Viruses—AIDS & Ebola: Nature, Accident, Or Intentional? and his most recent Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse.

2/19/00 DR. LEN HOROWITZ

(with Pastor Norm Franz and Errol Owen)

Many people believe that vaccinations are safe and “mandatory” for school and/or workplace attendance. They are clearly deceived in most cases.

Vaccines are not “mandatory” in most American states that allow for personal, religious, and/or medical exemptions. Furthermore, the practice of vaccination is far from safe. In fact, if you were to seriously consider the suppressed facts, you would likely conclude that the alleged benefits of vaccination do not outweigh the severe and extensive risks.

For parents who elect to forego these risks, in celebration to God and His blessings, among which are health and natural immunity, the following message includes Bible verses that should be copied and then attached to your vaccination waiver or declination form(s).

These Bible excerpts serve as a supplement to the ninety-minute audio tape entitled Horowitz On Vaccines. This tape provides a lengthy discussion of a citizen's right to refuse vaccination for spiritual and religious reasons. Ways to avoid vaccinations and assertively respond to coercive vaccine proponents and shot administrators are discussed. Moreover, the tape presents stunning admissions by vaccine industry experts, including 1998 Sabin Gold Medal of Honor awardee Dr. Maurice Hilleman, and others who admit to the contaminated and deadly nature of many of our most trusted vaccines.

Biblical support for those who wish to avoid vaccinations for spiritual and religious reasons include the following law prohibiting genetic engineering or the use of its products:

Ye shall keep my statutes. Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind; thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed; neither shall a garment mingled of linen [plant] and woolen [animal] come upon thee.

— Leviticus 19:19

Relevant reasons for God's warning in this regard include the fact that bovine (cow) fetal serum is commonly used in the manufacturing process of vaccines. So are monkey kidney cells, chicken embryo parts, bacterial or viral genetic materials, RNA and DNA, as well as yeast and human proteins.

Using the example of cows, bovine fetal serum is mixed with bacteria or viral particles and other vaccine ingredients, including toxic metals, such as mercury and aluminum, and immune-destructive chemicals. Thus, proteins and genetic materials from the cattle, viruses, and bacteria are mixed before these particles are injected into you or your children.

Once the vaccine ingredients, including foreign RNA and DNA, and genetically engineered bacteria and/or viruses, or their parts, enter your blood, they may cause genetic mutations of your cells. Then you have sown your bloodstream “with mingled seed” that not only taxes your immune system further, but may cause the development of cancer cells as well. These may go on to become full-blown cancers, particularly in the presence of a weakened immune system, made weak by vaccine “adjuvants”. Likewise, this cross-species transfer of infectious particles often initiates autoimmune diseases. These are major reasons why vaccination is “an unGodly practice”.

Your blood contains vital white blood cell “bodyguards” (i.e., lymphocytes) that provide for surveillance and destructive responses against cancer cells and malignant tumors. Therefore, overly taxing these cells, as vaccinations often do, is unclean and unhealthy. Elsewhere in the Bible, God recommends that you maintain your blood clean and healthy.

Integrating this knowledge further, some vaccines are made from “pooling” human blood taken from people, including social drop-outs and drug addicts, who were exposed to various infectious agents (e.g., bacteria and viruses). Once vaccine makers have these people's blood, their laboratory technicians separate their serum from the whole cells, and then this serum is used to make the final vaccines.

This was the case with the Hepatitis B vaccine that was given to gay men in New York City and Blacks in Central Africa in 1974. This vaccine, according to all the suppressed scientific evidence, as well as testimonies from insiders, most likely initiated the international AIDS pandemic.

In essence, the routine vaccine practice of sacrificing animals to grow infectious cancer viruses is obviously risky. This was the case for the cancer- and AIDS-linked Polio and Hepatitis B vaccines.

Merck vaccine makers took dead or dying animal tissues, including their blood, in an effort to extract these infectious agents. Then they mixed these animal incubated contaminants with human blood. This blood ultimately got mixed to make the final vaccine. In this manner, cross-species transmission of infectious agents most easily and commonly occurred as it does today. According to the Bible, this is a sin.

There are several Bible references to the importance of maintaining clean blood. A few of these are listed below. It should be recalled that, as I detailed in my book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola; Nature, Accident or Intentional?, the Rockefeller family largely established and controls the international blood banking industry. Laurance Rockefeller, in particular, assembled the New York City Blood Council—the council of doctors that established the New York City Blood Bank.

This was the organization that allowed 10,000 hemophiliacs throughout the United States, and countless others around the world, to receive the AIDS virus (HIV) through their contaminated blood supplies. They knew, in advance, that the blood was infected with these viruses and others. More recently, the Canadian and American publics learned that Hepatitis C-contaminated blood (another cancer trigger) and protein “prions” (the “mad-cow” Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease agent) also flowed from these blood “bankster” labs to millions more.

It is well known that the Rockefeller family also established a virtual monopoly over the American medical and pharmaceutical industries as early as the 1920s. This was the same decade they heavily funded and directed the fledgling cancer industry, as well as the eugenics movement.

The Rockefeller-led eugenics effort began the study of human genetics. DNA differences between the races began to be mapped by their research foundations and organizations long before Hitler’s Third Reich got involved in what later eugenicists called “racial hygiene”. Rockefeller-funded research focused on the genetic predispositions for cancer and other diseases between various races of people. In 1928, the Rockefeller family fortune then built the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Anthropology, Eugenics, and Human Heredity in pre-Nazi Germany.

This Institute gave rise to the majority of Hitler’s top racial hygienists, including Ernst Rudin. Rudin later directed Hitler’s “Racial Hygiene Society”.

Stunningly, previously secret documents show the Rockefeller family was heavily invested in a partnership with Hitler’s Third Reich. Germany’s leading industrial organization during World War II was IG Farben. Top Farben directors were among Hitler’s highest ranking SS officers. With the help of the Dulles brothers, and their Wall Street law firm, Sullivan and Cromwell, John D. Rockefeller’s Standard Oil Company secured the patent rights over the synthetic oil and rubber the Holocaust victims were about to produce in the factories they built adjacent Auschwitz and elsewhere.

It should also be known that IG Farben, Rockefeller’s intimate partner, held the patent on the gas that killed the millions of Holocaust victims as they entered the “showers” allegedly for “public health” and “disinfection”.

[Editor’s note: And remember that the Rockefeller family, like the Rothschilds in England, were of Jewish extraction, which only makes The Truth behind the “official” version of the events in this dark chapter of modern history that much more interesting—and sad. Is it any wonder, then, that it is against the law in some countries (and a matter of great and noisy rebuke in others) to even dare to question the “official” version of such historical matters as the Holocaust? There are many yet-to-be uncovered skeletons in those dark closets!]

The book and tape cited above also details the development of the 1974 experimental Hepatitis B vaccine that most likely transmitted HIV to New York City’s gay men, and Blacks in Central Africa. This vaccine was developed by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), and the National Institute for Allergies and Infectious Diseases (NIAID). The project was directed by Dr. Maurice Hilleman, vaccine chief at the Merck pharmaceutical company.

Astonishingly, this company received a major share of the Nazi war chest near the close of WWII. At that time, the company’s president, George W. Merck, was America’s biological weapons industry director. He had been personally appointed by President Roosevelt and Secretary of War Stimson.

Following WWII, most of Hitler’s top biological weapons developers were secretly sent to work for the allies. Several infamous medical experimenters came to America under the covert operation called “Paperclip” administered by the OSS and later the CIA.

Among the Nazi transplants was Erich Traub and his assistant. This world-class cancer virologist, Hitler’s top biological weapons expert, was assigned to the U.S. Navy Biological Research Laboratory affiliated with the University of California. He was paid more than $65,000 of U.S. taxpayer money (plus benefits!) to continue his nefarious genocidal weapons experiments for many years during the cold war.

Another fact worthy of considering is that today the Rockefeller Foundation, and the Merck Fund, whose parent companies were previous partners with Hitler, are leading funding sources for world “depopulation”. A gift-wrapped form of genocide, and a continuation of their early eugenics efforts, today their work is positively heralded and allegedly needed for “population control”. These associations, their related histories, and ties to contemporary vaccine agendas, are deserving of investigations by governments around the world.

Following a storm of criticism by many Third World nations during and after international “population control” conferences, several U.S. Government officials decided to phase out institutionalized reference to “population control”. Newly chosen surrogates included the phrases “Family Planning” and “Maternal and Child Health”.

Could this be the real reason why “Family Planning” centers and “Material and Child Health” clinics allegedly “require vaccinations” and promote their use so ardently?

Given this alarming background, the following Bible passages have special relevance:

Lamentations 4:13-15 foreshadows the AIDS pandemic, and other current and coming plagues. It also relays the fear and avoidance surrounding HIV-positive and other infected, sick, and dying people. As you read the first paragraph, consider the fact that religious leaders are encouraging their followers to get vaccinated. Many are even inviting “public health” nurses and vaccine administrators into their congregations to deliver the toxic, and too often lethal, doses:

“It happened because of the sins of her prophets and the offenses of her priests (and rabbis) who, within her walls, shed the blood of the righteous. They wander in the streets like the blind; they are so polluted with blood that nobody is able even to touch their clothing.

“‘Keep away! Unclean!’ people shout at them, ‘Keep away! Away, don’t touch us!’ They flee, to wander here and there; but no nation allows them to stay.”

Ezekiel 3:18-20 provides a pretty good argument why it’s important to relay these facts concerning vaccines, blood transfusions, sin, and death:

“When I say to a wicked man ‘You will surely die’ and you do not warn him or speak out to dissuade him from his evil ways in order to save his life, that wicked man will die for his sin, and I will hold you accountable for his blood. But if you do warn the wicked man and he does not turn from his wickedness or from his evil ways, he will die for his sin; but you will be saved yourself.”

Ezekiel 5:17 provides another blood-related warning and prophecy that may relate to recent outbreaks, particularly the hemorrhagic fever virus Ebola. As documented in my book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola; Nature, Accident or Intentional? this virus was apparently produced by Litton Bionetics—America’s sixth leading biological weapons contracting laboratory:

“Yes, I will send famine and savage beasts upon you to leave you without children; plague and bloodshed will sweep through you; and I will bring the sword upon you. I, God, have spoken it.”

Luke 13:1-5 states that those who mix human blood with the blood of sacrificed animals are “sinners”. This is precisely what pharmaceutical industrialists do to many vaccines.

“There were present at that season some who told him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. And Jesus, answering, said unto them: ‘Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things?’”

Finally, Revelation provides an “End Times” prophecy in which the kings, merchants, and wealthiest men of all the nations were deceived by “magic spells” or “sorcery”. Biblical references to the practice of “magic spells” or “sorcery” come from the Greek root word of “sorcery”—that is, pharmacopoeia meaning pharmacy. This “sorcery” is not only associated in the Bible with spilled and impure blood, but with the great plagues, and onslaught of deadly “beasts”.

Strong's Concordance Hebrew root word for “beasts” is #2416 “chay” meaning “alive, raw (flesh), strong . . . appetite”; in the Greek Lexicon, the word #2342 for “beasts” is “therion” meaning “a dangerous animal, (venomous, wild) beast.” Thus, the Earth's greatest depopulation event is predicted to be associated with dangerous beasts and the great plagues. Could these “beasts” be bacteria, viruses, and pieces thereof—infectious microorganisms most insidiously spread throughout the world, most precisely and extensively, in contaminated blood and vaccines? That's exactly what many experts say is occurring today.

Those who “fornicated” with the devil, and stole “the blood of prophets and of God's people” would surely be severely judged by God in the last days. (See Revelation 18:23-19:2.) The Bible predicts that around the time “Babylon the great” falls, its deadly wine, also symbolic of blood, will flow out full of impurities into the “rivers and streams” that the Bible says are the Earth's “people”. They will likely then be infected with agents, little “beasts”, associated with great plagues that will wipe out more than a third of the world's population.

Indeed, a reasonable interpretation of these sections of Revelation includes the suggestion that vaccine/pharmaceutical/blood industrialists, all largely directed by the Rockefeller family and their friends, have deceived international leaders, merchants, and the wealthy.

Finally, in Revelation, God's judgement and great wrath comes upon those who have worshipped these Babylonian idols above the Lord. Today, as modern medical science is idolized, and continues to dramatically alter the gene pools of plants, animals, microorganisms, and humans, Babylonian scientists are destroying the perfection that God created over all the Earth.

Additional Bible verses of interest on these topics include:

“Or if I [Lord God] send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast.”

— Ezekiel 14:19

“And when I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, ‘Live’; yea, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, ‘Live’.”

— Ezekiel 16:6

“And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God...and blood flowed from the winepress.”

— Revelation 14:19-20

“And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, ‘Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues’.”

— Revelation 18:4

“The Lord our God...hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth...and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.”

— Revelation 19:1-2

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

The Indigo Children

An Interview With Co-Author Jan Tober

some time. There are those who say that the “forerunners” to this modern-day phenomenon started being birthed as long as 20 years ago. Futurists, such as Gordon-Michael Scallion, have been speaking of their planetary entrance for some years now, labeled by him as the Blue Children. To Nancy Ann Tappe, gifted with the ability to see the auric field of the human body, they are simply referred to as Indigos.

These are very special children, tremendously gifted. Many of you have probably seen on television, in recent months, the angelic teenage opera-singer Charlotte Church. If ever there was a perfect example of a “musical Indigo”, she’s it.

What does the presence of these “super kids” mean? What is their message? What is their purpose for being here, right now? Is this just a fanciful idea or a reality? What are the Indigos and what makes them “Indigo”?

Although it took some months to coordinate, on January 17 I was finally able to speak with Jan Tober, the co-author of the provocative book called The Indigo Children, about this fascinating subject. While my investigation into this matter could have remained “normal”—that is, rather academic and linear, in a traditional interview fashion—once appraised of the knowledge base and orientation of our readership, Jan Tober became comfortable enough in the conversation to open-up to some of the more spiritual, and some might say esoteric, aspects of this subject centered around these “little” gifts from Heaven.

The book, while merely an “introduction” into the subject, is one that every teacher and school administrator should be required to read. If you have a child who is “a handful”, if you have a child who has been diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD) or Hyperactivity (ADHD), then by all means go get and read this book! It should be in every library across the land.

Authors Jan Tober and Lee Carroll have done a great public service by also providing a comprehensive, free-access website. Here (at www.indigochild.com) they have collected information concerning alternative schools, health professionals, and a wide range of other useful information pertinent to the Indigo children and where to seek help or assistance, if needed. Their book The Indigo Children is available through most major bookstores, and the book’s ISBN is: 1-56170-608-6.

Jan Tober is also associated with another website (www.kryon.com) which contains channeled spiritual material which may be of interest to our readers.

When inquiring, during the interview, about “alternative” schooling for those economically disadvantaged Indigo families, you’ll see there was mention of a particular group in Texas. However, after the interview, I received a call-back from Jan Tober asking me to include within this story the mention of a book called Home Schooling Handbook, by Mary Griffith, which has just come to her attention, and is available through Amazon.com on the Internet.

It is obvious that, in an hour and a half, we were only able to scratch the surface on this subject. But if you have been feeling there’s no hope for the world, you’ll get a definite “boost” from this story!

The great Master Teacher of 2000 years ago said: “Blessed are the children.” These children will be the guides to return us, as a world, to the path of love.

Turning now directly to the book The Indigo Children, we read:

[QUOTING]

Here are ten of the most common traits of Indigo children:

1. They come into the world with a feeling of royalty (and often act like it).
2. They have a feeling of “deserving to be here” and are surprised when others don’t share that.
3. Self-worth is not a big issue. They often tell the parents “who they are”.
4. They have difficulty with absolute authority (authority without explanation or choice).
5. They simply will not do certain things; for example, waiting in line is difficult for them.
6. They get frustrated with systems that are ritual-oriented and don’t require creative thought.
7. They often see better ways of doing things, both at home and in school, which makes them seem like “system busters” (nonconforming to any system).
8. They seem antisocial unless they are with their own kind. If there are no others of like consciousness around them, they often turn inward, feeling like no other human understands them. School is often extremely difficult for them socially.
9. They will not respond to “guilt” discipline. (“Wait till your father gets home and finds out what you did!”)
10. They are not shy in letting you know what they need.

[END QUOTING]

This is no small challenge for parents because, on top of all the normal requirements of parenting, these children take the matter a large step into the spiritual. That is: “Indigos come into this world with self-respect and an unshakable understanding that they are children of God. Your Indigo will be quite confused and dismayed if you do not have the same knowledge that you, too, are a spiritual being above all else. Therefore, it is crucial that you respect yourself. Nothing turns an Indigo off faster than parents who do not earn their child's respect, but who instead give away their power and parental responsibility to the child."

—Melanie Melvin, Ph.D., from The Indigo Children.

With that said, let's move now directly into my discussion with Jan Tober on the subject of these wonderful, wild, provocative, and often exasperating "old" children.

Martin: Let's begin with a fundamental definition; exactly what are the Indigo children?

Tober: The Indigo children, the definition that we are sharing, that rings true for us, is: an Indigo child is one who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes, and shows a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before.

Martin: How did you arrive at the phrase "Indigo children"?

Tober: Indigo children comes from the color of the aura around these children. There's a dear friend of mine, whom I've known since the early 1970s, by the name of Nancy Ann Tappe. Nancy has authored a book called Understanding Your Life Through Color. It was printed in 1982. In that book, that is the first documented information about what she has "coined" the Indigo children.

How does she see the color? How accurate is it? Nancy has been diagnosed with a situation where two of her neurological systems cross, and it creates a situation where she, literally, can see the human aura. She's like a Kirlian camera, if you will, and she sees electromagnetic fields and the colors and the frequencies. She's a fabulous gal and a wonderful counselor and metaphysician and teacher.

She noticed, very early on, that there was another auric color associated with all those whom she'd been working with, who she had been studying, working on her Ph.D. with this project. It became apparent that this was not that infrequent, which gives us a breakdown that, basically, Nancy has said that from 1980 on, about 80% of the children born are Indigos. And, since 1995, we have a much higher percentage, so much so that we need to look at what's happening here.

Metaphysically speaking—and we do not say this in the book—and the reason that we do not say, in the book, what I'm going to say here is that we wanted this book to go out to the "mainstream" public. Because those are the people who had the least chance of hearing about alternatives and ways of working with these children.

We're seeing a new generation of Masters coming into the planet, and they have been called "Star Children", "Blue Children", and through Nancy's work they are called, from our perspective, the "Indigo Children". They are our hope for the future. They are our hope for the present. And that is, esoterically, what's really happening.

We try to keep the focus as pragmatic as we can, because we've got a lot of parents out there dealing with very OLD souls, in very tiny bodies, who, in most cases, know more than the parents!

And then, what do the parents do with that? There are metaphysicians who still have some ideas of alternatives. Mainstream, I don't know where they go, except to our book and a few other books that are getting out there.

[Editor's note: Sadly, at this stage of general un-awareness, many "mainstream" parents have fallen into modern medicine's drug trap for controlling their children. See the article at the end of this interview called The Ritalin Generation: Drugging America's Youth for some unsettling details. Of course the goal is to derail these formidable old souls into a useless stupor. How better to cancel out their potential threat to the dark, so-called "elite" crooks in high places who are attempting to keep we-the-people asleep so as to move ahead with their New World Order planetary control plans.]

Martin: I'm sure you've been asked a lot of standard questions, and I'm not sure if my questions will be quite as standard. One question that I'm just curious about—I want to move right into some of the deeper aspects—but have you been surprised or overwhelmed about the response you've gotten since this book has come out?

Tober: Yes, and no. One is always a bit overwhelmed when they're in the middle of something that is in its perfect timing.

Martin: Good answer.

Tober: This information about the children came to me, intuitively, in the early '70s, about the time I met Nancy, without realizing that she would be so connected with this. Because at the time, she was not talking much about the Indigo children at all, but I would have dreams where children would come to me and they would tell me who they are, why they came, who their parents were, why they came karmically to be with these parents.

And it was fascinating. I would wake-up from these dreams and I would start being drawn to various babies and small children, and I'd look in their eyes, and I saw these little-bodied old souls. So, I would look around me and I would talk to my friends and say: "Have you noticed a difference, or is this just me?"

And they'd go: "Well, kind-of." You know? And then, of course, that progressed.

I knew this was part of one of the reasons that I'm here. And I know, from the work that Lee and I do, that it certainly is a part of his mission, if you will. So, from that aspect, I was not surprised.

I knew it HAD to be done. It was like two very powerful hands pushing me forward into that area of my life. And then, as we work with people—we travel throughout the world, so we speak to different continents of people. We've been doing that for about nine years, and over the last four years, I would say, there is such a frustration coming back and such an acknowledgement coming from parents, day-care workers, teachers, that they are working with some very unusual old souls.

And the question "What do we do?" is coming from the parents. And how on Earth do they help that child interface with the school system? There was so much frustration, and so much interest, that by the time we actually got the book out, we KNEW it's time had come.

Martin: Are you working on a follow-up?

Tober: Oh, gosh. (Laughter) Yes, Hay House has asked us to do a second book and, as a matter of fact, I will ask your readers to help us. It is what we call "warm and fuzzy" stories from parents about their Indigo children. If your readers would share their stories with us, I would really appreciate it. And I'll give them an email address, if they want to do that; also a Kryon email and website address.

Martin: And what is Kryon?

Tober: The Kryon email address?

Martin: This is different than the Indigo children address?

Tober: Oh! (Laughter) This is a whole other interview for you. Have you ever heard of the Kryon writings?

Martin: No.

Tober: Well, Lee and I don't talk much about this because, again, the book is aimed at the mainstream public for those parents who need help, who have their nose right up into a prescription of Ritalin. You know what I mean?

Now, concerning Kryon: Lee and I travel around talking about the writings and teachings of Kryon. Kryon is a Master from the Great Central Sun. Lee does live channeling, channeling Kryon much like Ramtha would be. That type of energy. And we have actually spoken at the UN for the last three years. He channels Kryon. And I also channel the feminine aspects of the Kryon entourage. I do the meditations. We do balancing. We spoke to 3,000 people last year, in France alone, for one day, the two of us. It's amazing. The work is, basically, centered around "we create our own reality", which is certainly not a new term, but it is our job to be clear channels for that information to come through repeatedly, to help people take back their power.

Martin: This is just an aside. Have you heard of the book called China's Super Psychics, by Paul Dong and Thomas E. Raffill?

Tober: That's who Drunvalo's speaking about?

Martin: Right.

Tober: People have been emailing us stuff about it, and Drunvalo promotes our book in his workshop.

Martin: Yes, he does.

Tober: And the information that I get is that these super-psychics are all Indigos.

Martin: I assumed that.

Tober: They're all Indigos.

Martin: And, I would imagine, the same thing is happening in just about every country, but nobody has written a book about it; they just happened to choose the ones in China.

Tober: Well, China is very interesting. According to Nancy Tappe—let's see, we just got back from our second trip to Singapore. Two years ago, the Kryon entourage, which I call them, because Kryon is not an entity. Kryon is an accumulation of the Archangels, the whole group focusing on helping us through Earth changes.

Martin: This is a subject our readers are very familiar with.

Tober: And I know your readers would be familiar with Kryon. The Kryon entourage created the energy, through the audience in Singapore, to open up a portal. This year we then had to go back and balance the portal out.

Nancy Tappe told me all children coming into Singapore would be Indigos, before I told her about the portal. And then, when I told her that I was instructed that Kryon would be opening a portal, that I needed to do a lot of clearing, cleansing, before we even started the workshop—

Martin: That makes sense.

Tober: —two years ago, she just smiled. She said “Well, of course. There you are. That's why it's in Singapore.” It was a bit of a challenge. I sent her to Singapore with our promoter to talk to some parents there, too. The trip was difficult for us in many ways, but very rewarding in the fact that we know we've helped become a channel for getting some of this movement going to help these souls come in.

You know, Rick, we're dealing, basically—the Masters are coming in as right-brained individuals, coming into a left-brained world.

Martin: Its gotta be tough.

Tober: I suppose you're hearing this as much as we are, but we're talking about the Divine Feminine coming in at this time. And not a moment too soon, may I add!

And the Divine Feminine and the Indigos go hand-in-hand. Who is to say where one starts and the other finishes off, or what came first? My feeling is that the Indigos have made the way for the Divine Feminine to be accessed. We needed a “critical mass”.

That's what the Kryon work is about, to get a critical mass going who accept that through their consciousness, their thoughts, through their words and deeds, they create their reality; hence, we could create the reality here on Earth called Heaven.

That critical mass needed to be up and running, as the Indigos were dribbling in, so that there was a frequency that was refined enough so that they could come through into the physical vehicle, and have a frequency environment where they could stay, where they wouldn't have to crib-death themselves out of here, or sooner [such as spontaneous abortion].

Martin: Along this line, I want to talk to you about the misdiagnosis of Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD) and (ADHD), and the use of Ritalin to drug these children. Have you encountered a lot of Indigos who have been drugged and, in your opinion, misdiagnosed?

Tober: Again, I work as an intuitive counselor. I do not work out in the area where a lot of my clients would put their children on Ritalin. They would go to alternatives, innately. However, in our audiences, which do have a bit of broad cross-section, we are experiencing where, maybe not our audience member would go that route, but they would say: “My sister-in-law's child, my niece, my nephew...”, where they are not the primary child caretaker. And it is so prevalent, for instance, when you look at—if I jump around, it is because I'm also intuitive, and a channeler, so sometimes we get a little bit of extra help here, so I'll just try to stay right on line.

Martin: That's fine. Take it wherever you're guided to take it.

Tober: Yeah, I will. I'm giving you a lot more information than I normally feel comfortable giving on, let's say, a call-in radio show. I'm thumbing through this book as I'm talking. I want to quote the percentages we shared in the book, about the increase in the production of Ritalin: “Ritalin production has increased seven-fold in the last eight years, and 90% of it is consumed in the U.S.”

The trend over the past few years has been clear: the percentage of children with an ADHD or ADD diagnosis, walking out of a doctor's office with a prescription, jumped from 55% in 1989 to 75% in 1996. And, if the truth be known, it's higher than that; but I'm not in a position to quote.

What's happening? What's happening is, we have a new paradigm of soul, of entity, coming into the Earth who are, primarily, right-brained. We have them being shoved into a left-brained society where, to be left-brained is to be honored; to be right-brained, i.e., the artist, the musician, dancer, painter, writer, is not to be honored, in this country, for instance, as much as it is in Europe.

So, they're coming into a left-brained world. To get your kudos, to get your strokes, to be really honored and respected, they have to try to fit into that. These souls, as Masters, KNOW the truth and know that we are now moving into honoring the right-brain mode, and they are a part of that.

So, they're not going to fit in, even if they choose to. They're here on a mission lifetime—and that's a very important statement. They're here on a mission lifetime. They're NOT here to fit in. We are here to understand them, to learn from them, and allow them to teach us a new way of being.

Back to your question. Because they're new and different, where do doctors go? Where do parents go? Where do teachers go? They've got children who would appear to be hyperactive, who have a low attention span, who can't stand in line—all of the symptoms that fit into something like the chicken or the egg.

I mean, which came first: ADD or the child of ADD? It's fitting into a type of pattern. They don't know what to do with it.

Now, if Ritalin healed the process, it would be different. I don't want to get into an AMA discussion, but there are so many incredible alternatives that take, maybe, a little bit more work, but my goodness, is your child worth it? Shouldn't that be the most important thing?

So, there are so many alternatives to that. If the drug healed, then fine. It doesn't. It just prolongs. It just puts them into suspended animation. Eventually they've got to get off the drug, and they have to deal with whatever it is that they're dealing with.

I have a book on ADD and ADHD; it's The ADD And ADHD Diet, written by Rachel Bell and Dr. Howard Peiper. I want to include this, although your audience is very savvy, but just for us all to stop, take a deep breath, and think.

“People with ADD/ADHD lack sufficient supplies of neuro-transmitters, especially serotonin. Serotonin is manufactured in the brain in the presence of B6 and tryptophan. Tryptophan is an essential amino acid. If tryptophan and B6 are in short supply, the body cannot make serotonin.” I'm quoting from the book.

“Therefore, people with ADD/ADHD may require supplements of tryptophan and/or B6. Protein supplies amino acids to the body. If the body contains sufficient protein and tryptophan-rich foods, the supply of amino acids will not usually be a problem. The calcium/magnesium ratio is a key factor, also. Insufficient magnesium can result in high insulin levels, which reduce serotonin. Therefore it is necessary to insure an adequate supply of magnesium, in addition to B6 and amino acids.” It goes on. This is one of several books we recommend. This book is very short, and sweet, and concise.

[Editor's note: Remember a number of years ago when, all of a sudden, there occurred a tryptophan “scare” of “tainted” product on the healthfood store shelves, especially from what was a particularly good supplier? All the tryptophan supplements quickly disappeared under hasty recall and FDA/AMA scare tactics over the major media. Many people had also found this to be a very good natural sleeping aid—it's what puts you to sleep after eating turkey. Considering the number of Indigo children who were known to be coming into the world, who would otherwise be a formidable threat to the New World Order crooks, maybe now it becomes clearer why those who orchestrated the disappearing act were so compelled to "protect" us from this supplement!]

First, we've got the Indigo constitution. We've got Indigo Masters coming in on a mission, saying: "We're going to help this planet shift into the Divine Feminine, one way or another. We're going to do it by coming in and being an example of love. You're going to learn how to treat us, and as you learn how to treat us, you're going to learn how to treat each other, with love." I mean, that's the bottom line to all of this. When we learn how to love, be with, parent, if you will, the Indigo child, we're learning how to operate at the highest level with each other. That's the bottom line, and that's what they're teaching us.

So, we've got ADD/ADHD, ok. We've got a new paradigm coming in. They carry a lot of what has been labeled Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder. It doesn't mean it is. What we're saying to parents is this: please look at alternatives. We know it's challenging. That's why the book is out, so you can pick the book up and look at the list of traits, which I can go through, and I feel I should now, and you can see that maybe there's not something wrong with your child; that your child is part of this new paradigm.

Now, how do we work with that? That's what the book is filled with—healthy alternatives, from diet to techniques. There's a technique called sleep-talk, where you work with the child in their sleep state. It's very powerful and it needs to be taught. I'm bringing some teachers with me, as I put together Indigo workshops, who teach this. They've had a wonderful success rate with this, so far.

Proactive formula, heart-map—there are all kinds of choices that parents can look at. Does your child respond to this, to food allergies, environmental poisonings? We all have to get very, very savvy to all of this stuff, and these children are going to force us into doing it—for ourselves, as well.

Martin: Because I'm aware of the time restraints we have here, let me ask you: You have a fantastic list on your website of Montessori and Waldorf schools. And you talk about those as being excellent places for Indigos. What about those Indigos born into families that are economically disadvantaged? What do you say to people who just can't afford that kind of education?

Tober: There have been some wonderful results we've been hearing about with home schooling. There's a group in Houston, I believe there's about 40 families, maybe more, as of this interview, and they are successfully working with home schooling. That might be an alternative. That, certainly, would be an inexpensive alternative, and they're getting wonderful results, and the children are walking right into Ivy League colleges.

I also know, within my heart of hearts, that there will be, I believe, other forms of schooling coming up that may be not as cost prohibitive to families who don't have a comfortable income. And I know there is such a huge interest in Indigos, and what we can do to help them, that there are a lot of educators now, who are also metaphysicians, who are joining forces and working at putting this schooling together.

I just worked with a client last week, and she asked me what did I see for her, and it was very, very clear that she was going to be working as part of this group. This was part of an intuitive counseling session that I did, and it turns out that she is ready to get her degree, and she does have people who are principals and vice-principals who want to interface with her. So, where there's one, there's many.

I know that books are stirring—this book, and there will be many more. I'm in the process of about four more at this time; one with Lee, and three or four with other people in various areas of education, health, who can get these books out and get the attention of the people, because we must make an inroad enough to make a "wedge of light" into the educational system and make space for these children, because now they are coming in such a high percentage that it can't be overlooked.

Martin: Are there any foundations or clearing houses for information, other than your website, for the Indigos? Is there a central place, or places, that are being established to study and work with these special children?

Tober: Not that we're aware of, but my information is that it will just be a matter of time before these are set up. It's too important and its right in our face; and it is the next step in our evolution. So it will be done.

Martin: You've been around a lot. You've been traveling a lot. What do you think people need to know? What is the most useful information that you can pass on to our readers about this subject?

Tober: There are two words that, if we could say nothing more to you, we would say, in the parenting of the Indigo child. In relating to the Indigo child, the two words are: CHOICES and NEGOTIATE. If you can remember nothing else, if you do not read our book, give them choices and negotiate everything. I mean, certainly, they're not to run rampant over you. But that is the parenting guide. If we can remember that they're here to teach us, that gives more of a balance to those words.

I want to share with your readers what parents can do to make a difference. In addition to giving them choices and negotiating with them, you can make a big difference by guiding them, rather than giving them explicit directions. Treat them and interact with them as your best friend, because in truth, they are. Treat them with respect. Honor their existence in your family. Help them create their own disciplinary solutions. You'll be amazed as a parent what they will come up with. And give them choices about everything. Never belittle them, ever. This is just good parenting advice. If we wanted to be the perfect parent, we would say: "This is the list I will follow." So, they are very simply saying: "Now is the time, and you get to practice being the perfect parent. Now is the time on the planet to do this."

Always explain why you give them the instructions you do; never say: "Because I said so." Instead say: "Because this will help me today. I'm a bit tired today. I need some help from you" knowing that honesty will always win out with them because they're intuitive. They know what's going on, because you're thinking it.

Make them your partners in raising them. This is EXTREMELY important. This goes with choices and negotiation. Make them your partner. Let them know they always have a vote. Be PRESENT with them. And, of course, as a friend, as a grown-up family member, we ask always to be present when we're in a situation with people. I mean, that is "be here now". That's being in the moment, all of this metaphysical stuff. Metaphysicians innately know a lot of this. And explain everything to them, if you think they don't understand something—of course, we know that they DO understand at the soul level. And we know we can talk to them before birth.

If serious problems develop, and you feel you want to test them, do not say "Do not go to doctors." What you should say is: "Try some alternatives. Look at diet. Look at supplements. Look at nutrition. Look at homeopathy. Look at chiropractic. Look at polarity." We offer a list, a large list, and we offer access to alternative authors, alternative teachers who you can email, and ask, and take that even further.

Provide safety in your support. Avoid negative criticism. Encourage them in their endeavors. I mean, this is all stuff we know. An Indigo is not a follower. Let them decide what THEY are interested in, and what they want to do. Talk TO them, not AT them. That, basically, is the information we have found from therapists, from very conscientious parents, from Nancy's work, that seems to really help guide the Indigos.

They know who they are. They come in feeling and knowing. It does not serve us to try to mold them into a pattern that possibly we had to learn to break out of, the pattern of how our parents raised us.

There is a new way of being. There's a new way of parenting, and it's about moving into love. The bottom line is love—being present and loving and understanding. In the months and years ahead, we're going to see school systems, we're going to see our types of areas, where we're going to get help as parents.

At an esoteric level—again, something I don't normally talk about on TV or radio shows, unless they are very holistic, but still, I would tend not to—is that the Indigos come from the 10th dimension. Considering we're in the 4th, moving into the 5th, and hopefully, many of us are in the 5th, moving and getting really comfortable with our ascension process, we've got these beautiful souls coming in from the 10th dimension.

The 10th dimension is about sound and color, and radiates this opalescence. As an intuitive, if you're intuitive, you can go in—if you're intuitive, and I believe most of your readers are—you can go in and ask to access that dimension. When you do, you will sense an opalescence, if you have clear ascension. That says a lot about, going back to, this honoring of the right brain, the honoring of the arts and honoring of the intuitive process, listening to the children.

Let their knowledge out. Let them know who they are, so they choose to stay. Create harmony in your home. Learn about cleaning space. Learn about sage-ing. Learn about preparing energy in your home—burning alcohol and Epsom salts—certain types of incense. Keep your home a clear temple, so that the child can come home, if they've had a difficult time at school, they can come home to a loving parent.

Even if you're tired, at least let them know and make some time to be present with them, so it's safe to come home to their buddy; and they can say: "Gee, mom, the teacher, I knew this was right, but the teacher didn't understand it." The parent can come in, not make the teacher wrong, but at least understand and be there, and be present, and listen to the child, and let the child know that the parent understands who the child is and that they do see things this way, and it is different and maybe challenging.

So you come home to a loving, present parent, and you come into an energetically clean home, whether it's the tiniest little apartment, or a very lavish, large home. It doesn't matter, if the energy is not made clean and kept clean through loving thoughts and through actually—physically and spiritually—cleansing the house. All of these things add to making it safe for the child, and easier for the child.

I am starting to do Indigo workshops, and I will be doing the first one in Indianapolis on February 4. I'm going to bring with me, always, some people who can show some techniques that we're getting wonderful results with.

Martin: Do you have anything scheduled for March?

Tober: As a matter of fact, I've done a workshop in Singapore, a smaller one, but this will be my first larger one. And, no, I don't have anything scheduled yet. I'm very open. We're working with a minimum of 50 people, so we can actually use a large home or a rec-room or a community church, something like that, and keep it small. This has got to be done, and this is something that I am very open to do.

Martin: Have you done much work in Europe? Have you gotten responses about Indigos in Europe?

Tober: Yes. We've worked in France. We only started a couple of years ago. We do get wonderful responses there. You have to remember, if the book isn't out yet, we wouldn't get a response. This last trip we had 3,000 people for one day, in France, just outside of Paris. They had just received, I believe, The Indigo Children book.

Our French publishers have also published The Indigo Children book in French, along with the Kryon books. The last Kryon book, called Letters From Home, had a chapter on Indigos. And of all the things that we've put together and written, that chapter received more interest, and more letters, and more questions than anything. So, wherever that book went, and it went around the world, we got queries.

Australia is very interested in it. They don't seem to have the same situations we do. We seem to have more problems here. But they still have a more intimate way of being in the family and being with their children there, just because of their very culture. We're not as able to be with our children—if you're out there working two or three jobs a week, and things like that. Australia is a slower-paced existence, and easier living.

We're going to England, Ireland, and Israel, and my feeling is that we're going to get a lot of interest, particularly in Israel, on the Indigos. I'm going back to France, again, so the book will have been out even longer. Yes, this is something that is happening. Certainly in Singapore and Hong Kong there is a tremendous amount of interest because they're English-speaking and they've read the book.

Martin: At the end of the book you have some information on the message that the Indigo's bring. Can you comment more about that?

Tober: Specifically, which part, Rick, were you talking about?

Martin: The message that they bring, the message of love.

Tober: Oh, yes! The message IS of love; it is of honoring that piece of us—again, I mention the Divine Feminine, which comes in and honors love, compassion, the intuitive process, all of the pieces that need to come together to make this Heaven on Earth—and they are here to show us, one way or another.

They are going to mirror to us what's happening. If we don't get it—which, I personally feel, we are getting it—if we don't get it, it's going to be "in our face" and they're going to act it out in some ways that may be violent to us, saying: "Look at the violence in your computer games. Look at the violence on your films; we're manifesting this out." They're going to be a mirror for us, as Masters they will do that. So it's up to us to get it, and to take it and run with it, run interference, and make the way clear for them so that they can do their teaching through love, which is really what they want.

Martin: You talk about them as being "systems busters". What do you mean by that?

Tober: We were told, many years ago, that the first things that would break down would be the old, established institutions and systems. Do you remember that?

Martin: Yes.

Tober: We were told that, as we move into this New Age, this Golden Age—well, they don't fit into the mold—so they're right out there as those who will break, for instance, the educational system as it has been for a hundred years or so. They will not put up with something simply because that's the way it has always been.

So, knowing that we've got a large group of entities coming onto the planet, and that they are "system busters", it can really give you a pretty good picture of where we are going.

In my mind and in my heart, it's awesome. It's just so awesome to know that they're here working with us!

Years ago I would say to my friends, when I was having the dreams about the babies, I said: "You know, it's like we who are conscious are the 'rainbow bridge' from this civilization, from this group of entities, to the new group of souls coming in. We're the 'rainbow bridge' for them." It fills my heart with great hope.

We're seeing amazing things happen, and we who know who they are, can certainly help the parents who are having difficulty and don't understand. We can share with them our knowledge, as these little ones are getting old enough to speak for themselves.

Martin: Let's talk about using the old tricks of guilt and shame as behavior tools with these kids.

Tober: Won't work. It won't work. They know who they are. It will just frustrate, devastate the parents. It will bring in a very agitated energy-field around the parents and around the child, which will defeat any discussion, any real help. It just won't happen.

They KNOW who they are. They're on a mission. They are aware of that. So, this is a challenge, because we have a whole culture who have been raised on "You just wait until your father gets home!" I'm sure you probably heard that a few times. I heard that a few times, and that won't work!

I don't have children. I'm around them a lot, but I can appreciate what parents must go through when they go back to the old modus operandi for parents, and find out that it doesn't do anything. The children will test them. The children will test them to see how far they can get.

However, these children are not brass. That is not in their consciousness. They will test the parent, in this respect, to see what the ground-rules are. How far can I do this? What can I do? What, really, is important to my parents? What isn't important? And they're going to learn to see how they can negotiate with the parents. So, if a parent comes back with a negotiation point-of-view, then they're going to be on the same page.

There's a story about a little boy. We were doing a workshop, and went to dinner with some of the people from the workshop. They had a little child. I would say he was somewhere in the "terrible 2s", 2 or 3, absolutely bright, an Indigo, so aware.

What the parents did was, when it was time for dinner, they said: "Johnny, it's dinner time. Now, would you like to sit in your high-chair, or your junior chair, or you can sit with us, here, or you can have your own little table". In other words, he looked, and he saw he had his choices, and instead of saying "I don't want to have dinner now", he came out and he picked where he wanted to sit. And he chose to be with the adults, because they interact so well with the adults, because look at who they are. And they had a very successful dinner with this 2- or 3-year-old at the same table.

So, it's quite amazing. It's quite amazing to see them in action. It's joyful to see them in action. And it's joyful when you see them in action with conscientious parents, who are coming from love, who certainly are coming from a mind/body/soul integration, through love. That's the bottom line.

Martin: Well, coming from the right brain, it's going to be interesting to see, in the years ahead, what kind of new professions open up as a result of these children.

Tober: And inventions, new ways of doing things!

Martin: I mean, it kind-of takes the old doctor, lawyer, fireman rut right out of the choice equation. (Laughter)

Tober: It does. And it's going to really move us into new ways of being.

And, you know what? Years ago, when we would talk about moving our frequencies and lightening-up our frequencies, and the planet is evolving and lightening-up, and we're going to move into this ascension process, and we all wanted to believe it. We all knew, in our hearts, it was the truth. But then it was very easy to get into "How is that going to happen?" And then, all of sudden, here's this whole, wonderful new group of Teachers coming in, and they will make it happen. So, it's ALL SOOOOOOOO PERFECT. We just gotta get out of their way! (Laughter)

Martin: (Laughter) Right. Have you had contact with many parents, who have Indigos, who are just totally beside themselves?

Tober: I've had a lot of mail from parents who are so thrilled when they read the book, and they knew that their children may not be sick, that they may be Indigos. Then they start working with a lot of the principles we talk about, find success in their parenting, and it's been a revelation to them.

And there are also emails from parents who are having problems, in many cases, with teachers, because they don't know how to interface with the school system—the parent and child, and what to do. But they're all helping each other, you know? They go on-line and they interact, and they offer each other solutions, and certainly ideas and alternatives, and the parents are helping the parents.

I feel that's going to be the way a lot of this is going to work. The parents are going to have to get real proactive, and put together support groups, where they can help each other because we're making it up as we go along here!

Martin: That makes a lot of sense.

Tober: Yeah.

Martin: You're in the Los Angeles area; is that right?

Tober: I'm actually in the San Diego area.

Martin: Are there groups forming down in your area on this topic?

Tober: You know, it still feels like it's a little new. What I do notice is that there's a lot of interest, and I feel that groups are starting to form throughout, at least, the United States. Remember, we don't do a lot of work in our area. So, I wouldn't know as much about this area as I would about the rest of the United States, and the email that's coming in.

Martin: Is there an area of the United States that you find is more aware or tuned-in for this subject than others?

Tober: Well, anywhere where you would have more metaphysical groups. Colorado is quite active.

Martin: That is one place that came to mind.

Tober: Any place where you're going to find a lot of people who are aware, you're going to find interest.

Martin: Do you find much awareness among family therapists?

Tober: Again, if they honor their intuitive process, yes. And, of course, in this area, we do have a lot of people who are counselors and do honor their right-brain, intuitive side.

This new book that Lee and I are writing, again, I want to just mention: If parents out there have some stories about their children—we call them "warm fuzzies"—that make you laugh or make you cry, that really emotionally will help other parents to relate to their children more, by reading these stories from parents who have Indigo children.

And, again, I think most of your readers have [or know!] Indigo children. I think that would be a pretty safe assumption—or at least one out of their brood, if they have more than one child. And we would appreciate if they would send those in—to that Kryon email address I gave you would probably be best. We really need to get these stories in. I know it's going to make a big difference.

When you start reading about these children, and see the wisdom from the stories that we have already received, it helps parents emotionally. It really gives them help. They go: "You know, my child said something like that. Maybe I better look at my child being a little different than I thought." Anything that opens up the heart of the parent, and so I'm asking for parents out there to share their stories about their children.

Martin: You mentioned, when we were talking about China's Super Psychics, the book that Drunvalo has talked about—I have a copy here that I'm looking at while we're talking—you made a passing comment about China being interesting, or something like that, and then you went on. Was there something about China that you wanted to say?

Tober: About Singapore having the portal, because it's actually micro-Asia, Singapore, technically, but it's really in that corridor. Well, I'm being told right now that the reason it was Singapore is because Singapore is an island, and having water all around it, it was easier, once it was purified, to hold the space, rather than going into the mainland of China, for instance.

Martin: That makes sense.

Tober: So, again, that's quite esoteric, but I know your readers understand that.

Martin: Let's talk about Kryon. What is the Kryon message?

Tober: The Kryon message is that we create our own reality. The Kryon message is that love is the bottom line and love is all. These sound really "unusual"—I bet you've never heard these things before. (Laughter)

Martin: Oh, once or twice! (Laughter)

Tober: I think the Kryon message is, basically, Universal Truth, and it comes through Lee and I. Lee Carroll actually does the channeling, live, on stage. We deal a lot with the Earth changes. A lot of the work was to get us all through Y2K, and to change the consciousness about that, because there was so much fear.

Martin: A lot of fear.

Tober: And we had to counteract it by honoring our God-given power—for us to acknowledge the power of who we are—and to realize that we can create a critical mass where LOVE is in charge.

Enough people heard, enough people prayed and pray, enough people meditate, enough people envisioned the planet circled and surrounded with Love and Light, that the planet can go through these changes with a minimal amount of discomfort. That's, basically, the bottom line.

[Editor's note: As should always be the case when information is Truth, the above meshes well with many of Geophysical Commander Soltec's lessons about Mother Earth over the past many years, including his preliminary geophysical aside at the beginning of his general spiritual message in the recent January 2000 issue of this newspaper. If the receiving is accurate and truly coming from the Lighted Masters and other Hosts of God, there should be a great deal of overlapping agreement, and the messages should have strong positive, uplifting, and constructively instructive components overall.]

Kryon is a magnetic Master, so he works with the magnetic grid. And, a lot of it had to do with—again, very esoterically—getting this planet's magnetic grids realigned, and buffering for any discomfort we would go through. Because “as above, so below”, as the Earth is realigned, we are realigned. It is the preparation for what some call “ascension”, which is moving into the next frequency range, where we walk on the planet in a manner where we actively acknowledge that we are co-creators with Spirit. And that as we change ourselves, we change the planet—we change the world, and we change it through pure intent. That we are co-creators with Spirit would be another “bottom line” point brought forth in the Kryon work.

Martin: Well, our readers can easily identify with that message! How have you found your reception to be at the United Nations—for example, speaking of Kryon.

Tober: Well, they invited us back three times, so it is always very surprising to us. We speak in one of the smaller rooms. We speak for SEAT, which is the Society of Enlightenment and Transformation, which is one of the charter members, meditative members—which, of course, there were many originally.

So, it's a smaller group. It's about 75 people or so, and we're always amazed, when we're in the middle of the group, that we're in a room where major treaties between countries and leaders have been signed. And here we are, talking about ETs, bringing in a Council of Elders from the indigenous peoples of the world, talking about such things as it's time to look at what's happening with HAARP [High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program].

Martin: Yes, we're familiar with that.

Tober: We were honored and we're welcomed there.

Martin: Ok, let's shift back to the Indigos. What would you like to leave our readers with, to think about, with regard to this infusion of new energy in the form of these children?

Tober: If you had a knock on your door, and you opened the door, and you saw a great Master in your doorway, you would be honored. You would be joyful. You would be thrilled. And you would ask the Master in.

And you would probably sit down, thank him or her for coming, and you would say: “What is it you want me to know? How can I help you and how can I help the planet? What wisdom do you wish to share with me?”

That is the way to regard the Indigo child.

Martin: That's a good place to end. Thank you for a thoughtful and “inspired” interview. Our readers will truly enjoy this and I'm sure some of them will be contacting you!

The Ritalin Generation: Drugging America's Youth

Editor's note: The following timely report is closely linked to the subject of our Front Page interview just presented. To simply call what is going on a tragedy is to miss the point—that such can only happen because we ALLOW it to happen. No excuses, please, especially where the children are concerned!

Hopefully the influx of Indigo children at this time is sufficient to overwhelm such a diabolically directed agenda of incapacitation as is reported here. You can be sure that any statistics mentioned are merely the tip of the iceberg, since it is easy to mask or explain away (and thus hard to scientifically quantify) the range of subtle and complex interactions possible when such psychotropic drugs are part of the mind equation.

We give special thanks to The SPOTLIGHT newspaper for daring to present this information. If it makes you uneasy, then that's a good first step in the right direction. How did our country slip to such a point of sleepy acceptance where the outright drugging of our children is openly conducted and passively condoned on such a massive scale? The answer to that question is the same answer which applies to so many of the ills of our modern world.

1/7/00 F. C. BLAHUT

Drugging more than 2.5 million American children into a cooperative zombie state to achieve classroom harmony is being questioned in some quarters.

Not everyone agrees that pumping children full of psychotropic drugs is the answer to all classroom problems.

For instance, the Colorado Board of Education recently passed a resolution to discourage teachers from recommending behavioral drugs like Ritalin and Luvox to solve classroom problems.

The action, according to published reports, has intensified a national debate over the growing use of prescription drugs for children.

The resolution, the first of its kind in the country, carries no legal weight. But it urges teachers and other school personnel to use discipline and instruction to overcome problem behavior in the classroom, rather than to encourage parents to put their children on drugs that are commonly prescribed for attention deficit and hyperactive disorders.

Proponents of the resolution, which passed by a 6-to-1 vote on November 11, said they were motivated, in part, by evidence that they said suggested that dozens of violent crimes, including the massacre last spring at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colorado had been committed by young people taking psychotropic drugs.

One of the teenage shooters at Columbine, Eric Harris, had been taking Luvox, an anti-depressant, although there is no evidence that the drug had anything to do with the shootings or that a teacher recommended the use of the medication.

BROADER ISSUES

Patti Johnson, the school board member who organized a hearing on the issue and proposed the resolution, told reporters that a small number of teachers in Colorado had insisted on a child taking prescription drugs as a precondition to returning to class. The resolution, she said, was largely intended for them.

But the resolution reflected broader issues, as well, as parents, mental health professionals, and school officials debate the use of behavioral drugs by more than 2.5 million children in the United States.

Experts in mental health issues point out that children who take the drugs do so because they are having difficulties to begin with. They acknowledge that impulsive or violent behavior is a side effect in a small percentage of people taking the drugs.

Pro-drug forces, arguing that a majority of the children who use the narcotics are benefiting from them, contend that the Colorado resolution is irresponsible and perhaps even dangerous in that it could lead school personnel to ignore signs of serious mental disorders in children, and that it would discourage communication between teachers and parents.

DRUGGING YOUTHS

The use of Ritalin and other psychotropic drugs has steadily increased among schoolchildren, according to Children and Adults with Attention Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder, a national nonprofit organization known as CHADD, in Landover, Maryland, a Washington suburb.

In Colorado, increased usage has turned a new focus onto the role that teachers and administrators play in the lives of students.

Johnson told reporters that, in the five years she has been on the board, she has received "numerous complaints" from parents who claimed a teacher had insisted that their child go on Ritalin or another drug before returning to class.

The board member cited the case of one girl who was showing signs of attention deficit disorder through mood swings and napping in class. She said the girl was later diagnosed with hypoglycemia and needed to change her diet.

According to the girl's parents, Johnson said, the teacher told them: "You need to get her a prescription for Ritalin."

DRUG-CRIME CONNECTION?

In addition to complaints from parents about insistent teachers, Johnson told reporters she was also motivated to propose the resolution by the violent crimes involving young people, in which investigators said the perpetrators were using psychotropic drugs.

Accounts of those incidents also persuaded a Colorado state lawmaker, Penn Pfiffner of Lakeland, to hold a separate hearing on the prescription drugs issue, which, by coincidence, came two days before the school board voted on Johnson's measure.

Dr. Peter R. Breggin, director of the International Center for the Study of Psychiatry and Psychology, a nonprofit research organization in Bethesda, Maryland, also a Washington suburb, testified at both hearings and said doctors have become too eager to prescribe psychotropic drugs at the expense of conversations among parents, teachers, and children to learn why children are acting in antisocial ways.

Breggin said in an interview: "It's a tremendous mistake to subdue the behavior of children instead of tending to their needs.

"We're drugging them into submission rather than identifying and meeting the genuine needs of the family, the school, and community" Breggin told reporters. "It's wrong in principle."

Editor's note: This subject is far more sinsiter and convoluted—if that's possible—than the above even conveys. In an upcoming issue of The SPECTRUM we expect to present an in-depth interview with Dr. Ann Blake Tracy—if she can stay a step ahead of those trying to silence her for having the courage to tell The Truth!

Dr. Tracy is the Director of the International Coalition For Drug Awareness, a nonprofit organization, and the author of The Prozac Pandora and Prozac: Panacea Or Pandora? She has often been called upon to be an expert witness, and has long studied the full range of drugs being given to our children and the adverse reactions to these drugs.

She has much to reveal about the drug links to the recent shocking school killings—matters you haven't heard about, naturally, through the carefully controlled print and broadcast media outlets. And to answer the question from those of you with a good memory, yes, we have already presented some information by this daring person in our September 7, 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM. But that information, as disturbing as it was, hardly scratched the surface of this subject—according to a recent in-person conversation between her and our Rick Martin. So stay tuned.

News Desk Special Report:

MSG—The Deadly Mouth Aphrodisiac

Editor's note: In conjunction with our Front Page story, and especially the addendum about the massive drugging of our children with such as Ritalin, we present the following as an important, related News Desk Special Report.

Right up there with the flouridation and chlorination of our drinking water (which we will be addressing in a future article), is this most widely used, yet often cleverly disguised, poison in our food. We thank Dr. Overholt for bringing our attention to this through the interesting and often daring sightings.com Internet website.

While many of you are aware of the dangers of MSG through firsthand experience, this author covers a lot of the history and other typical, money-oriented shenanigans which explain how MSG managed to arrive at the "popular" position it now enjoys. The only important point missing from this otherwise fine article is taking the step beyond the usual money-making explanation for MSG's "rise to fame" and including the more sinister and well-hidden "New World Order" goals of depopulation and people control through such as covert, poisoning drugs in our food and water—an agenda which circles back to the larger picture of our Front Page story.

Hopefully, if enough people raise their voices in justified outrage, at least an "honesty in ingredients" list may be achieved both for product purchases and restaurant decisions. When that is done, and consumers can actually start to make INFORMED choices about which foods they eat, it won't take long for the bottom line profits of many companies to speak loudly—and in a language they understand—about product changes which promote better health rather than simply make large profits.

<janetplanetl@earthlink.net>

"The worst piece of information I have when I am in the midst of the reaction is that I am going to live. I only want to die. It will not happen; I know I will live through this, and that's torture."

"I come across embarrassingly as if I have brain damage, even though I graduated from a good college, top of my class."

"If I don't make it, I don't eat it. I have to make everything from scratch. I can't eat in restaurants. It's just really pathetic and I'm really depressed."

What do the people who made these comments have in common? What devastating condition could they possibly be referring to, the one factor which makes their lives at times akin to a living hell?

The answer is a condition termed "MSG Symptom Complex" by the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology (FASEB), an independent body of scientists sponsored by the U.S. government's Food and Drug Administration (FDA) in September 1992 to review all available data bearing on the safety of the food additive Monosodium Glutamate and related substances. For a full one third of the U.S. population (70 to 75 million Americans), consuming this chemical (as well as the close relative Aspartame, also known as "NutraSweet" and "Equal") [See update article in NEWS DESK about these.] will result in mild to moderate physiological and emotional reactions.

For a small minority of people, accidental ingestion could prove to be severely debilitating and sometimes even life-threatening. What's worse, the New England Journal Of Medicine and Science magazine have both published articles linking Glutamic Acid and other excitatory amino acids (namely Aspartic Acid and L-Cysteine) to the development of various neurological diseases.

The FDA-funded FASEB report was in response to a set of laws on the books designed "to protect the public health, to prohibit the use in food of additives which have not been adequately tested to establish their safety".

In 1958, the Code of Federal Regulations (Title 21) established a Food Additives Amendment which subsequently required that manufacturers show "proof of a reasonable certainty that no harm will result from the proposed use of an additive". This included the Delaney Clause, which demanded a federal ban on any food additive shown to cause cancer when fed to either animals or humans.

At the Fourth Annual NOMSG (National Organization Mobilized to Stop Glutamate) Conference held in Los Angeles in October 1996, members flew in from all over the country to hear lectures by respected doctors, scientists, authors, and activists, receive legislative updates, medical findings, food and nutritional tips, and a chance to gain more information on how to cope with MSG sensitivity. The following attendees agreed to share their unique stories with us:

Erik J. of New Jersey has been experiencing symptoms since college. For a period in excess of 24-hours after ingesting MSG, Aspartame, or sulfites, he develops a cloudy head, faded memory, an inability to concentrate, and excess nervous energy. It has impacted his life enough to motivate this cross-country journey.

Kaye W. of Montana watched her infant daughter react negatively to MSG-infused babyfood back in the 1950s. Her own typical reactions have included stomach aches, swollen abdomen and gums, frequent urination, difficulty in focusing her eyes, and extreme "gallbladder pains" that have lasted for up to a week. In addition, her rectal and genital regions become highly irritated and inflamed, complete with hardening of the tissues and vaginal bleeding. After a particularly serious attack from eating an offensive salad dressing, her doctor even suggested performing a colostomy. After eliminating MSG from her diet, the condition resolved itself completely and surgery was cancelled. She happily lost 20 pounds within 2 months from this change in her food intake.

Natalie M. of Los Angeles suffers severe 12-18 hour migraine headaches that don't hit her until 8-10 hours after she has swallowed MSG. At that point, she can't ingest anything and even regurgitates her own saliva. Her ability to function plummets to zero until the reaction abates. It is a self-described nightmare.

Ten years ago, Pat Conway of Palm Springs, California would meet her mother for lunch every Wednesday at the same Chinese restaurant. By the end of the meal each week, like clockwork, she would become clammy and sick, plagued by diarrhea. Progressively over time, the symptoms became worse: chest pains, heart pounding, depression. The doctor diagnosed her condition as "panic attacks" and accused her of being a hypochondriac. Previously affluent and happily married, this "mystery illness" destroyed her relationship. Eventually she learned that she was acutely sensitive to MSG.

Today, a single bite of food laced with this flavor enhancer will trigger full respiratory arrest for Conway within 30 seconds. At a seafood restaurant, one nibble of shrimp cocktail (which the waitress had assured her contained no MSG) landed her in the hospital emergency room for 4 hours with a heartrate of 200 beats per minute, followed by severe depression.

In another instance, eating a little bag of flavored nuts during an airplane ride resulting in the stewardess having to drop her the oxygen mask. The numerous breathing crises she has endured have caused her to develop asthma. She's moved to a house only two minutes away from the E.R.

The paramedics have been summoned to her rescue so many times that she not only knows them by name, but has begun educating them and the hospital staff on this affliction of which most medical professionals are largely ignorant. She feels it just as necessary to inform the general public, especially those employed in the food service industry. "People who work in restaurants are as much a problem as the problem. Because of my MSG sensitivity, they treat me like a space alien, embarrass me, tell me not to worry. They believe that my allergic response would consist only of a little itching and a few hives."

Los Angeles resident David Livingstone has been taken for a wild ride of his own on the MSG rollercoaster as a result of the food industry's lax attitude toward the problem. In July 1993, during a business lunch, he ordered vegetable soup at a Marie Callender's Restaurant after his waitress represented to him that it was free of monosodium glutamate. He had clearly advised her of his health concerns, after which she assured him that the chefs made all the soups from scratch daily.

Walking back to his office, he felt the symptoms of an asthma attack coming on. His inhaler did not provide him with the usual relief, so he promptly drove over to his primary care physician, who was a close 5 minutes away. Experiencing intense bowel discomfort, diarrhea, and profuse perspiration, it was there that he passed out and went into massive anaphylactic shock (a chemically-induced poisoning of the system), which triggered severe respiratory arrest.

Apparently, the MSG had triggered a response for his lungs to shut down. His doctor began applying CPR, which was then taken over by the paramedics who arrived to transport him to the hospital by ambulance. Once there, he went into full cardiac arrest and lost his pulse for 7 minutes. More CPR was administered, during which time some ribs were cracked.

After being worked on for an hour, David was finally resuscitated and stabilized. For the next 3 days, he was unconscious on a respirator in the Intensive Care Unit, then remained another 3 days in the hospital for observation and treatment. An MRI determined that there was some deadening of the grey matter of his brain due to Hypoxia (lack of blood flow to deliver oxygen). He still remains with a slight neurological deficit.

Back on his feet and more than a bit perturbed, this less-than-satisfied customer returned to the same restaurant to do a bit of investigation. Inquiring about the exact recipe of the vegetable soup, he discovered that it actually contained "beef base", a pasty, tar-like material on whose label MSG was clearly listed as an ingredient. Because soup is hot and liquid, the glutamate it contains is absorbed very quickly into the human system and causes a more severe, immediate reaction.

Because he claims his "near-death experience" was a direct result of Marie Callender's providing him with wrong information, David Livingston initiated, in June 1994, a Products Liability and Misrepresentation Lawsuit against the company. Intending to protect other consumers as well as himself, he feels that “restaurants need to be more proactive in providing information about their food’s internal ingredients to sensitive individuals, especially those who ask.”

Restaurants making false allegations about their use of MSG may just be more the rule than the exception. Jack Samuels, who founded the Illinois-based Truth In Labeling Campaign with his wife Adrienne (both are MSG-sensitive), recounts the tale of an ABC news station in San Diego that investigated 10 different Oriental restaurants, each claiming they didn’t use any MSG. After a laboratory tested food purchased from each venue, the chemical was indicated to be present in all samples. A similar venture pursued by a New York station uncovered an equivalent amount of fraudulent claims by that city’s eateries.

David Livingston and ABC are not alone in their pursuit of honesty and integrity in the culinary MSG minefield: In 1988, a Pasadena, California District Attorney successfully sued Union Foods for mislabeling their Golden Ramen soups as containing “NO MSG”, when in fact it did. Under Section 403 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the FDA has acknowledged that such a practice would be considered deceptive mislabeling of a product. A California Civil Code also permits such a lawsuit if a company makes untrue representations. The Japanese-owned company agreed to pay a $153,000 fine and recall 455,000 cases of the soup.

In December 1994, a Citizen Petition was filed by the Truth In Labeling Campaign (in conjunction with 29 independent citizens, including 10 physicians) requesting the FDA take specific action. It asked that all processed foods be tested for the presence of glutamates and, if present, that MSG be identified and its amount listed in grams on the label.

It’s estimated that the total investment in these testing and relabeling procedures would be around $3 billion, resulting in a price increase of only one quarter cent per product. When the FDA failed to respond within the prescribed 180 days, lawyers for the petitioners filed suit in Federal Court in August 1995. As the FDA first attempted to have the Court dismiss the Complaint, then was withholding important documents and evidence in their possession, the trial date has been continually postponed.

HOLD THE MSG!

If all this uproar over a simple seasoning has taken you by surprise, then pull out your chopsticks and get ready to burst a well-established bubble, for the “Chinese Restaurant Syndrome” has gone international. If you thought the only place you had to exclaim “Hold the MSG!” while ordering a meal was at your local chow mein eatery or egg roll takeout joint, read on. Its presence has spread like a virus, in epidemic proportions, into almost everything we eat (at least anything that’s “convenient”), and we’ve all been fooled.

This article is to shed light on the deleterious effects of Monosodium Glutamate, a dangerous “excitotoxin” which is currently used in some form in almost every single processed, pre-cooked, and pre-packaged food manufactured today, whether frozen, canned, boxed, or dried. Not always detectable by examining the product label, it may be hidden under any one of a number of seemingly innocuous, even wholesome and healthy-sounding ingredients. So buyer beware, as it may not always be where you expect to find it.

A WOLF IN SHEEP’S CLOTHING

If ever there was a wolf in sheep’s clothing, this was it. Until recently, the wool had been pulled securely over the eyes of even this health food advocate, and I was adamant to reverse the damage now that my blindfold had been lifted. I had just finished devouring two incredible books on the subject, and this powerful new knowledge inspired the activist in me to take my first action. Armed with a bag of product “rejects” in one hand and a list of food additives in the other, I ventured into the grocery store and sniffed out the customer service desk, determined to take advantage of the company’s “satisfaction guaranteed or your money back” policy. (Many supermarkets and health food stores have such policies in place, even if the products have been opened or used.)

I knew it would be the first time that a customer returned items because they contained not just MSG, but “hydrolyzed vegetable protein”, “natural flavorings”, “corn syrup”, “barley malt”, or “calcium caseinate”, so I came prepared—documentation close at hand—to explain the whole story should any argument ensue. Surprisingly, the manager quickly and cheerfully refunded my money, casually commenting, “So you’re allergic to MSG, huh?”

Allergic? Tip of the iceberg, I thought. Try brain cell destruction; try Alzheimer’s Disease; try neurodegenerative ailments. If he only knew the extent to which I yearned to spew two volumes worth of statistics, scientific data, and case studies at him like so many cognitive bricks, shattering an ignorance that permeates the food industry and consumers alike. Because although approximately one-third of all Americans are sensitive to MSG consumption, reacting with symptoms running the gamut from fatigue, headaches, nausea, and diarrhea, to heart irregularities, asthma attacks, and depression, the down-and-dirty bottom line of this excitotoxin’s detrimental effects on the human organism is devastatingly simple:

Consumed over a long period of time, in great enough quantities, monosodium glutamate poses a serious threat to one’s physical, mental, and emotional well-being.

Like a cobra curled up in a basket, this toxic substance has insidiously slithered its way into the cuisine of an entire generation and waits, coiled and silent, ready to pounce on even the most unsuspecting victim. Its venom, its poison accumulates invisibly—a predator that may strike now or later, sparing some fortunate individuals, striking others without warning. So, Mr. Grocery Store Manager, no, I’m not allergic to MSG in the classic sense (as far as I know, although I don’t keep track of every headache or bout of minor depression), but yes, I definitely am allergic to death. So give me my money back, please.

AT THE ORIGIN OF FLAVOR

Who would have dreamed that at the root of this whole fiasco was an innocent little piece of seaweed? For thousands of years, Japanese chefs had been spicing up their cuisine by the simple addition of a flavor-enhancing ocean plant called “kombu” or “sea tangle” (Laminaria japonica), which can still be purchased in many specialty or natural foods outlets. A chemistry professor at the Imperial University of Tokyo named Kikunae Ikeda began to investigate this seaweed’s amazing, yet mysterious, qualities, and in 1908 was successful in isolating its active ingredient as the sodium salt of the amino acid Glutamic Acid, or Monosodium Glutamate.

Aware that a potential treasure chest sat bubbling in his test tube, Ikeda quickly patented his newly discovered food secret and teamed up with another enterprising businessman, Saburosukey Suzuki, to form the Ajinomoto Company (literal translation: “At The Origin Of Flavor”). Their intention was to synthesize this substance in the laboratory and introduce it to the world in a massive campaign of development, marketing, and distribution. By 1933, production had escalated to 10 million pounds yearly, and “Ajinomoto” (the term is used interchangeably with MSG) was the Orient’s most popular seasoning.

Its consumption has doubled in every decade since the 1940s, with the United States alone using in excess of 80 million pounds annually. Additionally, this figure fails to include the enormous quantities of hydrolyzed vegetable protein used (an ingredient also produced by the Ajinomoto Co.), which contains between 12-20% MSG and is mixed into everything from canned tuna fish to baby food to those vegetarian meat substitutes you thought were safe. Today, this same company is responsible for manufacturing more than half the world’s supply, and has managed to make it a staple within the processed food and restaurant industries. What wheat is to bread, MSG is to almost anything in a box, bottle, or can.

STOWAWAY IN OUR FOOD SUPPLY

“How can this be?” you ask. You are an avid label reader at the supermarket, and very few products have Monosodium Glutamate listed as an ingredient. Due to the fact that this additive was proven harmful years ago and has a negative reputation in the minds of countless individuals who are highly sensitive to its effects, MSG is cleverly disguised beneath a myriad of deceitful monikers that the average consumer wouldn’t blink twice at. Therefore, under such bland generalizations as “natural flavorings” (which may contain 20-60% MSG), “spices”, “seasonings”, “broth”, “gelatin”, or “bouillon”, one may stumble upon the Glutamate snake coiled up in its basket, waiting to thrust a concoction of unpleasant symptoms onto its unwary dinner guests.

It may be injected into poultry or lurking within the cured tobacco leaves of that cigarette you’re taking drags on. It sneakily snugs within the grains of the myriad baked goods enhanced with malted barley (added to most flour to help it rise) or the yeast used for the same purpose (Red Star Yeast consists of 9-11% MSG).

This free-form Glutamate does occur spontaneously in some whole unadulterated foods, such as tomatoes, mushrooms, potatoes, grapefruit, and parmesan cheese. However, consumer groups want to make it crystal clear that this natural form of free Glutamate is not dangerous and does not cause adverse reactions in people allergic to MSG.

According to Mrs. Wanke, a spokesperson for NOMSG: “The FDA is purposefully clouding the issue and deceiving the public by comparing the naturally-occurring Glutamate found in some foods to the kind that is chemically added or created during processing.” It is the breakdown of proteins during any of a number of manufacturing procedures (pasteurization, fermentation, enzyme modification, hydrolysis, protein fortification, chelation, etc.) which poses the risk to humans.

Jack Samuels of the Truth In Labeling Campaign compares it to breaking apart a pearl necklace, on which is strung a long chain of bonded amino acid beads, after which they fall off into “free form” units and lose their relationship to each other. He relates that “some neuroscientists feel that perhaps hydrolyzed proteins are worse than pure MSG because in effect you’re ingesting a ‘neurotoxic amino acid stew’ containing Aspartic Acid and L-Cysteine as well as Glutamates.”

Most people learn to live with the minor physical reactions, which may occur daily or regularly if one’s diet consists even in part of processed or fast foods. They attribute their discomfort to stress, lack of sleep, the weather, or the flu, coping with the pain by merely popping an aspirin or antacid whenever symptoms strike. In the scheme of things, a cramp here, a wheeze there, an itch or ache elsewhere, may easily be overlooked, but snap together all the pieces of the MSG puzzle and what materializes is the partial crippling of a substantial slice of this planet’s population.

A minimum of 20 million people in the United States, and in excess of 100 million worldwide, experience prominent reactions. Thirty percent of the population will react when given 5 grams MSG (an amount easily consumed in one day of eating convenience foods) and 90% when administered 10 grams.

So why does the FDA continue to allow this substance to inundate our food supply when over 10,000 individual case studies have proven its danger? Because, having an undeniably suspicious allegiance to the large pharmaceutical and chemical industries, the FDA has decided to ignore documented incidents by passing them off as “anecdotal” evidence and, therefore, scientifically invalid. At least four of the eight men on FASEB’s expert panel had conflicts of interest (MSG industry connections), and even though the original study was advertised as an independent review of existing data pertaining to Glutamate’s safety, some important data were omitted, and other data were distorted.

This was not the first time the FDA’s sources were less than impeccable. An early 1970s committee set up to evaluate MSG in baby food included toxicologists from DuPont and Dow Chemical, as well as scientists tied to Gerber Products and the International Mineral and Chemical Corporation (producer of Accent and 80% of the MSG sold in this country). Yet another “expert” had acted as an industry spokesman on behalf of the Grocery Manufacturers’ Association.

WIZARD OF AHHS

An entire economy revolves around the MSG phenomenon, and the multi-billion-dollar industry at stake has a huge investment in protecting its reputation. As most people are aware, addictions are big business, and greedy corporate empires have more than once been known to sacrifice human welfare for the sake of profit.

Whether the fixation is tobacco, alcohol, sugar, sex, or the almighty tastebud, human beings (my friend calls us “pleasure units”) on the warpath toward sensory fulfillment will always be easily manipulated by the propaganda geniuses of our day. So just who is the Wizard of Ahhs (as in: “Ahh, that sure tastes good!”) lurking in the shadows behind the MSG stage show?

The conspiracy to keep consumers in the dark about the hidden forms of MSG and its deleterious nature has been waged by the food industry itself in conjunction with a special

MSG lobby group (so what’s new?) titled The Glutamate Association. Composed of representatives from major U.S. food manufacturers in addition to (surprise, surprise) the Ajinomoto Company, these powerful monied interests have banded together to fight anyone who would dare criticize their precious seaweed derivative. So if their synthesized chemical neurotoxic time bomb happens to interact with your personal human organism in anything less than a fortunate manner, well, that’s just par for the course.

TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

In 1948, the first symposium was held in Chicago to introduce Monosodium Glutamate to such companies in attendance as Campbell’s (as in soups), Nestlé, General Foods, Libby, Borden, Pillsbury, Oscar Meyer, United Airlines, and the National Livestock and Meat Board. The almost-too-good-to-be-true, flavor-enhancing attributes of this substance were described: its ability to intensify existing flavors and increase odor appeal without contributing a strong aftertaste of its own; suppress undesirable bitterness or sourness; remove the tinny taste from canned items; provide a meaty, chicken-like flavor; add zest to low-fat, diet, or bland foods; mask inferiority in quality or freshness; and remove the stale or spoiled taste from frozen or mass-produced meals (as in cafeterias).

Needless to say, the bait was irresistible and the big fish bit. The far-reaching consequences of this eight-hour event to revolutionize American food processing and adversely affect the future health of many millions of its citizens was at that time unforeseen. Over the years, as the use of MSG increased, evidence began trickling into the scientific community that something was gravely wrong. The first case studies were ridiculed, ignored, or swept under the rug. Today, the tragedy of this spiking of the American food supply has become crystal clear.

TOXIC TIME BOMB

Almost 30 years have elapsed since physicians and scientists began publishing well-documented accounts of serious, even life-threatening effects from the ingestion of small amounts of MSG (as served up in a bowl of won-ton soup containing only 2.5-3 grains). In sufficient quantities, it is toxic to everyone (the degree of reaction depends upon individual tolerance levels and dosage), but for those who can’t metabolize it effectively, it acts like a poison that can trigger a combination of gastrointestinal, neurological, and psychological symptoms.

It has a peripheral effect on blood vessels and the lower esophageal sphincter, on the brain and central nervous system. Particularly severe reactions in some individuals can mimic those signaling a stroke (slurred speech, loss of balance) or heart attack (pressure in chest area radiating to the arms and neck); produce disabling, arthritic conditions in the joints and tendons; debilitating migraine headaches; severe hives or rashes appearing to be “atopic dermatitis”; acute asthmatic episodes requiring hospitalization (artificial ventilation and cardiopulmonary bypass); and prolonged attacks of depression requiring psychiatric intervention.

Considering that 100 million persons worldwide suffer from clinically recognized depression (with teenage and childhood suicide rates on a drastic upswing), and that asthma has been identified as “the leading cause of absenteeism among schoolchildren” by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, it’s urgent that health professionals begin considering whether MSG toxicity might in certain cases be the real culprit.

THE SPICE OF DEATH

MSG intolerance is not merely an allergic reaction, but demonstrates a classic toxic reaction, a true drug effect. Technically, it can be classified as a drug since it initiates changes in the physiology and functioning of tissues and organs while fulfilling absolutely no therapeutic purpose. In essence, Monosodium Glutamate works by tricking the body.

In his book In Bad Taste: The MSG Syndrome, author George Schwartz, M.D. describes the substance as a “mouth aphrodisiac”. The brain resembles a television set receiving a variety of signals. MSG placed on the tongue increases the sensitivity of our taste buds and feeling receptors, stimulating electrical discharges and creating a more intense picture.”

In addition, Glutamates act as excitatory neurotransmitters which stimulate brain cell activity. In Excitotoxins: The Taste That Kills, neurosurgeon Dr. Russell Blaylock presents the latest research findings to illustrate how exposure to this class of chemicals (including MSG and other glutamates, Aspartame/Nutrasweet and other aspartates, and cystoic acid/cysteine) can damage cerebral nerve cells: “When neurons are exposed to these substances, they become very excited and fire their impulses very rapidly until they reach a state of extreme exhaustion. Several hours later these neurons suddenly die, as if the cells were excited to death.” In the May 1997 issue of Food Science magazine, contributing writer Shirley Corriher confirms: “there is evidence that glutamic acid is responsible for 75% of the excitatory transmission in the brain.”

What’s more, the devastating implications extend into the realm of our offspring’s health: “Experiments will demonstrate that glutamate and other excitotoxins can alter the way the brain is formed during development.... Exposure to these powerful compounds early in life could cause developmental brain defects that would produce learning difficulties and behavioral problems as the child grows older...[and] may contribute to violent behavior as well.”

Suspicious are mounting that the recent increased incidence of hyperactivity and attention deficit disorder (ADD) in children may be attributed to the widespread use of these toxins as food additives, and they may play a major role as well in a whole group of degenerative brain diseases in adults (especially the elderly) including Parkinson’s, Alzheimer’s, Huntington’s, and Lou Gehrig’s Disease (ALS). Even an FDA-sponsored FASEB report (the scientific panel mentioned earlier) released in July 1995 finally concluded that, due to the controversy relating to the safety of Glutamic Acid, they suggested it prudent that supplements containing MSG not be used by: infants, children, pregnant women, women of childbearing age, and people with affective (mood) disorders. Yet not only did the Food and Drug Administration suppress this finding, they then approved a new chicken pox vaccine containing two sources of the chemical—Glutamic Acid itself, and hydrolyzed gelatin (vegetarian parents take note)—thereby indiscriminately advocating it for the very young as part of a standard, aggressively prescribed medical procedure, when expert opinion exists that it could be dangerous to exactly these recipients. So much for child protection in America, from C-note to shining C-note. Do money and corporate influence ever stop talking? Apparently not.

IN THE MOUTH OF BABES

As far back as the 1950s and ’60s, the data started rolling in. Although I do not condone any kind of vivisection or animal experimentation, I will present some startling observations from which you can draw your own conclusions. I don’t believe these experimental results can necessarily be applied to humans, nor do I believe they are ethical.

One of the first major indicators that implied an MSG-disease link occurred in 1957 when Dr. D. Newhouse and Dr. J. P. Lucas noticed that baby mice forced to ingest glutamates experienced rapid, irreversible destruction of the majority of the nerve cells in the inner layers of the animals’ retina (the visual receptor cells of the eye) within minutes of exposure. Coincidentally, an ophthalmology conference held in Chicago last year (1996) found that people stricken with Glaucoma happen to contain anywhere from 10 to 50 times as much glutamate in their eye tissue as persons without Glaucoma, and their optic nerves are being destroyed at a much faster rate.

In the late 1960s, John W. Olney, M.D., a neuroscientist working at the Dept. of Psychiatry at Washington University in St. Louis, repeated Lucas’ and Newhouse’s experiment on neonatal mice and, upon examining their brains, discovered that specialized cells in the hypothalamus (the area critical for both memory and learning) were destroyed after a single dose of MSG. Brain lesions also appeared in an infant Rhesus monkey.

Obesity, behavioral disturbances, endocrine changes, stunted bodies, seizures, and infertility in the test animals were also reported. (Leading Edge Research makes an interesting comment in their literature on Glutamates: “If MSG could solve the rodent population problem, it could also help solve the population problem for humans—in theory, that is.” Could the spiking of the American food supply with this chemical possibly be contributing to the widespread epidemic amongst men of low sperm count?) In all species tested, immature animals were found to be much more vulnerable to MSG’s toxic effects.

Dr. Olney was shocked to learn that the concentrations of this substance added to commercial baby foods was equal to that which created brain lesions in the experimental models. After the Food and Drug Administration refused to take action, Dr. Olney testified before a Congressional committee and finally succeeded in getting food manufacturers to remove MSG from their infant product lines. Ironically, they simply substituted a more dangerous ingredient in its place: hydrolyzed vegetable protein (HVP), which contains three known excitotoxins. (HVP, though advertised as a safe, natural, plant-based protein, is actually a mixture made from “junk” vegetables unfit for sale.)

The extraction process involves boiling them in a vat of acid, then neutralization with caustic soda. The resulting brown sludge, extremely high in glutamates, is scraped off the top, dried, and sold. Then we eat it. (Yucch!) Shamefully, millions of school children are fed cafeteria meals laced with these poisons on a daily basis, and we wonder why there is a marked decline in scholastic performance, concentration, and discipline in the classroom.

Who is protecting the innocent from this chemical bombardment? According to one government official: “There are no federal regulations or policies which prohibit or limit the use of monosodium glutamate in the National School Lunch program or any of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture’s federally funded programs.” ’Nuf said.

Once again, good conscience must fall on the shoulders of ordinary citizens uniting in grassroots coalitions. The Feingold Association, a children’s advocacy group focused on reducing dangerous color additives in food, wholeheartedly supports NOMSG’s efforts.

Since MSG sensitivity increases with age, we may all eventually find ourselves in a position of having to become food detectives and legislative advocates in the quest for health freedom and personal choice. For now, we have a few courageous individuals to thank for helping to protect the rights of all American citizens—folks like the Samuels in Chicago who are fighting for stringent labeling laws, and like David Livingston who awaits his trial against a major restaurant chain.

Armed with a new understanding after his July 1993 brush with death sparked by that Marie Callender's bowl of soup, he warns all consumers to be aware: "The bottom line is, do you really know what you're putting in your mouth when you buy food? Where it's been, how it's been processed, what it has gone through to get to your plate? The answer is that, especially at restaurants—moreso than with food you buy at supermarkets, where at least you have a listing of the ingredients—you really have no clue."

Let's take a clue from these pure food pioneers. Become an informed, discriminating consumer. Take action, take control, take charge of your future and your health!

was in charge of creating the federal recognition process in 1978—the exceedingly long and demeaning process whereby the government dictates the terms and conditions that must be met for a tribe to be officially recognized, and thus eligible for federal funds—has said: [Quoting]

I created a monster.... The B.I.A. and other federal agencies had 35 definitions of Indians. Nobody's ever clearly defined what a tribe is. I wrote the damn things and I didn't know what a tribe was, so for God's sake, what have you got.... You had dueling historians and dueling genealogists and it got to be a joke, a serious joke. The standards got to be impossible.... There's a conflict of interest there...[because] the government doesn't want any more Indians....[End quote]

Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs, Kevin Gover, recently told a coalition of 23 tribes that the B.I.A. "was meant to fail—to see that the tribes disappear." Gover admitted that there are "more than 300,000 mismanaged accounts [for individual Indians] that total upwards of $500 million." But he promised that things are getting better: "The Bureau is poised to serve Indian country in a more responsive and effective manner."

Is the B.I.A. somehow going to straighten itself out? Are we to believe that the foxes are now going to make things better for the hens—especially after they have been successfully devouring them for so many years? This is just more whitewash and lies, and until real and meaningful change is made in the U.S. Government's policies and relations with regard to the Native Americans, they can only expect more of the same.

Wampanoag Indian Chairwoman Beverly Wright said of Kevin Gover's speech: "We have these people who come to our tribe to sell us products. That is what his speech reminded me of." Tribal leaders said they have been hearing about a new and improving B.I.A. for years.

When the B.I.A. states that their "priority is to support and enhance tribal government" they fail to state for whose benefit. When one reads such a statement, it appears on the surface that what is meant is to enhance tribal government for the benefit of the Indian tribe—but nothing could be further from the truth. Shouldn't the Indians be accorded the opportunity to have their own traditional governments if that is what they want?

The U.S. Government established the reservations, and then put the B.I.A. in charge of setting up tribal councils for all the tribes. Under the 1934 Indian Reorganization Act (I.R.A.), the Indian Nations were reorganized by having their traditional governmental structures replaced by tribal councils directly patterned after a corporate board. Although not openly disclosed, the real reason for this has been to facilitate outside corporations (like oil, gas, coal, gold, and uranium companies) being able to

Native American Perspectives:

Toward Sovereign Indian Nations

2/22/00 RAY BILGER

Prior to the arrival of the Europeans on these shores, the native, indigenous tribes of America were sovereign by nature. They conducted their own affairs, as they had done for thousands of years, living in harmony with the Great Spirit and All of Creation, and depended upon no other source of power to uphold their acts of government.

From the earliest beginnings of relations between the U.S. Government and the Indigenous American Nations, those relations were "sovereign government" to "sovereign government". Dealings between the U.S. Government and the Indigenous American Nations went through the same treaty process as European or other sovereigns, such as Great Britain or Germany or France.

However, by 1876 the U.S. Supreme Court had clearly acknowledged that "the acquisition of territory has been the moving cause of all Indian treaties" (U.S. v. Forty Three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U.S. 188). Statements to the contrary avoid this simple truth and make excuses for barbaric and oppressive government actions which persist to this day. For the most part, no really meaningful government recognition of Native rights was present then or now.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs (B.I.A.) was created in 1824 as part of the War Department.

This leaves little doubt as to the real purpose for its creation. In 1849 the B.I.A. was transferred to the Department of the Interior, but there was no substantive change in the overall policy toward the original inhabitants of this land.

Today, the B.I.A.'s Mission Statement claims they are working "to enhance the quality of life, to promote economic opportunity, and to carry out the responsibility to protect and improve the trust assets of American Indians.... Our priority is to support and enhance tribal government." The facts, however, paint quite a different picture.

With the B.I.A. managing hundreds of millions of dollars of tribal trust assets, why have places like the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation (Oglala Lakota Sioux) in South Dakota suffered with 80% unemployment, ramshackle housing, and hunger, for decades? And the situation is the same on reservation after reservation. How does this equate with "enhancing the quality of life?"

The Indians gave up their lands through treaties, in exchange for continuing concessions from the U.S. Government. The truth of the matter is that those trust assets have been mismanaged in case after case. Why? Because the U.S. Government doesn't want any more Indians. They would like nothing more than to see the Indians just dry up and blow away with the wind.

John "Bud" Shapard, the B.I.A. official who lease Indian lands.

Well, the Indian Nations got reorganization whether they wanted it or not. On the Pine Ridge Reservation, quite a number of dead people somehow managed to vote for reorganization. After this was revealed and documented, the votes were allowed to stand and reorganization proceeded.

On the Hopi Reservation in Arizona, 85% of the Indians opposed and actively boycotted the vote for reorganization. Their abstentions were counted as “yes” votes. The list of such examples could be extended, but doesn’t anybody find something just a bit unjust about all of this?

The tribal councils set up by the B.I.A. consist of Indians who are paid well for being on the councils, while other Indians on the reservations get nothing. This arrangement helps to create dissention between those Indians who have and those who have not. It is the old game of divide and conquer. Those on the councils want to keep their income, and so they “go along to get along”—allowing the leasing of prime reservation land to large corporations for next to nothing, while millions of dollars of profit flow off of Indian lands.

The Hopi and the Navajo in Arizona don’t want the Peabody Coal Company (a subsidiary of Lehman Brothers) raping and destroying Mother Earth for millions of dollars in profits. But they now have virtually no say over the very sacred land that is supposed to be theirs—land given to their care by the Great Spirit. The B.I.A. wants to evict them off of their lands because of fabricated “irreconcilable” tensions between the two tribes.

Do you remember the Indian protests of the 1970s? In 1973, 200 members of the American Indian Movement (A.I.M.) occupied the village of Wounded Knee (on the Pine Ridge Reservation) for 69 days, demanding a U.S. Senate investigation into the condition of Native Americans. The Oglala Sioux were protesting the continuing injustices to their people and the government’s violation of their treaty rights under the 1868 Treaty. But, to this day, there have still been no real substantive policy changes on Pine Ridge.

By the way, if you have not yet done so, you should go out and rent the video of the excellent 1992 TriStar Pictures movie, Thunderheart, which is a very serious dramatization of events in the 1970s on the Pine Ridge Reservation. This is a disturbing yet powerful movie that embraces the real spirit of the Indian people, seldom seen by non-Indians. This is a must-see movie.

Tensions continued throughout the 1970s as Indians continued to demand their rights to have the treaties honored. And—just as we still find today—mysterious deaths of Indians were rampant. As former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark pointed out: “In March of 1975 alone, seven Indians were killed [at Pine Ridge], their deaths going virtually uninvestigated despite the presence of an army of F.B.I. agents and other federal, state, and tribal lawmen.”

What was not revealed publicly, however, was the fact that, on the same day of the shoot-out at the Jumping Bull Ranch (on Pine Ridge), on June 26, 1975 (where two F.B.I. agents were killed), one-eighth of the Pine Ridge Reservation was transferred to U.S. uranium- and gold-mining interests! With Pine Ridge being over 1.7 million acres, that translates to over 220,000 acres, or 347 square miles, given over to the raping of Mother Earth! And who do you suppose gets all the profits that are realized? Remember—there is still rampant poverty and 80% unemployment on Pine Ridge.

The two F.B.I. agents who were killed had chased a pick-up truck onto the isolated ranch where there was an Indian family with small children. What happened immediately after the shoot-out at Jumping Bull has aptly been called “The Reign of Terror”.

The Tribal Council President, Dick Wilson, and his vigilante, self-termed “GOON Squad”, along with more than 300 combat-clad F.B.I. agents, armored vehicles, and helicopters, turned the reservation upside down in their search to find those responsible for the deaths of the agents.

Ramsey Clark doesn’t hold back from pointing a finger directly at the U.S. Government: “With government complicity, a rogue paramilitary group that proudly called itself the GOONs—Guardians Of the Oglala Nation—were provided with weapons, training, and motivation to create a wave of violence...against traditional Indian people and their supporters.”

Former Director of the Rocky Mountain Regional Office of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, William F. Muldrow, recalls what happened next:

[Quoting]

The Commission on Civil Rights immediately began to receive calls from reservation residents regarding abuses by the F.B.I. As a Civil Rights Analyst for the Commission, I was sent up to observe and report on the happenings. Terror reigned. Roadblocks were set up and all vehicles were stopped and searched. There were reports of numerous incidents of isolated farmhouses being surrounded by military vehicles, with a helicopter overhead, and the occupants ordered by megaphones to leave their homes. More firsthand accounts told of agents with automatic weapons breaking down doors to search houses without warrants.

Joe Stuntz, an Indian, was also killed during the shoot-out, but no charges or arrests were ever made in connection with his death....

In the period which followed, Anna Mae Aquash, a Canadian citizen, who was seen as a key witness, and who was allegedly threatened and abused by the F.B.I., was found shot to death and her body dumped in a ravine. An F.B.I.-ordered autopsy failed to reveal the large bullet wound in the back of her head, leading to more criticism of the F.B.I. and their methods.... [Between 1973 and 1976] there were over 60 unsolved murders on the reservation for which the investigatory responsibility lay with the F.B.I.

[End quoting]

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is an independent, fact-finding agency of the federal government. It collects and studies information related to the denial of civil rights and makes recommendations for corrective action.

Charged with the murder of those two F.B.I. agents was A.I.M. member Leonard Peltier, an artist and writer, well known for his non-violent style of defending Indian rights. And, although all of the available evidence points overwhelmingly to Peltier’s innocence, the F.B.I. needed (and apparently still needs) a scapegoat, so Leonard sits today in Leavenworth for a crime he didn’t commit. Now well known around the world, Peltier has been called the Nelson Mandela of the American Indian people. (See Peltier’s book, Prison Writings—My Life Is My Sun Dance, published by St. Martin’s Press, Spring 1999.)

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, in a Memorandum to the U.S. Justice Department, reported that the F.B.I. was an extraneous force on the Pine Ridge reservation, and that the agents had no understanding of Indian ways. It was noted that the F.B.I.’s actions were seen as biased and the source of much tension and controversy. Although the Commission recommended that the F.B.I. be relieved of its responsibility to investigate felonies on the reservation, that recommendation has never been implemented.

Since the F.B.I. is an agency of the government that set up the reservations (and does not want any more Indians), the same government that put the corrupt B.I.A. in charge of installing the “tribal councils”—why would anyone expect the F.B.I. to support the Indians and their rights? It seems only too obvious that they are there to cover-up the truth and help perpetuate the injustice. They appear to be the enforcers for big business and the government (essentially the same conglomerate in this case). Still think brutality against Native Americans is a thing of the past?

On January 16, 2000, about 100 traditional Oglala Sioux protesters peacefully occupied the Red Cloud Tribal Building on the Pine Ridge Reservation, demanding, among other things, the ouster of Tribal Treasurer Wesley “Chuck” Jacobs, a White man. The Indians have had enough. Jacobs has been accused of the mismanagement of $7-$9 million.

Considering the highly tense atmosphere, the situation has remained relatively calm. On Monday, January 31, a turbulent and rocky council meeting got underway at the Billy Mills

Hall in Pine Ridge Village. The meeting was expected to continue through Friday, February 4. On the first day, the treasurer was suspended. Since he was only suspended, the protesters said they would stay in the Red Cloud Building until he was removed permanently.

The second day of the council meeting lasted only two hours. Councilman Floyd Brings Plenty introduced a motion to suspend the tribal president for misappropriation of funds. Tribal President Harold Dean Salway immediately adjourned the session, declaring that no business could be conducted with council members and audience members disrupting the proceedings. Council members were stunned by Salway's action.

This was the second time Salway adjourned a meeting when a motion for his suspension was introduced. The last time was on November 23, 1999. Councilman Gerald Big Crow said Salway's move today was enough to consider impeachment. So much for the B.I.A.-installed tribal council being a body representative of the Indians' needs and interests. Salway certainly appears to be working for someone else.

We shall watch and see how that situation unfolds and sorts itself out. The county where Pine Ridge is located is still the poorest county in the United States, even with all that vast mineral wealth beneath their feet!

At the meeting mentioned earlier, that Assistant Secretary of the Interior Kevin Gover had with 23 tribes, Gover fielded questions after his speech. But the tribal leaders were not interested in talking about the B.I.A.'s plans to "fix" the trust fund accounts. They wanted to talk about self-governance issues, and the lack of response from the B.I.A. concerning this.

Many tribes now want to initiate a self-governance policy in which they would assume complete control over how federal monies are spent for their tribes. That would be something new, for they have never been allowed to do so before. However, working out a self-governance policy with the B.I.A. has been nearly impossible.

Wampanoag Chairwoman Beverly Wright asked why, in the last two years since her tribe voted for self-governance, have they not had even one meeting with the B.I.A. about this? Gover said he was unaware of the issue, but promised to look into it. More lies and empty promises?

The Native Americans have never wanted tribal councils imposed on them by the U.S. Government. They had functioned and lived very well for thousands of years without the White man's government, so why would they suddenly want it now?

The answer, quite simply, is that the U.S. Government does not want the Native American tribes to truly grasp the idea that they are Sovereign Nations which don't need the U.S. Government. Rather, the Indians are supposed to believe and consider themselves a dependant people.

As you can see, there are ample reasons why the American Indian nations might want to again become Independent Sovereign Nations, like France or Germany.

Up in northwest Montana, things were pretty much the same on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation—with ramshackle housing, unnecessary poverty, 50% unemployment, and a corrupt tribal council mismanaging funds. But the Blackfoot people (this is their true name; it was the White man who told them they must be called Blackfeet because there are more than one of them) have had enough, and began to initiate change which has now resulted in the Blackfoot Nation issuing a Declaration Of Independence from Canada and the United States.

But we need to back up here to set the stage for this momentous event. It is important to realize that the situation with respect to the Blackfoot people is just a bit different than it is for other Indians. The 1851 treaty, which established the boundaries of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, was not signed by any Blackfoot. In fact, there was not even one Blackfoot present for any of the treaty negotiations! But the federal government didn't seem to notice, or at least they didn't seem to mind.

By 1855, however, further treaty negotiations were held, but this time only four Blackfoot band chiefs were present to (supposedly) represent thousands of Indians (see The Blackfeet, by John C. Ewers, copyright 1958, by the University of Oklahoma Press). It seems doubtful, however, that those four chiefs could comprehend the magnitude of what they were agreeing to.

But now the Blackfoot people have had enough of broken treaties, empty promises, and the corruption of the White man's imposed "tribal business council". On December 14, 1999, The Blackfoot Nation formally submitted their Declaration Of Independence to the U.S. Government and the Canadian Government.

The Governor General of Canada (the Head of State, equivalent to the U.S. Secretary of State) personally called a leader of the Blackfoot Nation to acknowledge their announcement, and expressed her personal apologies at not being able to attend an upcoming event related to this Declaration.

President Bill Clinton has been requested to call the Blackfoot Nation and congratulate them, but to date there has been no response from Washington, D.C. Perhaps his acknowledgment might be seen as a "green light" to other tribes that they too might seek freedom from the oppressive federal government.

The American Indians are treated like slaves, with what is rightfully theirs stolen from them every day. They are the worst treated people in America, and they always have been (see my book, The Untold History Of America, page 67). Even the Black slaves were given their freedom in 1865. But the Indians remain slaves on the reservations—there to be exploited by the big corporations, and to live in poverty to remind them constantly how they are less than human (remember, even our Constitution still considers them so).

Perhaps what the Blackfoot people are doing is what we need at this time—Sovereign Indian Nations (free from any connection to the corrupt White man's government) showing us the way we can begin to live again in harmony and balance with Mother Earth and with All Creation. They can set an example for the rest of us, of how we can clean up the land, and the rivers, the lakes, the streams, the air we breathe, and the water we drink.

Think back for a moment. We have already seen what the White man has done with the environment in the short time we have been on this continent. Surely the Indian's example can be no worse. The example they originally gave us, when the Europeans first came here, was a land of pristine lakes and rivers that were the source of fresh drinking water, unspoiled breathtaking vistas of natural beauty, and pure clean air to breathe—surely unlike what the Europeans had left behind to come here.

We need to look at this new development in a positive light, for that is the atmosphere in which the Blackfoot people are attempting to move as they take a stand to define and shape their own destiny.

Long Standing Bear Chief is one of the leaders of the Blackfoot Nation responsible for submitting the Declaration Of Independence. Although the word Chief is part of his name, he says he is not actually a Chief. You can find out more about him and the Blackfoot Nation at the www.blackfoot.org website.

Long Standing Bear Chief consented to be interviewed about the Blackfoot Nation, why the Declaration Of Independence, and why now, about life on the Blackfeet Reservation, and about his hopes and dreams for the future. In the next segment of this series we will share some of that interview.

Let us close with some appropriate words of wisdom from an unknown Native American source:

[Quoting]

I know that all must be brought into the Sacred Hoop for it to be mended. I often wonder how we will bring those who do not see even the simplest of Circles into the greatest Circle of all. Then I remember it is a thing that has been promised by Spirit. That is how I know it will come to be.

[End quoting]

These are times of great change and purification on a planetary scale. It should probably thus not come as a surprise that the Native peoples of the American continent may play a pivotal role in this Season of Renewal and Healing.

A Fancy Trail Of Money Laundering By Greenspan, Bush & The Twiglets

Editor's note: The following information was assembled by our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, from the sightings.com website. It is not likely this data will be part of the dizzying verbiage parade by the implicated presidential candidates that is already monopolizing the major media outlets.

THE REPUTED COCAINE BANK MONEY LAUNDRY WIZARD FOR GEORGE BUSH FAMILY
ARRESTED IN CHICAGO

The reputed cocaine bank money laundry wizard for former President George Herbert Walker Bush and two of his sons has been arrested in Chicago. The matter is tied as well, reportedly, to corrupt top IRS officials, Chicago Region Office, fingered by our work.

Giorgio Pelossi, a prominent Swiss accountant, was arrested January 20, 2000, at O'Hare International Airport, after officials of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) found he was wanted on an international arrest warrant issued in Milan, Italy, about a year previously. Pelossi, 61, was somehow actually traveling under his own name. His name showed up on a passenger manifest in a routine check provided to officials of the INS. (Savvy sources, however, dispute that it was so "routine", but was rather a follow-up of matters outlined in our TV documentary, 11/29/99.)

In his appearance before a Federal Magistrate in Chicago, Pelossi agreed not to oppose being sent back to Italy by extradition. Pelossi signed papers in Chicago's Federal District Court waiving his right to a hearing in Chicago.

Pelossi is reportedly the cocaine bank money laundry expert for the former president and two of his sons, Texas Governor George W. Bush and Florida Governor Jeb Bush. Some claim that the matter also reportedly implicates the other son, Neil Bush, who escaped federal prison through a reputedly corrupt arrangement upon the downfall of Denver-based Silverado Savings & Loan Association, an apparent CIA proprietary operation of which Neil Bush was an official. Some contend Silverado, at the hands of Neil Bush, was likewise a money laundry for illicit funds, including reportedly narcotics trafficking.

For a year or more now, journalists and commentators in Spain have been writing and talking about the Elder Bush and two of his sons, George W. and Jeb, being reportedly implicated in billions of dollars of dope money laundered through banks in Spain, Italy, Mexico, and the United States. The cocaine banking cartel, for which Pelossi reportedly was the kingpin and brains, was centered in Milan and Barcelona. According to stories, some date-lined Rome, in December, 1995, by Reuters, United Press International, and other news and law enforcement personnel, Italian authorities contended they had proof leading them to assert that the Archbishop of Barcelona was implicated with the Vatican Bank and others in a vast money laundry ring reportedly involving, among others:

[1] FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CICERO (a Chicago suburb, Al Capone land, a long-known mafia enclave). Later it became the flagship of PINNACLE BANC GROUP. Still later, to confuse matters, the bank was called Old Kent Bank, a unit whose head office is Grand Rapids, Michigan. Pinnacle was the successor and alter ego to the mysterious, scandal-wrecked BANK OF CREDIT AND COMMERCE INTERNATIONAL, which supposedly (although not actually) went under in 1991. BCCI was a reputed assassination and espionage funding apparatus for various intelligence agencies, including the American CIA, the French CIA, and Israel's The Mossad (The Institute).

Bishop Paul Marcinkus, head of the VATICAN BANK until 1991, was also the dominant force controlling First National Bank of Cicero. Marcinkus was originally from Cicero and ran a church there. Marcinkus fled the Vatican, sheltering himself with his Vatican passport, when Italian authorities sought to grill him and possibly prosecute him for various criminal offenses he reportedly committed as Vatican Bank chief. He returned to the U.S. and lives in Sun City, Arizona.

[2] Roger D'Onofrio, an American CIA official with dual citizenship, U.S. and Italy, living near Naples, Italy. Italian authorities, in the wire service and other stories of December, 1995, described him as the CIA's secret paymaster in Italy to fund political assassinations of those not liked by the American CIA, and to pay-off or destroy opposition parties in the Italian government.

The Pelossi-Marcinkus-D'Onofrio ring reportedly, through Vatican Bank and other financial institutions, trafficked in smuggled gold, osmium nuclear bomb triggers, high quality counterfeit foreign currencies, and other illicit goods and services. With the corrupt connivance of top officials of the INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, Chicago Region office, Pelossi reportedly arranged the laundering of billions of dollars through concealed and dummy accounts, reportedly in the following banks (among others, and for and on behalf reportedly of George W. Bush, Jeb Bush, and the Elder Bush, their father): HARRIS BANK OF CHICAGO, and their Foreign Exchange section, called ForEx, a unit of BANK OF MONTREAL owned principally by the whiskey-soaked Bronfman family (Seagrams booze, Cineplex Odeon movie theater chain, as well as numerous operations of records-entertainment in California).

The former major owner of Harris Bank, now also a major stockholder of the Bank of Montreal, is U.S. Sen. Peter Fitzgerald (R-IL). Harris Bank/Bank of Montreal are interlocked with the worldwide Mexican bank cartel, Grupo Financiero Bancomer. In May, 1998, Bancomer pleaded guilty to U.S. federal criminal charges of vast dope money laundering. They tried to whitewash the matter with an explanation on their www.bancomer.com website.

Bancomer has operated in the U.S. through branches in Los Angeles and New York. Their attempt to open a branch in Chicago was opposed by one or more City of Chicago Alderman who referred to the Bancomer criminal guilty plea. Yet, the Federal Reserve apparently is ready to let Bancomer operate throughout the U.S. in various units.

Bancomer is not only reportedly implicated in the Russian embezzlement caper, where many billions of dollars disappeared or were laundered. They also are reportedly implicated in the ring of which Pelossi has been the brains and kingpin, for the Bush Family and others, in Portugal, Spain, Italy, and elsewhere, including Morocco and Colombia.

Harris Bank also has secret and dummy accounts of reputed terrorist Osama bin Laden. His concealed accounts are reportedly jointly with Sharon Percy Rockefeller, top official in Washington, D.C. of PBS, and her family. She is the wife of U.S. Senator John D. Rockefeller IV (D-WV). Her family reportedly are in the construction business with bin Laden. (President Clinton says he cannot “find” reputed terrorist bin Laden’s accounts to freeze them. Really?)

In October, 1998, we confronted top officials of Harris Bank in Chicago with their secret accounts of the mysterious $50 million of federal agency funds originally parked with Household Bank, which merged with Harris Bank. The funds, belonging to Joseph Andreuccetti, were secretly transferred without his permission to Little Rock, Arkansas, to try to cover up the embezzlement of Madison Guaranty S&L, for which Bill and Hillary Clinton are subject to federal criminal prosecution for stealing bank funds.

REPUBLIC NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK: The bank is a reputed money laundry for smuggled gold as used by the intelligence agencies, such as the American CIA. The principal owner of the Bank, Edmond J. Safra, was murdered in December, 1999, supposedly by the acts and doings of his purported male “nurse”, an unstable former member reportedly of the Green Berets, apparently part of one of their “hit” teams. As to the murder of Safra, visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website and see the story “Murder In The Gold Market” as well as the update.

The arrest of Giorgio Pelossi is apparently just another event related to our one-hour public-access cable TV documentary cablecast within Chicago to some 400,000 viewers on November 29, 1999. Our program, called Broadsides, showed pictures of an ocean-going boat, renamed California Rose—a reputed traveling money laundry, plying between Mexico, through the Caribbean, including stopping at the Dutch Island of St. Maartens, a dope laundry haven, and then on to Portugal and Spain.

The boat, as we stated, is a reported gambling casino, apparently owned and operated by current, recently current, and former top U.S. INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE officials, Chicago Region Office. For some twenty years, they reportedly operated a dope traffic “immunity” zone in a western suburb of Chicago, four large buildings called Kingspoint Condominiums. The buildings, originally owned by Joseph Andreuccetti, were seized by the corrupt IRS officials, NOT for the public treasury, BUT FOR THEIR OWN PERSONAL INTEREST. Andreuccetti was kept in an apparent fraudulent INVOLUNTARY bankruptcy for almost 14 years, at the connivance of First National Bank of Cicero and the nephew and godson of Bishop Paul Marcinkus.

Reportedly participating in all this was Congressman Henry Hyde (R-IL) who lived near Kingspoint.

For details, see the three-part series “Corrupt IRS Officials Face Exposure In Dope Bust”. Part 3 has pictures of the IRS boat. Visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website.

Our sending six heavy volumes of corruption documents to the Inspector General of the U.S. Treasury apparently caused the dope bust situation in January, 2000, as well as the arrest of Pelossi.

Pelossi is reportedly interwoven with the German political scandal that has tarred former Chancellor Helmut Kohl and his conservative political party, the Christian Democratic Union. Pelossi, according to published reports, has provided German prosecutors with information about alleged pay-offs to German political figures.

(The Chicago Sun-Times on January 27, 2000, had a much-censored, watered-down story about Pelossi leaving out many details that the presslords are well aware are involved about the Bush family and the corrupt IRS.)

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY BRIBES & AIDS BUSH IN GOLD SWINDLES PART 1

More than three hundred reportedly authentic secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records show how the Chairman of America’s private central bank has apparently bribed and aided in corrupt deeds George Herbert Walker Bush and his family, all over a period of time. Later, Greenspan, reportedly jointly with Bush and a swarm of major financial entities, derived a horrific benefit in a major gold swindle.

In clandestine meetings, over a period of months, the reportedly genuine documents were turned over to our research and investigation group by government officials clearly in an inside position to possess and confirm such data.

A conversation at one such meeting: “Tell Sherman, if you or he ever reveals our identity, we are all dead, every one of us. Also in jeopardy of life and limb would be more than eight others in key government and financial positions.” Some of the records purport to have the wire transfer signature of A. Greenspan whose term as Commissar of the Federal Reserve was renewed in the new century. Because he is like a corrupt Soviet dictator, answerable to no one, we coined the term “Alan Redspan”.

The document delivery team was assured of confidentiality by our past record. As the founder/chairman of our group, Citizen’s Committee To Clean Up The Courts, since 1963, I have been imprisoned some eight times in four decades, not for committing crimes, but for so-called “contempt of court”, for refusing to reveal the identity of long-reliable sources of high-level corruption data turned over to us on the sly. Our sources, cross-checked with others, and backed-up by over one million documents already in our possession, have enabled us, over a period of decades, to spotlight what some describe as the biggest judicial bribery scandals in U.S. history.

Briefly stated, this includes the downfall we caused in 1969, of Illinois’ highest tribunal, the Illinois Supreme Court, with half the high court being put to the wall. In the 1970s, our work led to the jailing for bribery of the highest level sitting federal judge in U.S. history, a federal appeals judge in Chicago, who had also been former State Governor, and his aide, former head of the Illinois Department of Revenue, the tax collectors. 7th Circuit Federal Appeals Judge Otto Kerner, Jr. went on all the media and said “Skolnick is a liar”. Kerner died an ex-convict, convicted as I accused him to his face, as is our long-time policy.

From 1983 to 1993, our work set off a series of scandals, by which 20 local judges and 40 lawyers were sent to prison for bribery, including the Chief Judge of the Traffic Court, who in a taped interview said: “Mr. Skolnick, you are imagining things, there is no corruption in this courthouse.”

The Federal Reserve wire transfer data, which is also corroborated by matters already in our possession, among other things, confirms the following:

[1] That George Herbert Walker Bush, starting back at the time he was Vice President and continuing long thereafter, reportedly corruptly benefitted from billions and billions of dollars transferred at the behest, of among others, Alan Greenspan, to private corporations worldwide, in which the Elder Bush apparently has a beneficial interest, and/or is a major stock or bond holder, and/or is a kingpin therein, in other capacities. Included are enterprises in Saudi Arabia, North Korea, Hong Kong, Denmark, England, Red China, Taiwan, Japan, and Germany, among others. Some of the purported secret wire transfers of massive amounts were jointly for the Elder Bush and his brother, Prescott, a financial broker in New England. According to published accounts, Prescott Bush arranged vast, unsavory deals with the Japanese mafia, the Yakuza, as well as dictator-types in Red China, including reportedly with the top officials of the Red Chinese Secret Police (who also operate greatly in North America).

[2] Holding as well a large beneficial interest, and/or as major stock or bond holder in those accounts has been Jackson Stephens, the Little Rock, AR-based bond broker, largest such operation outside of Wall Street. Stephens, tied reportedly to the ethnic Chinese gangsters like the Riady family interwoven with Clinton and Ollie North and the dope traffic, has been a major backer of Sludge Willie. The nefarious worldwide reputed corrupt deals of the Stephens family have been covered up by Alan Redspan and what some call the highly secretive, conspiratorial Federal Reserve.

[3] Some of the firms and enterprises, to which the massive wire transfer assets were sent, are reportedly CIA proprietary operations set up by Bush as the head and former head of America's secret political police. (Now a Chicago-based bankruptcy expert, William A. Brandt, Jr., has been a worldwide expert in quietly terminating CIA proprietaries once their espionage function is completed, as shown by documents released under Freedom of Information by the U.S. Justice Department. Brandt's activities overlapped those of the Elder Bush.)

[4] Some of the billions and billions of dollars of reputed wire transfers went for the beneficial interest of the Elder Bush, and his son Neil, an official of a CIA proprietary, disguised as Denver-based Silverado Savings & Loan Association. The S & L went under and Neil Bush should have been sent to prison for causing the downfall by reportedly misusing large amounts of federally-insured thrift agency funds. On the other hand, as accused in stories in the press in Spain, the Elder Bush and his sons George W. Bush (Texas Governor) and Jeb Bush (Florida Governor) and Jeb's wife, a native of Colombia, are reportedly incriminated through huge money laundering of dope proceeds through banks owned by criminals in Spain—dope proceeds reportedly from Colombia, Morocco, Portugal, and Italy. We publicized the quiet arrest in Chicago in January, 2000, of the reputed Bush family cocaine bank money laundry wizard, Giorgio Pelossi, a prominent Swiss accountant. (Visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website for the details.)

The Elder Bush has been with the CIA since at least 1959, when he helped set up Zapata Petroleum Co., later called Zapata Offshore, with upwards of 600 branches worldwide in international hotspots for the reported purpose of gathering intelligence for the spy agency. Some news sources have contended that Zapata's offshore drilling rigs, located beyond the U.S. jurisdiction limit, are reported centers for transferring large quantities of illicit drugs and other contraband.

[5] Some of the reportedly huge secret wire transfers were for or with the Elder Bush jointly with the Queen of England, through her accounts in the British Monarchy's Coutts Bank, London. The secret account numbers are contained in some of the more than 300 apparently authentic Federal Reserve wire transfer records. The British Monarchy has long been accused of being worldwide kingpins in the narcotics traffic, going back over 150 years, starting with the Opium Wars in China.

[6] Others of the more than 300 documents relate to a situation started in the 1970s, when the Elder Bush arranged to overthrow the Iraqi government by political assassination. Bush helped install Saddam Hussein.

Others of those and other documents relate to the decade 1980 to 1990, when the Elder Bush was a secret private business partner of Saddam Hussein in extorting billions of dollars per year from the weak sheikdoms in the Persian Gulf oil industry kick-backs to supposedly assure security. A little-known Federal lawsuit in Chicago dealt with the secret partner of Saddam Hussein—namely George Herbert Walker Bush.

I and my associates were the only journalists attending the federal appeals court hearing. I later did an exclusive group of interviews with the participants, confirming that Bush and Saddam were private business partners in extortion of the sheikdoms. Only one populist paper dared publish the details, in 1991, of my interviews on the federal case.

In a typical sort of falling-out of business partners, Bush suckered Saddam Hussein into seizing a portion of Kuwait long challenged by Saddam as being an Iraqi province and part of Saddam's oilfields. Bush used a top U.S. official to mislead Saddam into thinking the U.S. would not intervene in this local quarrel with the former British colony. Bush was the one, on behalf of U.S. oil drilling interests, who helped develop the Kuwaiti oilfields, following the 1961 relinquishing of British sovereignty. In its simplest form, the 1990-91 Persian Gulf conflict was a falling-out of private business partners.

The result of this treachery? Great loss of life of ordinary soldiers. Upwards of 150 thousand young Iraqis died in the conflict, some buried alive by U.S. war bulldozers. President Bush ordered U.S. warplanes to shoot, in the back, the retreating Iraqi soldiers proceeding under a white flag of surrender. It was the most horrendous murder of surrendering troops in world history. The German massacre of some 80 U.S. troops surrendering in World War II, during the Battle of the Bulge, was a small matter by comparison. (Our public-access cable-TV program in 1991 was about the only TV show in America that dared discuss this matter.)

Following the Persian Gulf War, some 15,000 U.S. troops died from the mysterious malady called Gulf War Syndrome which the Pentagon denies is happening. Ex-GIs continue to die from the strange ailments, and the total deaths and debilitating diseases amount to more than 20% of casualties of all the Americans serving in the military in the Persian Gulf in 1990-91, more than 100,000 American soldiers.

Having been apparently massively bribed and aided in corrupt deeds over a period of years, the Elder Bush owed Alan Redspan and others important favors. Bush has been a potentate, in one form or another, with Canadian Barrick Gold. The Bank of England, jointly with the Queen of England who reportedly shared accounts with the Elder Bush at Coutts Bank, London, and three or more major financial entities, orchestrated a vicious attack on gold in 1999. Together, they drove down the price of gold to about $252 per ounce, more than $30 per ounce BELOW THE COST OF PRODUCTION of the most efficient gold mines, such as in Canada.

Reportedly helping this unlawful attack on gold, gold mines, and gold mine workers, forbidden by U.S. anti-trust laws, have been the following, among others:

- Goldman Sachs, one of the world's largest bond and gold trading houses. Cynics, knowing these facts, call them "Goldman Sucks". Goldman Sachs has been so much into short selling deals of gold that, in the October, 1999 gold crisis, they were reportedly considering invoking the contract provision called "Force Majeure" used to avoid complying with a contract because of wars, hurricanes, revolutions, and such. The Federal Reserve has, through various dirty tricks, bailed out Goldman Sachs repeatedly.

- Bank of America (long ago called Bank of Italy, in America), big in foreign exchange trading, called ForEx; they were reportedly part of the "knock down the price of gold" group.

- Bank of England, jointly with the Queen of England, offering for auction or sale gold that neither one apparently really owns, but is actually a huge gold horde stolen upon the downfall of the Soviet regime and whisked away to Dutch custody at a Swiss airport for speedy transport wheresoever requested. Bank of America is owned jointly by the Vatican, the Jesuits, and the Rothschilds. Joining them in recent years as major owners have reportedly been the Japanese mafia, the Yakuza, big in the U.S. dope traffic, and owning most every bank in California.

The purpose of the gold attack was to drive down the price of gold, among other things to help bail out six hedge funds that have been more than a trillion dollars under water in derivatives gambling—that is, asset swaps. The bankrupt hedge funds, when gold is low-priced, can obtain gold loans for as little as 1% interest. Were the hedge funds disaster scenario to be more public, it might set off a melt-down of the financial system of the Western world.

Reportedly at the behest of Bush, Barrick became part of a complicated trick of forward leasing of gold. A sort of short selling of gold. Thus, sold short has been more than ten thousand tons of gold—more than four years of total world gold production. Gold has been called by some "The Killer Yellow Metal" for the type of situations it can cause. In February, 2000, Barrick, Bush, and the anti-gold gang, reportedly again sought to stop the precious metal from going up to a more fair market price, such as $600 per ounce.

The disclosures of the reputed secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records could torpedo the pirate ship of which Alan Redspan is a treasonous Captain joined by reputed super-crook the Elder Bush and his family and others in their gang. All together, they are part of the big gold swindle of the new century.

See our website to view a few samples of the more than three hundred apparently authentic Federal Reserve secret wire transfer records that tend to incriminate Bush, Redspan, the Queen of England, the Bank of England, and others.

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY BRIBES & AIDS BUSH IN VARIOUS MATTERS PART 2

Former President George Herbert Walker Bush and his three sons should be prosecuted for reportedly massive money laundering from the dope traffic and other illicit doings worldwide. Also, for bribery, and in the case of the Elder Bush, for treason. This is clear from the more than 300 secret reputedly authentic documents consisting in part of the following:

[1] Federal Reserve bank wire transfer records showing massive amounts in and out of accounts that are reportedly those of the Elder Bush, his sons, and/or in which they have a beneficial interest and/or are the major owners of the entities involved. Most have the secret authorizing code of the Federal Reserve Chief "A. Greenspan", who we call Alan Redspan, because he is like a corrupt Soviet commissar, answerable to no one.

[2] Hand-written notes of a senior U.S. government official in the Office of Internal Affairs, U.S. Department of the Treasury. His notes with bank wire transfer codes list 25 banks secretly transferring funds in and out of "Proteus/Potus", bureaucratic slang for Vice President of the United State/President of the United States. As we began to show in Part One of this story, and continuing now, Federal Reserve dictator Alan Redspan, with his secret authorizing codes shown, arranged and approved of the massive transfer as a money laundry, of billions and billions of dollars to the Bush family as follows:

- To George Herbert Walker Bush, using the Spanish spelling he prefers as his first name, as JORGE Bush. And to George W. Bush (Texas Governor), Jeb Bush (Florida Governor, who has a wife from Colombia), and Neil Bush, once an official of the defunct-by-fraud, Denver-based Silverado Savings & Loan. Sent to and from Banco Exterior de Espana, Malaga, Spain, for Pilgrim Investments, the reputed Bush money ship, with the codes shown. This was arranged reportedly through the reputed Bush family cocaine bank money laundry wizard, Giorgio Pelossi, quietly arrested in Chicago, January, 2000. (For Pelossi details, visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website.)

- The Elder Bush sharing proceeds of illicit transactions, reportedly including dope trafficking, with the Queen of England, through her identified accounts in the British Monarchy-owned Coutts Bank, London. Remember or note if you did not already know: the British Monarchy, directly and through the Jardine Family as their agents and others, have been kingpins in the dope trade since the Opium Wars in China, starting 150 years ago and continuing. Financing it over the years in various forms reportedly has been the enterprise owned jointly by the British Monarchy with remnants of the Chinese Royal family, Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank, merged more recently with the Jacobs Family-owned Marine Midland Bank of Buffalo, New York and Chicago. (More on this later.)

- The Elder Bush, as a U.S. government official and afterward, to benefit him for having done certain acts and doings as such, taking benefits and bribes reportedly from the Emir of Kuwait, to start a war with Bush's disgruntled PRIVATE BUSINESS PARTNER, Saddam Hussein, Iraqi strongman. Details of Bush as such partner for the decade 1980-1990 were part of the secret records fought over a Chicago branch of Italy's largest bank, Banca Nazionale Delavoro, owned in part by the Pope. It was a subject of an unpublicized federal suit in Chicago. Bush/Saddam extorted hundreds of billions of dollars from the weak oil sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf for "protection", same as mafia gangsters shaking someone down. I and my associates were the only journalists attending the hearing in the federal appeals court. After which, I interviewed the participants, May 1991, detailing the same on Radio Free America, hosted by long-time broadcaster and journalist Tom Valentine. A transcript appeared several times in the populist newspaper SPOTLIGHT. Zero for the rest of the press—who I call the newsmakers.

Saddam Hussein was suckered by Bush using a top U.S. official, telling Saddam it is purely a local matter of no interest to the U.S. for Iraq to seize a portion of Kuwait long-claimed by Saddam as an Iraqi province and oilfield. For sending U.S. soldiers in harms way and suffering post-war Persian Gulf Syndrome, the Emir of Kuwait reportedly bribed Bush. The proceeds went, in part, to and through reputed Bush-identified accounts in Arab Bank Corporation, Monaco. Fifteen thousand U.S. military since 1991 have died of the strange malady and eighty-five thousand are either in dying condition or suffering horrible debilities. In addition, Bush reportedly received from the Emir $15 million in gold. This is all forbidden by the U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 9: "No title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States; And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, of Title, of any kind whatever, FROM ANY KING, PRINCE, OR FOREIGN STATE." (Emphasis added.) What Bush did is also in violation of federal statute, as noted by the senior Treasury official in his hand-written notations.

- The Queen of England and her control of British counter-intelligence, called MI-6, bribed and benefitted Bush to arrange for MI-6 to spy and coerce U.S. citizens in the United States and to destabilize such persons, particularly the large Irish Catholic populations of places like Chicago. (Chicago has a considerable number of Irish Catholics who sympathize with the anti-British royalty, anti-British IRA.)

Further, Bush was bribed and benefitted to induce him to pursue a course detrimental to the United States. Bush's reputed pirate operation, Pilgrim Investments, received many billions of dollars through the Queen's accounts at her Coutts Bank, London. Bush's reputed firm is linked to the Pilgrim Society, an offshoot of the Cecil Rhodes Trust, formed from the South African gold and diamond mine cartel. The Rhodes Trust is pledged to the treasonous purpose of overthrowing the U.S. government and restoring British domination over the American continent by returning it to the status of puppet colonies. The Rhodes Trust takes the position that those of Irish and German descent (many Americans) are sub-human and are not entitled to occupy this land and have a government called by them the "United States of America".

Great Britain has vowed to take back this continent since at least the War of 1812, and for that purpose has arranged the political assassination of two anti-British U.S. Presidents, President James Garfield and President William McKinley.

William Rockefeller Clinton (that is what I call him for good reason mentioned elsewhere) as a student attended Oxford on behalf of the Cecil Rhodes Trust and took a pledge to support the same, which calls for the collapse and overthrow of the U.S. Government. Twice inaugurated as President, Clinton took an oath to support the U.S. Constitution. How is this contradiction resolved? (U.S. Constitution, Article 2, Section 1.)

Visit the www.alfayed.com website. There you can consider the contentions of Al Fayed that the husband of the Queen of England, Prince Phillip, arranged with MI-6 to murder Al Fayed's son, Dodi, and his intended new wife, Princess Diana of Wales, then pregnant with his child.

As shown by the reportedly authentic Federal Reserve bank wire transfer records, hundreds of millions of dollars were sent through the Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan

Bank to Marine Midland Bank of Buffalo, New York, to credit to Bush's reputed accounts, Pilgrim Investments, Inc. The Jacobs family of Buffalo own Marine Midland Bank. They also own Emprise Corp., a reputed mobster international enterprise dominating the food and beverage and other concessions of many sports stadia and race tracks in the U.S. and elsewhere. Later, because of the smelly links becoming public, the name was changed to Sportsystems, Inc. By the way, they reportedly made Buffalo resident O.J. Simpson into a sports celebrity. (The Norby Walters case, 1988-89, in Chicago's federal district court, dealt with sports celebrities having many times mafia sports agents, without which they would go nowhere. OJ's Buffalo business partner in the major cocaine traffic was murdered during OJ's first trial in 1995, according to a major Buffalo newspaper.)

Emprise Corp., in turn, has been a major stockholder of Chicago-based Bally Manufacturing Company that has been the largest manufacturer of pinball and slot machines used in gambling casinos, too often under criminal domination. Published accounts link Emprise to Cosa Nostra families in at least two cities. In 1976, well-known Arizona reporter Don Bolles was investigating Emprise and intending to write about them. He was murdered by a car bombing; his last words included the word "Emprise".

The reported mobster details of the Jacobs family and their Emprise Corporation and Sportsystems are in a long series of press reports, such as the Chicago Sun-Times for the dates 9/16/71, 1/16/72, 5/15/72, 11/28/72; Chicago Daily News (now defunct) 4/28/72. In their issue 4/24/72 it was said, after describing them as a mob-linked concession company, "The company, Emprise Corp., of Buffalo, N.Y., has made millions of dollars in loans available to major league baseball teams, race tracks, and other sports enterprises. In return, Emprise usually has received ironclad contracts—sometimes running more than 30 years—to provide food and beverages at sports events." Also, Chicago Tribune 3/4/75.

The Jacobs family runs the dog racing tracks in Arkansas, popular there, and has contributed heavily to the "campaigns" of Bush family crony, William Rockefeller Clinton.

So, with his reputed criminal enterprises the Elder Bush was in safe hands running his game, with the help of Alan Redspan, through Marine Midland Bank of Buffalo. In more recent years, the Marine Midland Bank has merged with the British and Chinese royalty-owned Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank. One of those of Chinese royalty, now residing in the Midwest, is the reputed North American chief of the Red Chinese Secret Police. He has a direct link by fax to the White House. When we fingered him in 1997, he arranged with the FBI to block the website on which my story about him (with his name, address, and phone number) was posted.

The reportedly authentic, hand-written notes of the senior official of the U.S. Treasury detailing and summarizing the numbers and accounts that go with some of the details here, dealt with twenty five banks used by the Bush family, which tend to incriminate them in reportedly illicit trafficking and bribery funds. The Bush family's reported criminality overlaps that of William Rockefeller Clinton, a close family crony of the Elder Bush, going back to the time Clinton was a college student in England and spied on the Peace Movement in Europe under the auspices of the CIA Station Chief in London, as arranged by the Elder Bush.

The Al Gore Campaign Committee reportedly paid upwards of one million dollars for a fairly recent picture made undercover by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (not 30 years ago). It ostensibly shows George W. Bush (now Texas Governor) snorting cocaine with Bill Clinton. In exclusive stories on my website, I have detailed several attempts to assassinate Albert Gore, Jr. as Vice President. Is THAT what is deterring Gore from using this reported picture to finger George W. Bush—as of this date, a supposed political opponent? (Actually George W. is a Clinton crony.)

CBS Network apparently found out we were working on this several-part story. Result: recently CBS's 60 Minutes program put up a "straw man" to knock down, to divert attention. 60 Minutes referred to supposedly shocking allegations against former President Bush. They were made by a team made up of Mark Phillips and his apparent girl friend, Cathy O'Brien, in their book with a double-meaning titled The Trance Formation of America. She claims she was put into a trance and became a "sex slave" by high government officials, including George Herbert Walker Bush.

Several years ago this couple were set to be guests on my public access cable TV program cablecast within Chicago. Before coming here, Mark Phillips called me as the producer/moderator of the show, and insisted on the following conditions: [1] all my questions were to be put in writing and submitted to them in advance and [2] I was to make a written, ironclad guarantee that I as the moderator would NOT ask them or her any "negative questions". Having due regard for my integrity and being independent-minded, I refused these outlandish conditions. So, to blunt OUR Bush criminality stories, CBS ran this sex slave story to divert attention.

Go to our website to view a few samples of the reportedly authentic records we have, some hand-written by a senior official of the U.S. Treasury, going over the numbers and accounts of the Bush family apparent criminality using Alan Redspan's Federal Reserve bank wire transfer notations as a summary.

More parts of this story are coming. Stay tuned.

Glimpses Of The Truth Behind Your Shadow World

3/3/00 SOLTEC / HATONN

Good morning, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace, for the attacks upon you are indeed great.

There are ones who do not wish for your messages to continue to be put forth. These ones are masters at exploiting any and all weaknesses you have.

Be diligent in your affirmations of service unto Lighted Service, and learn to allow for these distractions yet not become disabled by them. There is much work left to be done, and for those who agree to become conduits for we of the Host, there is always an amplification of the intensity of the sort of attacks you have been experiencing.

As always, the choice is yours to remain in such service. There will never be threats or coercion on the part of any entity working with the Lighted aspects of The Creation.

Allow for the immediate pressures to pass through you. There are adjustments being made which are giving the queasy sensation in your abdominal area.

There is great interest in stopping the messages that are penned through you, for they serve to free ones from their own ignorance and are much more than what they appear to you to be.

Allow The Light to fill you from within and radiate outward in a natural spiraling manner. You are capable of matching the frequency pulses that are going through your body as we speak. Allow for the shift to occur; do not resist the natural tendency towards balanced energy exchange. To stop the flow causes the nauseating feelings, while allowing the energy to pass through you will alleviate such feelings.

* * *

Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn here, in Light and in Service to The One Light. Be still, my friend, for there is a much needed message that we wish to deliver. I am using Soltec’s frequency, for his is much easier for you to lock onto in your present condition. Be still, and all will flow forth as it should be.

You American citizens are being distracted and played for sleeping fools as your world leaders take drastic measures to throw your world into a global conflict. Your oil prices are the highest they have been in over 9 years, while you have several presidential “hopefuls” putting on a good show, day after day.

Meanwhile, there are great attempts to ignite a war in the Middle East. The “need” for oil is an artificial “crisis” that has many ones outraged. Your world energy giants, such as OPEC, are trying to leverage legislation that will ensure their empire continues to be prosperous, while these same ones desperately try to squelch the new technologies that threaten to make their current commodities much less valuable.

[Editor’s note: Speaking of suppressed energy production technologies which threaten the status quo, don’t miss the feature article on the subject of Cold Fusion elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.]

The pressures applied, and the resulting mental energies being focused on this very carefully orchestrated situation, are intended to precipitate stressful conditions for the majority of ones there in the United States who are among the most dependant upon the gas and oil—the middle class.

These mental stresses are causing not only an external distraction, but a very real internal distraction that, if left unchecked (which is typical of the masses), will fester and grow as ones become more and more unsettled. This is designed to cause a “tension” in etheric space that is hoped to be used as a catalyst for igniting the planned global war.

This sort of manipulation is beyond the mental capacities of the so-called “elite” puppets who believe themselves to be in control of your world. Rather, this manipulation comes from direct influence of negatively oriented, shall we say “extra-dimensional” beings. These beings are masters in the manipulation of energies, and are currently using their mastery in such a manner as to enslave others and to keep ones from connecting within to Higher Knowing and thus to accessing insights about the greater reality and nature of the game being played at this time.

Your world is presently going through an upward dimensional shift (graduation or birthing). There are great energies currently available to all of the inhabitants of your world that were not as accessible just a few short years ago. These energies are neither good nor bad—they simply ARE.

You ones decide how you will focus your energy at any given point in time. As your planet continues to awaken in response to these ever-increasing (in both frequency and intensity) energies, the “average” ones who discipline themselves to tap into these energies have the potential of bringing down the illusion that so many are caught-up in and yet see it not.

This enslaving illusion is fast approaching it’s disintegration point. These negatively oriented “extra-dimensional” entities have calculated that their window of opportunity for effecting a desired negative impact will be closing in a relatively short period of time.

The events that are likely to be precipitated by these dark ones will become the very catalyst that will, for the most part, act like a slingshot. There will be the apparent back-slipping as the sling is being pulled back or cocked. This will be a time of great tension and hardship, and yet it will facilitate an inner stirring—a strong emotional desire for justice, freedom, and a return to balance—and hence a call will go out unlike anything prior in the history of your world. This call will summon forth great healing and balancing energies that will empower and en-Light-en those who will, in turn, be given to see the Higher Soul-ution to the seemingly hopeless situation.

These events can always be diverted through extreme focus and desire of a relatively small few. What we speak of here is based upon our observation of current energy flows, including their average frequency, amplitudes, and contours. Our mathematical constructs give us both probabilities and possibilities.

Please consider that many of you who are experiencing at this time are the same ones who were experiencing on Maldek (the remnant of which is what you have come to know as the Asteroid Belt between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter) and on Mars (which was rendered virtually uninhabitable by its previous occupants). The karmic predisposition of your world’s population is one that seems to opt for the harsher experiences, rather than becoming diligent students of Life-Force Energy and therein finding a better way.

We of the Intergalactic Federation of Sovereign Planets in Service to The One Light, Creator Source, have consulted with the Guardians of your world, a council of seven who were appointed Guardians at the time of your solar system's inception. And though we are somewhat limited as to what we can do—based upon our moral and ethical standards which dictate that it is quite inappropriate to interfere with the free-will choices of a species—we are being allowed EQUAL opportunity, using the same “extra-dimensional” energy-flow techniques as are being used by those dark ones who are efforting greatly to ignite a great war—the true purpose of which would be to create an environment that will spawn and precipitate anger, fear, and hate.

Such generated lower-emotional energies would help to neutralize the many awakening souls on your planet and keep them in a low-frequency state as long as is possible. The intention is to keep ones from naturally gravitating to the higher frequency states of joy, happiness, and love, wherein the inner connection to Higher-Infinite Intelligence (many call this the Christ-consciousness) can be more readily achieved.

When this important connection is made by a Lightworker while incarnate, the end result often has a very profoundly positive global effect. Such ones become powerful conduits of Love, Balance, and Peace. Their example then awakens the same in many others.

Regardless of the atrocities you ones may witness, hold strong in your heart that the physical is but an illusion that is precipitated from the non-physical energies which have their origin within the creative imaginings of Creator Source—God of Light. The physical vehicles you are housed within are not YOU. You—the real you—are of the finer energies which transcend space and time, and which adhere only to the Laws of The Creation which govern the Greater Reality responsible for sustaining the very small subset that you commonly know as the physical universe.

You all are a part of a much larger reality. The current experience is but a mere twinkling of an eye when compared to the infinite journey of your soul. The seeming atrocities you may experience are transient at best. They serve as opportunities for you each to have experiences from which to draw contrast—what is personally perceived as appropriate or inappropriate—and thus evolve in wisdom in how you choose and summon forth Creative Energies in unique, balanced ways so as to forever create newness of experience which leads to growth.

With the proper mental attitude and understanding, your spirit for life and living and creating cannot be manipulated, usurped, or broken. Thus you become a beacon of Light by which others will be able to see hope, and thus find inner comfort and greater personal realization.

Do not take the illusion of the physical experience too seriously or literally. Seldom are the situations with which you are confronted what they appear to be. For every seen action, there is a more fundamental non-physical energy flow which precedes and thus precipitates (determines) the aforementioned physical action.

The key to truly understanding the cause of any physical happening lies in the energy that precipitates it. Likewise, the key to creating a more balanced physical experience lies in the precipitation of non-physical energies. Learn to tap into and modify that which precipitates the physical reality, and you will be well on your way to understanding the true nature of the game you are participating within.

Many of the so-called “elite” of your world know and practice what many of you, who will be reading this message, would term “the black arts of ritualistic magic” wherein they conjure, in nonphysical space, vortices of energy potential that they then focus in very self-serving manners to enslave the minds of the masses and thus usurp their energies.

The greatest threat to these “elite” are those awakening beings who demonstrate the same ability to summon forth (tap into) non-physical energies and use same to help all of humanity. The ones, such as Christ and Buddha, who taught the use of non-physical energies in order to establish balance and peace, were most often persecuted and greatly feared by the ones who wished to remain in control of the populations. Such Wayshowers have had their original teachings manipulated and, wherever possible, destroyed. The many Christian teachings of the biblical scriptures have been modified to teach ones to fear the use of non-physical energies, and will call such skills “sorcery” and “witchcraft”—yet the ones at the highest levels of the Church regularly perform “secret” rituals that would horrify the average churchgoer who has been dutifully trained to be fearful of same.

I apologize for the apparent bluntness of this message, but for the most part our goal is to answer the petitions of those who will most likely be reading this message both presently and in the future—those of you who have the inner eyes to see, and the inner ears to hear. Look within your heart and search carefully your feelings. Are you looking for that “something” elusive that seems to be “missing”? Have you sat in many a church only to leave not quite satisfied?

What is it that is missing? IT IS THE ENCOMPASSING EXPLANATION THAT YOU ARE A CO-CREATOR!

Part of the reason you have chosen to participate in the physical experience is so that you might have the opportunity to learn to responsibly use your ability as co-Creator to mold and change your environment in such a manner that there becomes a great resonance within your being that will, in turn, re-radiate Peace, Happiness, and Joy.

You are an immortal being—a unique spark of Creator Source's Light and Desire—who has chosen to take a “class” called “Physical Universe 101” wherein the goal is to learn, through first-hand experience, to exercise your own creative abilities while appreciating the uniqueness of each individual—and yet, at the same time, see the connectedness (the Oneness), through The Creator, of each.

When you can see these things without the apparent paradox created as the mind wrestles with the heart, you will have again taken a step forward along the evolutionary journey of “life”. Integration of the mind and heart allows one to more wisely precipitate unique situations wherein newness of thought will be born, and thus you have fulfilled a very basic desire of The Creation—that of newness, expansion, and growth.

You have at your disposal the same Creative Potential to effect change as do any of the so-called “elite” controllers of your world. Perhaps one of the greatest obstacles standing in the way of the dark energies is the fact that the mind-numbing techniques they use to keep the masses sleeping also make it very difficult to get these same masses too riled up. For the most part, the majority of people have grown quite numb to shock.

However, those of you who are inclined toward (and have chosen to seek) this sort of information are NOT numb. And the relatively small numbers of ones like you are the greatest threat to ones such as Clinton, Bush, Greenspan, or their counterparts in other countries, for you represent the Light of Exposure and an end to their game.

Please take these words to heart, for they are meant to give insight without usurping your free will. You must ultimately choose how it is you will focus and flow your energies.

You will have to choose whether to become part of the mass hysteria or to remain balanced while your world is seemingly falling apart. And though the slingshot may be being pulled even farther back, there will come a time when the masses go within and connect with Source. At that time there will be a great release of the stored energy, and the resulting infusion of Light will catapult your world forward into what many will end up calling the “Age of Radiance”.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn. I come with the Host of God as promised, as a Messenger, Guide, and as a Friend. I serve the Lighted aspects of The Creation. I do this through the recognition of the Oneness of All That Is. To serve you, my brethren, is perhaps the greatest tribute in understanding I can possibly make to Creator Source—God of Light—for we are all ONE! In Light and Love, Salu.

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The Blockbuster of all Blockbusters!! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents the suppressed science which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background of the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world". No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu "sanusi" or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now."

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli" to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of travelling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribespeople have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

"This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words".

—David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

Amazing Confirmation that a reptilian extraterrestrial race controlled the world for thousands of years

The subject of Sound Healing is, without question, a very broad and intriguing topic. We were barely able to scratch the surface in our article that appeared on page 24 of the January 2000 edition of The SPECTRUM in conjunction with other topics. We received much positive feedback about that article and noted your strong interest in our presenting additional material.

We are pleased to deliver such a forum here. And we are even more delighted that what is presented is so well coupled to concepts that are a mainstay of this unique publication. We are a planet in transition, in a state of awakening to Higher possibilities, the unveiling of Truth and longstanding lies—and therefore of the healing that comes about through the moving toward such goals. It is thus most appropriate that the very fundamental phenomenon of sound be brought into our exploration of the facets of that healing equation.

Jonathan Goldman, you may remember from the earlier article on this

Update From Our Editor

"You're the only paper I've seen—and I've seen A LOT of them—that doesn't have any 'agenda' to push; you simply present truth." That's approximately the way a compliment was gently, yet with some astonishment, directed to us a little while ago.

At first it seemed a somewhat strange and puzzling statement: After all, what ELSE would we be doing? And then it became clear that the use of the word "agenda" here meant "hidden agendas" or putting some kind of "spin" on all the things being presented, like, say, a fire-and-brimstone fundamentalist preacher or well-programmed academic might generally do.

Well, we don't know how to do what we do any other way! It would never occur to us to put any kind of "spin" or "agenda" on what we present to you each month in this unique newspaper. After all, Truth is stranger and more powerful than any fiction/spin/opinion.

Whether we're talking overlooked news items gleaned from all over, or personal interviews presented word-for-word as the speaker said (and often given more candidly to us than elsewhere), or the exquisite spiritual messages shared from loving Guides and Wayshowers from the Higher Realms of Creation—you get it just as we get it. No embellishments; no deletions or additions; no "spin" or "agenda" to slant or censor what the authors intend.

And that's just what the complimenter was pointing out as being unique and exceptional. Ok, we humbly accept the praise!

For more about this subject, see Rick Martin's short-but-sweet story titled: Doors Opening For The SPECTRUM: Video Tape Now Available. That kind and observant complimenter was Dennis Grover, who said the above (and a number of other nice things) about us on his widely distributed Reno, Nevada cable television program on March 1.

His program is called Liberty And Justice For All. And Dennis is rather passionate about working to turn this country back around to its great and noble heritage as an experiment in true freedom for all. A project and organization that is very close to his heart—Justice Team One—we also share with you in another article titled Serious Legal Help When Laws Go Wild: Justice Team One. Be sure and check out that one, too; it is an endeavor sorely needed in these days where bureauc-rats, and the legal nightmares they ever-more-frequently dream up, are running wild—at the expense of the honest and law-abiding citizenry.

Getting back to our newspaper for a moment, my longtime usual retort to questions about what we do and who we are, is to say simply that we are an equal opportunity offender. I like what Dennis had to say a lot better. And again, we surely appreciate such a high compliment from one who is a longtime, astute observer of the information highways.

This can quickly get into a heavy discussion of the unacknowledged power of both the written word and the spoken word. Both of these relate, at a deep level, to the subject matter of our Front Page story for this issue.

But we'll leave that topic for another time, when I can present some largely unknown (in this generation) information about the great word-genius Mark Twain—who happened to be a good friend of the great electrical-genius Nikola Tesla. Both were, of course, heavily persecuted by the powers-that-be for their respective heroic efforts toward awakening and freeing a sleeping populace.

And while we're on this subject of freedom, please take especially careful notice of the first two items in this issue's News Desk:

First of all, the House Committee on Ways and Means is holding a hearing exclusively on the Fair Tax proposal on April 11. The Fair Tax is a proposal to replace the Federal Income Tax with a single-rate retail sales tax. The Income Tax "monster" has gotten to be just about as bloated and parasitic a tick as is possible without a major insurrection on the part of the working public. Certainly it is time for an overhaul of major proportions!

Secondly, note that late-night talk-radio giant, Art Bell, has just announced his permanent retirement—again. Art has been responsible for bringing to the public airwaves much, much good information and many, many good speakers. If you read carefully between the lines of his announcement, I think you can discern a very-well-thought-out "chess game" going on behind the scenes with those dark ones who are trying their very best to silence this persistent voice of Truth. It would be wise for those who have orchestrated the terrible attacks on Art and his family to remember how energy flows boomerang in the presence of a Lighted mission. Do keep Art and his family in your prayers as David tackles Goliath.

Well, it's probably not a big deal to a lot of you, but to us it is. This issue of The SPECTRUM begins a radical departure from our past philosophy of accepting no paid advertising. As we first announced two issues ago, and firmed-up in the last issue with rate schedules (again printed herein), the initial ads are finally appearing in this issue. We hope you will support our advertisers if their offerings are of interest to you.

We have a most astonishing and extensive readership, the quality of which is really difficult to put into words. I don't say that in any overly bragging way (well, maybe a little). But it is important to try to convey some kind of composite picture we have from your many gracious and heart-felt messages, both written and over the phone. YOU are an amazing group, you readers of this publication, and we thank each and every one of you for sharing your personal "spark" of The Divine which all fit together in a most exquisite mosaic.

URGENT LEGISLATIVE ALERT ABOUT THE FAIR TAX PROPOSAL

From EMAIL, 3/28/00: [quoting]

YOUR IMMEDIATE ACTION IS CRITICALLY NEEDED!

The House Committee on Ways and Means is holding a hearing exclusively on the Fair Tax on April 11, 2000.

There will be a gathering in Washington DC on April 13, 2000.

We must ACT NOW and demonstrate to this powerful Committee the strong, unified support behind the Fair Tax.

The Fair Tax is a proposal to replace the Federal Income Tax with a single-rate retail sales tax. Please see the www.fairtax.org/volcentr/popup.html website, Americans For Fair Taxation, and give Chairman Archer an expression of your support for his efforts and the Fair Tax. Just click on the legislative alert banner on the front page of the website to send your e-mail. Then ask all your computer friends to do the same.

Ask your non-computer friends to call Rep. Porter Goss at 202-225-2536 or 941-774-8060 and urge him to support HR 2525, the Fair Tax.

LET's MAKE APRIL 15th JUST ANOTHER DAY!

We earnestly hope that you will seriously consider this and join us in DC on the 13th. [End quoting]

When enough people have had enough, there is no stopping the groundswell of focused energy for reform and improvement. Vigilance and persistence are prerequisites to success, else such well-intentioned efforts either fizzle out or get cleverly modified into yet another way to rob us.

There are very powerful behind-the-scenes forces which certainly don't want any kind of reform in this department, so it would be no small achievement to have a genuine success here. Remember the longstanding three-prong attack on we-the-people by those so-called "elite" controllers of our world: (1) dumbing us down, (2) keeping us sick, and (3) keeping us poor through taxes. So this proposed legislation is a serious affront to one of these major people-control axioms.

ART BELL ANNOUNCES HIS RETIREMENT

The following is a last-minute very important inclusion as we go to press with this issue of The SPECTRUM. Art Bell announced in the second hour (11-11:30 p.m. Friday night, 3/31/00, his local Pahrump, Nevada time) his "retirement" from radio as of Wednesday night April 26, 2000. The following is from his website and begins with the statement he made on the air: [quoting]

In order that you all understand the gravity of the announcement I'm about to make, it's going to be necessary for me to repeat some very painful events that have occurred to my family over the past several years.

On May 16 of the year 1997, my son, Art Bell IV, was kidnapped, transported across state lines, and raped by a substitute teacher from his own high school. The assailant was HIV positive. My son was a minor. He was only 16 years old at the time.

The teacher involved was tried, convicted, and is now serving a life sentence. My son though, as you might imagine, was sent into a psychological tailspin which continues to this very day. We are trying very, very hard to help him recover and lead a more normal life. Some positive events have occurred toward that end and your prayers are welcome. Please keep them coming.

While the police work and the trial of my son's assailant were underway, difficult as it was for me to continue my daily radio programs, I did so. Because my son was a minor at the time of the crime, the records were sealed, his name was not made public, something our society does to protect its own, its future, its young people.

As our family was working through this trauma in private, an event beyond all bounds of decency and humanity occurred. On December 9 of 1997, just a few months after my son's ordeal, my own began. Ted Gunderson, a retired FBI agent, along with David Hinkson, and the assistance of others, aired a broadcast which—incredibly, absolutely incredibly—accused me of committing the very same crime my son had suffered, child molestation.

The program further stated that I had paid to cover up an indictment in Nye County, Nevada, my home. It further urged listeners to call me "on air" and ask if I had been indicted. Of course, these accusations were entirely false. But, nevertheless, the calls poured into my open-line, unscreened program, asking if this was true. I had no choice but to block out all these calls and keep my silence for fear of my son's situation becoming public.

This broadcast was made on WWCR, world wide shortwave radio, in Nashville, Tennessee.

This station has been described by newspapers and civic-minded organizations as one of the country's leading broadcasters of hate radio. The individuals, WWCR and its sister-station WNQM, have allowed to broadcast over the airwaves, [such topics as those which] include a man who wrote a book entitled The Hitler We Loved And Why, and another man who stated over the airwaves that Jews are the children of Satan and that African-Americans are "mud people".

In addition to broadcasting these proponents of hate and violence, this radio station has consciously decided not to spend money on a delay switch, not to conduct a careful background check of the people it places on the air, and to allow individuals to say almost anything they want in foreign languages, without having staff on duty who can even understand what they are saying.

In my opinion, WWCR is one of the most irresponsible stations permitted to broadcast over the airwaves of this country.

Now, the fallout from that broadcast has been unbelievable. Besides the unrelenting accusatory calls, others repeated this false rumor as though it was fact, resulting in several related lawsuits. Many of you may have heard my defense played out on the airwaves and the Internet.

No matter how hard I have tried to set the record straight, my torment and that of my family continues. Recently, a radio host in Toronto, Canada opened his morning show with the words: "I am Art Bell and I molest little children." All of this sent me into a psychological tailspin. I felt I had been dealt a blow I might not recover from. Still I continued my nightly broadcasts, as best I could.

In October of 1998, my son came to a crisis point, a situation so critical that nothing but my full-time attention would help. So, on that fateful day, October 13 of 1998, I resigned on air with no intention of returning. But thanks to the efforts of my network, my best friend Alan Corbeth, Kraig Kitchin (CEO of Premiere Networks) and Randy Michaels (CEO of Clear Channel), I was able to return, but the pressure of having to defend myself against baseless, vile claims that I was a child molester eventually forced me to reduce my on-air hours.

Why the individuals behind the December 9, 1997 broadcast by WWCR decided to make such a patently false and harmful broadcast remains for the courts to decide. A major moment in this litigation is going to occur April 28 in Nashville, Tennessee. If justice prevails, a trial, perhaps a protracted one, may follow. It would be untrue for me to say this has not affected my air work; it has. It would be unfair to all of you not to give you my full-time best. I can no longer do that. The reality that, after suffering the fate of my son's own molestation,

I now stand destined to be tainted for life as a child molester, has proven simply too much to bear. God knows, I have tried.

For my son, I pray that somehow his wounds will heal, his mind's troubles fade into something of a normal life. For myself an ordeal looms ahead to clear my good name of accusations I committed a crime, committed against my own son. Nobody ever said life would be fair—only to be lived as the hand is dealt to you. For all the years of joy my work has provided, I want to thank all of you and whatever Creative Force allowed it.

I have decided to retire from the broadcast business at the end of this month, my last show to be April 26, 2000.

I will not do any media interviews on this subject. I have already said more than any private person would have said, a private world I now look forward to returning to. Any further questions should be addressed to my attorney, Gerard Fox, at the law firm of Fox, Siegler & Spillane, in Los Angeles, at: (310) 229-9300. — Art Bell [End quoting]

ART BELL SIGNS OFF

LOS ANGELES, March 31, 2000:

Art Bell, the radio host famous for his spontaneous and compelling conversations of all things unexplained, officially resigns. His last broadcast will be on Wednesday evening, April 26, running into Thursday morning, April 27.

Art will deliver a statement on his show tonight (2 a.m. EST, 11 p.m. PST) addressing his retirement from not only radio broadcasting, but also all other forums of media including book publishing, television, etc. He is looking forward to living an anonymous lifestyle.

"We have and will continue to support Art" said Kraig T. Kitchin, president/COO of Premiere Radio Networks. "I hoped he would return full time, but understand his inability to do so and agree this is the best course of action. A new host of Coast to Coast AM will be introduced to affiliates and listeners imminently through Art's own introduction. Coast to Coast AM will continue to pursue the subject matter in the same entertaining and intriguing ways. In addition, affiliates and advertisers are being informed of the changes as they happen. The network is committed to delivering ratings results consistent to Art's."

Premiere Radio Networks, Inc., a subsidiary of Clear Channel, currently syndicates more than 60 radio programs and serves more than 7,800 radio station affiliates. Premiere is one of the top three radio networks in the country, and the leading provider of morning show material nationwide. The number one syndicator of programming, Premiere features the following personalities: Rush Limbaugh, Dr. Laura Schlessinger, Jim Rome, Dr. Dean Edell, Michael Reagan, Phil Hendrie, Naomi Judd, Blair Garner, Lionel and Rick Dees. Premiere is based in Sherman Oaks, California, and has eight offices nationwide. [End quoting]

It should be obvious to any aware of how things work "behind the scenes" that the cruel attacks upon Art and his son have been deftly orchestrated to accomplish this goal of getting him off the air. However, this is not the first time Art has announced a "permanent" retirement. It would be most helpful to keep Art (and his son) in your thoughts and prayers—and KNOW that The Light will ALWAYS triumph. We can expect Art Bell to rebound stronger and wiser for having tackled the dark ones head-on!

SCARY, SCARY STOCK MARKET!

From the INTERNET,
<RonWortham@aol.com>, 3/31/00: [quoting]

Being facetious about it being Friday, but it often happens that way, for a reason.

I am writing this BEFORE the stock market opens Friday, to say that Monday may be interesting.

Why? Well, yesterday one of the largest, prestigious, and most established investor funds called it quits.

They simply said that the market had become too irrational and they could no longer justify making any predictions or investments for their participants.

So the Tiger ceases to roar and the Jaguar returns to the cave and is handing back all their investor's money.

<http://hv.greenspun.com/bboard/q-and-a-fetch-msg.tcl?msg_id=002sYm>

Also, a tension has apparently arisen between Simmons at Treasury and Greenspan at the Fed.

Opposite policies.

Simmons' lowering rates, Greenspan raising them.

Gyrations occurring in the market changes.

Some up radically, others down radically.

We are talking entire markets, not just individual stocks, because the latter is considered to have rational causes.

As one market indicator, I watch the doom and gloom letters of sophisticated investors in the market. People actually responsible for large amounts of money there. Have never seen so many such letters as I have gotten in the last two days.

Why Monday?

Well, Friday starts a downturn, and people have over the weekend to think about it.

They think, "What is the psychology?"

"Stay ahead of the crowd." "If it is going to go down, sell." "The same dollars will buy even more stock later."

But you have to remember, it is not a FREE market. It is a CONTROLLED market.

BIG, BIG, BIG money has kept the party going. And may still try to do so. And may even be able to do so, for a while. But they don't have PERFECT control, and REALITY will eventually catch up.

Market rules are set by men.

Reality Rules are set by God.

Guess who wins in the long run?

Eternity is more than a long time.

May I remind you that when I say "Monday may be Interesting", I am not predicting it. Just observing. Because no one can predict that which is BOTH Controlled and Irrational. [End quoting]

Any thinking person can see that the stock and commodity markets are worse than Las Vegas crap shoots. At least in Las Vegas the odds are better defined and more honest. Remember the insightful article back in the January issue of this newspaper by Nick Guarino. DRAMATIC CLUES OF MAJOR CHANGE: EDGAR CAYCE'S PREDICTIONS BEING VERIFIED

"Krsanna Duran" <timestar@atnet.net>

Volcano Montserrat began erupting March 19, a Class X solar flare erupted March 22, Mt. Etna exploded with lava March 23, followed by another Class X flare on March 24. Located in the Caribbean near Martinique, Montserrat's eruption followed by Mt. Etna's may be the sign that Edgar Cayce predicted would mark the beginning of massive Earth changes. "The Sleeping Prophet", Edgar Cayce predicted that the Earth changes he prophesied would begin when Martinique and Etna erupted simultaneously.

March 24, 2000: Mount Etna Explodes. Sicily's Mount Etna exploded for two hours in a spectacular show on Wednesday night, shooting blazing lava 660 feet into the Mediterranean sky. The Poseidon Monitoring Center reported that a series of strong tremors preceded the explosions, which spewed a fountain of red lava from the volcano's southeast crater. Local authorities said the eruptions did not threaten any nearby communities. Etna is Europe's highest and most active volcano. Its eruptions have been historically recorded back to 1500 B.C. [from Discovery On-Line]

March 23, 2000: Huge Iceberg Breaking

Off Antarctica. An iceberg twice the size of Delaware is breaking away from the Ross Ice Shelf in Antarctica and will soon be afloat.

Scientists from the Antarctic Meteorological Research Center at the University of Wisconsin reported on Wednesday that polar satellites show clearly defined fissures delineating the enormous piece that is about to be set adrift in the Ross Sea.

The new iceberg will be 183 miles long by 22 miles wide. One of the scientists, Matthew Lazzara, said: "This is a very big iceberg, close to a record, if not a new record." He reported that the iceberg is much larger than the one that broke away last October, threatening shipping lanes off the lower tip of Argentina. The group did not have information on how the new iceberg would affect shipping in the region. [from Discovery On-Line]

Krsanna Duran, <<http://www.atnet.net/~timestar/iam.htm>>. Timestar Predictions, posted March 1.

MARCH 6-18:

Solar eruptions will begin to increase in this window before reaching a mini-peak in late March. The number of moderate earthquakes (4-6 magnitude) will increase along with volcanic activity on the Atlantic seaboard from Canada to Brazil. The Montserrat volcano in the Caribbean is likely to become more active. Larger earthquakes (6-8 magnitude) are possible on the South Pacific and Indian Oceans.

MARCH 17-29:

Look out for whale/dolphin beachings and other creature disorientation as well as volcanic eruptions in the far northern Atlantic. The Moon glyph is situated in the south Pacific area associated with old Lemuria. Activity in this window reflects the feminine receptive polarity that complements the active stimuli of the Sun. This is a key site where islands will rise in the next four years and underwater volcanoes will be active here.

MARCH 26-APRIL 7:

Surprise storms, meteorites, and gamma ray bursts are likely in this window. The Earth glyph is situated in the south Atlantic area associated with old Atlantis. The Sandwich Islands in the south Atlantic may be outcroppings of areas that were scientific bases during the Atlantean era. Atlantean technology buried in the south Atlantic may be periodically activated, causing sudden storms in the present time. Large earthquakes (6-8 magnitude) are likely in the North Pacific.

VOLCANO MONTSERRAT ERUPTS

March 22, 2000: Montserrat's Soufriere Hills Volcano exploded late Monday, sending a thundering 30,000-foot cloud of ash into the Caribbean sky. The eruption sent up incandescent rocks and triggered avalanches of fiery boulders.

Boulders cascaded over the Belham Valley Bridge where Britain's Prince Andrew stood last week during his visit to the British island.

The huge ash cloud created thunder and lightning as it rose and forced air traffic controllers to divert aircraft around the island.

Seismologists had predicted that, after a six-month period of quiet, the volcano was ending four years of explosions, but last November, the mountain again came to life. Chelston Lee, a spokesman for the Montserrat Volcano Observatory, reported on Tuesday: "There were loud noises and thunder, glowing rocks flying in the air." The explosion blanketed the island's northern "safe zone" with a coat of ash.

The reawakening of Soufriere Hills Volcano is a blow to the British territory that has been rebuilding a habitable safe zone about five miles away from the mountain. [End quoting]

ROUSE YOUR RABBLE! FORGOTTEN FACTS ABOUT HILLARY CLINTON

From the INTERNET, sent by a thoughtful reader, 3/27/00: [quoting]

Back in 1969 a group of Black Panthers decided that a fellow Black named Alex Rackley needed to die. Rackley was a fellow Panther suspected of disloyalty. Rackley was first tied to a chair. Once safely immobilized, his friends tortured him for hours by, among other things, pouring boiling water on him. When they got tired of torturing Rackley, Black Panther member Warren Kimbo took Mr. Rackley outside and put a bullet in his head. Rackley's body was later found floating in a river about 25 miles north of New Haven, Connecticut.

Perhaps at this point you're curious as to what happened to these Black Panthers? In 1977, that's only eight years later, only one of the killers was still in jail. The shooter, Warren Kimbro, managed to get a scholarship to Harvard. He later became an assistant dean at Eastern Connecticut State College. Isn't that something? As a '60s radical you can pump a bullet into someone's head, and a few years later, in the same state, you can become an assistant college dean! Only in America.

Erica Huggins was the lady who served the Panthers by boiling the water for Mr. Rackley's torture. Some years later Ms. Huggins was elected to a California School Board.

How in the world do you think these killers got off so easy? Maybe it was in some part due to the efforts of two people who came to the defense of the Panthers. These two people actually went so far as to shut down Yale University with demonstrations in defense of the accused Black Panthers during their trial.

One of these people was none other than Bill Lan Lee. Mr. Lee, or Mr. Lan Lee, as the case may be, isn't a college dean. He isn't a member of a California School Board. He is now head of the U.S. Justice Department's Civil Rights Division.

Ok, so who was the other Panther defender? Is this other notable Panther defender now a school board member? Is this other Panther apologist now an assistant college dean? No, neither.

The other Panther defender was, like Lee, a radical law student at Yale University at the time. She is now known as The "smartest woman in the world". She is none other than the official Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate from the State of New York—our lovely First Lady, the incredible Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Pass this on! [End quoting]

See the Bush-Greenspan series elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM, by Sherman Skolnick, for even more "credentials" which can be bestowed upon this prima donna of the political arena. Hillary has been a very busy lady, quite skilled in the dirtier side of "successful" political action and surely has "earned" her current status—from many years of being a dutiful puppet of the dark so-called "elite" who control this planet from behind the scenes.

BIG OIL AND THE PLAN FOR POPULATION CONTROL

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 3/9/00: [quoting]

By Byron T. Weeks, MD

There are legitimate concerns about pollution. The very air we breath is poisonous. Smog is irritating to the lungs and cases of chronic bronchitis and emphysema are increasingly common. People are dying. The forests are shrinking. The discharge of pollutants into the lakes and rivers is poisoning the waters, and when the great rivers have collected all the contaminating oil and sludge and discharged it into the oceans, the shrimp, the salmon, the oysters, the fish, the whales, and the dolphins get sick and die. And vital oxygen-giving plankton is gradually disappearing from the seas.

We now have very large and effective environmental movements who are telling us that the pollution of the ecosystems is killing the planet. These well-intentioned groups are being funded by big oil and the other large corporations, and they are convinced that the causes of pollution directly relate to overpopulation. They claim that there are just too many people on the planet and, like infection in a host organism, they are causing the Earth to sicken and die. There are too many people with too many gasoline powered cars, using too many petrochemicals and plastics, all of which end up in the soil, in the water, and in the air we breath.

So now we are told that the world population must be reduced to an environmentally sustainable level. Plans are afoot to do just that. The globalist plan is to reduce the population over the next 20 years to about ten percent of the present total by means of famine, NBC (Nuclear-Biological-Chemical) warfare, contaminated vaccines, and mass murder. They plan to “re-wild” large parts of the planet, especially in North and South America, and bring back the mighty forests, and the flora and the fauna that existed before Columbus. They are importing wolves and grizzly bears back into the populated areas. Mountain lions may not be hunted, in order to increase their numbers and restore the “balance of Nature”.

Top members of the ultra-rich elite (the New World Order) such as Ted Turner and the Rockefellers, have bought up vast tracts of land and established huge ranches. They are raising large herds of elk, antelope, and buffalo which will be used in the re-wilding process. Eventually, according to the master plan, the forests and the rivers, and the vast, fertile plains will be teeming with wildlife, and the people, with their cattle and horses and sheep, their smog-belching automobiles, and their factories laden with chemical smoke, will all be gone. The disarmed farmers, ranchers, and townspeople will one day be moved out of the Heritage sites and UN Biospheres, and it will be done by the lethal force of UN soldiers and armed gangs, if necessary.

Deliberate attempts to reduce the food supply are underway. Hybrid seeds which germinate only once are replacing natural grains. Farmers are paid not to grow crops. Use of chemical and natural fertilizers is being reduced. The World Trade Organization, along with NAFTA and GATT are strangling the stock raisers, the wheat farmers, and the potato growers by rendering profitless what they have long produced, and importing grains, beef, wool, and produce from foreign countries where labor is cheap and people are just another commodity. According to the master plan, North America, the bread basket of the world, will revert to wilderness once more. South America will be depopulated and the jungles of the Amazon will return to their former unpolluted and pristine state.

So goes the great GLOBAL 2000 plan as devised by the globalist Committee of 300 and the Club of Rome.

But wait just a moment, here! Are these theories valid? Who are the real major polluters of the planet? Who sinks the oil wells and produces the gasoline? Who builds the internal combustion engines? Who manufactures the petrochemicals, and the petroleum- and coal tar-derived pharmaceuticals? Who, through the power of great wealth, has influenced the Congress and the state legislators to pass laws prohibiting the development of non-petroleum, non-polluting energy sources? Do the people know that the researches of Nikola Tesla, Wilhelm Reich, Neuman, and others, who have developed the overunity engines and other free energy devices, have been suppressed? There are ways of drawing limitless energy from the Van Allen belt, and from the electromagnetic fields of the Earth itself.

There are actual methods of producing energy by extraction of burnable hydrogen from water. There are batteries and fuel cells being developed that could deliver several days of power to electric cars. It has been known for years that free energy could actually transform the world and release the people from their semi-slavery, their bondage to Big Oil and Big Business, and the predatory taxation of Big Government, for cheap sources of power could decentralize the population centers, allowing the people to leave the teeming, smoky cities and make their homes in idyllic rural areas. Free energy and cheap sources of power would one day actually enable mankind to live in comfort without the petroleum and coal pollution that is killing the planet.

But the inventors and developers of free energy have been repeatedly suppressed through litigation, and some have even been murdered, and it is not difficult to figure out who was behind it all. Free energy would enable actual further increases in the world population, and would raise productivity, increase individual wealth, and make possible the release of all mankind from servitude to big business, big oil, and their funding of big government to keep themselves rolling in wealth at the expense of the ordinary citizen.

I am forced to remind you that both of the major political parties and the two major candidates presently running for the presidency of the United States of America are in thrall to the evil New World Order. The same is true in most of the larger countries of the world.

The criminal hypocrisy of the globalist hegemony must be revealed, for they are the real conspirators. Depopulation is not the answer. The monstrous plan for arbitrarily killing off 90% of the people, so that the ultra rich can continue to pollute the ecosystem, must be stopped.

So, what is the answer? It is FREE

ENERGY. We don't need to be eternally dependent upon the petroleum cartels. Plastics can be made from vegetable oils and fibers. Lubricants can be synthesized from vegetable oils. We must gradually and drastically reduce the use of petroleum and its products and begin to allow the free use of these new products and the known sources of limitless power. [End quoting]

There is absolutely no argument from The SPECTRUM on the above very well put statement. Awakening the suspicious people through truthful information is the route to a reversal of the plans of these so-called “elite” controllers. The question (and test) is whether many of the sleeping masses will bother to awaken before, like sheep, they are casualties of the slaughterhouse.

Now think about this statement that was made by one who should know: “Y2K will not blindside us like a truck; it will sneak up on us like an infestation of fleas.”

Some interesting facts:

Of well over 70 oil refineries reporting, most of them are either shut down or operating at very reduced capacities and their problems have gone up exponentially since January 1, 2000. Imagine that! This is not reported in your controlled media; it is on the Internet however. See <<http://nckodokan.com/charts/refineries1.html>> as one source and then run searches. And then consider this:

OPEC—THE NEW VILLAIN

From THE McALVANY INTELLIGENCE ADVISOR, March 2000, page 15, Jim Seabourn, 3/18/00: [quoting]

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) is made up of Algeria, Libya, Nigeria, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela.

These nations hate us, of course. All of them. They only do business with us because they need our money. This is what makes them such terrific fall guys for Mr. Greenspan. It is what makes him so lucky. He gets to blame his inflation on the OPEC oil producers, who nobody likes in the first place. With the current oil price blowup, the OPEC oil producers are in a position to become the bad guys (the scapegoats) in the world economy. They'll be blamed for knocking down Alan Greenspan's house of cards, and they've done nothing but act like the cartel they are.

THE MYSTERY

There is one factor in the current oil situation that is most mysterious and which the press seems to totally ignore. The world is currently experiencing an amazing epidemic of refinery and pipeline outages—perhaps sufficient to have affected production. Recent numbers of outages are stunning: 1997 had 6; 1998-29; 1999-90; and 2000-64 in January alone. [According to other reports I've seen, this is expected to increase until at least this summer before it starts to go back to normal.]

In large part, the causes of these outages are being kept largely under wraps and the press is not investigating the failures in any meaningful way. There is, of course, intense speculation that hidden Y2K problems are behind the rash of failures. There is some confirmation of this possibility from industry insiders, but the reports are somewhat sketchy. It is also possible that the industry deferred for many months the regular maintenance needed by the aging infrastructure during the panic to repair their Y2K problems.

If these oil infrastructure problems are real, whatever their cause, they will greatly exacerbate the global oil situation. No worse time could have been chosen. [End quoting]

Remember that the Y2K problem was known decades ago and was purposely not fixed sooner as part of the plan of the so-called "elite" for creating yet another panic in order to maintain control of the populations through fear and drained personal resources such as high gas pump prices.

CENSUS BUREAU SAYS IT WON'T PROSECUTE NON-FILERS

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 3/24/00: [quoting]

Americans critical of census questions unrelated to obtaining a national head-count were given some answers by Census 2000 Media Relations Director, Neil Tillman, who addressed everything from sampling arguments to enforcement actions.

Criticism of the census has revolved around many aspects of the decennial operation, but one of the questions most objected to by critics concerns inquiries into a person's race.

In an exclusive, in-depth, WorldNetDaily interview, Tillman explained the reason for race-related questions rests chiefly on the need to reapportion congressional representation—referring to the Constitution's sole stated purpose for the count. Such inquiries, said Tillman, are made to ensure each congressional district is racially diverse.

According to Census Bureau Director Kenneth Prewitt, households that provide the government with the mandated information are the glue of America.

"Every household that returns the form does strengthen the ties that do bind us together as a civilized society" Prewitt said at a press conference yesterday.

But not everyone agrees. WND (WorldNetDaily) has been bombarded with letters from Americans who object ideologically to the redistribution of wealth, and so are returning their census forms having answered only the question regarding the number of individuals in their household.

The penalty for not answering every question on the survey is $100. False answers garner a fine of up to $500. However, the law is unclear as to enforcement of such fines.

Apparently, lack of legal clarity is irrelevant, as Tillman revealed the Census Bureau is not going to collect any such fines.

"The Census Bureau is not an enforcement agency" he said, adding that any enforcement would have to come from the judicial system.

Although Tillman indicated lack of compliance will be handled on a case-by-case basis, he plainly stated the Bureau will not seek prosecution for incomplete forms.

"We don't want to intimidate people [into participating]" he said.

In cases where forms are incomplete, enumerators will contact households and "make every effort" to gather the requested information, but no fines will be levied.

The reason for completing the questionnaire "boils down to being a good citizen" Tillman said.

"The U.S. Constitution says the purpose of the census is to make an enumeration; that is, to take an accurate count of Americans for the purpose of apportioning congressional districts," he said. [And that is ALL!]

"But the federal government has gone far beyond that constitutional mandate, and uses the census to ask dozens of probing questions—including your official government racial classification, how much money you earn, the number of toilets in your home, whether you have trouble bathing, and how many cars you own."

Dasbach said answering only the head-count portion of the census is a way for Americans to "strike a blow for liberty, privacy, and limited government".

Julie Foster is a staff reporter for WorldNetDaily. [End quoting]

In the 3rd paragraph he says that they ask racial questions so that they can make every congressional district racially diverse. It is used in actual practice to control the races according to the politburo's desires.

The next 2 paragraphs state that by answering the questions it glues—binds—us together. It sure does, by giving the politburo information that helps them FENCE US INSIDE THEIR CORRALS—like sheep. Do we want to supply them with this much "glue"? The Constitution promises us privacy!

The census puppets also state that we should give the information "so we'll be good citizens". Politburo's definition of a good citizen is someone who always says "Yes, MASTER!"

Another very good reason to think before you answer the questions is that it has been documented that the Census Bureau made ILLEGAL use of the Census to round-up the Japanese during World War II to put them in the concentration camps—here in the "free USA"!

FEDERAL JUDGE PUTS BRAKES ON CENSUS BUREAU

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 3/28/00: [quoting]

By Sarah Foster, <www.worldnetdaily.com>

Americans who refuse to answer questions they consider invasive on their Census questionnaires will be able to sleep a little easier—at least for now.

A federal judge ruled yesterday that the Census Bureau has no automatic right to ask questions felt to be personal or intrusive and that it cannot threaten or prosecute citizens who refuse to answer such questions.

U.S. District Judge Melinda Harmon granted attorney Mark Brewer, of the Houston-based firm of Brewer and Pritchard, a temporary restraining order in a Census suit filed by five Houston, Texas, residents. Attorneys for the government conceded that none of the five plaintiffs will be subject to actual or threatened prosecution during this litigation which is expected to go to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The ruling is especially far-reaching.

"For the moment, this will prevent prosecution against any American who chooses not to answer questions other than the number of people living at their address—that's all that's required by the Constitution" Brewer told WorldNetDaily. "It's a huge victory for the Constitution and for privacy-loving Americans, because we now have a ruling in a federal court case.

"The Census Bureau cannot extract this information under threat of criminal prosecution—that was the issue I presented to the court" he said.

The penalty for not answering each question asked on the forms is $100. False answers can cost up to $500 in fines.

The five—Edgar Morales, Laique Rehman, Nouhad Bassila, George Breckenridge, and William Jeffrey Van Fleet—are American citizens.

Brewer said his clients are not part of any organized group, "though that is what people have assumed. They are just ordinary people who want to be counted, but who do not want to give up their privacy to do so. That's the bottom line."

"What the court did today" Brewer explained, "was to order that the Bureau could neither threaten nor actually prosecute these people for not answering any question other than how many folks live at that address. It's the first time to my knowledge that this has happened in the 213 years since we've had a Constitution."

As he put it: “We hit a home run.”

Recalling his day in court, Brewer said he told the judge she was “the only barrier standing between government on the one hand and these five—I think very brave—people and the American people generally on the other. I pointed out that the government lawyer had just told her that he can ask anything he darn near pleases. Where does it stop?”

Almost as important as the ruling itself is that the government conceded that the plaintiffs have “standing”, meaning they had a right to bring an action against the Census Bureau in the first place.

“This removed what was potentially the biggest impediment to the case moving forward” said Brewer. “We’re now looking forward to phase two, which is when the case will be submitted on summary judgement in two weeks.”

“This is what they call a three-judge court case” he explained. “It’s federal, but it’s a very unusual procedure. There are only a few instances where it’s permitted by federal law, this being the primary one: pertaining to census and apportionment. The case is filed like any other case in federal court, then it is referred by the chief judge of the circuit.”

In this case, that’s the Fifth Circuit in New Orleans, headed by Judge Carol King.

Said Brewer, “The way it works is that when a motion of temporary restraining order is filed, which we did on March 23, the single judge who gets the initial assignment of the case can hear it. That’s really about the only thing the judge can hear and rule upon. Then the three-judge court is convened and the case is submitted on trial—and here it’s for a summary judgment because there’s no dispute of the facts.

“Both sides have the right of appeal” Brewer continued, “and we’re assuming they (the Census Bureau) will appeal it. And if we lose—we’ll appeal it. Either way, it’s on its way to the Supreme Court.”

Brewer is handling the case pro bono—that is, without charge, for the public good.

“One of the things I stressed to the judge” said Brewer, [is that] neither the plaintiffs nor I want to interrupt the census. To the contrary. I want to ensure its constitutional integrity and validity. But when you look at the lowered response rate, which by the Census Bureau’s own admission is going to occur with the use of the long form, then you can only conclude that they are intentionally erecting a roadblock to getting an accurate count. They are intentionally sacrificing an accurate count in order to obtain information through statistics that they’re not even entitled to obtain.

“Unfortunately, we know the government is capable of misusing census data” he said. “The federal government was only able to find, round up, and imprison Americans of Japanese ancestry in 1942 by the illegal use of Census Bureau data.” [End quoting]

It’s about time something was done about confining these hoodlums who want every bit of our privacy, any way they can obtain it.

MALE SEXUAL DYSFUNCTION TRIGGERED BY ASPARTAME (NUTRA SWEET)

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.sightings.com>>, 2/23/00: [quoting]

By James Bowen, MD 719-332-0033

(For Immediate Press Release—Permission to Publish)

From Betty Martini <Mission-Possible-USA@Altavista.net>, 2-23-00, <<http://www.dorway.com>>.

Aspartame damages the hypothalamus. The hypothalamus produces gonadotropin-releasing hormone (GRH). The GRH goes down the stalk between the hypothalamus and pituitary and causes the pituitary then to produce gonadotropins. The ganglia goes to the testicles and causes them to produce testosterone. When you’re causing hypothalamic destruction with neuroexcitotoxins like NutraSweet, you’re suppressing the formation of male hormone without which there is no sexual drive or pleasure. In original studies Aspartame triggered atrophied testes and testicular tumors.

Aspartame destroys the myelin sheaths and, when that happens, the nerves and sheaths try to regenerate, but now the signals can be crossed. So the pleasure receptor of the penis sends the signals, but it arrives at the brain at a different receptor and not recognized as pleasure. Also, the ganglia collections of nerve sheaths and cells that are kind of little mini brains that lie inside the thorax and abdomen in front of the spinal cord are important in both sexual arousal, penile tumescence (erection), and in producing orgasm.

The methyl alcohol-type of poisoning from NutraSweet is the foremost known cause of degeneration of the sheaths and the ganglia. Also methyl alcohol-type poisoning is the foremost known cause of antimyelin antibodies, so that thereafter the immune system can carry out similar destructions in the absence of Aspartame.

Now, the excitatory area of the cerebral cortex which allows men to be excited, interested, and pleased by sex, atrophies when the testosterone is suppressed. Moreover, you have an independent neurotoxin generated by the isolated phenylalanine. Anytime you have a neurotoxin making the brain sick, sexual pleasure is obliterated because the brain is the most important sexual organ. You have classic alcohol poisoning and alcoholism, and alcohol poisoning is notoriously famous for wiping out the male animal.

Serotonin and dopamine levels are suppressed. With your serotonin, dopamine, and other neurotransmitters in the brain obliterated, life becomes one long, dark, hopeless, sleepless, pleasureless night. Turns the goodness of sex into a wistful memory instead of a reality. Pepsi isn’t so peppy after all!

So the drug and chemical companies make the males impotent, and then sell them Viagra as a remedy, which from the reports coming out is causing many other serious problems and even death. TOP LOS ANGELES COP SLAMS PROP 21 “A BAD LAW”

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.sightings.com>>, 2/20/00: [quoting]

“Proposition 21 is a bad law that goes way too far” said LAPD Cmdr. Dan Koenig, formerly the department’s gang coordinator and a founder of the D.A.R.E. youth program to prevent drug abuse. Koenig said the measure would not affect gang crime, because Los Angeles gang members are, on average, 23 years old.

<<http://www.latimes.com/print/metro/20000218/t000015993.html>>

If you are a California voter, please inform yourself about Prop 21 and get to the polls March 7. [See end note]

This law:

- * Makes $400 worth of “vandalism” (including writing your name in wet cement) a felony good to jail a child for up to one year.

- * Lets cops wire-tap the homes of families with “suspicious” children (suspicious—three or more who look like they might be in a gang).

- * Is designed to put more kids in jail even though juvenile crime rates are way down.

It was sponsored, like all pro-jailing initiatives, by the California Correctional Peace Officers Association (CCPOA), the trade group that paid Pete Wilson $2,000,000 for his 1998 re-election bid. They have a lot to thank Mr. Wilson for. California has more people in prison than any state in the Union per capita, and the US leads the world in prisoners with 25% of the world’s total.

Only Hitler, Stalin, and Mao found it necessary to jail such a high proportion of their citizens: <<http://www.brasscheck.com/heartfield/gallery2.html>>

If you are inclined to help, go for it. The bad guys are ahead on this one as of the last polls:

The Criminalization Of Childhood, Ken McCarthy, <ken@brasscheck.com>, 2-20-00:

"Despite numerous studies that show there has been a sharp decrease in juvenile crime rates since 1993, the media spotlight on young offenders has created the illusion of a new breed of juvenile "super predators". This is particularly true in California—home to one-fifth of America's 100,000 young prisoners—where a punitive measure called the "Gang Violence And Juvenile Crime Prevention Act" has made it onto the March 2000 ballot. Proposition 21, as it is known, is sponsored by former Governor Pete Wilson and a host of multinational corporations, including Chevron and Transamerica."

—Carrie Ching from "Putting More Juveniles Behind Bars":

Children are far more likely to be the victims of crime than the perpetrators of it and crime rates among juveniles have gone DOWN steadily since 1993. But that didn't stop CCPOA from inspiring its former man in the governor's mansion, Pete Wilson, to call for the jailing of more children.

What is CCPOA? The California Correctional Peace Officers Association (CCPOA) The trade association for prison guards, one of the fastest growing professions in California. Since 1984, California has built twenty-one new prisons, and spends nearly $4 billion a year maintaining them. CCPOA membership has doubled in the last ten years alone, and annual dues, reflecting the prosperity of its members, have tripled. The CCPOA was among Wilson's largest supporters, giving him over $2,000,000 for his 1998 governor's campaign alone.

Who else is sponsoring Proposition 21? Oil and utility companies like PG&E, ARCO, and Chevron. Chevron is one of the many companies in this country that utilizes cheap prison labor. (25% of all people in jail or prison on Earth are imprisoned in the United States.) California offers a Department of Corrections Joint Venture Program that gives corporations sweetheart deals on leased state land and even lets them set up operations within prison walls. The lure? According to materials promoting the program: "state tax incentives, discount rates on Worker's Compensation Insurance, and no benefit expenses".

How does Proposition 21 propose to deal with the "falling" rate of juvenile crime?

* The minimum damages to qualify for felony vandalism would be reduced from $50,000 to $400. A child convicted of writing his or her name in wet cement would be subject to one year in prison.

* Police officers would be permitted to initiate an investigation of any "suspicious-looking" group of three or more young people and wiretap their family's homes in search of evidence of "gang activity".

* Children as young as 14 could be tried as adults, and children as young as 16 sentenced to life imprisonment without parole or the death penalty.

Is any of this even remotely necessary? Here are some facts:

* In the eight years between 1990 and 1998, California's juvenile felony rate dropped 30 percent.

* California's juvenile homicide rate is down 61 percent.

* Nationally, the rate of violent crimes committed by juveniles is lower than it was twenty years ago.

It's high time that people all over America declare war on organizations like CCPOA and put people in the management of law enforcement, whose goal is to serve and protect, not serve themselves at the expense of the most vulnerable members of our society. [End quoting]

PHANTOM LIMB MYSTERY SOLVED

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 3/22/00: [quoting]

Part Sherlock Holmes, part Oliver Sacks, V.S. Ramachandran figured out how to rewrite the brain's map.

Norman Doidg — National Post

Lord Nelson had one. After an attack on Santa Cruz de Tenerife, during which he lost his right arm, he began to experience vividly the ongoing presence of his lost limb, a phantom limb. Nelson himself thought it was "direct evidence for the existence of the soul" reasoning that if an arm can exist after being removed, so, then, might the whole person exist after the annihilation of the body.

For centuries the phantom limb remained a medical and neurological mystery. Phantom limbs are not mere phantom presences, though; they are lively entities. Some who have lost arms in automobile accidents can feel their lost arms gesticulating when they talk, waving hello to friends or reaching spontaneously for the ringing phone.

Yet, unfortunately, they often give rise to a chronic pain, bringing them to the attention of physicians. Yet how to remove a pain from a limb that isn't there? Medical explanations till recently had been twofold. Some wondered whether it wasn't a kind of wishful thinking—a denial of the painful loss. But most doctors assumed that the nerve endings at the farthest end of the amputation were being stimulated or irritated by movement. Yet even when the nerves were cleanly cut, the phantom often remained.

The phenomenon has finally been figured out, by one of the most intriguing neurologists of our time, Dr. V.S. Ramachandran, whose book Phantoms In The Brain makes extraordinary reading and places him among the great science writers, alongside Dr. Oliver Sacks, who wrote the introduction.

Ramachandran is an original. He eschews a small-minded science that insists that the only science that counts is large statistical studies. He is a sleuth, solving mysteries, beginning with single cases, in the manner of Sherlock Holmes or Freud.

As he puts it, with his usual flair, if one presented a pig to a skeptical scientist, insisting it spoke English, then waved his hand, and the pig spoke English, would it make sense for the skeptic to argue "But that is just one pig. Show me another and I might believe you!"

Ramachandran has made numerous discoveries about phantoms and other mind-brain conundrums. But perhaps his most important contribution is to show that numerous brain maps can be modified.

We are each born with a map in our brain to which sensory surfaces of our bodies are connected. The map was first drawn by the brilliant Canadian neurologist Dr. Wilder Penfield. The brain, though made of nerve tissue, has no sensory endings. Because some brain surgery doesn't require general anaesthetic, patients can remain conscious.

While operating on epileptics, Penfield stimulated parts of the brain map, and asked the patients where they felt the stimulus in their body. It was in this way that he constructed the first map of the sensory cortex. Interestingly, on the map, the face is upside down, sitting on the trunk with the lips close to the arms. The genital area is mapped close to the foot.

No one knew what to make of these connections. Martha Farah of the University of Pennsylvania had noted that babies, curled up in utero, often have their hands touching their cheeks and their legs crossed and folded up against their genitals, and wondered whether these four areas were jointly stimulated during brain-map development.

A breakthrough insight came when Ramachandran read a paper by Dr. Tom Pons of the National Institutes of Health. It had always been assumed that brain maps in adults were fixed. But Pons had worked with monkeys that had undergone a procedure in which their nerve fibres from one arm to the brain had been surgically cut. Eleven years after the cut, Pons tried stroking the useless hand, and found, as expected, that there were no signs that the brain sensory region was being stimulated. But Pons was shocked to find the part of the brain that mapped the monkey's face showed signs of being stimulated.

Immediately, Ramachandran figured out this might explain the phantom-limb phenomenon. He found a phantom-limb patient to test his hypothesis. The poor man had a chronic itch that he could never scratch. Ramachandran found that when he touched the man's face, it evoked the phantom-limb sensation. Knowing that Penfield's map had shown that the lips were close to the arm, he reasoned that somehow the adjacent facial regions on the brain map had taken over the mapping of the missing limb. He even helped the man relieve his chronic itch by getting him to scratch his lips.

Ramachandran went on to make other important discoveries. Several patients who had lost a leg reported, with great embarrassment, that when they had sex, they felt their orgasms with great intensity all down their phantom lost leg. Ramachandran, instead of dismissing them as crazy, pointed out that the genitals were next to the feet on the brain map. The genital stimulation had invaded the phantom foot. (Ramachandran wonders whether foot fetishism derives from this genital-foot connection.)

Women who have had mastectomies have reported sexual excitement when their ears, clavicles, and sternums are stimulated. All three are close to the nipples on the brain map.

Some patients have a chronic sense that their phantom limbs are frozen. Ramachandran discovered all these people had their damaged arms placed in slings for several months before they were amputated. The brain seemed to record for all time the fixed position of the arms. His genius was to ask: If paralysis can be learned, can it be unlearned?

He then invented a mirror device that tricks the brain into learning to move the frozen phantom arm by watching one's normal arm move in the mirror. He's since used it to allow patients to rewire their brain map, to forever rid themselves of the painful phantom. V.S. Ramachandran has thus become the first doctor to perform the impossible: the successful amputation of a phantom limb. [End quoting]

This series of discoveries could help many people who presently suffer from these annoying or downright debilitating "phantom limb" effects.

THE FORD MADE OF HEMP

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.davidicke.com>>, 3/9/00: [quoting]

Excerpted from:

GROWN TO DRIVE METAL, PLASTIC, GLASS—AND PLANTS? WHAT KIND OF CARS ARE THEY BUILDING?

by Curt Guyette

What some might call the car of the future has already made its big debut. The unveiling came in Dearborn—more than 50 years ago. David Morris, executive director of the Minneapolis-based Institute for Local Self-Reliance, described the event in a recent issue of his organization's newsletter:

"On August 14, 1941, at the 15th Annual Dearborn Michigan Homecoming Day celebration, Henry Ford unveiled his biological car. Seventy percent of the body of the cream-colored automobile consisted of a mat of long and short fibers from field straw, cotton linters, hemp, flax, ramie and slash pine. The other 30 percent consisted of a filler of soymeal and a liquid bioresin.

"The timing gears, horn buttons, gearshift knobs, door handles and accelerator pedals were derived from soybeans. The tires were made from goldenrods bred by Ford's close friend Thomas Edison. The gas tank contained a blend: about 85 percent gasoline and about 15 percent corn-derived ethanol."

To prove the vehicle's superiority, Ford demonstrated the strength of the car body by smashing an ax against the trunk, only to have it bounce off. For some it remains a landmark event.

"That's one of my favorite pictures" says Richard Wool, who is at the vanguard of an emerging industry that's rediscovering what Ford thought to be a better way of making cars. Following in Ford's track, Wool is developing adhesive bioresins from soy oil at the University of Delaware.

"To Henry Ford", wrote Morris, "the vegetable car was the perfect vehicle for driving the American farmer out of a 20-year economic depression. But after World War II, the maturation of the petrochemical industry and the export-driven revival of American agriculture, seemed to relegate the idea of a biological car to the dustbins of history. Fifty years later, at the twilight of the 20th century, Ford's dreams are again attracting attention. Working independently, scientists, engineers, and entrepreneurs are finding more and more ways to incorporate vegetable-derived products into your standard car."

From Popular Mechanics, December 1941:

Over in England it's saccharine for sugar; on the continent it's charcoal "gasogenes" in the rumble seat instead of gasoline in the tank. Here in America there's plenty of sugar, plenty of gasoline. Yet there's an industrial revolution in progress just the same, a revolution in materials that will affect every home. After twelve years of research, the Ford Motor Company has completed an experimental automobile with a plastic body. Although its design takes advantage of the properties of plastics, the streamline car does not differ greatly in appearance from its steel counterpart.

The only steel in the hand-made body is found in the tubular welded frame on which are mounted 14 plastic panels, 3/16-inch thick. Composed of a mixture of farm crops and synthetic chemicals, the plastic is reported to withstand a blow 10 times as great as steel without denting. Even the windows and windshield are of plastic. The total weight of the plastic car is about 2,000 pounds, compared with 3,000 pounds for a steel automobile of the same size. Although no hint has been given as to when plastic cars may go into production, the experimental model is pictured as a step toward materialization of Henry Ford's belief that some day he would "grow automobiles from the soil".

When Henry Ford recently unveiled his plastic car, the result of 12 years of research, he gave the world a glimpse of the automobile of tomorrow, its tough panels molded under hydraulic pressure of 1,500 pounds per square inch from a recipe that calls for 70 percent of cellulose fibers from wheat straw, hemp and sisal, plus 30 percent resin binder. The only steel in the car is its tubular welded frame. The plastic car weighs a ton—1,000 pounds lighter than a comparable steel car. Manufacturers are already taking a low-priced plastic car to test the public's taste by 1943. [End quoting]

This reminds me that a professor I had in organic chemistry in 1949 told my class that tire companies can make a tire that would outlast the life of the car—if they wanted to do so.

Just think: an almost indestructible, environmentally friendly car body with a free energy-type of power to run it was possible many decades ago. And yet we still remain slaves to an outdated petrochemical industry.

Forty-three miles northeast of Lubbock, Texas, is the town of Lockney. Lockney's school district has passed a regulation that all teachers and students from sixth through 12th grade must pass drug tests. Parents must sign consent forms and, if they refuse, their child will be treated as failing the test and will be punished as a drug user, according to The Lubbock Avalanche Journal. An ACLU spokesman, on a local radio talk show, practically begged parents to initiate a court case, but none would buck the school police for "fear of retaliation". [End quoting]

NATO MOVIE?

From MILITARY magazine, Mar. 2000: [quoting]

After watching how Clinton got NATO to start what was to be a three- or four-day bombing strike on Yugoslavia, followed by him assuring Milosevic that there would be no ground campaign, which resulted in Milosevic driving ethnic Albanians out of Kosovo and presenting NATO with a massive refugee problem, everyone around the world came to the conclusion that Clinton started a war with no plan on how it was to be conducted. Next came more blunders, with more civilian buses being bombed than Serb tanks, and you sure as hell didn't want to be the night janitor in a government building in Belgrade. We were told the reason we didn't want to bomb where Milosevic lives was because he has a painting by Rembrandt there. Next came the bombing of the Chinese embassy with three missiles. Was the staff at NATO using a script from an old Peter Sellers movie? [End quoting]

Don't for one minute think this was all a big blunder. What better way to disguise or diffuse hidden agendas than by such "apparent" mistakes.

MONSANTO'S LATEST GENETICALLY ENGINEERED CORN

Excerpted from the INTERNET, EarthVision Reports, 3/1/00: [quoting]

Reply-To: <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 29, 2000: In August 1999, Monsanto petitioned the US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to approve a new variety of corn genetically engineered to kill corn rootworms, important pests in the US Corn Belt. The corn has been engineered to produce a specific toxin originally derived from a soil microorganism, bacillus thuringiensis (Bt). Bt corn varieties that have been grown commercially in the United States since 1996 target European corn borers, whose adult stage is a moth. Monsanto's new variety of Bt corn is the first to target corn rootworms, whose adult stage is a beetle.

The Union of Concerned Scientists (UCS) calls on EPA to deny approval of Monsanto's new corn variety because of inadequate testing for environmental impacts and lack of a credible resistance-management strategy.

EPA is reviewing company data on the new crop and is expected to make a decision later this year whether or not to allow the Bt corn seeds on the market. The public comment period on the application ends March 20. Write to EPA and urge the Agency to deny Monsanto's application.

Corn rootworms have become major pests in some parts of the Corn Belt—costing growers hundreds of millions of dollars each year in reduced yields and insecticide use. For the last few decades, many farmers have kept corn rootworms under control by using either insecticides or rotating corn and soybeans. The two-crop rotation held the rootworms in check because the adults laid eggs in cornfields and then died off when that field was rotated to soybeans. Recently, however, some of the pests have adapted to the two-crop rotation by laying their eggs in soybean fields so the worms have a ready food source the next summer, when the field is rotated to corn.

Past control of corn rootworms by alternating corn and soybeans is a testament to the power of crop rotation to suppress pests, although sustainable farmers generally recommend three-to-six-year rotations as a more effective method. Had multiple-crop rotations rather than continuous corn or two-crop rotations been the norm the past few decades, corn rootworms would in all likelihood not be the problem they are today.

Action: Write EPA and tell them not to approve commercialization of Bt corn targeted at rootworms because:

* Monsanto has submitted only an outline of a resistance—management strategy.

* Because rootworms present different problems than corn borers, the company will need to do considerably more research before it can devise a comprehensive plan to delay the evolution of resistance to Bt in corn rootworms. [End quoting]

Evidently Monsanto wants to be hurt again like they've recently been hurt with public and professional outcry and backlash—but then again, maybe they're playing the "wear us down" game and figure we'll get too tired to do anything else if they hit us again.

COMPUTERS & SOFTWARE: INTERNET GRID CONNECTION

A Dallas company has found a way to send voice, video, and computer data through the power grid [your house's electric lines]. If it catches on, the new technology will permit nearly instantaneous data transfer between any two computers connected to the grid.

For years researchers have been trying to send phone and data signals over power lines, but they had not been able to overcome line noise and the tendency of transformers to scramble signals. Media Fusion's solution is a proprietary technology called Sub Carrier Modulation. Devised by physicist Luke Stewart, the company's chief scientist, the technology sends data not through the power lines themselves, but on a microwave signal placed on the magnetic field surrounding those lines. To generate this signal, the company has installed a microwave laser, or maser, at the NASA Stennis Space Center in Starkville, Mississippi. The maser has enough power to meet the data needs for the entire country, says the company.

All that's required in the home are outlet connectors, into which you plug the computer's power cable and modem. When you boot your computer, the Stennis substation senses it and opens a connection. Your computer then thinks it's connected to a standard phone line.

If your Internet service provider supports the technology, you could link directly to its server, eliminating the slow process of breaking data into small chunks, routing it through several computers, then reassembling it. In fact, Stewart says the technology is fast enough to handle high-density data like interactive television. But you'll only get the full benefits when linked to another grid-connected computer. Calls routed to computers on standard telephone lines will move at conventional speeds.

The company is currently testing the system in 100,000 homes in Texas and Oklahoma.

If all goes well, Stewart hopes to begin licensing the technology to phone, cable, and utility companies within a year. Media Fusion estimates that the in-home hardware will cost less than $60; prices for the service will vary by provider. — Charles Wardell

[End quoting]

If this technology is now available in the public sector, wonder how long it has been utilized in the secret and military domains? And just what kinds of surveillance applications do you think such technology affords those who may want access to your personal computer contents?

JURY EXONERATES COL. BO GRITZ & ASSOCIATE SHELDON ROBINSON

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.sightings.com>>: [quoting]

By Verne E. Fuerst, the Voice News Online, Winsted, CT 06098.

Volume 4, Issue 17, March 17-23, 2000

<<http://www.thevoicenews.com/issue/jury.html>>.

A jury of Six Petit-Jurors found Lt. Col. James "Bo" Gritz and co-defendant Sheldon Robinson of Dallas, Texas, "NOT GUILTY" of all charges levied against them by the State, on Tuesday, March 8, 2000.

This long overdue verdict came after just one day of deliberation, two months of intensive trial, and more than ten months of jury preparation, etc. at the Enfield Superior Court (GA-13) under the direction of Judge Nicola E. Rubinow. Upon dismissal of all charges against James "Bo" Gritz and Sheldon Robinson, similar charges pending against Jim Gritz, the son of Col. Gritz, will also be dismissed. This case has been pending since September 30, 1996.

Unfortunately, the costs to the defendants in terms of personal loss, hardship, and financial ruin, due to the State's mismanagement and gross lack of forthrightness in this matter, will result in a number of lawsuits, attempting to at least financially repair and "make whole" again those persons severely damaged.

The most regrettable and unforgivable plunder and tragedy created by the Connecticut Family Court System in the case of Jon and Ben, the two minor children of Linda Wiegand, calls for an independent investigation by a special police crime squad, as was suggested by Senior Assistant State's Attorney John Massameno in 1998. The objective of such an investigation is to bring to trial and justice those individuals culpable in the commission of crimes and subsequent cover-up. Since when can the State take two small, severely abused children from their biological mother and place them deliberately into the custody of their alleged abusers? This grievous offense was committed by officers of the family court and other state officials, over the repeated objections and desperate pleadings of the children's biological mother, Linda Wiegand.

Upon the rendering of the jury's "NOT GUILTY" verdict and total vindication on all charges, "Bo" Gritz told me, in an exit interview, that "It isn't over! Linda Wiegand is going to challenge Connecticut's Courts!"

What "Bo" Gritz had in mind was summed-up in a written statement he handed me, saying: "This case is not about me, my son Jim, or Sheldon Robinson—it never has been. This is about little children wrongfully awarded into the custody of the persons they say raped them. It is about intimidating 'extralegal' court tactics, and a constipated state bureaucracy that cannot protect victims. It is about making large sums of money through phony defamation suits; judges approving outrageous assessments forever placing righteous parents in jeopardy and contempt; not caring what is right, and the fact that Connecticut would rather bury a protective mother and her small sons, than face a sue-happy attorney." Incidentally, this latter attorney used to be court clerk at DCF.

"Bo" Gritz continues: "America should take note that Jon Wiegand made a 65-page sworn court-recorded deposition on August 1, 1996 at the CT Department of Children & Families (DCF) in Hartford, detailing the many sexual assaults endured by both him and his younger brother, Ben. When appointed attorneys couldn't force Jon to retract his testimony of abuse, the statement was sealed and the boy required to return home with the perpetrator!"

The Colonel then referred to "a two-year investigation by State's Senior Assistant Attorney John Massameno, submitted to his superiors on October 28, 1998, which concludes that Jon and Ben were abused and that Linda Wiegand had acted correctly in breaking a court order and taking her sons underground. Still the boys remain in the predator's hands and Linda Wiegand continues to be persecuted by Assistant State's Attorney John Malone of Enfield. When Prosecutor Massameno volunteered to testify as a defense witness in my trial, he was disallowed (barred from testifying). His report, exonerating Linda Wiegand and exculpatory to me, was sealed and a gag order applied to curtail distribution of the State's Attorney's findings! Massameno said that [there should have been an arrest], but 'no one in Hartford wanted to be a hero'. Prosecutor Malone would have continued the cover-up if Massameno had not demanded release of his findings."

"Sheldon Robinson from Dallas, Texas, was arrested on bogus charges using fabricated police information hoping he would turn state's evidence against me or Linda Wiegand," continues Gritz's statement. "Prosecutor John Malone also offered me a free ride if I would just sign a statement implicating Ms. Wiegand in a criminal conspiracy. Malone was perfectly aware of the contents of Massameno's report. When questioned by Judge Nicola Rubinow, Malone's response was: 'I just do what I'm told'! Officer David Reese from the Suffield Police Department was proven to be, at best, incompetent. He admitted to numerous mistakes and gross sworn oversights."

Gritz's statement continues: "Attorney Louis Kiefer, the former DCF court clerk, representing Thomas Wilkinson, sues any person, entity, media, or government official who probes his client. Kiefer sued and lost his case, including an appeal, in Federal District Court against the State of Vermont for arresting Wilkinson. Others (including the Hartford Advocate) have settled out of court for large sums of money (approximately $300,000). He manipulated an outrageous Exparte award of $500,000 for Wilkinson, plus $50,000 in fees for himself, and more than $3,000/month in alimony and child support—all at 8% interest, compounded while Linda Wiegand was underground. Kiefer blocks any custody challenge by Wiegand through contempt motions for her non-payment of what now amount to more than $800,000!"

Gritz: "All of these facts have come to light as a result of our trial and are part of the court's transcript. The court now cannot deny Ms. Wiegand the testimony of Sr. State's Attorney John Massameno. Free of criminal charges, she will now face the family court (DCF) in correcting the many past wrongs. I feel contempt for any system that denies abused children a voice or the protection of the law. Reports referred to can be found at the following website: <www.angelfire.com/tx/reachme>. Call 559-787-3482 for Linda Wiegand's comments."

Gritz: "Both Sheldon and I have lost family, home, and employment. We are bankrupt after seven months of jury selection, numerous court delays since 1996, and two months of trial. Based on trial information, Sheldon and I have reason to believe that State's Attorney Malone engineered the preparation of faulty evidence and perjured witnesses. We will seek both federal and state remedies."

Judge Nicola Rubinow, in an interview, commented: "This was one of the most difficult trials I have presided over in my 20+ years of experience." She thanked the jury for their patience and counselors for their exemplary conduct during trial. She did, however, not congratulate the vindicated defendants.

Ms. Wiegand, in a telephone interview, stated that "My first priority will be and always has been the well-being of my two children, Jon and Ben. I am grateful to 'Bo' Gritz, his son, and Sheldon Robinson for their many sacrifices and efforts on behalf of my children and I. Thank you also to all those wonderful people who came out and supported Bo, his son, and Sheldon at the trial. The rest will be up to a fair and impartial proceeding in court soon. [End quoting]

For those who don't know about this: Bo stepped in to help this woman to regain custody of her children and was arrested. This court case was the result of that offer of help. If you want the rest of the story, you'll have to get it from the website. It is too long and involved to cover here.

It does point out the crooked courts and their cover-up of child molestation cases in the family services areas of governments in many cities in this country. This case is similar to tens of thousands of cases of cover-up of child molestations and even disappearing children.

For those of you who are not aware of such as Project Monarch or the many secret satanic cults which often involve high-up police and political personages—all of which require children for their despicable practices—be aware that such exist and are frequently the root cause for so many coverups and apparent "mishandlings" of cases. Two others that come to mind (of many) are the McMartin preschool case several years ago in Southern California, and the now infamous Jon Benet Ramsey case.

If anyone can get to the bottom of this case, it is Bo Gritz, who deserves much support and encouragement for his fortitude in pursuing this matter through the treacherous waters he knows he is likely to encounter.

Scientists said on Thursday they had invented a new kind of camera that takes three-dimensional pictures using visible light.

It cannot project an image, like a hologram, which uses a laser beam. But it can create an image that can be viewed in three dimensions on a computer and even “walked through” using virtual reality, the researchers said.

David Brady of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and colleagues combined two kinds of technology—computer tomography (CT), which is used to scan the inside of the body, and interferometry, which makes it possible to see an image without focusing on it.

“The most immediate applications are in microscopy” Brady, an electrical engineer, said in a telephone interview.

CT scanning can do this but it is scanning—meaning an image is recorded line by line. Brady’s system more resembles photography in that it records the entire image at once.

So instead of a cell having to be put onto a slide for microscopic examination, it could be suspended in a droplet and photographed in real time and in three dimensions.

For everyday consumers, the camera might offer 3-D television without the need for special glasses. You would be able to record everything in a room and a person would be able to walk in and see everything” Brady said.

Writing in the journal Science, Brady’s team said they based their system on the radio interferometry that astronomers use to look at distant objects in space.

“With interferometric cameras there is no need to focus” Brady said.

“The image is in focus at all depths.”

This can be viewed on a computer screen—something many people already do with images taken by digital cameras.

“People think of an image as something that is recorded on film, but when you go to digital systems there is no reason to think of it that way at all” Brady said.

Brady’s research was funded in part by the Department of Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA), which he said would like to use it for military applications.

A camera that worked without having to focus would be “smarter” he said. “They have cameras spread throughout the world—a lot more cameras than people” he said. These include cameras viewing from satellites.

“If a missile is flying through the air for example, it makes it easier to track if you don’t have to focus on it.”

TAXPAYERS’ WARNING! BOGUS IRS NOTICES

From the INTERNET, 3/17/00: [quoting]

Source quoted from The Bob Livingston Letter of March, 2000,

“YOUR FRIENDLY IRS” IS NOT AT

ALL FRIENDLY

Page 12 Titled: “Computer Notices—An IRS Bonanza”

The IRS has developed a huge automated computer system that brings in billions of dollars. This system, like all IRS activity, operates on intimidation and bluff. (Do you recall the IRS spending huge sums of money to upgrade their regular computers—and the job didn’t get done? Now you know why.)

The IRS sends out tens of thousands of computer form notices every year demanding payment with no agent’s name and little or no explanation on the computer generated letter. Most people pay or they will soon get follow-up computer letters demanding payment with assessments for interest and penalties. Fully half of the collection notices are phony or incorrect, according to the General Accounting Office.

The point is, the computer notice system does not allow for “taxpayer” response, questions, or explanations. It circumvents the tax court process where there is, at least, a 60% chance to abate the tax. The IRS knows that you can’t communicate with (their) computer.

They can demand collections and never confront the “taxpayer”. Section 6213D of the IRS tax code allows the IRS to make assessments through automated computer notices that are not subject to deficiency procedures. Normal deficiency procedures allow a taxpayer a hearing as to the facts in tax court. Deficiency procedures are related to the normal audit but not to computer notices that demand immediate payment. (Justified or not.)

THERE IS AN EXCEPTION IN FAVOR OF THE TAXPAYER IN SECTION 6213D of the tax code. Of course, few people know about it, so they pay off the demand notice within the 60-days allotted time period.

If you respond in writing and demand cancellation and abatement of the alleged tax liability, the IRS has to cancel the tax and issue a deficiency notice if there really is a tax due. Do not ask questions or raise other issues.

Simply demand abatement of the tax. This stops the tax demand for immediate payment and allows for the normal tax court deficiency process.

All income tax procedures and so-called tax law is, in truth, merchant law.

It is not constitutional law. This means that all IRS notices must be responded to or the taxpayer becomes subject to assessment and collections procedures. It quickly becomes an entangled nightmare, and unless one is judgment proof, the IRS can and will collect as they are backed by real and present police power.

This shouldn’t surprise any of us. They are going to try to get money out of us any way they can, so why not automate the process! Remember that the illegal IRS is the extortion arm of the equally illegal Federal Reserve private money laundering system. It will be a major turnaround for this nation when enough people wake up to this scam (first put in place in 1913) that it gets abolished. John Kennedy wanted to do that (and several other “threatening” things) and it earned him an early demise engineered by the behind-the-scenes so-called “elite” power lords. The message was loud and clear and dutifully followed by subsequent presidents.

“SEEING” CHIP TO REACH BREAKNECK SPEED

From INTERNET ZDNET homepage, for 3/22/00: [quoting]

Scientists say the GVPP chip mimics the human eye. Currently up for auction, the chip will handle 20 billion instructions per second.

In what promoters hail as a breakthrough technology that can do everything from make cars safer to select ripe fruit, a new “seeing” chip that mimics the human eye is currently for sale in the world’s first high-tech auction.

The chip, GVPP for “Generic Visual Perception Processor”, has been developed over 10 years by privately-held Bureau d’Etudes Vision Holding S.A., a French research firm.

Emulating the human eye in its ability to sense different colors and detect movement, the GVPP can handle some 20 billion instructions per second compared to the mere millions handled by Pentium-class processors, and could be mass-produced for as little as $6 apiece, BEV says.

Modeled on the visual perception capabilities of the human brain, the GVPP is a single chip that can detect objects in a motion video signal and then to locate and track them in real time far more dependably than competing systems, which cost far more, according to company scientists.

The chip is an industrial, rather than medical, invention and is not aimed at conquering human blindness. But with dozens of potential applications in a myriad of industries, its inventors are confident that the GVPP will quickly blossom into a multi-billion dollar business.

The proof will be in the applications that actually materialize, not the hype that surrounds an initial announcement like this. The human eye is a most exquisite device capable of detecting subtleties that, until now, completely escaped our best engineering attempts to emulate.

HOW THE BODY WORKS

From the INTERNET, 3/00: [quoting]

Digestion and Absorption are two different processes, handled by different parts of the body, but sometimes people aren't clear about the difference. So here's a quick review: Digestion starts in the mouth with the excretion of digestive enzymes from the salivary glands. The enzyme amylase, in particular, is produced in large amounts. Amylase helps to break down complex carbohydrates or starches into simpler sugars before the food enters the stomach. You can demonstrate this to yourself by chewing on a piece of bread for a couple of minutes; notice how it will begin to taste sweeter, the more you chew on it. Once foods enter the stomach, gastric juices (enzymes, hydrochloric acid, etc.) work on the food in an attempt to break it down into smaller food particles. Inadequate stomach acid or stomach acid that is too diluted will inhibit this process. Cold drinks, especially when taken with food, will force food out of the stomach before much digestion has taken place. A very small amount of warm or hot liquid is preferable if you want something to drink while eating.

Proteins and carbohydrates are mostly handled by stomach juices, while fats are broken up once they enter the Duodenum, the first section of the small intestines.

The stomach acid that was secreted by the stomach and is now mixed in with the digested food is also neutralized (or buffered) by pancreatic secretions into the Duodenum. After buffering and moving out of the Duodenum into the next two sections that make up the small intestines (the Jejunum and the Ileum), any food that is not sufficiently digested (reduced to very small particles) will not be absorbed by a healthy and fit small intestine. Absorption takes place when very small nutrient particles move through the intestinal wall of the small intestines into the bloodstream. Larger-than-normal food particles can be absorbed through an unfit intestinal wall, when one suffers from a common condition called leaky gut syndrome. This can set up a host of allergic reactions once these larger particles enter the bloodstream. They are often mistakenly seen by the immune system as foreign protein.

Another common, but underrated small intestinal condition is called Celiac Disease. With Celiac Disease, absorption is greatly reduced due to the loss of the finger-like villi projections normally present in a fit and healthy small intestine. Scaring of the supportive tissue will further reduce absorption by as much as 70%. Classical Celiac Disease is caused by a sensitivity to wheat gluten, but the same condition can arise from cow's milk albumen and soy protein. Nutrient absorption ends when the intestinal chyme (unabsorbed food, fiber, etc) exists IN the small intestines and enters the large intestine or colon. Water absorption, as well as bile and cholesterol re-absorption mostly takes place in the colon. Intestinal gas is the waste product of bacteria that are normally found in the colon which is digesting the unabsorbed and undigested food particles in the chyme. More unabsorbed food results in more gas. Chewing food into a liquid-like consistency before swallowing will allow much greater digestion, which in turn will lead to more nutrient absorption. More nutrient absorption will lead to greater vigor, health, and energy. [End quoting]

It does us all good to refresh our memory of these processes. Such a description is also a reminder of the generally amazing nature of our body's functioning.

QUOTES TO PONDER

From the INTERNET, 2/22/00:

HOLDING THE FIRE

Six years ago, ethnic tensions between the Hutu and Tutsi tribes in Burundi erupted into horrific violence. This is the story of one young man's triumph over hatred.

From GUIDEPOSTS, December 1999, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

In 1996 I came to America for the first time, as an alternate on the Olympic track team of Burundi, my central-Africa homeland. My teammates chose me to carry the Olympic torch on its way to Atlanta. I was so excited and happy to be a part of this great ceremony, but when I saw the torch of the runner before me, the fire coming toward me to light my own torch, suddenly I saw another fire three years earlier, one I nearly did not survive.

My mother, thankful I had been born healthy despite her difficult pregnancy, gave me my name. In the language of our country, Tuhabonye means "a son of God", and my mother saw to it that I was raised as such, taking me to church regularly.

But by 1993, when I was 18, though I was on scholarship at a Christian boarding school in the village of Kimbimba, I was not so concerned about being a son of God. I was preparing for the exam that would determine admission to university, and I was training for races. Ever since I was a small boy racing my friends to school, I loved to run as fast as my legs could take me. Now I focused on running fast—I was national champion in the 400 and 800-meter races—and studying hard. They were my only hopes of succeeding in my poverty-ridden country.

The night of October 20 I couldn't sleep. I decided to get up and study for the next day's biology test. Out of habit, I checked my classmates' beds in the moonlit dormitory. My friends had voted me representative for our class, and I tried to look out for them. They were sleeping soundly: Marcel and Desiré, members of the Hutu tribe; Victor, a Tutsi like me. Despite the historic rivalry between our tribes, we were friends, had been since grade school. Recently, Burundi's first democratically elected president, a Hutu, had taken office, and I prayed he would bring peace to our country.

The next day, just before the test, a boy ran to me. "The president has been killed!" he cried. "By Tutsi. Now the Hutu want revenge. Look!"

Outside, a Hutu mob from the village, waving machetes, rushed toward the school. "They know you are Tutsi" the boy said. "They will kill you!"

"But why?" I asked. "I have done nothing." It was too late. The mob forced its way into the school. I was astonished to see some of my classmates join them. "Find Tuhabonye!" someone shouted. "Don't let him run to the soldiers' camp for help."

Though the camp was 26 miles away, he was right, I could run there easily. But the rioters rounded me up along with scores of other Tutsi—students, villagers, even small children. We were forced to empty our pockets, then remove our shoes and clothing. A village man I had bought school supplies from began tying us up. I tried to talk to him, but he ignored me. When he wrapped ropes around my upper arms, I made certain to clench my muscles so my biceps bulged, pushing outward on the bindings.

We were herded toward the village gas station. At the door stood a tall man holding a thick stick. He clubbed us as we were crammed into the building. He hit me so hard on the chest my knees nearly gave way.

The door slammed shut. I relaxed my biceps and pulled the now-slack ropes off. Desperately I looked for a way for us to escape. The windows in the front were barred. Those in the back were too high. We were trapped!

Then I heard glass shattering in front. The tall man and the school-supplies seller shoved big eucalyptus branches, drenched in gasoline, through the broken panes. Another man tossed in a burning twig. Like a hundred snakes, fire slithered across the floor, then reared to attack us. We tried to extinguish the flames, but they were everywhere.

I held my breath against the smoke until my lungs stung as they did at the end of a race. I couldn't shut out the screams. People crumpled to the floor, dead. The fire took my classmates one by one, and I could do nothing to help them! Soon it would be my turn, and I thought, I just want death to come quickly.

For a moment the screams stilled, and a feeling I had never known came over me. I heard a voice, not in my ears, but in my heart:

“You will not die.”

The voice was so strong, so real, wherever it came from, I knew I could believe it. I crawled into a corner, curled on my side and covered my face with my arm. Bodies piled on top of me.

I lay there a long time, shielding myself from the fire until the flames dwindled to a flicker and I no longer heard the mob outside. When I finally dared lift my head, it was night. Bodies were all around. I could see a few men in front of the building. Perhaps the back was unguarded. I stared at the high windows there, then at the mountain of charred corpses. I had no choice. Cringing, I climbed. The windows did not open. I broke the glass.

Outside the men ran to the sound. If I jumped, they would cut my throat. Maybe if I went headfirst I could end my life—and the horror.

But again there came that voice in my heart: “You will not die.”

The voice was strong, and I was not. I jumped. Somehow I landed on my feet.

The men cowered and pointed. “His back! He’s on fire!”

I glanced over my shoulder and saw flames feeding on my skin. Now the fire had me! I started running, running as I had never run before.

One of the men recognized me. “It’s Tuhabonye! Get him!”

I tripped and fell into a drainage ditch. The mud cooled my burning back. The men stopped some distance behind me in the darkness and said, “He must be dead. Let’s go.”

Just before sunrise, I heard the guns of the army. They would force the Hutu to retreat. I got to my knees, but when I tried to stand, pain speared every nerve in my body. My feet were terribly burned. Panic had kept me from feeling it before.

Eventually soldiers found me and carried me to a hospital. A nurse said to a doctor, “Will he live?” When I caught sight of my body, I knew why she’d asked. My right arm and leg had gaping holes where flesh had been consumed by fire. I coughed up blood from being clubbed. I lay on my stomach, counting the hours until my next dose of pain medication. Sometimes I dozed, but then the nightmares would come. I saw my classmates reaching their hands through the flames, calling for help. My own screams woke me.

Days later my mother arrived. At the doorway to my ward, she whispered, “Thank you, God.” She told me my family had held my funeral, believing I had perished in the gas station.

Others came. Some I knew, but most were strangers, curious about the one who had survived the fire. I myself did not understand why I had lived when everyone else had died.

I tried to make sense of it. What was that voice I had heard? Why had friends tried to kill one another? Could people really carry such hate inside?

In the bed next to mine, a man who had lost a leg in a different attack ranted about retaliation. Many in the ward plotted revenge, their minds ablaze with hate. They urged me to join them. I looked at my hands, hands that had never hurt even an insect. Then I looked at my burned body. Must I seek vengeance against those who had betrayed me?

One morning a visitor brought me a Bible. There was nothing else to do, so I began to read. It helped me forget the pain, even more than the medication did. Every day I studied the words about God the Father, and His Son. And as I read, day after day, I came to understand. The voice I had heard that terrible night, that was so strong I believed it despite the flames of death licking at me—it could only have been the voice of God. No one but God could have saved me.

But what had He saved me for? Though my feet were healed, the seared flesh on my right leg had contracted so I could no longer straighten it. I couldn’t walk, let alone run. I loved so much to run I believed I was born to do it. One night, when it seemed the doctors could do no more for me and I was ready to lose all hope, I heard the voice once more, sure and strong:

“You will run again.”

A friend visited a few days later. When he helped me hobble outside, I spotted his bicycle. “I’m thirsty” I said. “Go inside and ask the nurse for some water.” As soon as he left, I mounted the bike. I shoved off with my left leg, put my right foot on the pedal and pushed. Sweat popped out on my skin. Black dots swam before my eyes. I clenched my teeth to keep from screaming. But with all my strength, with all my will, with all my belief in the voice of God in my heart, I pushed. Something in my leg gave. Then it was moving!

After three months, I went home to my mother. I finished my education at a school in the city of Bururi. In 1994 I began training to race again. The next year I returned to competition, and I ran well enough to be chosen as an alternate on our national team.

Now, in 1996, I was in America, waiting by the side of the road to Atlanta, the flame of the Olympic torch bearing down on me.

The runner touched my torch with his. In my hand a blaze of yellow and red leaped. For a moment I was overwhelmed to have fire so close to me again. Then, remembering how far I had come, I held the fire high. I lifted it toward God, and I ran.

After my trip to the Olympics, several American universities invited me to enroll. A few days before leaving home for Abilene Christian University in Texas, I was strolling the streets of Bururi with my friends. They were ahead of me when I saw the Hutu man from whom I had purchased school supplies in Kimbimba. My heart jumped as if something had grabbed it. Our eyes locked. Without a mob, he was helpless. I could call to my friends. We could beat and kill him. I could call the police, the soldiers.

The man fell to his knees before me. My friends looked back, a question in their faces. If I caused this man to be killed, his friend would kill me, and my friend would kill his friend. The hatred between us would continue to burn, as deadly as the fire that had taken the lives of my classmates. I couldn’t do anything to stop the hating then. Could I now?

I listened for the voice I had heard that night and answered in my heart:

“Let it go. Forgive.”

I knew what I must do. I would lift the fire of hate toward God, our Father, who could save us from it.

“Go” I said. “Get out of here.”

The man scrambled to his feet and ran away.

I felt good, like I did when I ran as fast as my legs could take me. This was a beginning.

My mother named me well, I think. Tuhabonye, a son of God, like every one of every tribe, everywhere.

—By Gilbert Tuhabonye, Abilene, Texas [End quoting]

The power of forgiveness is perhaps the most important lesson we can all learn to master if we hope to make this world a better place.

Serious Legal Help When Laws Go Wild: Justice Team One

3/23/00 RICK MARTIN

Having recently traveled to Reno, Nevada as guests on the cable television program called Liberty & Justice For All, for which Dennis Grover is the host, we had occasion to discuss with Dennis the organization which is close to his heart, namely, Justice Team One. It is the kind of organization that many "patriots" have talked about setting up, but have never managed to accomplish. It is the type of organization that can serve as a conduit for a very effective, hands-on, legal defense. So, with our own mandate of offering you information which we feel is worthy of your attention, here we list some specifics about Justice Team One:

Justice Team One (JTO)
2790 Wrondel Way #41, Reno, Nevada 89502
Voice/Fax: (775) 329-5968
Email: info@justiceteamone.org
Website: <http://www.justiceteamone.org>

JTO has one mission and one mission only—to fund legal research and counsel to people who are victims of laws and the bureaucrats who create laws that violate people's rights. Bureaucrats at every level of government violate their own laws and it's time they were held accountable.

JTO is anti-abuse, not anti-government. There are no hidden deals, offers, or "smoke and mirrors" hype. What you will find in JTO is a means to restore justice in our courts. You will find a way to help; you will find a way to be helped. You will be promised nothing except the dedication and expertise of Americans whose efforts directly benefit you and your family regardless of your political, religious, or ethnic heritage.

The success of Justice Team One rests with you, the American Citizen.

There are good laws that put bad citizens who murder, rape, and steal in prison where they belong. These bad citizens cause harm and violate the rights of honest citizens (victims).

Then there are other laws that seize assets, impose fines and prison (often without due process) on honest citizens who violate what government agencies—from Congress down to County level—term to be crimes against all citizens. These laws create "crimes" against the "state" or whatever governmental faction put them in place.

The majority of these laws, codes, directives, and ordinances are self-serving for two reasons: (1) Bureaucrats, agencies, and special interests enacted them without a vote of the people; (2) The forfeitures and fines are not distributed to those people alleged to be "protected".

These other laws create victimless crimes. It is estimated that 70% of our prison population is made up of these "violators".

Justice Team One is organized for action when a private citizen becomes a victim of the "law" rather than the victim of another private citizen turned criminal. It has 3 totally separate divisions that do not overlap in any way.

THE FUND:

This part is up to you as an American citizen concerned with the unchallenged existence of these "other laws" that violate your rights on a daily basis. Fundraisers and personal donations are being actively sought daily.

THE PROFESSIONALS, LAWYERS, PARALEGALS, INVESTIGATORS & RESEARCHERS:

There are many of these professionals willing to work toward changing the present direction of America and restoring our judicial system to that which dispenses justice. Unfortunately, these people have business expenses and the need to feed their families. American professionals in these categories are being sought at this time for participation in the mission.

THE SELECTION BOARD:

These people are responsible for the review and selection of cases to be funded by Justice Team One. This is the area of abundance. There seems to be no limit to the violations of people's rights in this country that could be stopped with proper representation and procedures. People with experience and working knowledge of acknowledged rights are being sought to assist this board.

Over a century ago, a British judge was late for court so he hailed a cab and told the driver to take him to the Royal Courts of Justice. "Where are they?" asked the driver. "You mean to say that you don't know where the law courts are?" asked the judge incredulously. "Oh! The law courts" replied the driver. "But you said 'the courts of justice'!"

MORE INFORMATION ABOUT JUSTICE TEAM ONE

The Professional Team, Lawyers, Paralegals, Investigators & Researchers:

A database of these professionals willing to work for the rights of American citizens is now being built and categorized by area and/or expertise. With their permission, they will be listed on the JTO website. JTO is actively seeking men and women who believe in justice and are willing to take on this challenging mission. A board made up of members from each profession will determine participation.

Anyone interested in being associated with JTO is required to send the Board a brief resumé with a letter explaining his or her reasons for wanting to be part of the team. Those intimidated by government agencies, political power, fraternal organizations, judges, peer review, and political correctness need not JTO requires only positive action. There are no “pro bono” requests; everyone gets paid. The men and women working with JTO in this area are not eligible to participate in the case selection committee or any aspect of the administration of the fund. The mailbag for this part of the endeavor is growing quickly.

The Case Selection Committee:

These people have a thorough understanding of the Constitution, the acknowledgment of people’s rights, and the specific duties and restraints put on governments by the document. Violations of the Constitution for the united States and violations of individual state constitutions by lawmakers are the very essence of JTO. The mailbag for this group is in overload. There is no shortage of these violations and intrusions upon American citizens.

Areas of concern are the illegal taking of business and personal assets, private property restrictions, illegal seizures, putting children in harm’s way, illegal taxation and fines, abusive law enforcement, restrictions on alternative medicine, spiritual belief persecutions, and so on.

The list of what bureaucrats dream up to regulate seems endless. The beauty of each area of concern is that, once a few cases are won in each category, the work will quickly spread to other lawmakers considering citizen restriction and manipulation.

In the near future this committee will need more help. If you are interested, please send a letter stating your qualifications to identify possible illegal government intrusions into the lives of others. Members of this committee are ineligible to participate on either the Professional Team or the Fund administration.

The Fund:

Presently the Fund is managed by a board of 3 trustees charged with the sole duty of money management. The trust company selected has 14 years of unblemished performance in maintaining and prudently investing funds for a maximum return with minimum risk. The earnings from the fund are used to finance the cases selected to JTO. By allowing the principle fund to continually grow, your support will work constantly for the mission of JTO.

The trustees are charged with insuring that management and administrative costs are minimal. Donations are not tax deductible. The success of the JTO mission is directly proportional to the success of the fund; it is the very heart of the operation. Without the fund there is no mission, and without your help there is no fund.

The website will provide you with more information on Justice Team One.

The Lever That Moves The World

Editor’s note: We make no apologies in admitting that the following is a “tease” of sorts. Savor this exquisite little meditation offered by a group of Tibetan monks with ancient roots, called the Ishayas, who we will be featuring in more detail in an upcoming issue of The SPECTRUM. They are a most interesting group and more recently have come to the United States to better fulfill their communication mission at this time.

For now, sit back and enjoy the following by “MSI” and know that there is an intriguing story behind this message—and many more which were entrusted to this group 2000 years ago (by Guess Who?) for dissemination at this current time of planetary awakening. Perceptive readers will immediately notice a strong resemblance between this message and those “spiritual” messages we regularly present in The SPECTRUM and which are collected in the two (so far) volumes called WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach. The Truth is universal and knows no boundaries or limitations as to sources of dissemination. We are surely in the midst of a most exciting time, full of surprises!

The Lever That Moves The World

Service Is Love Made Manifest

We make a living by what we get.
We make a life by what we give.

— Winston Churchill

Service is joy; service is the source and goal of any thinking human’s relationship with the rest of humanity.

The most evolved humans have always known that true joy comes from giving. They live for others. Their thought is for others. There is nothing they would not do to further the growth of others. They have realized this One Truth: there is no true happiness in growth for oneself alone; all true growth is always rooted in compassion.

Service is giving back the gift of our life to The Source of our life. Service is a reciprocal relationship between our self and the rest of humanity.

True service is love made manifest. Service relieves the suffering of everyone of the Earth by healing the root of all suffering: the mistaken belief in separation. True service is always a gift of love. It is never ego-based. It seeks nothing, it gives freely to all.

Service is a natural response to the recognition that all of life is interconnected. We are all part of each other. Everyone is an out-picturing of everyone else. When one sees this clearly, one dedicates one’s life to healing all the sundered and scattered parts of ourselves. None are rejected; all are accepted with love. There is no sin that can take one away from the perfect love of The Ascendant.

Only the ego believes in separation. Only the ego believes in the possibility of mistakes. Only the ego judges and condemns. When the ego is given up, the dream ends.

The Universe is intimately interconnected. The smallest change anywhere changes the whole. It is not possible to change anything without changing everything, for the One Ascendant is everywhere.

When life is dedicated to judgment, to the ego, to fear, the growth of the entire Universe is as if slowed. It’s “as if” slowed because there is no real possibility of slowing the Universal Plan; there is only the false appearance of slowness. When life is dedicated to the healing of humanity, to the Holy Spirit, to unconditional love, the entire Universe responds with joy and unlimited expansion.

A wise person once said: “Give me a lever long enough and a place to stand, and I will move the world.” There could be many levers that could move the world with sufficient time and trouble, but the lever that moves the world effortlessly is service in love.

Where does one stand to move the world easily with the lever of service? The Ishayas have always maintained that the only true place to be centered is in the one-pointed faith of flawless commitment.

Commitment is everything. Until one has committed one’s life, there is no potential for growth or progress. This is true for one who commits to anything. Nature does not support vacillation. But all of the Universe responds to and supports action in accord with the upward currents of evolution. If one commits one’s heart, mind, body, and soul to the Ascending River of Life, all of life progresses at lightning speed into the Heart of God.

Sound Healing

An Interview With Jonathan Goldman

subject, is a musician/author/teacher who operates with one foot planted firmly in this world and one in the “Higher Octaves” of reality. He has been kind enough to spend some additional time here, at our request, responding to a wide range of questions concerning the fascinating and important subject of Sound Healing—frequencies, tones, intentions, and vibrations.

We had a lot of time prior to the interview to discuss a number of aspects of this subject, and, in fact, some of the questions I posed required more extensive answers than I at first thought would be necessary. Therefore, Jonathan Goldman elected to utilize certain key questions as “springboards” for launching into a more thorough discussion of several aspects of Sound Healing not well developed in our earlier treatment of this subject.

And, as is often the case with conscientious, obviously Guided responses, we are pleased and surprised where the journey has taken us. So, too, we would like to thank Jonathan Goldman for being so willing to generously share his expertise with us. This is a subject “whose time has come” and one that, vibrationally, will touch each of our lives, sooner or later.

Jonathan Goldman is an authority on Sound Healing and pioneer in the field of harmonics. He is the author of Healing Sounds: The Power Of Harmonics, now in its seventh printing, from Element Books. Jonathan has studied with masters of sound from both the scientific and the spiritual traditions, including the Dalai Lama’s Chanting Gyuto and the Gyume Monks, and he has been empowered by the Chant Master of the Drepung Loseling Monastery to teach Tibetan Overtone Chanting.

Jonathan is Director of the Sound Healers Association, P. O. Box 2240, Boulder, CO 80306; phone: (303) 443-8181. The Sound Healers Association is on-line at the healingsounds.com website address. The Sound Healers Association is a non-profit organization dedicated to education and awareness of the uses of sound and music for healing.

He is also President of Spirit Music, which produces music for meditation, relaxation, and self-transformation, including: Chakra Chants, Trance Tara, Dolphin Dreams, Gateways, Hermetic Harmonics, Song Of Saraswati. His overtone chanting is featured on the Grammy-nominated Dream by Kitaro, with whom he has performed. His newest release Chakra Chants is winner of the 1999 Visionary Award for the “Best Healing-Meditation Album”. Spirit Music may be contacted at the same address and phone number as that of the Sound Healers Association.

Jonathan teaches Healing Sounds seminars at universities, hospitals, holistic health centers, and expos throughout the United States and Europe. He has appeared on national television and radio and has been featured in USA Today. He holds a Master’s Degree in the Independent Study of Sound Healing from Lesley College. He is a lecturing member of the International Society For Music And Medicine. He lives in Boulder, Colorado.

Jonathan’s most recent book is titled The Lost Chord (not The Missing Chord, as I inaccurately stated in the January 4 article). As stated previously, Jonathan Goldman will be presenting the 5th Annual International Healing Sounds Intensive 2000 on July 8-16 (9 days); you may obtain further information about this by writing to Spirit Music or visiting the website.

And now, with that background information behind us, let’s move directly into a fascinating discussion on a subject the possibilities of which are limited only by our understanding of the Power within us all.

Martin: There may be some confusion in the minds of our readers about the subject of Sound Healing. I’ve been asked such questions as: “What do you do? Do you just sit there and listen? Do you have to focus on something specific? Do you have to meditate? Do you have to close your eyes? How does it work? How do you use this? What are the “technical steps” that the person experiencing Sound Healing must be aware of?”

Goldman: I think before we begin to explore the arena of “what I do”, it’s first necessary to have an understanding of “what sound does”, i.e., the basic principles of using sound as a healing and frequency-shifting modality.

The basic principle of Sound Healing begins with the understanding that everything in the universe is in a state of vibration—from the chair you may be sitting on, to the pages of this newspaper. The ancients understood this, and now, of course, scientists are validating this.

Everything IS in a state of vibration—from electrons moving around the nucleus of an atom, to planets moving around stars in distant galaxies. And if it’s in a state of vibration, it’s creating sound.

Now, this vibrational essence of the universe includes, of course, the parts of the human body. Every organ, bone, tissue, etc., is in a state of vibration, and therefore putting out a frequency. When we are in a state of health, we call this “sound” health. Everything is vibrating at its natural healthy “resonant” frequency.

But what happens if some part of the body begins to vibrate at another frequency? It begins to vibrate out of harmony with the body, out of balance with itself. This is what we call “disease”.

Sound, incidentally, is a waveform. One way of measuring this waveform is how many vibrations, or waves, the sound is creating per second. This is called its frequency. Very low sounds vibrate very slowly. Very high sounds vibrate quickly. The lowest note on a piano is about 40 cycles per second (also called Hertz or Hz, after the German physicist Heinrich Hertz, 1857-1894). The highest note on a piano is about 4000 cycles per second. We hear from about 16 Hz to around 16,000 Hz (more when you’re younger).

I would like you and your readers to contemplate that sound, however, is much more than what falls within the audible spectrum.

Dolphins, for example, can receive and project information (actually being able to project holographic thoughtforms on their sonics) at around 180,000 Hz. This is more than 10 times higher than the frequency that we human can even hear. However, while we might not perceive these dolphin frequencies as sound, I’m sure our friends in the ocean certainly do. So, it’s really important to think of all vibrations as being sound—not merely those that fall within the audible bandwidth of a human’s hearing.

Getting back to the idea of healing with sound, think of the body as this incredible orchestra that is playing this wonderful “Symphony of the Self”. When we are in a state of “Sound Health”, all our sonics are working together in perfect harmony and we are this wonderful orchestra creating an overall harmonic of health.

But what happens if the 2nd violin player loses his sheet music? Pretty soon the string section sounds off. Soon after, the entire orchestra will begin to sound poorly. This is a metaphor for what we call disease.

I come from a family of doctors—my grandfather, father, and brother are all MDs. And I have the greatest respect for allopathic medicine for treatment of certain conditions. However, traditional medicine, at this point in its development, has the approach, when dealing with the string player of our orchestra who has lost his sheet music, of either giving this player enough drugs so they simply pass out, or cutting their head off with a broadsword, so they no longer play the wrong notes.

Now, while this certainly alleviates the immediate problem, you do have a bit of a void created by the absence of the missing violin player.

What if you could somehow give this player back his music? What if you could somehow project the correct resonant frequencies to that part of the body, which was vibrating out of harmony, out of tune? This would conceptually create a curative response. This is one of the basic principles of using sound for healing.

I've been in this field for over 20 years, and I spent about 10 of those years chasing after the "magic frequencies"—the ones that seem to promote healing or create transformational experiences. And it's interesting: When I spent those 10 years collecting frequencies, I noticed something very unusual. There would be people claiming extraordinary effects and successes from the frequencies they were using. And personally, I believed their research and reports. But what was most unusual is that none of the frequencies matched. You'd have different scientists and researchers using different frequencies, and some of them would be healing the same imbalance. With different sounds. It all became very confusing to me.

How, I wondered, could it be possible that different frequencies would heal the same ailments?

The same thing would be true with mantra chanting—where one guru would have his disciples chant a particular mantra for, say, the "crown" chakra, and another guru have his disciples chant the same mantra for the "heart" chakra. And the devotees would have the resonance and effect in that chakra.

What was going on? Same sounds affecting different areas? Different sounds affecting the same area? It didn't make sense.

Then, in meditation about 10 year ago, I received the Guidance that there was another aspect of the phenomenon of Sound Healing and it was this: intent. Intent is the energy behind the sound. As my friend Steven Halpern says: "Sound is a carrier wave of consciousness" and the intent is the consciousness of energy of the sound.

So, I created a formula, which I still think is one of the more important things I've brought down to the planet. It was first described in my book Healing Sounds. The formula is this: FREQUENCY + INTENT = HEALING. This means that the energy behind the sound being created is as important as the actual sound.

In other words, you could make one sound and put in two different intentions, and you would have two different effects. Or you could have two different sounds with a very similar intention and you might cause a very similar effect.

I have observed this over and over again since that time, and I think it's really quite important—particularly with regard to music and with the use of the human voice. Intent or Intention or Intentionality—whatever you want to call it—seems to really be making itself known in the subtle-energy medicine field, where they are practically demonstrating the importance of intent.

It's my belief that this formula, FREQUENCY + INTENT = HEALING, is, at this point in our development, a formula with all parts being of equal importance. I say this, because I believe, as we continue our acceleration of consciousness and evolution into what may be called higher dimensionalities, the importance of INTENT will grow and grow, while the importance of the actual frequency will become less and less important.

From, say, a 5th-dimensional viewpoint, we may find that INTENT is 80% or 90% and FREQUENCY is 20% or 10%. As some mystics have said: "All is consciousness." And, therefore, INTENT is a major aspect of consciousness. So the more we evolve, the more our consciousness, interacting with the sound, will be the determining factor for the produced effects of the sound.

However, for those of us still operating on a 3rd-dimensional consciousness (and in truth, almost everyone I know still has resonance there), it's really important to pay attention to the frequency of the sound.

We must begin to understand the "psycho-acoustic" effects of the sound—that is, the effect of sound upon the mind/body. For example, my intent might be to calm you down; but if I come up to you and shout in your ear, the odds are that, on a purely physiological basis, the loud shout will cause you to react in a negative and possibly even violent manner. The sound would cause the "fight or flight" adrenaline release in your body—your heartbeat, respiration, and brainwaves would speed up, your nervous system would tense up. You'd definitely pull away from the sound, and probably push me away at the same time.

Because of the psychoacoustics of the situation, this is a natural response to loud sounds—the "fight or flight" response. And I think that, in most cases, regardless of my intent, you would have the same reaction. So it's very important for us to become aware of the psychoacoustic effects of a sound, as well as the intentions that we want to put on the sound.

I believe there are probably saints and other extraordinary beings on this planet who can probably belch, or make any sound, and create any response they want. But I think, for most of us, until we can levitate, walk through walls, that sort of thing, it's important to pay attention to intention. I believe that we're going to find the aspect of intent to be of great significance as our consciousness continues to expand and evolve.

I remember several years ago, a friend of mine who is a well-know medical doctor did an experiment with a well-known scientific researcher. Putting it simply, the doctor put his hands over petri dishes with bacteria in them. Over one dish he projected the thought "grow". Over the second dish he projected the thought "stay the same". And over the third dish he thought "shrink". And that's exactly what occurred.

The frequency, which was the energy from his hands, whether you want to call it Reiki or Therapeutic Touch or whatever, was basically the same. It was his intent that differed. And he was able, with his intent, to affect the outcome of the experiment.

I think this is just one example of the power of our thoughts, our consciousness. And we are going to see more and more people becoming aware of this—how we basically co-create reality. It's an exciting concept and one which may change the very way in which we interface with the world.

With all this said, I would like to suggest that the importance of frequency, in terms of influence and effect on 3rd-dimensional reality, cannot be overstated. It is extremely important. We live on the physical plane, and this plane is certainly influenced by specific resonant frequencies. There's no doubt about that.

Many years ago, a wonderful Swiss doctor named Dr. Hans Jenny did some experiments which he called "cymatics"—Greek for waveform (since sound travels as a wave). He took plastics, pastes, liquids, etc., and put them on a metal plate that he resonated with sound. These different substances would vibrate with the sound and create the most extraordinary shapes. Sometimes these inorganic substances would look like underwater life, or some microscopic organism. It's quite extraordinary. It makes you understand about the power of "The Word" that the ancients always talk about—that original creative sound.

Jenny found that even slight variances in the frequencies that he was using would create differences in the shapes and forms and these substances. The actual frequencies are very important.

The more precise and exact these frequencies are, the more precise and exact their effect will be. The statement about every organ, bone, tissue, etc., being in a state of resonance is correct. And the idea of disease being an out-of-tunement of these parts is also correct. The question remains about how to find the exact resonance of an out-of-tune part of the body.

Another question is whether this part of the body is resonating on one frequency or a series of frequencies. I know some scientists who are working with a composite of three different frequencies to affect a certain part of the body, or to affect an imbalance. I know of another scientist who utilizes five different frequencies to create this same effect.

What's very interesting about these composite frequencies is that they are not very musical at all. In fact, when you listen to them, they're kind of harsh-sounding and really unpleasant. That is because they are frequencies meant to be encoded into the body and not necessarily listened to with our ears. There's a big difference.

So this idea of using resonant frequencies for healing is very real and very true. And from a truly 3rd-dimensional approach, these frequencies must be really exact. If you think of the extraordinary bandwidth of just the audible frequencies, you'll see how difficult this could be.

I know of one doctor who was working with sound to reduce pain. He claimed to have found the right frequency that would do this. But it had to be accurate to a 1/10th of a cycle per second in order to work. That's pretty precise. And it came about through trial and error, which is certainly one way of determining frequency response.

There are other ways, too. You can use pendulums, kinesiography, psychotronic devices, scientific devices, pure observation, or whatever works. You can use yourself or someone else as a guinea pig, and then keep trying with different frequencies until you come up with the one that works for the situation you're dealing with. Of course you hope, then, that your resonance matches everyone else so you can effectively use what you've discovered on someone else.

So you can see, it's very complicated. I had at one time hoped that everyone who was doing this type of work would effectively pool their information.

You note the frequencies of Dr. X, and then you compare them with those of Dr. Y and Dr. Z, and maybe you won't have to reinvent the wheel. Then you've got something that really works. But I don't think that will happen.

Martin: Why not?

Goldman: I remember about 15 years ago when I was at a Music Medicine Conference and I met a doctor from another country who was working on a chair that projected sound into the body. I think he was using it for treatment of arthritis or something.

I knew a lot about sound at that point, and I knew a lot about other people's work with frequencies as well.

I asked him what frequencies he was using and he became very silent. "I cannot tell you" he replied. "There is too much money in it for the person who discovers the correct frequency."

I imagine that attitude is pretty pervasive in certain of the communities that are working with sound and trying to discover the "magical frequency". The effects of greed are pretty interesting, but I'll discuss that later. I'll also discuss some aspects of the potential healing that can be created through sound later.

Right now I'd just like to say that, from my perspective, extraordinary healing can result from sounds that are not particularly precise—IF THE PERSON USING THE SOUND IS ABLE TO OPERATE FROM A HIGHER-DIMENSIONAL LEVEL. The more one is able to encode intention onto the sound, the more effective I think the sound will be—particularly if you are anywhere in the ballpark near the natural resonance of what is needed.

Spirit gives us a lot of grace, especially when you're working with sacred sound. But most people—particularly scientists who are researching specific frequencies—don't know this, won't accept it. It goes outside their realm of belief. So it doesn't occur. And they're still searching for the "magical frequency".

Maybe, just maybe, they wouldn't have to look so hard, if they could try to view things from a higher level of consciousness.

Martin: Would you discuss the role of music and harmonics in stress reduction?

Goldman: This brings us to the topic of psychoacoustics—the effects of sound and music upon the body and the brain. It also brings us to another topic, which is the uniqueness of the individual. Both of these topics interface with the concept of music and harmonics for stress reduction.

I'd first like to create a very simple delineation between sound and music, and this is just the definitions as I'm using them and not necessarily how other people define them. I like to think of sound as being basically single tones (with their associated harmonics), that don't really change much with respect to the elements that are defined as musical—that is: rhythm, harmony, melody, etc.

A chant, for example, that is on one note, perhaps a long extended "Om", would be considered a sound. But if you add the other elements like rhythm, harmony, or melody, and your "Om" changed pitch so it became a melody—a song—well then it would become music.

I've created this delineation simply because, with many of the recordings that I've made, I call them sounds so that people don't listen to them with the expectation of walking away humming a melody or something. My recording Dolphin Dreams—which was initially created for the birth of my son, many years ago, and has since become one of the more popular recordings for the birthing process AND for the reduction of stress—consists of ocean sounds, heart beat, choral voices, and dolphin sounds.

I call it a "sonic environment" because it creates a field of sound attempting to emulate the energy inherent in a dolphin-assisted water birth. It's beautiful to listen to and soothes practically every person who listens to it. But I would not necessarily call it music.

Interestingly enough, recently some people did a college textbook on listening, and included a chapter on Dolphin Dreams. Because the way the sonics are constructed, it really stimulates the ear and brain with many different sounds, and is quite a listening experience. But the authors of this textbook suggest to the reader that the recording does not fit into the category of music as people normally perceive of music. I agree.

Now, of course, this delineation between sound and music is not really correct. Because, for example, the "music" of Tibet is really single-tone chanting. I've merely made the distinction between sound and music for Western listeners so they won't be surprised when they listen to something and it strikes them as being very different, and perhaps non-musical, from anything they'd normally expect.

Getting back to the topic of psychoacoustics, sound as I've defined it has the ability of affecting the frequencies or pulsations of the body and the brain. In particular, some years ago it was discovered that two slightly out-of-tune frequencies (say 100 cycles per second and 105 cycles per second) would cause the predominant lobes of the brain to entrain, or change their rhythmic pulsations to the difference between these two frequencies. With the above example, it would be 5 cycles per second. So, one could utilize this effect to create sounds that would change our brainwaves—and this is important.

[Editor's note: Indeed it is important! The above may well be the most important paragraph you've read so far.]

If I may jump in here and get technical for a moment, the above-described phenomenon is called heterodyning and—just to mention one practical application with radio waves—recognizing this effect allowed modern (after about 1927) radios to be much more streamlined than the cumbersome tuning necessary in earlier designs—that is, modern one-knob tuning instead of the older three-knob tuning.

The exact mathematics of heterodyning says that when two frequencies interact with each other, there is produced, besides the original two frequencies, both the sum and the difference. Thus, using Jonathan's example above, in addition to the original 100 Hz and 105 Hz frequencies, there is also produced frequencies at a very low 5 Hz and at a much higher 205 Hz, though at reduced amplitudes or intensities.

And while this is not the time or place to get into a big discussion of this subject, just know that heterodyning is a very, very important key in a diverse span of applications ranging from, say, Royal Rife's amazing light microscope and healing device, at one end of the spectrum, to many covert mind-control technologies, on the other end. As exploited in the "black operations" arena, with heterodyning you have a "disguised" way of producing, perhaps at subliminal levels, very low and very high frequencies, both of which can have profound effects upon biological organisms.

Expanding this heterodyning idea to the more complex frequency waveforms of music only further opens up an entire vista of possibilities—both good and bad!

Many people who are stressed out are putting out beta waves—high frequency brain waves between 13 and 25 cycles per second. These brain waves are good for doing day-to-day activities that require concentration, etc. But too much beta and we get stressed out.

With alpha brain waves (around 8–13 cycles per second), we're in a much dreamier, calmer state. With theta (around 4–8 cycles per second), you find much healing and shamanic work occurring. With delta (around 0.5–4 cycles per second), very very deep meditation and associated experiences occur. This seems to be the brain wave state where much channeling occurs.

As our brain wave frequency decreases (and with that our heart beat and respiratory rates as well), we enter deeper states of relaxation and meditation. So, this sonic entrainment phenomenon is useful for people creating music which is designed to help induce relaxation. And there are a number of different recordings which utilize this knowledge.

What is interesting, however, is that many of the sacred and shamanic tools from different traditions also have the ability of create sonic entrainment. Tibetan bells are an example of this. So it's probable that the ancients had knowledge of this entrainment phenomenon, but we Westerners simply had to name it in order to discover it.

Sound and music rhythms are also useful to affect body rhythms. There are shamanic rhythms that seem to slow down heart beat, respiration, and then brain waves. Drumming is another way in which entrainment occurs.

Regarding rhythms—musicians have unconsciously known about the entrainment phenomenon for years. If you want to get people up and dancing, you play something fast. If you want to chill them out, you play something slow. It's not magic. But I think the conscious awareness of this is different.

I remember one time attending a concert of a spiritual group who basically sang very beautiful and slow songs. At some point, the leader of the group said something like: "We don't know why, but whenever we do this next song, people always get out of their seats and dance. Perhaps it's magic!"

Well, I was at the concert and the next song was really uptempo and fast paced. And everyone did get up out of their seats and danced. But it wasn't magic. It was psycho-acoustics and sonic entrainment.

So, if you're looking to reduce stress, it's probably best to listen to music that is slow pulsed. It's that simple. It doesn't have to have sonic entrainment frequencies specifically on it. Slow music is usually enough to help calm us down and help induce relaxation.

With that said, I must also note that there is something called the "iso principle", which basically means meeting a person where they are at vibrationally. If someone is really vibrating at a highly stressed frequency—they're nervous and shaky and tense—putting on music that is very slow and supposedly soothing may not have much of an effect initially. This is because you must first vibrationally match the person's nervous system in order to be able to attempt to change it. In the above illustration, you might want to play music that is fast and perhaps a bit jagged in its effect, and then slowly begin to put on other types of music that are slower and more soothing.

This would be why listening to fast music might at first seem soothing to someone who is stressed. Because the music is matching their nervous system. Listening to slow music might at first make them feel even more stressed because there's such a contradiction in terms of vibrational rates. I think that gradually going from fast to slow music would be the ideal key in this type of situation.

I need to say, at this point, that it's my belief that we are all unique vibratory beings. What works sonically for one person may not work for another. We all know that not everyone likes the same sort of music. In the same way, I don't believe that everyone responds to the same type of music the same way. I guess if we did, it would be a very boring world.

In terms of using music for stress reduction and relaxation, it's important for us to honor our personal responses to music. Just because someone says that listening to Mozart or Bach is the best for this or that situation, does not mean it's true for you. We need to be able to create a kind of "sonic prescription" for ourselves and realize what types of music we like to use for certain situations. And then begin to use that music for those situations.

Maybe listening to a sad love song is the thing that can bring you out of a mild depression; or maybe it's listening to Gershwin, or the Beatles, or Beethoven, whatever. We need to begin paying attention to how different pieces of music affect us on a physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual level. And then begin using these different musical forms to help put us in balance.

I don't really know why different music seems to affect us so differently. There are so many possible answers to this and, once again, I think it brings us to the question of our individualness and individual responses to various things.

I think sometimes it's experiential: Where were we when we heard a certain song? Sometimes it's taste: What music do you really like? What do you dislike? And there are probably dozens of different variants in terms of this. Sometimes it's educational: If you never heard Balinese music, you might find it very discordant the first time; after a while, it might grow on you. Sometimes it's another factor. But it's important to understand our resonance with different music and utilize this in our daily lives.

For example, if you want to find music that is going to stimulate you, perhaps to enhance an exercise program—well, you're going to want to use something that's up-beat and pretty fast. Listening to slow music would actually be contrary to the response your nervous system wants. Such slow music would probably cause you to be less effective in whatever chore or exercise you were doing. However, if you wanted to rest, and perhaps enhance sleep, then slow music would be a good choice. Trying to sleep while fast music is influencing your nervous system and body would be difficult. But once again, there are so many parameters involving the influences and effects of music that you really need to understand specifically how particular pieces of music affect you.

I'd like to turn back to a topic I briefly discussed a little while ago: brain waves. In particular, I would like to talk about this in regard to an idea that is primary to many of the visionaries of modern times, namely, that our vibrational rates are accelerating.

I agree with this concept and, in fact, my book Shifting Frequencies deals with ways in which sound and other vibrational modalities may be utilized to deal with these frequency changes.

It's been suggested that our vibrational rates are speeding up and that, indeed, time itself is speeding up. I think this is true. Most of us have experienced the phenomenon of getting up in the morning, having a cup of tea, making a few phone calls or whatever, and suddenly realizing it's time for bed. Time definitely seems to be compressing and, as this happens, we become more and more stressed out by our inability to accomplish the things we normally have been able to do.

A short while ago I mentioned "delta" brainwaves. These are from 0.5 to 4 Hz. When I first began researching brainwaves, delta brainwaves were described as being found in comatose patients. People who were unconscious. But within the last decade, this has changed.

I had a friend, a medical doctor, who was a pioneer in the field of mapping brain wave activity. He began testing healers, psychics, channels, and shamen, and found that many of them were registering brain waves of 1 cycle per second and were able to talk and communicate while they did their work. If they were working on a client, it turns out that the brain waves of the client would also be resonating at about 1 cycle per second. It was very interesting.

What was even more interesting was that this doctor found brain wave activity of 128 cycles per second that was occurring at that spot on the cranium that we call the “crown chakra”. Now, these were brain waves that had never been measured before. My friend passed away before he was able to make this information known to many of his colleagues, but it was fascinating. It seemed to indicate that, in order to register these high-frequency rates, an individual had to be at a very slow rate of brain wave activity.

When I began meditating on the significance of this, it came to me that, in order to encode higher frequencies of Light and Love into our mind, body, and associated energy fields, it was necessary to slow down our vibrational rate. In other words, we had to be in a deep state of calm and relaxation in order to effectively shift our frequency.

This makes sense. If you are operating in a state of beta, it’s very difficult to be calm and relaxed. The nervous system is operating at a fast rate and our consciousness seems to be locked into the here and now. When you’re in beta, it’s hard to meditate; it’s hard to experience expanded consciousness. We’re too much focused on the physical plane and doing some activity. Now this is fine, but it makes it very difficult for frequency shifting.

When one has slowed down the nervous system and is in a deep state of calm, I believe that what happens would be the equivalent of going off a diving board and springing upward. That 128 Hz which my medical friend was able to measure is actually a harmonic, or geometric multiple, of 1 hertz. By slowing down the brain, we are actually able to raise our frequency rate. It seems to be a paradox—that in order to speed up our vibrational rate, we must first slow down—but I believe it is true.

This initial slowing down of our vibrational rate—in particular, the frequencies of our brain and nervous system—is not easy to do. In fact, it’s very difficult. But I know that, when I’m in a calm and relaxed state, it is often much easier to deal with many different stimuli simultaneously occurring—from the phone ringing and answering email and someone talking to me, all at the same time—than when I am nervous and stressed out. However, being able to be in a calm and relaxed state while all this activity is occurring is a challenge.

Martin: And can sound help us achieve this relaxed state?

Goldman: Most certainly. Sound and, of course, breathing. Slow, deep breathing helps reduce heart rate and brain wave activity. I find that by sounding a single note or a mantra such as “om”, it automatically creates calm and relaxation. One of the reasons for this is that breath is the basis of creating sound. If one begins sounding a tone or a mantra for awhile, you are automatically slowing your respiration. You are also doing a number of other things to yourself, including helping release endorphins and other neurochemicals that may be very beneficial and healing.

This sounding of a single tone or note is called “toning”. More and more people are becoming aware of the importance of this activity. You can simply use toning to help relieve stress in yourself. You can also use it to help resonate and align an imbalanced part of your body or energy field.

I teach a very powerful exercise called “Vowels As Mantras” in which we utilize the vowel sounds in a particular order in conjunction with pitch, to resonate the chakras. Normally, in a workshop, we do this for about a half hour or more, and it is both a powerful healing experience and a powerful transformational experience. Towards the end of the exercise, after we’ve resonated all 7 of the main chakras, we remain silent for about 5 or 10 minutes to receive that experience that is of greatest benefit for our spirit and soul. During this time, those in the workshop will frequently have extraordinary communications with Guides, Angels or other Divine Beings. I believe one of the reasons this occurs is that we have slowed down our nervous system and balanced our energy fields, and can shift our frequency because of this. We are in this deep state of receptivity, and thus can allow higher octaves of Light and Love to encode themselves upon ourselves.

Frequent meditators will tell me that the experience usually surpasses any that they have had before. This may have to do with the fact that we are using sound in conjunction with breath and visualization, and it is simply more powerful and transformational. The sound will resonate the chakras as well as the nervous system and the brain. It is a physical-based phenomenon that, because of the harmonics inherent in sound, also resonates etherically as well.

Most of us find it difficult to devote half an hour a day to a sonic practice. It should be mandatory, but it’s not. So, I also teach my students how to tone the chakras with vowel sounds for a minute, or five minutes, and achieve some beneficial results. Even a minute or so of sounding will help shift our consciousness and allow us to access states of calm and relaxation. It may not have the profound effects of a half hour of toning, but it’s still quite good.

Martin: You’ve mentioned harmonics a number of times. Can you tell us what harmonics are?

Goldman: Whenever a sound is created, that sound is really a complex composite of frequencies called harmonics. These harmonics, which are geometric multiples of a given fundamental, actually are present all the time in different sounds. We are simply unaware of them. With harmonics, the first overtone (harmonics and overtones can be used interchangeably) vibrates at twice the frequency of the fundamental tone. The next overtone vibrates three times as fast as the fundamental. The next overtone vibrates four times as fast, and so on.

Just as you can take a prism, hold it up to sunlight, and refract the different colors of the rainbow—well, harmonics are really the “colors” of sounds. They actually create the timbre or “tone color” of an instrument or of our voice. And we can learn to refract some of these colors of sound ourselves, simply by learning to use our voice in a particular manner.

I first came across this nearly 20 years ago when I heard the sacred chanting of Tibetan monks and the Hoomi or throatsinging of Mongolia and Tuva. It was extraordinary and out of this world. These people can sing two or three notes at the same time. Shortly after I heard these sounds, I studied with some teachers who were able to teach me some techniques for creating these vocal harmonics. Now, of course, I have written HEALING SOUNDS: The Power Of Harmonics, and teach these techniques to students myself. There is, in fact, a re-emergence of interest in vocal harmonics. I think that’s fabulous.

I must say, for those already familiar with Tibetan “Deep Voice” or Hoomi throatsinging, that what I teach is different. People can indeed create two or more notes at the same time. But it doesn’t require some of the training and potential strain that accompanies the Tibetan or Hoomi voicing. And my teaching of vocal harmonics also works with the therapeutic and transformational use of these sounds. It’s not just a party game or something to impress someone, but a deeply powerful frequency shifting tool.

Martin: But you’ve been taught how to do the Tibetan and Hoomi Voice?

Goldman: Actually, with the Tibetan, I received this voice in “dreamtime”. I had recorded a group of Tibetan monks, took the tape of the recording home, and listened to it in my crystal meditation room. When I woke up the next morning, I had the Tibetan Voice. It was quite amazing. It’s said to take the monks up to 10 years to receive this voice. What happened to me is an example of what I call “harmonic transmission”—receiving information or a transformative experience through sound.

Now, I did take a few lessons for the Tuvan Hoomi style and personally found it rather taxing on the vocal chords. I can do this style, but I only do so for demonstration purposes. I decided that this was not going to be a technique that I would share when I teach because of the potential dangers inherent in it. I don't want anyone straining their voice due to something I've taught. So, the vocal harmonic techniques I share are quite safe and simple. Many of them are based upon working with vowel sounds, and almost everyone who studies with me is able to hear, and then create, vocal harmonics.

These harmonics can be utilized for many extraordinary things. You can use them, along with their associated vowels, to resonate the chakras. You can also use them to resonate different portions of the brain. Through learning to first hear, and then create, vocal harmonics, you can also improve the quality of your own voice as well as enhance your ability to hear. This makes sense.

With regard to the five sense, it's almost as though we're wearing sonic earplugs, and then, through working with harmonics, we remove these earplugs and truly experience a higher aspect of the sound spectrum. One of our senses becomes expanded and, because of this, our consciousness as well is expanded.

I've even helped rediscover a very ancient technique which I call "overtoneing", in which you project a siren-like vocal sound to someone else. At a particular point in the siren, a specific harmonic will occur which is the "healing" sound needed to put in balance something that's out of alignment in the other person. It's quite powerful and quite extraordinary.

What's very interesting in regard to the Tibetan Voice, which I do utilize for sacred chanting, is that frequently in a workshop someone will receive the voice simply by being around me. It will be nothing I have actually taught. Sometimes it will be a woman.

I remember once when a little old lady came to the second day of the workshop. "Jonathan" she said. I looked at her and smiled. Then she opened her mouth and out came the Tibetan Voice. It was amazing. In the Tibetan belief system, the "Deep Voice" is a gift from the Divine. I can believe it.

You know, the more I am involved with the use of sound and music as therapeutic and transformational tools, the more experiences I have with the extraordinary abilities of sounds to create shift and change, and the less I am able to put these experiences, these frequency shifts, into a container that fits into any scientific mold. It's quite amazing.

I started out very left-brained, I think as a result of the medical practitioners in my family lineage. I was very much into collecting frequencies and creating systems. In fact, back in 1988, I wrote a book called Awakening The Lost Chord for Ballantine. It was essentially nothing more than an encyclopedia of sound healing, with chapters devoted to everything from harmonics and mantras and frequencies to sonic shamanism. Quite an overview of the field. And I must admit that, twelve years later, there's not that much new in the field.

Oh, people have made advances in areas, whether it's the use of sound to resonate specific portions of the body, or the use of frequencies to increase plant growth. But, these are only minor advances, at least to my knowledge. The basic work and research, I guess, was already in progress, though, of course, many of the people doing this work don't know this. So when they come upon an idea or a discovery, they think it's brand new.

Probably, of course, much of this work has been going on for eons and we're just reawakening to some of the knowledge and ideas that the ancients worked with. But anyway, I really did my homework awhile ago, in terms of researching the effects of sound and music, in terms of what other people had done.

Martin: Was the book ever published?

Goldman: No. At the time, my editor told me to act like it was the only book I'd ever write. And never having written a book before, I thought "okay" and proceeded from that premise. I delivered to the publisher a manuscript that was something like 250,000 words. They had asked for 75,000 words. And so, to make a long story short, it was too much for anyone to deal with. So that particular manuscript is unpublished, though much of the major information was published in Healing Sounds. I don't think of it as a futile experience, though. It really gave me quite an education into Sacred Sound and Sound Healing. I know a little bit about a lot of things in regard to the subject.

But what I want to get back to is this idea that, at first, I was really looking for the "magical frequency". And I think lots of people are still looking for this now. You know, the frequency or frequencies that will do this or that. Change lead into gold. That sort of thing. And I'm not saying they don't exist. They probably do, but I'm not that interested anymore. Because I think that there is something else at work and this something else defies explanation by traditional science or medicine. It appears to be magic. And unlike Isaac Asimov, or whomever it was who made that statement about the magic of today being the science of tomorrow, I'm not that sure that some of the things I've experienced and encountered can be put within the confines of any sort of system or science. At least with our current understanding of what science is.

I mean, I have my explanations about resonance and entrainment and what not, but I think there's more than meets the eye, the ear, or the mind involved when you start working with sacred sounds.

Martin: What sorts of experiences are you talking about?

Goldman: The one that comes to mind immediately is the one in the ancient Mayan site of Palenque, where I created light through sound. It's in a couple of my books and continues to be quite an amazing phenomenon. I was in a darkened room with a number of other people, and the guide said "make sound here" and pointed over a doorway. So I made sound and the room lit up and everyone saw it.

The experience was actually so mind boggling at the time that I more or less dismissed it until I got back to the states and began working on Healing Sounds. And I began to try to research the experience and come up with different explanations.

One of my explanations, incidentally, had to do with the sound triggering the brain to produce melatonin. And interestingly enough, a scientist read Healing Sounds, was intrigued by my conjecture about this, and actually proved that melatonin is produced by certain harmonically related sounds. So, there's some scientific validation there. But I think more was happening than that.

Later on, I seem to have inadvertently found a chakra which I call the "angel" chakra, that's located in between the third eye and crown, right at the fontanel area, the soft spot in a baby's head. And this "angel" chakra is a source of Light encoding in the human and it can be opened and activated by the same sound I used down in Palenque.

What's interesting is that this sound can be phonetically written as "nuurrrr", which is an Eastern word meaning "Light". I find this fascinating. So, here you have a sort of mystical or esoteric explanation for the experience, but it's still not enough. Because I think there was and is still an additional ingredient in this whole phenomenon that I call magic, or the sacred, or the Divine.

Martin: How so?

Goldman: Well, if it was just purely a matter of physical-plane resonance, then you should be able to have everyone make this sound "nuuurrrr" and experience the activation of the "angel" chakra. And that's not the case.

While I have people do a visualization to enhance the sound, in which they see the sound going up through the head, resonating the pituitary/pineal area, and creating an opening in the "new" chakra, then anyone who made the sound along with the visualization should be able to create this activation. And that's also not the case. Because it seems as though there is an initiatory activation that's going on during this experience. And it has to do with someone, who is able to be a conduit for the sound, assisting people in opening this chakra. And that doesn't make any sense—at least from a third-dimensional viewpoint. It's another example of harmonic transmission. And it really defies explanation.

The more I teach and experience and share my work/play with sound, the less and less I understand. In fact, I've been kind of downloading information from my right brain for quite a while now. It just doesn't seem to have much use because what I was trying to do a while ago was put things into systems, into boxes, and Sacred Sound does not seem to want to be placed in boxes. I believe this is because systems and boxes are self-limiting and we're at the point in our evolution where we don't need to be limited by anything.

I have a friend who spent years, as I did, collecting information and doing research about sound. But unlike me, instead of simply collecting the different systems, he put them all together and created a grand "unified field theory" of sound healing: "This sound resonates this chakra with this color and this smell." That sort of thing. And while I find it useful for the neophyte who is just starting out and needs a system to work with, I find it quite limiting.

I remember I asked him once: "Why have you done this?" And his reply was that he wanted to leave something for his young son when he grows up. And my reply was: "Yes, but what if, by the time he grows up, he won't need this system?"

Of course, I guess part of me is a system buster. I think that my formula $\text{FREQUENCY} + \text{INTENT} = \text{HEALING}$ creates enough parameters for us without getting more specific.

I have another formula, incidentally, which is closely related to this. It's $\text{VOCALIZATION} + \text{VISUALIZATION} = \text{MANIFESTATION}$. It's basically the same thing, except that it refers a bit more to chanting and self-created vocal sounds. It means that the sounds you make, coupled with the visualization that you are making, create an end result for the sound. So, for example, if you're chanting a mantra for compassion like the Tibetan "Om Mani Padme Hum" and you visualize the Buddha of Compassion and try to embody compassion, then you'll probably end up manifesting the experience of this energy.

I thought I was very clever when I came up with this other formula. I thought I had really found something.

I think it occurred after I read a book about the creation myth in the Old Testament and it said something like, when the Lord said "Let there be Light", He put the intention or the visualized energy of Light onto the sound, and thus brought it forth. And this formula, $\text{VOCALIZATION} + \text{VISUALIZATION} = \text{MANIFESTATION}$, came to me.

Then, after I got done patting myself on the back for my "discovery", I realized that this knowledge was a basic foundation of the spiritual and magical traditions on the planet. It was nothing new. But I do think it was important to be able to create a catchy little formula in terms of helping educate people about working with sacred sound.

Before I forget, I want to talk about compassion for a moment. Because it's a very important part of my work and I think it's quite important in terms of our evolution as a species.

I believe compassion is a key to enlightenment and evolution. In fact, it may be THE key. I'm sure it is the key to our continued survival on this planet. You know, some time ago, I was reading an interview with George Lucas about the Phantom Menace and he was talking about various mythological aspects of the film. He started talking about compassion and he said that the counterpart to this was greed.

When I read this, I thought: "You know, on one level, this is true." Because when you get into greed, you are quite selfish and unkind and you really don't care about anything but yourself. And my goodness, most of the trauma this planet is currently enduring is because of greed—people raping the planet and polluting the environment and not really caring what the repercussions of their actions might be.

It's not like the Native American concept of seven generations, where one is conscious of what one's actions are like for the next seven generations. And it may have to do with just being in the Beta brain-wave state too much, so that you don't access higher levels of consciousness and begin to care. Or it may simply be based upon a fear consciousness and a belief in there not being enough, so you get into greed.

But what strikes me so often during our experiences in workshops with chanting the "Om Mani Padme Hum" and other sacred sounds—so that we can embody compassion—is that, very frequently, the first person that we need to be compassionate with is ourselves. Most of us have to forgive ourselves for so many things. Most of us don't really like ourselves. And hey, if you don't like yourself, how can you like anyone else? And how can you do anything for anyone else if that is the case?

So, if you can be compassionate with your own self, then you can begin to be compassionate and kind to others. And suddenly, when this occurs, you begin to experience the Oneness that exists between all conscious beings. And you begin to have what could be termed, spiritual experiences. I don't really know what to call them, but you begin to have experiences in which the fear that created the boundaries and borders between ourselves and other human beings are broken down.

And suddenly the person next to you is just a mirror of you and a mirror of the Divine. And you would not think of doing anything to them that was not of the utmost kindness and respect.

It's a little like getting hit with "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" or whatever those words were. And it's immense because, once that happens, things change. Your relationship to self changes. Your relationship to other people changes. Your life changes and you change the lives of those around you. And this is accomplished all through embodying compassion.

I mean, with the embodiment of compassion, one could not imagine doing any of the heinous activities that frequently occur on this planet. Because most of those activities are based upon fear. You don't go to war with your TRUE brother or sister. You don't take their food. You don't do this or that. It's not in your scheme of thinking.

I think compassion is at the basis of all healing. And I think compassion is at the basis of all true Higher Consciousness.

I remember reading once where the Dalai Lama was asked if he had one message he could broadcast to the world, what would it be. He said: "Be kind to each other." It was that simple and that direct—and to me, that powerful, because kindness is also at the base of compassion. And it's in the words of Jesus and the Ten Commandments and all these different spiritual texts: "Be kind to each other." Just think what that would mean if truly practiced by all?

Some years ago, in meditation, I heard a voice say: "The way to the Crown is through the Heart!" I believe this is true. I think that, in terms of the chakras, while all chakras are, to some degree, resonating and active, different people have different chakras that are truly activated. These are chakras that they seem to be drawing their energy and abilities from.

Someone who is a sex symbol, for example, might have a highly activated second chakra. Most politicians would work from the solar plexus (third) chakra. Healers might work from the heart (fourth) chakra. Musicians might work from the throat (fifth) chakra—though this could also have a second chakra input; I think it depends upon the level of consciousness that is being projected on the sound. Scientists and visionaries frequently work from the third eye, or sixth chakra.

Now, from my understanding, it's quite possible to be working from BOTH the third chakra and the sixth chakra as the primary chakras that one is drawing from. And this would result in someone who is basically involved with using the mind for power and control. I believe this type of thing happened a lot on what we call the continent and civilization of Atlantis, and I think this resulted in its destruction.

I'm always reminded of the scientist character in the movie Jurassic Park who is horrified at the experimentation going on and says something like: "You people are so interested in trying to find out if you CAN do something that you don't bother to ask if you SHOULD do something." And I think that's quite true in terms of our advances in technology.

I have a new book out called The Lost Chord. It's a novel about sacred sound. It's set in Boulder, Colorado. It involves a rock musician whose friend discovers a series of frequencies that creates interdimensional portals and is also highly addictive. This "Lost Chord" promptly gets stolen by a madman messiah who lives in the mountains and wants to use it to take over the world. The hero of the story has to go through initiation into sound and spirit in order to rescue his friends and get back the Lost Chord. It's a fun, fast read, and there's a lot of information and knowledge found in this pop novel.

One of the major themes in The Lost Chord is this schism between the spiritual and the technological. As Shade, the protagonist, finds out, the "Lost Chord" has actually been in existence for ages. But it's knowledge and use have been found with deeply spiritual beings who know enough not to abuse it. The fact that it has been synthesized into a series of frequencies makes it accessible by everyone, and therefore subject to abuse.

I like to believe that, as you work more and more with Sacred Sound, the powers and abilities of the sound are revealed. But as you progress in this work, it's imperative for the heart to open and be a primary focus of energy. Otherwise, the full power and energy of the sound will not be revealed. Once again, the way to the Crown, which is true spiritual and Divine consciousness, is through the Heart, which is the embodiment of compassion and love. I don't believe it's through the Third Eye chakra alone; the Heart must be opened as well.

I know many people with highly activated Third Eye chakras. These people work in the realm of psychics and have some powerful abilities—like telepathy, etc. But they become very limited, after a while, because they don't understand that it's through the heart that the truly Divine and miraculous happens.

From my perspective, multi-dimensional consciousness can only occur through an open heart. Maybe I'm wrong. But I think that, once your heart is opened and you are resonating from love and compassion and not fear or greed, extraordinary things can occur.

Everyone says that mathematics is the universal language. But I'm not sure. Because I believe that, with multi-dimensional consciousness, $1 + 1 = 3$. Really. This is a different type of mathematics, and most people who are operating from the Third Eye simply can't get this. Because it doesn't make sense on a logical level. But it may well be true.

Having just an opened heart may not be enough. I think it's good to have wisdom as well. Perhaps it's really a combination of these two qualities that is the true key to enlightenment.

Now, why have I been going on and on about the importance of compassion and the heart and all this stuff about intention and visualization and what not? Well, the answer has to do with frequency. Or rather frequencies. Because, right now, at this particular point in time and space that we call 2000, the search for the "magical frequency" is really in vogue. And while I think it's important to continue the search and research, I think it's also important to understand that use of pure frequency will ultimately become self-limiting, and we need to realize this.

Martin: How far are we from being able to buy a CD which is harmonic-specific for "shattering" certain crystalline virus structures?

Goldman: I have no doubt that, in the near future, there will be astounding inroads made in terms of science. And we'll come up with the correct frequencies to eradicate specific illnesses and diseases. Some of the devices that we'll see in the not-too-distant future are like the "Tricorder" from the television program Star Trek. You'll have this small, handheld object that someone will hold near a person and, using sound, it'll give a readout of any imbalances. Then, with a few turns of some knobs or buttons, this device will send out the frequencies necessary to create balance. That will be astonishing and wonderful, and a great advancement for humankind and medicine. I really don't think it's too far away.

But sometimes I think that, in terms of healing and frequency shifting, we need to take back our own power and abilities to do it ourselves—sometimes, yes, with the assistance of others; but really through ourselves, by empowering ourselves as the ultimate healer, which is really the truth.

On a practical level, what is the big difference between having a headache and taking a pill someone gives you for it, and having a headache and listening to a frequency that someone gives you? It's still sort of the same, which is having a dependence on someone else to heal you.

As I just said, I think sometimes we need assistance. Sometimes we need someone else to help "jump start" our engine, so to speak. But really, what I think is necessary is for us to start taking responsibility and control of ourselves. If we do that, we'll stop being victims and start being co-creators of this reality.

I'd like to believe that one of the easiest, simplest, and most effective ways of doing this is by working with our own sound, our own frequencies, so to speak. Since it's my belief that we are all unique vibratory beings, our own voice can really be specific in terms of the frequencies we use for ourselves. And who better to encode intentionality than ourselves?

So we can get very good at projecting our own frequencies and intent through using our voice. It's cost effective. The user's manual is simple to consult. And it doesn't require electricity or batteries!

All of this is part of a planetary education process, which is one of the reasons why I, and many others, are teaching toning, and harmonics, and mantras, and all the other various aspects of sound. The use of frequencies through CDs, instruments, etc., are also highly effective for healing. I'm all for this. I simply don't want us to forget the other element—the sacred and spiritual element of sound. Which is really what it's all about. Because, knowing the current nature of human development—which is frequently to go to the lowest common denominator of a subject—as the development of sound as a frequency shifting tool continues, we'll have all sorts of miraculous things occurring. But we'll have those who will not be operating from the heart with their understanding of frequencies, and will undoubtedly use it for power and control.

That is nothing new, and that's all right. But we need to understand that whatever is created in this manner is nothing in comparison to what can be accomplished through using the heart and the mind together.

I might have mentioned awhile ago that it's my belief that, at this point in our development, I think that Frequency and Intent are both 50% of the formula. As we progress in our evolution, and achieve higher realms of consciousness, the frequency becomes less and less important, and the intent becomes more and more important. This has to do with opening the heart more and more in order to experience Higher dimensionalities.

I also might have said that there are probably saints and holy men throughout the world who can groan or belch or what not—they can make any sound they want—and they can encode on this sound whatever healing frequency they want. We need to remember the possibility of this, otherwise ones will become too dependent on finding the specific frequency, and forget that this is only part of the formula. And, I might add, this focus on merely frequency will not create the most effective result of the frequency, simply because it is only part of the formula.

So, the use of frequency for healing is true up to a point, and then it becomes not true. It then becomes totally the intention, and the frequency merely becomes a carrier wave for whatever the intention is. And it could be any sound.

Currently, in traditional medicine and science, I do think it's very important that the investigation into the uses of different frequencies continues. In fact, it's vital that this occurs because traditional medicine and science is very third-dimension based and we are, of course, among other things, third-dimensional beings.

Right now, traditional medicine is finally acknowledging that music can help relax and reduce stress. That's actually quite a significant leap in understanding, finally recognizing that music can assist us in helping to relax. And the understanding that stress is a powerful factor in the creation of disease is also now occurring. It's taking awhile, but science and medicine are getting there.

Who knows? In the not too distant future, energy medicine may finally become truly validated and accepted in the traditional medical fields.

Usually, when people ask how sound is being used in medicine, I talk about the use of ultrasound to help check on the progress of pregnant women, or the use of sound waves to break up kidney stones. Both of these are pretty rudimentary in terms of what sound will finally be accomplishing in the healing process, but it is a start. That vision I had about a Tricorder-type of device being used for healing isn't that far away.

I remember once I was attending a Music Medicine conference at a major medical center. During the conference I was just blown away by how primitive the understanding of most of the people there was toward the uses of sound to heal. And the research and experiments that were going on in regard to this was devastating to me. It was like trying to cut up the worm into smaller and smaller parts in order to find out how it crawled. They were missing the major understandings of certain things.

When I had the opportunity to discuss ideas such as intent, most of the scientists and doctors at this conference looked at me like I was from another planet. Because, of course, for the most part, in terms of third-dimensional instrumentation and measurements, intent was something that could not be validated. So it was not real.

I was staying at a friend's place at the time and I remember, sitting outside, being pretty depressed about the current state of Music Medicine. I heard a voice say: "If you wanted things to be the way they will be, you would have been born 50 years later. But you were not, because you are to serve as a bridge. Remember that." And I try to. That was about 10 years ago.

So, the future of sound in terms of that Tricorder-type of device is probably 40 years in the future. And who knows how far in the future it will be when people can really shift their vibratory rates through using their own sounds. Oh, there are those who can do it now. But when will this become common in the general populace? I don't have a clue when that might occur. But I think it's important to awaken—in people's minds and in their hearts—an awareness of the possibilities inherent in sound.

About 10 years ago, there was an article in the New York Times Science Section about sound experiments with ultrasound that were happening. And the headlines read: Sound shaped into dazzling new tool—can make, break, or rearrange molecular structure and levitate objects. I was amazed that this information was running in a newspaper. It involved some research trying to grow crystals in zero gravity. But as a metaphor, it really described the power of sound.

Now, if you can make, break, or rearrange molecular structure, there's virtually nothing that inherently can't be healed or transformed with sound. So the possibilities are endless. We'll be able to use sound to shatter viruses that attack us and build-up, and even regenerate organs that need assistance. I think that there are some individuals who can do this now; but I see this as being commonplace in the future. I know of people who are working with DNA right now using sound. They're trying to facilitate our evolution in this manner, using sound. And I think they're pretty successful.

You know, I've been worked with tuning forks in an interesting fashion that I'd like to tell you about. As I've stated, I'm less interested in working with frequencies than many people are. But I'm quite interested in working with intervals, which are the relationships between frequencies. An octave, for example, is two notes that share the same name and have a frequency relationship in which one of the notes vibrates at twice the frequency of the first. So, it is vibrating at a ratio of 2:1.

I mentioned harmonics before and said that these were frequencies that were geometric multiples of a given frequency. With a piano, most of the intervals on a piano are not really harmonically related. They're not really composed of whole number ratios, like 2:1 or 3:2. That's because the interval tuning of a piano is based upon the twelfth root of two.

Now, I have a good friend, a doctor, who has shown that certain ratios, such as the 3:2 ratio, seem to be particularly balancing and therapeutic for the human nervous system. He's had aluminum tuning forks developed that you strike and then bring near the ears, and these tuning forks really create a very calming response in the individual who experiences them in this way. It also balances out the left and right hemispheres of the brain. Incidentally, it doesn't appear to be the frequency or the keynote of these tuning forks that creates the effect, but rather, simply their relationship. So it could be the notes C and G or the notes E and B. Same effect. There are other very wonderful results from these tuning forks, but I'd like to continue on.

Several years ago, due to some interesting experiences that are rather too long to get into here, I was guided to have tuning forks cut to the ratio of 8:13. Now, I did this simply as an experiment. I had no idea what they would sound like because, believe me, there are some intervals that sound hideous and really do not interact with the human nervous system, or energy field, in a positive manner. I didn't want to give you the impression that just because intervals are in whole number ratios, they're beneficial. They're not necessarily. Only certain ratios seem to be beneficial.

So, I didn't know what these tuning forks would sound like. But when I did, I immediately felt a spiraling and heard angels singing. It was really great. I want to acknowledge that many of my "discoveries" such as the Angel chakra were really quite slow in their revelation to me. With the Angel chakra, I had been doing activation of this area with sound for several years before I finally realized what was going on. Anyway, in terms of this 8:13 ratio, it simply was rather amusing that it was so beautiful and affected me so deeply.

I began first by having some more tuning forks made and seeing other people's responses. Everyone who utilized them seemed to have positive experiences. So I began making them available at workshops, simply as experimental vehicles. People reported experiences, such as I had, or hearing the angels or feeling light coming into their body or seeing spirals. That sort of thing.

We found out that they also balanced the left and right hemispheres, as well as balancing the chakras. Quite interesting. Also interesting is the fact that, to my knowledge, and I've checked with a number of authorities on this—people who really know world music and scales and intervals and such—this is the first time, at least in a very long time, that this interval of 8:13 has appeared on the planet.

Once I was teaching a workshop and there was a very well know medical doctor who was also an energy medicine authority. And when I began demonstrating the tuning forks on someone, I asked her to check what was going on. She pulled out her pendulum and other devices. While this is going on, the person experiencing the tuning forks is describing the sound going down into her body as light and creating balance and alignment with the cells.

Someone asked me if I thought these tuning forks would assist in activating DNA. I smiled and told them I thought it could only happen if the tuning forks were in the key of D 'n' A. Now, it was a joke. But I had the tuning forks cut in the key of D. And people who are working with DNA activation tell me that these tuning forks are quite stellar for the process.

These tuning forks, incidentally, were not the work with sound and DNA that I was initially thinking about when I mentioned it. There are a number of scientists who have supposedly discovered the DNA sequence through sound. Of course, the fact that, to my knowledge, these scientists do not agree upon this musical sequence is telling in itself. It probably all has to do with intentionality, but I'm beginning to repeat myself.

I think there's something quite transformative and powerful about this 8:13 interval. I'm not sure what. It may have to do with people's consciousness opening up to a new sonic ratio. Or it may have to do with the fact that 8:13 represents an outer octave of the spiral created by the Fibonacci series. But it seems to have something to do with our evolutionary acceleration. More on this later.

Throughout this interview, I've focused upon the importance of intention and my belief that we need not become too systematized in terms of cataloging the effects of sound, nor its relationship to color and geometry. I just want to say that this doesn't mean I don't think the subject isn't worthwhile investigating. It's just my belief that you can take any sound and encode any color and geometry upon it.

In my "Healing Sounds Intensive", which is a 9-day training program, we have people from throughout the planet come to study with me. And it really is a glorious experience. We manifest Light and Love through Sacred Sound for those nine days and it's one of the nicest, most enjoyable and transformational experiences that you can imagine.

At the end of those 9 days, the groups constructs what I call a "group merkaba"—a multi-dimensional field which we build using specific sounds, intervals, harmonics, colors, and geometries. We do this in order to assist both personal and planetary evolution, and it's wonderful. But the thing I want to say is that, in order to construct this, we do use specific sounds, colors, etc. And there is a reason and a basis for this.

When we have constructed this with our sounds and consciousness, you can actually feel the merkaba. The energy is discernable with your hands. And the gravitational fields are different around it. In fact, the whole time-space continuum is different around this form. So, it's real. And it's definitely an evolutionary leap that the different groups who do this are able to.

I remember the first time I was guided to create this with a group. I didn't have a clue what would happen really, only some idea that if we could it would be beneficial for all. And we did.

I'm waiting in the silence that accompanies the sound. And I hear a voice. It says: "Congratulations, this is the first time this has been accomplished in many a millennium." It was quite interesting.

But the reason I told you about this merkaba and our ability to create it was to say that, despite my desire to eliminate systems so that we can open our consciousness and not create limitations upon ourselves, I also believe that it's good to have a beginning to start with. I couldn't just say: "Okay, we're going to create this multi-dimensional geometric form" and have us do it. I've got to state: "We're going to sing this interval with these vowel sounds and these harmonics, and visualize these colors, and so on and so on."

And it takes some training and practice. Not difficult, mind you, but just a little experience.

Now, someday I believe I will be able to just say: "Okay, we're going to create this multi-dimensional geometric form." And we'll be able to do it. But for right now, I think we all need "training wheels" or whatever metaphor you want to use for needing to crawl first before you can run.

Martin: Do you have any final thoughts you'd like to share with our readers?

Goldman: I'd like to say something that I begin every workshop I teach with. And that is this: What I share is the result of years of experience and it is what I believe to be true at this particular point in time and space. However, I know that reality is fluid and things change—including my understanding of sound. I'd like to be able to wake-up tomorrow morning and find out that everything I've believed and known thus far has been wrong. And I'd like not to spend the rest of my time defending my old beliefs.

There are so many aspects of sound, as a healing and transformational vehicle, that I've just scratched the surface of some important ideas. And there are many more.

But it's important to remember the sacredness of sound. In all our different spiritual traditions, we have the belief that the universe was created through sound. From the Old Testament we have: "And the Lord said, 'Let there be Light.'" In the New Testament we have: "In the beginning was the Word." From the Vedas we have: "In the beginning was Brahman, with whom was the Word." The Hopis believe that the Spider Woman sang over the inanimate forms and gave them life. Same thing with the Mayans in Popul Vuh. The Polynesians have the creator gods blowing a conch shell. In the East, a gong is hit and the universe begins. I could go on and on. All the different traditions understand this. Sound is sacred. Sound is the original creational force. It's important to remember.

We need to honor the sacredness of sound. And not get too carried away with the scientific analysis of sound and frequencies.

I remember reading an interview with the Chant Master of the Gyuto Monastery, where they do this extraordinary harmonic chanting. And the Chant Master said that there was not even a word for "harmonics" or "overtones" in the Tibetan language. The sound of the harmonic comes as a result of one's attunement with the Divine. He thought that the Divine beings associated with sound were probably having a good laugh at all the attempts of Western science to understand this. I think there's probably a lot of truth in that.

I work a lot with a being named Shamael, who is the Angel of Sound. I believe one of the reasons this being has begun to manifest so much in the consciousness of those who work with sound and music healing is that we Westerners need a Divine Aspect to relate to when doing this work.

The last thing I would like to do is leave you with the Shamael Invocation, which I always utilize whenever I am working with sound. Many students of mine, and others around the planet, also work with this Invocation. It is something I suggest doing if anyone is using sound as a sacred tool.

It is this:

I invoke the Spirit of Shamael
Angel of Sacred Sound!
May the Sound of Light surround me.
May the Light of Sound guide me.
May Sacred Sound come through me
For the harmony of all.

Doors Opening For The SPECTRUM Video Tape Now Available

3/22/00 RICK MARTIN

In our first real "venturing out" amongst the public, The SPECTRUM recently presented a booth at the February 18-20 Preparedness 2000 Expo in Sacramento, California. While this Expo was not overly mobbed with crowds—maybe due to Y2K not happening or the bad weather of that weekend—many EXCELLENT professional contacts were made which will lead to future sharings in this newspaper.

One such contact was Reno, Nevada television host Dennis Grover. Very appreciative of the mission of The SPECTRUM, Dennis offered to have Gail and myself as guests on his 60-minute, LIVE (with audience), cable-access television program.

Soooo, after much trepidation and general nervousness, we decided to dive right in and embrace the television medium. His weekly program, called "Liberty And Justice For All" and sponsored by the Washoe County Libertarian Party, was taped and broadcast on Wednesday evening, March 1. Tapes of the program are distributed to a worldwide audience and thus the session is rebroadcast at many different times and places.

The title of this particular program session was "Publishing The Truth". The discussion focused on the trials and tribulations encountered by those attempting to offer a truly free press. Part of that general topic was a discussion of the many challenges encountered when publishing information such as that offered through The SPECTRUM.

For those of you who may be interested in this subject and our "performance" in the television medium, we are now able to offer a videotape of the program for a cost of $12 (shipping is included). To order the tape, you may call us toll-free at 1-877-280-2866, or send your request with a check or money order for $12 to our mailing address: 9101 W. Sahara Ave., PMB 158, Las Vegas, NV 89117.

We, of course, would like to extend our deepest thanks to Dennis Grover for offering to us the opportunity of speaking to a much wider audience through the television medium. Tapes of his program are subscribed to as far away as Greece, so we have high expectations of making many new friends through this avenue.

Continuing down this same path of expanded public visibility, by the time you receive this edition of The SPECTRUM we will have attended, as exhibitors, the 2000 Freedom Rally, held in Irvine, California. Again we expect to make new friends and open up still more opportunities for making people aware of this unique publication and its information.

And to those of you who have so kindly offered—and have taken the time and energy—to disseminate The SPECTRUM at events and places all over the planet, we offer our deepest appreciation. Every day excited calls come into the office from those who are asking to subscribe and wanting ALL of the back issues. They are thrilled by what they have read and, with a buoyant energy in their voices, are so thankful to have found this publication—usually through a friend like YOU!

Basic Safety Net In Difficult Times

So You Want To Plant A Garden?

Editor's note: Well, readers, it's that time of year when thoughts of sweet corn and juicy tomatoes and fresh, crisp green salads should be dancing through your dreams—things you can't hardly find anymore in the grocery store's produce counter in edible format. Genetic and chemical tinkering—for reasons of both commercial profit and a more sinister health-degradation-of-the-populace agenda—have made most fruits and vegetables bland-tasting and vitamin/mineral-deficient at best, and outright poisonous at worst. It's a sorry state of affairs when that old decorative bowl of wax fruit on the dining room table looks more and more appealing.

So, at this timely juncture in the early stages of this year's growing season for North America, we enthusiastically share Rick Martin's constantly evolving tutorial on home gardening. Believe me, I've been the delighted beneficiary of surplus bounty from Rick's garden and I can testify—under penalty of having to eat that bowl of wax fruit—that Rick knows that of which he speaketh. So get to work—or play, as the case should be—and enjoy the satisfaction of creating one of the most important contributions you can possibly make to your (and your family's and friends') enjoyment and good health!

The scientific gremlins behind the scenes at Monsanto recently had the sheets thrown back on their “terminator seed” plans, thus exposing them for exactly who and what they are. But don't think that just because public opinion rallied on the seed issue for a brief time that this monster won't rear it's ugly head once again, soon, only from an entirely different direction, probably under an entirely new name.

“So what!” you say? Well, here's what. The nutritional value of the very food you eat is determined by a wide range of influences, but the primary one is the genetic makeup of the seed itself. Beyond that there is, of course, soil nutrients to consider. And, of course, the amount of actual love and other “green thumb” energy you put into the planting and growing.

But, let's not pass over the critical importance of the actual seed that starts it all. Most commercial and home gardening seeds these days (you know, the kind you pick up in the grocery store or at a hardware store) are hybrid seeds.

Hybrids may all ripen at roughly the same time; they may be prettier to look at; they may even be hardier and more resistant to disease and pests. But you cannot plant a garden next year using the seeds from this year's crop.

That's right, you have to go back to the trough, shell out some more coins, and the big, usually oil companies, get the profits while laughing all the way to the bank. And there's no telling what genetic traits important to good health and taste have been eliminated from those hybrid seeds.

Here's a concept worthy of your consideration: Why not grow and save your own seeds? This can (and should) be done by utilizing that now-rare breed called “heritage” or “open-pollinated” seeds. Amazingly enough—although I suppose this shouldn't be a surprise—there are only a handful of seed companies where you may still purchase these PRICELESS TREASURES. I have expanded the list herein of available resources for open-pollinated, heirloom seeds based upon the latest information I could find and assemble.

Planting a small garden at home is an idea that just makes sense. Everything about it is good. It is good exercise. It's a good excuse to get you outside, if you need an excuse. It feels good to do it. It tastes good to eat it. And if you do it right, it looks good, too. Moreover, gifts from your home garden are a wonderfully personal way to share with friends and neighbors.

Unless you have access to a great health-food store near you that actually sells some living food, there is nothing, and I mean nothing, to compete with freshly picked salads, beets, melons, tomatoes—you name it. There is only one slight problem I can even think of about this whole subject: You MAY become addicted to gardening, once you start!

Yes, that's right. You'll have to have your daily dose of crispy butter-lettuce, or fresh herbs for that special sauce. And once you get used to having these gifts from the Earth as staples of your diet, you just may never go back to buying that old stuff at the grocery store again—at least from the produce section. And that's by no means all of the good reasons to devote some of your energies to a garden of life-sustaining bounty.

The forces of Nature have only grown more wild over this past year, leaving millions of people the world over without the basics of food or shelter. Food shortages are common in many regions. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that, in what are certain to be difficult economic times in the days ahead, having a home garden to help sustain you and your family becomes not only prudent, but potentially even profitable.

Let me just take a few moments here, early on, to add some comments of a general nature to this article, originally written some time ago. I guess you could call these comments a general “stream of consciousness” sort of thing, but there may be some points touched on here that I may have missed in the earlier passes at covering this subject.

There are many factors to consider when planning a garden—be it a little patch for some fresh salad lettuce, or substantial acreage to support a larger goal. Water is an important component, and the cost of pumping water CAN be very expensive.

It is easy to look at, say, an acre of barren land and imagine it covered with zucchini, tomatoes, and lettuce. But it is an entirely different matter to plant an acre, water an acre, weed an acre, and generally devote yourself to that acre of land until harvest time. Obviously there are pros and cons to both extremes, but there is a balance, I believe, somewhere in-between.

Soil preparation is CRUCIAL to a healthy, nutritional crop. Many of the old-timers swear by cow or horse manure, compost, and other “natural” soil amendments. Others swear by the use of “modern” chemical fertilizers. Only you can decide what is appropriate for you and your family. With the discoveries over recent years about bacterial, biological, and potentially genetically dangerous organisms living in cow dung, for example, you may want to consider using other natural amendments than manure. Be careful, though, because most so-called compost, in bulk, these days, is treated with either solid waste or urine.

If you sit down to plan your garden and you decide you want it to be “organic”, that decision has some implications in terms of how you prepare the soil. And please don’t think that you will be putting seed into the ground the day you decide to plant a garden—not if you expect a real crop.

Soil preparation and quality seed (meaning: open-pollinated, non-hybrid—not the genetically altered norm) are THE KEY factors to having a beautiful and satisfying gardening experience.

Another pointer: Plant food YOU LOVE TO EAT. For example, many years ago I really enjoyed cantaloupe and other melons, so I planted LOTS. When it came time to harvest (as I had NOT staggered the plantings—big mistake) I had over 50 melons all ripe at the same time. What did I do? I juiced them, froze the juice, and had fresh juice throughout the winter months.

Also, try planting some foods you either don’t know about or have never tried. One “fun” food is spaghetti squash.

And another point: think about color in your garden. It is amazing what a few well-placed flowers can do for the overall appearance of a garden in full bloom, as well as attracting some pest-eating birds and other insects.

When you are designing your garden, contemplate the garden to accommodate the space available. Is this space more conducive to a circular garden? How about a half-moon?

Raised beds are certainly the most efficient method of planting (in my opinion)—but where is it written that all raised beds must be square or rectangular in shape? Get creative, but consider practical application within that creative shaping. Also, allow yourself enough physical space between the garden beds so that when you walk through the garden, when it’s fully grown, you won’t have to tip-toe over vines and dodge overall garden growth. It simply is a more comfortable feeling to be able to walk through your garden in a relaxed, rather than cautious, mode.

Staggered planting: When you are planting rows and rows of any given food, be it lettuce, carrots, or whatever, plant a row or two, then leave space for planting another row or two every other week, for a number of weeks. So when you are viewing your garden, you’ll have several planted rows punctuated by open space reserved for subsequent plantings of the same crop. And then a switch to several rows of a different crop, then open space “reserved”, etc.

Ask yourself: is there a particular crop that seems to grow well in your area? Is there a particular crop that there seems to be a “demand for” in your area? Is there a possible market for your excess produce? Could you set up a “truck farm stand” at your property and make some extra cash to help with expenses?

Also ask yourself, when planning: is this garden large enough to justify starting a compost pile? Composting should become second nature to you as you progress in your gardening experience. Compost, done right, can not only create the healthy, aerated soil you need, but it is a creative by-product of your garden waste.

Another aspect of gardening to consider is this: Do you want to sow seeds directly into the ground, or do you want to prepare little seedlings to be transplanted into the garden? There is a lot to be said for planting seed directly into the ground, although often you have to wait a little longer for the proper soil temperature.

One COMMON mistake is to plant your seeds too deep. The SIZE of the seed will give you an indication as to how much dirt to place over them. Small seeds require a shallow planting. Beans, for example, are planted much deeper than, say lettuce. And if you would like nice straight rows, use a string tied between two sticks as your planting guide. Also, sow your seeds more heavily than you would normally think to do (or most seed-packet instructions suggest) if you would like nice “full” rows. You can always thin out the plants to allow proper spacing, if they’re too thick. But it’s difficult to fill in the spaces when there is no seed growing!

In particularly cold regions, the use of a “cold frame” or “mini-greenhouse” can save months of growing time. It is possible within a cold frame to get lettuce and other seedlings started in “flats” which can be transplanted directly into the garden beds when the time is right. Cold frames are easily constructed and can be made of anything from cinderblocks and glass, to a wooden frame with clear plastic. The more ways you can start your garden to grow, sheltered from a potentially harsh physical environment, the more likely it is that you’ll be eating fresh garden food when others are still

HOW HIGH-YIELD GARDENING CAN SOLVE THESE COMMON GARDENING PROBLEMS

According to a National Gardening Survey, the following are the most vexing problems that plague backyard growers. The techniques used in high-yield gardening can solve or even prevent these common dilemmas.

Not Enough Water	The high humus content, uncompacted soil, and the self-shading created by closely spaced plants act to conserve soil moisture deep down. Beds allow you to concentrate a limited water supply directly where it’s needed; you won’t waste water on pathways. It’s easy to lay out an efficient drip irrigation system among beds. Plants growing in raised beds develop deep, probing root systems and are more resistant to drought.
Insects	Mixing plantings within a single bed (instead of growing row upon row of the same crop) confuses insects, making it harder for them to locate their host plants. It’s much easier to monitor each plant’s development in the confined areas of a bed, so insect problems can be caught early, when they’re easier to treat. Entire beds can be outfitted with a cheese-cloth or other covering to keep egg-laying worms away.
Weeds	Closely spaced plants that form a “living” mulch in conjunction with standard mulches laid on the soil control weeds and cut down on the time spent weeding.
Hot Temperatures	Closely spaced plants shade the soil and each other, offering some relief from the heat. Interplanting taller and shorter crops shades the lower level planting. Lath or other shading structures are easy to set up to cover a whole bed.
Too Much Water	Raised beds drain very quickly and alleviate soggy soil conditions.
Animal Pests	Birds and rabbits can be kept at bay by covering beds with curved frames draped with plastic netting. You can get in and out easily, but the wild creatures can only gaze instead of graze.
Problems with Plant Growth and Soil Conditions	Raised beds overcome problem soils. You can create ideal growing mediums inside the beds by blending soil, sand, manure, peat moss, and other amendments. You can also tailor the soil to meet plants’ specific nutrient needs. Because beds are never walked on, plants have a soft, deep area for excellent root development, which encourages strong, healthy plant growth.

only watching their gardens sprout.

Hydroponics offers another viable alternative for “indoor” gardening, but that more exotic pursuit is not the topic of this particular article. There are many good references out there on this subject, though it is a more “high-tech” approach to growing things.

Another point worthy of consideration when planting a substantial garden is preserving some of your crop for another day—that is, canning, freeze drying, or dehydrating. Also, if your property permits, consider a “root cellar” where you can cold-store foods such as acorn squash, large onions, carrots, potatoes, etc.

In an older Seeds Of Change catalog (also see their excellent www.seedsofchange.com website), we read:

[QUOTING]

The establishment of a sustainable food system that can provide sufficient nutrition for all is one of the greatest challenges of our time. To do this without damaging our natural resources—water, air, soil, plants, and animals—will require an unprecedented, cooperative effort. The current commercial, industrial-style model of agriculture is capable of producing massive quantities of food, but carries with it tremendous costs. Foremost is the depletion and degradation of non-renewable resources including topsoil, oil, minerals, clean water, and widespread social disruption through the elimination of traditional rural communities and their land base.

During the past couple of decades, there has been a growing worldwide movement to reclaim our food system. By implementing state-of-the-art organic farming methods, along with time-honored traditional wisdom that has largely been ignored by modern agriculture, conscientious farmers can pass their land on to their children in better condition than when they started. Most contemporary farmers believe in good land stewardship, yet have been forced to compromise because agricultural goods are significantly undervalued, and chemically-grown foods are subsidized by the government. A few philosophically passionate individuals have chosen to adhere to organic principles by creating farm ecosystems that maximize natural biological processes and interactions. They invest more of their time and energy than conventional farmers do into restoring and improving soil with good crop rotation, cover crops, composting, and controlling pests using methods that have a low impact upon the environment.

[END QUOTING]

So, with this background in mind, let’s begin our journey toward understanding the mechanics of putting in a garden. And, yes, IT CAN BE FUN!

Oh, one last thing: sprinkle some sunflower seeds along the perimeter of your garden. Late in the season those big, bright sunflowers really add cheer to the space and attract birds who also feast on the insects feasting on your garden.

THE SOWER

That same day Immanuel went out of the house, and sat by the seaside.

And many people gathered around him, so that he had to go up and sit in a boat, and all the people stood on the seashore.

And he spoke many things to them in parables and said, “Behold, a sower went out to sow;

“And when he had sown, some seed fell on the roadside, and the fowls came and ate it.

“Other seed fell upon the rock, where there was not sufficient soil; and it sprang up earlier because the ground was not deep enough;

“But when the Sun shone, it was scorched, and because it had no root, it dried up;

“And other seed fell among thistles, and the thistles sprang up and choked it.

“And other seed fell in good soil and bore fruit, some one hundred-fold and some sixty and some thirty.

“He who has ears to hear, let him hear.”

— Matthew 13:1-9

CONSIDER THIS

With geophysical and climatic changes of great proportions looming on the horizon, combined with awakening to the reality of nutritionless food, growing one’s own food becomes an increasingly desirable idea. At some point in the not too distant future, it will become a necessity.

“Give us the strength to encounter that which is to come that we may be brave in peril, constant in tribulation, temperate in wrath, and in all changes of fortune, and down to the gates of death, loyal and loving to one another.”

—Robert L. Stevenson

The Golden Rule as given by the Prophet to the Shawnee:

“Do not kill or injure your neighbor, for it is not he that you injure; you injure yourself. Do good to him, thus adding to his days of happiness, even as you then add to your own.

“Do not wrong or hate your neighbor; for it is not he who you wrong; you wrong yourself. Rather, love him, for The Great Spirit loves him, even as He loves you.”

Most people in cities have no idea how to begin a garden or even consider the possibility that such a thing can be done on a smaller scale using planter boxes. But for the average person in more rural areas who is unfamiliar with the often technical aspects of growing a garden, the prospect becomes too overwhelming to consider and is put off indefinitely.

“...the Earth is utterly broken down, the Earth is utterly moved, the Earth is staggering exceedingly. The Earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard and shall be shaken like a hut and its transgressions shall fall and not rise again.”

— Isaiah 24:19-20

Well, dear readers, the time for putting off growing your garden—big or small—is past and it truly is the better part of WISDOM to take steps in this direction to insure quality nourishment in the days, months, and years ahead. I know that the time for beginning a garden for this growing season may seem to be too late for some geographic areas which receive this publication—but please remember that the garden spot you prepare will be needed and used not only this season, but for many years ahead. Therefore, by all means, get busy! No excuses! Also, buy a straw hat for Sun protection.

The instructions here are something that I have personally used over the last fifteen-plus years. If you follow the instructions explained here, they will work, and you will have food to eat.

The initial financial outlay can be considerable—but in subsequent years the cost is relatively small. When you consider growing your own food, rich in nutrients, the cost should be secondary. The charts within this article hold a wealth of critical information—by all means, USE THEM. Even the most sophisticated gardener can learn from the information contained within them.

“Our old food we used to eat was good. The meat from the buffalo and game was good. It made us strong. These cows are good to eat, soft, tender, but they are not like that meat. Our people used to live a long time. Today we eat White man’s food, we cannot live so long—maybe seventy, maybe eighty years, not a hundred. Sweet Medicine told us that. He said this food would be sweet, and after we taste this food we want it, and forget our own foods. Chokecherries and plums and wild turnips and honey from the wild bees, that was our food. This other food is too sweet. We eat it and forget.... It’s all coming true, what he said.”

— Fred Last Bull, Keeper of the Sacred Arrows of the Cheyenne Tribe, told that to an audience in Busby, Montana, in 1967.

SIZE UP YOUR PROPERTY

An obvious first step is to survey your property to see what the most reasonable location for a garden would be. Always keep in mind the availability of water. Choose a location with lots of direct Sunlight. Also consider overall size—the larger the garden, the more time and water it will take to maintain.

You want an area large enough to produce sufficient food for you, your family, and friends, but small enough so you are not an absolute slave to it. As a single person, starting with a garden as small as 10 feet x 10 feet is not unreasonable. I would recommend, however, that larger would be more desirable. For the purposes of this article, I use the hypothetical garden space as 20 feet x 80 feet, which is a pretty good-sized garden for a small family. When you start planting more than a quarter acre, then you’ve got something which may keep you tied to it with a ball and chain.

If you only have an area where there is a lawn, consider pulling it up and planting a garden instead. In difficult times you won’t want to eat the lawn—or perhaps I should say: you may want to eat the lawn, but a garden will taste a lot better.

In times of drought, a small, intensively grown garden is highly desirable as the yield is very high and it requires less water than traditional farming methods.

“No one should control more arable land than he can maintain in a high state of productivity, the four great factors of which are good seed, suitable moisture, abundant available plant food, and rational tillage. In a large majority of cases where failure, or partial failure of an abundant crop is observed, the meager results are due to a partial lack of one of these four fundamentals.”

—Isaac Phillip Roberts in Ten Acres Enough

SEED

Once you’ve decided to put in a garden, then you need to choose what you’d like to grow—always keeping in mind the specifics about your particular geographical region and the time of year. GET YOUR SEEDS ORDERED ONCE YOU’VE GIVEN SOME CAREFUL THOUGHT TO IT, AND THAT WAY THE SEEDS CAN BE ON THEIR WAY TO YOU WHILE YOU COMPLETE OTHER ASPECTS OF THE GARDEN PREPARATION. ORDER SEEDS FIRST, THEN PREPARE THE SOIL. ALSO, ORDER NON-HYBRID, OPEN-POLLINATED OR HEIRLOOM SEED. With this type of seed, which is rare in this country, you may replant year after year after year using

And It's...

CLAY If other kinds of particles are present in quantity, such soil can be classified as a stony clay, gravelly clay, sandy clay, or silty clay.

SANDY Depending on the size and texture of the particles, such soil may be classified as gravelly, coarse, medium, fine, or loamy sand.

MUCK or PEAT Peat is not fully decomposed. Muck is the same soil in a more advanced state of decay. It tends to be waterlogged and lacking in lime but rich in nutrients such as nitrogen.

LOAM A mixture of sand, silt, and clay, this close-to-ideal soil combines the best qualities of light and heavy growing media. Depending on the kind and size of the particles that predominate, a sample may be categorized as a coarse, sandy, medium sand, fine sand, silty, stony silt, or clay loam.

10. Do not plant for 2 weeks if using more than 3 pounds blood meal per 100 sq. ft. It can burn the plants during this time since it releases nitrogen rapidly at first.

11. 1 cubic yard equals 27 cubic feet. 1 cubic yard will cover 100 sq. ft. 3" deep. 8 cubic feet will cover 100 sq. ft. 1" deep. 2 cubic feet will cover 100 sq. ft. 1/4" deep. You can substitute manure for compost the first year if you do not have a ready supply of compost.

12. Beginning the sixth year your legumes, cover crops, and recycled plant materials (in the form of compost) can provide most of your nitrogen, phosphorous and potash. Double-check this periodically with a soil test.

13. For trace minerals: kelp meal is 33% trace minerals.

ANALYSIS OF RECOMMENDED ORGANIC SOIL AMENDMENTS

N, P and K refer to the three main nutrients plants need: NITROGEN for green growth and in compost piles to speed decomposition, PHOSPHORUS for root growth, disease resistance, and production of good fruits, vegetables, and flowers, and POTASH for strong stems, vigorous roots and increased disease resistance. Plants also need HUMUS which is provided by decomposed organic matter such as compost and manure. For information on the application rates for organic fertilizers when a soil test is not used, see the Fertilizer Program Table which follows this table.

NITROGEN

Cottonseed Meal

3-5% N 2% P 1% K Lasts 4-6 months. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Fair source of nitrogen. Especially good for citrus and azaleas because it has an acidifying effect on soil.

Blood Meal

12.5% N 1.3% P .7% K Lasts 3-4 months. Use up to 5 lbs./100 sq. ft. A quick acting source of nitrogen, good for slow compost piles. Can burn plants if using more than 3 lbs. per 100 square feet. If using higher amounts, wait 2 weeks to plant.

Hoof & Horn Meal

14% N 2% P 0% K Lasts 12 months. Use up to 4 lbs./100 sq. ft. Highest nitrogen source. Slow releasing: no noticeable results for 4-6 weeks.

Fish Meal

10.5% N 6% P 0% K Lasts 6-8 months. Use up to 5 lbs./100 sq. ft. Good combined nitrogen and phosphorus source.

PHOSPHORUS

Bone Meal

3% N 20% P 0% K Lasts 6 months to 1 year. Use up to 5 lbs./100 sq. ft. Excellent source of phosphorus. Especially good on roses, around bulbs, and around fruit trees and flower beds.

Phosphate Rock

33% P Lasts 3-5 years. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Very slow releasing.

Soft Phosphate

18% P Lasts 2-3 years. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Clay base makes it more available to plants than the phosphorus in phosphate rock, though the two are used interchangeably.

POTASH

Kelp Meal (Seaweed)

1% N 0% P 12% K 33% trace minerals. Lasts 6 months to 1 year. Excellent source of potash, iron, and other minerals. Reportedly, the proper amount of trace minerals in the soil may mean only one-half the fertilizers will be needed for the same growth and yield! Kelp meal is also a natural fungicide. Use sparingly (up to 1 pound per 100 square feet per year) because it contains growth hormones.

Wood Ashes

1-10% K Lasts 6 months. Use up to 1-2 lbs./100 sq. ft. Ashes from wood are high in potash and help repel root maggots. Ashes also have an alkaline effect of the soil, so use them with care if your soil is already alkaline. Black wood ash is best.

Crushed Granite

3-5% K Lasts up to 10 years. Use up to 10 lbs./100 sq. ft. Good slow-releasing source of potash and trace minerals.

Greensand

0%N 1.5% P 6.7% K Use interchangeably with crushed granite.

SOIL pH SCALE

A pH reading tells you the relative acidity/alkalinity of the soil. Most vegetables will grow well in a range from 6.0 to 7.5. 6.5 is probably the best all round pH. In extremely acid or extremely alkaline soils valuable nutrients are tied up and thus unavailable to the plants. An acid soil can be sweetened by the addition of dolomite lime. An alkaline soil can be brought closer to neutral by compost or manure. Compost has a buffering effect on soil, correcting both acid and alkaline conditions.

SOIL MODIFIERS

Dolomitic Lime

A good source of calcium and magnesium to be used in acid soils. Do not use lime to "sweeten" the compost pile; it results in a serious loss of nitrogen. You can discourage flies and odors with a layer of soil.

Gypsum

Gypsum is not needed by organic gardeners. It is normally used commercially in soils made impermeable by excess exchangeable sodium.

"Clodbuster"

15% Humic Acid 5.5 pH Lasts 1 year. It is crushed "rock" deposits made up of ancient plant and animal remains. Helps make soil less alkaline and releases nutrients tied up in the soil. Use up to 1 lb./100 sq. ft.

Crushed Eggshells

High in calcium. Especially good for cabbage family crops. Help break up clay and release nutrients tied up in alkaline soils. Use up to 2 lbs./100 sq. ft.

Manure

A good source of humus in the garden. Nutrient levels depend on proper handling and the amount of straw or sawdust present. Large amounts of bedding may add up to 2 years to the decomposition time.

HIGH-YIELD GARDENING: RAISED BEDS

"...ere long the most valuable of all arts will be the art of deriving a comfortable subsistence from the smallest area of soil. No community whose every member possesses this art can ever be the victim of oppression in any of its forms."

— Abraham Lincoln, 1859

Once you've identified the location for your garden, then the work really begins. This article will concentrate primarily on raised-bed gardening, which is referred to by various names. The beds generally are rectangular in overall shape, varying in width from 3-5 feet across and whatever length you determine. If the shape of your particular piece of land is more suitable for such, the beds can take on curves or even become circular. The finished beds are elevated above the ground, anywhere from six inches to a foot high. But let's begin with soil preparation because, without that, there won't ultimately be any food for the table.

Why raised beds? Well, for one thing, raised beds can solve a wide range of gardening problems. Here are just a few:

Spectacular yields depend first on soil conditioning that can readily meet the heavy demands of close planting, carefully timed successions, and a growing season stretched to its absolute limit.

"Teach us to know and to see all the powers of the Universe, and give to us the knowledge to understand that they are all really One Power."

— Black Elk

I will assume that most of you putting in your first garden will not go to the trouble of having your soil actually "tested". But if you do, keep in mind that most plants thrive in a pH range anywhere between 6.0 and 7.5. A good rule of thumb would be: Assume your soil is very poor and needs amending with nutrients and organic matter. It is essential to have organic material in the soil, such as manure, compost, minerals, or combination amendments which loosen the soil to allow for retention of moisture and healthy root growth.

If you are purchasing manure, be sure it is "aged" for six months to a year—otherwise you'll end up with a lot of weeds and grass seed in the garden. Most bagged manure at nurseries is sterilized and aged. In many rural areas manure is readily available from local ranchers and is generally advertised in the want-ads, and often will be delivered for a fee. Larger gardens can require quite a few cubic yards of manure and it is considerably less expensive in bulk. However, the danger comes in not knowing if it is "aged", and that can really make the difference if you end up with a huge pile of grass or weeds in your garden.

"Creation does not take place where there is a scattering and dissipation of energies. Creation requires a gathering together and focusing of your power within a circle of commitment—like a seed, an egg, a womb, or a marriage. If you would create and not destroy, you must remember always the Sacred Hoop. Consider wisely the ways in which you would use your power and then around those ways draw the sacred circle of commitment. In the warm atmosphere of that circle, the power of Love builds and builds like a storm above the wet summer prairie, until suddenly the circle can hold no more and explodes in the conception of the new."

— spoken by White Buffalo Calf Woman, from Ken Carey's Return Of The Bird Tribes

PREPARING THE SOIL

Go out to the area you've chosen as a garden spot and carefully examine and feel the soil. Then consult the chart in this article called "Discovering Your Soil Type Firsthand" to better arrive at what additions may be needed.

The next intermediate step will be to till the soil. Many gardening purists insist on digging by hand—but I have found over the years that a rototiller can be a good friend indeed. It all depends on the size of your garden plot and how easy or difficult the soil is to work.

There are a variety of excellent books available on the subject of raised-bed gardening, and most go into great detail about double-digging the beds by hand, while adding various soil amendments. The instructions I am providing here are geared for those of you readers who have never planted a garden, aren't particularly interested in digging a quarter-acre plot by hand, but would still like to prepare some soil in which to grow food without killing yourself in the process.

Tilling is best when the soil is somewhat moist but not soaking wet. Many types of tillers are good; I prefer Troy-Bilt [for a catalog call 1-800-331-8067]. Very dry soil is difficult to break-up and the tiller will tend to "buck". If you are starting your soil preparation during the summer months, you may have to heavily water the garden area over a period of several days and then wait for it to partially dry out before beginning the tilling process.

Once you've tilled the soil so that the top foot or more is loose, then you are ready to begin adding the necessary soil amendments to properly build up the soil. I have included with this article some charts and other fertilizing guides for your assistance in choosing soil amendments.

Depending on where you live, your local nursery can provide you with a wealth of information. Different nurseries have different soil amendments. There are many excellent "soil building" products on the market—some organic, some not.

Don't get too focused upon a strictly organic approach, but you certainly do want some organic matter mixed into the soil for healthy root production for your crops. What you elect to use may very well be determined by what is available in your area—that helps supply what your particular soil may need.

"It is a fundamental error to suppose that farming is neither a business nor a profession. It is a business which requires the highest business talent; it is a profession which requires the best technical skill.... No other profession requires such a variety of learning, such an insight into Nature, such skill of a technical kind in order to be successful, as the profession of farming."

— Harvey W. Wiley from The Lure Of The Land

Once you've purchased and spread your soil amendments (which can include manure, organic compost, minerals, and other materials) across the entire surface area of your garden spot, then once again till the soil with the rototiller—or dig by hand if you are so inclined.

Fertilizer, whether organic or commercial, should be spread across the top of the completed beds and then lightly worked into the top several inches of the soil. Therefore, when spreading amendments for tilling into the soil, hold the actual fertilizer aside for the final step after the beds have been constructed.

BED CONSTRUCTION

Once you’ve spread the soil amendments over your garden area and have rototilled it thoroughly, next comes the hard part (physically). For the sake of discussion, let’s say your garden area (plot) is 20 x 80 feet. At this point you’ll be needing a flat, square-end shovel with a short handle. Beginning at one end, shovel an outer pathway along the 80 foot side. The pathway will be approximately 18 inches wide. As you shovel (deeply) the soft, tilled soil, throw each shovelful right next to you as you go—on what will be your first bed. The beds will be, on the average, about 4 feet across. You could, theoretically, have a bed which would, in this case, measure 4 feet by 80 feet. (It is nice to break up these long beds with cross pathways for ease of moving around in the garden.)

When you have finished shoveling your first outer pathway by placing the excess dirt onto your first bed—then measure 4 feet across and mark it with occasional stakes or with stakes and a long string.

Then, beginning at one end along the 20-foot side, 4 feet in from the 80-foot outer edge, begin shoveling an inner pathway. The pathway should be whatever width you are comfortable with—don’t crowd yourself—18 inches is a good standard (less if space is limited). With the first shovel of dirt, throw it immediately to your left. With the next shovel, to your right—left then right, left then right, until you are all the way across the 80-foot length of land. You now have an outer path, one 4-foot very rough looking bed, another path, and then the rest of the plot. Repeat the process. In the end you will have 4 raised beds, approximately 4 feet across and 80 feet long.

SHAPING THE BEDS

Now, using a long-handled (preferably wide) rake, you will begin to shape and even out the beds. The beds should be, for all intents and purposes, flat on top.

When there is a lot of organic matter in the soil, the beds can be shaped as rounded mounds. But for purposes here, I’ll generically describe them as “flat-surfaced”. You’ll be able to tell by the texture of your specific soil what is the most appropriate shape for your own garden. A flat surface tends to be the easiest to work with.

With the flat-surfaced beds, sides should be at a 45-degree angle to the horizonital. In other words, a moderate slope upward should be fashioned around the edges. As you work with the dirt, you will develop a “feel” for it.

Once you’ve completed the general shaping of each of the beds, you should be pretty tired, so, take a break and have some lemonade.

After your rest break, sprinkle the chemical or organic fertilizer evenly across the top of each bed. Then gently work the fertilizer into the top several inches of the beds with a rake. When complete, smooth the entire top of each bed to a flat surface.

Then take a piece of plywood, say 2.5 x 4 feet, and place it across the far end of the first bed. Stand on top of the board and gently jump up and down—you will flatten the surface of the beds to the extent that they will keep their shape in all weather conditions. Step off the board, move it a bit, and repeat the process until the entire surface is gently flattened. Do this to all of the beds.

I would also recommend, with the beds now complete, that you drive wooden stakes into the ground at key spots around the edges of each bed—say, the four corners and then every six-to-ten feet—right up to the outer edge of the bed. These stakes, say four inches wide, 1 inch thick, by 1 foot long—will serve as “hose guides”. As you move watering hoses around your garden, this will prevent the hose from running up the sides of your beds and breaking your plants (which can often happen in a mere moment). There are also commercially available plastic and metal hose guides in garden centers of many stores, like Walmart and Kmart and elsewhere, which operate a bit more cleverly than wooden stakes in terms of rollers and curved guides to prevent hoses from jumping around corners.

FENCING

Prior to planting and depending upon where you live, you may want to consider putting up a wire fence to keep out dogs and cats and wild animals like rabbits and deer who may view your garden as theirs. Just one animal can do a great deal of damage to the completed beds. Cats will often use the soft dirt in a freshly prepared garden bed as a “litter box”.

Generally speaking, fencing your garden is a good idea.

PLANTING

Using the raised-bed method of gardening, due to the loose soil structure, you are able to plant the rows closer together because the roots themselves grow straight down, rather than

WHAT ONE PLANT WILL YIELD

Knowing how many pounds of peas that one plant, or seed, will produce or how many cucumbers to expect from one vine is invaluable when you’re planning your garden. For vegetables that yield once per plant, like carrots and onions, the figuring is easy. But what about all those that yield steadily over weeks? Here is a list of vegetables and the yield you can expect from one plant of each.

One Plant	Produces		How Often
	QUANTITY	WEIGHT (LB.)
Asparagus	1 spear	1/12	per week for 4 weeks
Beans (lima)	—	1/25	per week
Beans (snap)	—	1/16	per week for 3 weeks
Broccoli	—	2/3	main head plus 1/2 lb. per season
Brussels sprouts	100 sprouts	3	per season
Cantaloupes	2 cantaloupes	2	per season
Cucumbers	2 cucumbers	1	per week
Eggplants	1 eggplant	1/2	per week
Peas	—	1/16	per week for 4 weeks
Peppers	1 pepper	1/4	per week
Potatoes	—	2 3/4	per season
Squash (summer)	3 squash	1	per week
Squash (winter)	1 squash	1	per season
Sweet potatoes	—	1	per season
Tomatoes	3 tomatoes	1	per week

flattening out, as happens with harder soil. You are also able to plant closer together within rows. Therefore, the overall yield is higher in a smaller space. Due to the high percentage of organic material in the soil, by using the raised-bed method the plant's root structure develops more fully and is, overall, healthier. A healthy root structure equates to hardier plants more resistant to pests and diseases, and thus greater yield of food production. The old saying, "Everything is connected to everything" really applies to gardening!

A good recommendation, even though slightly more costly, is to "sow heavy". That means use quite a bit of seed within the rows while you are planting, and then "thin out" the plants later. This will prevent bald spots or open spots within the rows. Again, a common mistake for new gardeners is to plant some seeds too deep; try to avoid this well-meaning but counterproductive tendency.

You want to plant (and later thin) in such a way as to have the mature leaves of the plants touching one another row-to-row. This creates a "mini-greenhouse effect" or a "living mulch" effect which softens the taxing effects of hot, mid-day Sun. After all, Sun-scorched plants must first repair damage before devoting energy to further growth development. Planting in this manner also shades the topsoil, thus preventing excessive water loss due to evaporation and it also discourages weed growth.

The raised-bed method of gardening is really the very best of many approaches. And, by the way, with raised beds you don't have to lean over as far to harvest or pull weeds throughout the season. I believe this is why the Irish refer to raised beds as lazy beds.

You will probably want to plant some flowers throughout your garden. They add color and some, such as Sun-thriving marigolds, deter some pesky insects and animals. Plant flowers that you'd like to see and use for dinnertime table decorations. Mix it up a bit. And for those of you who are daring about exploring edible flowers, maybe some of those pretty blooms will end up decorating (and being part of the contents of) the salad bowl rather than a dinner table vase.

Also, when planting, don't plant all of any given crop at the same time—particularly with something like lettuce. Plant a few rows, then leave some open space for a second-rotation planting later on. That way you always have fresh lettuce when the old lettuce has bolted, or gone to seed—which tends to happen in hot weather. Consult the planting guides and related charts I have included herein for more information about your favorite garden varieties.

WATERING YOUR GARDEN

Once again, don't be a slave to the garden unless you want to be. We live in a modern age—one in which there are digital, battery-operated automatic timers which you can attach directly to your faucet and/or garden-hose sprinkling system. It is possible to program several waterings per day with a quality timer, which may be well worth the expense in the time it saves you. Keep in mind that, while the timer and sprinklers water the garden, you can be somewhere else.

Just a few tips: While it is true that overwatering can create a real problem, especially in soils which do not drain easily, underwatering is a serious mistake—particularly in the very early stages of germination. DO NOT LET THOSE NEWLY PLANTED SEEDS DRY OUT! EVER!

If you are watering several times per day by hand, you will literally be able to tell when enough is enough. If you are using a timer, which I DO recommend for convenience, you'll just have to play with it a bit to get it "just right".

But under no circumstances let the seeds dry out. I cannot emphasize this enough: It is better to overwater, if you must, than to underwater, in the beginning. Besides, the raised-bed method of gardening will be more forgiving of a bit of overwatering than will a regular, hardpack farming method.

"But what kind of sprinkler should I use?" you may ask. An OSCILLATING sprinkler is, in my opinion, the most practical—assuming the geometry of your garden is rectangular.

Also, Y-adaptors are available among the garden hose plumbing accessories to allow for two hoses, and thus two sprinklers running off the same timer-regulated main water line.

Keep in mind that I'm providing instructions here for a low-maintenance garden that will grow quality food. If you prefer to live in the garden day and night, that is your choice and you certainly are free to do so. My only point here is that over-work isn't necessary to get results that you'll be delighted with.

WHAT NOW?

If you have followed the instructions to this point, YOU'RE THERE! You'll start to see the results of all the important preparations made earlier.

As the vegetables begin to grow, thin them carefully. I always recommend using a sharp knife when harvesting. For example, when harvesting lettuce, I like to cut away the outer leaves while letting the plant continue its growth. Lettuce plants will continue to provide you with salad goodies until it gets too hot and the plants may bolt. Then wait till things cool down a bit and then start new seeds.

You will be amazed by what is unfolding before your eyes as each new day brings your garden into another stage of development. There is so much you learn and enjoy and experiment with!

I believe you will find that growing a garden is an extremely rewarding experience—not to mention the quality of the food you'll soon be eating and sharing with others. If it is done right, it can be a profoundly satisfying experience and provides a unique avenue for getting close to Mother Nature. Learning about gardening is a lot like life—it takes time and just goes on and on and on. The secret lies in beginning!

If you've completed the garden, you've accomplished a great thing. A garden at home is worth a lot more than many other kinds of insurance policies. When all is said and done, you can now go out into your own back yard and pick your next HEALTHY meal. And how do you measure the health benefits of getting your hands dirty in that rich soil? How much is it worth it to you to lower your blood pressure 20-30 points or more? Is it more fun puttering in your garden or lying on your back in a hospital bed? And what about the expense of medical care today? Along with our pets, and a sense of humor, a garden is just plain good medicine!

So what's stopping YOU? No excuses now. Get busy!

"We are gardeners, you and I, in the Garden of the Conscious Presence. We draw the substance of the past into conceptions of the future. I am the source of the garden's design and I return to the garden through you. Together we tend the fields of possibility, drawing forth the inexhaustible beauties of structure, objectifying wonders, and manifesting new orders.

As each universal context spirals outward toward maturation, it gives birth to new and more intricate contexts within itself, revolutionizing former understandings of scale and revealing a host of new worlds to explore, inhabit, and enjoy. Each successive order of manifestation becomes the basis of yet another order, and then of still another. So new creatures coalesce from the fields of possibility, populating every desirable realm, as Infinite Potential eternally uncoils from the heart of God."

COMPOSTING

If you are just beginning a garden, you may be too overwhelmed in the moment to even consider composting. But let me strongly advise you to include composting as part of your gardening experience. This is useful for many reasons, not the least of which is that it is a tremendous way to recycle the large quantity of excess greens that will be a by-product of the garden as you move through the seasons.

Why compost? Well, it's no accident that gardeners with the best yields tend to be fervent composters. Compost serves several functions. It improves the structure of the soil, which allows for easier working of the soil, and it increases aeration and water retention. Additionally, it returns much-needed nutrients to the soil, including nitrogen. Improved texture, structure, and nourishment lead to healthy soil. Healthy soil allows for higher and better quality yields of produce.

"Ok, but how do I do it?" you ask. Well, there are as many ways to start a compost area as there are ways to plant a garden. I will present here one of the cheapest, easiest, and most effective ways that I have found [see nearby]. And there are also as many books on composting as there are on gardening, so you can read in greater detail independently as you go along.

In the meantime, using 4-foot fencing wire (chicken wire will do), roll out enough fencing to produce a circle approximately six feet across. Then, with the wire laying on the ground, cut 2x4s into four-foot lengths and nail the fencing to the 2x4s at about four-foot intervals.

Pick a space to the side of your garden, one which is out of the way, yet with convenient access to the actual garden area. Also, your compost pile must be within reach of water. Once you've chosen a (permanent) spot for your compost pile, using a shovel, dig down one or two feet and turn over the soil in a circle approximately six feet in diameter.

Once the soil is "broken up", place kindling, twigs, a wooden pallet, shrub materials, or anything which will create an air pocket a foot high above the soil line. Now, take your fencing with 2x4s nailed to it, and lift it up vertically. Then join the ends so that you have a circle six feet across and four feet high. Now move the fencing circle over your hole.

You now are ready to begin building your compost pile, much like a layer cake. A good general recipe for composting is, by weight: 1/3 dry vegetation, 1/3 green vegetation and kitchen wastes, and 1/3 soil.

Some important things to remember, however: DO NOT add to your compost, under any circumstances, ever, the following: pine needles, fruit/fruit peels, meat of any kind. As you move along, you might want to add some humic acid to the pile to increase the availability of nutrients for plants later on. It is also very important to know that you must add soil to your compost pile—in fact, soil will keep down flies and odors.

Once you have your fencing up and you are ready to begin, you may well wish to create several large separate piles, in the immediate vicinity of the compost pile, comprised of:

manure, dirt, straw, grass clippings. Don't start your compost pile by just throwing some garbage down and thinking you have the makings of compost—you don't!

Always think in terms of a layer cake. Once you lay down, say, a one- to two-foot layer of grass clippings, then take your shovel and throw onto it a layer of manure or a layer of dirt. Then repeat the process—a green layer or a wet layer, and a dry layer.

To BEGIN the pile, try to build up the compost to at least three feet high. Another combination would be: a layer of straw, a layer of green materials, a layer of manure and/or dirt.

When you've completed this step, get the hose and water the compost just like it is your garden. The compost should be moist at all times. That means whenever you water the garden, water the compost. You want to generate enough heat within that pile to allow the microorganisms to break down the materials into a very nitrogen-rich material which will be added back to the garden later on—and thus save you money!

This method that I am recommending is relatively low maintenance, although you DO need access to dirt and/or manure to maintain the compost pile properly. When you are throwing kitchen scraps on the pile, be sure not to throw meats onto it. But when you do throw wet waste on the pile, always follow that up with a covering of dirt. This makes the process of composting much more aromatically pleasant. (Trust me on this one.)

Bottom line? Every time I've planted a garden and haven't started a compost pile at the same time, I've regretted it. You will be AMAZED at how much excess greenery comes from a garden over the course of a season. And besides, why pay for nitrogen-rich materials to add to your garden when you can create them as you go?

Many people say you must constantly turn the compost pile. This method that I am suggesting does not require this laborious step. One way to observe whether it is "working" is the following: if you notice that the compost pile suddenly drops down a foot or two, you have successful composting in action. Congratulations! Happy composting!

And happy gardening in a way that completes an entire cycle of life!

THE HISTORY OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT IN SILVER TECHNOLOGY

During the past 2000 years, many civilizations have recognized the amazing properties of silver in preventing diseases. The ancient Romans used silver nitrate therapeutically. The hermetic and alchemical writings of Paracelsus speak of the virtues of silver as a healing substance. In the 1800s, several physicians discovered the antibacterial (antigerm) qualities of silver and applied them to their practice of medicine. They used silver nitrate successfully in the treatment of skin ulcers, compound fractures, and suppurating (draining puss) wounds.

In 1852, J. Marion Sims M.D., of Alabama, reported the successful surgical repair of a vesicovaginal (bowel to the vagina) fistula (opening between two structures) using silver sutures. This was remarkable because, in the past, such treatment had always been frustrated by infection. In 1881, Carl Crede pioneered the installation of dilute silver nitrate in the eyes of neonates to prevent gonorrheal ophthalmia, a technique which has been in widespread use ever since. Von Naegeli and others in 1893 realized that the antibacterial effects of silver were primarily due to the silver ion itself.

At the turn of the century, Dr. Halstead, one of the founding fathers of surgery, advocated the use of silver foil dressings for wound.

The Halstead Silver Foil Wound Dressing was sold commercially through a medical and surgical supply house in Boston. About the same time, a physician named Dr. Albert Barns developed a silver colloidal medicine called Argrol that contained silver proteinate. By 1910, Argrol enjoyed over $10 million (over $200 million by today's standards) product sales.

Although silver colloids continued to be sold and listed in the PDR (Physician's Desk Reference) up until 1955, the medicinal application of silver rapidly fell into disuse with the explosion of antibiotics after World War II. (Silver colloids have seen a dramatic re-acceptance in the last few years in the alternative medical and nutrition markets. Colloidal silver products now claim to be a $150 billion market worldwide.)

In the early 1970s, silver-plated nylon fabric was introduced into the electromagnetic shielding industry.

In the mid-1970s, Drs. Becker, Marino, and Spadaro at the VA hospital in Syracuse, New York pioneered the first clinical study of silver-enhanced bandages on human volunteers. More than a dozen severe soft-tissue and bone infections were selected and treated with silver-enhanced bandages. The silver-enhanced bandage was used as a source of silver ions that were driven into the wounds electrically.

Dr. Alvarez, at the University of Miami, in 1985, studied the effect of Silverlon® on an animal model of partial thickness wounds in pigs. Dr. Chu and Dr. McManis, at the Fort Sam Houston Army Base, from 1989 to 1997, studied the effect of silver-enhanced bandages on an animal burn model. Drs. Albright, Deitch, and Marino, from 1982 to 1986, studied the electrical characteristics of silver-enhanced bandages, their antibacterial effects, and their clinical applications in complex human wound infections.

In 1984, Dr. Flick, M.D., began developing an advanced silver plating technique during his residency training in Orthopedic Surgery at the University of Vermont. Dr. Flick is currently a Fellow in the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgery and the American Academy of Wound Management.

In his 15 years of clinical experience, Dr. Flick applied his newly-developed silver-plated bandage, Silverlon®, to over three hundred patients from his private practice. The cases covered a broad range of wound types: Decubitus Ulcers, Stage 1 to Stage 4; Partial and Full Thickness Thermal Injuries; Partial Thickness Chemical Burns; Full Thickness Electrical Burns; Traumatic Amputations of the Digits; Osteomyelitis; Venus Stasis Ulcerations; Diabetic Peripheral Ulcerations; Post Operative Wounds; Animal Bite Injuries; Open Fractures; Traumatic Wounds; Herpes Simplex 1 & 2; and Brown Recluse Spider Bites. It was from these clinical cases that Dr. Flick perfected the present Silverlon® dressing.

In all testing, Silverlon® was proven to be safe and non-toxic.

Antibacterial/Antifungal testing of Silverlon® has been shown to be antibacterial and antifungal to all species tested to date that are known to infect human and animal wounds. This includes Staphylococcus Aureus (i.e., MRSA, or Methicillin Resistant Staph Aureus) or Escherichia Faecalis (i.e., VRE, or Vancomycin Resistance Escherichia Faecalis).

Worldwide, over 16 scientific publications have discussed the antimicrobial activity of silver. Well over 50 species of bacteria and five species of fungi have been reported to be susceptible to silver.

TYPICAL CASE HISTORIES

Finger Tip Amputation

Clinical History:

RL is a 21-year-old male who suffered a work-related injury on May 16, 1995. He caught his finger in a metal press and lost the distal half of the distal phalanx at the level through the base of the nail (photograph #RL-1). Silverlon® dressings were initiated immediately in the office, without wound debridement, and the patient was returned to light duty. He returned to the office in two days to check the progress of the wound healing. At this time he was pain-free and able to change the dressings by himself.

Silverlon® dressing therapy was continued with daily dressing changes. He returned to the office June 1, 1995 and reported that he was very pleased with the progress. The Silverlon® dressing therapy was continued until June 23, 1995, when it was discontinued.

At his final office visit on August 11, 1995 he had full range of motion of the digit and normal sensation to light touch across the fingertip (photograph #RL-5). The patient was discharged from Dr. Flick's care at this time with no permanent physical impairment.

Clinical Significance:

Fingertip amputations are rather common injuries, frequently seen in emergency rooms. Amputations similar to the one presented are of concern because of the exposed bone and digital nerves. Such exposed structures would necessitate immediate closure of the wound by one of two generally accepted choices:

(1) Closing the skin by removing the nail, nail matrix, nail bed, and a portion of the distal phalanx and surgically creating an advancement flap of skin to cover the exposed finger stump; or

(2) Amputating the finger at the next most proximal joint.

The most common choice would be to remove the distal phalanx, dissect back the digital nerves and close the skin at the distal phalangeal joint, thereby shortening the digit. Even with this surgical amputation procedure, the occurrence of digital neuromas (abnormal nerve formation) is between 5% and 27%. The occurrence of digital neuromas often necessitates a second surgical procedure to isolate the neuroma and place it into the center of the proximal phalanx.

This case demonstrates several distinct benefits of the Silverlon® dressing technology:

- No digital neuroma with normal skin sensation;
- Return of normal dermatoglyphic (fingerprint) lines;
- Return to work the next day, with no long-term disability from a Worker's Compensation Liability point of view.

This case was typical of approximately 40 such digit and hand injuries that Dr. Flick has treated. Comparing with historical controls reveals no delay in wound healing as well as fewer complications than normally seen with hand injuries.

Deep Forehead Laceration

As an Orthopedic Surgeon, this case is typical of the type of trauma seen from high-velocity motor vehicle injuries. Approximately 70 cases with large acute lacerations have been treated with the Silverlon®. While it is not possible to state that wound healing with the Silverlon® was accelerated without control measures, the cases that received the Silverlon® never experienced delay in wound healing. This case is typical of clinical outcomes that Dr. Flick achieved with use of the Silverlon® dressing.

Clinical History:

MH is an 18-year-old female who was involved in a motor vehicle accident on October 19, 1993. Her vehicle was struck by another vehicle that ran a red light. There was momentary loss of consciousness as the patient's head impacted the front windshield, resulting in deep lacerations to the forehead. In the Emergency Department, a head CT scan was negative for hematomas or skull fractures. Her vital signs were stable throughout the initial evaluation. The patient also suffered a transverse midshaft femur fracture.

The evening of the accident the patient was taken to the operating room and placed in skeletal traction for the femur fracture and repair of the facial laceration (photograph #MH-1). The lacerations were deep, extending down to the periosteum (outer membrane of the bone) of the skull. All wounds were closed with 6-0 nylon following appropriate debridement and wound irrigation.

Silverlon® dressing therapy was initiated immediately postoperatively. The femoral fracture was rodded with an intramedullary nail the following day. The patient spent the next five days in the hospital recovering from the femur fracture and learning to ambulate non-weight bearing.

Finger Tip Amputation

Auto crash case

The Silverlon® dressing was subsequently changed daily and continued until October 23, 1993. By the third postinjury day the patient's head lacerations were pain-free although she continued to experience pain from the femur fracture. Sutures were removed in the office October 25, 1993. Eight months after the injury, photograph #MH-9 was taken. At this time the patient was offered further surgical procedures to reduce the scar tissue that was present. She refused, stating that she was pleased with the result.

Clinical Significance:

Lacerations on the face of this depth often require subsequent plastic surgical procedures to reduce scar tissue and improve cosmetic appearance. With the application of Silverlon® dressing technology in the operating room after the wound was sutured closed, the following benefits were noted:

- No tattooing of the skin, as commonly seen with the application of silver sulfadiazine (Silvadene™) cream, was present;
- Reduced edema of the traumatized soft tissues. Note that in areas such as the eyelid, that did not experience direct contact with the Silverlon® dressing treatment, edema was present;
- No post-operative wound infection;
- Minimal soft tissue scar, reducing necessity for further plastic surgical procedures.

SilverAid™ wraps are manufactured with woven nylon approximately the same thickness as a T-shirt.

SilverAid™ products contain approximately 400-500% more silver per square inch than Silverlon® products. One to two layers of SilverAid™ are recommended for maximum benefit.

SilverEagle™ compression wraps and sleeves are designed to provide relief from the discomfort and pain related to sporting injuries, including sprains, strains, bruises, tendonitis, arthritis, carpal tunnel, shin splints, as well as sore muscles and joints.

SilverEagle™ wraps are manufactured with woven nylon approximately the same thickness as a T-shirt.

SilverEagle™ products contain approximately 400-500% more silver per square inch than Silverlon® products. One to two layers of SilverEagle™ are recommended for maximum benefit.

SilverEagle™ the world's first silver-charged compression product line, is manufactured with 100% medical-grade nylon fabric, plated with 99% pure silver and 1% silver oxide. SilverEagle's™ pure silver coating creates the world's most electrically-conductive fabric.

Case studies show that when a wound or ailment occurs, resulting in pain, the body's normal bioelectric field is disrupted in the area of the affliction. This disruption can be measured and is exhibited as a difference in the electric potential on the skin's surface. Wearing a SilverEagle™ product, made with the world's most electrically conductive fabric, restores the body's natural bioelectric potential. This restoration has been related to increased flexibility, dramatically reduced pain, swelling, bruising, and increased healing.

SilverEagle™ and its sister products, Silverlon® and SilverAid™, were developed over a period of 15 years by Dr. A. B. Flick M.D., a board-certified orthopedic surgeon, and a team of scientists from many disciplines.

In case studies utilizing Silverlon®, a product approved by the FDA for professional use as an anti-microbial wound-care bandage, users found the silver-plated fabric exhibited remarkable pain-reducing properties. SilverEagle™ products combine the bioelectric properties of Silverlon® with the traditional benefits of standard compression wraps.

Users suffering from a wide variety of ailments have found that use of SilverEagle™ products noticeably increases flexibility and dramatically reduces pain, aching, swelling, and bruising within minutes of application.

[Dr. Al: There is much more information on this which you can get from Paul Senna. Information about purchasing these remarkable products is nearby this article.

By the way, these products can be rinsed and reused, so the price-per-use is better than what you would expect. Remember, the product itself is the germ killer, so if you rinse out the dirty material, the product still will do it's healing and germ-killing job after a number of recycling thorough rinsings.]

Bush & The Twiglets

Part II: Introducing Still More Crooks

Editor's note: The first installment (consisting of two parts) of this ongoing series was presented in last month's issue of The SPECTRUM. Here we continue with Sherman Skolnick's detailed outlay of some very interconnected shenanigans. This was assembled by our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, from the sightings.com website. It is not likely this kind of presentation will be part of any upcoming evening news programs—at least not in the "uncensored" form you will find here!

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY AIDS & BRIBES GEORGE BUSH FAMILY PART 3

A senior U.S. Treasury Department official, in the Office of Internal Affairs, in his own handwriting, reportedly analyzed more than twenty-five banks by which the Federal Reserve participated in facilitating the bribery and corruption of former President George Herbert Walker Bush and his three sons.

The secret wire transfer records, some copies of which are attached to Part One and Part Two of this series (viewable on our website), show billions and billions of dollars transferred to and from reported accounts of the Elder Bush and his sons. Much of this was directly authorized by the secret codes of Federal Reserve dictator Alan Greenspan. Since he acts like a corrupt Soviet commissar, he is called by us ALAN REDSPAN, acting as if he is answerable to no one—except the nameless, faceless ruling elite who own and operate America.

The major Bush family players are:

- Neil Bush, who had been an official of the now defunct-by-fraud Silverado Savings & Loan of Denver. Through corruption linked to the American CIA and a major law firm in Chicago, Hopkins & Sutter, Neil Bush escaped being properly prosecuted on federal criminal charges of causing the downfall of this federally-insured thrift, acting covertly for the espionage agency. Hopkins & Sutter, in the early 1990s, had been the major outside counsel of the S & L bail-out agency, Resolution Trust Corporation, and like Silverado, they're also out of existence. There is an overlap to the corruption of Bush family crony, William Rockefeller Clinton. (More on this in a later part of this series.)

- Jeb Bush (Governor of Florida) and his Colombia-born wife reportedly implicated in massive dope trafficking and money laundering Colombian cocaine through reputed Bush family accounts in Banco Exterior De Espana, Malaga, Spain. Ostensibly arranged through Bush family cocaine money laundry wizard Giorgio Pelossi. [Editor's note: See the earlier parts of this outlay, in the last issue of The SPECTRUM, for many more details about this character, Giorgio Pelossi.]

- George W. Bush (Governor of Texas) through huge amounts in the Bush family reputed accounts, in and through NCNB of Texas, Garland, Texas. (See the earlier Parts One and Two of this series.) And reportedly by and through reputed Bush family accounts in Banco de Occidente, Panama City, Panama and Banco de Panama, Panama City, Panama. To cover up such details, the Bush family had to have Panama strongman, Manuel Noriega, grabbed by U.S. military in an invasion and transported to Florida for supposed "trial". A corrupt federal judge kept all Bush family corruption matters, linked to Noriega and the American CIA, OUT OF THE COURT RECORD.

Who all are involved, and what is involved, in the massive river of clandestine and illicit funds to and from the Elder Bush and his three sons? It falls mainly into these categories:

1. Super-courier of "dirty money", Vincent W. Foster, Jr., an espionage kingpin jointly with Hillary Rodham Clinton and Webster Hubbell.

2. The reported bribery of judges of the Texas Supreme Court to okay a TWELVE BILLION DOLLAR lower court judgment in favor of the Elder Bush's firm, PENNZOIL, against TEXACO, a major importer of oil from Iraq. Bush, as well, strong-armed the U.S. Supreme Court judges in the Pennzoil-Texaco case. (More in a further part of this series.)

3. Reputed soybean speculator and money washer, Richard Dennis of Chicago, in combination with Senator Fred Thompson (R-TN) and major movie moguls and sports celebrities. (More coming on this, too.)

4. Extortion and kick-backs, extracted from the weak oil sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf, done from the decade of 1980 to 1990, by the Elder Bush and his then private business partner, Saddam Hussein, the Iraqi strongman. Transactions were through the Chicago branch of Italy's largest bank, Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, owned in part by the Vatican. And arms deals were made for Saddam through BNL-Atlanta with the connivance of Bush and Hillary Clinton. (More coming.)

5. Political assassinations and other bloody dirty tricks by the Bush family and others, through Bank of Credit and Commerce International, BCCI, and its alter ego and successor, Pinnacle Banc Group, of the Chicago mafia enclave of Cicero jointly with the head of the Vatican Bank. (More coming.)

6. The Bush family and the Manuel Noriega Affair. (More coming.)

7. The Red Chinese Secret Police, the Bush Family, Kenneth W. Starr, the Japanese mafia (YAKUZA), and the Chicago markets. (More coming.)

THE VINCENT W. FOSTER, Jr. AFFAIR Section One

The Clintons' close crony, Vincent W. Foster, Jr., was being tracked as a possible traitorous spy, assisting Jonathan Pollard, long before Foster's short-term position as Deputy Counsel in the Clinton White House, a secret government report states.

The details are in a report put together by retired former intelligence agents and submitted to their former superiors. When the higher ups wanted the matter covered up, the team showed it to members of our group, who took notes but were not permitted to keep a copy.

Surveilled under orders of a clandestine court meeting in a sound-proof facility in the District of Columbia area, Foster was shown to have coded Swiss and other accounts ostensibly put there for him by Israeli intelligence, The Mossad (The Institute). The seldom-mentioned Court's authority stemmed from the 1978 law, under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.

Usually, a federal judge from Chicago was one of those on the court panel. Deposits at Foster's account at one bank on the Swiss-Italian border, at Chiasso, Banca Della Svizzera Italiana—and accounts elsewhere—held at times two, seven, and as much as ten million dollars between them, the report details. The deposits were put there reportedly for Foster's cooperation with The Mossad.

Foster may have been blackmailed or tricked, however, by way of the purported existence of these accounts, to supply top-most U.S. secrets to Israel and to work jointly with Jonathan Pollard, now serving a life sentence for confessing to spying for Israel as to U.S. secrets on the arming of Iraq by George Herbert Walker Bush and Caspar Weinberger. Foster, the report states, worked jointly with the person using the pseudonym of "Robert Maxwell", a high-level Mossad official posing as a U.S./British/European purported business tycoon in the mass media and elsewhere.

Maxwell mysteriously fell off his boat to his death in the Atlantic late in 1991. His business empire, thereafter shown to be a fraud, collapsed. Others may likewise be blackmailing Israel, the report shows.

The suppressed document goes on to detail that since the early 1980s, Foster held the equivalent rank, as if he were a military general, in the super-duper civilian government spying and code-cracking operation of the U.S., the National Security Agency. Foster continued this work in the few months that he was Deputy Counsel of the Clinton White House. In the 1980s and thereafter, Foster, with the aid of the Elder Bush, ran a so-called "Gold Bank" in the Caribbean, for supplying clandestine gold for use by spy operatives, the report sets out.

For more than twelve years, Foster traveled widely for the NSA, sometimes on behalf of reputed NSA proprietary, Systematics, then headquartered in Arkansas. Systematics purported to be supplying bank computer software services. They actually apparently were spying on banks worldwide, friend and foe alike, for NSA. Traveling for NSA/Systematics hundreds of thousands of miles, Foster was the mastermind of an NSA project that tracked Federal Reserve and private wire transfers between banks, trillions of dollars per day.

Foster acted jointly in the project with the aid of his two Rose Law Firm partners, Hillary Rodham Clinton and Webster Hubbell, who had been Mayor of Little Rock and once Acting Chief Judge of the Arkansas Supreme Court. Foster's airline travel records, the report shows, were issued in his capacity as a "U.S. Government Official".

Because of being the master inquisitor of this action, Foster never believed the project and circumstances might someday find his own purported foreign coded accounts, or that such accounts, if he did not already know the funds were parked there for him—that such purported coded accounts could supposedly finger him as having violated American espionage laws.

This trio—Foster, Hillary, Hubbell—and their project made use of computer software, superior for money tracking, called PROMIS, stolen from its copyright-owner and developer, INSLAW, Inc. High officials in the Reagan/Bush Administration, in fact, with the particular aid of George Bush, reportedly stole the software and sold it to foreign espionage agencies, supposedly for tracking political dissidents. The software actually had a "trap door" for the American CIA and the NSA to spy on intelligence agencies, friend and foe alike. The report contends that to successfully expose all this and Foster's role might damage both the GOP and the Democratic Party.

A code-name-only Federal Agency commissioned the retired intelligence agents to put together a report on Foster which was never supposed to be referred to publicly or see the light of day. Not supposed to be declassified for thirty years, the report contends, among events:

- Foster, as spy chief, assisted Jonathan Pollard, a lower level analyst at the Office of Naval Intelligence, ONI, to carry through security blocks, the equivalent of an entire roomfull of the highest U.S. secrets on nuclear weapons, including tracking and targeting details and satellite coordinating codes and data. (Some of these details in binders were found in or near Foster's White House office after his death.)

- That Foster assisted Pollard on behalf of then Vice President George Bush and then U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. And Foster caused others to assist Pollard, who did not himself have the authority to be carrying such secrets home with him. Both Foster and Pollard were apparently paid for this: supposedly through the use of PROMIS Software and other means, to supply Israel with such data long before Israel had developed its own proficiency in the same field.

- In so doing, Foster purportedly enabled Israel to be perceived as a genuine nuclear threat to the then Soviet Union.

- That the so-called "publisher" tycoon, using the fake name "Robert Maxwell", assisted in these joint efforts. (When "Maxwell" died mysteriously, he was buried with top honors as if he were the head of Israeli intelligence, The Mossad.)

- That Foster jointly, with his NSA/Systematics partners, Hillary Rodham Clinton and Webster Hubbell (who went on to become 3rd in command in the Clinton Justice Department), supervised and strategized for the

NSA purported proprietary, which, in turn, made use of the reputedly stolen INSLAW software. (A Chicago-area attorney, a close crony of Hillary's, John E. Gierum, of the suburb of Park Ridge, where she is from, confessed to this writer, in the presence of a witness, that the Clinton White House was trying to frame him on matters related to this. Gierum did not dispute the details of his confession when we confronted him in the Federal District Court in Chicago, 1996-97. The purpose of the intended "frame-up" was to silence Gierum)

- That the Foster-Hillary-Hubbell trio aided the worldwide surveillance on bank wire transfers and transactions, through the INSLAW "trap door". There was also spying on transactions, on an advance-data basis, of stock, bond, commodities, and options trading and brokering in the U.S. and elsewhere. This spying, the report states, benefitted certain high-level persons in the U.S. and elsewhere, including George Herbert Walker Bush, Caspar Weinberger, and others. Among the places used, the report contends, was a highly secret, heavily secure operation on the 94th floor of the World Trade Center in New York City. That operation, the report asserts, may have been the target of the bombing of that building in 1993, since the basement attack would cause noxious fumes to gather on the upper floors. (One of the accused so-called "Arab terrorist" bombers was actually close to Israeli intelligence, the report states.)

The document raises the issue that Israel and others may have had an interest in knocking out the 94th-floor operation.

According to the report, a former high-level Mossad official, living in the Chicago-area, coordinates some of the bank and brokerage spying, through a super-computer built into his home. The retired intelligence agency team assert that he is a renegade, now working AGAINST the Mossad and is highly corrupt. His address and particulars were made available by certain other sources for the purposes of targeting him for a so-called Israeli revenge attack on his residence. By accident, some years prior, this writer interviewed that official when he supposedly was still an Israeli official.

- The report goes on to contend that Hillary was more or less Foster's "lover" and had knowledge of his purported coded secret accounts; that Hillary had what is known in law as a beneficial interest in those accounts in Switzerland and elsewhere.

The report goes on to detail how Hillary and Foster were apparently able to blackmail various members of the U.S. Congress and federal agencies. The report lists 240 top U.S. officials who took bribes or were blackmailed as if they did take the bribes, by way of bribery funds parked in Swiss and other banks. A small group of former intelligence operatives, very adept with supercomputers, traced and determined these coded accounts and, through computer trickery, caused the accounts to be entirely withdrawn and wiped out, and the deposits transferred. Over $3.5 million of coded accounts, supposedly belonging to U.S. officials, were transferred to the U.S. Treasury Holding Account—a device for seizing illicit foreign funds of U.S. citizens.

The report contends, however, that under disguise of being seized for the U.S. Treasury Holding Account, the funds were actually stolen by the computer wizards. Left unanswered, the report asserts, is whether these accounts, including that supposedly of Foster with Hillary's beneficial interest, ever went to the U.S. Treasury Holding Account or actually to private accounts, including those of George Herbert Walker Bush and his family, and certain renegade operations of the American CIA, French CIA, the Mossad, British Counter-Intelligence, and others.

Shortly before his death, the report states, Foster was upset when informed by the First Lady that Foster's purported coded accounts, supposedly from Israel, were found out and seized; that Foster was about to be charged with treason against the U.S. based on those purported accounts. Those about to charge Foster, the report states that Hillary informed Foster, claimed he should have been sent to life in prison along with his confederate, Jonathan Pollard. Hillary is quoted in the report as informing Foster that she thinks if he were to finger his accomplices in the Pollard treason, namely George Herbert Walker Bush and Caspar Weinberger, that it would not constitute a practical criminal defense in view of the influence of those two with the courts.

The report raises the issue that Foster's brother-in-law, Beryl Anthony, former Arkansas Congressman, might be implicated in the spying, jointly through Anthony's boss, Jim Thompson, former Illinois Governor and financed for high office by the Rockefeller family. Thompson has been chairman of the 400-member, Chicago-headquartered law firm, with worldwide offices, Winston & Strawn, of which Anthony has been a key member in their District of Columbia office.

The report makes the sinister point that Foster's death was "arranged" and "necessary" for reasons of protecting the bank/brokerage/foreign intelligence agency spying project. Foster had to be "terminated" for "national security".

Stay tuned for more about why and HOW Foster was murdered. And the role of Redspan/Bush.

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY BRIBES & AIDS BUSH IN VARIOUS MATTERS PART 4

MORE ABOUT WHY AND HOW FOSTER WAS MURDERED AND THE REPUTED ROLE OF REDSPAN/BUSH.

The suppressed report of the retired intelligence agents showed that Vincent W. Foster, Jr., was a high-ranking official of the super-secret National Security Agency, NSA. There was no actual title for him. In effect, however, Foster was the chief of bank spying, operating jointly with Alan Greenspan, the bank dictator who is like a Soviet Commissar, hence, called by us Alan REDSPAN.

As bank spy chief, Foster did this for some twelve years, purportedly as an attorney/strategist for the apparent NSA proprietary, Systematics, headquartered originally in Arkansas. His team included his reputed "lover", Hillary Rodham Clinton.

She certainly was clever and knew how to pose as one thing and be another. Her late father reportedly was a mob "laundry man", washing illicit funds. A CIA "darling" from an early age, Hillary went on to become, by 1990, Board Chairman of a reputed CIA proprietary conduit, New World Foundation, financing apparent CIA-paid agents-provocateurs to discredit indigenous dissident movements. Publicly, some thought she was a flaming liberal. Yet, she was for GOP 1964 presidential candidate Barry Goldwater.

Foster's pal, Hillary, was in a position to understand criminality. Her family came apparently from the Scranton, Pennsylvania area. Law enforcement personnel there contend her family was reportedly linked to the Gambino crime family, New York and Chicago, and had mobster-linked cronies on the Chicago exchanges.

William Rockefeller Clinton, on the other hand, was tied to the Chicago mobsters and their traditional mobster vacation site, Hot Springs, Arkansas, where his reputed mother was a mob "party girl". (Documents of the alleged "Bill Clinton" and his early years have been more or less destroyed. Visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website for more details.) In its simplest form, the Bill/Hillary couple was/is a CIA-mobster marriage of convenience.

Of the trio, reportedly with Systematics, Foster was the traveler and super-courier. He did a lot of the "leg work" worldwide. After his demise, requests under the Freedom of Information Act, FOIA, caused disclosure of some 700 pages of documents as to him/Systematics/NSA. Many of the records, however, were heavily blanked out, called in FOIA parlance "redacted". While traveling, Foster had a more private mission. Hillary had long apparently confided in him that someday she was going to have to divorce Bill. So, among other things, like a typical unhappily married wife, Hillary wanted to know where her husband parked the money. (Our court reform group has a number of members who have been in divorce court. Finding their spouse's money is a key matter for them.)

Foster found one of Bill's coded accounts in Switzerland: Ten million dollars, apparently part of his cut from the CIA dope trafficking through southern states jointly with Ollie North and George Herbert Walker Bush. Account code names included "Chelsea Jefferson", the daughter's first name and Bill's alleged middle name. Hillary reportedly told Foster that if and when the marital battle begins, to put a "brick" on the Swiss and other of Bill's secret coded accounts, EVEN THOUGH THE ELDER BUSH IS INVOLVED, through a beneficial interest, and EVEN THOUGH THE WIRE AND OTHER TRANSFERS WERE ARRANGED BY ALAN GREENSPAN.

One of the accounts is listed as bank account #18, on the hand-written list of a senior U.S. Treasury Official, Office of Internal Affairs. (See Part Two of this series.) Some of Bill's coded accounts were actually an overlap with the Elder Bush and Caspar Weinberger. After Bush lost the 1992 election, he pardoned Weinberger from being prosecuted by Independent Counsel Walsh to keep this concealed. These accounts were arranged by former secret police chief Bush, Bill's CIA mentor.

So, in an expected marital battle, Foster was pledged to aid pal Hillary, even if it meant wrecking and exposing her estranged husband's cronies, the Elder Bush and Greenspan and Weinberger—a dangerous confluence of events, howsoever it were to occur.

The Internal Affairs Office of the U.S. Treasury was reportedly well aware of this criminality overlap. Could the American Republic survive a current President and former President jointly prosecuted for high crimes and treason, an event caused by a new top official in the White House named Foster? Realists thought, probably not.

A series of horrendous events led up to the death of Foster, in July 1993. About a week earlier was the downfall of the American CIA plot to topple Iraqi strongman Saddam Hussein, by a CIA-paid-for coup by Iraqi military intelligence officers. A watered down story of what happened did not appear in the American monopoly press until on and after November 1, 1993.

A top White House official reportedly called off the coup, which was to have assassinated Saddam. Aborting the cabal was President Clinton himself and/or jointly with former President Bush. The Elder Bush, as we have written about exclusively based on unpublicized Chicago federal court proceedings, had been, for the decade 1980 to 1990, the private business partner of Saddam in oil kick-backs and extortions as to the weak oil sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf.

Bush/Clinton had to stop the assassination of Saddam. Why? Saddam's half-brother in Geneva, Switzerland, who also had the documents of the Bush/Clinton/Greenspan/Weinberger criminality and treason and their Swiss coded accounts, promised documents would be released requiring the treason prosecution of Bush IF BUSH AND HIS CRONIES ARRANGED THE MURDER OF SADDAM. To avoid such an event, Saddam's half-brother himself was assassinated. But the documents were conveyed to an independent-minded commentator.

Investigating this whole situation of Clinton/Bush/Greenspan/Weinberger was former CIA Director Admiral Stansfield Turner. The Admiral was checking into the Elder Bush and his family and their reputed cocaine bank money laundry wizard Giorgio Pelossi. Turner was traveling with the head of the Costa Rica secret police, as well as an eight-person team from Secret Police of Spain. Their airplane was sabotaged and crashed, seriously injuring the Admiral and killing his wife, and most of the secret police onboard who were checking the Spain links to the George Bush family reputed dirty business aided by Redspan and the bank secret wire transfers. (This occurred not so long before the initial posting of this story.)

So, just before the murder of Foster, the Iraqi plotters were tricked into trusting Bush/Clinton/Greenspan. By this duplicity, Saddam found out and had the plotters assassinated.

The day before the murder of Foster, the Director of the FBI, William Sessions, was sacked by Clinton. What was the reason planted in the monopoly press? That Sessions had misused his position by taking his wife along, at unauthorized government expense, on official FBI airplane flights. Sessions had in place an elite team, he believed were above reproach, investigating the high-level treasonous criminality of Bush/Clinton/Greenspan/Weinberger and related culprits. The way Sessions was unceremoniously removed was a tip-off. Sessions should have known he was sailing into shark-invested waters.

Several weeks before the death of Foster, German counter-intelligence in Frankfurt were actively surveilling three Israelis apparently residing only temporarily in their venue. This team were reportedly academic types actually, properly called "professors" in Israel. They had no known criminal or other negative background. But the German secret police, through long reliable sources, came to understand that this trio were actually a one-time contract "hit" team, not directly under the auspices of the State of Israel or the Mossad. In plain language, these were paid, private, contract killers, exclusively for this mission.

Through their American affiliates, the German spooks traced the team later to the District of Columbia. The Germans were informed that their bird-dogging of the "hit" team would lead to tremendous U.S.-German intelligence agency friction. That is, they were told to lay off.

(Also reportedly a part of German Counter-Intelligence from Frankfurt, was Andreas Strassmeir. He reportedly infiltrated one of the several teams involved in the multiple bombings of April 19, 1995, of a federal office building in Oklahoma City. Among other things, he was reportedly aware that the Elder Bush, upon the conclusion of the Persian Gulf War, quietly brought some five thousand Iraqi military intelligence officers and their families to reside in the U.S.—many became residents of Oklahoma City. Through German-U.S. cooperation, arranged by the Elder Bush, Strassmeir was kept out of the hands of the FBI as part of the FBI cover-up. Prior to the trial of the so-called "lone bomber", Timothy McVeigh, his attorney filed a Petition for Mandamus, to try to require the McVeigh murder trial judge in Denver—where the case was removed to—to put into the public court record certain documents. The extraordinary Petition, filed with the federal appeals court, was not mentioned, if at all, in the monopoly press. The Petition referred to documents, some in the secret record and some in the public court record, showing that Iraq was behind the Oklahoma City terrorism, operating through U.S. dissidents as surrogates, not knowing for whom they are doing it. Saddam Hussein, Bush's former private business partner, got his revenge on the U.S., and Clinton/Bush covered it up because of the treasonous links to themselves.)

Related facts: Little known, when it comes to security of the President and other high-level U.S. and foreign visiting dignitaries, the U.S. Secret Service has been known for decades to rely on so-called "retired" or elder statesmen of the crime syndicate. So, when a President was to come through Chicago or stop there, the advance team of the Secret Service consults with local, trusted mobsters. "Was there some lone nut weirdo would-be assassin going to endanger the President?" they inquire. The elder mobsters and their own intelligence network always accommodated the Secret Service with pertinent answers and data. True in the past; true now.

Further, when the Secret Service works on a particularly difficult project, they set up what nowadays is called a "focus group", but made up of university criminology professors, "retired" mobsters, and other highly well-informed types. So, after the death of Foster, the Secret Service set up several "focus groups" to consider what had happened. And some of the "focus group" participants later informed us. Those details were corroborated by the suppressed report of the retired intelligence agents referred to earlier in this series.

The several sources thus confirmed details which included:

- That the Israeli one-time "hit" team was known to be in the vicinity of the District of Columbia at the time of the murder of Foster.

- That they confronted Foster that fateful day in July, 1993. They dealt with Foster the same way the Gestapo team did when they came to the home of General Edwin Rommel, during World War II. Rommel knew. Foster knew. He had to go with "them". The Gestapo taking Rommel from his family, went with him nearby. They told Rommel they knew he was part of the cabal plotting to overthrow Hitler and thereby committing treason against the German state during the war. They handed Rommel a weapon, stating he can either shoot himself as they walk away, or if not, when they come right back, they will have to do the job. Either way, he was told, your family will be spared problems and it will be announced as a natural death or a suicide caused by bad health. And that Rommel would remain an honored General in the public mind.

Similarly, Foster was told that they knew what he had done. That he cannot be allowed to endanger the then new President, Clinton, and former President Bush, and Greenspan, and Weinberger, and the future of the U.S. central government. At the behest of Bush/Weinberger, Israel was owed a favor. Israel was the trans-shipment point for weapons from the U.S. to Iran from the start of the Iran-Iraq war, 1980. That Israeli intelligence had documented proof and pictures, proving Bush arranged the delay of the release of the U.S. hostages held by Iran, in return for the U.S. weapons shipments. The delay designed to show President Carter, running for re-election, as a wimp, unable to get back the hostages. The treasonous deal, done in a Paris suburb, October, 1980, called the "October Surprise", put in place the Reagan/Bush ticket. The hostages were released just at the moment Reagan/Bush were inaugurated, January, 1981. And the Israeli government had proof of President Clinton's complicity, later, in the cover-up of treason of his crony, the Elder Bush.

Foster was confronted with his role, jointly with Hillary Clinton, in American LaFarge, the U.S. unit of a French firm in which the Elder Bush reportedly has a large financial interest. Hillary had been a director of the firm which reportedly supplied the ingredients for poison gas to Israel's sworn enemy, Iraq.

Foster was suicided near the White House. His body was transported to Fort Marcy Park, Virginia, a Civil War memorial site. Finding the body there would enable Israel and others to possibly set off an international scandal in that, right across the road, about 650 feet away from the park, was the residence mansion of the Saudi Ambassador.

Questions could be raised: Was the Ambassador complicit in the death of Foster? Did those in the residence hear the shots? And so on.

Of course, the White House knew the truth. The super-secret National Reconnaissance Office, in charge of satellites, satellite spy and imaging, had images showing the body being moved to Virginia. The White House and that location in Virginia are under total 24-hour surveillance. Fort Marcy Park is not far from the CIA headquarters. Every blade of grass is under satellite imagery. A key operative of the NRO, who knew about all this, Daniel Potter, was murdered in March, 1998, and covered up as an unsolved crime.

Other details discussed with the "focus" groups and corroborated in the suppressed report of the retired intelligence agents:

- Foster's body was prepared for cover-up burial by a reputed CIA-contract mortuary, doing work for the "Defense Department" as a cover.

- The prosecutor in the District of Columbia, under the real circumstances of the death of Foster in the Capitol, certainly knew that his office had jurisdiction to investigate the murder of Foster, the highest ranking U.S. government official to be murdered since the assassination of President Kennedy. The prosecutor's office had more than 500 clear pictures, showing various aspects of the body and related matters. Some pictures showed Foster was finished off with a small-caliber gun shot to the back of his neck, directly contradicting any story of supposed "suicide".

Three days after that prosecutor's office began their inquiry, several purported "government agents", heavily armed, showed up but did not show credentials, if any. They quickly carted away most anything and everything in the prosecutor's office that could have contained Foster pictures, documents, and data.

This event was never reported in the monopoly press. The pictures were referred to, however, in the suppressed report, and discussed during the sessions of the Secret Service "focus" groups.

Several years later, the Washington Post ran the barest mention of some of the details of the "hit" team. One story was by then Washington Post reporter Michael Isikoff. To pander to his CIA-media bosses at the Post, he wrote a story designed to heckle all items contradicting the Foster "suicide" story as mere conspiracy theories, starting one article very briefly mentioning me.

(The Washington Post was exposed in a book, the first edition of which was suppressed: Katherine The Great about Katherine Graham, supposed owner of the Post and her CIA links, by Deborah Davis.) Isikoff went to work for the sister publication, Newsweek. Isikoff reportedly is an asset of the Mossad. Some contend his meddling and complicity resulted in the murder of White House intern Mary Caitrin Mahoney, who was murdered by an intelligence agency team in a Starbucks Coffee Shop right in the District of Columbia, July, 1997, and now falsely blamed onto a "lone nut". Mahoney knew of Clinton giving U.S. financial, industrial, and military secrets reportedly to the head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, Wang Jun, who is also a private law client of alleged "independent" counsel Kenneth W. Starr.

Another story about me in the Washington Post was on the front page, July 4, 1995. That early morning I received two calls. First caller identified himself as a U.S. correspondent for the Israel newspaper, Ma'ariv. "Mr. Skolnick, your story is going to cause the head of the Mossad to be assassinated. You are a Jew. How can you do such a thing?" he blurted out. He did not want to hear that nobody from the Post had interviewed me with respect to the story that day. I did not finger the chief of the Mossad. I offered to fax him some details. He hung up.

The second caller that morning identified himself as the U.S. correspondent of "Israel National Radio". He started right off condemning me, the minute I answered the phone: "Mr. Skolnick, you are a bad Jew! Stop these terrible stories!" he screamed at me. Without hollering back, I tried to explain what I knew. I suggested: "You in the Israel press should grill your man Isikoff for putting matters upside down, and now you condemn me for it as if I own the Washington Post." The caller did not seem interested in my explanations.

So, in summary, these are the ones who had an interest to either have Foster murdered, or cover it up when they found out it happened. One way or another, Foster had to be silenced about his foreign bank accounts which overlapped those of the Elder Bush/Caspar Weinberger, and were reportedly arranged by secret bank wire transfers directly arranged and approved by Alan Greenspan, head of the super-secret PRIVATE bank, called the Federal Reserve:

- (1) William Rockefeller Clinton;
- (2) Hillary Rodham Clinton;
- (3) Goerge Herbert Walker Bush;
- (4) Caspar Weinberger;
- (5) Alan Greenspan, or as we prefer to call him Alan Redspan.

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY BRIBES & AIDS BUSH IN VARIOUS MATTERS PART 5

GREENSPAN, THE BUSH FAMILY, AND THE OIL-SOAKED CROOKED COURTS

In the 1950s, George Herbert Walker Bush got into the oil business with his partners, the Liedtke brothers. Bush was assisted by his father, Prescott Bush, Sr., who was one of Adolph Hitler's bankers jointly with the Bush relative, George Herbert Walker.

Also greatly assisting Bush was Eugene Meyer, who had reportedly built up his fortune by massive fraud, misusing Liberty War Bonds, used to suck money out of common Americans with the then new, conspiratorial Federal Reserve—all used to finance and force Americans to fight in England and Europe's bloodbath, World War I.

With his loot, Meyer bought the then failing Washington Post newspaper. Meyer's daughter, Katherine Graham, became publicly known as if she were the sole "owner" of the Post, despite the fact that British royalty had a large financial interest in the Post, and later, sister publication Newsweek magazine. Suppressed was the first edition of a book that showed the Washington Post was a front for the American CIA; this was Deborah Davis' book Katherine The Great.

Much later, Bush brought in numerous British royalty into his oil ventures. Later, Bush was given honorary title by the Queen. Yet, the U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 9, forbids U.S. officials to have titles of nobility and be beholden to foreign kings and princes. And Bush is a distant cousin of the Queen of England.

As we pointed out in earlier parts of this series, according to the secret Federal Reserve bank wire transfers, Bush had a joint account with the Queen of England in the British Monarchy-owned Coutts Bank, London—as arranged by Alan Greenspan, using his secret codes, directly supervising the same. This, in part, facilitated British Counter-Intelligence operatives, MI-6, to do bloody, dirty tricks against U.S. citizens IN THE UNITED STATES, such as in heavily Irish Catholic-populated areas like Chicago, where a percentage of the Irish sympathize with the anti-crown, anti-British IRA. MI-6 works directly under the orders of the Monarchy. (Al Fayed senior claims they murdered his son, Dodi, and intended pregnant wife Princess Diana of Wales. Visit his www.alfayed.com website for more.)

Following World War II, Bush's elders were instrumental in bringing, to the U.S. and South America, the surviving anti-Soviet Nazi intelligence apparatus, the Gehlen Organization. This was under the auspices of the American CIA and U.S. Military Intelligence. U.S., Argentina, and Brazil became a base for such post-war Nazi operations. (I tried to expose the U.S. operation, through a seminar in Chicago, 1976, and, strange as it may seem to naive people, I was opposed by the Jewish aristocracy in Chicago, not the common people.)

Finding new oilfields within the continental U.S. was declining. Bush and his cronies realized that the new, mammoth oil finds would be offshore, under hundreds of feet of water in the continental shelf or the shallow waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean. The name of the Liedtke/Bush operation was changed from Zapata Petroleum Company to Zapata Offshore. The Liedtkes went on to supposedly form a separate firm, Pennzoil, although Bush had a large financial interest in that company as well.

Soon Zapata had some 600 units and affiliates. Strange, but they seemed to set up shop often in the world hotspots and places of insurgency against colonial rulers. Zapata reportedly was a CIA proprietary, a supposedly "private" firm acting as an adjunct to the spy agency and espionage bloody tricks. Thus Bush was with CIA long, long before becoming Director of Central Intelligence for eleven-and-a-half months in 1976. Thereafter, by the way, he became a director for about 4 years, of Eli Lilly Company, major producer of cocaine, supposedly for pharmaceutical purposes.

Being beyond the U.S. jurisdiction limits, Zapata's offshore oil rigs reportedly became drop-off points, by ship and helicopter, for contraband, including transit points for the major dope traffic. Reportedly assisting in the dope traffic from Colombia and Venezuela was George Herbert Walker Bush's son, John E. Bush, called Jeb, and his Mexico-born wife, Columba.

Jeb was the resident banker for Texas Commerce Bank. Like the bribery of judges, the major proceeds from the dope traffic are not out in an alley, but through banks owned and operated by the corrupters. (In an earlier story, by error, I said his wife was born in Colombia.)

Bush/Liedtke/Pennzoil got a hammer-lock on a company much larger than Pennzoil. How? By Pennzoil bringing a suit in the crooked Texas courts claiming that the huge Texaco Company wrongly interfered with Pennzoil's purported contract to acquire and merge with Getty Oil Company. A Texas judge reportedly steered the case in such a way

(that can be done by the evidence let in or kept out of the court trial) that the jury awarded Pennzoil the largest judgment of its kind in court history: $10.53 BILLION.

Texaco appealed the monstrous judgment to the Texas Supreme Court. Like the Illinois Supreme Court, the Texas high court is reportedly known for being "for sale". (In 1969, my public accusations of bribery, made directly into their faces, caused the Illinois Supreme Court judges to have me grabbed in my wheelchair and hustled off to prison for "contempt of court", because I refused to tell the accused judges how our group went about investigating them. I was vindicated. The ruckus caused the high court tribunal to be swept away in the biggest judicial bribery scandal in U.S. history.)

Typically, in a hard-fought case, when a lawyer arguing a matter can't find a precedent case to cite from his state, sometimes he refers to a ruling by the highest court of another state. Once a Texas lawyer cited an Illinois Supreme Court decision. His opponent blurted out, "Your Honor, that is one of those crooked law-book published decisions from Illinois' wrecked, worthless high court. Your Honor is not going to be persuaded by that, are you Judge?" Likewise, Illinois lawyers hesitate for similar reasons to cite as precedent a ruling by the Texas Supreme Court.

The Texas high court refused to review the mammoth judgment, upholding it in secret. When a judgment is entered, the only way the "loser" can escape having their money and property seized, is to put up an Appeal Bond. Most states, as a safeguard, require the Appeal Bond to be 2-1/2 to 3 times the judgment amount. Where would Texaco get such an appeal bond to stop the running of the doomsday judgment of almost $11 Billion?

In a front page, detailed story, the Wall Street Journal showed how the Texas courts are "for sale". The story was headlined "Quality of Justice—Texaco Case Spotlights Question of Integrity of the Courts in Texas", November 4, 1987. Shortly thereafter, in a large advertisement, Pennzoil said the Texas high court somehow DID "review the judgment". A careful reading, however, of Pennzoil's ad, shows the judgment was "reviewed" in secret without a written explanation. (Chicago Tribune, 11/18/87)

At that time, the Court of last resort in America, the U.S. Supreme Court, was packed with Bush cronies and sympathizers, many of them having multi-multi-million dollar financial interests in some way tied to Bush and his social and business circles. America's highest tribunal refused to stop the enforcement of the horrendous judgment and refused to deal with the matter on its merits. Result: Texaco was forced into bankruptcy, as Pennzoil was in the process of seizing their properties.

Texaco had an important source of oil: Iraq.

As we have mentioned in exclusive stories, based on being the only journalists covering a federal case in Chicago: For a decade Bush was the PRIVATE BUSINESS PARTNER of Iraqi strongman, Saddam Hussein. Together, they shook down the oil-pumping weak sheikdoms in the Persian Gulf for billions and billions of dollars per year, from 1980 to 1990. The Persian Gulf War, stripped to its essentials, was simply a falling out of private business partners. And Bush, with the help of Hillary Rodham Clinton, was instrumental in supplying weapons to Iraq, to fight Iran, 1980 to 1988. (To understand the situation, consult: Spider's Web—How The White House Armed Iraq by Alan Friedman.)

Through American LaFarge, Bush and Hillary reportedly supplied poison gas ingredients to Iraq, who used them against their own dissidents, the Kurds, and against the Iranians who fought Iraq with wave after wave of very young, throwaway soldiers. Key portions of these events occurred just as Alan Greenspan was put up as the Commissar of the highly secretive PRIVATE central bank, the Federal Reserve, in August 1987. The press pretend it is a U.S. GOVERNMENT ENTITY, which it is not. The Fed issues paper money, masquerading as the "U.S. Dollar", backed by hot air, not gold, not silver, nothing.

How did George Herbert Walker Bush, with his sons, reportedly buy the Texas Courts to benefit Pennzoil—benefits later carried into effect by Fed dictator Greenspan? And Greenspan approved of secret bank wire transfers to and from the Bush family accounts, billions of dollars. Some of the funds were reportedly the proceeds of the massive dope traffic. Other funds were used to corrupt public officials in the U.S. and elsewhere. Some were the illicit proceeds of the CIA dope traffic.

Banks with the Bush family accounts reportedly involved:

- Chase Manhattan Bank of Florida, Clearwater, Florida;
- Banco de Occidente, Panama City, Panama;
- NCNB of Texas, Garland, Texas;
- First Federal of Miami, Miami, Florida;
- Banco de Panama;
- Banco De Exterior De Espana, Malaga, Spain (discussed in an earlier part of this series).

NOTE: Former Director of Central Intelligence, Admiral Stansfield Turner, was seriously injured in a sabotaged plane crash a short time before this story was first posted. Turner's wife died in the crash along with several members of foreign secret police units assisting Turner. The Admiral was investigating the Bush family and their reported links to major dope trafficking and proceeds through the mentioned banks, including the one in Malaga, Spain.

From our more than four decades of investigating bribery corruption, exposing judges and others, we know that the influencing of judges and other public officials is done very often through domestic and offshore escrow accounts.

The judges and other public officials are in a position to know:

1. that if they make an important decision favoring the corrupter, at a later date funds will be deposited in escrow;

2. if the judge, or other public official, makes the arbitrary, corrupt ruling, and the ruling “sticks” and does not “bounce” or be exposed as purely crooked, then the funds, waiting in escrow, are forwarded to a concealed account for the judge or other public official’s later use and benefit, sometimes years later, sometimes for THEIR CHILDREN’S use and benefit.

Crooked rulings are seldom C.O.D., but rather by the methods I mention.

The pressfakers censor the news, sometimes by simply not bringing up known details when it is pertinent and important to consider the same. Some forget, for example, that the Rev. Jesse Jackson, in the early 1970s, was a Nixon Republican, and later, a Bush Republican. (Visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website; scroll down to our story “The Murder Of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.—Unspoken Details” Part One. Consider the details that the Rev. Jackson is reportedly an accomplished extortionist and is a reputed FBI stool pigeon all his adult life.)

So, it should come as no great surprise that Rev. Jesse Jackson led the campaign in 1996 to strong-arm more than $180 million from Pennzoil/Bush competitor Texaco that got their oil from Bush’s now disgruntled former private business partner Saddam Hussein and Iraq oil. “‘The mission is not complete’, declared [Rev. Jesse] Jackson, who is calling for a boycott of Texaco despite last week’s settlement of the lawsuit” [showing a picture of Rev. Jackson] (Time Magazine, 11/25/96, page 33).

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY AIDS & BRIBES BUSH PART SIX

NEIL BUSH AND THE AMERICAN CIA

Background:

Over a period of four decades, our research and investigation group has repeatedly publicized, in the public interest, whenever we are permitted, some of the following:

1. That State and Federal Judges, in important cases, are often corrupted through financial institutions, such as banks. Throughout the history of the U.S., key judges owned and operated banks jointly with their lawyer cronies. Most often, the judges do not disqualify themselves. It is seldom, if ever, discussed in the monopoly press, tied to the banks, thus shaping a blindspot in what Americans know and understand about the so-called Justice System. Some call it the injustice system, based on personal tragedy.

2. That the purported tax collectors and extractors, the Internal Revenue Service, are corruptly slanted against the common American, and in favor of the ultra rich. Thus the richest families in America, such as the Rockefellers, the Mellons, the Morgans, and the Marshall Fields, apparently pay little, if any, taxes. Is it any wonder the hospitals, libraries, schools, and highways are bankrupt? Those who have the most do not support the realm, the infrastructure of the United States. (Political candidates appearing on my public access cable TV show uniformly refuse to answer questions about this.)

3. With the willful blindness of corrupt top IRS officials, the ultra wealthy have formed foundations to hide their ill-gotten treasures and evade taxes. Third-party presidential candidate George Wallace, in 1972, said if he is elected, he would put a stop to the Rockefeller Foundation hiding that family’s wealth. At the time Wallace, according to the polls, was expected to have 19% of the vote. There was a danger that his candidacy would make it so that the two major presidential candidates, Nixon and McGovern, could not, either one, get enough electoral votes to be President. Thus, the election, in a rare event, would be thrown into the Congress to decide who would be President.

Shortly after George Wallace made the statement, he was nearly shot to death and spent the rest of his painful life in a wheelchair. We were about the only ones who had a documentary film-maker on our public access cable TV show, who said that Wallace was claiming Nixon was behind the assassination plot.

4. That some of the ultra rich families have formed and operate foundations that are part of a three-tier system, using technical terms, that conceal the source of the funds: conduits, pass-throughs, and fronts. That such foundations are acting for and on behalf of the American CIA to buy-out and co-opt journalism societies, labor unions, dissident indigenous movements, and such, and other so-called independent groups. And to finance government-paid agents provocateurs.

Disgruntled that the powers-that-be assassinated his brother, John F. Kennedy, Robert F. Kennedy caused a horrendous scandal in the spring of 1967. To understand the profound nature of the CIA-foundations ruckus, in a good reference library consult the New York Times INDEX for 1967, under the topic “Central Intelligence Agency”, for a summary of stories. Thereafter, in college seminars and a course I taught at a broadcast school, I followed up on this, tracing the “before and after” of suspected groups. We became experts on CIA foundations. For triggering this mess, Bobby, in 1968, paid the ultimate price—being assassinated by a so-called “lone” assassin.

5. That the CIA took over and used, for domestic and foreign dirty tricks, several dozen savings & loan associations. In his heavily-documented book The Mafia, The CIA, And George Bush, longtime journalist Pete Brewton tells about more than two dozen S&Ls taken over or used by the CIA. The book came out in 1992, and Brewton points out that, after the funds were mysteriously “loaned out” to persons often not credit-worthy, the federally-insured thrifts would go under, leaving huge losses for the taxpayers. Jam-packed with details, the book, some claim, is not easy to read. Yes, it is not a novel.

We followed up and identified four such CIA S&Ls in Illinois, not mentioned in his book. In one such, in a Chicago suburb, Clyde S&L, Congressman Henry Hyde (R-IL) had been a director. A federal agency sued him and the other directors for causing it to go under. For example, with Hyde’s connivance, $67 million of Clyde’s funds disappeared in Arkansas. There was a danger that CIA-type details would get into the public court record. So, a CIA attorney from Washington was brought in and persuaded the Judge to impound portions of the court file. Despite that, we did find out plenty.

Henry Hyde wears two hats: First, as known, he is a U.S. Congressman. Second, as mostly unknown, he is head of the CIA’s “black budget”, financing the overthrow of governments and the assassination of leaders that the CIA does not agree with. As chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Hyde has the power to start the removal of a misbehaving judge or to frame a judge for blackmail purposes. Hyde blackmailed the Chicago federal judge who had the case, so Hyde, unlike the other S&L directors, did not have to pay a penny in damages. Details are in earlier stories of ours. Note: Hyde reportedly supervised the CIA dope traffic through the southern states carried out jointly by Bill Clinton, George Herbert Walker Bush, and Ollie North.

In Denver, Colorado, was a reputed CIA covert operation known as Silverado Banking, Savings & Loan Association. From 1985 through August 1988, the elder Bush's son, Neil Bush, was on the board of directors. In December 1988, a month after the elder Bush was elected President, Silverado went under. Large sums had been sucked out of Silverado reportedly to finance, in violation of Congressional prohibition, the CIA's operations with the contras against the elected government in Nicaragua.

This was done to a several-times-bankrupt reputed con-man, Ellison Trine Starnes, Jr., who reportedly was not credit worthy. Yet, he and his associates made more than $75 million in loans from Silverado at the behest of Neil Bush. But the real answer to the riddle of Ellison Trine Starnes, Jr., lies in the ultimate destination of all that money he borrowed. Did HE get it, or was he just a front man or mustache for others, as noted in Brewton's book, page 254? Starnes was the second largest borrower of Silverado and the funds apparently disappeared through secret accounts, perhaps for the CIA, through the Bahamas and the tax haven between England and France, called the Isle of Jersey.

Starnes and his role with the CIA Nicaragua operation is evident: "On January 27, 1986, Spitz Channell, the late convicted Contra fundraiser, associate of Oliver North, and president of the National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty, wrote a letter to Starnes: 'Dear Mr. Starnes: You are cordially invited to a briefing in the Roosevelt Room of the White House. The briefing will be on President Reagan's legislative initiative in support of the Nicaraguan Freedom Fighters. The President is attending. Donald R. Regan, White House Chief of Staff, Elliott Abrams, Undersecretary of State for Latin American Affairs, and Admiral John Poindexter, National Security Advisor, will be conducting the briefing along with me.'" (From Brewton's book, page 256.)

The Silverado-Starnes-CIA money traveled through Allied Bank of Texas, later called First Interstate Bank. (See the mention of that bank in the hand-written notes of a reportedly senior official of the U.S. Treasury, Office of Internal Affairs; documents posted on our website.)

As we have seen, Alan Greenspan, the dictator of the Federal Reserve, with his own coded authorizations, supervised the Bush family dirty business through 25 accounts mentioned in this series. Note: Greenspan became the Federal Reserve Commissar in August 1987.

After the collapse of Silverado, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation sued Neil Bush. As the Chicago Tribune said for 9/23/90:

"WASHINGTON—The government Friday filed a civil suit against President Bush's son Neil and 10 others charging them with 'gross negligence' for their role in the collapse of the Denver-based Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan Association. The suit, filed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in U.S. District Court in Denver, seeks $200 million dollars in damages. The suit charges that Bush and other thrift officers breached their duties and were guilty of 'gross negligence' by engaging in 'unsafe and unsound lending and investment practices'. Silverado collapsed in 1988 at a cost to taxpayers of $1 billion."

Left out of the suit and reports was that Neil Bush and Silverado were reportedly a channel for illicit funds for the Iran Contra operation in which S&L fraud was reportedly used to get around the Congressional prohibition of aid to the drug-running Contras.

One aspect of the Neil Bush scandal reportedly involved him having falsified details as to this on his Federal Income Tax report. Instrumental in the ostensible cover-up was a Bush family close crony, Lawrence B. Gibbs, who from 1986 to 1989 was Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service.

(Gibbs helped in the Pennzoil/Bush fight against Texaco: As IRS Commissioner he helped sink Texaco further by slamming the bankrupt Texaco with a demand for back-taxes of $6.5 billion. See the book George Bush: The Unauthorized Biography by Tarpley and Chaitkin, paperback edition, p. 445.)

Getting into the picture in 1990 was a Chicago-based law firm, Hopkins & Sutter, with offices also in Washington, D.C. As Cram's Chicago Business said of the law firm, 1/28/91: "It does more work than any other law firm in the country for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) which insures bank deposits, and the Resolution Trust Corp. (RTC) which disposes of troubled thrift assets.... The firm handles some of the government's most sensitive and highly publicized banking cases. Just recently, Hopkins was retained to investigate the officers, directors, and lawyers of Silverado Banking Savings & Loan Assn. of Denver, a group that included President George Bush's son Neil." The article conveniently left out that Hopkins & Sutter reportedly helps cover-up failed savings & loans that were part of covert operations for the American CIA. Neil Bush, thanks to Hopkins & Sutter, was left off with a mere slap on the wrists.

Hopkins & Sutter is closely aligned with CIA "black budget" boss Henry Hyde, who is also a Congressman. (See the document on our website where they are apparently putting the arm on their law clients for the re-election campaign of Hyde.)

Among their clients, Hopkins & Suffer has ocean shippers and forwarders. Remember: Hyde limited the Impeachment Resolution against President Clinton to sexual matters only, rather than the treason Clinton committed with and for the Red Chinese. White House intern Mary Cairtin Mahoney was murdered by an intelligence agency "hit" team, July 1997, right in the District of Columbia. Why? Caity, as she was called, knew a great deal and was to have been called as a Federal Grand Jury witness regarding: That Clinton, from time to time, met with the reputed head of the Red Chinese Secret Police, Wang Jun, and conveyed to him U.S. industrial, financial, and MILITARY SECRETS—to a sworn enemy of the United States. And get this terrible conflict of interest: so-called "Independent" Counsel Kenneth W. Starr had Wang Jun as HIS PRIVATE LAW CLIENT! AND, Starr has been an UNREGISTERED LOBBYIST for the Red Chinese government, an offense for which Clinton could have Starr in prison and was blackmailing Starr.

In Chicago, a partner in the Hopkins & Suffer law firm has been Jay Steinberg. He was the Chapter 11 Trustee in one of the strangest bankruptcy cases of its kind. William J. Stoecker was a very young man running a tiny lawn-care service. By the greatest mystery, banks in Chicago and Boston loaned him over a BILLION DOLLARS so he could buy up, among others, defense contractors that did secret work for the U.S. Government. And get this: the banks apparently did not check him out very well. In a short time, he built up a so-called "empire" of such firms—and then his empire collapsed because of apparent fraud. His firms were put into bankruptcy and the Chapter 11 Trustee was Jay Steinberg.

In undisputed matters in court, we contend that Steinberg reportedly aided in upwards of one billion dollars disappearing in the Stoecker matters and that the corrupt top IRS officials are reportedly aware of this vast apparent embezzlement and do nothing about it. WAS THE WHOLE AFFAIR A CIA OPERATION? After all, Hopkins & Sutter seem to be reputed experts in espionage-style cover-ups, such as with Neil Bush and Silverado.

A Chicago-area caulking contractor, Joseph Andreuccetti, claims Chicago-area banks swindled him out of large sums. To make good his pending claims, a federal bank regulatory agency about 1983 parked $58.4 million with Chicago-area based Household International and Household Bank. The matter was in INVOLUNTARY bankruptcy starting in 1984 and continued for almost 14 years. As to the top-level IRS officials in Chicago and their theft, for their own personal benefit and not for the U.S. Treasury, of properties belonging to Andreuccetti, see my series, "Corrupt IRS Officials Face Exposure In Dope Bust".

Chapter 11 Bankruptcy Trustee Jay Steinberg sold one of the major properties to a Bankruptcy Court Auctioneer, who bought it for HIMSELF and his partner, a known gangster. The auctioneer, Wallace Lieberman was later found murdered. The IRS officials, who had long known of the gangster, suddenly started a situation rushing the gangster into jail. And from there, the corrupt IRS officials stole the properties for themselves, not for the U.S. Treasury. We were the only ones to do a documentary which we aired on our weekly public access cable TV program in Chicago about the murder of Lieberman and what all was involved.

Of the $58.4 million of funds thus escrowed, or parked, with Household, Steinberg participated reportedly in secretly transferring $50 million of that to Little Rock, Arkansas. Why? To try to reportedly cover up the $47 million embezzlement there of an S&L, for which Bill and Hillary Clinton are subject to federal criminal prosecution and jailing, on charges of misappropriating federally-insured bank funds.

Helping transfer the $50 million to Arkansas was Hillary's lawyer-crony, John E. Gierum, from the suburb of Park Ridge where she is from. Gierum confessed to me, in the presence of his former client, Andreuccetti, that the Clinton White House is trying to frame him to shut him up. In court, Gierum, when confronted by me with his confession, did not dispute the same.

More details are in stories on our www.skolnicksreport.com website.

Is it a mere coincidence that Household International is the successor and alter ego of Nugan Hand Bank, a CIA proprietary that went under in 1980 just after one of its founders was murdered? As to Nugan Hand Bank and the CIA, see The Crimes Of Patriots by Jonathan Kwitny who points out that former Director of Central Intelligence, William Colby, was the General Counsel of Nugan Hand. Later, Colby was also the unlisted General Counsel of Household. When the Jay Steinberg/Household/Andreuccetti/Little Rock matter began to bubble and boil in 1996, Colby was murdered and it was made to look like a "boat accident".

By the way, the elder Bush is no stranger to political assassination. With the CIA in 1963, he apparently tried to cover up some of the details following the murder of President John F. Kennedy. (See document at our website.)

GREENSPAN REPORTEDLY AIDS AND BRIBES THE BUSH FAMILY PART SEVEN

THE REPUTED SOYBEAN-DOPE MACHINE

There was a conference in Chicago supposedly on the topic of what to do about the dope scourge. The former chief federal prosecutor in Chicago was there, Anton R. Valukas. I was sitting right in front. So it should have been easy for me, as a free-lance journalist, to ask the alleged crime-buster a question.

"Some contend the CIA is flooding the U.S. with dope by way of Chicago. What did YOU do about this problem, as the U.S. Attorney here, Mr. Valukas?" I asked in my usual point-blank manner. He refused to answer and, instead, pointed to some other reporter who had a question just short of asking this panel member about the weather.

Also sitting on the panel as one of the speakers was Richard J. Dennis. He was over-stuffed. Looked to me like 350 pounds of laundry. On second thought, he seemed to be a pompous British viceroy, at some Caribbean colony, like in some movie about pirates. Dennis was glassy-eyed and seemed to me to be half-giggling. On a panel about dope, did they put up a speaker who was stoned?

Dennis has been dubbed the "soybean king". He also is reportedly in favor of legalization of narcotics. My interview policy, however, is to never question, if I can help it, someone who is drunk or stoned. So, I didn't ask Dennis anything.

Dennis made his mark in the period of 1989. At the time, the Vatican-owned agro-chemical firm, Ferruzzi Finanziaria S.p.a., was determined to get a foothold in the U.S. soybean market, in competition with the highly secretive Cargill and the reportedly highly corrupt Archer-Daniels-Midland or ADM. Ferruzzi, fair and square, abiding by the rules, had cornered the market on soybeans. Cargill and ADM had bet big the wrong way. By the way commodity contracts are written, Ferruzzi had the right to seize THEIR assets if they defaulted. And they could not comply with the contracts, which would have damaged them worldwide. Some say billions of dollars were involved.

The bosses at the Chicago Board of Trade, in the middle of the game, changed the rules to protect Cargill and ADM as long-time speculators on the exchange. Ferruzzi went to federal district court. One of then President George Herbert Walker Bush's cronies, Chicago Federal District Judge James B. Zagel (312-435-5714) said he has no intention of helping Ferruzzi by defaulting the two grain speculators.

In a related case, also naming the Chicago Board of Trade as defendant, another Federal Judge, George M. Marovich (312-435-5590) kept the matter hanging near forever. On the one side of that case were some bankers and such from Arkansas, tied to Hillary Rodham Clinton and her law partner, Vincent W. Foster, Jr. On the plaintiff's side of that case in 1991, Hillary Clinton/Foster's representatives met me in Chicago. As a known judge-buster, I was asked if I could come up with some dirt on Judge Marovich.

That was easy. Among other things, he was an owner of a small, closely held suburban bank, South Holland Trust & Savings Bank that reportedly dealt in the soybean markets through their then correspondent, Continental Bank of Chicago. Also, Judge Marovich owned a west suburban shopping mall, Cermak Plaza, which reportedly had enterprises laundering illicit funds in corrupt combination with top brass of the Internal Revenue Service, Chicago Region Office, and the Director of the Illinois Department of Revenue. That is, the mob and the state and federal tax collectors in a corrupt arrangement.

The clue to it all could not be disputed: ownership was shown on Judge George M. Marovich's mandatory financial annual disclosure form. That was the starting point.

I asked if they wanted to be on my public access cable TV program to discuss their misgivings about Judge Marovich having their case. They declined. Evidently they simply wanted leverage for reported blackmail, the usual practice of some lawyers.

Funny thing happened. In 1993, some of the top officials of the Chicago Board of Trade asked to discuss with me and my associates a problem. It was not directly related to the soybean mess. I suddenly changed the subject. In the presence of witnesses, I asked whether Judge Marovich was crooked in the soybean case against the Chicago Board of Trade (No. 89 C 8467, U.S. District Court, Chicago). They blurted out that a total of FIVE JUDGES, INCLUDING JUDGE MAROVICH HAD TO BE "PAID". They were sore at having to reportedly "buy" Judge George M. Marovich, Judge James B. Zagel, and three judges in Chicago's Federal Appeals Court, Judge Jesse E. Eschbach (312-435-5824), Judge Joel M. Flaum (312-435-5626), formerly a crooked Illinois Tollway Official, and Judge Kenneth F. Ripple (312-435-5510).

All told, the Board of Trade officials confirmed the "fix" cost them $62 million. I recognized that as the biggest judicial bribery in my many years as a court reformer.

One of the Board of Trade officials turned to the other and said "You shouldn't be telling him (pointing to me, Skolnick)." Whereupon the Board of Trade Director answered: "I am telling him (meaning me, Skolnick) because he probably already knows and it is bound to come out and we're all going to get blackened. You know we had to do it."

The above is from the undisputed court record in 96 C 4373.

Thereafter, later in 1993, Foster, as the new deputy counsel in the Clinton White House, was found dead. (Visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website for details on the role of Greenspan/Bush in the murder of Foster; Part Four of this series.)

About the same time as the death of Foster, the head of Ferruzzi, in Milan, Italy, was murdered, Raul Gardini. His family are reportedly angry that the American authorities were covering up the corrupt mess of the Chicago Board of Trade and corrupt federal judges in Chicago.

Knowing about all this got me, and my cable TV associate, Joseph Andreuccetti, on Hillary Clinton's "enemies list", to be falsely hounded and pursued by the Federal Gestapo. (They used to follow me, in my wheelchair, into the washroom in the Federal Courthouse. I always offered to detail how much government toilet paper and paper towels I used there.)

So me and Andreuccetti sued Hillary Clinton, two IRS officials, and a top Clinton Justice Department official. The suit was in Chicago's Federal District Court. Guess who got our case? You guessed it! Judge George M. Marovich. (Case No. 96 C 4373.) A lot of the above details about him and the other judges were in our 65 pages of highly specific dates, names, and details. Despite the fact that our suit detailed him and his reputed mafia/IRS shopping center, Judge Marovich DID NOT DISQUALIFY HIMSELF. In an unprecedented ruling, he dismissed our case, claiming we had TOO MANY FACTS, DATES, and DETAILS for him to consider.

The attorneys for Hillary Clinton and the other defendants NEVER DISPUTED or challenged our facts in the Court record.

Later, as a punishment for fingering them on bribery, the Judges of the U.S. Court of Appeals in Chicago issued an order barring me and Andreuccetti from ALL THE COURTS in their 7th Circuit, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Indiana. (Don't bother to tell me about my First Amendment rights. At the hands of corrupt judges, our rights have been cancelled. And the next higher court, the U.S. Supreme Court, refuses to do anything about it.)

Somewhere in the middle of all this was soybean hotshot Richard J. Dennis. He reportedly does corrupt business deals with former movie star, U.S. Senator Fred Thompson (R-TN). Thompson, in turn, is the reported link between Dennis and the laundering of gangster movie funds disguised as soybean deals. Dennis' clients for this reportedly are Hollywood bigshots, reportedly interested in massive tax evasion. Remember, we have already pointed out the elder Bush and his crony Bill Clinton, and Ollie North, were jointly instrumentally implicated in the CIA dope trafficking through the southern states.

The money came up to Chicago reportedly via a bank in Chicago, Garfield Ridge Trust & Savings Bank. And who was a stockholder of that closely held bank? Why, the head of the tax-writing committee of Congress, Congressman Dan Rostenkowski, crony of crooked Democrats as well as Republicans interested in massive tax evasion. Defrocked, Rosty, as he is called, was sent to prison for defrauding the private bank of the House of Representatives. BUT, Rosty was given a pass on the numerous apparent bribes he got from the Chicago Board of Trade, labeled "honorariums" or lecture fees.

Rosty's bank was the transit point to funnel the illicit funds to the Chicago Board of Trade, where they were disguised, reportedly by Dennis and others, as "soybean" trades. Federal Reserve dictator Greenspan reportedly approved of these dirty money deals done jointly with George Herbert Walker Bush and Bill Clinton and Senator Fred Thompson.

These reputed dope "soybean" transactions for Dennis/Bush/Fred Thompson and some in the movie and sports industry, reportedly went through the elder Bush's secret account at Metropolitan Federal of Tennessee, in Nashville, Tennessee. (See our website document of Alan Greenspan's coded approval of secret wire transfer to the Tennessee bank, TEN BILLION DOLLARS to Bush's secret account.)

One of Richard J. Dennis' reported clients has been sports celebrity Michael Jordan. People forget that Jordan and/or his father reportedly got involved in sports gambling apparently with Chicago mobsters and reportedly refused to make good betting losses to the Chicago criminals. Some claim that this reneging on sports bets resulted in Jordan's father getting murdered. To teach Michael a lesson you don't screw the mob. Two nobodies were blamed for murdering the elder Jordan. Someone else apparently had killed the elder Jordan and dumped his body in a swamp. In the beginning, because it was a Black man, the local authorities reportedly did an inadequate job of examining the body. The two nobodies found the abandoned car but were later caught with it. Since they had the car, they were blamed for the murder.

In this regard, you have to consider the 1988-89 case in the federal court in Chicago, the Norby Walters case, involving sports agents most often being linked with mobsters. The reality is that, if you want to be a sports celebrity, you most likely have to have a sports agent IN with the gangsters. Remember our earlier story about Bush and the Jacobs family and their food and beverage concessions at stadiums all over the U.S. Jacobs' firms were reportedly mafia-linked. Also, the monopoly press, like the Chicago Tribune and the TV networks, linked financially with sports events, are instrumentally interwoven with criminals.

Richard J. Dennis reportedly bankrolls publications that seek to glamorize dope or push to legalize it. He reportedly is the money bags, in part, behind Z magazine. When Oliver Stone's movie about the murder of President Kennedy, JFK, was making a big splash, Z magazine ran a story condemning it as if it were a fairy tale. There is a lot about the way Z magazine, and an organization linked to it, operate, that seems to be a CIA proprietary operation, functioning reportedly with CIA Foundation money. Is there an overlap between Dennis, the soybean-dope business, and the American CIA? The answer is most likely yes.

The soybean-dope mess has been interwoven with massive operations in the Chicago markets by the Red Chinese, who have an armlock on the Chicago Board of Trade, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, and the Chicago Board Options Exchange. Part of that is through the elder Bush's brother, Prescott S. Bush, Jr., who is Chairman of the Board of Directors of the United States of America-China Chamber of Commerce. (Visit their www.usccc.org website.) Some contend Prescott is implicated in illicit transactions by the Red Chinese through the Chicago markets. Remember: there have been published accounts that Prescott Bush, Jr. has worked corrupt deals with the Japanese mafia, the Yakuza, that is big with the dope trade through Chicago. The Yakuza owns about 50% of all the high-rise Chicago downtown buildings built in the 1980s. More currently, the age-old foes, Red China and Japan, are together when it comes to money laundering of criminal loot. George Herbert Walker Bush was part of the U.S. liaison to China.

Much of this is well-known to professional traders on the Chicago markets. Little, if any, of this ever gets into the monopoly press.

Some of the Bush/Dennis/Fred Thompson reputed illicit transactions also reportedly went through the Mexican bank with operations in the U.S., Grupo Financiero Bancomer. In 1998, the bank pleaded guilty to U.S. criminal charges that the bank was a dope money laundry.

(The bank has a white-wash explanation on their www.bancomer.com website.)

That bank is interwoven with a reputed criminal money laundry, run by the Bronfmans, Bank of Montreal, and their Chicago unit, Harris Bank. A major owner, along with the whiskey-soaked Bronfmans (who own Seagrams booze, reputed gangster movie chain Cineplex Odeon, and various entertainment entities in California and elsewhere), has been U.S. Senator Peter Fitzgerald (R-IL). (See our story about this: "The Reputed Cocaine Bank Money Laundry Wizard".)

As we have shown in this series, the Bush family has 25 or more secret accounts, transacting billions of dollars under the direct coded supervision of Federal Reserve dictator Alan Greenspan. And the bank in Tennessee is one of those, doing illicit transactions reportedly jointly with Richard J. Dennis and U.S. Senator Fred Thompson. You can understand now why Senator Thompson dragged his feet in supposedly investigating campaign fund misdeeds. He was digging in an area where he would have had to finger some banks, ending up holding up a mirror to himself and his own criminality.

Note: we have shown that the Elder Bush has a joint account with the Queen of England in the British-monarchy-owned Coutts Bank, London. And the royals are notoriously in the dope traffic, since the Opium Wars 150 years ago. One book points out how close Bush is to Queen Elizabeth II:

"When George Bush was elected Vice President in 1980, Texas mystery man William ("Will") Stamps Farish III took over the management of all of George Bush's personal wealth in a 'blind trust'. Known as one of the richest men in Texas, Will Farish keeps his business affairs under the most intense secrecy. Only the source of his wealth is known, not its employment. Will Farish has long been Bush's closest friend and confidante. He is also the unique private host to Britain's Queen Elizabeth II. Farish owns and boards the studs which mate with the Queen's mares. That is her rationale when she comes to America and stays in Farish's house. It is a vital link in the mind of our Anglophile President." This quote is from George Bush: The Unauthorized Biography by Webster Griffin Tarpley and Anton Chaikin, 1992, paperback edition, page 46.

More is coming to this series. Stay tuned.

That "Secret" Something We All Are Searching For

3/28/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace and be still.

Your world of illusion and "mystery" will soon be coming to a point of breakthrough. Much of what you have come to "know" as reality will be greatly impacted and altered as the perceptual shifts in consciousness are made. All of these experiences can and should be used as catalysts for further growth and understanding.

The cause of these shifts are the increasing frequencies irradiating your planet that we have discussed in great detail in the many past writings. [Editor's note: For you new readers, these writings have been collected together in the two volumes (so far) called WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach. The ongoing series of "spiritual" writings first appear in this newspaper.] Many ones do not consciously perceive the shifts in frequency, yet such is evident to the astute observer. Much like a parent who sees a small child every day, they do not notice the changes in size as much as one who only sees the child once or twice a year. And yet, there are always tell-tale signs that will give indicators to the parent that growth is occurring—such as clothes that don't fit any more.

Look for the tell-tale signs all around you and notice the changes. Do you feel the inner tugging of your heart which is yearning to match the higher frequency state of the planetary system? This may manifest in an inner unrest that will cause some discomfort as if somehow you are missing out on some big "secret" of life that seems to be sitting on the peripheral edge of your current understanding.

It is not a secret, but rather an indication of emotional restrictions in your energy fields that are causing a weightiness of sorts in your heart. In other words, the emotional blockages (baggage) that you once could easily tolerate are becoming more and more burdensome as the background frequency of your planet continues to rise. In effect, the small annoyances of a couple years ago are becoming much more amplified as your general sensitivity as a being continues to increase. These are the tell-tale signs to look for within.

The greatest obstacle we see, which most ones on your planet are faced with in terms of allowing their natural frequency to rise, is that there is a great covert effort to keep ones in an off-balance state of distraction. The single most effective method being used at this time is MONEY—or more generally, materialism.

Many ones have been greatly distracted into chasing the illusion of money and the perceptual "status" it seems to buy. The "American Dream" of having a large house, two cars, a couple of children, and a dog or cat, has been painted for you, and you are supposed to make it yours, especially if you are an American.

There is nothing wrong with having such dreams, but when both parents have to work and place the children in day care for someone else to raise so that the "dream" may be fulfilled, we must ask: Where is the balance and reason in such a "dream"?

True wealth is never found in dollars. True wealth is found in the heart. Finding within that which satisfies the inner longing of the heart is quite a worthy endeavor.

You each have a purpose for being there in the physical. Fulfilling the true reason for your participation in the physical at this time is what will lift your spirits (frequency) and, at the same time, empower you with creative insights that will help you to manifest what you need along the way.

Great inspired ideas will always attract energy and momentum if they are held in focus and acted upon in reason. You each have the ability to tap into higher consciousness and allow for new and creative ideas to flow forth.

It is up to YOU to initiate the "call" for Guidance, Assistance, Understanding, or whatever it is you desire. We, of the Host of God in service to The One Light, ask that you seek first the protection of The Light (that which serves to free ones from the "traps" of ignorance) else, in all likelihood, the dark ones (those who effort to sell lies that keep you in a state of ignorance and thus usurp your power) will be first to come.

One of the most subtle tricks of the dark side, concerning money, is to make you believe that you have to have money PRIOR to beginning a new creation. NO, NO, and NO!

How much money did God need to invest prior to creating the Sun around which your planet orbits, or your very planet itself? Sorry, but the creative cycle ALWAYS begins with an emotional DESIRE and mental THOUGHT.

Look for a moment at what a desire and a thought are. Can you touch either? Can you see them with the physical eyes? What is the nature of desires and thoughts? Where are the origins of these non-physical phenomena? Do you personally realize that YOU (the SOUL you) were born from Creator Source's desire expressed as a purposeful thought-energy form?

The nonphysical world of desires and thoughts is quite real and, in the Higher Dimensions, these take on a solidness that could be likened to the solidness of steel or the softness of a feather in your current environment.

The façade of thinking that you need money prior to taking action—that would result in positive change and thus help you to further realize your purpose—is a GREAT and well used TRICK of the adversarial forces.

Let us say that you love to help children and you would love to start an orphanage—run not for the purpose of making money, but rather for the purpose of providing needy children with a loving, nurturing environment. Let's assume you are very driven to realize this lifelong dream, and yet you have no extra money other than $20 a month to invest. Perhaps you could start on your weekend by volunteering at an existing orphanage in your area, one day a week, spending the $20 on gas for your car.

Just taking a small step toward reaching a goal will result in a great return flow of energy that will continue to grow (like rolling a snowball along a snow covered field). By taking such action, you would likely find yourself among other like-minded people with a similar IDEA and DESIRE. Now, can you see that when you have two or more minds (God-force energy translators/focusers) focused upon the same goal, how there would naturally be an amplification of the DESIRE?

Remember, please, that like attracts like. Opposites do not attract on the thought levels or the emotional levels of existence. Only in a small subset of the physical can you observe a phenomenon wherein the one pole of a magnet seems to attract the opposite pole of another magnet. However, if you were to look at two of the iron atoms of the magnetized iron bar, held closely together due to their VERY, VERY strong attraction for one another, you would see that their affinity for one another is so great that it takes great force to pull one atom of iron away from another. In essence, the attraction for likeness is far greater than an opposite.

When you send forth a thought and hold it for just a few seconds within your consciousness, there will always be a response to your desire (that which precipitates the thought in the first place). The response is most often another thought that will then lead to a new or inspired idea.

Sometimes, usually when a thought is held for a longer period of time, there will be an actual physical manifestation occur. This is most often witnessed by you ones as an event such as the phone call you just received and your first response is: "I was just thinking about you!"

These sorts of occurrences are clues and indicators to you that your internal Guidance system (personal connection to Creator Source) is functioning properly, and to let you know that you have the ability to develop this perceptual awareness to a much greater degree.

These Higher creative abilities exist regardless of your perception of same. If you are a thinking and reasoning being, then you MOST CERTAINLY have a personal and direct connection to Creator Source. Technically, only Creator Source can break a connection; this would, in essence, un-create you, and you would no longer exist.

Please know that Creator Source would not have created you in the first place if He did not want you to persist, grow, and evolve in newness. Creator does not make mistakes and you should have NO FEAR of ever being un-created. It was only a technical point made to illustrate that YOU CAN AND DO connect to and through Source every moment, throughout your entire existence, regardless of your perceptual understandings or beliefs. You may choose to ignore the connection, deny the connection, or use the connection in any manner you see fit.

We of the Host of God offer these words in response to the many petitions from you ones who ask: "What is my purpose?" and "Why am I here?" or "What can I do to help?"

Always the answer will be, from the Lighted Realms, to first go within and find personal balance. This means let go of the anger, apathy, boredom, and grief. Find a place of inner peace within the balancing energy of Creator Source—God. From this position of balance will come greater clarity, and ability to recognize within, the still Inner Voice that will help you to find the answers to the more specific questions you are looking to have answered.

Be diligent—for the dark energies do not wish to see you awaken in this manner and will attempt to throw all sorts of distractions in your way. Taking the first step described above will, in non-physical space, cause a condition of energy flow that would be likened to turning on a light bulb in a darkened stadium. The resulting focus of attention from negatively oriented entities may not be comfortable, but with persistence and determination you can and will learn to recognize and use your own inner connection to Source.

You could say that awakening and deliberately using your Higher creative abilities is necessary in order to pass your "final exam" and "graduate" to the next level of experiential growth. Many call this the "fourth dimension", but we see that there is much confusion in the minds of the ones who will be reading this message as to what exactly that means, so we will just say "that which comes after your current level".

We do see that it would be very beneficial, for the new readers of this information, to re-run Master Hilarion's messages dealing with the nature of the "bio-electric sensing machine" you call your body. [Editor's note: Those writings constitute Chapter Four in Volume II of WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach. We are, as suggested here, re-running those messages elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.]

Learn to use your God-given talents and abilities to create whatever it is that makes your heart sing with great enthusiasm and joy. You will find that many will be attracted to you as you express your uniqueness in an inspirational manner.

The correct manifestation procedure is as follows: First comes desire, then comes thought (this usually happens simultaneously with one another). As an emotionally charged thought is held in consciousness, then comes another thought, and more ideas. When an idea truly resonates with your Higher purpose, you will naturally be driven to express this idea in the physical. This may mean telling someone of your idea or taking action to find out more information which may help you to bring your idea more fully into physical manifestation.

Please note: you will not be given an inspirational idea from the Lighted Realms that you are incapable of using in some way to further assist in your personal growth. The Lighted Brotherhood will not find it beneficial to run you around on a "wild goose chase" for the sake of satisfying an ego desire you may have that serves no Higher purpose. However, you can be sure that darkly aligned energies most certainly will—and are masters at this!

As you continue to express your ideas in the physical, more and more energy will be added to your quest. Truly inspirational ideas that cause the heart to sing with exhilaration will attract all of the necessary resources needed in order to bring forth the energy that will cause the manifestation to occur. Please note that often the resources (people and money) only come into the equation AFTER the preliminary creative energy is set forth.

Clear focus on an end result will put all else into alignment. Your heart's response to the focus will tell you if the focus is a truly worthy endeavor.

Exercising these abilities will be challenging and rewarding. Often the fears and worries associated with taking a risk, being ridiculed for being different, etc., will cause you to have to deal with the inner emotional blockages or constrictions we spoke of earlier in this message, and thus will likely cause you to confront those annoying “little” things that keep you from finding the inner peace you are seeking. Note: The “weights” of fear and doubt are what make doing something the first time much more difficult than the second or third.

Actively applying your creative abilities is the “secret” something that many of you ones feel you are missing in life—that seems to be just outside your reach. It is NOT outside your reach!

Actively creating is the secret to unlocking excitement and happiness in your life. Conversely, seeking to destroy what another has created will not bring forth an inner sense of fulfillment, but rather an ego-driven idea of gratification that only serves to hurt self. Seek newness. If you do not like what another has created, then go create something better and thus serve as a teacher rather than a critic.

The more you free yourself from the social pressures that propagate illusion and fear, the better you will be able to exercise your creative abilities. Though the formula is simple, it is not particularly easy. This does NOT mean that it need be difficult, but those challenges with which you are faced that require creative solutions are BY CHOICE AND BY DESIGN given to you so that you may recognize growth and thus further expand as an aspect of Creator God and the Infinite Creation.

I am Ceres Anthonious Soltec, come as Teacher, Guide and Friend, in service to The One Light—Creator Source. Blessings and Peace to you all. Salu.

Understanding Your Bio-Electric Sensing Machine

Editor's note: In Soltec's 3/28/00 writing, elsewhere in this paper, it is suggested that we re-run this two-part dissertation from 1997, especially for our newer readers who may not have the benefit of so many of our past presentations of “spiritual” messages.

As the planetary frequency continues to rise, and all of us upon Mother Earth experience various effects stimulated by these new energies, it is helpful to review this most instructive lesson from Master Hilarion. Our bodies—that machine which most of us just take for granted—are indeed a most amazing creation and, as Master Hilarion so skillfully points out, can be very helpful in our quest for inner peace and fulfillment through the sorting out of those often nagging fundamental questions about direction and choices and purpose.

The following is Chapter Four in Volume II of WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach. And for those of you who are wondering: yes, a Volume III will eventually be a reality. How soon that happens is a matter that depends upon the usual things that bring such a project into manifestation. Volume III will continue the collection of spiritual messages from where Volume II left off, up to the present. Your heartfelt notes and other wonderful compliments about this series of books is truly what keeps the momentum going!

5/17/97 HILARION

Good afternoon, my friend. Please release of the emotional charge and allow the energy to flow naturally and smoothly. It is I, Hilarion, of the Fifth Aspect of Creator's Spectral Expression. I come in The Light of Holy God of Lighted Creation. I come as the Cohan (Master Teacher) of the Emerald Ray.

Ones on your planet are greatly concerned with the physical well-being of the body in which they are housed. Here we shall give forth some insights that will help to clarify the causes of the conditions that ones are experiencing. For most this will not be “comfortable” reading because the reasons for illnesses are most often other than what a person wants to hear, let alone accept.

The physical body is “merely” a conduit for the interaction into and the interfacing with the physical experience. I say “merely” because that body is a most exquisite creation indeed and poorly understood by your current level of so-called medical science.

It is a self-contained bio-electric machine that is quite suited to handle a wide array of energy patterns and frequencies that allow for the animation and coordination between the physical and the non-physical. The body's electrical system is quite sensitive and balanced in such a manner as to have the capability to respond and alter according to emotional desires of the one controlling the mechanism.

YOU ARE NOT YOUR BODY! “You” are the one inhabiting the mechanism and it responds to your desires. There is similarity between “you” inhabiting and operating your body, and the process of sitting behind the wheel and driving your automobile.

The body, for the most part, is self regulating and will tend to run quite well in an “autopilot” mode. However, there come times of experience where the body is subjected to threat, such as physical injury, when it will offer a reactionary response to the danger and bring focus to the impending physical condition.

An example of this reactionary impulse would be to quickly remove one's hand from a hot stovetop. The body will retain information that will help one to avoid future damage and will offer a cautionary warning to the host (YOU) when the hand even gets close to a warm object.

This mechanism is part of the design of the body so that more primitive (lesser aware spiritually) users will be able to persist long enough in the physical without demise so that there will be adequate time sequence for growth.

This is the situation wherein one will tend to live instinctively and obey the signals of the body such as hunger, thirst, and rest. Ones will seek out the satisfaction of these basic needs so that they can experience as fully as possible.

As entities begin to grow more and more aware spiritually, they will begin to come out of the fog and into a more reasoning condition wherein mental anticipation of the future need for food will be recognized and planned for through storage.

This is the point where ones begin to awaken enough to realize that there is something more to the experience than to just exist and search out survival needs. This is where ones begin to reason with others the value of working together with one another in order to quiet the distractions and concerns of the body. This is where there occurs the first spark of sensing that man is more than a reactionary animal and that there is an inner desire to explore this awareness.

As cultures and beings evolve, there comes the need for Guides and Wayshowers to interject more and more of the true nature of the physical experience. While Esu “Jesus” Sananda is a good example of one such Wayshower who came to your planet 2000 years ago, MANY have come at this present time. These more advanced ones will volunteer for the challenge of fulfilling this task and will choose to take on a body in the physical to bring forth the all-important messages concerning the non-seen-but-felt spiritual connectedness of mankind.

These awakening nudges will often cause great emotional stirrings in the body. Ones will not know how to handle these energy surges at first, because they are subtle yet strong in their grip upon the physical apparatus. The surges will cause an array of sensations within the physical which, in turn, can provide the physical entity with guidance as to what is right versus what is wrong.

Much like the reactionary impulses to avoid physical danger, the body will offer reactionary impulses in response to other kinds of situations, which can nudge you to go toward that which will offer comfort and warmth. And in the case of the presentings of spiritual truth, the body will offer the best it can in the way of “gut felt” responses to that which is being offered.

“How”, you may ask, “does the body do this?”

The physical part of the body is but “only” one small part of the entire apparatus that makes up the entire, functioning, bio-electric machinery. Just like in a computer, you have all the physical components—the main processor, the memory modules, the peripheral (audio and video) circuit boards, and the interconnecting wiring. And yet, more fundamentally, the computer still requires electricity (energy) operating in very focused ways in order to function and come to life at all.

In the case of the body, there are various electrical counterparts associated with each physical part of the body, including each organ and each individual cell. More fundamentally, there is a coordinated electromagnetic (LIGHT) energy field that encompasses the entire physical body. Some can actually see this “luminous” electromagnetic field under the proper conditions and call it the aura.

Your body’s electromagnetic field interacts with the electromagnetic fields emanated by others and will respond to the various frequencies of these fields.

This is when you ones will say that you KNOW you can trust a person immediately; you don’t know why but you can just “feel” it. This is why, when another comes offering true spiritual knowledge, you “feel” it within your “gut”. You are responding to the higher-frequency energies flowing into the electromagnetic field of your body. The body then responds with a desire to find more of what causes this reaction.

This is also the reason why some ones will be frightened of you. They will know that you hold truth and they cannot hide their trickery from you and that you will, in time, see through their games. These ones have resisted the spiritual path, having not yet learned to recognize that there is value in the experience. These ones have an energy signature that is much lower in frequency. They are usually the ones clinging to the physical-material for their comforts and security. They are much like the animal who has to hoard and hide food from others who might take it away—not realizing that there are infinitely abundant sources of nourishment for both the physical apparatus and, more importantly, the soul (the non-physical, God-like, thought projection of Creator Source).

When ones turn from their purpose, there come the “STRESSES” of the life experience. This unbalanced condition is a signal to you so that you can stop to evaluate where you are heading and compare that to where your heart tells you that you should be heading. The heart knows the direction which will garner fulfillment.

More accurately, it is the emotional (electromagnetic) energy center associated with the heart that is attuned to both your purpose from Creator Source and the impinging emotional currents of the ever-changing electromagnetic pulse-wave universe in which you exist. This heart energy center responds by instinctively offering that which will help you to discern your most satisfying path in life.

When you first start heading in a direction that is not fulfilling to the purpose for your being down there, you may or may not notice the subtle annoyance that you feel. But be assured that it is there. This causes slight distortions in the energy field of the body as you resist the natural flow of your experience. These distortions are what you ones refer to as “stress” and the corresponding worry and frustration is a by-product of the electromagnetic distortions in the non-physical part of the body.

If these distortions are allowed to persist, they will cause physiological malfunctions within the body. The physical body will respond to the out-of-balance (out-of-phase electrical impulses) condition of the electromagnetic energy field of the body. This will result in negative physiological changes within the body if the condition persists—such as colds, flu, cancers, and especially that #1 cause of death: HEART dis-ease.

Please be aware that the direction of the individual always starts with a thought and a decision. When ones are considering choices of action is when ones should really make an effort to monitor the response of the heart or “gut” while evaluating their choices. Some do this automatically and may cause frustration in others because there will be times when the only reason they can offer for an action is: “I don’t know; it was ‘just’ a feeling.” These perceptive ones have learned to recognize and utilize the “bio-feedback” that is being offered to them.

When there is illness of any sort in the body, you can be assured that the one experiencing the illness was not paying attention to the signals offered through the heart energy center. There are choices and decisions associated with the condition that allowed for the stress to persist on and on until there is great unbalance within the physical, causing improper coordination between the various energy centers, and thus the body will not regulate itself properly.

When ones can isolate that which causes them “stress”, they will be looking for that which has a decision or choice associated with it and would be wise to perhaps re-evaluate or look for that which they are resisting. Usually those things that the heart desires by way of growth have responsibility associated with them, and ones know analytically that there are often “growing pains” associated with such responsibility—as the primitive, ego-based, reactionary mode of living is replaced with a freer, more personally responsible mode of living.

Many will go through many life experiences without ever recognizing the connection between the physical condition and the non-physical stress—only to cast blame upon another for their lack of physical balance. YOU each are creator of YOUR experience, either through deliberate action or passive reaction. Your physical condition is no exception!

Ponder upon these words, for they are offered in love and NOT with the intent to be offensive or hurtful. At this time many are crying out for assistance with the physical condition of the body. You will see that there is great value in finding within yourselves the TRUE cause(s) of any unbalanced situation.

The subject matter discussed here is far from complete. It is offered as a general overview so that ones can come into awareness of self in a general, yet more balanced, manner. There shall be more coming forth on this subject of the physical body’s functioning. Please be patient and understanding. Thank you!

I am Master Hilarion. I represent the Heart Center of God. In Light and Love, Salu!

5/24/97 HILARION

Good afternoon, my scribe. It is I, Master Hilarion, of the Emerald Ray of Creator's Spectral Desires. I come within the Wholeness of The One Light, Creator Source. Let us please continue from last we wrote, for there is great interest and desire for this information at this time.

We last spoke about the general overview of the basic functioning and interactions of the physical body. The various energy centers of the body function in a harmonious and balanced interchange in carrying out the regulation of the various physical-functioning organs and cellular matter that make up the entirety of the body. There must be two-way communication, in a timely manner, between the physical body and the non-physical counterpart we will refer to as the light-body (light being electromagnetic pulse-wave energy) in order for the body to respond to the delicate fluctuations of the electrical impulses generated by each cell of the body.

This exquisite communication is accomplished through what you ones would call superconductivity. We will here broadly define superconductivity as the conduction of electrical energy without resistance to that flow of energy.

In the world of "science", ones are having trouble achieving this superconducting state utilizing just basic metal and ceramic compounds, even at temperatures just slightly above where the conditions are most favorable (very cold). Yet, in Nature (God manifest), it is happening all the time right before your eyes. (In fact, it is happening IN your eyes, for that matter!) And in the body, this superconductivity occurs at temperatures averaging 98.6° Fahrenheit—and higher when the body is fighting foreign invaders.

The problem is that the current perceptions of "physics" are based upon assumptions which would appear to be true, but actually only include half (at best) of the picture. This is why your typical mainstream scientists are having so much trouble duplicating (or even realizing the true physical nature of) the world in which they live. But here I am digressing from the lesson for today, so let me return to that subject.

Each individual type of cell is attuned to very specific frequencies and will respond to the regulating currents of the light-body energy pulses. There is an underlying unique frequency signature associated with EACH individual on the planet that will keep each of you, to some extent, electrically isolated from one another, so that the direct electrical functioning of your body will not interfere with the direct functioning of another person's body.

This is the "genetic signature" of the body, unique to the DNA structure or blueprint of each cell. This is a "plasma shielding" that the body exists within. It will allow physical matter to pass through, while shielding out specific frequencies and wavelengths.

Without this shielding, ones would empathically alter the state of one another. There are ones who can tune into the various frequencies associated with this energy field, and if not careful, make themselves quite sick (unbalanced) if they are tuning into one who is out of balance.

When ones are in an out-of-balance condition, the energy field tends to be compromised in that it will lower in frequency and in intensity. This is a condition wherein you ones become more susceptible to manipulations by those who specialize in the "black arts". These dark ones will alter their frequency to match the lower-frequency state that you enter when in these "stressed" states. Know that these dark ones operate ONLY in the lower spectrum of the physical range of existence.

When you move up in frequency, you are moving beyond the range of their influence. This is why we of the Lighted Hosts of God will urge you to keep your Light shielding in place and fortified.

While each physical body is isolated in certain frequency ranges, each entity is also connected in other HIGHER frequency ranges that will allow for the communication with the rest of the universe (God's infinitely creating Mind). As we spoke about in last week's writing, the creative desires are projected out from the heart energy center and are focused with the mind. The greater the desire, the quicker the physical manifestation of the desire.

This mode of creation exists and works outside of the limitations of moral and ethical beliefs of the individual. This is to say it works for everyone regardless of their morals or beliefs. This is a basic Law of Creation: Go forth and CREATE, expand, and GROW!

There are ones on your planet who will manifest money and power without regard for who they step on, in order to reach their goals. Their desires often manifest quickly because they are not easily distracted with the Conscience that the average person has to contend with.

These ones, who are so physically focused and self-isolated from their Conscience (inner guidance from their Higher Self), will achieve a state where they get to the top of the mountain and will have everyTHING (physical) that they desire—only to find that there is still an inner lacking that is not satisfied. These ones are taking to extremes, one aspect of creating, and will, in time, either disintegrate their souls completely, or rebound back into the Light Source who created them—then wiser, for they know then where value IS NOT!

You focus your desires and send them out through the heart, and then the universe responds. Yet you never seem to get what it is you are wanting. Therefore you dismiss these words as fanciful delusions of a lost soul.

NO! They are NOT!

You ones fail to monitor your thoughts CAREFULLY! You will send out conflicting signals, and thus negate the energy pulses. You will say, "I want more money!" And then, in the next breath (or thought) you will say, "But, I never get it." Do you see that the one thought cancels out the other? Your vacillating heart will send out both, and the net sum will be zero—or quite a bit less than you "thought" you were creating!

The seeming lack of clarity and single-mindedness of thought and focus usually comes from a conflict between what you consciously desire and what your Higher Self is desiring in the way of growth. And that Higher Self is doing battle with the ego-based self which desires comfort and satiation of physical desires.

This causes the kinds of stress that you ones feel, usually in the heart area of your chest. While this lower, ego-based self serves a self-preservation purpose in the primitive cultures, it must be overcome if you are to ever move beyond the limitations that hold you from reaching through to Higher levels of realization.

The ego's reactionary impulses will serve you physical "warnings" to obey, by offering physical reactions or pains if you do not follow what it desires. Much like the warning sensations felt when your hand comes into close proximity to a hot object, the ego-based reactionary self will attempt to cause you to avoid situations that could lead you to override the ego's functioning. This war is perhaps the greatest challenge you ones face in the physical experience because there are great efforts on the part of the dark ones to hold you from progressing through that physical classroom.

When you live in fear, you live in a reactionary state that will, at best, only serve the ego's desire for self preservation. However, your Higher Self knows the functioning of the ego and will offer to you challenges that will shed light upon this fact. Most often the "clash" which results from encountering the lessons of this learning process will cause physiological changes and unbalanced conditions within the body. These reactions could manifest in many different ways, from sudden weight gain or loss, to colds and flus, or even cancer.

Most elderly people in poor health are in that deteriorated condition due to years and years of ignoring the "small" stresses and allowing them to build and accumulate into conditions of cancers or other various dis-ease ailments. These ones will often be very unhappy in general, and will reflect this in their physical demeanor, appearance, and voice.

Middle-aged people on this same path will often exhibit physical symptoms of old age (such as prostate troubles or menopause) at an “early” age. The individual always has a choice to turn around the physical conditions of the body, for it will respond miraculously to a re-balanced mental state wherein the head and heart can live in harmony.

Teenagers and younger adults tend to act irrationally to their inner conflicts and will lash out and hurt those around them in both physically and mentally abusive manners. When they realize that this behavior is not acceptable, they will begin to internalize their frustrations and hide them from the world. Meanwhile those stresses begin to manifest in the body, in later years, as degenerative malfunctions like cancers and organ failures.

You may be asking, “How can one avoid this, or turn it around?”

First there must be a desire for inner balance. This means that you have to either confront the garbage that the ego-self holds onto, and see it for what it is, and come to grips with the fact that YOU are responsible for YOUR condition, and accept the responsibility for that which you have created. Or, you can (and this is possible though difficult) simply insist on balanced physical health, and focus the mind and heart on that singularity with the entire passion of your heart, and don’t listen to those who would hold you down, for they are the puppets and tools of the adversary.

Particularly within the framework of policing controls set up by those dark ones who own the drug companies and make great profits from a drug-based “health” business, medical “science” has yet to (be allowed to) discover the correlation between the various electromagnetic energy fields of the body and the body’s physical functioning—let alone perceive the connection between (and the true impact from) this “clashing” of the mental reactionary ego with the Higher Self or soul connection. Therefore there is, more often than not, misdiagnosis of the cause for a condition that is manifesting in the body.

These ones trained in your so-called medical schools (again under the control of those drug companies) can prescribe electrochemical mixtures (drugs) which will cause reactions and responses in the physical as your body tries to deal with the chemical invader. They can offer electromagnetic radiation treatments to kill living tissue (both cancerous and non-cancerous). But these “medical professionals” do not understand the non-physical effects that their treatments have on the light-body part of the human apparatus. Therefore they, for the most part, end up treating the symptom(s) instead of the TRUE cause(s).

These ones are usually well intending and well educated in the physical structure of the body (to a point), yet they would need to study fundamental electrical science and molecular physics to great depths in order to come into a more complete understanding of what is taking place around the body. And even then, they would still need special abilities and talents in order to directly perceive these all-important energy fields of the body.

You will have to follow your own Guidance, and be responsible for the choices and decisions that affect both the quality and length of your stay in the physical. Do keep in mind that what you voice with your mouth is often in conflict with what you radiate from your heart. You may be able to hide behind words, but the heart will give you away every time. And for those who tune into the heart energy emanations, they will know you and they will know when you are out of balance and off purpose.

And for those of you who like to deny this to yourselves, you can look to that which manifests in your life: Is your current state of “living” this life’s experience something that is fulfilling to you, or is it full of stress and frustration?

May your heart be your guide, and may you learn to listen with the heart and project forth from those inner satisfying desires that bring forth balance. I am Hilarion, Master Teacher and Healer, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source so that His promise to you be fulfilled—and so that I, too, may grow in wisdom of experience. Salu!

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

Preface & Introduction by Dr. Edwin M. Young

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

WHY THE END?

Two Millennia Of Prophecy And It's Fruitless Attempt To Awaken Humanity

J.T. REVELATOR

The book that dares to ask the ultimate question. Many prophets over the last two millennia, each with their own perspective, have tried to warn humanity about the “future” catastrophic “end-time events” in the hopes of altering them. That time is now upon us.

WHY THE END? is a distillation of prophecies and messages spanning the last 2,000 years, sorted by topic for you, the awakening human. Unlike other books that dwell on past history or vague fragments of events, WHY THE END? gets to the point, chronicling the diverse range of prophecies and offering the facts and clues from scientific disciplines.

You may have pondered on some of these questions:

Why is time “speeding up”?

Why are animals exhibiting strange behaviors, some dying inexplicably?

Why is the weather fluctuating and getting more severe?

Are you feeling on edge as if something profound is about to happen soon?

Is there a limit to humanity's abuse of the planet?

When does the “New Age” begin?

WHY THE END? intends to answer these questions and more in a no frills uncompromising manner. Some of these projections are quite harsh and could be interpreted as “doom and gloom”, depending on your perspective. But if you have an appetite of what is really on the horizon, then WHY THE END? is the book for you. May you have the eyes to see.

The bottom line is that the Purification of the Earth is underway, and will escalate very soon. WHY THE END? will prepare you mentally for the events, while those less informed will become incapacitated by fear as they witness the end of life as we know it. In reality, it is the cleansing of the old to make way for the new “Golden Age”. It then becomes your choice as to how you will witness the events.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu “sanusi” or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, “The world must know this—and know it now.”

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the “Chitauli” to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of travelling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET “gods” for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead “greys” many times, he has seen them examined behind their “grey” exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

“This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words”.

—David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The Blockbuster of all Blockbusters!! With Stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions and documents the suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

—VIDEO—

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps, and when he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and their relevance to your daily life.

So, you thought you were pretty well informed by now about all of the main players on the “conspiracy” playing field? You’ve maybe been hearing for years about (or bumped into on your own) the various elements of society who control our world from behind the scenes.

You’ve gotten familiar with the role played by, for instance, the Khazarian Zionists (who invented the word “Jew” to disguise their adopted heritage, as distinguished from the biblical Judeans), or the role played by the Banksters (banking gangsters) controlling the economies of the world, by the CFR (Council on Foreign Relations), the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the Committee of 300 (the 17 wealthiest so-called “elite” families)—the Rothschilds in England and Rockefellers in America and Bronfmans in Canada, and on and on, comprising the physical power structure of the New World Order puppets under the direction of darkly motivated, other-dimensional “master deceivers” commonly known as Lucifer or Satan and their “fallen angel” cohorts.

Donors Rejoice!

The SPECTRUM Has Now Been Granted Federal 501(c)(3) Non-Profit Status

When our attorney for this matter called with the good news (naturally, just one day too late for inclusion in last month's newspaper), there was a noticeable tone of astonishment in his voice. He was reading from a letter he had just received from the Internal Revenue Service, dated March 31, 2000, which announced:

"Based on information you supplied, and assuming your operations will be as stated in your application for recognition of exemption, we have determined you are exempt from federal income tax under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code as an organization described in section 501(c)(3)."

While the letter goes on for four pages of technical language unique to the IRS, the bottom line, for you who make donations to The SPECTRUM, is that such generous financial help is now FULLY DEDUCTIBLE from your federal income tax. Yeah!

What our attorney was so astonished about was that the ruling came back, in our favor, as quickly as it did. Usually there plays out a rather lengthy game of back-and-forth question-and-answer correspondence to deter all but the brave and persistent from achieving this useful status. Our victory occurred after just ONE cycle of such correspondence!

And if that wasn't enough of a gift, the letter also informed us that the IRS decision was RETROACTIVE: "Contributions to you are deductible by donors beginning July 9, 1999."

We have worked long and hard, if quietly, toward this useful goal, even though we received "non-profit status" recognition in our state of incorporation, Nevada, quite a few months ago. We decided to say nothing about that particular level of (state) recognition until there was the kind of good news you could literally "take to the bank"—at least as far as federal income tax deductions go.

This avenue was pursued as a means to say "thank you" in a more direct and tangible way to those of you who value the survival of this newspaper enough to make donations (often regularly, as your means allow) to help keep it afloat. Obviously the more sizeable the donation you make, the more impact this IRS ruling has as a federal income tax deduction.

As you longtime readers and supporters well know, our road has been a bumpy one. Our mission has always been educational—to provide you with an unbiased, high-quality source of news and Truth. Our goal has never been the same as a typical "for profit" operation. Nor could it be, realistically!

From a "public integrity" perspective, this IRS decision obviously implies that we had no misgivings about opening our financial operations to their scrutiny. They have examined us and find our conduct and philosophy to be honest and reasonable; even in their eyes there is no hidden profit agenda as is so common in many organizations which pretend a humanitarian front.

So the IRS ruling "merely" adds a level of independent validation to what has always been our professed educational goal—despite the great expense. The "federally recognized non-profit corporation" status verifies our pledge that funds contributed to this paper truly are used for furthering that primary educational objective—which includes finding new ways of reaching out to an even wider audience.

As a non-profit organization, we want you to know that we are serious about our work and intend to continue to offer the highest quality product possible within our means. We hope, of course, that you will recognize the 501(c)(3) non-profit federal status as something which is worthy of support.

As we have often said in these pages, this is the time of the Great Awakening. All that has been hidden is in the process of being revealed. The Truth is pouring over people's awareness through many avenues; it is then their choice whether or not, like a refreshing drink of water, to partake of that gift.

There is certainly no more stunning example of The Truth being revealed than is our Front Page story. Talk about a "missing link" for all who can't shake that nagging feeling there is more to the secret, behind-the-scenes shenanigans by the dark, so-called elite world controllers than has so far been revealed in the "conspiracy theory" circles.

Then, as if our Front Page story is not enough, take a look at the collection of material we present on the Elian Gonzales situation. Now the Police Chief and City Manager (an ex-Police Chief, by the way) for Miami have been fired by a most courageous Mayor. Where else but here will you get the insight of a possible Masonic connection to that affair, and thus "puzzle pieces falling into place" as far as explaining the brazen public comments by both fired persons toward their Mayor.

Yes, truth is indeed much stranger than fiction. And we hope to share with you as much Truth as we are financially able to provide—based upon your now tax deductible donations to this important educational goal.

Subject: Dr. Hulda Clark — CHARGES DISMISSED!!!

Dear Guest of www.drclark.net,

I have some very very good news for you today: The charges against Dr. Hulda Regehr Clark, Ph.D., N.D. are dismissed!! Dr. Clark was arrested in September and charged with practicing medicine without a license. This is a felony that can be punished with up to eight years in prison! Dr. Clark was released on bail a few weeks later, but the uncertainty of the outcome of the trial were a heavy burden on the 71-year-old researcher from San Diego, CA. Her enemies wanted to see her locked up behind bars. To the established medical interests, Dr. Clark's workable therapy against cancer is a huge threat. But now the charges are dismissed!

This is also the time to say THANK YOU to everyone who contributed to the legal fund or helped in other ways. Also, the real fight is far from being over: The fight for freedom of choice in medical matters for the individual. I count on you being there also when the second round starts.

Sincerely, David P. Amrein, President, Dr. Clark Research Association. [End quoting]

Once again the crooks in high places have had to back down because of the attention focused on this injustice. Dr. Clark has risked much over many years to bring alternative healing therapies to the public. Don't miss the 4-part PBS television series featuring Dr. Clark's work throughout the month of May.

SACRED WHITE BUFFALO MURDERED

From THE WOLF REPORT, Vol. 2, 2000: [quoting]

BY JODI RAVE LEE, Lincoln Journal Star, <<http://www.journalstar.com/stories/neb/stox>>. Entire story and photo at this link.

When Joe Merrival was called to the scene of a buffalo shooting on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation recently, he stared in disbelief—not far away lay his sacred buffalo, its throat slit, its hide tattered.

Medicine Wheel had been the first white buffalo born on Indian lands in more than a century.

"I just felt, 'Oh no, it's the white buffalo,'" Merrival said Thursday. "I tried to control myself. My mind went blank, actually; I didn't want to say anything wrong, so I just said, 'It's the white buffalo'."

Born May 9, 1996, the white calf was immediately viewed as a symbol of hope, rebirth, and unity for numerous Great Plains tribes. "For us, this would be something like coming to see Jesus lying in the manger," Floyd Hand Looks For Buffalo said shortly after Medicine Wheel's birth.

Today, the calf's death comes amid turmoil and chaos on Pine Ridge, where internal and external pressures have rocked its 20,000 Oglala Lakota for much of the past year.

Throughout last summer, demonstrators marched on nearby Whiteclay, Nebraska protesting beer sales and a spate of unsolved Indian murders. And for the past 68 days, another group has occupied the tribal administration building.

The buffalo's death is a sign that life for American Indian people will get worse before it gets better, said Looks For Buffalo, a spokesman for the takeover group Grassroots Oyate.

According to a tribal police report, Pine Ridge's symbol of hope and unity died just after 8 p.m. Sunday [March 19, though it curiously took until the Friday, March 24 issue of the Lincoln Journal Star newspaper to report the event!], when police officer Alex Morgan spotted the animal running down a road near the Red Cloud community.

Morgan and tribal member Leon Poor Bear pursued the animal, which ran into a yard.

"We tried to chase it back down the road, but it would put down his head and charge us," Morgan wrote in his report. "I told Leon to shoot the buffalo for the safety of the community." When Merrival found the buffalo's body, later that night, it appeared someone had started to butcher it, he said: its throat was slit and its hide scarred from being dragged down a gravel road.

The rare animal's significance is rooted in Lakota oral history, which tells the story of a holy woman visiting one of their villages. She taught them their seven sacred ceremonies and their four great virtues: courage, wisdom, generosity, and fortitude. Before she left, she told the people not to worry, that she would return one day, and that a sign of her arrival would be a white buffalo calf.

A version of the prophecy predicts the calf will be born white but will change in color—to black, to yellow, to red and back to white—as it matures, Merrival said. Medicine Wheel was in the black phase.

When Medicine Wheel was born, doubt existed whether the animal was 100% bison. Tests from Storemont Laboratory in Woodland, California, however, proved it to be pure.

Now that the animal is dead, Merrival will use its hair and bones "for spiritual purposes" sharing the parts with as many people as he can. After that, "I'll put it back into the pasture to where it was born."

Native News: <<http://www.tdi.net/ishgooda/natnews.htm>> [End quoting]

There have been many reports concerning how the feds have been pulling every trick they know—from the results gathered from their experiments from Ruby Ridge to Waco—to break the spirit of these people and cause division and infighting and destroy the Native American sovereignty movement. It would seem there is no immoral action—especially in light of the recent Elian Gonzales episode—to which some will not stoop in order to advance their secret agenda. It is just such a shame that this precious creature had to get caught in the tangled web of intrigue.

BIG GULP—SUPERVISORS SWALLOW LOCAL MAN'S ARGUMENT

From THE ORANGE COUNTY WEEKLY (S. California), 4/1/00: [quoting]

By Dave Weilenga

EVERY DRINKING FOUNTAIN in every public park, recreation area, and building across Orange County will be shut off this summer, according to an out-of-court settlement with a business group that charged, in a lawsuit, that the thousands of free-water outlets constitute unfair government competition with the private sector.

“Every public drinking fountain is a taxpayer-financed monument to big government’s intrusion into one of the most basic aspects of our existence: the human need for water to survive” says Philyer Poquettes, president of the Orange County Business Council (OCBC), which filed suit against every city and county agency that heretofore provided even one drinking fountain at public expense. “The free water that springs from these spigots is wasteful, unfair, and insulting.”

The OCBC’s suit is an intriguing mix of fundamental human and economic philosophy which contends that quenching one’s thirst is best left to individual initiative and market forces. Its legal footing is planted in the contention that “thirst is one of the basic triggers of the natural economy, which as foreseen and extolled by great minds from Adam Smith to the Culligan man, raises the importance of purchasing a beverage to the level of instinctual self-preservation.”

“The human race got by without public drinking fountains for most of its millions of years of existence, and to suddenly say that a man cannot get his own drink of water is to diminish that man” asserts Poquettes, 39, of Laguna Niguel, who recently got into the bottled-water business with a local brand called Aliso Creek. “As a businessman in the beverage industry, I’m both offended and injured because our tax dollars are used to support drinking fountains, which in turn diminish the market for products we sell.”

Nobody seems to know exactly how many public drinking fountains exist in Orange County, how many gallons flow through them every year, and how much money is apt to be saved when they are turned off

“Drinking fountains have been considered a fact of life for so long that nobody really understands their specific cost-benefit ratio” acknowledged Todd Spitzer, a county supervisor who cast his vote in favor of an immediate and unanimous surrender by local governments at the first whiff of the OCBC’s suit. “But it only makes sense that turning them off will definitely be cheaper than leaving them on—well, once they’re actually turned off, anyway. It’ll probably cost a little extra to do the actual turning off. That only makes sense, too. But you’ve got to spend money to make money. Definitely. That’s called priming the pump, and it only makes sense that is as true now as when they first put those drinking fountains in.”

His colleague on the Board of Supervisors, Jim Silva, forgot to vote on the issue—“Two of my kids are in the Air Force Academy, if you can believe that” he explained—but remembers arguing in favor of shutting off public drinking fountains during a portion of the meeting devoted to something else entirely.

“I think it’s a good idea” Silva said. “All things considered, I mean, with the water we’re drinking now, and for nothing, just imagine. And then there’s the whole other side that nobody rarely even does think about, which makes you realize. You know?”

As part of the settlement, Poquettes received free and exclusive beverage-supply franchising rights to Santa Ana’s Centennial Regional Park and Trabuco Canyon’s O’Neill Regional Park. He also heads the committee that will award franchising rights to every other public park, recreation area, or building, and as an incentive to get the best deals, he will receive a 15 percent commission.

As proof of the public support for the arrangement, Poquettes pointed to the blinking 20-line phone that he had just ordered installed. He promised a careful, go-slow approach to awarding the valuable franchises. “After all these years, there’s no need to hurry now” he says, leaning back and letting the phones ring. “In a situation like this, patience can really pay off—if you know what I mean.”

Poquettes foresees a time when the site of every drinking fountain in Orange County will be replaced by a pop stand or vending machine. And he suggests that the benefits extend far beyond the obvious. “The presence of all these little stands, which we might accentuate with video games or whatever, will really enhance our sense of community” he says. “After dark, the vending machines will actually improve security, enhancing public lighting with their bright glow and providing a certain comfort with their familiar brand-name labels.”

According to Poquettes, the ongoing development of “smart machines” would also allow people over 21 to purchase alcoholic beverages through technology that would recognize their previously registered tongue print. The robbing or vandalizing of these machines would be raised to a felony with mandatory sentencing, says Poquettes.

As he basks in the success of his settlement, Poquettes generously allows that free drinking fountains weren’t always a completely bad idea. “They were good-intentioned, and there may have been a time when they even served a necessary function” he says. “But these days, with the plethora of beverages with bright labels and catchy names and intricate distribution systems, the idea of a cool stream of water flowing free to all from a simple pipe that protrudes from a stone fountain beneath a shady tree has lost its appeal and its relevance.” [End quoting]

If this report had aired on April 1, it could have easily been mistaken for an April Fool’s Day joke. The question is, just WHO is the fool in this case? Do you, for one minute, think that this same absurd situation will escape happening in your area of the country if they get away with this in Southern California? Maybe the air we breathe will be the next to go.

CAST YOUR SILVER AND GOLD TO THE STREETS!

From the INTERNET, Intelligence Digest, 3/31/00: [quoting]

<<http://www.blazeinet.com/thewatchman/000127.html>>

Have you ever wondered what goes through the minds of the Globalists as they scheme their plots for domination? It’s pretty scary when you think about it—trying to worm your way into a deranged mind bent on power and conquest, hoping to gain some sort of enlightened vision of things yet to come.

I did just that when I realized I had been at the computer for 12 hours last night, trying to figure out how they were going to introduce a global currency. It seemed the current articles floating throughout the Christian circles weren’t adequate in terms of introduction. So my search led me to find that countries such as Switzerland and Britain have been selling off their gold reserves and investing into the Internet. Curious how the standard since civilization began could shift so quickly and recklessly into cyberspace. Suddenly it dawned on me that the flickering screen at which I was staring turned out to be the answer all along. It is truly terrifying how well orchestrated the New World regime is.

A report by the Electronic Telegraph states that in the near future, money as we know it—as government-issued coins and paper currency—will be replaced with an electronic currency issued by private corporations on the Internet.

In this utopian electronic economy, e-currency will flow freely around the world; it will be accepted everywhere; there will be no exchange fees or currency fluctuations. The plan appears to be well drawn out this very day.

“It’s difficult to put a time frame to it, but it’s likely that we won’t be using the dollar, pound, or the euro” says Ian Pearson, a BT futurologist. “It won’t happen overnight and it will be an evolutionary change, but in my view it’s inevitable. The pound, dollar, and the euro will become quaint collectors’ items in the next century.”

The catalyst for this economic revolution is, of course, the Internet, as well as the emergence of the global market. Theoretically, more than one e-currency will appear because consumers will demand it. Says Pearson: “What consumers want is to be able to use their money on any site anywhere in the world without incurring exchange charges and paying commissions. It is likely that a group of private companies could create such a currency, which every website would accept as a form of money. I doubt that people will continue to use national currencies when they can use a world currency."

The subsequent evolutionary step is harder to imagine, but far from impossible. Because consumers would be using this new currency, they would demand to be paid in it. And if that happens, says Pearson, "the next stage is to download it onto a smart card so it could be used for buses and shops and buying a round in a pub."

You say this sounds visionary, to say the least, and the implications of a privately controlled electronic world currency are colossal. It's also true, of course, that the demise of bank notes and coinage and their replacement by cards of one sort or another has been predicted before, yet we remain attached to pounds and pence, dollars and cents. The difference now may be that the technological impetus for the switch is at hand in the Internet.

If it happens, it's going to work like this: you, the consumer, will have an account on the Internet in the new e-currency. The account will be administered by an issuer.

For the purpose of this example, let's say you've decided to use Microsoft "microns" (this is not meant to imply, by the way, that Microsoft has any intention of launching such a currency). These have been issued by a consortium of large companies with, collectively, the assets to back the new currency. There will be no "hard" version of the microns: they will exist purely as entries on your personal balance sheet on the Internet. If you happen to be paid in microns, your employer would transfer your salary, in microns, from his own micron account to yours, electronically, without the need to issue a cheque or go through a bank. Your micron account would be available to pay for goods on the Internet—plane tickets, books, CDs, clothes, whatever—through secure transfers.

But there's more. Using a mobile phone and a smart card attachment, you would be able to access your micron account and download micron credits from your account to your card.

And what would a micron be worth? Well, it would be worth a micron, because there wouldn't be any national currencies to compare it with. If everything is denominated in e-currencies, then government-issued currencies become redundant.

Believe it or not, this concept is not new. Take your "Air Miles" cards for example, which use "loyalty points" by supermarkets and petrol stations. It could ultimately replace traditional currency for a range of small, on-line transactions.

Another electronic currency pilot idea in Britain is called "beenz". These beenz points are awarded on promotional items or discounts offered by an on-line shop which can then be "spent" on other items. Savers can visit the Bank of Beenz to check their balance, or use a small "beenz counter" which pops up on their screen when they are on-line. They are also sent regular bank statements.

One of the first Internet retailers to join the project is the cut-price electronics supplier, 21store, which plans to offer discounts on products such as Psion organizers in exchange for beenz earned through making earlier purchases. However, the currency's inventors claim it is wrong to think of beenz as mere loyalty points, since they are intended to be transferable between a number of retailers.

Philip Letts, chief executive of the Beenz Company, said: "We have re-engineered money in a way which gives consumers and businesses a greater share in the riches of the web. Ironically, the problem with real money is that it costs too much. Beenz avoids all the security, exchange rate, and clearance issues of traditional money, and creates a very flexible trading platform for e-commerce."

What might seem the most startling prospect in this scenario—the notion of a currency issued by private corporations—is actually the least revolutionary part of the whole package. Of course, monies minted by states have existed for thousands of years, but until the 18th century they were made of precious metals such as gold or silver, and their values were inherent. They weren't currency in the modern sense of the word; they were instead items of known value within themselves, and could be used anywhere.

Private currency may have a greater tendency toward stability—in that private companies have more interest in retaining the value of money than governments do. This means, ultimately, that privately issued currencies will be internationally accepted, transferable without bank charges, practically non-taxable, and sound.

Ultimately what this means, my friends, is that the program(s) is(are) already in use. It's just a matter of slowly merging all "pilot programs" into one operating system. Kind of like the way Microsoft purchases everything in its path!

ALSO IN THE NEWS: E-CASH SPELLS DOOM FOR CENTRAL BANKS

Leading academics have welcomed comments made by a senior Bank of England official that emerging Internet-based currencies could drive central banks to extinction.

Speaking at a banking conference last Friday (August 27th) in Wyoming, the Bank of England's deputy governor, Mervyn King, admitted that emerging forms of currency used in web-based trade could fall beyond the control of the world's central banks.

Losing control of the money flow will naturally mean the loss of economic power and could wipe out central banks altogether, according to King.

Alistair Kelman, visiting fellow at the London School of Economics (LSE), said: "It's about time central banks realise the implications of the digital economy."

He added: "I think the central banks will now start imposing controls on their client banks so that e-cash is rolled-out in a secure manner. This will ensure we don't have companies inventing money that people can allegedly trust on the net which could subvert the entire banking system."

Ian Angell, professor of information systems at LSE, said King's comments are a refreshing change from the traditional lack of forward thinking exhibited by "mealy mouthed" Bank of England officials.

Angell claims King's prediction that central banks could become redundant will come true. "The European Union and national governments have completely lost the plot, wasting time deliberating over the single currency, when it's electronic cash that is the real issue. What King is talking about is the inability of the state to control its own destiny" he said.

ALSO IN THE NEWS: GATES SAYS 'JOIN THE NET OR DIE'

Anybody who does not do business on the Internet will face ruin within five years, according to the three most powerful men in the computer industry.

It is a message that will be regarded with some skepticism in the light of yesterday's revelation that 50 million accounts on Hotmail, the world's most popular e-mail website, could be read by anyone who knew where to look.

However, at a conference, Bill Gates, head of Microsoft, Craig Barrett, chief executive of Intel, and Michael Dell, head of the largest PC maker, told the computer industry that having taught the world to communicate via e-mail they now want us to shop via e-commerce.

Despite the growth of e-commerce fraud, Mr. Gates, Mr. Barrett and Mr. Dell want to convince the world that the future of shopping and trade is electronic.

At a meeting of 1,200 computer industry executives at Austin in Texas, they said that companies who do not move their business onto the Internet will be left behind. They say consumers who do not shop on the Internet will pay much more. Mr. Barrett said: "In five years all companies will be Internet companies. Those that aren't will cease to exist."

"The Internet is like a weapon sitting on a table waiting to be picked up by you or your competitors" said Mr. Dell, whose company sells almost half of its products directly over the Internet. Dell's e-commerce business has exploded since January 1997 when it sold just $1 million (£625,000) worth of computers a month over the Internet. By June this year it had reached $50 million per month.

The message, said Mr. Dell, is that all companies, whatever their size, trade equally on the Internet, reaching any customer with Internet access anywhere in the world. Mr. Gates also sounded the death knell of paper at the conference. Within a few years, newspapers, magazines, books, and correspondence will no longer be read on newsprint, but on electronic screens that are just as portable as paper, he said. [End quoting]

If we're going to be using virtual money and spending it at virtual stores—maybe we could convert a lot of those ugly shopping malls into lush, green parks and playgrounds.

LOW POWER RADIO TUNED OUT BY CAUTIOUS HOUSE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, California, 4/14/99: [quoting]

Associated Press

The House Thursday challenged a government move to open up the nation's airwaves to low-power mini-radio stations, saying the new stations could add unacceptable interference on already overcrowded radio bands.

The legislation, passed 274-110, puts restrictions on a Federal Communications Commission ruling in January that would have made room for hundreds of new low-power FM stations offering local news, sports, and music. Similar legislation has yet to reach the Senate floor. [End quoting]

These very useful low-powered stations can probably still be saved if enough people appreciate their value and will contact their legislators in Washington. With the major airwaves pretty much all well controlled, the powers-behind-that-control certainly do not want there to be any "leaks" developing which may provide truly useful information and honest news—to circumvent the mind-control system presently in place.

Look at how subtly and skillfully Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program has been "adjusted"—with the night of April 26-27 having been Art's last evening on the air before his "retirement". You can be sure the show will no longer exercise the freedom and astonishing outpouring of good information it did under "wildcard" Art, but will conform to the directives of those in high secret places who control all of the media from behind the scenes. Do you suppose there is a "phone call" such as Janet Reno inadvertently admitted to in our Elian Gonzales story elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM?!!?

IS MICROSOFT BANKRUPT?

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 3/27/00: [quoting]

The problems Microsoft is facing for alleged anti-trust violations just skim the surface of this megacorporation's nefarious financial machinations.

While the world anticipates whether or not Microsoft will be ruled a monopoly, an even greater battle is being waged. This battle is over an attempt to disclose to the American public the facts surrounding an illegal financial pyramid scheme, erected by Microsoft, that is destabilizing public and private retirement systems.

FUNDAMENTAL PROBLEM

The fundamental problem is that Microsoft is incurring massive losses and only by accounting illusions is it able to show a profit. Specifically, Microsoft is granting excessive amounts of stock options that are allowing the company to understate its costs.

You might ask yourself, what would happen to Microsoft's stock price if the public suddenly realized that the firm lost $10 billion in 1999 rather than earning the reported $7.8 billion? If 80% of its stock value, or roughly $400 billion, is the result of a pyramid scheme, one might also ask what kind of effect this could have on the retirement system. It is also important to note that this is a relatively new situation that did not occur before 1995.

Who would believe that the Microsoft Corporation is going to receive a $15 billion deduction on its tax return this year for stock option wages, significantly more than total net income, and that not a dime of this expense is charged to earnings? In addition, more than 75% of its massive cash balance has come from these tax deductions, in addition to employees prepaying their own wages and speculations on its own stock in the options markets.

Today roughly 4.5¢ of every dollar dedicated to stocks in most public pension plans is going toward the purchase of Microsoft stock. This explains why, at its recent peak, Microsoft's stock represented almost 40% of the entire annual federal budget of $1.8 trillion, even though gross annual sales at Microsoft are only $25 billion.

Many other quality companies are now being forced to aggressively adopt similar techniques in order to compete due to a collapse in government policy. These companies will fail because Microsoft has unique advantages.

Microsoft's pyramid scheme, as with all such schemes, is about generating cash. This valuable cash can be used to purchase competitors and establish a beachhead in new industries and further extend the pyramid. A good example is WebMD. Few people realize that Microsoft is WebMD's largest shareholder and that, in the last 6 months, while the Department of Justice is focused upon products, WebMD has come to dominate Internet-based health care.

Stock option programs are an excellent benefit and, while many technology firms have such programs, Microsoft has corrupted its own in an effort to generate cash due to its high profits on product sales.

Amazon.com, Yahoo, and America Online have similar stock option programs, but they are unable to unlock the cash from these deductions because they don't have adequate profits. This is probably one reason why America Online is purchasing Time Warner; that is, to unlock these large unused deductions by offsetting them with profits from Time Warner.

For the quarter ending December 31, 1999, Microsoft also collected cash in the options market of almost $200 million, betting the stock will not decline. If Microsoft guesses wrong and incurs significant losses on the options, they will simply issue more stock. There are now more than 6 billion total shares outstanding, meaning that a $1 change in Microsoft's stock price changes the overall market value by $6 billion. Microsoft's gross annual revenues are $25 billion, or roughly equivalent to a change in the stock price of $4 per share. Senior citizens may recall this as "watered stock".

Microsoft's internal auditor, a respected Deloitte and Touche accounting veteran, noted in a separate issue that earnings manipulations designed to meet expectations were illegal and constituted fraud. He was given the option to resign or be fired, and settled for $4 million under the Federal Whistleblowers Act.

By not disclosing this situation at Microsoft, the Federal Reserve is further destabilizing the economy by raising interest rates since most traditional companies have bank debt and the greater interest expense will affect their reported earnings. Microsoft's debt is stock option debt, and even though leveraged and more than twice annual gross sales, it has no related interest cost. Now that's bad policy for anyone on Main Street.

Bill Parish, a certified public accountant, is a registered investment advisor at his own firm, Parish and Company. Parish has worked with Arthur Anderson, as the chief financial officer of a large regional financial institution and as a senior analyst for a large bank. Parish has an MBA with an undergraduate degree in accounting and has taught finance at leading universities in the United States and Central and South America.

This insight only further complicates the focus of attention on Microsoft Corporation. Are the feds putting on a show of being an adversary to Microsoft, all the while being in collusion and looking the other way as this pyramid scheme accomplishes its destabilizing act? Do the feds need a scapegoat for when they push the "collapse" button and the whole economy comes tumbling down to crush the little guy?

MORE INDEPENDENT NEWS OUTLETS NEEDED

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 3/27/00: [quoting] NEWS CARTEL. The purchase of The Los Angeles Times by The Chicago Tribune underlines the need for local newspapers, according to Don Harkins, chairman of the Committee for Local Media (CLM). "The growing newspaper monopoly is a serious blow against freedom of speech and the integrity of news reporting," Harkins said. "But the upside is that the cure for the problem of news control is local newspapers throughout America, and that is exactly what the CLM is all about." SPOTLIGHT readers interested in more information on the CLM and how to set up a local newspaper for very little money should contact the CLM in care of The SPOTLIGHT. [End quoting]

Just like the crushing of the small radio stations reported earlier in this News Desk, the merging of major print-media sources makes it easier to coordinate the dissemination of intended mind-control propaganda to the masses—without the circumventing inconvenient contradictions (truth) that small, independent presses could "leak" to the public.

666 BARCODE COMING TO RUSSIA!

From the E-MAIL, Jim Seabourn, 10/7/00: [quoting]

To: M.O.M. e-mail Alert List.

Say, did you know that there will be a signing in San Francisco, on June 26, 2000, of the United Religions, called the UR, uniting all religions and intolerant of any religion that does not join? It will be signed on the same day the UN document was signed in San Francisco, June 26, 55 years ago.

Also, on a recent campaign trip, Gore goofed when he said his favorite Bible verse is John 16:3. No one noticed and corrected the error; he and his speech writers know so little about the Bible. John 16:3 says: "And these things they will do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me."

Also, all Russians are to be given a personal 666 bar code. It is a hot issue in Russia. The leaders of the Russian Orthodox Church are protesting that it contains the fiendish number 666. All Russians are to be given a plastic card with their 666 bar code number assignment on it. If they refuse, all government benefits and medical aid will be denied. The Russian Orthodox Church has announced that anyone who accepts the card will be refused holy communion.

CONSUMER ALERT! ASK FOR THE MISSING DETAILS

From the INTERNET, <10-10PhoneRates.com>, 4/10/00: [quoting]

New on the site:

Consumer Alert! Ask for the missing details!

On the Other Phone Plans page: Buyers United, 5.47¢/min. interstate, "dial 1" long distance and toll free service with 6 second billing, $1.95 monthly fee and $1 monthly fee for each toll-free number.

Buyers United calling card with no connection fees. Charges a $1.95 monthly fee with some really low international rates, such as Australia: 7.9¢; Belgium: 6.9¢; Canada: 5.9¢; Hong Kong: 5.9¢; and United Kingdom: 3.9¢.

Save time and money by comparing rates of more than a dozen 10-10 and 10-x dial around phone plans side-by-side. Some rates vary by more than one thousand percent (1,000%)! Making calls with a 10-10 service does not require signing up for anything or switching your regular phone service. Simply dial the plan's seven-digit code (such as 10-16-868 for example), then the phone number you are calling. You'll be billed for the calls on your local phone bill. Since rates do change, bookmark the 10-10PhoneRates.com site. It's a good idea to visit at least once a month and see who is offering the best deal for you.

Another important reason to check this site regularly: Some dial around plans keep billing current customers old rates. When new, lower rates are offered to attract new customers, existing customers still pay higher rates! By checking 10-10PhoneRates.com you will know to call the telephone companies and ask them to switch your phone to lower rates.

10-10 Tip of the week:

CONSUMER ALERT! ASK FOR THE MISSING DETAILS!

How do you know if a phone plan is a good deal or not? When an ad is missing most of the details, you need to call for more information to make a good decision. Case in point: I received an offer from MCI for a "Free TV Just For Saving Money!" Here are the few key details outlined in the body of the MCI letter:

When you sign up for MCI WorldCom residential long distance, and local toll service, where available, we'll send you your free TV!

MCI 5¢ Everyday Savings. Just 5¢ a minute, weeknights, Saturdays, and Sundays. Now your state-to-state calls from home can be just 5¢ a minute.

Here is the fine print from the bottom of the back side of their letter:

"Offer valid for new customers joining MCI WorldCom with this offer only. One promotion per account per year. Please allow 8-10 weeks after confirmation of your enrollment with MCI WorldCom for delivery of your TV. You must be an MCI WorldCom customer at the time of fulfillment in order to receive your TV. Rates subject to change without notice. $1.95 monthly fee applies. Rates effective 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. weeknights, Saturdays and Sundays. Rates exclude Carrier Access Charge and Federal Universal Service Fee.

"Local toll may also be referred to as in-state long distance, local long distance, regional, or shorter distance calls."

The letter asked me to call a toll-free number to join. To see all of the missing details I uncovered by asking a lot of questions, read on.

THE REST OF THE STORY

A gentleman named Juan answered when I called 1-800-243-8318. I asked what the local toll service rates were for California. Juan responded "Four cents evenings and weekends, and six cents per minute daytime." After confirming that there were no shipping charges for the free portable 5" Black and White TV, Juan added that the local toll rates were for calls up to 59 miles from my home. Calls 60 miles and over (within California) would be 10¢/minute 24 hours, seven days a week. So, here was the first big catch: while local toll and state-to-state calls had discounted evening/weekend rates, non-local long distance inside my state was always 10¢/minute.

Next I asked about the fine print. The Carrier Access Charge is $1.47 per month and MCI's Universal Service Fee (USF) is 8.3% of all phone calls. Juan explained that the USF just increased in April. It was 7.2% prior to that.

When asked if there were any other fees besides the $1.95 mentioned in the letter, Juan said if you do not make at least $5 worth of MCI calls per month, there is a $5 charge, but that includes the $1.95 (basically a minimum charge of another $3.05 on top of the $1.95). Then I asked about a switching fee.

Juan said my local phone company would make a one-time charge of $5.26 that I would have to pay.

Feeling satisfied with my detective work, the call was ended.

So, my fellow phone detectives—what other information had Juan not volunteered?

After reviewing my notes, I didn't know the cost of a state-to-state daytime call. Although analyzing phone plans is my hobby. With so many details I had not remembered to ask!

Judy Barnes answered my next call to MCI. Judy came across well, wanting to share details. She said weekday state-to-state rates are 25¢/minute. I could buy down the rate to 7¢/minute for a $4.95 monthly fee. So, here was big catch number 2! A huge weekday rate or big monthly fee.

Judy did give some good news—if I was not happy anytime after receiving the TV, MCI would pay to switch me to another carrier (or back to no carrier, as I currently use only dial around 10-10 plans and do not have a long distance carrier).

After reviewing all details, I decided it was worth the free TV to sign up for MCI for at least two months. The nickel evening rates would allow me to fax news releases out of state without having to dial a 10-10 number in front of every fax number. Local toll calls were about the same as Pacific Bell's. I will continue to use dial around plans for weekday long distance and in-state calls over 59 miles. 10-16-868 will be used for calls to Thailand.

But, wait! One more detail was revealed when I spoke with Lauren Patterson to sign up: There is a $1.50 co-billing fee to receive the MCI bill with my local (Pacific Bell) bill. I asked MCI to bill me separately and avoid the $1.50 fee.

[End quoting]

Soon as we find one scam and try to work around it, these phone companies are putting out at least 2 more. You always have to keep close check on your phone bill because the crafty tricksters change rates without telling you—and faster than a politician makes excuses.

MILITARY NUTRITION PATCH

Excerpted from E-MAIL, 4/13/00: [quoting] Hold the lettuce: Nutrition patches in soldiers' future.

Soldiers of the future may go into battle with a new patch on their arms, but not the sort that signifies rank or unit.

Instead, the GIs could be wearing "nutritional patches" designed to fuel them with sufficient nutrients and vitamins to keep them at peak performance during combat without eating.

Research on such revolutionary ways to deliver sustenance, along with other studies on using caffeine supplements, such as the "HooAH Bar" to keep troops alert and less accident prone, could give an entirely new meaning to the command "Charge!"

And, if history is a guide, whatever the military scientists concoct is likely to find its way in some form to the civilian world, where astronauts, emergency personnel, physicians on call, and pilots could use the products as well.

"The estimate is that 30% of what you find on grocery store shelves" involves at least some military research, said Jeremiah Whitaker, chief of public affairs for the U.S. Army Soldier Systems Center in Natick, Massachusetts.

Scientists at the Defense Department's Combat Feeding Program have begun conceptual research on what they have dubbed the "Transdermal Nutrient Delivery System". Similar to the nicotine patches that smokers use to help them quit, the TNDS patch would be attached to the skin, where it would transfer nutrients into the soldier's system.

"The patch would be used to keep the warfighter at optimum performance for a day or two, until he or she has access to a real meal and the time to eat it," said an account of the cutting-edge research in a publication of the Soldier Systems Center. "It is never meant to replace a turkey dinner with all the fixings."

Among the methods under consideration are a tiny microchip processor that would first determine a soldier's metabolic needs and then transfer the needed nutrients to the skin by a microelectrical mechanical system, the publication said.

Nutrients also could travel by skin pores opened by electrical impulses, or directly into capillaries by a process called microdialysis. Also possible would be the infusion of "neutraceuticals"—chemicals that would trick a soldier's brain into thinking his stomach is full or that his muscles aren't really tired. [End quoting]

That very last statement provides the most insight into what mischief could be achieved with this potentially useful technology.

VACCINE GIANTS TO PLEDGE THIRD-WORLD OFFENSIVE

Excerpted from THE LOS ANGELES TIMES, 3/2/98: [quoting]

The four biggest vaccine makers will announce today at the White House that they are donating millions of doses of their products and stepping up research to cure diseases that plague African countries and other developing nations.

The announcement reflects a growing realization by governments, public health doctors, medical researchers, foundations, and pharmaceutical company heads in industrialized countries that the "neglected diseases" of the Third World pose a threat to continued global economic development.

"There is a global crisis around the big killer diseases: pneumonia, tuberculosis, and malaria," said Dr. Richard Feachem, director of the Institute for Global Health at UC San Francisco and a participant in the effort. "We have a major problem in that incentives are not in place for the pharmaceutical industry to invest in finding cures."

President Clinton, in his new budget, is proposing a tax credit to encourage drug companies to find vaccines for these diseases. He is also proposing steep increases for federal research through the National Institutes of Health and a $50 million U.S. contribution to a global fund for distributing vaccines to poor countries. In Congress, Sen. John F. Kerry (D-MA) has introduced legislation calling for a broader package of incentives to drug companies.

"We can really have a big wallop here," Dr. Anthony Fauci, the government's leading AIDS researcher, said of today's White House meeting. "It's something that's actually happening, not talk. This initiative has not only galvanized the drug companies, but foundations and other organizations." [End quoting]

There have been several good books published in recent years about the dangers of vaccinations in general, even without the purposeful, covert introduction of engineered horrors into the serum composition. The SPECTRUM has presented much information about this subject just in the past eleven months. And now, for an encore:

CLINTON PLAN TRADES THIRD WORLD DEBT FOR MASS VACCINATION

President Tells IMF He Wants To Forgive All Loans To Poor Nations!

Excerpted from THE IDAHO OBSERVER, Oct. 1999: [quoting]

"...any country dedicated to reforming its economy and dedicated to vaccinating its children should be able to make those commitments and keep them,” said Clinton. “More than 430 million people could benefit from this effort.”

The G-7 offered in June to more than double, to $27.5 billion, their commitment to forgive the debt of 33 of the world’s poorest countries. Forgiveness of official development assistance and other debt would add another $15 billion to that. [End quoting]

The so-called “elite” controllers do nothing to basically help the people. Their plan to depopulate is running behind schedule and this is the way they have been doing a lot of it in Africa and even in this good old USA. They are going to speed up the process if at all possible. It’s time to read between the lines of the New World Order propaganda.

SPACE ALIENS DESTROYED RADIO TELESCOPE

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 4/17/00: [quoting]

SPACE ALIENS DESTROYED RADIO TELESCOPE because they didn’t want us eavesdropping on them, say scientists!

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa—In a devastating setback to the international search for extraterrestrial life, a giant radio telescope being used to probe the stars has been destroyed—and some scientists fear that aliens may be responsible for the mysterious mishap!

At 2:13 a.m. on March 18, what witnesses described as a “pulsating blue beam” streaked out of the sky and slammed into the 250-foot Rand-Wilson telescope near Johannesburg, lighting up the facility and a quarter-mile area surrounding it.

At daybreak, stunned researchers found that the multimillion-dollar telescope had been reduced to a tangle of scorched and twisted metal.

“It looked as if it had taken a direct hit from a category-five hurricane, but the weather that night was completely tranquil,” chief astronomer Dr. Nigel Van Hecht said in a phone interview.

“We are entirely at a loss as to what could have caused this. The damage is certainly not consistent with any known natural phenomenon, such as lightning.

“We have concluded that it is the result of sabotage, and because of the uncanny nature of the weapon, we are strongly leaning toward the theory that the attackers were non-terrestrial.”

The South Africa-based telescope, one of the world’s largest, was a key element in the international scientific endeavor known as the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence, or SETI.

Scientists use radio telescopes—essentially giant antennas—to “listen” for radio waves coming from outer space.

While some radio waves are natural, the theory is that waves within certain frequencies or manifesting unusual patterns could only be broadcasts from an alien civilization.

The program has been widely hailed as a more prudent and cost-effective means of alien-hunting than manned space exploration. And the powerful Rand-Wilson telescope, able to listen in on about 6,000 stars within 400 light-years of our solar system, was considered a uniquely vital tool.

But Dr. Van Hecht and his colleagues now fear the approach may have backfired.

“It’s conceivable that the aliens don’t like us eavesdropping on them—and that this was their crystal-clear way of telling us to cut it out,” the astronomer said. “Certainly, they may have secrets they don’t want us listening in on.”

Although researchers around the world will continue to use other radio telescopes to scan the cosmos for signs of intelligence, the Rand-Wilson telescope is history.

“The damage is irreparable” Dr. Van Hecht said. “This is a real tragedy for science.” [End quoting]

One can be pretty sure the correct explanation for this mishap has a much more terrestrial origin. For a scientist of supposedly sound mind to propose such an astonishing theory is to essentially admit the desperate need to hide a much bigger matter. Whatever they were up to, it’s “on hold” from that location for awhile!

CHICKENS LAY CAVIAR

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, May 2000: [quoting]

Although you wouldn’t know it from their price tags, caviar and chicken eggs are chemical cousins.

Taking advantage of this similarity, the NovoPetrovsky Russian chicken farm near Moscow has begun manufacturing the rare delicacy by the truckload. A British journalist who toured the farm says ordinary chicken eggs are mixed with sunflower and fish oils, salt, iodine and, for color, black tea.

The fake caviar is said to be so good, you can’t tell fish from fowl. [End quoting]

Well, at least the goal wasn’t accomplished by genetic engineering—of was it?!

SOPPING UP TROUBLE

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, May 2000: [quoting]

Drying up the last bits of water after a flood, fire, or chemical spill decontamination is about to become as simple as pushing a lawn roller.

The Bowdry rolling sponge combines a 28-inch foam cylinder with a tank, which together hold 16 gallons. It removes virtually all of the moisture in a single pass. Bowcom (www.bowcom.com) will begin marketing its rolling sponge to emergency response teams later this year. [End quoting]

This sounds like a real winner—especially for your next birthday party hosting twenty 4-year-olds!

BOUNTIFUL BATTERY

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, May 2000: [quoting]

ENERGIZER E2 batteries raise the bar for alkaline battery life a whopping 85%. The extra life comes from a new internal design plus the addition of a titanium compound. When they become available this summer, the e2s will have a gauge-style tester and come in a reclosable package. Prices will be slightly higher than those of regular Energizer alkaline batteries. <www.energizer.com> [End quoting]

This sounds like another real winner—though you can be sure this is merely “throwing us a bone” in comparison to the suppressed “free energy” technologies which would make the whole battery industry obsolete.

GLUE FIXES OLD BONES

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, May 2000: [quoting]

A glue that connects shattered bones until nature knits them together will spare elderly patients the risk of life-threatening complications after bone-graft surgery.

With the patient under local anesthesia, the surgeon injects a special calcium phosphate glue on the edges of shattered bone. The glue fills gaps, forming a strong mechanical connection until bone grows in.

Developed by Norian of Cupertino, California, the Skeletal Repair System is being used at Stanford University to fix complex wrist fractures in the elderly. It could be available for hip repair later this year. [End quoting]

Many could benefit from this product—and think about all of the pain and suffering that will be eliminated, provided it is compatible with biological systems.

PLASTIC FROM PLANTS

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, April 2000: [quoting]

A new plastic, made from plant sugars, is expected to become the first such material to be cost-competitive with conventional plastics. Called NatureWorks PLA, the material could be used to make products such as clothing, carpet, cups, and candy wrappers.

Cargill Dow Polymers, a joint venture of Cargill Inc. and the Dow Chemical Co., will make NatureWorks PLA at a factory in Blair, Nebraska. Opening late next year, the factory will be able to turn out 140,000 metric tons of

Natureworks PLA annually,

The process for making the material begins with a plant such as corn or wheat, from which unrefined dextrose (a natural sugar) is extracted. Fermentation turns the dextrose into lactic acid, which is then condensed to form a material called lactide. The lactide, in turn, is melted to form long molecular chains called polylactide (PLA) polymers, which can be fashioned into fabrics or packaging materials. NatureWorks fabrics have the feel of natural fibers like cotton and silk—but with the cost, resiliency, and strain resistance of synthetics, claims Cargill-Dow.

The new plastic will not biodegrade in your closet or pantry. But it will break down in a compost pile, if it's subjected to the right combination of heat and humidity. [End quoting]

One wonders if this will have the benefits of all-natural fibers by the time the chemical companies get through with their doctoring of these plants in the manufacturing process for making the fibers? It is not much of a leap to wonder if a good deal of genetic engineering is being accomplished in a cloaked manner through such ventures as this.

INTERESTING QUOTE

From the INTERNET, <RonWortham@aol.com>, 4/17/00: [quoting]

One of the reasons that I am aware of so much that others aren't is that—I see dead people. And I talk with them. Everyday. They sit and eat in the restaurants that I visit. They greet me on the street. They wait on me in the stores. They take home their weekly pay checks, make their mortgage and car payments, and although they sit and eat and talk with me, they are dead. They think they are living, but they are spiritually dead, and dead to the reality around them. So they can't see what is going on and are surprised when I tell them what is going to happen.

Peace and love,

Bruce Beach <survival@webpal.org> [End quoting]

Excellent food for thought. How many of you feel like you interact with a lot of "dead" people? You can assume that one of the reasons for the Elian Gonzales "kidnapping" by the feds was to create an event to measure the level of successful "deadening" of the people in our current population that has been accomplished through the various mind-control techniques constantly bombarding us.

I ASKED GOD

I asked God to take away my pain. God said, "No. It is not for me to take away, but for you to give it up."

I asked God to make my handicapped child

I asked God to grant me patience. God said, "No. Patience is a by-product of tribulations; it isn't granted, it is earned."

I asked God to give me happiness. God said, "No. I give you blessings. Happiness is up to you."

I asked God to spare me pain. God said, "No. Suffering draws you apart from worldly cares and brings you closer to Me."

I asked God to make my spirit grow. God said, "No. You must grow on your own, but I will prune you to make you fruitful."

WHAT FORGIVENESS BRINGS

From GUIDEPOSTS, August 1999, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

I'd just seen my grandson, Corrick, off to school and was going through the mail when the return address on an official-looking envelope jumped out at me. "Texas Department of Criminal Justice." Every three years I'd gotten a letter from them. "Dear Arna Washington," it invariably read. "This is to inform you that offender Ronald Dwayne Flowers, ID#00393525, is up for parole. If you wish to protest..."

And every time I saw those words, a bitter flame rekindled inside me. If I wished to protest? Ron Flowers killed my daughter. He destroyed my family, my whole life. He deserved to rot in prison. As long as I had breath left in my body, I'd make sure that was where he stayed. You're darn right I protested!

I sat on the couch and slowly opened the letter, feeling as if I were opening an old wound. Thinking about my daughter's senseless death still hurt, even after 14 years. "Dear Arna Washington," I read. "This is to inform you that under the Mandatory Release Program, offender Ronald Dwayne Flowers, ID#00393525, will soon be released. If you have questions...." There had to be some mistake! Will be released? How could that man be getting out? How could he be getting a chance to start over when my beautiful Deirdra never would?

I looked away from the letter, my eyes stinging with angry tears. All around me, lining the walls and on end tables, were pictures of my daughter, a record of her too-short life—from the chubby-cheeked baby who instantly won her big brother Derek's heart, to the tall young woman who became a teacher, following in her father Marcellus's and my footsteps. I picked up the last photo I had of my daughter, her face lit up with a smile, her arms around her kindergarten students, as sweet and trusting as they were. That was DeDe: all about giving, all about love.

Until a killer took her from us. That terrible night, February 9, 1984, the phone jolted me awake. It was Carlton, a guy DeDe had met recently. They were supposed to be out on their second date. Instead, he was yelling, "Deirdra's been shot! She's at Ben Taub!"

Marcellus and I raced to the hospital. The bullet had ripped through DeDe's brain, and the doctors told us there was no hope. Only machines were keeping her alive.

We never left her side. "Come on, baby, fight," I urged, squeezing her hand, praying that somehow my love could bring her back. But around six in the morning, DeDe gave a little sigh, and she was gone. I kissed her cheek for the last time and vowed: "I won't rest, baby. Not until I get the person who did this to you." We buried DeDe on what would have been her twenty-seventh birthday.

Details about the killing were sketchy. The police said she'd been in the seediest part of Houston, in front of an apartment building crawling with drug dealers, when she was shot. I told the officers there was no way our daughter, whose friends used to tease her about being more innocent than her kindergartners, would even have known such a place existed. When they questioned Carlton, he admitted he'd taken her there—to collect a debt, he claimed. A couple of men jumped him and beat him up. In the scuffle, someone shot DeDe.

The police arrested Ron Flowers for her murder. I couldn't wait for our day in court. "I'm going to look that man in the face and let him know exactly what he's done," I said to my husband. "And then I'm going to ask the judge to put him away forever." But Flowers pleaded guilty. There would be no trial, no chance for me to confront the man who killed my daughter. And no justice, I decided, when I learned his sentence: only 35 years in prison.

Thirty-five years couldn't begin to make up for DeDe's life. Or for the devastation her murder wreaked on our family. Without her love, it was as if we didn't know how to live anymore. Derek, who'd been so close to his baby sister, broke down completely and developed serious kidney problems. Marcellus was paralyzed with grief. He could hardly function in front of his classroom. Being around all those young people reminded him too much of what he'd lost. Finally, he took early retirement.

On the outside I was able to go on. I went to church, went back to my job as a reading teacher. Inside I struggled as much as my husband and son did. I kept looking at DeDe's picture and talking to her as if that might keep her with me, begging God to let me hear her voice one more time. I tried to make sense of what had happened. No matter how hard I prayed, the answers didn't come.

With the birth of Derek's son, Corrick, my grief began to fade. But my anger toward Ron Flowers did not. Not that there was much I could do except make sure he stayed behind bars. I did see to it, though, that the drug den where DeDe was killed got shut down. No more innocent young people would die there.

That sense of satisfaction paled when Derek died of kidney failure. Then Marcellus died. A heart attack, doctors said; but I knew what really killed him was having both his children go before their time. In the space of 10 years, my immediate family was wiped out, and all I could think was, Ron Flowers did this to us!

I'd retired by then. I was raising Corrick, and I threw myself into his activities at church, school, Boy Scouts. He was all I had left. Still, anger burned deep inside me.

I crumpled the letter from the Department of Criminal Justice and sank back onto the couch, those long-held feelings leaping to the surface like flames licking hungrily at tinder. "Lord, you know why I'm angry" I cried. "I've struggled to accept that nothing is going to bring my baby back. But accept that the man who killed her is going free? You're asking too much!" I resolved once more to forget about Ron Flowers. I might not be able to keep him in prison; at least I could keep him out of my life.

But he just wouldn't leave my thoughts. At our annual church conference several weeks later, a prison choir performed. The men didn't look mean and hard, as I'd assumed criminals would. Then my pastor, Rev. Homer Williams, announced he was serving as a mentor at Jester II's InnerChange Freedom Initiative, a Prison Fellowship program nearby. Before I knew it, I was asking, "Pastor, next time you're there, can you see if they know of a Ron Flowers?"

My pastor called a few days later. "The young man you're looking for is in the InnerChange program." Ron Flowers was only 20 miles from my home?

Apparently he'd accepted God into his life, and his counselor, the director of the program, wanted to talk with me about him, my pastor said.

"Ron's a changed man" the director told me a few days later. "He'd like to get in touch with you."

"I don't want anything to do with him!" I protested. "I don't care how much he's changed!" But I couldn't stop thinking about him. Finally I agreed to allow Ron Flowers to write me.

Within days I received a letter. Not once did he apologize or show any remorse. How dare he! I was so furious I refused to answer his letter.

Yet I found myself going with my district United Methodist Church Prison Fellowship ministry to visit Jester II. As we toured the library, I noticed a young man huddled in a corner. I knew instinctively it was Ron Flowers. I had to leave the room.

As soon as I got home, I wrote him back: "That letter was totally inappropriate. Not only did you murder my daughter, you destroyed my whole family!" I sent him the program from DeDe's funeral, with her picture and a tribute a friend had written to "Our Deirdra". I figured I'd never hear from him again.

But I did. "Dear Mrs. Washington," Ron Flowers wrote. "As soon as I mailed that letter, I knew it was not right. I am so sorry for what I did to your family. I know you must have questions for me, and I'd like to answer them face-to-face. I pray you'll give me that chance."

For years I had wanted to confront this man, to make sure he understood the anguish he'd caused. After Corrick went to bed that night, I paced the living room, going over the photos of my daughter, one by one. "Baby, I want to do right by you," I whispered, "but I know I need to move on." Then to God I pleaded: "Isn't there any way I can do both?"

I decided the only answer was to see Ron Flowers. Once I heard what he had to say, maybe I would be able to put all the pain and anger behind me. Through my pastor and the prison director, we set up a meeting.

Last October thirteenth I got up early, fixed Corrick his breakfast as usual, and took him to school. I want some closure, I thought, as I headed to the prison with my pastor. But, Lord, I'm going to need your help.

In the Jester II meeting room my pastor showed me to a seat at the table, then moved back to give me some privacy. The door opened. A young man in prison whites entered the room. He walked toward me slowly, clutching a Bible, and sat opposite me. I noticed his hands were shaking as badly as mine.

"I'm Arna Washington."

"I'm Ron," he replied, so softly I had to lean forward to hear him.

There was an awkward silence. Then I asked the question only he could answer: "What happened that night?"

He let out his breath and began. "This guy Carlton came into the apartment. He wanted drugs, but didn't have money. My friends started beating on him. He ran downstairs, and I grabbed a gun and went after him. When the car he came in started driving off, I panicked. I shot into the car window." Ron's hand clenched his Bible. "I never meant to hurt your daughter, Mrs. Washington. I'm sorry."

I didn't know what to say, but I couldn't let out all my emotions in front of this stranger. As a defense, I went into my teacher mode. "Young man, life on the outside is going to be tough. You can't hang on to that Bible every minute when you get out of here," I said sharply. "You're going to have to carry the Lord inside you."

"Forgive him, Mom."

DeDe! I'd know her voice anywhere.

Had anyone else heard? I glanced around. My pastor was sitting quietly in one corner, the prison director in another. Ron was silently waiting for me to finish.

Those words had been meant for me alone. That was all God had my baby tell me. But it was enough. I pushed back my chair and got up. "Come here, son" I said.

Warily Ron stood, then came around to my side of the table.

I reached out my arms. He took a step forward. Then we were holding each other, weeping together, the tears putting out the last bitter embers inside me, washing away the anger I'd been carrying for too long, and letting the love of the Lord fill its place.

When we moved apart, I took a good look at Ron. And I saw the person he'd been 14 years before—a mixed-up young man who didn't know what he was doing when he shot my daughter, who'd probably caused his mother no end of worry.

"Ron, this may be hard for you to believe" I said, "but I want to forgive you. I want to be at peace with you."

Ron's eyes filled again. He squeezed my hand tightly. "I want that too" he murmured.

I knew Deirdra would have wanted nothing less. — Arna Washington, Houston, Texas [End quoting]

Love truly does conquer all pain, but often it is forgiveness that must come first.

The “Black” Pope

While all of those details contribute to understanding the Larger Picture, what you are about to read fills in a most important Missing Link in this entire structure. And I don't mean a little side issue; I mean a link so central—yet so well hidden from general public view, and for so long—that even the most studied of “conspiracy theory” scholars probably have not put together much of the information that is going to be presented here.

To call the following outlay “controversial” and “sensitive” is about as mild an understatement of the truth of the matter as can be made! This missing link changes the entire slant of the entire playing field!

After months of anticipation and weeks of preparation, I was finally able to speak with Vatican Assassins author Eric Jon Phelps on Tuesday, March 14. There was simply no other way to cover Eric's historic masterpiece spanning, literally, five centuries, than to just ask questions covering huge spans of time and major historical events. It took us almost four hours to accomplish the task, yet we could easily have gone on for another forty.

We here at The SPECTRUM are simply unwilling to reduce the importance of this work by presenting it in a too distilled fashion. In fact, in order to share this material with at least some of the pertinent backup, Eric has granted us permission to print (directly after the interview) several excerpts from his soon-to-be-published book which will help you in understanding certain aspects of this magnificently important and broad-sweeping story. The missing link is surely a central link.

Let's call this story the “Jesuit-Vatican connection” to the unfolding New World Order agenda. You make up your own mind just how absolutely central, yet well hidden, has been this link! There's a good reason the secret Vatican library is so extensive and yet remains so intact from outside intrusion, despite the many others who would like to possess such a collection of information detailing much “censored” data about our true, otherworldly cultural heritage.

When one reads a work like Vatican Assassins, one can't help but reflect back on the purposely “adjusted” and watered down and boring moments in high school history class. Meanwhile, the TRUE history of what has gone on is dynamic and full of calculated intrigue.

In this business, I've heard and read a lot of things. But when I had to pick my jaw up off the floor during the reading of certain historical portions in Eric's book—well, let me just say that Truth certainly is stranger, and far more interesting, than the many fictions we've been led to believe are historical fact. And yet The Truth does fit together like the pieces of a jigsaw puzzle.

This book SHOULD be a best-seller, but it is hardly likely to achieve such general attention—considering how well controlled and censored is the publishing business. Thus is the reason for our lengthy presentation of this most astonishing and critically important material here in The SPECTRUM.

We are in a time of Truth being revealed from ALL directions. And there is probably no more fundamental, mind-rattling, and previous notions-shattering example of that than what is being presented here. The interview is directly followed by a number of pertinent excerpts from Eric's eye-opening book—which will be available July 1.

[Editor's note: It should be noted up-front that the information presented below is the studied opinion of Eric Jon Phelps. We here at The SPECTRUM find much about his presentation of his historical research which meshes with and expands upon Truth which has been presented by many other authors in these pages and elsewhere. And that is good; Truth is Truth is Truth, and should all mesh.

However, for the peace of mind of our unique readership—which typically has cultivated a more aware spiritual perspective than the general public—we DO NOT want to give the impression that we agree with (or wish to promote) some collateral aspects of Eric's presentation having to do with his personal “religious” convictions. The focus of those convictions follows a much more biblically conventional (literal) path—in stark contrast to the unconventional, questioning, wide-angle vision of his historical material.

Generally such opinions are simply allowed to stand on their own—for you to sort and interpret as you see fit—rather than being singled-out to be addressed editorially. However, in this case, the practical side of Eric's stated religious convictions include the condoning of some degree of violence (or violent protest) and use of armaments. And such convictions are VERY MUCH THE OPPOSITE of our philosophical position—for many reasons, not the least of which is the obvious Adversarial bait-and-entrapment which would result from choosing what we would consider to be low-frequency responses to schoolroom Earth's current challenges.

Yet, if the perceptive reader penetrates “between the lines” thoughtfully, there is glimpsed a recurring commendable spiritual message in Eric's commentary—of “Have the courage to speak The Truth” and “God helps those who help themselves”—which we certainly DO agree with wholeheartedly and have long supported enthusiastically.

We are in the time of the Great Awakening on this planet. The Light of Truth, intensifying with each passing moment, is nudging many to step forward and share what they know. Will such ones follow that nudge or continue to hide in fear? The answer to that question is perhaps the most important aspect of schoolroom Earth's relentless testing at this critical time.

One last-minute footnote before beginning this interview: The Arts & Entertainment (A&E) cable television channel just started to air—on Easter Sunday evening!—a new two-hour documentary called: The Vatican Revealed. Tape it so you can study it carefully; within the lines of dialog and some of those people chosen for commentaries are many, many clues to the true power of the Vatican over world affairs. It would, of course, be much more revealing to watch the A&E program AFTER having read and digested the following.]

Martin: Before we begin, let me say a few words. The topic of your book is so comprehensive and covers, literally, all aspects of global control by the Jesuits, dating back to 1540. I would like to begin our conversation with a very important point of clarification so that our readers have something to hold onto while reading the historical narrative we are about to present. Let me also add that your book is one of the most compelling, dynamic, genuinely educational historical documents I have ever read. I want to tell you, I am impressed!

You, literally, link every major global conflict and political assassination to the hands of the Jesuit Order. The Jews, as with many other groups you mention, have been the unwitting pawns in this Jesuit Agenda.

Today, the present. I'm going to start here, and then we're going to go way back in time and work our way up. But, I want to start HERE because it will give a foundation for going back in time.

Today, who is the Superior General of the Jesuits, the so-called “Black Pope” [black here refers to hidden, evil activities, not to race or color] who gives the orders to the actual Pope. Is it still Jean-Baptist Janssens?

Phelps: Janssens, Frenchman. No, he passed away in 1964. Then Pedro Arrupe came to power. Then, after Arrupe died, in 1988, I believe, the present Jesuit General is Count Hans Kolvenbach. [See photo nearby.] I call him Count Hans Kolvenhoof.

Martin: Let's discuss this position of "General" and, in addition, who is this person, Count Hans Kolvenbach? Who does he serve? What are his origins? Where does he hail from?

Phelps: The present General is a Dutchman, his nationality is Dutch.

Martin: Where is he? Physically, where is he?

Phelps: He resides in Rome, at the headquarters of the Jesuits, called the Church of Jesu. So, the Jesuit General resides in Rome at, what I just called, the Jesuit headquarters.

Martin: The Church of Jesu, is that near the Vatican?

Phelps: It's not far from the Vatican, right. It's in the same general area. It's headquarters of the Knights of Malta.

Martin: Is it part of Vatican City, proper?

Phelps: Right, I believe, yes it is.

Martin: Where does Satan fit into this picture, and what is the ultimate goal of the Jesuits, the so-called Society of Jesus?

Phelps: The Jesuit General, and the other high Jesuit Generals, they are sorcerers. They are Luciferians, and they worship what they would call Lucifer. They do not believe in Satan. They believe in Lucifer.

Now, according to Alberto Rivera, he was invited—because he was a top Jesuit at the time in the late '60s—he was invited to a "Black Mass" in Spain where there were quite a few top Jesuit Generals present. And he called it a "Black Mass". Well, when you're involved in a "Black Mass", you're involved in the worship of Lucifer, all dressed in their black capes and so on.

Martin: I'm fascinated by Count Hans Kolvenbach because nobody in the world knows who this person is. I've never heard the name.

Phelps: Let me just tell you that you can see his picture and his top Jesuits—just a second and I'll get the book. The name of the book is called Jesuits: A Multi-Biography, by Jean Lacoutre, and that is available, usually, in the bookstores. It was published in 1995.

Jean Lacoutre is a Frenchman. He was a communist, is a communist. On the last page of the pictures in it, that is right adjacent to page 343, you see Peter Hans Kolvenbach. He's the Jesuit General, and he looks like just a very evil individual. There's a Black man, who's a high Jesuit, he's a 29 Superior Jesuit with his cosmopolitan General staff. One of the General staff looks like Ben Kingsley of Shindler's List. There are six White men, and one Black man. And that's his General staff.

Martin: What is the process of choosing a successor General?

Phelps: The High Jesuits elect him, and he's elected for life—unless he becomes a "heretic".

Peter Hans Kolvenbach (front, center): twenty-ninth Superior General, with his cosmopolitan general staff. From the book Jesuits: A Multibiography by Jean Lacoutre; (French © 1991, English © 1995) Counterpoint Books, P.O. Box 65793, Washington DC 20035; ISBN 1-887178-05-8.

Martin: And the so-called “High Jesuits” represent what group?

Phelps: I would say that they’re the “professed”, the high 4th Degree. When a Jesuit is professed, he is under the Jesuit Oath; he is under the “Bloody Oath” that I have in my book.

Martin: Do we have permission to reprint that Oath in our paper?

Phelps: Of course, absolutely.

Martin: One of my questions has to do with the Oath and it’s similarity to the Protocols Of The Learned Elders Of Zion, and I wrote that question before I got back to the Protocols portion of your book.

Phelps: The Jesuits obviously wrote the Protocols because they have carried out every protocol in that little handbook. They have carried everything out. And, Alberto Rivera says—and he was a Jesuit—he was greatly maligned, not helped at all by the Apostate, Protestants, and Baptists in this country; he was helped, somewhat, by Jack Chick. Jack Chick published his story in six volumes, titled Alberto I, II, III, IV, V, & VI.

Alberto Rivera says that it was Jews aligned with the Pope who published the Protocols. Well, I tend to feel that it was just the Jesuits themselves because they, and they alone, were the ones who were able to bring this to pass.

They’re the ones in the government. They’re the ones behind professional sports. The owner of the Pittsburgh Steelers is a Knight of Malta. The owner of the Detroit Lions is a Knight of Malta. All your top owners of these ball clubs, for the most part, are Knights of Malta, getting the people whooped up in this hoopla over games and sports, while they’re busy creating a tyranny. So, that was one of the things in the Protocols—that they would create “amusements”.

Another one they used was Walt Disney, 33rd-degree Freemason—Disneyworld, Disneyland. Another one was Milton Hersey, with Hersey Park. They create all of these amusements and games and pastimes to get the people drunk with pleasure, while they’re busy overthrowing the Protestant form of government.

Martin: Where does Las Vegas factor into all of this?

Phelps: Las Vegas, well, for the most part, is controlled by the Mafia. But all the high Mafia families are Roman Catholic, and they are ALL subordinate to the Pope or to the Cardinal of New York, which is Cardinal O’Connor—because the Commission, the Mafia Commission resides in New York.

Frank Costello was a member of the Mob Commission, and he was intimate, personal friends with Knight of Malta, Hollywood mogul, Joe Kennedy. And that has not changed.

So, the High Knights are good, dear brothers with the High Mafia Dons—the Gambinos, the Lucchese, the Columbos, all of them. And they control Hollywood, not the Jews. It’s only Jews who are front-men who are involved in Hollywood and working for the Mafia and for the Cardinal, just like in politics it would be Arlen Specter. Arlen Specter was Spelly’s [Cardinal Spellman’s] Jew in the assassination [of President Kennedy], and he would never say a word about it.

Martin: Now, as we go through here, if there’s anything that you don’t want me to print, please let me know because, literally, I’m going to print everything we say in this conversation.

Phelps: That’s fine, that’s fine with me because it needs to be said.

Martin: Let’s get back to Count Hans Kolvenbach. I want to shine the spotlight on this guy for just a little bit here. Let’s talk about him. What does he do? Who is he? Let’s talk about his position as “General”. How do they exercise this control over the Pope? Does the Pope know he’s a pawn?

Phelps: Ok, one question at a time. So, which question do you want me to deal with?

Martin: Let’s just shine the light right on the Count.

Phelps: The Jesuit General, ok.

Martin: Let’s start there, and you tell me everything you want to tell me about that position.

Phelps: The Jesuit General is the absolute, complete, and total dictator and autocrat of the Order. When he speaks, his provincials move. The provincials are his major subordinates. There are around 83 provincials right now.

As I understand it, the Jesuit Order has divided the world into 83 regions. Ok? For each region, there is a Jesuit provincial. There are 10 provincials in the United States. There is one for Central America. There is one for Ireland. They’ve divided up the world into these provinces.

So it’s old Babylonian provincial government, centered in Nebuchadnezzar or the Jesuit General himself; so it’s strictly a Roman form of government where all the states or provinces are subordinate to this worldwide sovereign.

The Jesuit General exercises full and complete power over the Order. He meets with his provincials. When they decide to start a war or an agitation, he gets the information from the provincial of that country, how best to go about this, the demeanor of the people, and then he uses legitimate grievances to foam an agitation—like the 1964 Civil Rights Movement. That was ALL a Jesuit agitation, completely, because the end result was more consolidation of power in Washington with the 1964 Civil Rights Act that was written by [the longtime President of the University of Notre Dame, the Reverend] Theodore Hesburgh.

The Jesuit General rules the world through his provincials. And the provincials then, of course, rule the lower Jesuits, and there are many Jesuits who are not “professed”, so many of the lower Jesuits have no idea what’s going on at the top. They have no concept of the power of their Order.

It’s just like Freemasonry. The lower Freemasons have no idea that the High Shriner Freemasons are working for the Jesuit General. They think that they’re just doing works and being good people. But the bottom line is that the high-level Freemasons are subject, also, to the Jesuit General because the Jesuit General, with Fredrick the Great, wrote the High Degrees, the last 8 Degrees, of the Scottish Rite Freemasonry when Fredrick protected them when they were suppressed by the Pope in 1773.

So, you have the alignment with the Jesuit Order and the most powerful Freemason they had in the craft, Fredrick the Great, during their suppression. That is an irrefutable conclusion. And then, when you see the Napoleonic Wars, the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars carried out by Freemasonry, everything Napoleon did, and the Jacobins, whatever they did, completely benefited the Jesuit Order.

It’s to this end that Alexander Dumas wrote his The Count Of Monte Cristo. The Count is the Jesuit General. Monte=Mount, Cristo=Christ. The Count of the Mount of Christ. Alexander Dumas was talking about the Jesuit General getting vengeance when the Jesuits were suppressed, and many of them were consigned to an island, three hours sailing, West, off the coast of Portugal. And so, when the Jesuits finally regained their power, they punished all of the monarchs of Europe who had suppressed them, drove them from their thrones, including the Knights of Malta from Malta, using Napoleon.

And Alexander Dumas, who fought for the Italian patriots in 1848, to free Rome from the temporal power of the Pope, wrote many books and one of the books was to expose this, and that was The Count Of Monte Cristo.

So, when you read that book, bear in mind that it’s really a satire on the Jesuit Order regaining their power in France. The Count of Monte Cristo has an intelligence apparatus that can’t be beat. Well, that’s the Jesuit Order.

But the Count doesn’t get what he really ought to have, or his last wish, and that’s the love of woman. He gains back all of his political power; he gains back everything he lost; but he doesn’t have the love of a woman. And THAT is the Jesuit Order. They have no women. They have no love of a woman. Because to have a wife, to have a woman, means you have an allegiance to your wife and family, and you cannot obey the General. That’s why they will NEVER be married, and that’s one of the great KEYS to their success.

They can betray a nation and walk away. They can betray all the Irish Catholics getting on the Titanic, and walk away. They can betray us in Vietnam and walk away. They can betray us every time we go to the hospital and get radiated and cut and drugged, and walk away, because it's "for the greater glory of God"—Ad Majorem Dei Gloriam: the greater glory of the god who sits in Rome.

Martin: What is the ULTIMATE goal of the Jesuits?

Phelps: Their ultimate goal is the rule of the world, with the Pope of their making, from Solomon's rebuilt Temple in Jerusalem. That's their ultimate goal.

Martin: And why is Solomon's Temple rebuilt so important?

Phelps: Because the Jesuits have always wanted that. When Ignatius Loyola first started the Order, one of the first things he did was, he wanted to go to Jerusalem and set up the Jesuit headquarters there. So, he went there, he tried to do it and failed, came back, went to school, started his Latin studies, etc. Maybe it might be a good idea to just review a little bit about Ignatius Loyola.

Martin: Yes.

Phelps: Ok, Ignatius Loyola was a Spanish soldier, and he was wounded at a battle between the French and the Spanish, and his leg was shattered. Well, the French General, because Loyola was very brave in conflict, ordered his own doctors to attend Loyola. So they set the leg and sent him back to his home—which, of course, he was royalty to the Counsel of Loyola in Spain, in the area of the Basques.

Loyola, through his series of desiring to regain his leg—it had healed improperly, so he made a rack where he would stretch the leg, with severe, horrible, awful pain—and trying to stretch this leg to get it back to normal shape, he endured awful, terrible pain. He had it rebroken, again, a couple of times and it still did not heal properly, so he had a perpetual limp. He could no longer be the courtier among women, and as a result, he went into this depression, and he then had this vision of the saints, etc., etc., and he wrote his spiritual exercises.

I will stop at the spiritual exercises, just for a minute, but I'll take up from there. Loyola then wanted to form an army, but when this happened with his spiritual exercises, those spiritual exercises would be basic training for all of his Jesuits. That's what they will ALL go through. That's what every Jesuit goes through today.

One of the maxims of the spiritual exercises is that if my superior says "black is white and white is black", then that's the way it is. That is in his spiritual exercises. That is what is quoted in JFK, when Kevin Costner is telling his people: "Hey, people, we've got to start thinking like the CIA. Black is white and white is black." That was a Jesuit giveaway that the Jesuits produced that movie, because they're quoting Ignatius Loyola in that movie from his spiritual exercises.

So, Loyola had an indomitable will. He had a will of steel, and he set his mind to regain back what the Papacy had lost to the Reformation. And so, he went to the Pope, and the Pope in 1540 then created the Jesuit Order. But this man is a soldier, he's a lawyer, and he put together a legion of soldiers and warriors to get back what Rome had lost, as well as institute a World Government for the Pope, from Jerusalem. This was in 1540.

He started the Order in 1536. He was arrested by the Inquisition, and he was released, and he went to the Pope; he threw himself at the feet of the Pope. He would be completely at his service. The Pope chartered him, and that Pope was Pius III. The Pope chartered them, created the Jesuit Order; now he has Papal protection, and they began their awful history of deeds of blood. And war after war after war after war, they're all attributed to the Jesuit Order in some way. Catholic nobles, with lots of money, donated castles and schools and money to the Jesuit Order.

Virtually everything they own has been given to them or stolen by them. Of course, they stole all of the fortunes of the Jews in World War II. They stole all their gold, all their assets and everything, whenever they went into a country. What's just been released is NOTHING compared to what they've taken.

In Edmond Paris's book, printed by Ozark Publications, called The Vatican Against Europe, it gets into great detail of what they did. It calls it—the last 30 years of war is all attributable to the Jesuits, their massacres of the Serbs and Jews, etc. But Edmond Paris did not understand that the Jesuit General—and this is one of the most important points I want to make about Von Kolvenbach—the Jesuit General is in complete control of the international intelligence community: that's the CIA, the FBI, the KGB, the Israeli Mossad, the German BND, the British SIS. The Jesuit General is in COMPLETE CONTROL of the entire intelligence apparatus—FBI, every bureaucratic agency in this country, all of it; he is in complete control of it.

So, whenever he wants to find something out about an individual, they put in the Social Security number, and everything from all of the intelligence apparatus kicks-in and he and his provincials can review everything about that man. Credit cards, you name it, everything that's attached to Rome's social security number, which FDR put upon us in 1933 with the help of Spellman; at the time, I believe he was Archbishop, or maybe it was Cardinal Hayes—but Rome was behind FDR in putting him in office.

The couple of things that he did was implement social insecurity, the income tax, and recognizing Joseph Stalin's bloody Jesuit USSR government. So, with the giving of us the Social Security number, that is Rome's number—that's why I refuse to use it—and that's why they want everybody using it for everything: driver's license, tax return, credit card, everything you do, that number is you and that number is Rome's number.

Martin: Let me just back-up here for a minute. What comes to mind is Louis Freeh, head of the FBI.

Phelps: Roman Catholic, good altar boy. Probably a Knight of Columbus; I can't prove it. But anybody with that kind of power has got to be a Knight of Columbus.

And the Knights of Columbus implement Jesuit politics. And Louis Freeh was the one behind the Waco atrocity and the Oklahoma City bombing atrocity. And his top sniper was a Japanese Roman Catholic named Lon Horiuchi.

So, it's Roman Catholics in control, Knights in control of the FBI, who carried out all of this killing. And those two men, Louis Freeh and Lon Horiuchi are personally accountable to Cardinal O'Connor of New York. And Cardinal O'Connor of New York is the most powerful Cardinal in the country. He is the military vicar. And that's why Bush kissed his fanny for going to Bob Jones, because Cardinal O'Connor is the King of the American Empire. And he rules his Empire from that Palace, St. Patrick's Cathedral, "the little Vatican".

Martin: And is he in contact, do you think, with Kolvenbach?

Phelps: Of course. O'Connor himself is not a Jesuit, but the Jesuits are like the SS of the Catholic Church. They maintain order.

And the ones closest to him who maintain order are the Jesuits of Fordham University. Now, one of them—the head of Fordham University, I believe he is an Irishman, is also a member of the CFR [Council on Foreign Relations]. And I have that right here in the Annual Report of the CFR of 1993. Those Jesuits at Fordham maintain semblance and rule over the Cardinal in New York. And, of course, the powerful Jesuits of Fordham include Avery Dulles and John Foster Dulles, one of the writers of the book on the Second Vatican Council.

Martin: Let's back-up now, let's go back. What's the Council of Trent?

Phelps: The Council of Trent was the response of Rome to the Protestant Reformation. Remember—the Protestant Reformation brought us all of the political liberty that we know of today. There's no such thing as national sovereignty without the Reformation. There's no such thing as private rights without the Reformation. There's no such thing as the Law of Nations, as we know of it today, of Montesquieu and the others, without the Reformation.

So, when the Reformation came with their doctrines of salvation by grace through faith alone, and that there was no need for the priesthood to go to Heaven—that all we need is salvation in Christ, and Romans 1:17: the righteous shall live by faith. When the Reformation came, it completely stripped Rome of its spiritual power. The priests were no longer wanted because the people were getting the word of God in a Bible, specifically in Holland, England, and Germany. And so, with these great revivals breaking forth and the Reformation happening, nations were breaking away from the power of the Pope. The Holy Roman Empire was breaking up. Charles V, the Emperor, resigned and became a monk and a gardener. So, the Lord was moving mightily in breaking the power of the Holy Roman Empire, started by Charlemagne and the Pope.

Well, this was not good for Rome because they were losing lots of money. The nations were not paying “Peter’s pence” anymore, which today we call “foreign aid” in this country. And so the Pope was very upset about his.

What’s he going to do? These nations are breaking away from us; they’re not under our temporal or spiritual power; and it’s very important to remember that the Pope claims two powers—spiritual and temporal—and with the breaking of his spiritual power, he then lost his temporal power. In other words, he no longer had the ability to rule the people through the king of the country, because the king was breaking away, like Henry VIII.

So, Henry VIII broke away from the Roman Church and formed the Church of England; he no longer was subject to the Pope. This was happening in England, in Germany, in Holland, and other places.

As a result of this, the Devil raised up Ignatius Loyola with his demonisms, his “spiritual exercises” and—because Loyola had been a member of the Spanish Alumbrados, which is what we call the Illuminati today, and he used the Jesuit Order to attempt to regain back what had been taken by the Reformation—what the Lord had done through Luther, Calvin, and Knox. And, by the way, Luther, Calvin, and Knox—none of those men died violent deaths. They all lived to older age and died peacefully, amidst the power of the Jesuit machinations.

The Council of Trent consists of 25 Sessions. Those 25 Sessions accurse and condemn all the doctrines of the Reformation. It condemns anybody who does not believe that the literal Jesus Christ is in the host [holy communion bread], and that his literal blood is in the wine. That’s called transubstantiation. Anybody who does not believe that is an accursed anathema. Anybody who believes that their salvation is outside the Catholic Church is accursed anathema. Anybody who believes in justification by grace through faith—anathema, accursed. Anybody who believes that the Pope is not the vicar of Christ—anathema, accursed. You see, all of these doctrines were being put forth as a result of reading the Bible, which produced the Reformation, and so the Jesuits accursed everything that the Reformers were preaching. This is all in Law called the Council of Trent.

In the 4th Session, which is probably the most important Session, the Jesuits condemn freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of conscience. So, no man has the right to choose his own religion; no man has the right to publish what he feels is the truth; and no man has the right to freedom of conscience.

Those rights were secured by our Baptist/Calvinist forefathers in the First Amendment. The man who wrote the First Amendment was James Madison, who was a Baptist/Calvinist, and he was told by that Baptist/Calvinist in Virginia, Doc. John Leland: “If you don’t secure all those rights, Virginia will not ratify the Constitution.” Virginia was a Baptist/Calvinist state.

So, we have a warfare between the Council of Trent and the doctrines of the Reformation, particularly as outlined by John Calvin in his Institutes Of The Christian Religion. Calvin [1536] wrote the Institutes Of The Christian Religion, he finished it when he was 27, and he dedicated it to the King of France. And because the Jesuits so hated him, he was driven from France and he resided in Geneva to the day of his death, when he became Governor of Geneva. It’s Calvin and his Institutes Of The Christian Religion vs. Loyola and his Council of Trent, if you want it sewed-up in two major documents.

Martin: Council of Trent was what year?

Phelps: From 1545-1563, eighteen years. And Trent is a little town in Italy. So, it was a Council that took place in the town of Trent, Italy.

The Presbyterian Westminster Confession And Faith that was finished in 1648, after the 30 Years War, is another extension of Calvin’s Institutes, and is what the Church of Scotland and the Covenanters went by when they resisted the powers of Rome and England. That document is a major document, and it’s not the new Westminster Confession, it’s the old one of 1648, where they called the Pope the man of sin, that Roman Anti-Christ, and they also denounced anti-Christian tyranny.

And that it is their duty, to use what they call “the sword of the spirit”, which is the Word of God, which we read in Ephesians, Chapter 6, and “the sword of just defense”—the gun, the sword.

So, us Calvinists believe that there is a time for peace and a time for war, and we do not refuse to go to the battlefield when it’s necessary. It was the Calvinists who gave us our political liberty in England with Cromwell. He was a Calvinist and an independent Baptist. It was Calvinists in Holland who gave the Dutch their political liberty, with William of Orange, and later his son, Prince Maurice, and then later, in our great country, when it was Washington, the Freemason who did not go into that Masonic Lodge that last 30 years of his life—in his own words—who was a Baptist and a Calvinist. He was baptized in the First Baptist Church of New York by one of his captains, Pastor Gano, all surrounded by Calvinists.

That’s why they didn’t surrender at Valley Forge; that’s why, when they were naked, when they went through the snow, barefoot, they endured that because they were Bible-believing Calvinists and they refused to submit to the tyranny of King George, who was controlled by the Jesuits.

And that is the soul of our country. If we lose that soul, we’ve lost everything. And those very same Baptists, in the Second Amendment, secured their right to bear arms, because they secured the right, the “sword of just defense”. And the “sword of the spirit” is contained in the First Amendment, the right to have the Bible never taken from them. The two swords of Calvinism are secured in the First and Second Amendments. Without those first two Amendments, all the others are nothing.

Martin: Well, I got to my question #2. So, let’s go to #3 of the seventy. (laughter)

How does Shriner Freemason President Harry Truman’s signing into law of the Emergency War Powers Act of 1950 factor into the Jesuit Agenda?

Phelps: First of all, Harry Truman, who the Japanese called “Dirty Harry”—when they heard the movie Dirty Harry came out, they thought it was a movie about Harry Truman, according to my Japanese pastor friend, Daniel Fuji, who has passed away.

Harry Truman was put in office by the Jesuits, the Pensergast Democratic machine in Missouri. Harry Truman takes over after FDR’s murder, because he was murdered in the home of Bernard Baruch. When he did that, he then finished up the war with the hoax called the dropping of the nuclear bombs, to purposely create this greater hoax called the Cold War, that would enable the Vatican to knock over country after country after country, and replace the leaders with dictators, subordinate to the Pope. That was the purpose of the Cold War.

And so, when Harry Truman in 1950 signed into law the Emergency War Powers Act, the Cold War was in full force. They were building bomb shelters, etc. So the nation was in kind of a frenzy.

When he signed this into law, it put the whole country under military or martial law, and that’s when the flags in every courtroom, state and federal, began to be changed. And every state flag and every U.S. flag is now trimmed in gold fringe. And whenever you see a flag trimmed in gold fringe, that means that it is the flag of the Commander-in-Chief. Now, if it's the state flag, it means that's the flag of the governor, as Commander-in-Chief. And if it's the federal flag, or the national flag, more correctly, it's the flag of the Commander-in-Chief in Washington.

So, all your courts are nothing more than courts of military rule. They all proceed with summary procedures. The jury has no power of jury nullification. And they are simply enforcing the laws of the Empire, which I call 14th Amendment America, which is a military-style, King of England-style country. The courts are nothing more than courts of the king's bench, as you can see in Blackstone's Commentaries.

And the banks, as you walk into every bank, they all have a flag trimmed in gold fringe. The bank is what England would call, in Blackstone's day, the king's bank. So, we have the king's bank, and we have the king's bench. And it's run according to military rule, according to Berkheimer's great work Military Rule And Martial Law, published in 1914.

When Harry Truman did this, there was a consummation of a great plan to put us under the Emergency War Powers Act and, actually, a war rule. "Daylight savings time" is what was called "war time". This country only went to daylight savings time during World War II, and they called it, at that time, war time. So, nothing's changed. We've never gone back to not turning back our clocks. We're still on war time. The income tax is a war tax. It was called a victory tax in 1942.

So, people are paying a war tax, they're under war time, they're under an emergency war powers act, and the courts are war courts.

Martin: Regarding the assassination of President John Kennedy, which could take this entire interview, you say that the assassination was ordered by the Jesuit General, executed by Pope Paul VI, and carried out by the "American Pope", Francis Cardinal Spellman—who, in turn, used the Knights of Malta, Shiner Freemasons, Knights of Columbus, and Mafia Dons, including the FBI and CIA, to carry out the order from Rome. Would you explain why you believe your particular theory on the assassination to be an accurate representation of the facts?

Phelps: Sure. Alright, number one: The powers that be are properly outlined [in his book], and proven through two centuries of showing how it's all been put together. Now, as to why, I will be conservative and stick with Fletcher Prouty's reasons, that he outlined in his JFK and also his other book called The Secret Team.

The reason why Kennedy was assassinated was he wanted to end the Vietnam War, and he wanted to end the rule of the CIA. That begets two questions: Did Rome want the Vietnam War? And, did Rome control the CIA? The answer is yes on both counts.

We know, on its face, that the Vietnam War was called "Spelly's War"—Cardinal Spellman's war. He went over to the warfront many times and he called the American soldiers the "soldiers of Christ". The man who was the Commander of the American forces was a Roman Catholic, CFR member, possibly a Knight of Columbus, I don't know, but he was General William Westmoreland.

So, Westmoreland was Cardinal Spellman's agent to make sure that war was prosecuted properly. And another overseer of Westmoreland was Cardinal Spellman's boy, Lyndon Baines Johnson. Lyndon Baines Johnson was a 33rd-degree Freemason. He was also part of the assassination, with J. Edgar Hoover, another 33rd-degree Freemason.

And Johnson went to Cardinal Spellman's death at St. Patrick's Cathedral, and the picture can be seen in Cooney's work The American Pope. So, Johnson was completely at the beck and call of Cardinal Spellman through Cartha DeLoach, the 3rd-in-control of the FBI. According to Curt Gentry, in his Hoover: The Man And The Secrets, DeLoach had a phone at his bedside direct to Johnson, and Johnson could call him anytime. DeLoach was a Knight of Malta, subject to Spellman.

Spellman wanted the Vietnam War, why? Spellman was controlled by the Jesuits of Fordham. Why did the Jesuit General want the Vietnam War? The people of Vietnam, the Buddhists, were unconvertible. They would not convert to Catholicism. They didn't need Rome.

There had been a Jesuit presence in Vietnam for centuries, so it had been decided that about a million or so Buddhists would have to be "purged". They would later continue this purge of Cambodia, with Pol Pot, and the purge is yet for Thailand. It was a purging of Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam of all these Buddhists, just like they purged the Buddhists of China with Mao Zedong, because Mao Zedong was completely controlled by the Jesuits. So, they wanted the Vietnam War.

The other thing is that Rome is in control of the drug trade. The Vatican controls all of the drug trade—all of the heroin, all of the opium, all of the cocaine, everything going around in Columbia.

Columbia has a concordat with the Pope. A concordat is a treaty with the Pope. Hitler had a concordat. Mussolini had a concordat. Franco had a concordat. They want to set up a concordat here, which was the reason for Reagan formally recognizing the sovereign state of Vatican City in 1984. The greatest traitor we ever had was Ronald Reagan.

So, they had a concordat. Columbia has a concordat. Do you think that drugs running out of Columbia, with a country that has a concordat with Rome, is not controlled by Rome? If Rome didn't want the drug trade out of Columbia, they'd end the concordat. The whole drug trade is run by high Mafia families out of the country of Columbia, subject to the Jesuit General.

And the Jesuit General ran the Opium trade, a couple of centuries ago, out of China. They ran the silk trade, the pearl trade. The movie Shogun is but a slight scratching of the surface of the Jesuit "black ships" that trafficked in all of this silk and pearls and gold and opals and everything they could pull out of the East, including opium.

The Vietnam War was to consolidate and control this huge massive drug-trade that would inundate every American city with drugs, being brought in by the CIA with their Air America, and then distributed by the Trafficante family throughout the United States—Santos Trafficante out of Miami.

So we have the Mafia and the CIA working together in the drug trade. We have the Mafia and the CIA working together in the assassination of Kennedy.

The first reason why the Jesuit General [at that time, Jean-Baptist Janssens] wanted Kennedy out of the way was because he was going to end the Vietnam War.

The second reason is, he wanted to end the reign of the CIA, because the CIA had betrayed him in the person of McGeorge Bundy, by not giving the cover to the Cuban patriots to retake Cuba from that Roman Catholic, Jesuit-trained, grease-ball bastard—he was a bastard, his father was a Nazi—Fidel Castro.

Kennedy was betrayed by the CIA at the Bay of Pigs invasion, which sacrificed all the patriots on the shores of the Bay of Pigs there, so Castro had no real opposition. This was the same tactic, used by the CIA and the KGB at the top, working together with Angleton controlling it, in the Hungarian Revolution, when the CIA fomented that revolution, and then betrayed all of those patriots into the hands of the Soviet army and KGB, which infuriated certain top CIA officials.

It's the same tactic: you raise up a revolution and you sacrifice the men who truly want to resist. When that happened, when McGeorge Bundy stopped the air cover of the Bay of Pigs invasion, that ended that resistance to Castro and it enthroned him into power. And, of course, it was meant to be by the Jesuits because they HAD trained him. So now Kennedy looks bad. He's got egg all over his face. What does he want to do? He signs a Memorandum, according to Fletcher Prouty, and takes all of the power away from the CIA, and gives it to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The CIA was built by the Knights of Malta. One of the founders of the CIA was "Wild" Bill Donovan, an Irish Roman Catholic, who are the most fanatical, and his brother was a Dominican priest, Vincent. So, the CIA was founded by this high Roman Catholic, the first head, to solidify the Catholic or the Vatican control of it.

I'm not against the Catholic people; I'm against Rome's hierarchy. The American Catholic people know NOTHING of what's going on. And if they did, there would be a march on St. Patrick's tomorrow morning. So, as I'm against the hierarchy, I'm showing that Kennedy was against the Vietnam War, and he was going to do away with the CIA.

Well, the Jesuits had brought in all of their top Nazi SS soldiers into the CIA because the Jesuits were using the SS to kill the Jews in Europe. When the Einsatzgruppen went into Russia, the Jesuits followed with the SS and purged Western Russia of all its Jews. That's why Stalin deliberately killed 40,000 of his best officers. That's why he kicked out his best generals, purged them, because he wanted to make sure that the Red Army would lose with the advance of the German army, because following that would come the SS and purge Russia of the Jews that Stalin so hated. And by the way, justice is often poetic because Stalin's daughter married a Jew.

Now, the CIA was composed of the SS. The CIA now was an arm—and the intelligence arm—of the Vatican. The Knights of Malta were throughout. Casey was a Knight of Malta. Angleton was a Knight of Malta. The Knights were through and through. Angleton manned the "Vatican desk", and that is a desk within the CIA that has a direct link to the Vatican.

So, Kennedy wanted to end this "intelligence community". That was the end of him.

Thus for anyone attempting to end the CIA, and attempting to end the Vietnam War, and also because he attacked the Jesuits' Federal Reserve Bank by printing United States Notes, they got rid of him. They killed our only Roman Catholic president.

And it's another piece of poetic justice that a Roman Catholic—not Protestants, like Harry Truman, FDR, and others—it's a Roman Catholic who truly sought to resist the temporal power of the Pope in this country. And in many ways, even though Kennedy was, in fact, a socialist and communist, at least he resisted the temporal power of the Pope. And for that we should be thankful and remember his name.

But what have they done to his name? They've slammed it. They drag it into the dirt. Every time you see it on TV, they parade before you his womanizing, which I don't deny, but my goodness, can't we give him some credit where credit is due? That's why they got rid of John F. Kennedy.

And then, of course, as soon as he's assassinated, John McCone, the head of the CIA, the following day goes to the White House and they reverse Kennedy's Memorandum of reversing the Vietnam War and make a full-scale, carte blanche war.

The CIA then is tremendously and heavily funded, because it was a CIA war. And there they tried all of their new technology, their anti-gravity machines, their men who they're trying to make like the "million-dollar man". They tried out all their new technology in Vietnam. It was a great experimental theater, and Kennedy knew this. He knew it, and he knew that the American people had no idea what was going down, and he still tried to resist it, against his father's warnings. Because his father was the most powerful Knight of Malta in the Empire.

Martin: Any theories on why they took out junior?

Phelps: Yes. According to Tom Kuncle, in his publication, John F. Kennedy, Jr. wanted to find his father's real killers, and he had the power to publish the conclusion. So, they took him out right away. They would not allow that to happen.

Martin: Why haven't you been taken out?

Phelps: Because I am immortal—until the Lord is done with me. I am a Calvinist and a Baptist, and we believe in the sovereignty of God. And as long as we are operating in His Will, they cannot touch us, regardless of their power.

Martin: Which is why we're having this conversation.

Phelps: Which is why we're having the conversation. Don't think for one moment they're not tapping this phone. They know this. The issue is here. We're talking about a providential, sovereign God who wishes to move, using second causes, men, just as the Devil does.

The Devil always uses second causes, men. So, it's one group of men vs. another group of men, and one path leads to evil, and the true, almighty God leads to goodness.

The problem is, with us, there are very few men who want to believe God anymore. Nobody believes He can deliver anymore. It's just a handful of us who say: "Well, we're going to do His Will; we're going to trust Him in His Power."

And like the Hebrews getting ready to be thrown into the fiery furnace of Nebuchadnezzar, our God is able to deliver us. We're going to tell the truth!

Martin: Let's see here. I can throw away a lot of these questions. So much of it seems, in a way, irrelevant to our current times because there's so much going on now. But, good grief! I was just stunned to read in your book of all the historical things that have happened as a result of these evil people. You dedicated the book to four Roman Catholics who, I'm sure, no one has ever heard of: Charles Chiniquy, Jeremiah Crowley, Emmett McLaughlin, and Alberto Rivera. Why them?

Phelps: Because those Roman Catholic men were priests; they left the priesthood and told the truth about what was really happening. And all four of them, except one, I think Emmett McLaughlin, paid with their life. Chiniquy was the great exposé of the Jesuit assassination of President Lincoln, when he wrote his masterpiece Fifty Years In The Church Of Rome in 1886. He proves that Lincoln was assassinated by the Jesuits, and that it was covered-up by our government at the time.

Jeremiah Crowley: that priest was a great Irishman who came here and, seeing the corruption of the Archdiocese in Chicago, that it was so corrupt, he left it and exposed it. And, of course, he later came to Christ and became a Bible-believer, which they would call a Protestant. Protestants today don't believe the Bible. Protestantism of today is an empty shell, it's nothing. But, back then, in 1912, they believed the Bible.

Crowley, then, exposed many things, and one of the things he exposed, that helped me with this, was that he warned that the Jesuits, with their Knights of Columbus—which, he says, the Knights of Columbus, named after Columbus, who he tells us was a Spanish Jew and a pirate and a deflowerer of young girls—that Columbus was no Christian.

He has a tremendous section in his book on Columbus. That the purpose of the Knights of Columbus was to fulfill Jesuitical politics, and part of those politics was to restore the temporal power of the Pope because, you remember, the Pope had lost that in 1870 and they wanted to get it back. And they got it back with Mussolini in 1929.

Well, in the book that Crowley wrote in 1912, he says that Taft and Teddy Roosevelt were all cow-towing to the Pope and the Cardinals of New York. And he said they're going to use our military to restore the Pope's temporal power around the world.

And THAT was absolutely correct. That IS American foreign policy. And the Council of Trent is the American foreign policy of today. That's what's going on in Serbia and Bosnia. It's the Council of Trent—the Jesuits using the American Air Force to bomb those orthodox people to smithereens. But, that was Crowley's great contribution.

Next, Emmett McLaughlin wrote several books. He wrote The People's Padre; he wrote Crime And Immorality In The Catholic Church, showing that Catholic nations are more lawless and more criminal than Protestant nations, and he proved it with statistics from the jails.

Emmett McLaughlin also wrote another book called The Assassination Of Abraham Lincoln, where he, again, shows that Lincoln was assassinated by the Jesuits. So, Emmett McLaughlin came out of the Catholic Church. To my knowledge, he never was born again. He never was saved, but he did tell the truth. He married a nun, and lived a virtuous and honorable life after he left.

The last one was, of course, Alberto Rivera, who was greatly hated by the Vatican because he was a very high Jesuit who came out and, in the late '60s, about 1969, exposed the power of Rome in the ecumenical movement, that Rome controlled Kathryn Kuhlman; that Rome controlled Billy Graham; that Rome controlled, virtually, our government—Ronald Reagan.

Reagan, when he took the Oath of Office, faced the obelisk, indicating that this country will ultimately have a concordat. So, Alberto Rivera converted to Christ, wonderfully, and he started a ministry called The Anti-Christ Information Center, out of Los Angeles.

They tried to kill him five times. A dentist jammed a needle up between his teeth, trying to give him an infection in the brain. When he passed out, about a year or so later, they couldn't figure it out. Everybody was praying for him. And this was discovered when he went to another dentist. He had it removed.

He was pushed in front of a subway train. They tried five times to kill the man, and finally he died, I believe, of cancer, in a hospital, about three years ago. But these four wonderful, great, Catholic priests did their best to expose the power of Rome and its attempts to destroy our sovereign, Protestant, Bible-believing nation. And so, to them, I dedicate it.

Martin: What compelled you to write this book? What started it for you?

Phelps: I was always taught to be a patriot, a patriot first and foremost—America first, and everybody else second. Later, when I came to know the Lord, at 17, I realized the Bible taught the same thing—that the Lord had instituted nations. The Lord never instituted world governments; that's always the result of the Devil's working.

So, being a patriot and a nationalist—believing in national sovereignty—I was saved at 17, went into the Air Force, was garrisoned in a nuclear weapons area for three years in Germany, came back and started to go to Bible college.

When I went to Bible college, the issue of the King James came up, as far as it being an archaic version. And that's what I used and I had never given it a thought. Well, some were using NIV, some NASB, and I thought: "Well, maybe it's just a modern version of what I have here." And I thought: "Well, if they want to use that, that's fine, but I'll use the King James."

I found that the underlying Greek text for the King James, the Textus Receptus, was the Greek text of the Reformation. It represents 95% of the existing manuscripts that we have today. The Greek text that underlies all these other versions—there's a Westcott and Hort Greek text, which I then discovered was really a conspiracy to adulterate the Textus Receptus in England, led by Brooke Foss Westcott and Anthony Hort, who were Maryolitors, Mary-worshippers.

Later, I found out that they had invited

Cardinal Newman to sit in on the revision committee. Well, Cardinal Newman was a traitor to the Anglican Church, with his Track 90, which blew-off the Anglican Church. He then left England and he was then a Cardinal by Pius IX.

So, here we have Cardinal Newman, and E. B. Pusey, had been invited to sit on this revision committee, the end result being a Greek text that had been produced that was pro-Jerome's Latin Vulgate. Jerome's Latin Vulgate is the basis for the Jesuit's Reheims-Douay text, that was put out in 1582, that was attempting to rival William Tyndale's English text, which later became the King James Version of 1611.

So now I see this awful Jesuit hand in my Bible college, attempting to deprive me of the Word of God, the authorized version of 1611, in it's present edition of 1769. Now I thought "Well, here the Jesuits are, what else have they done?" And the next thing I was led to was the Lincoln assassination. And I can remember reading Burke McCarty's The Suppressed Truth About The Assassination Of Abraham Lincoln, and weeping in the back room, when I was in college.

Martin: For me, one of the most compelling portions of your book was the series of revelations about Lincoln. I was stunned by that.

Phelps: That's what they did. Remember, Lincoln was not going to go along with the 14th Amendment. He wanted those Southern states to re-enter the Union on the same footing that they had left, which would have left us with a federal Republic as Washington had established it. This the Jesuits would not allow. It would be converted into an Empire. The states would be subordinate provinces to Washington. And the 14th Amendment would accomplish this with the reversion of citizenship. And Lincoln was re-elected, and he was ready to end this, and that's why they killed him. Kennedy was ready to implement his things; they would not let him be re-elected.

Martin: This is a total aside. Have you ever come across The Jefferson Bible?

Phelps: The Jefferson Bible—and maybe you know this—is Matthew, Mark, and Luke. And Thomas Jefferson, being the Deist, being the pagan that he was, cut out all the supernatural from those three gospels. Jefferson was a Deist; he was involved with the French Freemasons who were involved in the French Revolution, and he was not here at the writing of our Protestant Constitution. So, the Lord put him out of the picture. Jefferson was just used to help with the Revolution—because the Lord does use the unGodly for good things. But Jefferson copied much of the Declaration Of Independence from the Mechlenburg Declaration, written by Calvinistic Presbyterians of North Carolina, when they seceded, when that county of Mechlenburg seceded from the Colonies.

Martin: Never heard of it.

Phelps: Yes, you'll find it in Presbyterian writings. You can find it from D. James Kennedy; he has a thing on it. And Jefferson copied, at the end: "...and to this end we devote our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

That was copied directly from the Mechlenburg Declaration. Jefferson was a plagiarist; he was a high Freemason; and he was out of here at the time of the writing of our Constitution. And the reason why the people of Virginia did elect him to office was because he was a State's Rights man. He wanted limited powers in Washington, and that was a good thing. And when Jefferson was elected, he undid everything the king-president John Adams did, with his Alien & Sedition Laws, because John Adams wanted to be a king, and Jefferson undid it, and Jefferson got two terms for that.

Martin: I'm looking at some things that are a little further back now. The Secreta Monita. What's the significance of that?

Phelps: The Secret Instructions [excerpts at the end of this interview] are the handbooks that are given to the professed Jesuits, those under extreme oath. [The oath is presented in full at the end of this interview.] And it tells them how to conduct their plans, subjugating peoples and nations to the Jesuit General, and thus, to the temporal power of the Pope. It tells how they are to deceive. It shows how they are to swindle rich widows out of their fortunes, like they did with Astor's second wife who survived the Titanic catastrophe. It shows their general approach on how to do things.

This particular book cannot be known, and if it's ever published, they will deny it's existence. But when you see the works that the Jesuits have done, it's in complete agreement with the Secreta Monita.

There is a very interesting section in Edwin R. Sherwin's book The Engineer Core Of Hell, written in 1886 I believe—another suppressed work. It's usually in the archives of all the older libraries back here. And he shows how this Secreta Monita was discovered in South America by a Mason, and the Mason managed to escape to a lodge after being shot. He turned the Secreta Monita over to the lodge, and then these certain Freemasons saw the Secreta Monita. There are certain low-level Freemasons who believe that the Jesuit Order is their enemy, so that's why it was taken to the lodge and then published. But the high-level Masons, of course, work with them. The Secreta Monita was discovered once that way. It was published in Holland. Then, in 1857, reprinted by England.

Martin: Pascal's Provincial Letters had a devastating impact on exposing the Jesuits. Why?

Phelps: Blaise Pascal was a Huguenot, a French Calvinist. So here we have another fearless man. He doesn't fear death; he's going to tell the truth. So Blaise Pascal wrote a series of letters that were written to and from provincials, and he wrote them in a satirical manner, that of course excited that wonderful French mind. The French, of course, came to the conclusion that this was absolutely the truth, and then they moved to suppress the Jesuits again. But his Provincial Letters are considered a classic. Blaise Pascal also wrote some other great works, too.

Martin: Pope Ganganeli-Clement XIV abolished the Order entirely in 1773, and was murdered as a result.

Phelps: Correct; he was poisoned.

Martin: The Order was similarly abolished 39 times from different kingdoms throughout Europe. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that something was terribly wrong with this group!

Phelps: Right. Are all those people bigots? Are all those people brainwashed bigots and fanatical Protestants who abolished the Jesuit Order?

You find the greatest resistance to the Jesuits in Catholic countries, by Catholic monarchs. And that's why the Roman Catholic monarchs and nobility of today don't dare resist them. The Kennedys won't touch them. The monarchs of Europe won't touch them. The Hapsburgs won't touch them, because the Jesuits have vindicated their power in the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars—well, then they went to suppress the Jesuits again in Europe and they were, for the most part, kicked-out of Europe in the 1800s. All the nations of Europe banned them. Germany banned them in 1872. And so, World War I and II, the second Thirty Years War, was pay-back for this. And ever since then, nobody touches them.

Pope Ganganeli abolished the Jesuits with a Papal Bull; the Jesuits call it a "brief". It is not a brief; it is in the Library of the Bulls, and it is called Dominic Ac Redemptor Nostor. That is the name of a bull. And when he abolished them, he abolished them forever—that they were not to talk about their abolition, that they were not to teach. He confiscated all of their wealth and land and property. For the most part, the Dominicans took it over, which is why the Dominicans had their penis cut off during the French Revolution. That's what the Jacobins did to them. It was payback by the Jesuits: "You don't dare take our property from us, boy. And you don't dare take Inquisition from us." Jacobins killed nearly every Dominican in France.

Martin: Why was the assassination of William of Orange so significant?

Phelps: Williams of Orange was the father of religious liberty. William of Orange is the man who gave the Jews the freedom to come to Amsterdam. And the Jews called Amsterdam, "the new Jerusalem". William of Orange was a Catholic to begin with. Remember when he was in the forest, hunting with the king of France, and the king of France lay bare to him their plans to destroy all the Protestants in Holland, William kept silent. And that's why he was called "William the taciturn" or "William the silent".

So, he harbored all of this in his heart, and he went back to Holland determined that he would deliver the Calvinists and the Protestants from this annihilation. William went to Germany with his German wife, and he, according to Motley in his The Dutch Republic, raised an army of Germans and they did not succeed in liberating Holland. And so, it was the Dutch themselves who joined William of Orange in an attempt to liberate the country, which they ultimately did as the "wild beggars of the sea".

So, William was a great inspiration. He delivered flight from the seige of the fanatical Roman Catholic Spanish, lead by the Jesuits, when the Lord providentially delivered and sent a strong wind over the dikes, and flooded the whole area, and flooded the Spanish soldiers.

And then, after that happened, He sent another strong West wind and blew the water back over the dikes. This is a historical fact! Why don't we hear this in history? For the same reason we don't hear when Louis XIV brought his army across the river into Holland to kill all those Dutch, in 1672, right around there, that the river, right where the army was crossing, thawed out, and the whole French army went to the bottom of the river, as a result of the prayers of those Protestants of Holland. We're not taught that either!

The assassination of William of Orange was probably the second most significant act of Jesuit dominance, next to the murder of Coligny at St. Bartholomew's Massacre. Because it was first St. Bartholomew's massacre, and then the murder of William of Orange. And, of course, William of Orange was shot by a Jesuit-controlled assassin, Balthazar Girard, in his own house. And the last words of William, of course, were: "God be merciful to these poor people."

Martin: What is the Royal Institute of International Affairs?

Phelps: The Royal Institute of International Affairs is the same as the American Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). The Royal Institute runs England and the British Empire, what was once the extension of the British, just as the CFR runs our country. They're sister organizations.

Martin: Where are they based?

Phelps: They're based in London.

Martin: And who is their head; do you know?

Phelps: I don't know right now. The John Birch Society wrote a lot about that, and they did expose the CFR and the Royal Institute of International Affairs. Allan Stang has written a lot about that.

Martin: What was the "Gunpowder Plot" of 1605?

Phelps: The Gunpowder Plot of 1605 was the Jesuits attempt to destroy what William Howitt—and Howitt was the great writer who wrote A Popular History Of Priestcraft, 1835—he said it was a Jesuit attempt to destroy our Great King Solomon, King James I, along with the entire Protestant Parliament. Because remember, Elizabeth I had expelled the Jesuits from her empire, and if they were ever caught they were to be drawn and quartered.

After she died, the conspiracy went on there that went on with William Cecil. They named Mary Queen of Scott's son as the King of England, rather than Elizabeth's son, because Elizabeth had a son who was the Earl of South Hampton, Wriothesley, and that was the son of Edward Devere, who we know as William Shakespeare.

There was no William Shakespeare. The man was Edward Devere. He ran the Globe Theater. He was the Lord Great Chamberlain to Queen Elizabeth, and he secretly had a son who was the Third Earl of South Hampton. He was the rightful heir to the thrown, not King James VI of Scotland.

You can find all this documented in two great works: the first is called Shakespeare Identified and the author is Looney. The explosion of that book is called This Star Of England, written by Carlton and Dorothy Ogborn, in 1952, and it's a 1200-page work, and in it they explain all the plays of Shakespeare, and that they are, in the words of Hamlet: "A brief abstract and chronicle of the times." Nothing but history.

And then there's another book, Wasn't Shakespeare Someone Else?, written by Tweeny, and in that book he evaluates the 150 sonnets. In those sonnets Edward Devere put his name: Vere or Uvre or Vere—he puts his name in acrostics throughout all the sonnets. And the last couple sonnets he puts his name in double acrostics. It's amazing, showing that he wrote the sonnets.

Martin: Why were the Jesuits so upset about the Edict of Nantes, and what was it's significance?

Phelps: Ok, the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes—it can be spelled Nantes or Nantz. Anyway, the Edict of Nantes was put forward by King Henry IV. King Henry IV was a Roman Catholic, but he converted to Protestantism and he became a Huguenot. But he was not allowed to take the throne of France until he renounced his Protestantism. So, for the sake of the kingdom, he renounced his Protestantism, and in 1610, I believe, issued forth the Edict of Nantes.

The Edict of Nantes guaranteed religious freedom to all the French. That included the Protestant, Calvinist, Huguenots, which of course included those who would have followed Admiral Coligny, who the Jesuits murdered with that she-wolf, Catherine de Medici. With the Edict of Nantes we have religious liberty in France. This cannot be. France is a cornerstone of Jesuit power, so it cannot allow this to be in place. The Council of Trent condemns it, because it's freedom of conscience.

So, after they murder Henry IV with Ravaillac, when they stabbed him through his heart, according to Sully in his memoirs, they murdered Henry IV for this, and also for attempting to reinforce the Dutch. They then, in 1685—when the Beatles are singing about the “Sun King” in their “white” album, they’re singing about Louis XIV. And that’s telling you that the Beatles are Jesuit-controlled. The Sun King, Louis XIV who reigned, who rules over France for, I believe, 60 years, he, because of his Jesuit confessor, Pere La Chaise, revokes the Edict of Nantes, and with that, no more religious freedom in France.

And then they sent their French dragons out and beheaded and killed every Huguenot they could find, driving 500,000 Frenchmen out of the country, the wealth of France, the manhood of France, all left for Holland and England. That destroyed France. From then on, France became a nothing nation.

The French Revolution could never have happened had not the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes taken place. Because now, there’s no Bible in France. And to this day, the French have never published a French version of the Textus Receptus. Number one, all French Bibles have been produced in foreign countries, when they’ve been translated from the Greek Textus Receptus into French; France has never done it. That shows the Jesuit power over France to this day.

And the French have probably been the most manly, the strongest, the most gracious, the most determined in kicking the Jesuits out of their country. They’ve kicked them out, to my knowledge, three times—and again, they come back, foment wars, kill off the rulers, etc. Drive Eugene Sue into exile; he dies of a broken heart. Drive Calvin into exile; he can never return to France. All the great Frenchmen are driven into exile.

So we have, as American patriots, we have a great camaraderie for the French. They helped us in our American Revolution. And why did they help us? Because they’ve been expelled from France. Why did Spain help us? Why did they help finance our Revolution? The Jesuits had been expelled from Spain. So payback came for Spain and France, for helping this heretic, Protestant nation come into existence, with the Napoleonic Wars, when they killed Louis XVI and drove the Bubons from the Spanish throne. That was payback.

Martin: For 30 years of war, from 1618-1648, you state that the Jesuits, through Ferdinand II, killed-off 10 million people.

That’s quite a statement.

Phelps: That statement comes from Ridpath’s History Of The World, published in 1899. And that is his encyclopedia of his history of the world. That was common knowledge in 1899. The 30 Years War was hell on Earth for Europe. Two-thirds of Germany was brought back to Rome. It was leveled, plundered, and destroyed.

Wallenstein and Tilly were the fanatical Roman Catholic generals who raped, pillaged, and plundered everything in their path. But the Lord raised up certain great generals like Gustavus Adolphus from Sweden. He was called the “Snow King” and he was the one who ultimately, he paved the way for the victory of the 30 Years War.

But without that Protestant victory of the 30 Years War, the peace of Westphalia, which the Pope was not invited to, there would have been no modern era as we know it today. According to any historian, the modern era begins in 1648. That is when the 80 Year War in Holland ended with Spain. That is when the 30 Years War ended with Ferdinand II and the Protestants of Germany, and Sweden, and so on.

1648 is the wonderful year in which the Modern Era began, when inventors could go to Germany and say: “Well, you know, maybe the Earth isn’t flat.” And maybe Leeuwenhoek could invent the microscope in Holland, and now, later on, James Clerk Maxwell, who was a Bible-believing, Protestant Presbyterian, he can write his treatise called Electricity And Magnetism, the father of what we know today about electricity and magnetism. Now, science can blossom and bloom. Now we can have literature. Now we can have great writers, like Sir Walter Scott, who writes great works like Ivanhoe and Peveril Of The Peak. Now we can have Charles Dickens, another Protestant, who writes A Tale Of Two Cities, one of London and the other of Rome. We have great literature surfacing as a result of the Modern Era.

But the Jesuits, in their determination to destroy the Reformation and the Modern Era and bring us back to the Dark Ages, seek to reverse the effects of the Modern Era, and thus, what was brought about by the 30 Years War. And to know the 30 Years War is to understand the second 30 Years War, which started in 1914 and ended in 1945.

Martin: In 1639, the Jesuits were also expelled from Japan. Apparently the Jesuits never forgot that.

Phelps: They never forgot it. For over 200 years they have been expelled. And remember the words of Lincoln: “The Jesuits never forget nor forsake.”

So, payback time was coming for Japan. The Emperor had expelled them, so that dynasty was targeted. Ultimately, the Emperor would be destroyed or his dynasty would end.

And so payback time was the mass fire-bombings by the American Air Force, financed by the Jesuits, as the Jesuits own Lockheed, Boeing, McDonald-Douglas, and Grumman, and they used their B-29 to firebomb Japan to smithereens. You can get the fact that the Jesuits control these aircraft companies from Avro Manhattan’s The Vatican Billions.

Martin: I’m trying to get a little more current here, but some of this older stuff is also so fascinating, I’m going back and forth here. Our readers are just going to have to be a little flexible in their reading. (laughter)

Phelps: Right.

Martin: In 1649 there was the Irish Massacre. What was it, and let’s discuss the hatred between the Protestants and Catholics in Ireland, as a result of the Irish Massacre.

Phelps: Ok. Of course, we believe in freedom of speech, freedom of conscience, freedom of the press. That is an outgrowth of Protestantism, because all Protestants were defending their right to believe the Bible in the face of Rome’s expectations to believe the priests and the decrees of the Popes.

Many of the Irish were born-again. They came to know the Lord. Much preaching was done up there. In fact, Patrick, of St. Patrick’s Day, was no Catholic. He was a Protestant. And so, he was a great Protestant preacher of Ireland, and many, many Irish came to know the Lord. And their point of location was primarily in the North, in Northern Ireland, which today is Ulster, Belfast, etc.

Well, the Jesuits, in fulfilling their Bloody Oath that we are making and waging relentless war on all Protestants, and all political liberals, they hatched-out the plot to kill all the Irish Protestants in Ireland with the O’Neil family. And I wonder if that O’Neil family was related to Tip O’Neil?

In 1641, the massacre began, carried out by Roman Catholic nobles and the mobs in Ireland. When they started that massacre, it continued from 1641 to 1649. The massacre ended when they killed 150,000, but they still taught the Catholic children to kill the Protestant children. So, Irish Protestants were being massacred, enmasse, for 8 years.

This is NEVER told whenever anybody is ever talking about Oliver Cromwell, when Cromwell came up with his Puritan Army and ended that, when he took Drogheda, and killed every living thing in Drogheda—men, women, children, animal, everything.

Ones say: “Oh, the beast Oliver Cromwell. Look what he did to Drogheda!” What about those beasts killing those Irish Protestants for 8 years, bashing out the brains of the little babies, smashing them up against the walls like they did, led by the priests?

This was just like they did in Croatia with the Serbs in World War II, when they gouged-out the eyes of all the Serbians, where one particular priest had 23 kilos worth of eyes.

They were doing the same thing to the Irish Protestants.

So, when Cromwell came up, and it was vengeance for the Irish Massacre, and the Irish Massacre was NOT started by the Protestants, it was started by the Jesuits according to Fox's Book Of Martyrs. And you can find the whole narration there, which was a classic that all Englishmen used to read with the King James Bible.

Martin: Do you believe that Great Britain is truly Protestant-controlled, Jewish-controlled, or Jesuit-controlled?

Phelps: Jesuit-controlled.

Martin: Why?

Phelps: Well, let's go back. To understand today we have to go back to the Napoleonic Wars.

When Napoleon came to power, he was brought to power in Corsica. When the Jesuits were suppressed, one of their main outposts during their suppression was the Isle of Corsica. The Jesuits, remember, had finished the High Rites of Freemasonry with Frederick the Great, and then used their French Freemason Napoleon to execute their vengeance.

However, the Jesuits were also protected during their suppression in England. A very wealthy landowner—and you can find this in Ridpath's History Of The World—gave his wonderful, beautiful estate Stonyhurst to the Jesuit Order. And from then on, the Jesuits received protection by King George III, and you will find that in Mitchell's The Jesuits. Mitchell is an English historian.

Ok, so the Jesuits are now protected by King George III. Well, they're going to uphold his throne. The Jesuits use the English army and navy in the resistance of Napoleon, as both sides are controlled, so that the Jesuits can control the outcome.

The end result is that, after Napoleon accomplishes everything that the Jesuits want him to do—the expulsion of the Knights of Malta, the driving of the Roman Catholics from their throne, imprisoning the Pope for 5 years, etc.—Napoleon is then ordered to abandon his army in the snows of Russia, killing all of those French and German patriots, so that there are very few patriots left in Europe to resist the tyranny coming in France with Louis XVIII, who the Jesuits will put back on the throne.

Louis XVIII was in exile, in England, in King George's own parlor, waiting for the end of the Napoleonic Wars. So, the Jesuits put Louis XVIII back on the throne. He readmitted the Jesuits, started the Inquisition, just like they did with Ferdinand VII when they restored him to power in Spain after the Napoleonic Wars.

And where do these monarchs get their protection? From King George III. King George was used by the Jesuits to restore their power in Europe, after the Napoleonic Wars, after they punished the Pope and the monarchs.

So, it's been, really, from 1795, right around there, that the Jesuits have controlled England. They've controlled the Knights, they've controlled the King. All throughout the 18th century, now, England will never go to war with France again. England will side with the French during the Crimean War. England will be on the side of the French during World Wars I & II. England and France are together, both controlled by the Jesuits—even though France is predominantly a Catholic country, and when England was, at least on it's face, a Protestant country. Why should both be working together, both having the same foreign policy. Why? Because the Jesuits control both countries.

When Rothschild sent that note, via Roost, into London, saying that Napoleon had won the Battle of Waterloo, that's when the stocks plummeted, and all the Jesuits bought all the stocks up, there in London, and got control of the Bank of England. The Jesuits then made London their commercial center of the world, and Rome their religious center, aiming that one day Jerusalem would be both.

So now the Jesuits are in control of England. After the Napoleonic Wars, we have the Congress of Vienna in 1815, and guess who's there? All the representatives of King George. England is represented at the Congress of Vienna, the settlement after the Napoleonic Wars. If England was truly Protestant, they would have never went there. Now the Jesuits are in control of England throughout the 1800s, and they use the British Empire to further the power of the Pope. England has been under Rome's control, the Pope's control, since, at the very latest, 1850. And I say since 1795.

Martin: Let's talk about Elizabeth II.

Phelps: Elizabeth II is a wicked, evil queen. She is the head of the Knights of Malta in England. She curtsies to the Lord Mayor in Old London, and she goes and visits the Jesuits of Stonyhurst and kisses their derrières. She has complete allegiance to the Jesuits of Stonyhurst, and will do anything they tell her to do, or they'll get rid of her just like they got rid of all the rest of the monarchs in Europe.

Martin: So you see her as a pawn.

Phelps: She's just a pawn, sure. She's nothing. Remember, White men rule the world. Evil, White, sodomite, homosexual men rule the world, and these are the High Jesuits, with their High Knights of Malta and High Freemasons, they rule. And these women who are involved are just pawns in their game, like the queen, the queen of Holland, just to give the appearance that these nations have a sovereign monarch, when in fact, they're just tools.

England has done some awful, terrible things, but all of the things that they have done increase and benefit the Jesuit Order. They never resisted Napoleon III. Napoleon III was a fanatical Roman Catholic Freemason, subject to the Jesuits, who was the King of France for 18 years, second Empire. England never resisted him. They fought with him in the Crimean War. And Napoleon III dedicated all of his ships to the Virgin Mary. England has been on the side of the Jesuits since 1815, no later. So, that means that the British Secret Service is totally working for Rome, all throughout the 1800s.

Martin: How did the Jesuits regain control of the Vatican in 1814?

Phelps: Remember that they were in control of Napoleon. A Jesuit by the name of Abbie Sieyes—you can find him, again, in Ridpath's History Of The World—Abbie Sieyes was a Jesuit-trained individual, and I believe he was a Jesuit. He was on the Directory, and he was also on the Consulate; he was the second counsel. Napoleon was the first; he was the second. He was the advisor and director of Napoleon. Abbie Sieyes, being the Jesuit that he was, ordered Napoleon to imprison the Pope for 5 years, and he did! So, the Pope was in prison for 5 years until 1814, when he restored the Jesuit Order. The Pope, prior to that, was killed. They brought him over the mountains of the Alps, and he died through that debacle.

The Jesuits thoroughly humiliated the papacy. They used their French soldiers to overturn St. Peter's chair, and they found, written in Arabic: "There is no other God but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet." And THAT is what is under St. Peter's chair today. That was stolen from some kalif during the Crusades.

So, they completely intimidated the Pope and showed their power. The Pope then restored them with a Papal Bull, calling upon the vengeance of the Apostles Peter and Paul, blah, blah, blah, for anyone who would ever suppress the Jesuit Order ever again. When the Jesuits were "reinstalled" in all their power, that's when they were in control of the Pope, and from then on they have been.

Any Pope who resists them gets punished or murdered. And all the Popes know it. When Pius IX wanted a liberal constitution for the Italian people in 1849, all of the Italians were delighted. Here is a liberal Pope; he's going to give us constitutional rights; we're going to have a constitution.

The Jesuits raised up a revolution with Garibaldi and their Freemasons, and drove Pius IX from his throne. He had to stay in Gaeta for about a year. When he returned to Rome, under the protection of Napoleon III's French army—actually, it was the republic's army that would later be his "army of the empire"—but they returned with a French army, protecting the Pope, he became the most fanatical absolutist, pursuant to the wishes of the Jesuits.

So, Pius IX was punished. But the Popes who don't obey, like, what was it, In God's Name, the Pope who was murdered after 33 days, when he didn't go along with the Jesuit Order, they ended his life.

[Editor's note: Eric is here referring to the very well researched and deeply insightful 1984 Bantam Books gem (that's very hard to find, for "some" reason!) by David A. Yallop, called In God's Name, which details the author's thorough investigation into the murder of Pope John Paul I the night of September 28-29, 1978 after John Paul had been digging into the massive web of corruption surrounding the Vatican Bank. For all of you who look for clues, note well the choosing of day 33 since his election for the execution of the murder.]

When you steal from the Vatican, like the Cardinal did at the PII Lodge, they killed him (Kalvi), and they hanged the other guy, beginning with the admiralty jurisdiction, at their first bridge of the sea. So they have their assassins everywhere to carry out orders. They are machines. They are the perfect "Manchurian Candidates" and they will kill popes, cardinals, presidents, kings, and kaisers, to maintain Jesuit power. They are utterly ruthless—just like they said they would be in the Protocols: "We are merciless."

Martin: As you look around the world today, who do you see opposing them?

Phelps: It's interesting. I have a friend who makes quite a few trips to Haiti. I told her about the Jesuits. She got to questioning a few people, and she found that Papa Doc had expelled the Jesuits from Haiti.

Martin: No kidding?

Phelps: That's right. Isn't it interesting, his son was also driven from power and the guy put in his place, I believe it was Aristide, is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and a complete pawn of the Pope and the Jesuit Order—for which reason, when those Haitians wanted to drive Aristide from his power, this filthy, Jesuit-controlled government in Washington put an embargo against Haiti, wrecking the country. See how the U.S. government uses its military, political, and financial power to maintain the temporal power of the Pope? And that's not only in Haiti; it's everywhere. Russia is another example.

Martin: Don't you see, coming up soon in Israel, some of these powers coming head-to-head over the rebuilding of Solomon's Temple? Don't you see some conflicts with the powers that be?

Phelps: Which powers are you talking about?

Martin: I don't know; there seem to be so many involved.

Phelps: We first have to remember the creation of the nation of Israel. World War I prepared the land for the people. World War II prepared the people for the land. World War III, the battle of Armageddon, will "prepare the people for their messiah"—with national repentance and realizing that "Jesus, the messiah, is the savior and will deliver them".

The present government of Israel was set up by the High Masonic Rothschild-controlled Jews, and Rothschild has had an alliance with the Jesuit General since 1876, with Adam Weishaupt. This is the very same Rothschild powers who betrayed the Jews into the hands of the Nazis, killing many Jews all throughout Europe, betraying their own Jewish people. These are the very same powers who run the nation of Israel today.

I read a very interesting paragraph by Mark Lane in his book Plausible Denial when he tells about a Jew in Israel who wrote about certain criminal Jews, involved with the Nazis, who are now with the Mossad, something along those lines. The man who wrote the article was gunned-down in front of his home.

So, Rome controls the Israeli government. It controls the Israeli government through the Mossad.

Who trained the Mossad? Reinhard Gehlen.

We find that fact in Loftus' work The Secret War Against The Jews in most telling, telling detail.

So what do we have? We have high-level treason and betrayal of the Jewish race; that is there in Israel today, by their own leaders, who are loyal to Rome and the Jesuit Order. And to show this, we have a great big Rockefeller edifice in Jerusalem; we have an ophthalmology center in Jerusalem run by the Knights of Malta. There's nothing but Knights of Malta, high-level Freemasonry, and the Jesuit Order running all of Israel.

So what's going to happen, I believe, with the Dome of the Rock is, that has got to be removed—somehow, someday. It's on the Temple site; it has to be removed.

If I was the Jesuit General, I would make—somehow, someday—American bombers do it. Because I want to create universal hatred for this nation of the United States, because in the United States there are more Protestants and more Jews than any country in the world, and "we've" got to kill all those people. So what better way than to create a Jihad, a Moslem fanatical attack against the United States, coupled with a Chinese invasion from the East. That's what I think is going to happen.

The Jews are not going to destroy that Temple site because, if they do, Rome will destroy their efforts of rebuilding the Temple.

Because, if Moslems control all of Jerusalem, that Temple will never be rebuilt. It has to stay in Jewish hands—because the Jews, and rightfully so, need their own homeland. They're entitled to the nation. And they haven't had their own Temple of worship. They are rightfully entitled to that.

But what they don't know is that they are being used by the Jesuits to rebuild their own Temple, that they would love to have rebuilt, for the Pope, so he can sit there and be the man of sin, the Anti-Christ of the Book of Daniel, Chapter 9. That's what I see coming for Israel.

The assassination of Rabin? He wanted to give away too much. He probably wanted to give away some of Jerusalem. The Jesuits will never allow that. So, his bodyguards just step aside and the Mossad kills him. And nothing more is ever heard.

Rome's—the Jesuit General's—international intelligence community carries out all high-level assassinations, kills anybody who's against their program. And Cromwell knew this, back in his day, and that's why he protected himself—160 of his finest "ironsides" as his bodyguards, and no one got to him.

So anybody who's going to resist the Jesuit Order has to be doing it as a matter of a "religious" conviction—being protected by God and good men who are loyal to Him. If it's simply political, with a hired Secret Service, you can forget it.

Martin: Let's go back to St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York. Why is that so significant? You talk about the American Pope. Again, that person is?

Phelps: Cardinal O'Connor.

Martin: Now, what is his role in the United States?

Phelps: Ok, remember first that this title "American Pope" was gotten from Conney's work. John Conney wrote The American Pope, I believe in 1988, so a lot of this information is from that document.

The American Pope is the Cardinal of New York. He is the most powerful Cardinal in the United States. He is what's called "the military vicar".

The military vicar is in command of all of the military orders within the United States, they being the Knights of Malta and the Knights of Columbus. He is also in command, and privately, of "the Commission" because Cardinal Spellman was an intimate of Joe Kennedy, and Joe Kennedy was an intimate of Frank Costello.

We also see that it was Cardinal Spellman who enabled "Lucky" Luciano to be released from the prison in New York, to return to Italy in 1946. And this was because of the Luciano Project that I mentioned in my book. But Lucky Luciano, his Mafia on the East Coast, worked in conjunction with the U.S. Navy, supposedly to protect the Eastern seaboard from German U-boat attack.

So, as payback? Cardinal Spellman releases Lucky Luciano—that filthy, wicked, evil, heartless spiritual bastard, who compelled young girls into prostitution, probably one of the cruelest things any man could do. He is released and sent back to Rome.

When the Kennedy assassination comes up, the Cardinal needs a favor. After all, he's released Luciano. So now the Mafia gets to participate: Jack Ruby, Carlos Marcello, Santos Trafficante, all the High Dons participate. Why? Because that Cardinal in New York controls the Commission.

And that Commission, you know what it controls? All of the trucking, all the supermarkets, it's power is beyond our wildest imagination, second only to the Knights of Malta. And, of course, they all control the Federal Reserve Bank.

The Cardinal controls the Federal Reserve Bank through the Council on Foreign Relations. The Council on Foreign Relations belongs to the Cardinal. Spellman was not a member of it, during his day, but two of the most powerful members were Knights of Malta: Henry Luce and J. Peter Grace, and also William F. Buckley, to this day. William F. Buckley is indeed one of my enemies, because I name him, and he is a powerful multi-billionaire who participated in the Kennedy assassination, just like Iacocca, another Knight. Both of those men are subject to Cardinal O'Connor and will do ANYTHING he says.

Martin: Do you know who is head of the Knights of Malta, now?

Phelps: Yes; his name is Flynn. He took over when Grace died in '93. Flynn is head of the American branch. The head of the worldwide branch, the international Knights of Malta, is Andrew Bertie; he's an Englishman. And you can find that in the National Catholic Reporter, when you go after their various articles on the Knights of Malta.

Martin: Do the Knights of Malta actually meet, actually hold meetings with the Jesuits?

Phelps: Oh, sure. Remember that Alexander Haig is a powerful Knight of Malta. His brother is a Jesuit.

So, sure they have meetings. The High Knights of Malta, who meet in their palace on Aventin Hill, in Rome, of course, meet with the Jesuit General, and so on. And Count von Hoensbroech, who was a German Noble who became a Jesuit for 14 years—he wrote a two-volume work called Fourteen Years A Jesuit. His father was a Knight of Malta. Yes, the Jesuits work in conjunction and have regular meetings with the Knights of Malta.

The Knights control the money. The Knights control the banks. They control the Bank of Canada, Federal Reserve Bank, Bank of England; they control the banking. They were the ones who were behind the sinking of the Titanic, with the creation of the White Star Line, J.P. Morgan and others.

Martin: Alan Greenspan, then, would be?

Phelps: Alan Greenspan is a Jew, probably a Freemason, because he is the leader of the Temple called the "Federal Reserve Bank" and they always put Jews in the forefront—so that they can blame all of what they do on the Jewish race in this country, to create an anti-Semitism everywhere, just like Charles Coughlin, the radio Jesuit priest of the '30s did.

Greenspan, Bloomenthal, Warburg, and all those Jews need to be publicly rebuked, because they are creating the mass genocide of the Jewish race in the United States. The Jews are being blamed right now for the foreign policy in Bosnia. Madeline Albright—she's a Jew—they're blaming her for what's going on in Serbia. I've got a good Serbian friend who blames her. I said she's just a pawn of the Jesuit CFR. Don't blame the Jewish people. It's these Jewish "pawns" who are loyal to the Pope and the Jesuits who are doing this.

The Zionists—the Jesuits are the Great Zionists. They control all of the historical High Zionists—Theodor Herzl, David Ben-Gurion, Golda Meir. Zionism is a Masonic term, coined by the Jesuits. They are the rulers; they are the Protocols; they are the Elders of Zion. So the Zionists are, indeed, evil and wicked; but they are controlled by Rome. The Jews are not all Zionists.

I remember when I went to Jerusalem and Israel in 1976, and a lady said to this particular man that I had met: "You're more of a Zionist than we are!" And I thought: "What does that mean? I don't understand that."

I only later understood why Yasser Arafat says he doesn't hate the Jews; he can't stand the Zionists. And I'm thinking: "What's the difference?" I, later, learned that there is a GREAT difference between those Zionists and the other Jews. The Orthodox Jews can't stand the Zionists.

So what's the difference? The Zionists are socialist communists, controlled by Rome. They are atheists, just like the Jesuits, although they're being used to rebuild the nation of Israel. They are the enemies of the Jewish people, per se.

There's no conflict going on in the Middle East. There's no conflict going on with the Arab nations. All of the Arab nations are under the command of Masonic kings or iotollas. Saddam Hussein is no enemy of George Bush; they're both brothers, brothers of the lodge. That whole thing was set up to kill off a whole bunch of Arabs for the protection of the Zionist state of Israel.

Martin: Well, Bush and Saddam were business partners. We've covered that in recent past issues of our newspaper.

Phelps: Sure. That's why they never killed Saddam. They could have easily killed him. The CIA can kill anybody they want to. They could have easily killed Saddam and got out. They could use their own Arab agents in there. Saddam was a very important tool.

Martin: Still is.

Phelps: Still is, sure. They keep the Arab peoples and nations at bay by controlling them through their leaders. Or, when they start to get out of control in their Moslem fanaticism, they then foment a war and kill off a whole bunch of them. Make sense?

Martin: There was a statement you made in your book about the Jesuits controlling the Nation of Islam, and that was almost a surprising statement to read. I would think that someone like Louis Farrakhan would be pretty adamant.

Phelps: Yeah, he would hate me for that one. Well, let's think a little bit here:

Chicago is ruled by the Archbishop of Chicago, a Cardinal. It was Cody; I don't know who it is now. Do you think anything goes down in Chicago without the Cardinal's approval?

Where was the Nation of Islam founded? Chicago.

Where is Louis Farrakhan's—that murderer's—mansion? Chicago. He lives like a king.

What does he hand out? He hands out the Protocols Of The Learned Elders Of Zion to all of deluded Black Nation of Islam people, so that they can hate the Jews, just like the Klu Klux Klan.

That's right. Those three little tidbits, right there, prove that the Nation of Islam is totally under Jesuit control. They are going to be used to foment anarchy and agitation, because they have an army called "the fruit of Islam", and they have millions of rounds stored in all the major cities—guns stored everywhere, so that they can start the race war. And when that happens, you see, then the brothers in Washington can implement Martial Law, suspend the Constitution, and now the Jesuits have what they want.

So, they use these Blacks in the North, who hate the White people, for their own destruction, for the destruction of the Black people themselves. And the Nation of Islam is part of that.

When I was in the Air Force, and in jail for about 10-15 days, about 10 years ago, the Nation of Islam was paramount, or tried to be paramount, there. All the Blacks in jail become Moslems. It's a "hate the White man" religion. Every White man is a White, blue-eyed Devil. And they're playing—the Zodiac killer, back in California many years ago, all Moslems. So it's a "hate the White man" religion, designed to foment agitation and unrest.

Martin Lucifer King was intimately involved with them. The only problem is, Malcolm X got on to it. He realized he was being used and he separated from it. Then he ceased to be an agitator.

Martin: Malcolm X was way ahead of his time.

Phelps: Yeah. Malcolm X was a good guy.

Martin: Yes, he was.

Phelps: Malcolm X, even though he was used by the Jesuits, because he hated the King James Bible, he was a great agitator. When he went to Mecca, he changed.

Martin: Yes, he did.

Phelps: And when he came back, he stopped being an agitator. He stopped hating the White man. He started to set up the African-American Movement. And as a result, he was assassinated by the high leaders of the FBI and the Nation of Islam.

And what do they both have in common? High-level Shriner Freemasonry.

And so, we have the Masons in control of the Nation of Islam and the Klu Klux Klan—one agitating Blacks, and the other agitating Whites, to the glory of the Jesuit Order. The other Civil Rights Movement had the Jesuits behind that—with LaFarge. Jesuit LeFarge was a great mover and shaker of the Civil Rights Movements. And that agitation resulted in amalgamation, race-mixing, the destruction of a White race and a Black race, producing a nation of hybrids that cannot maintain free government.

That is what they proposed to do in the first Reconstruction, but it failed; so they succeeded in the second Reconstruction in the '60s. The Jesuits are masters of the races. They know their strengths and their weaknesses.

The only race who successfully resisted the Jesuit Order is the White, Anglo-Celtic, Saxon race, with a Bible in one hand and a gun in the other. And so they've got to take the Bible away, they've got to take the gun away, and they've got to destroy that race. And that's what they are essentially doing here. I know that's a racist statement, but I'm sorry, it's just the way it is. That's history, and that's what they're doing.

Martin: The relationship between Communism and Freemasonry. Where do the Jesuits fit into Communism and Freemasonry?

Phelps: Let's, first of all, look at the relationship of Jesuitism to Communism. The Jesuits perfected the tenets of Communism on their reductions in Paraguay, for 150 years, from 1600-1750.

Martin: What is a reduction?

Phelps: A reduction is a commune. In Israel they would call it a kibbutz. In Joseph Stalin's Russia they would call it a commune. In New York they call it a village. In France, Paris, they called it a commune. It's communal living where everybody is equal in their finances, in the labors; you have no great, no small, no rich, no poor—everybody is small, and everybody is poor, and everybody is controlled by a dictator. That's the essence of Communism.

The Jesuits, on the reductions in Paraguay, which were the communes, had a central bank, and it was "each according to their ability and each according to their need". And so, the Guarani Indians that were the subjects—and there were some 200,000 of these South American Indian natives who were slaves of the Jesuits, putting their goods into world commerce and trade. They were living under the tenets of Communism, perfected by the Jesuits, as outlined in Plato's Republic and Sir Thomas Moore's Utopia. The Jesuits perfected it on their reductions.

With that, they then introduced Communism in 1848 through Karl Marx. They tutored him in the British Museum, according to Alberto Rivera, an ex-Jesuit.

So Marx, the Jewish Freemason, was to be the one to put forward this Communism for the world, so that Communism would look like a Jewish brain-child, so that Communism could be blamed on the Jews. Well, what's NOT told is that the Jews involved in the implementing of Communism were Masonic Jews. Karl Marx was a 33rd-degree Freemason, a worshipper of Lucifer, whose father wanted nothing to do with him, because his father was a Baptist preacher.

Jewish Freemasonry, controlled by the Jesuits, implemented Communism in Russia. Lenin, the half-Jew, was a Freemason. That civil war that took place from 1917-1922, for 5 years, was given the appearance that it was primarily Yiddish. I mean, they're on the streets of Russia talking Yiddish; they had Yiddish signs; and it was wanted to give the impression to the world that this revolution was of Jewish origin.

For 10 years after the revolution, the Jews fared very well, but in 1922, Joseph Stalin, that great Jew-hater, who was educated by Jesuits in Georgia—which was a country south of Russia and, therefore, the Emperor's banning of the Jesuits from Russia, his Ukase, did not reach to Georgia. So the Jesuits stayed in Georgia, trained Joseph Stalin, brought him in after the Revolution, and made him Secretary of the Communist Party in 1922, until he died in 1953.

The Jesuits used Freemasonry and, of course, Stalin was also a brother Freemason. They used Freemasonry to implement Communism in Russia, and from there, China, and from there, throughout the world.

When Germany had their revolution after World War I, their Communist revolution—remember, they requested an armistice—they had never been beaten on the field of battle.

The Germans were foisted into that war; they never started World War I. It was started by France and Russia and England, for the purpose of destroying Germany, because Germany had expelled the Jesuits. During that war, the Germans requested an armistice to stop this Communist revolution in Germany.

And who lead the revolution? The German Freemasons.

According to the Kaiser, in his memoirs, it was German Freemasonry that got him off his throne and deposed him. He had to go into exile in Holland. He wrote his memoirs in 1935.

So the relationship between Jesuitism, Communism and Freemasonry we see evolving and expanding from the 1600s to the ultimate achievement in the Bolshevik Revolution.

In my book, I parallel the French Revolution and the Bolshevik Revolution, and they are identical. It was French Freemasonry that caused the French Revolution and the Jacobins, and it was the Freemasons in Russia, with Bolsheviks, who caused the Russian Revolution, with their Bolsheviks, leading and ending in Joseph Stalin. In France, it ended with Napoleon; in Russia, it ended with Stalin. And so, that's the relationship there.

Martin: Why was Eugene Sue so significant?

Phelps: Eugene Sue wrote his masterpiece The Wandering Jew, and in that masterpiece he weaves a fantastic story from India to England to France, of the power of the Jesuit Order and their attempt to destroy the Rennepont family, a French Huguenot Protestant family, and acquire a fortune that's due to be inherited by the members of that family on a certain day, at a certain time, in a certain year.

Well, that fortune is held, in trust, by a Jew, for which reason the book is named The Wandering Jew. It tells of the power of the Jesuit Order in that book, and how the Jesuits mercilessly killed all these members of the Rennepont family so they could not inherit their fortune.

The only one, I believe, they didn't kill was a priest, whose name was Gabriel, who was a decent and a righteous Catholic priest who repudiated the Jesuit Order. He ordered the Jew to burn all the securities, that totaled something like $212 million, that would have rightfully been this French family's.

So, the Jesuits didn't get it, nor did the French family get it. It's written with such drama and feeling that you cannot put this book down. It was translated into many different languages. As a result, the French, and other nations, had their French Revolution, the second French Revolution of 1848. But because it was not lead by Godly men, it benefited the Jesuits.

Whenever you have a revolution led by unGodly men, it's just like a man who's on a horse, trying to be pushed off the horse, and as he's pushed off, another dictator takes his place. That's exactly what happened in France, and Italy, and the nations who were involved in that second French Revolution.

But Eugene Sue had motivated the people of France to expel the Jesuits, and they were finally expelled in 1880 by a French Freemason, in the 3rd Republic, Leon Gambetta. So, they're all Freemasons who resist them, but they pay with their lives, like Garfield, like Gambetta, Roosevelt, Franklin D. Roosevelt. Roosevelt really didn't resist them; he just was killed by them.

Martin: Again, I'm jumping around.

Phelps: Ok.

Martin: What was Operation Mongoose?

Phelps: Operation Mongoose was purely "black ops" in the words of Fletcher Prouty. Of course, Fletcher Prouty I consider the authority on what Operation Mongoose was. Operation Mongoose was to "give the appearance" of resistance to Castro's government by attacking Cuba but, in effect, solidified his reign there. That's what it ultimately produced. And that's what the Knights and the CIA ultimately wanted. Ok?

The agreement that Kennedy made over the Cuban missile crisis in 1962—first of all, there was no missile crisis. There's no such thing as nuclear war. There's no such thing as a nuclear attack. That's all a hoax. It's just as much a hoax as going and landing on the Moon. It's a hoax.

Nuclear war, that fear, was the basis for the Cuban missile crisis. And out of that hoax, Kennedy strikes a secret deal with Khrushchev that, if you keep the missiles out of Cuba, we won't bother Castro anymore. Well, that's what the Jesuits wanted anyway. They wanted to solidify Castro in power.

So that whole theatrical performance solidified Castro's power in Cuba. And the question is: Why would the Jesuits create this fanatical power in Cuba, run down the Cuban people, put them in poverty, imprison them at random, create a living hell down there, drive out the Mafia—the Mafia could no longer have their casinos in Havana?

Why would the Mafia give up their casinos? For the international drug trade to be developing out of Vietnam.

Therefore, if the Mafia is leaving, and we don't have a bunch of American tourists going down to Cuba anymore, and Cuba is really a secret country—the Bible is not allowed there, missionaries are not allowed in, obviously under Jesuit control, Castro was trained by Jesuits—what's the purpose of Cuba under Castro?

It's purpose is as a landing base for foreign invasion. They have hundreds of vehicles, underground, in underground caves there, ready for a massive invasion to the East Coast, primarily the South. Because the last of the Protestants in this country are in the South.

Cuba will always be under a dictator and will never go back to freedom, because it is to be a landing base. And you know what? It could very well be a landing base for a Jihad that the Moslems will foment against us, because they'll come right across from Africa to Cuba, get reinforced, and then go landing into Florida, with all their 5th-Column Cubans in Florida and Miami right now. Sounds wild, but—

Martin: That's a sobering thought.

Phelps: Yes, it is. Sounds wild, but I'm telling you, all the geography is in place. However, they can't pull this all off until they get your guns. So that's why they're constantly creating these gun issues—people shooting people, the Columbine High School bit—to justify the confiscation of all the guns. And when that happens, then they can do what they want to do.

Martin: There are a lot of strong Americans out there.

Phelps: The only problem is this: they're not united and they can't be lead. Americans are leaderless because they do not follow. They all think their opinions are equal, and they're not. I would follow General Patton anywhere. I wouldn't question an order of his. We don't have men like that today, for the most part, because we don't have leaders like that today.

Martin: I found your account of Patton's assassination fascinating, also your speaking of the Jesuits' poisoning of him.

Phelps: A member of the OSS came out in the SPOTLIGHT [newspaper] and said that. His name was Zapata, that agent. He said he was given a contract on Patton for $10,000. He didn't kill him, but he knows the guy who did. So, Patton was murdered, and General Vlasov was murdered, and both of them hated the Jesuits' "Grand Inquisitor", Joseph Stalin. They would have united together to eradicate Russia of that dictator, but the Jesuits would not have it because Russia is theirs. They must control the Orthodox Church to bring it back to Rome. That's why they got rid of the Romanoffs.

Martin: Patton's take-out was ordered by "Wild" Bill Donovan? Did I read that?

Phelps: That's right. Wild Bill Donovan was the head of the OSS at the time. And if you get Anthony K. Brown's The Last Hero, it's on Wild Bill Donovan. He is in the Vatican at the end of his life, in a picture, walking in the Vatican to receive one of the highest medals from the Pope, for a "lifetime" of intelligence service to the Vatican. That is in The Last Hero and the picture is mesmerizing. I want to put it in my book.

The OSS is nothing but an arm of the CIA and the Vatican, and that's why they took out Kenedy. They kill all the generals who don't "play ball".

Martin: Let's talk about the CIA and the FBI some more. What can you tell me about their relationship to Count von Kolvenbach?

Phelps: Well, based upon the past, if the CIA and the FBI carried out the assassination under Spellman, and Janseens was the Jesuit General then, the same power structure is in place. So, von Kolvenbach, through his Knights of Malta and Jesuits, control the FBI and CIA. And his liason of control is now Cardinal O'Connor in New York.

Martin: Some time ago, with Gunther Russbacher and others, there was talk about a split in the CIA, of different factions. Some even say there is a third faction in the CIA that has split off. What's your opinion about factional divisions within the CIA?

Phelps: I think it's true. I know that Angelton was the mole. Angelton was the one who betrayed all those CIA agents in Russia, in which the vast majority of them were killed, when he gave all that information to that KGB kingpin on a farm in New York, in a van, stuffed with all the highest, top secret CIA documents. Ok?

Colby comes along as the Director of the CIA—I know his brother, he lives nearby me—Colby comes along as the Director of the CIA and what does he do? He fires Angelton. Bad news for Colby.

Martin: Yeah, it was.

Phelps: They filled him up with lead. Eric Timm, he was also against Angleton; he was history. That's all told in Anthony K. Brown's work Treason In The Blood. There's a whole little chapter on Eric Timm and some of the other guys in the CIA who were against Angleton. They all died. So there's a faction in the CIA that knows that something is rotten in Denmark, and they don't quite know what it is. Hopefully, they'll read my book and see that the CIA is just an arm of the Jesuit Order and Knights of Malta, carrying out the Council of Trent and the Pope's temple power, and will REVOLT, and start to tell the truth themselves.

It's the same way in the FBI. My father lectured at the FBI Academy. He wanted to be in the FBI, but his parents were Communists, so he was not let in by J. Edgar Hoover. But the FBI has low-level agents who wonder just what's going on. A lot of them didn't approve of what happened in Waco.

They need to come out and tell the truth. This whole "house of cards"—and that's what it is, this is not an undefeatable, invincible monster—it's a house of cards; it plays on FEAR. If men would tell the truth, and come out and tell what they know, and not be afraid, this whole house of cards would crumble. That's what they need to do.

Martin: Who is Avery Dulles?

Phelps: Avery Dulles is the son of John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State, I believe, under Eisenhower. Avery Dulles is a Jesuit, and he was the nephew of the head of the CIA during the Kennedy assassination, who was Allan Dulles. And Allan Dulles was a Freemason, also called "the gentleman spy" in the book The Gentleman Spy.

Martin: What was Angelton's role in the Kennedy assassination?

Phelps: Angelton was the one who was to "investigate" it on the part of the CIA. (laughter)

Angelton also, I believe, was liaison to the Warren Commission—no, that was Dulles. But Angelton and Dulles were working together on that, because Angelton was the Chief of Counter-Intelligence and he manned the Vatican Desk, and he manned the Israeli Desk.

See how they're maintaining the Zionists in power, with the Israeli Desk? So, they saved Israel's hide in the '73 war, because Kissinger almost lost it for them. Alexander Haig gave them, the Israelis, those anti-tank missiles, and got them in their hands before the Egyptians got into Israel and disabled them. That was Alexander Haig, Knight of Malta, for which reason he was also the Supreme Allied Commander for NATO, promoted over 260 of his peers.

Martin: Do you know anything about Haig's statement "I'm in charge now!" Do you remember that?

Phelps: Yeah, I do. I don't know all of the implications, but I'm sure it fits in with him being, in fact, in charge in the Nixon White House.

Martin: Ok, I want to go back to the Kennedy assassination, and I'm going to just mention some names: Clay Shaw, Jim Garrison, J. Peter Grace, Henry Luce, E. Howard Hunt, John McCone. Why are they so important to this story?

Phelps: Give me one and we'll start with one.

Martin: Let's start with Clay Shaw.

Phelps: Clay Shaw was a Knight of Malta.

He was the head of the international trade mart in New Orleans. Roman Catholic, homosexual, multi-millionaire, lived lavishly, etc. Clay Shaw was the personal friend of David Ferry. David Ferry was a CIA agent, and was also a pilot for Carlos Marchello—the CIA and the Mafia together. Clay Shaw also was a friend of Lee Oswald, and Garrison proves it.

Here we have Clay Shaw, who was in the CIA. It was admitted by Richard Helms that Clay Shaw was a "contract agent" for the CIA, and the highest security involved in the Kennedy assassination, because he gets an attorney for Dean Andrews who's subpoenaed by Garrison. So, if Clay Shaw is involved, he's a Knight of Malta, he's high CIA, and he can't go down.

That's why the court was packed. The judge was biased against Garrison. The defense of Shaw was unlike any before. There was a guy behind, whispering to the defense attorney. That's not allowed in a courtroom defense.

Shaw HAD to be found innocent, because if he was found guilty, now the CIA is going down. Now we're going to have a revolution. So, Clay Shaw had to be found not guilty.

But it wasn't many years after that, he died under suspicious conditions and never had an autopsy. He died of lung cancer. But he's part of the brotherhood, and the Jesuits are very powerful in New Orleans.

Martin: John McCone.

Phelps: John McCone was a very powerful industrialist, and one who was part of the military-industrial complex, before he became the head of the CIA. He later went on to become part of, I believe, ITT.

John McCone was another Knight of Malta, head of the CIA, and participated in the Kennedy assassination by virtue of him being its head. And he's Knight of Malta.

Angelton is a Knight of Malta. Henry Luce is a Knight of Malta. William F. Buckley is a Knight of Malta. And William F. Buckley then ran the National Review—and what does he do? He blames Oswald as the lone assassin.

Where was the picture concocted, for Oswald, as though his head is put on this body that's not his? It was concocted, probably, I believe, in the Time-Life Building, when they did that, because Time-Life has a whole bunch of CIA agents in it. And, remember, Time-Life is right across the street from St. Patrick's Cathedral, where Cardinal Spellman was ruling from.

So, Spellman was overseeing the whole thing, with Henry Luce. And, if you get Luce And His Empire, there is a picture in there of Cardinal Spellman, Luce, Grace, Clare Boothe Luce, and Dean Rusk, on the 1963, 4-year anniversary of Time magazine in the Waldorf Astoria, only months before the Kennedy assassination. And there's Dean Rusk, the architect of the Vietnam War, according to the words of his own son.

Ok, who's the other one? Howard Hunt. Howard Hunt is a CIA agent, of course.

He said he was never in Dallas the day of the assassination, but Mark Lane proved that he was. Thank God for Mark Lane. Here's another Jew getting in the way of the Vatican. Just like Daniel Ellsberg—here's another Jew getting in the way of the Vatican's Vietnam War.

You see Jews who are getting in the way of the Vatican, and the Jesuits are furious about it. So here's Mark Lane; he's openly defeated William F. Buckley in court before; now he proves that Howard Hunt is a CIA agent, in Dallas the day of the assassination.

The jury came forward with that verdict, and who is Howard Hunt? Howard Hunt is a personal friend of Henry Luce, a correspondent for Time-Life. He's a personal friend of William F. Buckley. He goes to one of Buckley's parties at the New York Yacht Club. He knows them both. He knows two of the High Knights.

And guess what? Guess what Howard Hunt is called? He's called "Knight". (laughter)

I wonder what he was—Knight of Columbus, or whatever. But he's involved with the brotherhood.

So he was there on the day of the assassination, intimate with Luce and Buckley. Just as the chart says on my web page. And by the way, your readers need to look at my vaticanassassins.org web page.

Martin: I'm going to mention a few more names.

Phelps: Oh, J. Peter Grace we forgot. J. Peter Grace was the head of the Knights of Malta in 1963. He is the head of W. R. Grace, and he's one of the largest shipping tycoons in the world, in control of all the shipping in South America. Grace is a powerful man, or was a powerful man.

Martin: Has anyone filled his shoes?

Phelps: Yes, Flynn is head of the Knights of Malta now, down in Florida where there new office is. They moved from New York to Florida, I think Boca Raton. They have 11 Knights of Malta on the W. R. Grace board.

And, of course, guess who owns Taco Bell? W. R. Grace.

So now we see W. R. Grace involved in the poisoning of America with fast-food chains, so everybody gets heart disease, clogged arteries, so they can go to bypass surgery and further enrich the medical profession, while carrying out their medical inquisition. Isn't that clear? So not only are they going to kill all of the American people, but they're going to make billions doing it.

Martin: I'm sure they're laughing all the way to the bank.

Phelps: They sure are. And where Grace did his banking, W. R. Grace, they did their banking at Chemical Bank in New York. Guess who runs Chemical Bank? Knights of Malta.

Martin: Jim Garrison was a very brave guy.

Phelps: Yes, he was. He lost his marriage. He lost his children. He suffered greatly through this, doing what he did.

Martin: Ok, I want to talk about the movie JFK. You mention the Jesuits, in control of Time-Warner, produced Oliver Stone's movie JFK. What was the reason for this? To just further cement, subliminally in the minds of the American people, their absolute power?

Phelps: I think that might be part of it. But, I think it's a test. It's a test: tell the American people the truth to see what they will do about it. And they did nothing.

And that was the end of Garrison, or Kevin Costner's speech, in the courtroom, when he said "It's up to you." And he looks directly into the camera. So, he's looking at us.

That was a call to do something about it. It's a test. What will we do? And you know what was done? Nothing. The men in power, the men in the know, the men who could have said something, did nothing. So that was the purpose of the movie.

Meanwhile, they interweave all these Jesuit subliminals all throughout the movie: "Black is white, white is black"—when Garrison is at the restaurant, talking to his people—that's Ignatius Loyola. David Ferry shows pictures of his Catholic uniform there, and Satan pictures in his apartment, all very much Jesuitism.

There were a couple of other things I noticed that I can't quite remember. Oh, they had a subliminal "study the past". It goes on there, it's on a building or something, "study the past". And they said: "It's like Caesar; he's not in the loop." Well, Caesar was murdered by those close to him. And the ones who murdered Caesar were the priests of Rome. There's all kinds of subliminals in that movie which point to the power of the Jesuit Order, all over. The assassination—right after they take his body out of Parkland Hospital, they've got the cross on it, the crucifix. That is a very unique, Jesuit crucifix.

When I was at a Jesuit retreat in Redding one day, I just wanted to walk through the place. I wanted to see where these sinners rule from, so I thought I would walk through the place and check out the rooms. It just so happened that the Jesuits were on the second floor, by themselves. So I went to the first floor and the third floor, and looked into the rooms. They were little, tiny rooms, and on every bed is a crucifix with a crucified person on it. It's not the Jesus Christ of the Bible; it's their Jesus Christ. And that's the same exact crucifix that was put on the coffin, in the movie, when they're shipping the coffin out.

And get a load of this: the guy who came to give Kennedy the Last Rites, Oscar Hubert, his superior was the Bishop of Dallas, by the name of Thomas Gorman. Bishop Thomas Gorman was a Knight of Malta, answerable directly to Cardinal Spellman.

Martin: Let's talk about Cardinal Spellman. Who was he? Why was he so important? You say, in the book, he really was the man behind it.

Phelps: Right.

Martin: Why do you say that?

Phelps: Cardinal Spellman was, first, very much involved in politics all of his life. Remember, he was trained by the Jesuits at Fordham. He was trained by Jesuits at the American College in Rome. When he came back here, he was taken care of by Nicholas Brady and his wife, multi-billionaires in control of Union Carbide, and various banks, multi-multi-billionaires.

Spellman was part of getting FDR into office, although I believe Cardinal Hayes was the Cardinal. Guess who FDR names as his international agent, during World War II? Francis Spellman. Francis Spellman was throughout the war-front during World War II, going to and from the Vatican, the Allied Army, etc. And, with that, he built a huge network of contacts. He, also, of course, had contacts with the mob.

So, by the time of the Kennedy assassination, we have Cardinal Spellman here, who helped the Nazis get into the United States, with the FBI.

I met one of those Nazis about 6 months ago. I call him Pete. He showed me his Nazi SS overcoat, which is a beautiful overcoat—I'd love to have it. And it was the FBI who brought all of these High Nazis in and resettled them, and gave them money to settle.

Who did that? Francis Spellman, by helping those criminals escape the theater of Europe so that they could not be prosecuted. It's called the "Vatican Ratline" that Loftus writes about in his Unholy Trinity.

So, Spellman is involved in getting the SS out, helping the Ustashis. Spellman is involved in this whole second 30 Years War of the Vatican in Europe, outlined by Edmond Paris in his Vatican Against Europe.

And so, he is in a perfect place to carry out the assassination. He has contacts with the Knights of Malta in England, with the Knights he controls in America; he has his Jesuit contacts who trained him at Fordham and Rome; he was a personal friend of Pius XII during the war.

He was a personal friend of the secret cold-warrior, Montini, Pius VI. So he is the perfect man, with all of the connections, to carry it out. He has contacts with the CIA, the Knights from the CIA, the Knights from the FBI, in the person of Carthe DeLouth, who still lives. He had contacts with high-level Freemasonry, with people like J. Edgar Hoover and their raving against Communism, Communism, Communism—international, Godless, Jew Communism.

He and Hoover are bosom, probably bed, partners. And so, Spellman is in a place to be in control of the CIA, the FBI, the Mafia, and through Freemasonry, the Dallas Police Department—like they control every major city's P.D. And so he carries it out.

And then he's also in control of the press, in control of Time and Life, with Henry Luce, so the press never gets it. He's in control of CBS, with a man named Frank Shakespeare, who was the head of CBS at the time.

So you think Walter Cronkite is going to tell us the truth? No way. He's in control of CBS, NBC, ABC. They have stocks in it, for heaven's sake. So, there's no way the story's getting out. And he's in control of the CIA to hit and kill anybody who wants to come out and tell the truth, which is why there's over a hundred dead witnesses over the last 30 years.

That's why they took out Fensterwald, in 1992, outlined in the book by that CIA agent First Hand Knowledge, by Morrow. He was a CIA agent. He was in on the Kennedy assassination. He completely outlines it in his book, and he tells of that relationship of the CIA to killing Fensterwald. He dedicates his book to Fensterwald.

So, how's it getting out? This is only getting out by fearless preachers, who preach the Word of God, and aren't afraid of telling the truth politically, trusting God that He will move and do His part, now that we've done our part.

Martin: FBI Director Hoover, Earl Warren, Gerald Ford, Johnson—Jesuit tools?

Phelps: Jesuit tools. All 33rd-Degree Freemasons. And remember, the Council of the 33rd Degree is located in Washington. They control all of the Shriners in this country. Washington is controlled by the Jesuits from Georgetown.

The capital of the United States is at Georgetown University, not the White House.

And if you go into the president's office at Georgetown, you will see a picture of Bill Clinton, kneeling at the grave of Timothy Healy [past president of Georgetown], while the present president, Donovan, who is on the Walt Disney Board, is standing behind him.

I wanted that picture; I wanted a copy of that picture. Those people threw me out of that office. They would not let me have a copy of it. I sent another person, a lady, up there. They would not give it to her. I want that picture, for my book, of Bill Clinton kneeling at the grave of these Jesuits. Can't get it. But if you go in the president's office, it's there.

Georgetown is the capital. They control all Freemasonry. In fact, if you go to Maryland, they've got the great big lodge across from a great big Jesuit institution, in Baltimore—a great huge Shriner Lodge is across the street from a Jesuit University. And they're enemies?

Martin: I want to talk about Bill Clinton in a minute, but before we get to him, who is Cartha DeLoach?

Phelps: Cartha DeLoach—his sir name was Deke. He was the 3rd-in-command of the FBI at the time of the Kennedy assassination. Cartha DeLoach was the real head of the FBI. Hoover was a wimp. His queer buddy, Tolson, who was nothing, was second in command.

So Hoover and Tolson were just figure-heads. The real head of the FBI was Cartha DeLoach, the Knight of Malta, Roman Catholic, subject to Cardinal Spellman.

Cartha DeLoach fabricated evidence, covered-up evidence in the FBI, in the Kennedy assassination. That was proven by Jim Garrison. Cartha DeLoach went on to retire. He went on to work for a huge industry corporation called PepsiCo, which the Knights of Malta control, and which have ranches in Communist China, which they set up. And he still lives.

Cartha DeLoach wrote a book called Hoover's FBI. You can get it at the bookstores. In that book he tells about the Secret Service, the FBI, and the Jesuits.

Martin: Why do you refer to the Kennedy assassination as the "Achilles' Heel" of the Jesuits?

Phelps: Because, if it's ever known that the Jesuits killed our first Roman Catholic President, if the Roman Catholics of Northeastern America ever find that out, and ever believe it, the Jesuits are finished here.

This country is the keystone to implementing the temporal power of the Pope around the world. If this country would expel the Jesuits, and we get back our national sovereignty, and we started to be self-governing once again, we would have our liberty, and the Jesuits would be out, and we would begin to experience REAL financial prosperity, and REAL living.

So, if that is known that the Jesuits are the ones behind it, that Rome carried this out, the Catholics of the Northeast would have a revolution. We would have another revolution because American Roman Catholics are not like Catholics in any other country: they think. They have their own opinion. They believe in freedom of conscience. They believe they have the right to express themselves.

Catholics in Poland don't believe that. Catholics in Italy wouldn't dare believe that. But the Catholics here do. They have a lot of Protestant principles. They don't really comprehend this whole idea of universal, world-wide temporal power of the Pope. They think it's just a religion.

But, if those Catholics in New York, if those two million Roman Catholics knew that Spellman was behind it, and O'Connor has covered it up, we'd have a revolution!

Because it's the Roman Catholics, unfortunately, who only do anything about things. The Protestants don't do anything. They're all a bunch of wimps, a bunch of cowards. They don't do anything.

It's the Roman Catholics who apparently have built our major cities. They built our skyscrapers. They're the great steel workers. They're the ones, apparently, with the guts enough to bring about a change. The only problem is, they're unGodly because they don't know the Lord. They don't read the Bible. They don't know Christ. They're not born-again. If they would get born-again, and come to know Christ, with their determination and their resistance to tyranny, we'd have another Reformation. And a lot of people's heads would be going on trial, and to the block, for treason.

Martin: I'm going to go back, now. How did the Protocols Of The Learned Elders Of Zion, authored, according to you, by the Jesuits, further the Jesuit Agenda?

Phelps: Ok. To answer that, we probably ought to look at the different Protocols. Now, to my mind, I believe there's 20 or 30 Protocols; I can't quite remember. But the Protocols further the agenda of the Jesuit Order in that Russia would be taken and, in the fall of Russia, in the Bolshevik Revolution, two major things would happen: The Romanoff dynasty would be removed. Now, of course, the Czar was not killed at Ekaterinburg; we know that from the book The File On The Czar. We know that his daughter died in the state of Virginia [not very long ago]. We know his son, Alexi, became a member of the KGB, later came to New York, and he put out what was called The White Paper. The Royal Family was not killed, because they were Knights of Malta.

So, the Knights of Malta took the Royal Family out, faked their death, and then after they had taken the Romanoffs out, the Orthodox Church no longer had a protector, because Church and State are one in Russia.

Now the Jesuits were free, with their Bolsheviks, to kill-off the Orthodox leadership that was anti-Rome. That's why they killed 5,000 priests and nuns, during the revolution, of the Orthodox Church. They just beheaded all the anti-Catholic, anti-Pope leadership of the Orthodox Church.

They got rid of the Romanoffs, and then the next thing they did, they began to purge Russia of its Protestants, in general. They purged it of its Lutherans; they burned down the Lutheran Church; imprisoned the Baptists; sent them off to Siberia. They even destroyed two Jewish communities during the '20s, which we're not told.

The Jews fared well for 10 years, until the purges of Stalin in the '30s. But the Jesuits accomplished the killing-off, the getting rid of the Romanoff dynasty and their protectorate of the Orthodox Church, the beheading of the Orthodox Church, so they could bring Orthodox Moscow back to Rome. And remember, Moscow is considered the "Third Rome". The first is Rome; the second is Constantinople; the third is Moscow. And you can find this, you can find the Jesuit alliance with the Bolsheviks in a book called Descent Into Darkness by a priest named Zatko, who taught at Notre Dame University in the '60s.

And so the Jesuits were given formal re-entry into Russia in 1922, after the Bolshevik Revolution and Civil War, and from then on—the Russian College was erected in Rome in 1929, so they could prepare Russian Jesuits to rule Russia. And that's what they've done, and they've ruled through the KGB, just like they rule this country through the CIA and the FBI.

The Protocols outline this. Remember, the Protocols were discovered in Russia, and translated by an Englishman, Marsden. But what it also did—because then they set-up the huge gulag system, the huge concentration camp system, that gave the Jesuits practice to do this in Europe.

But their great accomplishment was, in the process of pulling all of this off, they blamed it on the Jews, and in so doing, justified in the eyes of the European people the annihilation of the Jewish race in Europe—because it's the Jews who did this in Russia! The Jews killed all the Christians in Russia! The Jews sent them off to Siberia! After all, wasn't Trotsky a Jew? Wasn't Lenin a Jew? It's all the Jews! So, they fell for the bait.

So they blamed it all on the Jews, purged Europe of its Jews, so Europe is primarily Roman Catholic now. It's a Roman Catholic block, and it will be the army of the Anti-Christ, with its European Union.

The Jews, then, were forced out of the nations to Israel. And remember, during World War II, when the Jews tried to escape and they were desperate to get out of Germany, do you think Jew-controlled Russia would let the Jews in? If the Jews really controlled Russia, they could have gone right into Russia. They were not allowed. Stalin would not allow any Jews to go into Russia. Churchill would not allow any Jews to go into England. And that criminal, FDR, would not allow any Jews to come into America. They were not allowed to escape.

They were either to be killed or funneled down through Israel, to be killed by the Mufti, that was working with the SS, Eichmann. Loftus is right. There is a secret war against the Jews, and all of the intelligence communities are waging it.

And the Jews don't perceive it because their Rabbis, the majority of their Rabbis, are traitors. I talked to a Rabbi in Lancaster County and I told him to look out for the Jesuit Order. He says "Oh, they're some of my best friends!" Well, that explains it. The Rabbis betray their own people at the hand of these inquisitors. And that's what they did in World War II, and they're going to do it here.

Martin: Let's talk about Garfield and McKinley. Why were they assassinated?

Phelps: I think Garfield was assassinated on a monetary issue; he was resisting the banking plans of the Jesuits. He was a radical, red Republican, too, you know, so they got rid of their own. I'm not familiar with all of the details. All I know is Burke McCarty in the book The Suppressed Truth About The Assassination Of Lincoln named McKinley and Garfield as other victims of the Jesuit Order. And had the Lincoln assassination been solved, that would never have happened. The other important issue is that Garfield was a Freemason. So, they assassinate their own Freemasons, when they want to.

Martin: Going back to Lincoln, who was John Surratt?

Phelps: John Surratt was the young man, 20 years old, who called time outside of Ford's Theater. He was mastermind of the assassination. John Surratt was helped by the priests of Washington to escape Washington, went up into Canada, was taken care of and housed by the priests, by the Bishop of Montreal, and then he was ferried across the ocean in The Peruvian, in a steamer called The Peruvian, and he went to, I believe, Ireland, then into England, then he went to Rome, to the Pope's Vatican there. He joined the Zouave army, and he was stationed in Alexandria, Egypt, until he was found and arrested.

In 1867, he was brought back and stood trial in Washington. There a woman was involved in the picking of the jury, and a High Roman Catholic was put on it. And because it's no murder to kill a heretic, the jury was hung in the first trial and Surratt went free. And he was also free in the second trial, because there were TWO trials. He died in 1914, I believe, at the age of 72, and they gave him, of course, a very, very, pompous funeral, a High Requiem Mass that are usually only given for priests and nuns. Evidently, he deserved it.

Of course, John Wilkes Booth, he was never killed. Corbett never killed Booth in the barn. Booth escaped Washington with a password, according to Finis Bates' work The Escape And Suicide Of John Wilkes Booth. He escaped to Kansas, and on his death bed confessed to his physician that he was John Wilkes Booth who shot Lincoln. And he escaped with the help of a Masonic password. So just like there was a patsy for the Lincoln assassination, there was a patsy for the Kennedy assassination.

Martin: Why is April 15th so significant?

Phelps: (laughter) Well, April 15 was the day that Lincoln called out troops on the South. It was the day that Lincoln died. He was shot on the 14th and died on the 15th. It's the day that the Titanic was sunk. And it's the day all the 14th Amendment citizens of this empire, like the good serfs that they are, go to confession once a year and confess to the government with their tax returns. Beware the Ides of April. (laughter)

Martin: Let's talk about the Cold War. Why did that come about?

Phelps: We had the end of World War II. We had the purging of the Jews and the Protestants, for the most part. The British Empire was destroyed, it's wrecked, which was essentially the empire that the Gospel went to China with. Modern missions were founded on the British Empire.

So, that Protestant Empire, even though it was controlled by Rome, was done. We have America in huge financial debt, out of isolationism. We have a Russia that's taken over by the Jesuits, through Joseph Stalin. Of course, the great beneficiary of World War II was Russia—Russia was the only country that won. But the Jesuits are not finished with their purgings and their installings of dictators loyal to the Pope, around the world. I mean, they pretty much have South America. They pretty much have Africa. But they don't have the East, and the Orthodox nations, and the Buddhist nations.

So, the purpose of the Cold War was to kill millions of these heretic, orthodox Buddhists, and to install in their country dictators that will carry out the Inquisition, who are loyal to the Pope.

One of those dictators was Joseph Stalin. And he was given the nuclear device in 1943 by the U.S. government, by the U.S. army. And you can find that in The Unseen Hand by Ralph Epperson. He did a lot of good documentation.

So, they gave him the bomb. I shouldn't call it "the bomb" because they gave him the nuclear device so that he could detonate it and create the ILLUSION that Russia now has nuclear capability, when a wheel-barrow was a great invention in Russia.

I mean, the Russian soldiers, when they went into Germany and they found toilets, they were dipping their bread in the toilets and eating their bread out of toilets. In Russia they were just savages. They didn't have technology; they had nothing. All the technology they ever got was given by Vatican-controlled Western corporations, whose inventors were Protestants.

So, the Cold War has to continue under Stalin. And we have to divide up the world into two factions, so we're going to put Roman Catholic NATO on one side, and we're going to put Communist-controlled Warsaw Pact on the other.

But in the process of so doing, they put Protestant East Germany under Communism to purge the Protestants of East Germany out of the country. That's why they sent them to Siberia. They put Protestant-Lutheran Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia under Communism, so they deported them all to Siberia. They put the Mennonites of Russia further under Communism, deporting them to Siberia. They deported the Baptists of Russia to Siberia, because they could only do—wimpy, gimpy, powerless, Russian army that it was—we could easily have beat it into the ground, if it had not been financed and supported and built by Henry Ford and Western corporations.

So, wimpy, gimpy Russia has this nuclear device, right? And oh, if we decide to go to war with Russia, well, we might get bombed! There's mutual, assured destruction. So to keep that from happening, we won't fight 'em, and we'll let them purge the world of all its Protestants. That's the purpose of the Cold War.

The Cold War then went into China, and the U.S. 7th Fleet, according to the Birch Society, and they're right about this, blocked Chiang Kai-Shek from being able to go into China and take over the country. So, Mao Se-Dung could get in control, get in power, and then carry out his inquisition against the land owners, against the Buddhists, against all the Protestant missionaries who were in China—just like the good Jesuit pawn that he was.

And, of course, the intimidation idea was that you can't go to China—why, there's millions of people there! Meanwhile, the Japanese whipped the Chinese to death in their war with China, when the Japanese went in. The Chinese had no technology. They had no organized army. They were easy to beat.

But the idea we were sold was: Oh no—China is a great, powerful nation, and now they even have the bomb! Stalin gave them a bomb, so we can't fight them anymore. So we won't do anything to them, while they're murdering 50 million people. And remember the "baby-boomers" of the United States, we would have fought the world. We would have rid the world of tyranny, had we had leadership that would have led us to that. But we had this farce, called the nuclear, mutual assured destruction. We had this farce called the dropping of the bombs at Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Whatever it was, it wasn't dropping nuclear bombs—and Edwin Corley does a pretty good job in his The Jesus Factor, in trying to tell you what else it was.

And so, we have this nonsense Cold War, which enables Rome to put up all their dictators, their Communist dictators, all of them loyal to the Pope—including Ho Chi Minh. Ho Chi Minh had a secret deal with Pope John XXIII, and he was under the advice of a Roman Catholic Bishop all throughout the war.

The purpose of the Cold War was to carry out the Council of Trent, and to tie the hands of the American Protestants; and it was also used to unite the Protestants and Catholics of America against Communism. Protestants and Catholics should unite on nothing. We are DIFFERENT. The Catholics have a final authority—that's the Pope. The Baptists and Protestants should have a final authority—that's the Bible. We don't unite on anything. We don't agree on anything. We don't agree on America's national purpose, so we don't unite. We're not uniting with abortion; we're not uniting with Communism; we don't unite against the Black or the Civil Rights Movement.

You see, all these things were used to unite Catholics and Protestants together here, so that, ultimately, Rome would be in control of all the Protestant denominations through the National Council of Churches and the Royal Council of Churches. And that's what they got. They took Princeton; they took Dartmouth College. All the great Protestant Universities are now in the hands of the Masons and the Jesuits. Harvard has a Jesuit House. They're controlled. And so, wherever they control education, they control the politics. And they control the education in China, Russia, all the Communist countries. Now that they have all of the dictators installed all throughout the world, they don't need the Cold War anymore. So now they can proceed with their next agenda, and that's the unification of Europe, the building up of Russia, and the destruction of the Western Empire. And that's their next agenda.

Martin: How do you see that unfolding?

Phelps: What's that?

Martin: The destruction of the Western Empire.

Phelps: As far as the actions of overthrowing the government and having a tyranny, is that what you mean?

Martin: Right. What do you see life like here in the next 5 or 10 years?

Phelps: It's hard to put a date on it; it's hard to put a year on it. But I would say it's going to continually become more and more a matter of "central power" in Washington. You're going to have less and less power in the Congress. And one of these days, the Congress is going to be closed. And all we're going to have is a Commander-in-Chief. We're going to have some form of absolutism, with the President becoming now a dictator.

Martin: Do you think George Bush, Jr. will be that person?

Phelps: He could be. I won't say he will be, but he could be. It will be someone like him—with complete allegiance to Rome, just like his father. His grandfather helped set up the CFR. His uncle is a Knight of Malta. It will be someone like him.

And he WILL be the next President. They've already chosen him in the College of Cardinals. Everything else is a show. Jesuit-trained Buchanan is a show. Roman Catholic McCain is a show. The Black Roman Catholic Keyes is a show, although he tickles me. He advocates abolition of the 14th Amendment. If that happens, what are the Black people going to do? They're not citizens; they have no rights! Dred Scott comes into play. He's a fake.

So, what I see is more and more centralization of power in the hands of the President. The Supreme Court is just a rubber stamp. He becomes the king. The courts are nothing more than the courts of the king's bench. The Federal Reserve Bank will remain in power. Everything will be monitored and controlled by Washington, unless some of God's men start trusting God and get in control of the state and cause it to secede. The only answer to this is state secession, leaving this Union—it's not a Union, it's an Empire—leaving the Empire that began in 1868, assuming national sovereignty, once again. And the first state that would do this, I'm moving there. Because I don't want to see the FBI anymore. I don't want to see the CIA. I don't want to see any of these national bureaucracies anymore.

Martin: Montana seems close. Arizona seems close.

Phelps: Well, when they do it, I'll move there. But that's what would happen if things continue as they are. We'll have race war. We're going to have the Moslems fighting the Klu Klux Klan. Whites siding with the Whites; the Blacks siding with the Blacks. It's going to be a blood-bath everywhere. And that will justify Martial Law, and the military, and the whole nine yards, and also foreign occupation; we're going to have that too. And you know how foreigners are in a foreign country. They rape the women. They couldn't care less about the social strata of the country. They have no mercy on the people. They have a foreign tongue. And that's what they'll do. And that's all the more reason for a state to secede.

I've advocated that Pennsylvania should secede for the last 15 years. We have our own deep-water ports; we have our own agriculture; we have our own heavy industry; we have coal; we have everything we need to be a sovereign nation. We don't need this Empire anymore. The only problem is, Pennsylvania is COMPLETELY controlled by the Jesuits.

Every major city is under their control. And so, the place is slated for destruction—all the Mennonite and Amish counties of Southeastern Pennsylvania. Everything else is Catholic: Pittsburgh, Scranton, Philadelphia, Harrisburg—all Roman Catholic. The Roman Catholic people, too, will also be sacrificed. They will be killed too. Let them not think that they're going to be delivered because the Jesuits run the show. According to the Jesuit Molina, in the tape I just sent you, it is lawful to kill—and they will kill as many Roman Catholics as necessary to bring this plan to fruition.

Martin: Define the Jesuit term: Universal Absolutism.

Phelps: Define it? That means worldwide, universal, over every nation, absolute power. Absolutism is their great doctrine, that absolute power resides in the hands of the General. He is limited by no constitution. He is limited by no law.

This is the Great Doctrine of Divine Right, the Divine Right of Kings that was so fought against by the Calvinists. We Bible-believing Calvinists believe in the Rule of Law. The Law is king. Rutherford's "Lex Rex". The Jesuits believe the king is the law—Louis XIV: "I am the law". So, it's going to be a universal, world-wide king who, himself, is the law. All authority will be in him, as he rules the world from Jerusalem, as the Beast.

Martin: Are we talking about the present Pope, or are we talking about Count von Kolvenbach?

Phelps: I'm saying that what's in position now will ultimately bring in the future Pope, whoever he is, and whatever it may be, as a Universal Absolutist—the Universal Monarch of the World, in Jerusalem.

Martin: Symbolic? Or you're saying literal?

Phelps: I'm saying that will literally happen. There will be a Pope, who will be killed; he will receive a mortal wound. And this is going to happen in the 70th week of Daniel. He will receive a mortal wound, according to Revelation 13.

This is the Beast, and he will come back to life. He comes back to life, mid-trip, at the very time that Satan and his angels are cast out of Heaven by Michael and his angels. At this time, Satan goes and he indwells the Beast, this Pope. Now he comes back to life, just like Christ. He was dead; now he's resurrected.

And what is he going to do? He's going to destroy the Catholic Church. He's going to destroy the Vatican; and he's going to go down in Jerusalem and demand to be worshipped as God, for three and a half years.

That's why the Vatican is indestructible. No one can destroy the Vatican. All the armies in the world couldn't destroy it. It has been determined that it will be destroyed by the Anti-Christ. And he, alone, can do it.

That's why, when the Yugoslavians wanted to mount an air attack against the Vatican in World War II, a bunch of clouds came over the airport and they couldn't take off, because they were going to bomb the Vatican. The world will not allow that to happen. The Vatican will only be destroyed by the man of sin, the Beast, the coming Universal Monarch, the ex-Universal Pope.

The Vatican has the most extensive library in the world, the most priceless and extensive library. It goes for miles, underground, in the Vatican.

Martin: Wouldn't you love to go in there.

Phelps: I would love to. Talk about finding sunken treasure.

Martin: We've almost covered it. I almost don't want to dilute this conversation with the FDA and AMA. Let's talk about them just briefly.

Phelps: Ok. World War II, produced of course by Rome, caused the Nazi experiments on the people in the concentration camps—the Jews, the Gypsies, the Socialists, primarily the Jews. But they experimented with things like fluoride. They experimented with things like EDTA chelation, which is THE treatment of choice for anybody with heart disease. They experimented with poisons. They experimented with surgeries. They experimented with all kinds of things on these people. They also experimented with vaccinations and immunizations.

There's a book called The Nazi Doctors. Everything that was learned by them was integrated into the American Medical Association, after the war. That's why we all have our municipal water supplies fluoridated. That's why they're all chlorinated, because chlorine decreases oxygen, and therefore causes cancer, because cancer grows in an anaerobic state—it's a virus, converting cells into mutants that are anaerobic.

Ok. All of Europe is using ozone to clean their water supplies. Here they use chlorine. They want us with cancer. And how do we get cancer? With the vaccinations and immunizations, where they inject us with live viruses, like the hepatitis vaccine—every one of them has the HIV virus, SV-40.

What they're doing is what they learned in Nazi Germany. They implemented here and they continue their research in the CIA. There's a two-tape set called The CIA And The Virus Makers which show how the CIA helped to create the HIV virus and various other viruses. They get into Robert Gallo, the world's foremost virologist.

Robert Gallo is a Jesuit. He's a Roman Catholic, Italian, the world's foremost virologist—and yet not controlled by the Brotherhood, by the Company? Ridiculous. He's under their control! He's doing all the research, and he doesn't want to be blamed for it—as the WONDERFUL Jew, Len Horowitz, proved. Again, we've got Jews getting in the way—Jews blowing their cover.

Martin: I've interviewed Len many times. He's a very courageous guy.

Phelps: Great guy. And he's right on target. And he hits the Knights of Malta in his book Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola. He was a great encouragement to me when I saw him do that, when I read his book.

So, hey, let's just take it the whole way. Let's just go right to the Jesuit Order. And what the Jesuits did with the Cold War, with their Inquisition in the East, they carry out with their war on the American people in the West, with their Medical Inquisition—cut, burn, and drug. And that's what it is.

Personally, I have my own home where I use ozone oxygen. I use ultraviolet blood irradiation. I can show you how ultraviolet blood irradiation incapacitates Lupus. It destroys Hepatitis. It destroys Meningitis. It destroys HIV.

This is a very simple procedure; I do it every day. It can easily be done by any medical doctor, and they won't do it. Because, when you kill off the virus, you don't have the diseases. You are thwarting what they wanted to do with their vaccinations and immunizations.

That's why they want to make a law. That's why that filthy Ted Kennedy, that Knight of Columbus, wants all these vaccinations and immunizations—when it should be a religious tenet of everyone: "It's against my religious convictions to put foreign pathogens into my bloodstream. It's going to make me sick by the time I'm 40. It's going to give me plaque build-up and heart-disease. I'm not going to do it."

In the meantime, they're suppressing all the things that reverse it: soft lasers, hyperbaric chambers, ultraviolet blood irradiation, oxygen ozone, north-pole magnetic therapy. All the things working together that would easily reverse it, they suppress, and consider it a crime. Make sense?

Martin: Rife technology.

Phelps: When I was in the office of my friend, William, in Maryland, he told me that he had a guy from NSA [National Security Agency] come in and talk to him about his blood irradiation, and told him: "I think that it would be wise for you to stop this."

Now, this guy who runs the clinic there in Maryland is an ex-Navy Seal. He's no pushover. So he says to the NSA guy: "Well, why do you say that?"

And the NSA guy said: "You know how Royal Rife died? We put poison on his toothbrush."

This guy was from NSA. So, that was a threat. Well, now, some people get scared, and some people get upset, angry. William is one of those guy who gets upset and angry, and it furthers him that much harder.

So, mysteriously, the head of the Ultraviolet Blood Irradiation Foundation died, about 3 or 4 months ago, in his apartment, with no autopsy. So they almost destroyed the foundation, but now he is in the process of securing capital—and he will, I'm sure, very shortly, and it's going to be untouchable. The machines will be put out and it will have UVC and UVA to do the blood, and we're going to kill-off all the viruses in the bloodstream. And we're going to teach the medical doctors how to do it. We'll provide the machines for them. And we're going to end this tyranny. And we'll also educate them—no more vaccinations and immunizations.

There are only two things I'm a member of in this country: one is the national anti-vaccine society, and the other is Gun Owner's of America. Those are the only two organizations that are really worth supporting. If you get the vaccinations away from the people, they're not going to be sick. And if you maintain guns in the hands of the people, they can still use them against the tyrants. And if they go to church and read the Bible, they'll have all the spiritual zest and zeal to do it.

Martin: We haven't even talked about Nikola Tesla in this conversation.

Phelps: Yeah. He was deliberately thwarted by the FBI, all his papers stolen in 1943. J.P. Morgan destroyed him. J.P. Morgan was one of the kingpins in the Titanic sinking.

Nikola Tesla was a wonderful man. He came here for freedom. He was a Serbian Orthodox—a curse to Rome. The father of A.C. current. He developed a whole system of Universal Power, that we would need no coal or any of that. So, one of my other goals is to perfect the electromagnetic motor. When my book gets out, then I will be working with some men in perfecting electromagnetic motors, and they will be out, without a patent, privately.

Martin: We're just about there. Let's talk about Bill Clinton. How do you see Bill Clinton in relationship to the Jesuits? And how do you see Al Gore? What can our readers glean from what you're saying about their power base?

Phelps: Well, we must remember: where did Bill Clinton come from? How did he become Governor? His father was a powerful political figure, because his mother was nothing. So, he came from nothing to being something, through some powerful political figure, probably the Kennedys.

It's rumored that John Kennedy was his father; could be. In any event, Clinton was trained by the Jesuits of Georgetown. He was the class president of his junior year, I believe. His senior year, he was not re-elected because the student body said he was "too close to the Jesuit faculty".

So, he was groomed by the Jesuits to be a powerful political leader. He was put in place in Arkansas, runs that scam there, while he's Governor, in the drug trade, belonging to Rome, working with Reagan in the drug trade, and Bush. Then he's made President.

Remember the picture of him at Georgetown, kneeling at the grave of Timothy Healy? That says it all. He is the complete and total pawn of the Jesuit Order ruling from Georgetown University. He does anything they want him to do. He hasn't resisted a thing.

That's why he's untouchable. He can commit any crime. He can do any act of evil, and never be prosecuted, because they'll call on traitors like Arlen Spector to vindicate him. And, of course, Arlen Spector was Spelly's Jew in the Kennedy assassination—evil, wicked, lifetime Senator from Pennsylvania, which shows me that there are no elections anymore. Nobody voted for Arlen Spector who I know. He's a gun-grabber. So, they made him a life-time Senator. They made Teddy Kennedy a lifetime Senator.

Bill Clinton is completely at their beck and call. He will get out of office. He will live happily ever after, unless he starts talking. If he starts talking, he's done. He is NOT a Baptist. He is loyal to the Jesuit Order.

Martin: Ok, let's talk about God and His Agenda.

Phelps: As I understand the Bible, I believe we are in what's called the Dispensation of Grace. I'm a dispensationalist. Now, there are those who say that dispensationalism was a brain-child of the Jesuits. Could be, could be Jesuits were involved with that. But I believe the Bible teaches this, because God deals with men in different ways, at different times.

He commands Abraham to sacrifice a lamb, but not me. We don't do that now. He commands Noah to build an ark. We don't do that now. He commands Moses to receive the Law of Sinai. We're not under the Law; it's for the Nation of Israel. He commanded his son to announce that the Davidic kingdom was ready to be established on Earth—repent, for the Kingdom is at hand. The Kingdom, promised to David, is about to be established, and that's why they called him Son of David.

And now we live in the Dispensation of Grace, called the present Evil Age, of Galations, Chapter 1:4, and the Dispensation of Grace of Ephesians, Chapter 3. During this particular period of time, this stewardship, the Gospel says that the Lord Jesus Christ died for the sins of our world; he was buried and rose again.

And God commands all men, everywhere, to repent and believe on His name that they might be saved. But there is no other name under Heaven whereby we must be saved, save the name of Jesus. During this time, this good news of forgiveness of sin and free pardon, and we can be with the Lord for eternity, is going to every nation, Jews and Gentile. And during this Dispensation of Grace, Jews and Gentiles are regarded as one, in the body of Christ, when they're saved.

Now, according to Romans, Chapter 11, there is what is called the "fullness of the Gentiles". There is a fullness that is a predetermined amount of people who are going to be saved. We call them "the elect". We call ourselves the elect of the Lord.

Now when that elect, that predetermined number, is saved, then God will begin to deal with the nations and Israel, once again. And that will begin, according to Daniel, Chapter 9, when the Prince shall come, shall confirm a covenant with many for one week. That is the 70th week of Daniel. The first 69 weeks have been fulfilled, from the decree, to rebuilding Jerusalem, to Messiah the Prince, the day Christ declared himself the Messiah of Israel, was 69 weeks of years. After that the Messiah would be cut-off, and Jerusalem would be destroyed. That is the gap between the 69th and the 70th week. The temple is not destroyed; the city is not destroyed; the Messiah is not cut-off, during the 69th or the 70th week. There's a gap between those two weeks, and that gap has gone to nearly 2,000 years. In the year 2032, it will be 2,000 years. Because Christ was crucified in 32 A.D.

Ok, during this dispensation, God is saving Jews and Gentiles out of all nations and placing them in the body of Christ, by the power of His Holy Spirit, as the Gospels preached. When the predetermined number comes to fruition, then the Lord will take out his Bible-believing church, and everybody else is left to go through what is called "the time of Jacob's trouble", in the Book of Jeremiah, or the Great Day of the Lord—the 7-year tribulation, talked about in the Book of Revelation, Chapter 4-19.

That 7-year tribulation will be when the Lord begins to judge this world for its rejection of the Messiah, and for their sins, having not been taken care of, not having been saved; although there will be many people saved during this time.

The Jews will be tremendously persecuted. The vast majority of them will be murdered, and there will be a remnant who will repent at the end of the Tribulation, at which time the Messiah will come and they will look upon him, whom they pierced, and weep because they will realize that the one who is going to save them from all these Gentile armies pouring into Israel, is the very one they crucified.

When the Lord Jesus destroys all the Gentile armies, he will then set up the Davidic Kingdom that he came to set up—the born-again nation of Israel.

Can a nation be born in a day? Isaiah, Chapter 66—they will be born-again, they will inherit all the promises, and Christ will sit down in the Kingdom with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, just like he talked about, and he will eat the fruit of vine again. Because he said: "I will not eat this henceforth, til ye say, 'Blessed is he that come in the name of the Lord' until I eat it anew with you in the Kingdom." Then he will drink wine; he will eat the fruit of the vine; he will break bread; and he will be Messiah, King of the World at that time, ruling the world from Jerusalem.

So, what we have coming is more unbelief, more persecution, less faith, less manhood, less guts, and we have more persecution from the Jesuit Order, more monetary control. We have another scenario of the World Government, under the Pope from Jerusalem, and that's what the Jesuits want. And, ultimately, God in His providence, has allowed for 42 months for that to happen: 1260 days.

So that's what I see coming. But what I believe is, I don't believe that the doctrine of the coming Anti-Christ should be used as fatalism—that we should: "Well, that's coming, so we can't do anything about it. The bastards are coming to take us out."

That's an excuse to cowardice. We need to do our duty. We need to resist evil in ourselves and around us, and as long as we have breath. And part of resisting that evil is resisting the Jesuit Order. It's resisting anti-Christian tyranny. It's resisting absolutism. It's resisting criminals who are in your government.

We have a civil responsibility, and that's to make sure government punishes evil and rewards good. And when it doesn't punish evil anymore, it's no government. We don't know allegiance to it anymore. We withdraw our allegiance, and we assume our own sovereign power.

And that's exactly what the Covenanters did with Scotland when they withdrew their allegiance from, what was it, King James II, or Charles II; they withdrew their allegiance and the English settled there and, ultimately, many of those Covenanters were killed. But in the glorious Revolution of 1688, they got their liberty.

Another thing is, all these men—they want to win right now. They want to do something and experience the win. We have no guarantee of that. Why not just say the way it is, resist the tyranny, and if we get killed in the process, then praise God—I mean, isn't Heaven a little better than this place? What's the big fear? All these men do not know the Lord, as far as trusting Him in the midst of a storm. They're full of fear; they're full of terror; and they're all afraid to die.

So, hopefully, with the true preaching of the Gospel—and ultimately there will be some preachers who will arise who will encourage us to do right and not fear death, and to resist these powers of evil—hopefully that will begin to change and there will be men who will call for secession, and states will begin to leave this Union, like Chechnya, and these others, and then the Lord will intervene for us.

If we honor Him, He'll honor us. If we fight for His causes, He'll bless us. And we need to stop looking at the odds. We've always been outnumbered. We've always been outgunned. And that's the way God likes it, because then, when we win, obviously He did it.

So that's what I see for the future, and I see there's a great vacuum right now that needs to be filled. And it can be filled with the men of God telling the truth, or it can be filled with Jesuits advocating everybody give-up, lay down their guns, and submit to this New World Order, under the Pope.

The question is: What are YOU, dear reader, going to do?

THE JESUITS – 1540

THEIR PURPOSE AND OATH

The purpose of the Jesuit Order, formally established by the Pope in 1540, is to destroy the Protestant Reformation. They call it the Counter-Reformation. Nicolini of Rome wrote:

“The Jesuits, by their very calling, by the very essence of their institution, are bound to seek, by every means, right or wrong, the destruction of Protestantism. This is the condition of their existence, the duty they must fulfill, or cease to be Jesuits.” [Footprints of the Jesuits, R. W. Thompson, 1894]

EXTRACT FROM JESUIT'S OATH

To this end the professed Jesuits have obligated themselves with an oath, part of which was published in 1899, and reads:

“I do now renounce and disown my allegiance as due to any heretical King, Prince or State, named Protestant, or liberals, or obedience to any of their laws or magistrates or officers.

“I do further declare that the doctrine of the churches of England and Scotland, of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and other of the name Protestant or Liberals, to be damnable, and they themselves to be damned who will not forsake the same.

“I do further declare that I will help, assist and advise all or any of His Holiness' agents, in any place where I shall be, in Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, England, Ireland or America, or in any other kingdom or territory I shall come to, and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant or liberal doctrines, and to destroy all their pretended powers, legal or otherwise.”

[Errors of the Roman Catholic Church, 15 Contributors, 1894]

In 1981, one of our heroes, Alberto Rivera, disclosed the oath he took as a professed Jesuit. We read:

Ceremony Of Induction And Extreme Oath Of The Jesuits

(Given to a Jesuit of minor rank when he is to be elevated to a position of command.)

Superior Speaks:

“My son, heretofore you have been taught to act the dissembler among the Roman Catholics to be a Roman Catholic, and to be a spy even among your own brethren: to believe no man, to trust no man. Among the reformers, to be a reformer; among the Huguenots (French Protestants) to be a Huguenot; among the Calvinists, to be a Calvinist; among the Protestants (those who protest and disagree with the Roman Catholic institution), generally to be a Protestant; and obtaining their confidence to seek even to preach from their pulpits, and to denounce with all the vehemence (violent emotion) in your nature our Holy Religion and the Pope; and even to descend so low as to become a Jew among the Jews, that you might be enabled to gather together all information for the benefit of your order as a faithful soldier of the Pope.

“You have been taught to insidiously plant the seeds of jealousy and hatred between states that were at peace, and incite them to deeds of blood, involving them in war with each other, and to create revolutions and civil wars in communities, provinces and countries that were independent and prosperous, cultivating the arts and the sciences and enjoying the blessings of peace;

“To take sides with the combatants and to act secretly in concert with your brother Jesuit who might be engaged on the other side, but openly opposed to that with which you might be connected;

“Only that the church might be the gainer in the end in the conditions fixed in the treaties for peace, and that the ends justify the means.

“You have been taught your duty as a spy, to gather all statistics, facts and information in your power from every source: to ingratiate yourself into the confidence of the family circle of Protestants and heretics of every class and character, as well as that of the merchant, the banker, the lawyer, among the schools and universities, in parliament and legislatures, and in the judiciaries and councils of State, and to ‘be all things to all men’, for the Pope’s sake, whose servants we are unto death.

“You have received all your instructions heretofore as a novice (one who has no training), a neophyte (a newly ordained priest), and have served as a coadjutor (worked as a helper), confessor and priest, but you have not yet been invested with all that is necessary to command in the army of Loyola and in the service of the Pope.

“You must serve the proper time as the instrument and executioner as directed by your superiors; for none can command here who has not consecrated (made secret or holy) his labors with the blood of the heretic; for ‘without the shedding of blood no man can be saved.’

“I, _____, now, in the presence of Almighty God, the blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the Archangel, the blessed St. John the Baptist, the Holy Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul and all the saints and sacred hosts of heaven....

“I, furthermore, promise and declare that I will, when opportunity presents, make and wage relentless war, secretly and openly, against all heretics, Protestants and Liberals, as I am directed to do.

“That when the same cannot be done openly, I will secretly use the poisoned cup, the strangulation cord, the steel of the poniard (a dagger) or the leaden bullet, regardless of the honor, rank, dignity, or authority of the person or persons, whatever may be their condition in life, either public or private, as I at any time may be directed so to do by any agent of the Pope or superior of the brotherhood of the holy faith, of the Society of Jesus.” [Double-Cross: Alberto, Part 2, 1981]

* * *

In addition to the Oath, the Jesuits have a guidebook entitled Secreta Monita. To the author's knowledge it has only been disclosed to the world twice: once in the 1600s and once in the 1800s. Because of the magnitude of its contents as it relates to our subject, The Secret Instructions Of The Jesuits (1857) is reprinted in its entirety [in Vatican Assassins].

[Due to the length of this material, we here at The SPECTRUM will only present a few excerpts and chapter headings, but this should be sufficient to give you a pretty good idea of what is contained within them. For the full presentation, refer to Vatican Assassins. The portions you are about to read have not, to our knowledge, been printed in any modern-day newspaper.

What you are about to read, The Secret Instructions Of The Jesuits, was first published in 1669 by the venerable and learned Dr. Compton, Bishop of London. In Vatican Assassins we read:]

His arguments on their authenticity, and his character as a scholar and divine, are a sufficient guarantee that he would never have given his name and influence to sustain a work of dubious authority, or calculated to mislead the public.

We have only to add that the last American edition, published at Princeton, and this one which we publish, are taken from the translation which was published in London in 1723, and dedicated to Sir Robert Walpole, who was afterwards Lord Orford, and who had the high honor of being prime minister of George I and George II.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS

Chapter 1: How the Society must behave themselves when they begin any new foundation.

V. At their first settlement, let our members be cautious of purchasing lands; but if they happen to buy such as are well situated, let this be done in the name of some faithful and trusty friend. And that our poverty may be the more colorable gloss of reality, let the purchases, adjacent to the places wherein our colleges are founded, be assigned by the provincial to colleges at a distance; by which means it will be impossible that princes and magistrates can ever attain to a certain knowledge what the revenues of the Society amount to.

VI. Let no places be pitched upon by any of our members for founding a college but opulent cities; the end of the Society being the imitation of our blessed Saviour, who made his principal residence in the metropolis of Judea, and only transiently visited the less remarkable places.

VII. Let the greatest sums be always extorted from widows, by frequent remonstrations of our extreme necessities.

VIII. In every province, let none but the principal be fully apprised of the real value of our revenues; and let what is contained in the treasury of Rome be always kept as an inviolable secret.

Chapter II: In what manner the Society must deport, that they may work themselves into, and after that preserve a familiarity with princes, noblemen, and persons of greatest distinction.

I. Princes, and persons of distinction every where, must by all means be so managed that we may have their ear, and that will easily secure their hearts; by which way of proceeding, all persons will become our creatures, and no one will dare to give the Society the least disquiet or opposition.

II. That ecclesiastical persons gain a great footing in the favor of princes and noblemen, by winking at their vices, and putting a favorable construction on whatever they do amiss, experience convinces; and this we may observe in their contracting of marriages with their near relations and kindred, or the like. It must be our business to encourage such, whose inclination lies this way, by leading them up in hopes, that through our assistance they may easily obtain a dispensation from the Pope; and no doubt he will readily grant it, if proper reason be urged, paralleled cases produced, and opinions quoted which countenance such actions, when the common good of mankind, and the greater advancement of God's glory, which are the only end and design of the society, are pretended to be the sole motives to them.

V. Above all, due care must be taken to curry favor with the minions and domestics of princes and noblemen; whom by small presents, and many offices of piety, we may so far byass, (bias) as by means of them to get a faithful intelligence of the bent of their master's humors and inclinations; thus will the Society be better qualified to chime in with their tempers.

VII. Princesses and ladies of quality are easily to be gained by the influence of the woman of their bed-chamber; for which reason we must by all means pay particular address to these, for thereby there will be no secrets in the family but what we shall have fully disclosed to us.

XV. Finally,—Let all with such artfulness gain the ascendant over princes, noblemen, and magistrates of every place, that they may be ready at our beck, even to sacrifice their nearest relations and most intimate friends, when we say it is for our interest and advantage.

Chapter III: How the Society must behave themselves towards those who are at the helm of affairs, and others who, although they be not rich, are notwithstanding in a capacity of being otherwise serviceable.

I. All that has been before mentioned, may, in a great measure, be applied to these; and we must also be industrious to procure their favor against every one that oppose us.

II. Their authority and wisdom must be courted for obtaining several offices to be discharged by us; we must also make a handle of their advice with respect to the contempt of riches; though at the same time, if their secrecy and faith may be depended on, we may privately make use of their names in amassing temporal goods for the benefit of the Society.

Chapter IV: The chief things to be recommended to preachers and confessors of noblemen.

VI. Immediately upon the death of any person of post, let them take timely care to get some friend of our Society preferred in his room; but this must be cloaked with such cunning and management as to avoid giving the least suspicion of our intending to usurp the prince's authority; for this reason (as has been already said) we ourselves must not appear in it, but make a handle of the artifice of some faithful friends for effecting our designs, whose power may screen them from the envy which might otherwise fall heavier upon the Society.

Chapter V: What kind of conduct must be observed towards such religious persons as are employed in the same ecclesiastical functions with us.

Chapter VI: Of proper methods for inducing rich widows to be liberal to our Society.

I. For the managing of this affair, let such members only be chosen as are advanced in age, of a lively complexion and agreeable conversation; let these frequently visit such widows, and the minute they begin to show any affection towards our order, then is the time to lay before them the good works and merits of the society. If they seem kindly to give ear to this, and begin to visit our churches, we must by all means take care to provide them confessors by whom they may be well admonished, especially to a constant perseverance in their state of widowhood, and this, by enumerating and praising the advantages and felicity of a single life: and let them pawn their faiths, and themselves too, as a security that a firm continuance in such a pious resolution will infallibly purchase an eternal merit, and prove a most effectual means of escaping the otherwise certain pains of purgatory.

IV. Care must be taken to remove such servants particularly as do not keep a good understanding with the Society; but let this be done by little and little; and when we have managed to work them out, let such be recommended as already are, or willingly would become our creatures; thus shall we dive into every secret, and have a finger in every affair transacted in the family.

Chapter VII: How such widows are to be secured, and in what manner their effects are to be disposed of.

I. They are perpetually to be pressed to a perseverance in their devotion and good works, in such manner, that no week pass in which they do not, of their own accord, lay somewhat apart out of their abundance for the honor of Christ, the blessed Virgin, or their patron saint; and let them dispose of it in relief of the poor, or in beautifying of churches, till they are entirely stripped of their superfluous stores and unnecessary riches.

XIII. Let the confessors take diligent care

*It is not worth while to try to keep history from repeating itself, for man's character will always make the preventing of the repetitions impossible.
—Mark Twain*

to prevent such widows as are their penitents, from visiting ecclesiastics of other orders, or entering into familiarity with them, under any pretence whatsoever; for which end, let them, at proper opportunities, cry up the Society as infinitely superior to all other orders; of the greatest service in the church of God, and of greater authority with the Pope, and all princes; and that it is the most perfect in itself, in that it discards all persons offensive or unqualified, from its community, and therefore is purified from that scum and dregs with which these monks are infected, who, generally speaking, are a set of men unlearned, stupid, and slothful, negligent of their duty, and slaves to their bellies.

XIV. Let the confessors propose to them, and endeavor to persuade them to pay small pensions and contributions towards the yearly support of colleges and professed houses, but especially of the professed house at Rome; not let them forget the ornaments of churches, tapers, wine, and things necessary in the celebration of the sacrifice of mass.

XV. If any widow does in her life-time make over her whole estate to the Society; whenever opportunity offers, but especially when she is seized with sickness, or in danger of life, let some take care to represent to her the poverty of the greatest number of our colleges, whereof many just erected have hardly as yet any foundation; engage her, by a winning behavior and inducing arguments, to such a liberality as (you must persuade her) will lay a certain foundation for her eternal happiness.

XVI. The same art must be used with princes and other benefactors; for they must be wrought up to a belief, that these are the only acts which will perpetuate their memories in this world, and secure them eternal glory in the next.

Chapter VIII: How widows are to be treated, that they may embrace religion, or a devoted life.

Chapter IX: Of increasing the revenues of our Colleges.

XV. Let the confessors be constant in visiting the sick, but especially such as are thought to be in danger; and that the ecclesiastics and members of other orders may be discarded with a good pretence, let the superiors take care that when the confessor is obliged to withdraw, others may immediately succeed, and keep up the sick person in his good resolutions. At this time it may be advisable to move him by apprehensions of hell, and at least of purgatory; and tell him, that as fire is quenched by water, so sin is extinguished by acts of charity; and that alms can never be better bestowed than for the nourishment and support of such who by their calling profess a desire to promote the salvation of their neighbor.

XVI. Lastly, let the women who complain of the vices of ill-humor of their husbands, be instructed secretly to withdraw a sum of money, that by making an offering thereof to God, they may expiate the crimes of their sinful help-mates, and secure a pardon for them.

Chapter X. Of the private rigor of discipline in the Society.

Chapter XI. How our members are unanimously to behave towards those who are expelled from the Society.

I. Since those that are dismissed, do frequently very much prejudice the Society by divulging such secrets as they have been privy to; their attempts must therefore be obviated in the following manner. Let them be prevailed upon, before they are dismissed, to give it under their hands, and swear that they never will, directly or indirectly, either write or speak any thing to the disadvantage of the Order; and let the superiors keep upon record the evil inclinations, failings and vices, which they, according to the custom of the Society, for discharge of their consciences, formerly confessed: this, if ever they give us occasion, may be produced by the Society, to the nobility and prelates, as a very good handle to prevent their promotion.

VIII. Let the misfortunes, and unlucky accidents which happen to them, be immediately published; but with entreaties for the prayers of good Christians, that the world may not think we are hurried away by passion: but, among our members, let these things, by all means, be represented in the blackest colors, that the rest may be the better secured.

Chapter XII. Who should be kept, and favored in the Society.

Chapter XIII. How to pick out young men to be admitted into the Society, and in what manner to retain them.

V. Let them be allured, by little presents, and indulgence of liberties agreeable to their age; and, above all, let their affections be warmed with spiritual discourses.

VI. Let it be inculcated, that their being chosen out of such a number, rather than any of their fellow-collegiates, is a most pregnant instance of divine appointment.

VII. On other occasions, but especially in exhortations, let them be terrified with denunciations of eternal punishment, unless they accept of the heavenly invitation.

VIII. The more earnestly they desire admission into our Society, the longer let the grant of such favor be deferred, provided at the same time they seem steadfast in their resolution; but if their minds appear to be wavering, let all proper methods be used for the immediate firing of them.

Chapter XIV. Of reserved cases, and causes of dismissal from the Society.

Chapter XV. Of our conduct towards nuns and female devotees.

[It is noted in the pre-publication copy of Vatican Assassins from which these excerpts are being extracted that one of the pages is missing from this section of the instructions.]

Chapter XVII. Of the methods of advancing the Society.

I. Let our members chiefly endeavor at this, always to act with humanity, even in things of trifling moment; or at least to have the outward appearance of doing so; for by this means, whatever confusions may arise in the world, the Society of necessity will always increase and maintain its ground.

VII. The favor of the nobility and superior clergy, once got, our next aim must be to draw all cures and canonships into our possession, for the more complete reformation of the clergy, who wheretofore lived under certain regulation of their bishops, and made considerable advances towards perfection. And lastly, let us aspire to abbacies and bishoprics, the obtaining which, when vacancies happen, will very easily be effected, considering the supineness and stupidity of the monks; for it would entirely tend to the benefit of the church, that all bishoprics, and even the apostolical see, should be hooked into our hands, especially should his holiness ever become a temporal prince over all. Wherefore, let no methods be untried, with cunning and privacy, by degrees, to increase the worldly interests of the Society, and then, no doubt, a golden age will go hand in hand with an universal and lasting peace, and the divine blessing of consequence attend the catholic church.

VIII. But if our hopes in this should be blasted, and since offences of necessity will come, our political schemes must be cunningly varied, according to the different posture of the times; and princes, our intimates, whom we can influence to follow our councils, must be pushed on to embroil themselves in vigorous wars one with another, to the end, our Society (as promoters of the universal good of the world,) may on all hands be solicited to contribute its assistance, and always employed in being mediators of public dissensions; by this means the chief benefices and preferments in the church will, of course be given to us by way of compensation for our services.

IX. Finally, the Society must endeavor to effect this at least, that having got the favor and authority of princes, those who do not love them at least fear them.

JESUIT POWER

The Society of Jesus was thenceforth recognized as the chief opposing force of Protestantism. The Order became dominant in determining the plans and policy of the Rowish Church. The brotherhood grew and flourished. It planted its chapters first in France, Italy and Spain, and then in all civilized lands. The success of the Order was phenomenal. It became a power in the world. It sent out its representatives to every quarter of the globe. Its solitary apostles were seen shadowing the thrones of Europe. They sought, by every means known to human ingenuity, to establish and confirm the tottering fabric of Rome, and to undermine the rising fabric of Protestantism. They penetrated to the Indus and the Ganges. They traversed the deserts of Thibet, and said, "Here am I," in the streets of Peking. They looked down into the silver mines of Peru, and knelt in prayer on the shores of Lake Superior. To know all secrets, fathom all design, penetrate all intrigues, prevail in all counsels, rise above all diplomacy, and master the human race, — such was their purpose and ambition. They wound about human society in every part of the habitable earth, the noiseless creepers of their ever-growing plot to retake the world for the Church, and to subdue and conquer and extinguish the last remnant of opposition to her dominion from shore to shore, from the rivers to the ends of the earth." [Ridpath's Universal History, John Clarke Ridpath, 1899]

The Jesuits are the true authors of socialist-communism. The economic system of the Dark Ages was feudalism consisting of the few rich landowners and the many poor peasants. It was a sin to make a profit by anyone other than the feudal lords. Thus, if the world is to be returned to the Dark Ages, the Protestant middle class must be destroyed. Socialist-communism accomplishes this, having yielded its bitter fruit in both Great Britain and the United States. The great deception is that the Jews are the authors of communism. (After all, is not Zionism Jewish communism?) The facts are that the Jesuits used their Masonic Jews to introduce it in 1848 and again in 1917 with the Bolshevik Revolution.

The Jesuits then moved their Shriner Freemason FDR to recognize Russia's bloody government in 1933. The Jesuits then financed Russian communism with their Knights of Malta on Wall Street. This enabled Joseph Stalin to carry out the purges of the Thirties.

Having deceived the world into believing communism was of Jewish origin, the Jesuits then used Hitler to implement "the Final Solution to the Jewish Question"—pursuant to the evil Council of Trent. The result was the mass murder of European and Russian Jewry at the hands of the Jesuit-controlled SS.

At the close of the Second Thirty Years War (1945) the Jesuits, with their Vatican Ratline, helped top Nazis to escape to South America. And where in South America? To the old dominion where socialist-communism had been perfected by the Jesuit fathers—to the nation of Paraguay.

The Jesuits entered Paraguay in the early 1600s, sent by the kings of Spain and Portugal. They established their supremacy over the natives called "Guarani Indians" and did not allow them to mix with the Spanish or Portuguese. It was among this people that the Jesuits established their communes called "reductions".

THE JESUITS — 1776

The Jesuits, now formally suppressed by the Pope, were allied with Frederick the Great of Prussia and Catherine of Russia. The Jesuit General was in control of Scottish Rite Freemasonry and now sought an alliance with the Masonic House of Rothschild in England. To accomplish this he chose a Jesuit who was Jewish by race—Adam Weishaupt. Weishaupt was a brilliant instructor of Canon Law—the evil Council of Trent—at a Jesuit university in Bavaria. We read:

"From the Jesuit College of Ingolstadt is said to have issued the sect known as 'the Illuminati of Bavaria' founded by Adam Weishaupt. Its nominal founder, however, seems to have played a subordinate though conspicuous role in the organization of this sect." [Occult Theocracy, Lady Queenborough, originally published in 1933]

On May 1, 1776, the Order of the Illuminati was officially founded in the old Jesuit stronghold of Bavaria. The Company would now use the Jewish House of Rothschild to finance the French Revolution and the rise of Napoleon the Freemason with his Jesuit-trained advisor, Abbe Sieyes. In spite of the historical writings of the Jesuit Abbe Barruel, who blamed the Rothschilds and Freemasonry for the Revolution, it was the Society of Jesus that used these very tools to carry out the Revolution and punish the monarchs who dared to expel the Jesuits from their dominions. The Jesuits, having been expelled from the Spanish Empire, found refuge in Corsica. From there they raised up their great avenger, Napoleon Bonaparte.

* * *

Lately, it was George Washington who was so beloved by France's General Lafayette. During the Revolution our great chieftain took the "boy General" under his wing for which cause the Frenchman named his eldest son, George Washington Lafayette. With this same endearing love the Roman Catholic Lafayette warned:

"It is my opinion that if the liberties of this country, the United States of America, are destroyed, it will be by the subtlety of the Roman Catholic Jesuit priests, for they are the most crafty, dangerous enemies of civil and religious liberty. They have instigated most of the wars of Europe."

* * *

Napoleon was captured by the English and banished to the island of St. Helena. There, his Memoirs were written which accurately described his masters, the Jesuits:

"The Jesuits are a military organization, not a religious order. Their chief is a general of an army, not the mere father abbot of a monastery. And the aim of this organization is: POWER. Power in its most despotic exercise. Absolute power, universal power, power to control the world by the volition of a single man. Jesuitism is the most absolute of despotisms: and at the same time the greatest and most enormous of abuses...."

"The general of the Jesuits insists on being master, sovereign, over the sovereign. Wherever the Jesuits are admitted they will be masters, cost what it may. Their society is by nature dictatorial, and therefore it is the irreconcilable enemy of all constituted authority. Every act, every crime, however atrocious, is a meritorious work, if committed for the interest of the Society of the Jesuits, or by the order of the general." [Fifty Years In The Church Of Rome, Charles Chiniquy, 1968, reprinted from the 1886 edition, quoting Memorial Of The Captivity Of Napoleon At St. Helena, General Montholon]

The Knights of Malta and the Jesuits work together!

(Truth seeker, this may seem irrelevant now, but it is important for you to be aware of this connection. As we shall see, the Knights financed Lenin and Hitler from Wall Street, also using their Federal Reserve Bank headed by Masonic Jews, Warburg in particular.) The Knights negotiated the Concordat (a Papal treaty) between the Pope and Hitler in the person of Franz Von Papen. They also helped top Nazis to escape to North and South America after World War II in the persons of James Angleton and Argentina's President Juan Peron.

In America, the Knights, with their OSS, later the CIA, were behind "Operation Paperclip". After World War II, top Nazis and scientists were illegally secreted into the United States. Many were placed in the top-secret military installation in Tonapah, Nevada known as "Area 51". The perfection of the Nazis' anti-gravity aircraft (flying saucers) was to be completed there, among other secret technologies. "Operation Paperclip" was overseen by America's most powerful Knight of Malta, J. Peter Grace. J. Peter Grace was subject to the Jesuit-trained Archbishop Spellman, as the American headquarters for the Knights was and is St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York.

1816 – JOHN ADAMS

Our founding Fathers knew of the Jesuit intrigue directed at the new Protestant Republic of these United States of America. In 1816, John Adams wrote to President Jefferson:

“Shall we not have regular swarms of them here, in as many disguises as only a king of the gypsies can assume, dressed as painters, publishers, writers, and schoolmasters? If ever there was a body of men who merited eternal damnation on Earth and in Hell it is this Society of Loyola's.” [The New Jesuits, George Riemer, 1971]

* * *

PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN

A personal friend of Professor Morse believed his warning of this Jesuit conspiracy. He was President Abraham Lincoln. We read:

“The Protestants of both the North and South would surely unite to exterminate the priests and the Jesuits, if they could learn how the priests, the nuns, and the monks, which daily land on our shores, under the pretext of preaching their religion...are nothing else but the emissaries of the Pope, of Napoleon III, and the other despots of Europe, to undermine our institutions, alienate the hearts of our people from our Constitution, and our laws, destroy our schools, and prepare a reign of anarchy here as they have done in Ireland, in Mexico, in Spain, and wherever there are any people who want to be free.” [Fifty Years In The Church Of Rome, Charles Chiniquy, 1968, reprinted from the 1886 edition]

THE JESUITS — 1868-1872

This new nation would be a centralized republic with the President exercising powers of an absolute monarch. The old Federal Republic of Washington would be converted into a huge centralized Empire, with the ten planks of the Masonic Communist Manifesto replacing the Ten Commandments of Moses.

In order to accomplish this, the Constitution had to be amended—“by hook or by crook”. It would be amended in accordance with the Masonic cry of both French Revolutions. “Liberty” would be the Thirteenth Amendment. “Equality” would be the Fourteenth Amendment. “Fraternity” would be the Fifteenth Amendment. We now will examine the Fourteenth Amendment, as it was the coup d'etat.

THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN

Even though he acted the tyrant in keeping Maryland from seceding and raised the Army of the Potomac to “put down the rebellion”, there is evidence that he had a change of heart. Accordingly to many, Lincoln was converted to Christ after viewing the battlefield at Gettysburg. He later joined the Presbyterian Church in Washington and had several spiritual conversations with his close friend and converted priest, Charles Chiniquy. We read:

“I will repeat to you what I said at Urbana, when for the first time you told me your fears lest I would be assassinated by the Jesuits: Man must not care where and when he will die, provided he dies at the post of honor and duty. But I may add, today, that I have a presentiment that God will call me to Him through the hand of an assassin. Let His will, and not mine, be done! The Pope and the Jesuits, with their infernal Inquisition, are the only organized powers in the world which have recourse to the dagger of the assassin to murder those whom they cannot convince with their arguments or conquer with the sword.... It seems to me that the Lord wants today, as He wanted in the days of Moses, another victim.... I cannot conceal from you that my impression is that I am that victim. So many plots have already been made against my life, that it is a real miracle that they have failed, when we consider that the great majority of them were in the hands of skillful Roman Catholic murderers, evidently trained by Jesuits. But can we expect that God will make a perpetual miracle to save my life? I believe not. The Jesuits are so expert in those deeds of blood, that Henry IV said that it was impossible to escape them, and he became their victim, though he did all that could be done to protect himself. My escape from their hands, since the letter of the Pope to Jeff Davis has sharpened a million daggers to pierce my breast, would be more than a miracle.” [Fifty Years In The Church Of Rome, Charles Chiniquy, 1958, originally published in 1886]

[Further along:]

Of the Jesuit hand in Lincoln's murder we read:

“I feel safe in stating that nowhere else can be found in one book the connected presentation of the story leading up to the death of Abraham Lincoln, which was instigated by the “black” pope, the General of the Jesuit Order, camouflaged by the “white” pope, Pius IX, aided, abetted and financed by other “Divine Righters” of Europe, and finally consummated by the Roman Hierarchy and their paid agents in this country and French

Canada on “Good Friday” night, April 14, 1865, at Ford's Theatre, Washington, D.C.” [The Suppressed Truth About The Assassination Of Abraham Lincoln, Burke McCarty, 1973, originally published in 1924]

* * *

THE JESUITS — 1945-1990

The Great and Terrible Second Thirty Years' War was now over. Europe, Russia, North Africa, China, and Japan were “a universal wreck” thanks to the Company of Jesus. Millions of “heretics” had been “extirpated” pursuant to the Jesuit Oath and the Council of Trent. Unlike the Treaty of Westphalia ending the First Thirty Years' War, the agents of the Jesuits controlled the negotiations at Yalta and Potsdam ending the second Thirty Years' War.

It was time to apply the Jesuits' Hegelian Dialectic worldwide. It would be known as “the Cold War”. The thesis and antithesis would be “the Free World in the West” verses “the Communist Block in the East”. The American Empire would head the West, and the Russian Empire would lead the East. Both sides would be financed by the Jesuits' International Banking Cartel centered in London and New York—the Federal Reserve and Chase-Manhattan Banks in particular.

The synthesis would be the destruction of the American Empire through the so-called “ending of the Cold War”. The illusion of ending the Cold War would legally enable Rome's Corporate Monopolies, federated together in New York City under the leadership of the Council on Foreign Relations, to give Russia and China high technology and financial backing. The giving of these necessities would perfect the War Machines of both economically communist and politically fascist giants for the purpose of invading North America, it containing the majority of the world's Protestants, Baptists, and Jews. It is for these reasons that the financial might of Hong Kong was given to Red China, along with an American Naval Base in Long Beach, California. It is for these reasons that the Panama Canal, built with American blood, sweat, tears and Yellow Fever, was given away to Panama to be manned by Chinese soldiers imperiling the American navy. It is for these reasons that the Jesuits in control of Washington have established nationwide gun registration for the purpose of nationwide gun confiscation just as they did in Hitler's Germany. It is for these reasons that the Jesuits, with their international corporations managed by the Knights of Malta, have financed and continue to build both the Russian and Chinese War Machines, while influencing American Presidents to close down scores of military installations across the country. These facts spell invasion—massive invasion by millions of foreign soldiers, with no God and no mercy. And if the Jesuits can manage to blow-up the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem and blame the American Empire for it, the Arabs will declare a holy war against “the great Satan”. The private wealth of Americans using International Business Corporations with bank accounts in the Bahamas will be seized just as they were in Castro’s Cuba. (The Knights have moved all their wealth into European banks denominated in Franks and Marks as well as Eurodollars, thereby escaping the coming American economic catastrophe.)

Meanwhile, as the Jesuits, with their American dictator’s internal police (FEMA) and foreign invaders, are “extirpating” “the execrable race” of American “heretics” and “liberals”, the European nations will be driven to lay down their historic differences and unify.

This unification will restore the Holy Roman Empire, for which reason the Jesuits are rapidly rebuilding Rome. When the smoke clears, China will control the East, Russia will control the North, and a unified R.C. [Roman Catholic] Europe will control the West. The Pope’s International Intelligence Community will see to it that Jerusalem is declared an international city with Solomon’s rebuilt Temple in her midst. World government will ensue and the Jesuits’ “blessed despotism” of the Dark Ages will have arrived, with the Pope being the Universal Despot of the World, so appropriately described in the Protocols Of The Elders Of Zion, while being the World Authority of The Documents Of Vatican II.

THE JESUITS — 1963

THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT KENNEDY

“It is of faith that the Pope has the right of deposing heretical and rebel kings. Monarchs so deposed by the Pope are converted into notorious tyrants, and may be killed by the first who can reach them.

“If the public cause cannot meet with its defense in the death of a tyrant, it is lawful for the first who arrives, to assassinate him.” [Defensio Didei, Jesuit Suarez, Book VI. C 4, Nos. 13, 14]

Freed remembers what apparently passes for polite conversation when men such as Colby and Cline get together. “It was quite bizzare” Freed said, “for the subject they chose was, ‘When is it acceptable to assassinate a head of state?’ Colby presented what he said was a theological and philosophically sound approach. The Catholic Church, he said, had long since wrestled with this question and had, to Colby’s mind, emerged with a sound concept: “It is acceptable” he said, “to assassinate a tyrant.” [Plausible Denial, Mark Lane, 1991, p. 85]

“A conspiracy is rarely, if ever, proved by positive testimony. When a crime of high magnitude is about to be perpetrated by a combination of individuals, they do not act openly, but covertly and secretly. The purpose formed is known only to those who enter into it. Unless one of the original conspirators betray his companions and give evidence against them, their guilt can be proved only by circumstantial evidence...and circumstances can not lie.” [Special Judge Advocate John A. Bingham, quoted in The Trial Of The Conspirators, Washington, 1865]

This chapter will examine the forest, not the trees. The hundreds of works covering the assassination can be reduced to a few simple facts. These facts viewed in the context of the previous chapters lead us to the “Lion” in his “Den of Iniquity” that had the power to execute Kennedy’s murder and successfully cover it up. That Lion was the Cardinal of New York and his Den of Iniquity was St. Patrick’s Cathedral, “the Little Vatican”, and home base of the American Branch of the Knights of Malta. From the death of Cardinal Spellman in 1967 until now (1999), the succeeding “Lions” having kept the assassination covered-up were: Cardinal Cooke (himself a Knight of Malta) and Cardinal O’Connor, a former Navy Chaplain during Spellman’s Vietnam War, and presently the Archbishop of New York.

Knowing that President Kennedy was not going to escalate the Vietnam War, the Intelligence Community began to prepare for his assassination. Roman Catholic Lee Oswald was chosen to be a patsy.... As a CIA agent, he had been sent to Soviet Russia by Allen Dulles in 1959, supposedly as a defector. Knowing that the CIA (OSS) and the KGB (NKVD) had worked together during WW-II, Oswald apparently took a vacation for nearly two years. During that time he married a Russian whose uncle was a Colonel in the KGB.

When he returned to the American Empire in 1962, he associated with CIA agents Howard Hunt, Frank Sturgis, David Ferrie, Guy Banister, Count George DeMohrenschildt, and Clay Shaw. Oswald was CIA, and related to a Jesuit. Emmanuel Josephson tells us:

“An interesting angle is presented by the Lee Oswald involvement. His cousin is reported to be a Jesuit priest. And it is a matter of record that Lee Oswald was invited to address the Jesuit college in Springhill, Alabama, on the subject of his activities, two weeks before the Kennedy Assassination. The Jesuit involvement closely parallels that in the Lincoln Assassination.” [The Federal Reserve Conspiracy And Rockefeller, Emanuel M. Josephson, 1968]

Jim Garrison clearly proved the CIA was involved in the assassination through Clay Shaw. He writes:

“...we discovered Shaw’s extensive international role as an employee of the CIA. Shaw’s secret life as an Agency man in Rome, trying to bring Fascism back to Italy, was exposed in articles in the Italian press.... To me among the most significant revelations were...the confirmation by both Victor Marchetti and Richard Helms that Clay Shaw had been an agent of the Central Intelligence Agency.” [On The Trail Of The Assassins, Jim Garrison, 1991]

And who was the Director of the CIA in 1963? It was Knight of Malta John McCone. Prior to that McCone had been a defense contractor who had formally headed the Atomic Energy Commission. Later in 1970, he was a board member of ITT while remaining a CIA consultant. Marchetti tells us:

“[The] ITT board member who later admitted to a Senate investigative committee that he had played the key role in bringing together CIA and ITT officials was John McCone, director of the CIA during the Kennedy administration and, in 1970, a CIA consultant.” [The CIA And The Cult Of Intelligence, Victor Marchetti, 1975]

Cardinal Spellman’s soldier, John McCone, Director of the CIA, participated in the Kennedy assassination.

Jim Garrison and others have proved that the FBI was also involved in the assassination. He writes:

“I already had concluded that parts of the local Dallas law enforcement establishment were probably implicated in the assassination or its cover-up. But now I saw that the highly respected FBI was implicated as well.” [On The Trail Of The Assassins, Jim Garrison, 1991]

Cardinal Spellman had two agents in the FBI. The first was the Shriner Freemason and brother-Cold Warrior, J. Edgar Hoover. According to Loftus, Hoover had cooperated with the Vatican Ratlines resettling Nazi war criminals in the Northeast. Why would he not cooperate with Spellman now? How could he refuse?

More importantly, Spellman’s key man in the FBI was Knight of Malta, Cartha DeLoach. As the third in command, DeLoach was in a position to supervise the assassination and suppress evidence. Garrison proved DeLoach did in fact suppress evidence.

After the assassination we see a telling relationship between Johnson and DeLoach. DeLoach was known as Johnson’s man in the FBI and the President would call him any time of the day. Curt Gentry writes:

“Lyndon Johnson couldn’t sleep. Late at night he had his aide, Marvin Watson, telephone the DeLoach bedroom. The president had suddenly become convinced that the murder of his predecessor had been a conspiracy and wanted more information from the FBI.” [J. Edgar Hoover: The Man And The Secrets, Curt Gentry, 1991]

This is the Cartha DeLoach who had signed a five-year contract with Lee Iacocca's Ford Mercury in connection with the series, “The FBI”. Both DeLoach and Iacocca were Knights of Malta, subject to Cardinal Spellman during the Kennedy assassination. Later DeLoach went on to be a director of PepsiCo. And according to Col. Prouty, that company also participated in Kennedy's assassination. We read:

“Nixon was in Dallas with a top executive of the Pepsi-Cola Company, Mr. Harvey Russel, the general counsel. Nixon was a legal counsel to that corporation. That top executive's son has told of Nixon's presence in Dallas at the time of the assassination, and Russell has confirmed the accuracy of his son's account. Later, sometime after the shooting, Nixon was driven to the Dallas airport by a Mr. DeLuca, also an official of the Pepsi-Cola Company. In addition, the son of another Pepsi-Cola executive was in Dallas at that time and had dinner with Jack Ruby, Oswald's killer, the night before JFK was murdered.” [JFK: The CIA, Vietnam, And The Plot To Assassinate John F. Kennedy, Col. L. Fletcher Prouty, 1992]

DeLoach, Iacocca, and the Knights of Pepsi, now PepsiCo, all worked together.

At the time of the assassination in Dallas, the Catholic priest, Oscar Shubert, was sent from Holy Trinity Catholic Church in Dallas to administer “Last Rites” for the President. Knowing that Kennedy's wounds were wounds of entry, he reported everything to his superior. Shubert's superior was the Bishop of Dallas, then The Most Reverend Thomas Kiely Gorman, DD. According to Martin Lee's article entitled “Who Are The Knights Of Malta?” appearing in the October 14, 1983 edition of the National Catholic Reporter, Thomas K. Gorman was a Knight of Malta. Being a brother Knight he reported directly to Cardinal Spellman, and kept him apprised of what was happening in Dallas.

At the time of the assassination in Dallas, roughly 12:30 P.M. in the afternoon, all the telephones went dead in Washington, D.C. for about 30 minutes. How could this have happened? Someone at ITT had to be responsible, as it served the Washington area. In 1963, one of the VIPs of ITT was Francis D. Flanagan. You guessed it. Flanagan was a Knight. Later, McCone, with his brother knights, coordinated a deal between the CIA and ITT to better work together.

The author knows there were several Knights of Columbus involved in the Kennedy assassination. They were working for the FBI in particular. But the only notable Knight who was involved was Senator Edward Kennedy in that, through his silence, he was consenting to his brother's murder. Maybe this is what has driven the perpetual Senator from Massachusetts to his ruined alcoholic life. Let us take a few moments to pray for the Senator that he might have a change of heart, that he would tell all, and that we might protect him. For he too was subject to the power of Cardinal Spellman.

Lastly we know that the Mafia was involved in the Kennedy assassination. The Mafia, CIA, FBI, and Office of Naval Intelligence has been working together throughout World War II. Jack Ruby was a mafioso and David E. Scheim makes it perfectly clear in his Contract On America that the Mob had at least two motives: the Kennedy brothers assault on Organized Crime and the loss of the Mob's gambling paradise in Cuba.

But those were not the reasons. The Mafia Dons were promised that they would make more money than Havana could ever produce, through the explosion of the international drug trade made possible by the Vietnam War. If they helped eliminate Kennedy, Johnson would escalate the war and, thereby, the drug trade. The CIA would bring the drugs in from the Golden Triangle, distribute them to the Mafia families, and both would profit.

More importantly, the Mafia's Commission had a favor to repay. Cardinal Spellman, through FDR, had arranged the release of “Lucky” Luciano because of “Operation Underworld” mentioned in the previous chapter. Now the Cardinal needed a favor. If refused, Spellman could use the entire intelligence community which he had helped to organize, to eliminate any mob boss. If agreed to, new gambling centers would open up, Atlantic City in particular.

Clearly, if the President was removed, everybody would acquire more power and wealth, the intelligence community would become more absolute, and the Cardinal would be even more respected by his peers in Rome. The rest is history.

Later, in 1964, for the first time in history, the Pope of Rome set foot in Fourteenth Amendment America. Cardinal Spellman had performed well and was rewarded by a visit from his Master, fellow Cold Warrior and Vatican Ratline handler, Cardinal Montini, who was now Pope Paul VI.

There is yet another reason for the removal of President Kennedy. He wanted to arm Israel. Loftus writes:

“In September 1962 Kennedy decided to supply Israel with defensive ground-to-air missiles capable of stopping aircraft, but not the Egyptian offensive missiles. It was the first arms sale by the U.S. Government to Israel.... Kennedy promised the Israelis that as soon as the 1964 election was over, he would break the CIA ‘into a thousand pieces and scatter it to the winds’.... With Kennedy's assassination in November 1963, the Israelis lost the best friend they had in the White House since Truman departed.” [The Secret War Against The Jews, John Loftus, 1994]

And why did the Vatican's Jesuits not want any arms sales to Israel at this time? Why did the Jesuit-controlled President Johnson turn his back as the Egyptian army moved up through the Sinai desert to prepare its assault on Israel in 1967? Because the attack upon Israel had to be provoked. That attack was provoked by the Jesuits' International Intelligence Community through Egypt falsely perceiving the weakness of the Israeli army and the supposed abandonment of Israel by the American Empire.

The six-day war, engineered by Knight of Malta James Angleton, had one primary purpose: the taking of Jerusalem along with the Temple Mount. The apparent lack of military hardware on the part of Israel provoked the planned attack by Egypt. Therefore, Israel launched a preemptive strike and, in six days, the holy city was in the hands of Rome's Zionist government.

Had Kennedy armed Israel, the Egyptians would never have been emboldened to maneuver for war. With no provoked war, there would have been no Israeli attack. With no Israeli attack, Jerusalem would never have been taken by the Zionists, controlled by the Jesuits' Mossad. With Jerusalem in Arab hands, the Zionists could never rebuild Solomon's Temple—unbeknown to them—for the Jesuits' “infallible” Pope “Who opposeth and exalted himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so he is God sitteth in the temple of God [Solomon's rebuilt temple], showing himself that he is God.” [II Thes 2:4]

It is safe to say that the Jesuit General, using the Pope with his most powerful Cardinal in the American Empire, assassinated President John F. Kennedy in 1963.

For it was Cardinal Spellman, “the American Pope” in command of his soldiers, the Knights of Malta, who oversaw the assassination.

And it was the Knights of Malta, using the Central Intelligence Agency, who aided in the actual assassination of the President. Those Knights were: CIA Director, John McCone, CIA officers William F. Buckley, and Henry Luce.

In 1963, both William F. Buckley and Henry Luce were personal friends of CIA agent Howard Hunt. We read from Mark Lane’s Plausible Denial on page 270, concerning Time and Life magazines, of which Henry Luce was the owner:

“I (Howard Hunt) had them typed up on a typewriter (fabricated official cables), and they were xeroxed, and the xeroxes were eventually shown to a person of Mr. (Charles) Colson’s confidence, and in Time and Life.” Hunt, after swearing that he had never been involved in a disinformation effort to embarrass Kennedy, had now testified that he had merely sought to doctor and create evidence to prove that Kennedy was a murderer.

Again in Plausible Denial we read of Hunt’s connection with pompous William F. Buckley, Jr. on page 207:

“(G. Gordon) Liddy completed his testimony perfectly, stating that while he no longer associated with Hunt, he did see him last, he recalled, when both men demonstrated their support for another former CIA officer, William F. Buckley, as Buckley celebrated the anniversary of his television show at the New York Yacht Club.”

Dear truth seeker, Hunt was close to both powerhouses, Buckley and Luce. Hunt was also working with two of his fellow criminals in the future Watergate scandal, G. Gordon Liddy (Jesuit-trained) and Chuck Colson.

And in 1985, it was Mark Lane who proved in Miami’s federal court that Hunt was in Dallas the day President Kennedy was murdered. Therefore, the conclusion was obvious. The CIA, with its agent, E. Howard Hunt, had killed the President. In the words of the jury’s forewoman, Leslie Armstrong, found on the inside cover and page 322 of Plausible Denial, we read:

“Mr. Lane was asking us to do something very difficult. He was asking us to believe that John Kennedy had been killed by our own government. When we examined the evidence (for 65 minutes) we were compelled to conclude that the CIA had indeed killed President Kennedy.” Hunt had been part of it, and that evidence, so painstakingly presented, should now be examined by the relevant institutions of the United States Government, so that those responsible for the assassination might be brought to justice.

Vatican Bank Sued For Alleged War Crimes

Editor’s note: We have been holding the following information for several months in anticipation of publishing it in conjunction with our Front Page story for this issue of The SPECTRUM.

As was mentioned in a note within the Front Page story, remember the superb 1984 Bantam Books volume by David A. Yallop, called In God’s Name, which details the author’s thorough and astonishing investigation into the murder of Pope John Paul I (the Pope just before the present one) on the night of September 28-29, 1978, after John Paul I had been digging into the massive web of corruption surrounding the Vatican Bank.

Considering the Jesuit-Vatican theme of our Front Page story, one is inclined to speculate that, though the Franciscan Order is principally implicated in this news item, they could well be the “fall guy” to protect and mask a Jesuit “guiding hand” behind the scenes.

What is most important to note here is not the lawsuit itself—which could have been “engineered” for any of a number of reasons not apparent on the surface. Rather, pay attention to the seemingly outrageous historical details of the accusations. These are shenanigans very similar to those routinely described in our Front Page story. Just a coincidence?

1/24/00 SHERMAN H. SKOLNICK

In apparently the first legal action of its kind, the Vatican Bank has been sued by World War Two victims and their heirs and beneficiaries. Brought as a class action in the U.S. District Court in San Francisco, the initial plaintiffs are Ukrainians and ex-Soviet citizens, but the affected class includes Serbians, Roma, anti-Fascist Croatians, and Jews.

The suit seeks “an accounting, restitution, disgorgement, and to recover damages arising out of defendant VATICAN BANK (hereinafter referred to as IOR (Istituto Per Le Opere Di Religione, Institute for Religious Works), the FRANCISCAN ORDER, and other banking institutions’ and religious orders’ and organizations’ participation in a common scheme and course of conduct:

“(1) to profit from, both directly and indirectly, the inhumane and genocidal system instituted by the Nazi and Ustasha ideology;

“(2) to obtain, accept, conceal, convert and profit from assets looted by the Ustasha Regime and deposited in, or liquidated through, the IOR, Defendant Banks, and Franciscan organization during the ascendancy of the Ustasha regime and following the demise of the regime at the behest of former Ustasha and Nazi leaders through the offices of the Franciscan Order; and

“(3) to retain and convert assets deposited in their institutions by the Ustasha and the Franciscan Order.”

The suit uses the definition: “The ‘Ustasha Regime’ is defined as the German puppet fascist government of Croatia under the direction of its leader Ante Pavelic known as the ‘Poglavnik’ (Leader). The Ustasha regime operated under German protectorate from 1941 through 1945 and included numerous members of the Franciscan Order as both military and civil functionaries”. The Court papers state: “Among the top Nazi beneficiaries of the Croatian-Vatican treasure was Adolph Eichmann who received a new identity as a ‘Croatian refugee’ before being smuggled to South America.”

The suit points out “Evidence of the extent of the defendant’s participation in wrongdoing has only recently come to light as a result of the disclosure and declassification of archived documents in the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and other countries, as well as from the reports of several commissions and/or task forces created by the United States, Germany, and elsewhere, and in particular the 1997 Supplemental Report by the United States State Department: U.S. And Allied Efforts To Recover And Restore Gold And Other Assets Stolen Or Hidden By Germany During World War II, The Fate Of The Wartime Ustasha Treasury, released under the auspices of Under Secretary of State Stuart E. Eizenstat.”

Among the fourteen pages of details in the Court pleadings: “Vatican Bank...has its principal place of business and is incorporated in Vatican City but conducts business and financial transactions worldwide on behalf of the Roman Catholic Church including the United States and California with total assets in excess of 3 billion dollars. Defendant IOR engages in for-profit merchant banking transactions in the United States, California, and elsewhere through its investments and transactions with other banks. Defendant Franciscan Order also known as First Order of Franciscans (O.F.M.) includes and/or included several Croatian Franciscan Orders in California, the United States, Croatia, and Italy."

Other eye-opening details in the suit include: "Croatian troops assisted the German occupiers of Ukraine in their systematic plundering and looting of Ukrainian resources and individual property. In exchange for the Croatian assistance in Ukraine, the Ustasha were given a free hand in Croatia and Bosnia to loot, plunder, and terrorize the non-Croatian populace. The Croatian Treasury contained plunder from Ukraine and assets seized from the Ustasha victims in Yugoslavia. Without the full support of Nazi Germany for its loyal ally, the Ustasha, the Ustasha Treasury would not have been permitted to retain the profits from Ustasha atrocities; instead these funds would have been sent to Germany."

Further: "Upon the demise of the Ustasha government in 1945, assets valued at between 50 and 180 million dollars were transferred from the capital, Zagreb. The majority of these funds, estimated at more than 80 million dollars, were transferred to Vatican City with the assistance of Roman Catholic clergy, and in particular members of the Franciscan Order, part of or sympathetic to the Ustasha."

Moreover: "Many officials of the Ustasha government, including the war criminals like Pavelic, were secretly housed by the Franciscan Order in Vatican City or Rome. The Ustasha Treasury with the assistance of IOR and Franciscans was used to resettle the Ustasha fugitives in Spain, Argentina, the United States, and other sympathetic countries. The Ustasha were also alleged to have reaped profits in conjunction with their Franciscan and IOR benefactors by black-market activities in post-war Italy, selling Vatican and Red Cross documents to Nazi war criminals and by acting as informants and provocateurs for various intelligence services."

As a class action, the suit raises common questions of fact and law, including:

"Did the defendant IOR knowingly or otherwise carry out banking transactions that involved capital or assets that included looted and plundered assets of victims of the Nazi and Ustasha Regime deposited with the IOR by the remnants of the Ustasha Regime or the Franciscan order?

"Did the Defendant Banks, IOR, or Franciscan Order improperly retain or convert deposited assets of the plaintiffs to/for their own or another's use?

"Did the defendants knowingly aid and profit from the concealment of the Ustasha wartime Treasury?

"Did the defendants knowingly assist fugitive war criminals from the Nazi and Ustasha regimes by making available and providing international transfer of funds?"

Among the pleadings "Facts Specific To IOR And Roman Catholic Religious Orders":

"Many high officials of the Ustasha government were Roman Catholic clergy and in particular Franciscans. The Vatican maintained an 'Apostolic visitor' in Zegreb, the Croatian capital from 1941 until the end of the War. Relations between the Vatican and the Ustasha were cordial. The Papal Legate in Croatia was Mgr. Marcone, who openly blessed the Ustasha, publicly gave the Fascist salute, and transmitted instructions from Rome to the Croatian clergy and episcopacy, principally concerning the forced conversions of the Eastern Orthodox Christians."

Among the many details of the complaint:

- That the former Ustasha Treasury was used post-World War Two to finance Nazi fugitives in exile.

- That the Vatican Bank to date "has refused to account for the Ustasha related transactions despite numerous inquiries from other governments and the London Conference on Nazi Gold."

Those close to the pending lawsuit advised us not to attract too much attention to the lawsuit on TV in Chicago. Why?

The apparent reason is the large Pro-Vatican Croatian community in the Windy City as well as what some contend is a large number of the Ustasha or their offspring who live in Chicago. In the 1970s, there were many violent events between the Croat and Serb communities in Chicago, including shootings and bombings, not well reported outside of town.

A few years ago, when we taped a one-hour cable TV show on the subject of Bosnia and Serbia, one of the program guests threatened to leave the studio if I raised the issue of Vatican complicity in "ethnic cleansing" of Serbs from Croatia, by which many thousands of Serbs were killed or injured. (Another guest did raise the issue.) During the Kosovo War, Spring of 1999, the monopoly press said almost nothing about the bloodshed in Croatia reportedly instigated, at least in part, by the Vatican.

It is perhaps no coincidence that the Vatican Bank suit was brought in San Francisco. Headquartered there is the Bank of America, owned jointly by the Vatican, the Jesuits, and the Rothschilds. The parent holding company, Bank America, has been reportedly largely bought out by the Japanese mafia, the Yakuza. Most every bank in California is reportedly owned by the Yakuza. Seldom mentioned by the news fakers: the Yakuza is the main force in West Coast dope trafficking.

A possible problem in the case getting a fair hearing and trial: Most of the judges in the federal judiciary in California are banker-judges. Will they arbitrarily protect the Vatican Bank and other banking institutions implicated in the case? The federal appeals court in San Francisco is riddled with banker-judges. This is an unpublicized situation, by the way, throughout the U.S. and throughout the history of the federal courts in the United States.

For some background, visit our www.skolnicksreport.com website. In particular our stories: "The Vatican, The Giannini Family, And The CIA" and "The Pope's Three Banks In The U.S." (If I can get my scanner to work properly, I intend to post with this, some pages from the Vatican Bank lawsuit.)

The Time Has Come To Awaken From Your Dream!

4/8/00

VIOLINIO ST. GERMAIN
ESU "JESUS" SANANDA

Do you hear the alarm clock ringing? It is calling you to the State of Awakening, for the time has come that you exit the time of your dream world and step into the true reality. Yes, you have been living in a virtual state of dreaming, and now that time of dreaming is ending. It is time that you open your eyes, sit up, and examine the world in which you TRULY exist!

Good evening. Germain here, along with my brother, Esu. We come this day to tell you that the time is over for the dream world you have been living in. We come unto you this day, in and of The One Light of Creator Source. We bring unto you only The Light and The Truth. We are of and in service unto The One Creator Source.

We would ask that you FEAR NOT, for this is the time you have been awaiting. It is not time for you to run and bury your heads in the sand.

You ones have known that this time would soon be upon you, and we are come this day to tell that this time has now arrived. Your TRUE work shall begin very shortly; the time of informing the masses and sharing with them all that we have spoken is drawing to a close. We are come to tell you that you must begin your own creating and manifesting—and you DO know how. So, let the shackles fall from your feet, let the blinders fall from your eyes, and open yourselves unto your true nature.

You say that you feel as though you do not belong on the planet where you are, and I tell you a truth about that: You do not belong in the REALITY you have accepted, and have created for selves. So, it is your obligation unto yourselves that you re-create your reality and make your reality such that you DO feel as though you belong.

That which you perceive to be your reality, is really the dream state, and from that state you must awaken. You must actually see the world, the universe, and selves without the influence of what you perceive as reality, which in fact, is but the dream world.

now realized such. But, stop and begin to pay attention, for you will find, in so doing, that nearly everything you have been able to perceive as a reality has become a reality. Now you must stretch the limits of that which you perceive as possible, and include anything that you can think, and you shall be able to manifest even that which you, until now, have not been able to conceive as possible for your existence.

Your existence is not limited to that third-dimensional, heavy body that you perceive to be self. YOU HAVE, IN ACTUALITY, NO SUCH THING AS LIMITATIONS! You are not bound by the physical limitations, for you are more than a physical being. You are bound only by your own limited thinking and perceptions.

You must step outside the box; think outside the box; and begin to exist outside that box. The box has walls of limitation—ah—but those limitations are only in your own mind's perception. Change the perception, and you change your reality.

"All hocus pocus!" you say? Well, I beg to differ with you.

Again, that comes from your limited thinking and limited perceptions. That which you deem impossible, yet exists, you call magic or hocus pocus. It is neither, I assure you.

You are not bound by either time or space, and you must begin to understand that you exist in all times and in all places, for you are but a holographic bit of the entire Whole of Creation. And, as one holographic bit, you contain ALL the information of the Whole. Yet, because you are perceiving through such small vision, you cannot see past that which is in front of your physical eyes.

You have been looking through eyes that have a film over them. Remove the film and see clearly that which has been in front of you the whole time, for there are many, many things which exist with you that you have never been aware of before now.

You think we exist in a higher dimension, and that is true. But the higher dimension is only limiting to your physical being, as you have perceived it to be. Your physical body can also elevate in frequency now, which will allow you to be bound not by any so-called "laws of physics", but only by the limits in your own mind. It must always begin in your mind, for your mind has such control over your physical bodies that, unless the mind is first changed, no outward change will take place.

That is the why for all these years of information flow—to reprogram the mind, because of the inherited limited thinkingness.

Your existence is not limited to that third-dimensional, heavy body that you perceive to be self. YOU HAVE, IN ACTUALITY, NO SUCH THING AS LIMITATIONS! You are not bound by the physical limitations, for you are more than a physical being. You are bound only by your own limited thinking and perceptions.

In reality, the only laws of physics are those which you have accepted. In reality, there are no such things as limitations in the laws of physics, for even in what you call the physical universe, only that which you perceive to be limitations are in fact limitations. Change the perception, and you change the limitations. Do you see the truth of this?

There is so much more under both Heaven and Earth that you are unaware of, due to your self-inflicted limitations, and only YOU can remove those limitations. But in order to do so, you must first reject the lie you have been taught—and that lie is that there are limitations.

You are bound by your own fears of the unknown, and afraid to walk where no man has already been. AND THAT, DEAR ONES, IS YOUR GREATEST LIMITATION!

Fear is a negation, and in all the Omniverse of universes, that is known. Fear only holds you back, limits you. So, remove ALL of your fears—those you are clearly aware of and those which you may only suspect, and you will have removed your limitations.

YOU MUST COME TO KNOW THAT ALL IS POSSIBLE!

The only way you can come to that point is to begin to reject those things of the lie, which are known unto you as your own fears. If you are afraid to walk in the darkness, then you shall never find the Light switch, and you shall remain in the darkness. You must, therefore, have the KNOWING that the Light switch exists, and if that switch is thrown, then darkness will disappear and the Light shall prevail.

It is the same with your own limitations. You do not expand and stretch yourselves because you fear that you may be wrong. Well, those fears are keeping you from turning on the Light, and the lies of those fears have worked very well for many eons of time.

WE ARE HERE TO TELL YOU THAT YOU HAVE NOTHING TO FEAR!

The only thing which can keep you from the Light is your own self-imposed limitations, brought unto selves by your own inbred fears.

Throw off the shackles of your fears, and remove the blinders of lies from your eyes. See that darkness is but the illusion, and is your dream state. For once the Light is turned on, darkness does not exist.

But, conversely, how do you turn on darkness? It cannot be done, can it? You see? Darkness is a lie! In order for darkness to be, the Light must be extinguished.

Have you ever known to turn on darkness? No, you only know to turn on Light!

See the riddle? Know the answer. Darkness can only exist where there is absence of Light.

In all of Creation—and that includes

ALL universes and ALL dimensions and ALL planes of reality—the Law of Light is universal, and in fact is the only Law there is. How could it be otherwise, as The One Light IS Creator Source of All That Is?

You come out of the darkness only by bringing forward the Light, and when the Light is brought forward (radiated outward from your knowing within), you will understand and KNOW that darkness is the illusion.

Only YOU can cause yourself to stop living in the illusion of darkness. Only you can bring yourself into the Light by taking down the walls of the boxes in which you have imprisoned yourself and limited self. You will then find that you are limitless, and that you have at last awakened from your dark dream world.

So, again, we say unto you that the morning of your reality has dawned, and you must awaken! You and only you can cause yourself to open your eyes and begin to live in the world you are responsible for by your own manifested creation. Think upon this, for in so doing, you will understand that it is, in fact, Truth.

We are Germain and Esu, and we leave you now, with your new world. We leave as we came—in and of The Light of the One Creator Source. Bless you.

Go forth from your dreams of darkness and ignorance, and on into the Radiant Light of Truth and Understanding. Salu.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

News Desk Special Report:

Does Elian Gonzales Case Bring Out The “Best” In Clinton’s Criminal Regime?

Editor’s note: The following is an excerpted collection of revealing insights you may not have observed discussed on the controlled print and broadcast media’s propaganda machinery, for obvious reasons! Little Elian Gonzales is most certainly a pawn on a playing field of sordid political shenanigans. Just what the truth of the matter may be is still up for discussion and the following emsemble provides some truly insightful points of view on the matter.

Listen anytime to Vote fraud vs. Honest Elections “crash course” radio show over the internet at www.sightings.com in the archives, April 3, 2000 show, Jeff Rense host, Jim Condit Jr. guest.

Thanks to Rep. Tom Delay of Louisiana on Meet The Press, Senator Bob Smith in an Easter Sunday nationally televised press conference, and the newsmax.com website, we have the following, showing the utter illegality of what our occupation New World Government did to Elian and the Miami Gonzales Family:

On Easter Sunday’s edition of Meet The Press, Rep. Tom Delay faced off with one of the Clinton Administration International Criminals, Eric Holder, considered by them a Deputy Attorney General, and pinned his ears back. Delay forcefully made the point that this was the first time in American history that the Executive Branch invaded a private home WITHOUT a court order, and WITHOUT a warrant.

And God bless Senator Bob Smith of New Hampshire, who eloquently made the same points, and many others, in an Easter Sunday morning press conference. He was followed by a tearful and moving Marisleysis Gonzales, who beautifully represented all that is good in this fight against pure evil.

And this from NewsMax, dated Saturday April 22, 2000:

LEGAL ANALYSTS COMMENT ON RAID

NEWSMAX.COM—Andrew Napolitano, legal analyst for Fox News and a constitutional scholar, had this exchange today on Fox with Eric Holder, Reno’s second in command at Justice:

Napolitano: Tell me, Mr. Holder, why did you not get a court order authorizing you to go in and get the boy?

Holder: Because we didn’t need a court order. INS can do this on its own.

Napolitano: You know that a court order would have given you the cloak of respectability to have seized the boy.

Holder: We didn’t need an order.

Napolitano: Then why did you ask the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals for such an order if you didn’t need one?

Holder: [Silence]

Napolitano: The fact is, for the first time in history, you have taken a child from his residence at gunpoint to enforce your custody position, even though you did not have an order authorizing it.

[End of quote from the newsmax.com website.]

So, the usurpers of the Executive Branch of our American government turned a BIG corner on Good Saturday, 2000—they openly, violently, and completely violated the Fourth Amendment to the US Constitution by raiding a private home without a warrant and kidnapping a person, a child in that home, without a court order, which had been specifically denied them by the circuit court a few days earlier (the court having noted that Reno and the INS themselves had asked for a court order to transfer custody of Elian to the father, Juan Miguel, from the Miami family—WHICH FAMILY WAS STILL CONTINUING TO EXERCISE THE CUSTODY GRANTED THEM BY RENO HERSELF and the INS five months ago, shortly after the boy was rescued from the ocean.

Now, note well: What the Executive Branch usurpers did, was combine in themselves the Executive, Judicial, and Legislative branch just like any other dictatorship throughout history. Just as this administration has usurped the high offices it occupies by means of unverifiable elections, counted in secret—just like all the other dictatorships in history which use elections as a cover have done.

To be clear, of course, it is not the low-level, cocaine-nosed opportunist, Clinton, who has effective working control of our computerized election system, but the Permanent Revolution Ruling Elite behind him, the Fed, and the Five Big TV Networks.

This Ruling Elite also controls puppet Gore and puppet Bush, as we have often stated in this e-wire. And, if honest, verifiable elections, with paper ballots counted by citizens in each neighborhood, are not restored, then the Ruling Elite will pick either Bush or Gore to install in the upcoming computer-generated election results.

At about 3 PM on Sunday, the Clinton/Reno/Castro Junta, which had maintained until now that they didn’t need a court order or warrant to snatch Elian, have floated a story that they actually DO have a court order signed by a federal judge after all. Sorry, Clinton Liars, you’re 30 hours too late with this latest ploy—or else how do you explain your failure to cite it under the intense criticism of yesterday and today, under which pressure you simply said you didn’t need one.

Before going on, as I write this, there has now been 24 hours PLUS passed since the Clinton Criminals grabbed Elian without any public appearance of Elian and Juan Miguel. No video yet. No public appearance yet.

In the Easter Sunday press conference, Marisleysis Gonzales charged openly what was already on the Internet on Saturday—that we are being fed computer created photos by Thug Greg Craig with regard to the happy reunion of father and son.

She made the point that she had cut Elian’s hair the day before, and that the short hair evident on Elian’s head as he was grabbed from the house by the Clinton Criminals differs from the longer hair shown on the photos released by Thug Greg Craig later that day. The Drudge Report [thedrudgereport.com] carried side by side pictures of the pre-dawn snatch and the Craig-provided photo, with the headline: “My, Elian, how your hair has grown in the last three hours!” and the further headline above another set of pictures: “And what nice teeth you’ve grown!”

While awaiting further evidence, from my own observation it seems clear that the hair on the side of Elian's head in the pre-dawn snatch photo is very close to the head, almost like a military or burr haircut, and in the later Craig-provided photo, Elian's hair seems to be much more bushy on the side, although still close cropped.

As far as the missing tooth goes, Elian clearly has all his top teeth in the Craig-released photo, but the bottom teeth are not shown. In a magnified version of the picture on the Drudge website, using a normal magnifying glass at my computer screen, it seems clear that in the pre-dawn snatch picture on the Drudge website Elian is missing both a top tooth and a bottom tooth, although I will reserve final judgment pending further analysis by photo experts INCLUDING experts that are NOT provided by our occupation government.

FOX network is claiming for hours on Sunday that they've engaged a professional photo analyst who says the Craig photos are authentic—without naming the expert!

Further, I suspect, having been so advised by medical personnel, that Elian is probably under heavy sedation and medication, probably being treated by mind-altering drugs—which is why his government kidnappers and captors have not been able to produce a video or a live appearance of Elian in the time since the grab.

Thug Craig assures UPI that the photos are real, because the curtains in the background in the photos are the same ones in Juan Miguel's mysterious living quarters at the military base. And whose word do we have for the curtains? Why, Thug Craig himself.

What do you want to bet that somebody's frantically scampering not only for similar curtains, but also for that batman shirt that Elian is sporting in the Craig photo? Who snapped the Craig photo? They can't give any names. Hmmm.

Notice, as one of the Miami Gonzales relatives pointed out at the Easter Sunday press conference, the Clinton/Reno Junta, so interested in protecting children from guns, had NO PROBLEM sending assault rifles in against Elian, within a few feet of his face, carried by a New World Order paratrooper wearing scarey, Star Wars-like riot gear. Gun control for YOU, Mr. & Mrs. America, but NOT for the New World Order stormtroopers who are to be your oppressors. (See the list of domestic enemies who should be dealt with, at the end of this message.)

Jack Thompson, attorney for newsmax.com, revealed on FOX Cable News Network that the urgency for the stormtrooper kidnapping by Clinton/Reno/Craig/Castro was that Elian Gonzales, the boy himself, is the plaintiff in the case that is pending for resumption on May 11, 2000, and if Elian's captors now produce a document by Elian dropping the court case, then the coast is clear for Castro to order the dad to fly back to Cuba, taking Elian with him.

IF the scenario in the above case happens, then the pre-dawn commando raid to snatch Elian can be seen even more clearly for what it is: a Communist police-state tactic to return 6-year-old Elian Gonzales to a Police State.

Beware of Jesse Jackson: Jesse Jackson showed up on CNN's Late Edition as a defender and apologist of the Clinton/Reno commando raid that snatched Elian, as well as urging aid for the failing Castro regime. Jackson wants to get in the middle of the negotiations, and the Miami Gonzales family should BEWARE of this slippery turncoat snake, who has become increasingly compromised as he's gotten older.

[Editor's note: The above caution is surely a gentle understatement of the situation. Readers may recall the extremely informative article back in our January 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM, by Sherman Skolnick, detailing a wide array of Jesse Jackson's shenanigans and shady affiliations. That outlay was titled: "On The Rev. Jesse Jackson And His Role In The Murder Of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr." After digesting that information, it should not surprise anyone why Jesse throws himself upon so many situations that are seemingly none of his business.]

Beware neutralizing editorials which merge the good with the evil. Bob Schieffer of Face The Nation and Tony Snow of Fox Sunday took an "everyone's to blame" approach. Baloney. This is why Tony Snow has the job he has, because he consciously, or probably unconsciously, intuitively acts as a safety valve for concerned citizens blowing off steam, and nothing more.

All polls should be questioned, of course. On mid Sunday afternoon, a major shift is happening on FOX network. It appears that suddenly they are letting through calls almost exclusively from Americans who fully and enthusiastically support Reno and the INS. This is a common tactic of the Big Five networks: cover the event objectively, more or less, when it's first breaking, but then orchestrate the coverage, polls, and calls (by pre-qualifying calls) to give the impression that public opinion is shifting to the position desired by the Occupation Government and the Ruling Elite behind it.

Please, if anyone can get to the Marisleysius and the Gonzales family, please explain to them that all of these polls may be faked, and that they should not lose heart because of polls about which we know nothing.

Notice how silent Al Gore is—boy, his disagreement with Clinton/Reno/Castro is really deeeep, and full of conviction.

Jeb Bush, Governor of Florida, has covered himself in shame. He should have acted like Governor Fob James of Alabama, who said he would use the National Guard to protect the Ten Commandments hanging in Judge Roy Moore's courtroom.

Bush should have done the same, and Clinton/Reno/Castro would have been checkmated. But, Jeb Bush's inaction and impotency is a clear indicator of what Texas Gov. George W. Bush will be as president—not worth a whit, and implementing the same New World Order agenda, with a more conservative face and plenty of meaningless lip service.

I have to deal with the thuggish attorney, Greg Craig, who is very typical of the brand of totally self-centered, totally ruthless, totally intergrity-less, might-makes-right barbarians in a legal suit with whom I have had to deal since challenging the Ruling Elite locally and nationally since 1979.

This type of amoral, dead-eyed, ostensibly soul-less individual is part of one of the worst banes afflicting our society, and a frightening phenomenon. In Cincinnati, examples of such individuals are Judge Thomas Crush, Judge Norbert Nadel, former county GOP head Ralph Kohnen, former GOP head Eugene Ruehlmann, and now Ohio Secretary of State Joe Deters, among others. I'm sure you have this type of totally sold-out enforcer in your area as well. May some of these men come to their senses and recover their souls, the price of which in each case exceeds the whole world, as scripture tells us.

Anyway, on CNN's Late Edition with Wolf Blitzer, thug Craig made clear that HE would not allow the Miami Gonzales family, the press, an independent doctor, or anyone else to go in to verify that Elian is conscious, is not drugged, is himself. Now, I wonder why that would be?

While Blitzer asked Craig and another dead-eyed Reno mouthpiece, Doris Liesner (spelling?), whether or not US officials had drugged the boy, which they both denied, the question was never asked whether Castro's Cuban officials on the scene administered the drugs to Elian, or whether private cooperators administered drugs—so that these Occupation Government frontiers could plausibly deny a US government involvement.

Overriding the Mayor: Miami Mayor Joe Carollo was kept in the dark regarding the raid BY HIS OWN POLICE CHIEF, on orders of the Federal Government. On CNN's Late Edition, Mayor Carollo told the nation that he asked his police chief and city manager what law they were following by keeping him in the dark about the impending raid, involving a case where no investigation was even pending?!

Carollo was kept in the dark because the Reno-Craig faction didn't trust him, as he consistently refused to take part in their proposed terrorist operation against the Miami Gonzales family. Carollo also reported that many of his Miami police on the scene were pepper gassed because THEY had no warning. This withholding of advance knowledge of the Reno-Craig terrorist operation from the Mayor of the city is ANOTHER POWERFUL indication that, as we assert, the New World Order Occupational Government is IN PLACE already, and occupying the highest offices of our federal government.

Let me break new ground in this e-wire by providing the most likely key to what was used on the Miami police chief to cause him to feel bound and confident to defy his Mayor. In all probability, the Miami police chief is a member of the Masonic Order, as are so many local police chiefs across the country.

I would surmise that a Mason in the government pulled some kind of Masonic pact on the Miami police chief, which would be higher to many Masons than the chain of command in the local Miami government. Carollo, a Catholic, is PROBABLY not a Mason, and therefore would be viewed as a second-class citizen by Masons.

All police chiefs—and everyone else—should withdraw immediately from the Masonic societies, which extract immoral oaths from their members at every stage of the process. Also, Masonic societies are Luciferian organizations, which knowledge is kept from the vast majority of the unsuspecting members, who feel that they are joining some kind of a graduate college fraternity or Lion's Club, despite the unsettling dark oaths they are required to take, without warning, at all stages of the Masonic initiation.

For sincere truth-seekers who have been duped into joining the Masons, see Morals And Dogma by Masonic authority Albert Pike, and The Lost Keys To Freemasonry, by Manly P. Hall. Both books state openly, at several points, that the Masonic order is a Luciferian organization which worships Satan, not Jesus Christ. Anyway, I believe that the Masonic connection will provide the key to the Reno forces co-opting the loyalty of the Miami police chief away from the Miami mayor. The first step in this investigation, if anyone is in a position to do so, is to ascertain whether or not the Miami police chief is a Mason.

In election danger: Mayor Joe Carollo of Miami and Sen. Bob Smith had better demand verifiable elections next time around. Sen. Bob Smith is one of only two Senators elected in predominantly verifiable elections in New Hampshire; Mayor Joe Carollo of Miami, Florida has taken such a courageous stand throughout this whole affair, that he had better demand a verifiable count next time, or I fear he will be gone.

The method will be a sudden and overwhelming criticism from all the Miami press over some real or created issue right before the next mayoral election, followed by a computer-generated result showing Carollo the loser (just as happened to Gov. Fob James for protecting Judge Roy Moore's courtroom). Miami, Florida is a completely crooked, computerized zone when it comes to vote-counting, extensively covered by the Colliers in Votescam: The Stealing Of America.

It is my belief that most elections are left alone because most candidates are party men. But once an elected official shows the courage and verve that Carollo has shown, then the computer programmers AND local news media deal with that person at the next election.

Here's the Rodney King Affair connection: Everyone will remember that some of the policemen who arrested Rodney King were sent to prison for their real or alleged abuse of Rodney King, who was actively resisting the police (two other Black men were let go in the same incident, because they didn't resist). Much clearer is the extreme abuse that went on in the Elian snatching case yesterday. So much greater is the reason in this case which sets an unconstitutional and tyrannical precedent—to bring the offenders to justice.

The Constitution talks about domestic enemies. The following is a short list of Occupation Government agents or cooperators who need to be brought to justice for the child abuse they have inflicted on Elian, and the constitutional rights of the Gonzales family in Miami which they have violated.

Domestic Enemies who need to be brought to justice: Greg Craig; Bill Clinton, Janet Reno, all the federal agents who participated in the commando raid against Elian, and everyone in the chain of command from the street operatives all the way up to Clinton.

Prayers Answered: Despite the "Way of the Cross" that Elian, Marisleysius, and the Miami Gonzales family, and probably the dad, Juan Miguel, are undergoing, the prayers were answered in the photos and film footage that were captured on film and got out. Let us, the Americans who are adult and free, take this opportunity to help Elian now, and throw off this tyrannical, evil Occupational Government soon. Lets all keep praying.

YOU THOUGHT THIS WAS A FREE COUNTRY?

From the INTERNET, 4/22/00: [quoting]

By: Frances Emma Barwood, retired Phoenix, Arizona Vice Mayor/Councilwoman, 520-899-1907, <fbarwood@primenet.com>, P.O. Box 417, Mayer, AZ 86333-0417.

[Editor's note: For those of you who don't know, Frances is quite a spunky, "common sense" senior citizen who "was retired" after pushing hard for some honest answers from various parts of the government and military concerning the so-called "Phoenix Lights"—the massive, multi-faceted UFO display over Phoenix the evening of March 13, 1997 which started about 8 p.m. and continued its dazzling displays for over three hours.]

You thought this was a free country? Again, our government has gotten away with violating the Posse Comitatus Act. That is that no federal troops will be used against a citizen of the United States.

Whether you agree that Elian should or should not go back to Cuba with his father, it is the method used once again by the Justice Department and Janet Reno. Waco, Ruby Ridge, many other raids on private citizens, and now, Elian Gonzales. When Reno started calling the Gonzales' house a "COMPOUND" we knew the die was cast. Why didn't the Governor of Florida, Jeb Bush, declare states' rights as per the Tenth Amendment?

Where is the line in the sand? Is this the future we are willing to condone for our children and grandchildren? There was no court order for them to raid the Gonzales' house, only Reno's orders.

Where is the great outrage on the part of our Congress? Aren't they supposed to follow our Constitution? Isn't that what their oath of office commits them to do? I am so sad listening to the regular news media condone the government actions. Fox News, however, has been calling it for what it is: government by The Government. Forget the Bill of Rights.

Now, if Elian is returned to Cuba, he will be put into the same re-education camp that Cuban children are put into.

Isn't it amazing that our newest immigrants are showing us that, no matter if we agree or disagree with the issue, our government is NOT following the Constitution. I repeat: there was NO COURT ORDER to storm the Gonzales' house. We are seeing the fall of our great nation by gestapo tactics.

Isn't that what most of our ancestors and forefathers fought for and escaped from? We need to call our so-called representatives to stop this and charge Clinton and Reno with malfeasance in office.

I now know how the Von Trapp family felt as they watched their country go under Hitler. One Miamian said it all: "WE THOUGHT WE ESCAPED TO A FREE COUNTRY!"

Where will it all end?

"People can lie, cheat, steal, and murder in this world, and they may get away with it. But we are all going to Judgment, and that is all that matters." — John Leissner Koch, 1955 [End quoting]

THE LEFT'S RESPONSE TO THE ELIAN GONZALES AFFAIR

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 4/16/00: [quoting]

From Charles Morse <chuckm@chuckmorse.com>, <http://www.chuckmorse.com>

The Elian Gonzales Affair has drawn the left out of the woodwork in their knee-jerk sympathy for their friend in Havana. Suddenly moderation is the party line as expressions like "there's no black and white" and "there is good and bad on both sides" emerge as the slogans to be repeated in agitprop style. The left has cynically found family values as they are championing the rights of the family, in this case, ironically, a father. They are suddenly defenders of American law and order. This affair presents a glimpse into the mind and soul of the authoritarian socialist.

A left wing friend complained to me recently that Cuban Americans are "politicizing" this issue. This is really rich, considering that the left politicizes everything—from language that would be impolite to private sexual behavior.

The left politicizes private issues for the purpose of creating division and hatred, thus empowering the state through legislative solutions to the problem they created. Whether our government should send a refugee back to certain slavery, however, is most assuredly a political issue.

This friend accuses me of being in the Cuban American "amen corner". I'm proud to be counted in that amen corner, standing up for freedom with people who appreciate that freedom more than most Americans. I wonder which "amen corner" my left-wing friend would be found in.

In a Communist country there are no rights of the family per se, as family rights—and for that matter, all rights—are subordinated to the state which acts in the name of "the people" for "the common good".

The Cuban government owns both Elian and his father in the same way that an American would own a set of hubcaps. According to the Washington Times, Luis Fernandez, a spokesman for Cuba's unofficial embassy in Washington, stated that Elian "is a possession of the Cuban government" and that "no other entity can remove this".

This view is in harmony with American leftist thinking, whether conscious or internalized, and is formalized in their support for organizations simpatico to the philosophy of Cuban communism such as the Children's Defense Fund, the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, many large foundations, and others.

The American left, in many cases unwittingly, resonates with the Cuban Constitution, which places responsibility for raising children in the hands of the state. The communist state is given the legal authority and is required to step in if there is a conflict between parents and children. Cuban law requires parents and teachers to raise children with a "communist personality" and outlaws "influences contrary to communist development".

The education philosophers who presently hold sway over our government run public schools, and many "social service agencies" must be casting longing eyes over the Gulf of Mexico. When the left, whether witting or otherwise, talks about the "rights" of the family, this is what they really mean.

American leftists have been repeating, over 40 years, Hitler style, Cuban-generated statistics concerning high literacy rates, health care for all Cubans, and other old saws generated by the Cuban ministry of propaganda.

Communists, by their own admission, are not interested in telling the truth, only in reporting “facts” for the purpose of helping their glorious revolution. In fact, communists don’t actually recognize the existence of objective truth. Everything is perception.

The experts, to further the cause of socialism, must therefore mold perception. Since reality and morality are viewed as man made, the communist elite must exercise absolute power to insure that reality is created in their image. This is why a communist must not be believed; to them, it’s ok to lie for their cause.

The practical results of that cause are absolute power over all aspects of your life. This is, of course, the opposite of the American approach, which is that God created an objective, identifiable universe, and that man, created in the image of God, is capable of individually perceiving reality and morality.

It would, of course, be irrelevant and missing the point if the Cuban claims of high literacy and health standards were correct. What good are any of these things if one is not free? A man sentenced to life in prison is not much better off if he reads well or is kept in good health. The Cuban, like all communist “masses”, is serving a life term in slavery. The American left either doesn’t understand this, or supports it.

THE ELIAN CASE: TRACKING THE DARK SIDE OF THE GOVERNMENT

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 4/22/00: [quoting]

By Joel Skousen <jksousen@enol.com>

Every time the US government engages in a major media event intent upon provoking the public to supporting a hidden leftist agenda, they make mistakes and leave untidy bits of evidence which shows the telltale marks of collusion.

I am going to present to you some of this evidence to demonstrate that the Elian Gonzales case has little to do with reuniting a father with an unwilling son. This is a power-play between the Clintons and Castro trying to discredit the Cuban American community so as to help facilitate the normalization of US relations with Cuba. There is a lot of media propaganda going on here as well as government cover-up and deception necessary to keep this agenda hidden.

One of my subscribers asked me if I wouldn’t explain the process of how I go about analyzing news and discovering the signs of collusion, so that he could begin to do this on his own. This case presents an ideal opportunity to discuss a key technique. It involves experience, so it can’t be taught directly.

When you have enough experience working in and around the legal field, or government, or the military, or anything that involves the interaction of bureaucracy and power, you develop, over time, a feeling for what it takes to get certain things done. Without intervention, the wheels of justice, and government, grind very slowly. So when I see something happen too quickly, or when I see powerful legal roadblocks brushed aside with ease, I know that someone behind the scenes has tapped into some form of power structure to gain an advantage. You then proceed to find out who is pulling the strings.

The trouble with the normal person is that he too easily accepts the simplistic media version (which always omits key information) and fails to ask tough questions about contradictions with reality that an experienced person would see.

For example, in the Filegate Scandal, the media focused on why the White House had hundreds of FBI files on Republican Congressmen and staffers. The experienced person would see another more important issue—that it was also illegal for the FBI to spy on conservative, law-abiding citizens. So, the real question is: “What was the FBI doing with these files?”

The answer to this question leads to the inevitable discovery of illegal government operations on a fairly broad scale. By the way, the media are trained to see these kinds of contradictions, and ask probing questions. When they fail to do so on obvious key issues, it almost always means they are covering for something or someone.

In the Elian Gonzales case, savvy observers see numerous anomalies with reality and are asking questions like: “How is it that Juan Miguel, the father, has the costly legal services of Gregory Craig, Clinton’s own personal impeachment attorney? Who made the arrangements and who’s paying the bill?”

Robert Novak reported in the Washington Times that the left-leaning United Methodist Church is paying Craig’s high fees from a special fund created by donors who “wish to remain anonymous”. Anyone who thinks these instant big-dollar donors are ordinary members of the Methodist Church doesn’t know how the real world works.

And, lest you think this is just benevolent liberal charity to help an indigent father get back his son, we have to ask: “Why did Greg Craig travel twice, in secret, to Cuba?” To meet with Juan Miguel? Nope—to meet personally with Fidel Castro!

One disgruntled government agent leaked to Cuban-American leader Diaz-Balart a secret memo from Craig to the White House, stating that he (Craig) “provided Castro with sufficient guarantees that US security personnel would make certain that Elian’s father will not be allowed to defect.”

Again, with experience one should know that Craig couldn’t have made those assurances without prior instructions from the government. This, of course, implies that the US government is working directly against persons who may be seeking asylum from a Communist tyranny. We can also infer that the Castro-Clinton team knows that Juan Miguel is being forced to play a role, and that they believe there is a high probability that Juan Miguel would try to defect.

Here is another interesting question: How is it that the Miami relatives ended up with Kendall Coffey as their attorney in the Elian case? Coffey is a long-time Democratic collaborator with Janet Reno when Reno was Attorney General of Florida. He was chosen by Reno to head-up the US Attorney’s office in Miami. Coffey had raised money for Reno to fund her election campaigns. Coffey offered his services to the Miami Cubans at near pro-bono rates and, in my opinion, will play a key role in undermining Elian’s case when it gets before the courts (who often skew the law to protect the dark side of government).

Coffey’s presence is particularly offensive to some Cuban Americans since he was forced to resign as US attorney in disgrace after he was accused of biting a lap dancer on the derriere in a notorious Miami striptease club. I’m sure Coffey sold his services to the Miami relatives on his ability to gain access to Janet Reno. That’s an understatement! But, in reality, Coffey’s presence is typical of dark side operations where they attempt to infiltrate and control both sides of any legal battle.

There’s more: How is it that the pediatrician advising the Justice Department on how best to handle Elian Gonzalez is a long-time Clinton confidant and former member of Hillary’s health-care task force? Only reliable Clinton cronies were allowed on this secretive panel. Predictably, Dr. Irwin Redlener told the press that Elian is being “horrendously exploited” and should be immediately removed from the Miami relatives’ home. Still not convinced there is collusion going on? Read on.

RENO GETS A PHONE CALL

Finally, there is Janet Reno’s admission to the mayor of Miami that she got a controlling phone call directing her actions. All savvy government watchers know that lower-level subordinates and high-level leaders get private phone calls from time to time directing their actions. Sadly only the dark side of government has the right to tap government phones, and the FBI isn’t about to reveal the secret collusion of its ultimate leaders. Occasionally a mid-level official or judge will let it slip that he “got a phone call” directing how he should rule in a case. Here we have a similar slip that was not meant to become public.

Mayor Corollo of Miami said that, during his negotiations with the Attorney General, Reno had suggested bringing both sides of the family together in a government secured compound (that would ring warning bells for me) for a period of up to two weeks, where the Miami relatives and Elian's father would determine the boy's custody amongst themselves. By the next day Corollo said that Reno had reneged on the offer, without explanation. On a WABC broadcast, Corollo told of his follow-up conversation with Janet Reno:

"The following day, Wednesday, I called her from my office.... In fact, we had several telephone conferences with her. I was present and my colleague, the mayor of Miami-Dade County, was also present in my office. And I said to her: 'Madam Attorney General, why was it that when we left your office on Tuesday we had at least an agreement from you that you were going to be flying to Miami the next day. You said that you would call both of us later on, on Tuesday evening, so that we could give you the list of people and go over the locations where you could meet with the different leaders that you said you wanted us to bring to you to meet with in Miami. And you've never called us. Why?' And the answer that she gave me was: 'Mr. Mayor, I received a phone call.'" Corollo said Reno refused to elaborate or say who it was who directed her actions. Don't be too quick to assume it was Clinton. There are other bosses as well.

Last week I mentioned the US government's drug connections with Cuba, as well as the long-term globalist agenda of gaining normal trade relations with Cuba. Cuban-American leader Diaz-Balart also believes that the left's quest for normalization of relations with Cuba is the underlying reason for making Elian a cause célèbre. He feels that there are numerous forces working to discredit and undermine the credibility of the Miami Cuban-American community, who stand as a major political obstacle against recognition of Cuba. He notes, correctly, how the media is constantly trying to bait Cubans who are keeping a vigil around Elian's home. The cameras never show films of the peaceful candlelight prayer vigils, but only of the few moments each day when the Cubans are induced to counter the press, provocative challenges and questions. Those shots of angry faces are all that air on the evening news.

Also notably omitted from news coverage are the items that would correctly showcase Castro's threatening speeches about Elian on Cuban radio, including his openly stated plans to house Elian and his father in a special building with integral school facilities to reindoctrinate Elian when he returns. Anyone who thinks a Cuban father will have American-style custody and parental rights in Cuba does not know how the world works in a Stalinist regime.

The media has also carefully evaded the airing of the charges by Elian's mother's relatives recounting in a sworn affidavit of the physical abuse Juan Miguel inflicted upon Elian's mother, Elizabeth, during their marriage—in one case, causing her to be hospitalized.

FREEH RESIGNS AS FBI DIRECTOR

One major player in the Clinton team is bailing out before the end of his term. There are two possible motives. As an insider with access to much of the plans within the dark side of government, he could be privy to another major cover-up on the horizon—that he doesn't want to handle. This was the reason for Ken Starr's attempt to resign before issuing the Vince Foster cover-up.

It could also be that Freeh knows the Powers That Be (PTB) intend to put a phony conservative Republican in the White House and that Freeh will have to resign soon anyway. One of the tell-tale signs that a government official is an insider is to see how he or she can so easily shuffle from one plush job to another, without having the normal credentials necessary to get the job on merit—like Elizabeth Dole becoming head of the American Red Cross. The PTB take care of their own, as long as they are loyal and can be recycled.

MORE OF THE DARK PAST OF JANET RENO

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 4/22/00: [quoting]

By Joel Skousen <jksousen@enol.com>

After this morning's gestapo-like raid on Elian's house in Miami, I thought all my subscribers ought to have some background on Janet Reno's law enforcement background. This will tell you something about the "rule of law" in Amerika and the dark side of Janet Reno.

From The Laissez Faire City Times, Vol. 4, No. 16, April 17, 2000:

BRAINWASHING IN DADE COUNTY

Before assuming the office of Attorney General, Janet Reno was District Attorney in Miami's Dade County. During her tenure in office she launched a case to help children she alleged were victims of sexual abuse. She brought in so-called "experts" who tend to use typical brainwashing techniques to convince children they are victims of abuse. In such cases the children typically invent fanciful tales of abuse, and in this case the same scenario played itself out.

Reno's victim, however, wasn't some adult pedophile, but a young boy who Reno insisted be tried as an adult. Bobby Fijnje moved to Miami with his family in 1981. His father had been a diplomat for the Dutch government in the Antilles. The family had decided to make the United States their new home. They joined a local church where Bobby helped work in the Sunday School.

On August 28, 1989 the police arrived at the Fijnje home. They were given permission to search the house for evidence against young Bobby. They ripped his room apart looking for pornography, but found nothing incriminating. The police took the boy into custody and put him through a long, drawn-out interrogation. For the first two hours the boy's father was allowed to be present, but he was then told to leave the room so the police could talk to Bobby alone.

The newsletter Casualties Of Sexual Allegations (January 1997) says that young Bobby was an insulin-dependent diabetic who "became ill and unsteady during 7 hours of questioning during which he had almost no food. Promised he could leave if he confessed, he made a sort of confession, but when immediately taken into custody, he reasserted his innocence."

That evening the boy was put into state custody at the Juvenile Detention Center where he was forced to remain for almost two years while Janet Reno engaged in another one of her crusades to help children. Bobby's father explains what happened:

"During Bobby's imprisonment, we twice asked for him to be released on bond, the second time in the care of his aunt and uncle (a retired Connecticut State Supreme Court judge), but this was refused because 'Bobby was a threat to the community' and because it was said that our family would flee the country. Bobby pleaded not guilty, and was tried as an adult on the motion of the Dade County prosecutor's office, headed by Ms. Reno.

"The pre-trial hearings finally began in early August 1990 with Judge Norman Gerstein presiding. Pre-trial hearings lasted until the middle of January 1991, at which time a jury was selected. Before and during the trial, we were repeatedly urged to accept a plea-bargain and warned of the dangers Bobby faced in prison. We were told that he would have AIDS within a week after entering prison. We were told what a horrible time he would have in prison, where the jailers are mere administrators and the prison is actually ruled by the prisoners. But we knew Bobby was innocent, and we refused to accept a plea bargain.

"During the trial, not a single witness ever testified that he or she had seen anything improper. Over 800 members of the church stepped forward and offered to testify on Bobby's behalf. At least 14 motions for mistrial were filed by Bobby's lawyers, Mr.

Mel Black and Mr. Peter Miller. Over 500 sidebar conferences were held in this case, which cost the taxpayers well over $3 million, money that could have been used to feed the poor, improve public health, or shelter the many homeless people who roam the streets of Miami. Instead, this money was spent on the longest trial ever held in Dade County, all in an effort to send an innocent boy to jail for life.

“On the morning of 4 May 1991, the jury advised Judge Gerstein that a verdict had been reached, but we waited an hour and a half for that verdict to be read. Judge Gerstein advised our lawyer that we must wait for Ms. Reno’s arrival. She wanted to be present when the verdict was read.

“Bobby was acquitted on all counts.

“During this period, our family had to endure daily attacks and lies in the newspapers and on television. My wife and I were accused of being drug dealers and ringleaders in a child pornography business. Death threats were sent to us and left on our telephone answering machine. In addition to local and county police departments, the FBI was also called in to investigate us. Unmarked police cars cruised through our street, while a police helicopter with a searchlight flew overhead at night. Television reporters knocked on every door and window in the house, but we refused to give interviews because we believed that the media would not truthfully report them.

“Ms. Janet Reno was the Dade County Prosecutor at the time of the investigation and prosecution of our son, and as such she must bear the primary responsibility for what was done to him. Is Ms. Reno the right person to head the United States Justice Department? Is she really a crusader against child abuse? Is she aware the she abused my son by her actions and robbed him of one year, eight months, and one week of his life?”

According to an article in the Wall Street Journal, psychologist David Raskin said that Reno’s treatment of this child was the “most inhumane and despicable” case he had seen in over twenty years of practice.

RENO IS HERE TO HELP YOU

Typical of accusations obtained through brainwashing, the alleged victims of Bobby Fijnje said that the boy dug up graves. They reported that one woman turned herself into a witch and that Bobby used to dance naked on the roof of the church in full public view which, of course, no one else noticed. On top of this the boy was accused of eating a newborn infant.

When the case was finally over, the Fijnje family decided to leave the United States. Their attorney told them that Janet Reno was not finished with them yet and was looking into further charges against the tormented child. Though they wished to remain in America, the family left, fearing that Reno hadn’t finished with her child-saving crusades. And they were right. Since then she moved on to Waco and now her attention is focused on young Elian. For years people have laughed at the punch line: “I’m from the government and I’m here to help you.” When it comes to Janet Reno these words lose their humor and become frightening instead.

Half the time I think that Janet Reno doesn’t exist, and couldn’t exist, except, perhaps, in the pages of a Stephen King novel.

Reno’s Righteous Raid; Reno & Castro Care About Kids; Journalists “Laughed” At Fears

1) Looking at the bright side, the raid on Elian’s Miami home wiped out Earth Day coverage. Jane Fonda’s CNN special bumped.

2) Saturday’s New York Times headline warned about “U.S. Gathers Officers” to “Take Cuban Boy” but the Washington Post announced: “Hope Grows in Elian Talks”.

3) On Saturday’s Capital Gang and Inside Washington, Al Hunt, Evan Thomas, and Nina Totenberg all backed the raid. Newsweek’s Thomas called Reno “principled” and denigrated the Miami family’s “bogus, paranoid fear” that Elian would be taken to Cuba.

4) Dan Rather didn’t see how Reno could be criticized for the operation, insisting “Castro feels a very deep and abiding connection” to the Cuban people and cut into Marisleysia’s house tour to express concern for “fairness and for balance”.

5) CBS’s Jim Stewart claimed Janet Reno has “true compassion” for children and “she truly cares for them”.

6) ABC legal analyst Jeffrey Toobin insisted Reno was perfectly within her rights, but FNC legal analyst Andrew Napolitano charged a court’s ruling “was flagrantly disobeyed by the federal government” which conducted “a high-class kidnapping”.

7) FNC challenged Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder over the legal basis of the “unprecedented” seizure of a child without a court order and asked if the overnight negotiations were “a ruse”.

8) Journalists “laughed” at fears about the feds grabbing people’s guns, but “after this picture today no one can laugh at that picture because it’s real” suggested Chris Matthews on MSNBC.

9) NBC’s Jim Avila reported from Havana about how Elian’s classmates are “ready to go” to the U.S., claiming “there’s no way of knowing how much choice” they have. Avila benignly relayed that Castro just “wants to re-create Elian’s classroom and surround him with hometown friends” in a “beachfront mansion”.

10) FNC stayed with Elian until 1 a.m., CNN until 11 p.m. Before sunset in California, MSNBC went to repeats of shows about Barbara Eden and Star Trek.

Editor’s Note: I tried to simultaneously watch six networks Saturday morning, and three all day, so know I missed a lot, especially from CNN, which I barely saw. But I think I caught a lot of very biased material which in the interest of timeliness I’m putting out in this unusual Sunday edition.

1) On the up side: Janet Reno’s snatching of Elian wiped out Earth Day coverage. None of the cable news networks aired any live coverage Saturday afternoon of the rally on Washington’s Mall hosted by Leonardo DiCaprio.

To stay with Elian coverage, CNN dumped its scheduled Saturday night at 10 p.m. ET special People Count: Hot On The Trail, hosted by Jane Fonda.

As transcribed by MRC analyst Jessica Anderson, pitching in on Saturday, Toobin contended:

“I think one of the things we have to keep in mind is that attitudes toward this raid, towards this whole issue, are very different in South Miami than they are in the rest of the country. I think, in the rest of the country, the attitude has not been ‘How dare she do this!’ but is ‘What took her so long?’ And the fact is, Lazaro Gonzalez has not had legal custody to this child for either seven or nine days, depending how you count, but certainly he didn’t have it anymore. He had been in clear defiance of the Attorney General....

“Look, the law says that the father gets custody, period, and Juan Miguel and his advisors, Gregory Craig, had said: ‘Look, we’ll talk about anything as long as it begins with custody returning to the father.’ And that was something that the Miami relatives were never going to agree to, so I think it is true that Janet Reno, you know, may have had a lot of hope, but in fact these negotiations were destined for failure. And as amazing as it may have seemed months ago, this violent raid was—violent without any injuries—was the only way this was ever going to be resolved.”

Fox News Channel. Just a few minutes earlier, FNC viewers had heard quite a different take. At about 9:40 a.m. ET FNC legal analyst Andrew Napolitano told anchor David Asman: “One of the reasons that we have such a basically peaceful and free society is because we have an independent judiciary and we have moral suasion behind the rulings of courts. Here the ruling of the court was flagrantly disobeyed by the federal government.”

Asman asked which order. Napolitano explained: “The order issued by the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals four days ago, which said once the INS chooses the guardian, and the INS chose Lazaro Gonzalez to be the guardian, and an application for asylum has been made by the guardian, the INS can not change the guardian and that’s exactly what they did here.”

Asman: “So, is this Executive overreach?”

Napolitano: “This is more than Executive overreach. This is contempt of the circuit court of appeals order. This is a high-class kidnapping is what it is, sanctioned by no law, sanctioned by no judge.”

7) FNC challenged Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder over the legal basis of the raid and asked if the overnight negotiations were “a ruse” but neither CBS News or MSNBC raised either issue in live Saturday morning interviews with Holder.

Appearing on FNC after CBS and before he went on MSNBC, Holder was asked by FNC anchor David Asman at 9:45 a.m. ET about the negotiations which went until 4:30 a.m.: “Was this all a ruse for the raid, the negotiations which took place this morning?”

FNC legal analyst Andrew Napolitano then got into an argument with Holder: “Isn’t it true that the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, this is Judge Napolitano, that the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals just last week said that the INS, once having chosen Lazaro Gonzalez as the guardian, could not now make a change? And the INS has no discretion under the statutes but to hear the asylum application because it was made by the guardian it chose?”

Holder dismissed it as a “preliminary” finding, prompting Napolitano to demand: “Isn’t it clear in that court of appeals ruling, preliminary though it may be, that the court ruled that the INS may not do exactly what it did this morning, which is, without a court order, change the guardian of this child. When is the last time a boy, a child, was taken at the point of a gun without an order of a judge? Unprecedented in American history!”

Holder: “He was not taken at the point of a gun.”

Napolitano: “We have a photograph showing he was taken at the point of a gun.”

Holder: “They were armed agents who went in there who acted very sensitively.”

Napolitano pressed again: “Why didn’t you go to a judge and get a court order to transfer custody like every other custody transfer in the history of this country has occurred, instead of using authoritarian jackboot tactics like putting the muzzle of a gun in the face of a six-year-old boy?”

(A few hours later, at 12:42 p.m. ET, FNC’s other legal analyst, Stan Goldman, checked in from Los Angeles and disagreed with Napolitano: “I think they had the right to do it...no where in this opinion does it say anything that would prevent the government from going in and getting Elian. In fact, it says just the opposite. It says ‘Look, we are only going to rule on the fact he can’t leave the country. We’re not going to rule on who’s got custody of him.’ It was very clear on that point and that was a very clear signal I think to the Justice Department, to Janet Reno, that even the 11th circuit was not going to stop her from going in and getting this boy.” But Goldman did agree that there “is no precedent” for not having a court order before seizing a child.)

8) Journalists “laughed” at fears about the feds grabbing people’s guns, but “after this picture today” of the officer holding a gun in front of Elian, “no one can laugh at that picture because it’s real” suggested Chris Matthews on MSNBC on Saturday afternoon.

At 1:52 p.m. ET MSNBC anchor Brian Williams asked Matthews if the use of such force to go into a private home could be added to the list of incidents which have fueled the “patriot” movement, such as Ruby Ridge and Waco. Matthews answered in part:

“We have laughed in the big cities, I should say among journalists, about the black helicopter image of a federal police force, or even a UN force coming to grab their guns or take them away. We’ve always laughed at that. Well, after this picture today, no one can laugh at that picture because it’s real. When the federal government moves under this administration, under this Attorney General, perhaps in these times, it move swiftly, dramatically, and it uses military force to the highest degree visible. I mean, I’ve never seen a kid facing an automatic weapon in my life like that!”

Matthews made a similar observation later on MSNBC’s special 7 p.m. ET Saturday edition of The News With Brian Williams.

9) Castro wants to send a bunch of Cuban kids to the U.S. to keep Elian company, NBC’s Jim Avila cheerfully reported from Havana on Saturday’s NBC Nightly News. “Among those ready to go” is a classmate who is “all packed, new clothes, a fresh school uniform and school supplies”. But, Avila asserted, “There’s no way of knowing how much choice in the matter Cecilia really has.” What “choice”?

Avila also again showcased how Castro will house Elian in a “beachfront mansion”, but instead of portraying it as a place for “re-education” and indoctrination, Avila benignly relayed that Castro just “wants to re-create Elian’s classroom and surround him with hometown friends.”

NBA basketball, which went until 8 p.m. ET/7 p.m. CT, bumped NBC Nightly News in at least those time zones, but prompted by the big news day, MSNBC aired it at 6:30 p.m. ET.

Avila passed along how “Cuban writer Miguel Barnett described his people as wounded by the long ordeal, but grateful.”

Barnett: “We want to see him very soon arriving at the airport.”

Avila laid out Cuba’s propaganda line: “The only official rally, originally scheduled as a protest in Juan Miguel’s home province, turned into a national party featuring an appearance by Castro himself. The Cubans insist that if Elian can’t come home to Cuba, part of Cuba should be given visas to join Elian in the United States.”

Over video of a girl, a suitcase, and then other school kids playing, Avila trumpeted: “Among those ready to go, Elian’s classmate, six-year-old Dianela Catejas (sp?), all packed, new clothes, a fresh school uniform and school supplies, one of twelve children Castro has outfitted for the trip, demanding U.S. State Department visas for them. Her mother Cecilia Macias, says Dianela was picked because of her good grades and her friendship with Elian. There’s no way of knowing how much choice in the matter Cecilia really has, but she told NBC News, and our Communist Party escort, she supports the mission despite natural concerns about sending her daughter to a foreign country.”

Cecilia Macias: “As a mother, I feel worried, tense, but I know there are a lot of people that will look after the kids.”

Over video of Elian’s Cardenes classroom and then the “mansion”, Avila concluded:

“The Cuban government says it wants to recreate Elian’s classroom and surround him with hometown friends, both in the U.S. and when he returns to Cuba. Desks and other Cardenes schoolhouse supplies have already been sent to Havana and installed in a beachfront mansion chosen to house Elian, his parents, and friends when he comes back.”

I guess it’s no concern that all the other kids will be separated from their fathers. At least Avila is probably clueless as to “knowing how much choice in the matter” the other parents have.

10) The MS in MSNBC should stand for “Minimal Substance”. Saturday night FNC stayed live with Elian interviews, call-ins, and coverage until 1 a.m. ET, while CNN remained with the story until going to sports at 11 p.m. ET. But MSNBC had different news priorities. They sent everyone home at 9 and talked about Barbara Eden.

FAKED PHOTOS—MORE INCONSISTENCIES

From the INTERNET,
<AABCC@egroups.com>, 4/24/00: [quoting]

I would like to point out further INCONSISTENCIES in the pictures, some so obvious my twelve-year-old brother picked them up!

1. The pictures of “happy Elian” (the family shot and the shot with his half brother) were admittedly taken at the same time, according to Mr. Craig, who claims to have been present. The funny thing is, when Elian met with his grandmothers and the nuns, months ago, he wore a gold chain. During that meeting, one of the grandmothers took the gold chain and kept it, giving it to one of the nuns as a gift later that evening. In all of the insuing photographs of Elian since that meeting, he has never once been spotted with that (or any other) gold chain. In the family shot, Elian has no gold chain, but if you look at the pic of him and the ½ brother, he’s got the chain on.

INCONSISTENCIES!

2. Aside from the fact that INS didn’t stop in the midst of their “3 minute and 30 second” raid to collect Elian’s clothes, he somehow had his batman tee which, by the way, has a tear on the sleeve which would set it apart from a newly purchased one, for the pictures. The same tee that Mary (however it’s spelled) has in her home at this very moment.

3. Even a fourth grader realizes that when a shadow hits a corner, it extends from the figure/ground contact, to the corner, and then up the wall. No wonder Cubans claim Elian is holy! According to the pictures Craig has put out, Elian can throw his own shadow. If you look at the picture, even though the boy is in front of a wall, his shadow doesn’t touch the floor or extend up the wall, it is literally PASTED to his body.

Geez Washington, for all the money you have, the least you could do was hire a SEMI decent chump to fix the pictures! Shame on you! [End quoting]

WHAT IS BEHIND THE ELIAN CASE?

From the INTERNET, 4/25/00: [quoting]

From: Jon Roland, Constitution Society,
<jon.roland@constitution.org>

To: piml@egroups.com

The Elian case has given rise to much discussion of why the Clinton administration seems so desperate to placate Castro’s demands for the return of Elian Gonzalez. Their April 22 raid, just a day before Easter, seems to have been done, more than anything else, in response to a deadline imposed by Castro. If so, then what threat from Castro could motivate an action that is likely to cost the Democrats the next election?

Dick Morris has suggested that the blackmail threat is of another Mariel exodus, dumping thousands of Cuban criminals and mentally deranged persons on the United States, as were most of the 125,000 Cubans who were ejected for the United States in 1980, which has caused a great deal of trouble, and to which Morris says Clinton attributed his election loss as governor.

While the behavior of the Clinton administration in the Elian case does indicate it is being done under threat of blackmail, the “nuevo Mariel” theory does not offer a convincing explanation, and may be a misdirection. After all, another Mariel would have little effect on the Clintons or their fortunes, or even on the fortunes of the Democrats, except perhaps in a few local elections. That is a solvable problem.

No, the threat must be far more serious than that. For a more plausible theory, we need to consider what Castro might have on Clinton and the Democrats that could drive this administration to conduct such a politically disastrous action, despite the efforts of rigged polls to conceal the political fallout.

What Castro and Clinton have in common is drugs. The recent article in The New Australian suggests a better theory.

Cuba has become a major transit route for cocaine smuggling into the United States, under the protection of the Cuban government. It is thought to provide much of the funds needed to sustain the Castro regime, after the loss of aid from the Soviet Union. However, for all his faults, Castro is a committed communist, and it is thought that being a drug lord is not how he wants to be remembered by history.

And his legacy may be on his mind now. There are rumors that he is in ill health, perhaps even suffering from a terminal malady. He knows his regime will not survive his death. Therefore, he must be considering what he can do for his swan song. Therefore, we need to ask ourselves what sort of thing he might try to do.

Several things suggest themselves. One is a kind of “April surprise”, like the rumored “October surprise”, in which the Republicans, through William Casey, made a deal with the Iranians to continue to hold the hostages through the 1980 election and until the inauguration, which helped defeat Jimmy Carter, in exchange for arms, which were delivered under the cover of the Iran-Contra operation, to provide a plausible misdirection for the motive for it (raising funds to support the Contras).

So who benefits under this theory. The Republicans. Castro may be blackmailing Clinton into doing something that will cost Gore the election, so that the Republicans will win, and perhaps pay off Castro in some way.

This theory is plausible for another reason, because both the Democrat and Republican leadership is suspected of complicity in narcotics trafficking. Clinton may have protected the transit operations at the Mena airport, but it was George Bush and Oliver North who are reported to have been most directly involved in that operation. Castro may be blackmailing the Republicans as well, by threatening to disclose information about such activities that could not be ignored, as have all the eyewitness reports of persons involved in such operations.

The situation of narcotics trade needs to be reviewed. It is estimated to be the single largest market in the world, greater than the market for food. It is thought to involve more than $200 billion in annual sales in the United States, which is more than there is currency in circulation. Since almost all of this trade is in cash, that means that almost all cash needs to be laundered to support the narcotics trade, and it is often said that, within a few weeks, most new currency becomes tainted with cocaine.

How does all this cash get returned to circulation? Obviously, it could not be done without the complicity of the major banks and of government officials, who are rumored to take their cut, and who are therefore the real drug lords.

But what is all that money used for? Clearly, not for purchasing luxury goods by the traffickers. Much of it appears to be invested in legitimate businesses, but this much investment, over the many decades that this has been going on, would soon buy control over most of the major assets in the United States. It would become a problem of how to buy everything without revealing the sources of the money.

But it is also clear that what is being bought is governments. Every government, at every level—federal, state, and local. Every judge, every sheriff, every prosecutor, every legislator, every president. And every country. No exceptions can be allowed, because the entire structure depends on secrecy. If the public became aware of what is going on, they could still bring it crashing down in a reformist revolution.

So what game is Castro playing? Jerking Clinton’s chains? Sending a message to George W. Bush that he could be implicated in the crimes of his father?

I can see another plan at work here. He may intend to go out in a really big way, by pulling down the whole, worldwide narco-trafficking empire of crime.

The way to do this is first to draw attention to Cuba, and the way the Elian case has been manipulated does that. That could be the opening of the curtain on the stage, and playing the fanfare. Then he turns on the spotlight and tells the tale that the world criminal conspiracy doesn’t want to come out.

If this is Castro’s plan, then we must encourage him to pursue it. If not, then we must make it our plan. It is the one way that Castro could be remembered by history as a hero. If he does this, then it would indeed justify his historical redemption.

ELIAN GONZALEZ AND CUBA AND THE SPY BUSINESS

From the INTERNET, by Sherman H. Skolnick, <<http://www.skolnicksreport.com>>, <skolnick@ameritech.net>, 4/26/00: [quoting]

To open up a supposedly "closed" country to big business, the robber barons need a trick. In the early 1970s, Red China was pried open by President Nixon to Rockefeller deals by sending in a ping-pong team as a publicity/propaganda stunt. The Rockefeller-owned First National Bank of Chicago loaned Red China billions of dollars. As part of repayment and reciprocal trade, mainland China has been allowed with impunity, via Chicago as an intake point, to flood the U.S. with their dope, called "China White". (The rest of the details are in my series on the Red Chinese Secret Police in the U.S.)

Likewise, Chicago has become part of a scheme to re-establish international cartels in Cuba, the monopolies and their Cuba-based assets having been expropriated by Fidel Castro in his rise to power. Reportedly tied to dope money laundering through the Chicago markets, Clinton, a Rockefeller agent, was saved from removal from presidential office by the U.S. Senate, key members of which were subject to blackmail. (More in later stories.)

Clinton has been too valuable as a created puppet to simply throw away. Right after escaping removal, he found an excuse to bomb out Serbia, to soften up the region for the oil companies and their southern European plots in respect to oil pipelines and shipments from the developing oil-rich Caspian area of the former Soviet Union.

To help pry open Cuba for international swindlers and exploiters, the Clinton White House and their patrons were prepared to use any artifice workable or to create one. The Elian Gonzalez Affair was convenient, if not staged.

Some contend a CIA operative reportedly unlawfully removed Elian from the custody of the Immigration and Naturalization Service authorities who ordinarily would have simply shipped the boy right back to Cuba. Another part of the same Cuban can-opener machine was George H. Ryan, elected Illinois Governor in 1998, amid commotions that he reportedly "bought" the Illinois State Elections Board to win a close election. Ryan has also been the focus of a driver's license bribery scandal. Numerous would-be truck drivers, some not eligible because they did not speak or read English, necessary to understand traffic signs, bought their licenses by bribing state officials.

Prior to becoming Governor, Ryan had been Illinois Secretary of State, that runs the driver's license facilities. Quite a number of those who had been working for Ryan have pleaded guilty to federal charges of taking bribes to issue unlawful licenses. Many claim, however, they did not keep the bribes but forwarded the loot, as they had been pressured by Ryan's henchmen, to Ryan's GOP campaign for Governor. Ryan says he knows from nothing but is willing to contribute heavily to charity, some of the ill-gotten funds, to show his "good faith".

An elite IRS team reportedly recommended to the Justice Department that Ryan be prosecuted for bribery, as to the State Elections Board mess as well as the driver's license scandals. The Clinton Justice Department, still loaded with personnel installed by President George Herbert Walker Bush, reportedly corruptly scrapped the IRS referral. And most who rely only on the monopoly press do not realize that Bill Clinton is a closet Republican making corrupt deals with Chicago-area Republicans.

cable TV program for our weekly series Broadsides, entitled “Corruption: Chicago To the White House”. Without a search warrant, Clinton GOP surrogates seized the master tape of the show and refuse to return it to us. It is now the subject of five lawsuits by us against Clinton’s culprits

About the time of the starting of the Elian Gonzalez Affair, Illinois Governor Ryan announced he was going to Cuba, as a purported goodwill gesture, okayed apparently by the State Department. Ryan trumpeted he was bringing along some two million dollars of items donated by pharmaceutical firms receiving a tax write-off. Some government sources, however, contend a top Ryan crony arranged a deal with drugstore-type operations in Cuba, starved for such items, to re-sell the charity goods for about thirty million dollars. Ryan’s circle reportedly was to get a one-third kick-back. The IRS elite team has reportedly made a second referral to the Justice Department, to no avail, that they prosecute Ryan for this further apparent bribery.

As a follow-up deal, Ryan, with the reported help of an international lawyer based in the Chicago area, reportedly arranged with an Illinois riverboat gambling casino to explore the possibilities of helping Cuba raise money for their U.S.-embargo-troubled economy, by gambling casinos being permitted to re-start in Cuba, but under Cuban control. That is, Cuba would get a percentage rake-off of the casino take, while supposedly tightly supervising the casino operations. (In Illinois, the state officials regulating riverboat gambling casinos are appointed by Ryan, and there have been regulatory scandals while the Cuban matter has gone on. Ryan reportedly gets casino kick-backs similar to an ex-governor of Louisiana prosecuted for such bribes.)

Little-known are federal laws that permit gambling casinos to wire-transfer funds worldwide, similar to banks, an additional device for money laundering. (For related stories, visit our series on Greenspan/Bush and the secret wire transfer records.)

The public seems to have no understanding of how gambling casinos, supposedly run by mobsters, were taken over by former top Justice Department officials of the Organized Crime Strike Force, reportedly running their own criminal enterprises. A case in point is Paradise Island in the Bahamas. The toll bridge to the island is reportedly owned by the Richard M. Nixon Estate, which gets an income whether the gambling casino shows a profit or not. Paradise Island was taken over by two former Strike Force bosses, William G. Hundley and Robert Peloquin, who co-founded International Intelligence, Incorporated. Intertel, as it is called, is made up of former “spooks” of various U.S. and some foreign intelligence agencies. They supposedly are dedicated to a “clean”, mob-free operation. In its simplest form, however, it is lawmen killing off or framing up mobsters, and then taking over their game.

Read lots of details about Intertel in the book by Jim Hougan called Spooks: The Terrifying True Story Of Spies-For-Hire And Their Secret, Dirty War (Bantam Books paperback edition, 1979). Unfortunately or fortunately, I, as head of a court reform group, found out a great deal about Intertel.

In 1969, I publicly fingered most of the judges on the state’s highest court, the Illinois Supreme Court, as bribe-takers tied to a bank across the street from some of the judges’ Chicago office. A State Legislature impeachment committee hired a special counsel to interview me several times in my home. Not disclosed to me during the interviews was the lawyer, William G. Hundley, with his law-partner, both former Justice Department Strike Force officials, were running the mob-successor operation, with intelligence agency operatives, on Paradise Island. Both were kingpins in the Valachi Affair.

When I then fought the Paradise Island gang in Chicago’s crooked courts, for trying to mislead me, in what turned out to be the biggest judicial bribery scandal in U.S. history, guess who showed up to lean on the local judges to protect the new mob on Paradise Island? Why, Henry Hyde, long an operative of Naval Intelligence. Hyde went on to become a U.S. Congressman and later, head of the House Judiciary Committee that led a watered-down, sex-episode only, no treason charges, so-called attack on President Clinton, the Impeachment Resolution of 1998.

Two former FBI agents, part of Intertel, were the ones who kidnapped me in 1980, as a commentator on bank collapses, during a period of bank commotions, as apparently ordered by the then head of the Federal Reserve. I was kept in a distant jail without the Warden there knowing originally who I am and why I was there, and without an arrest warrant. (See my story following this one, “The American Gestapo, Elian Gonzalez, and Memories”.)

In a series I wrote on the corrupt IRS, I told about how top IRS officials and former officials operate a gambling casino boat, as a reputed money laundry, in the Caribbean. George H. Ryan reportedly is tied to the gang of government gangsters, and the boat, as well as dope traffickers in Jamaica. All of it part of the reputed Intertel mob that has been apparently orchestrating the Elian Gonzales Affair. The tie-in is reportedly through Intertel’s secret Chicago office. This is a developing story.

Compare the foregoing details to the propaganda blitz about George H. Ryan’s trip to Cuba: Chicago Tribune, “Cuba-Illinois Courtship On”, 10/6/99; Chicago Tribune, “Cuba Trip Has Ryan Toeing A Fine Line”, 10/24/99; Chicago Tribune, “Ryan Gives Boost To Religion In Cuba”, 10/25/99. This is all apparently a media bombardment for big racketeers to open the door to Cuba and “tourism”. Stay tuned.

THE AMERICAN GESTAPO AND ELIAN GONZALES AND MEMORIES

It was on the screen of some people who remember, with pain and fright, similar events. There it was, a heavily-armed, Gestapo-like team, without an arrest or search warrant, come to rip Elian Gonzalez away. What some call the monopoly press have no time or inclination to find and interview those who had similar experiences. If it happened years ago to a political dissident, the press hounds are not interested. After all, so the common wisdom goes, if you have a big mouth and are anti-Establishment, you get what you deserve.

I ought to know the feeling. It happened to me, on a Thursday, in March, 1980, twenty years ago as I write this. The nation was facing a financial meltdown because of what became known as the “Silver Collapse”. Several large stock and commodity brokers were facing bankruptcy because the price of silver, pushed by rampant speculation to over $50 per ounce, had fallen off the cliff.

As later admitted in print, the head of the Federal Reserve had a secret emergency meeting with bankers. The meeting was so sudden, the Fed Chief met the bankers in his bathrobe. Several large banks, tied to the silver gambling, were facing going under. There was a danger of a run on banks. The secret police were ordered to take extra-legal, emergency measures, and to hell with the Constitution.

At the time, I was a well-known college lecturer. Despite my disability from childhood, as a paraplegic from polio, I traveled around the nation, including to nearby states like Indiana, in a specially-set-up vehicle, giving public speeches and conducting seminars. Advertisements had already announced that, for the coming Saturday, I was scheduled to give a controversial seminar on, as I expected, the then upcoming bank collapse.

Right near my front door, I was standing on my braces and crutches. I was waiting for a woman friend who was enroute to take me to the barber and then to lunch. As she backed up to my home driveway, another car pulled up near my sidewalk and two men, dressed in very dark clothes, jumped out and ran up to me. “Are you Sherman Skolnick?” they barked at me. “Yes” I answered. “Are you armed?” they demanded to know.

I responded in the most foolish, almost fatal response of my life: “I am an Orthodox Jew. I carry no gun.” (I should have added: The Almighty is my Rock and my Weapon.)

As they rushed up to me, I could see they were heavily armed. (A thought, much later, occurred to me: If I had a gun, would I lose my balance on my crutches and fall if I tried to hold the gun and shoot?)

As they grabbed me, I cried: "I must have my folding wheelchair!" which was a few feet away. They were not interested to know. They shoved me like a sack of potatoes into the front seat of their car.

I screamed, "Harriet, call the police!" (I did not know at the time that this was the Secret Police.) As she rushed up to their car, she put her hand into the open window. They put up the electric window, almost driving off with her arm inside.

They drove me from my residence in Chicago, Illinois, across the state line to Indiana. They knew I could not run away, so they stopped at McDonald's, not for me but for themselves. It was right near a pay phone. I called a friend collect and blurted out: "I may be cut off any moment. I'm being kidnapped. Pray for me."

After a long ride, they drove up through the electric truck-entrance door of a distant jail. They dumped me into a jail wheelchair and rolled me over to the Warden. "You keep him here, no questions" they commanded the Warden. I was put in a solitary cell, reserved for desperate criminals.

The Warden opened the cell door and entered. "Please understand, I do not know why you are here. I have to follow orders" he said with a sad look. "I understand your condition. I have a brother, a paraplegic, wounded from Viet Nam. Maybe I can figure out a way to send you over to the State Penitentiary that has a hospital section" he said, visibly upset. "Look, Warden, I am not sick. I don't need a hospital!" I answered.

A day later he again entered my jail cell. "I found out who you are, Mr. Skolnick. I am running a terrible risk to try to help you. I found out you are a friend of the former head of the Crime Commission in this part of the state. I called him. Sunday morning is a quiet time. I told him to pull up his car into the truck entrance electric door, like he is delivering something here. I am going to roll you into a blanket and put you on the floor of the back seat of his car. He promised to take only the back roads and get you back to your home. I don't know what they will do to me for releasing you. But you better stop doing whatever it is you are doing. Next time may be worse for you." He said this, his face plainly filled with compassion.

"Warden, where is the arrest warrant? What am I charged with? What crime have I committed? At what trial have I been found guilty?" I pleaded with him.

"Please, Mr. Skolnick, I already told you I do not know why you are here. I was ordered by the highest authority to keep you here. Promise me, you will never, never cross the state line back to Indiana," he answered.

Smuggled out the side door into the truck entrance, I got back to my home, my Crime Commission friend driving at high speed on little used back roads, just like we had just robbed a bank.

Some of my relatives showed no understanding, condemning me with statements like: "You got what you deserve. Why don't you shut your rotten big mouth?"

When some of my more understanding friends take me places, I always tell them, with a sarcastic sneer: "My passports to Indiana and Cuba have been revoked. Do not cross the state boundary line with me in the car."

After I got home, I found out that the local police in my neighborhood refused to take a report from my woman friend. They showed her a copy of a bulletin on the FBI National Crime Computer Wire: "Sherman Skolnick, of Chicago, a heavily-armed, desperate, escaped criminal and fugitive from justice. Shoot on sight if necessary."

As a result of the incident, it was the only public speech and seminar I missed in forty years in the public eye. Assuming I knew or found out exactly who the Secret Police are and were, I decided nevertheless not to sue for false arrest. My reasoning would take too long to detail.

So the American Gestapo, without arrest or search warrants, breaking into the home where Elian Gonzalez was, brings back memories.

Am I the only one with memories of the Secret Police in the United States, dealing with dissident and controversial persons? Probably not.

Like any banana republic, America has secret political police, nameless, faceless, heavily-armed, subject to no law. Unless we can correct this situation, our Constitution is justifiably dead. This Gestapo follows the orders of the Commissar who runs the conspiratorial, private central bank known as the Federal Reserve, or orders of a Dictator posing as the President, or the head of the Injustice Department, or secret orders not identified from whom.

Nowadays, if the secret police come again to my door, they might notice there a decal from the National Rifle Association. Stay tuned. [End quoting]

Are we beginning to awaken to the fact that the so-called Elite basically keep following the same script of lies and deceit and sleight-of-hand, over and over again? Has it occurred to anyone that if we don't stop these crooks from such shenanigans, we'll see this same script, only constantly worsening scenarios, until we do—or we are laying in our graves or jail cells?

This is nothing more than what "they" told us they are doing to us in the movie Wag The Dog.

Welcome to WaterOZ!

WaterOz is proud to announce a major breakthrough never before offered anywhere.

Minerals essential to the human body in an Ionic/Water Soluble form

Water of Life—4,000+ parts per million

WaterOz Water of Life Mineral Water is simply pure water which contains 84 molecular-sized mineral and trace mineral elements in an ionic water-soluble form. These are the same kind of minerals that plants create. These molecular-sized mineral particles are so small and water soluble that they stay in suspension indefinitely. This superb product has no undesirable traits such as unpleasant taste, additives or preservatives.

Plants take metallic minerals from the soil and convert them into water-soluble ionic minerals. They use these nutrients for their own needs. We eat plants and absorb the ionic minerals and trace minerals to nourish ourselves.

It has been shown time and again that most of our soils no longer contain enough minerals to properly sustain us. Industrial concerns push specialized fertilizers on the market. These fertilizers concentrate Potassium, Nitrogen, Phosphorus and a few other elements that are known to stimulate plant growth, however, the many trace minerals that are necessary for proper plant and animal nutrition are ignored. Products such as Water of Life ionic trace minerals give us back these essential nutrients.

Ionic minerals Versus Colloidal minerals:

There is no comparison. Ionic minerals are a fraction of the size of colloids, bond with the molecules instead of being in suspension, and are a fraction of the price.

Average price: 1 GALLON: Retail $70.00 NOW: $49.00

(Compare to colloids averaging over $600.00 per gallon.)

There are over 20 individual minerals to handle specific needs which can be used in conjunction with Water of Life.

News Desk Special Report:

The “Bio-Electrical Cleansing” Research Of Dr. Robert Beck

Editor’s note: The following extremely important information follows somewhat in conjunction with our feature article on colloidal silver back in the February 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM. That’s because one of the collateral practical applications of one of Dr. Beck’s simple but ingenious devices happens to be the making of a high-quality colloidal silver product.

But the importance of the following material certainly doesn’t stop there! Dr. Bob Beck has, for almost a decade now, freely given away the fruits of his creative discoveries and deceptively simple inventions in what could be called “bio-electrical cleansing techniques” and deserves much praise for his refreshingly humanitarian approach to achieving wellness.

As you may suspect, he has been much under attack by conventional medical “police” for proposing and freely offering techniques which cost mere pennies to employ—as opposed to the “big bucks” (and often lethal) methods the pharmaceutical companies would like you to believe are your only options.

In that “gestapo” spirit of “protecting” you from this kind of “quackery”, of course there is the need to sprinkle the following material liberally with the conditional words “theoretical” and “hypothetical” and “experimental”—to keep within legal bounds of discussion in our so-called “free” society. The wise readers will (with a knowing smile on their face) know how to interpret such code words; it’s a lot like watching what the FDA wants to ban and rushing out to buy extra before you have been “protected” from such products.

Since we published our very well received and highly praised “help yourself” colloidal silver article back in our February, 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM, Dr. Overholt felt that Dr. Bob Beck’s work should also be shared with our readers in that same do-it-yourself spirit of achieving wellness. Absolutely! And don’t be too concerned if the “boxes” discussed here seem beyond your technical knowhow; sources for purchasing these devices at a fair price exist and are noted, along with how to get more information well worth reading and sharing with interested friends.

As a bit of a humorous (?) aside, how many of you followed what happened when one particular guest host of Art Bell’s late-night talk-radio program bumped into Dr. Beck and his discoveries a few months ago for the first time? First, one night, a caller alerted the guest host to this subject, and the guest host retorted: “That can’t be or I would know about it!” Then a week or so later (1/17/00) the same guest host, now more informed (and probably having eaten quite a bit of crow once he found out just how many years Dr. Beck’s devices have been around), has Dr. Beck and related guests on the show; it was a wonderful program. The guest host is all excited by this point and thinks this is the best thing since indoor plumbing and should receive wide attention. But then, very very shortly thereafter, that guest host is gone from the program. Poof! Coincidence?

The following material has been excerpted by Dr. Overholt from Internet sources which are trying their best to make sure Dr. Beck’s important discoveries reach far and wide. We can surely help with that worthy cause.

4/19/00 DR. AL OVERHOLT

WHO IS DR. ROBERT (BOB) BECK, D.SC.?

In 1992, Dr. Beck was a highly respected research physicist, recently retired from his work with government contracts that were often classified, from his own business interests, and from his work as a university lecturer. He was known for his leading-edge designs in measuring subtle magnetic fields and extremely low-frequency fields. His last research project in the early 1980s, that focused on the brain and altered states of consciousness, resulted in the design of the Brain Tuner. This won him an award from the John Fitzer Foundation.

That all changed when he read about a research project at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City. In March 1991 Science News magazine gave a brief report that said: “Zapping the AIDS virus with low-voltage electric current can nearly eliminate its ability to infect human white blood cells cultured in the laboratory....”

Doctors William Lyman and Steven Kaali also presented their research at a symposium. This research piqued Bob Beck’s interest, but he found only closed doors when he tried to get further information. The paper they presented had been deleted from the symposium report. [Editor’s note: And the guest host for Art Bell’s late-night talk-radio program on this subject had an extremely difficult (and ultimately unsuccessful) time, though he persisted valiantly, trying to get either of these primary authors/researchers to be guests on that program. Since when have you known such “shyness” to be so prevalent, especially when the discovery is of such an outstanding and far-reaching calibre?]

In 1993, after a patent was filed (US Patent #5,188,738) showing how microcurrents would neutralize pathogens such as viruses and bacteria, he was finally able to get the details. The patent was based on using a medical procedure to remove blood from the body in order to treat it with microcurrents of electricity. He later found this research was a rediscovery, as many patents had been filed over the years showing the efficacy of electricity for health.

Dr. Beck applied his genius to come up with a method to pass the necessary microcurrents into blood while it still flowed undisturbed in the body. (To acquire FREE plans to build your own devices, see Dr. Beck’s research at the explorepub.com/articles/beck/hiv_article.html Internet website address.)

Dr. Beck’s research is fully described in his latest Workshop Handout entitled “Take Back Your Power”. In this detailed report, learn how to build your own electrical devices for health—including the blood cleaner, magnetic pulser, ionic/silver colloidal generator, and water ozonator. Please refer to Sharing Health Products website for how to order this must-read collection of Dr. Beck’s many years of research. [Editor’s note: See Dr. Overholt’s message a bit further along in this article for website details.]

Dr. Beck built several units to experiment on himself and for friends. Bob eventually regrew a healthy head of hair and lost his excess weight. This gave him a new lease on life.

He also took the initiative to fund a study with two medical doctors who were treating AIDS patients. While each of the patients who stayed with the blood electrification protocol became symptom free, their PCR test results were not consistent. (The PCR test has now been exposed as unreliable and never intended to measure HIV.) The study was discontinued without being published.

Word started to spread as Bob and those who regularly met with him over breakfast were getting healthier—avoiding colds and the flu. He gives credit to blood electrification, ionic-colloidal silver, and the magnetic pulse generator for his now healthy head of hair.

In 1997, Sharing Health From The Heart Inc. was told by one health practitioner that he had known Bob Beck for many years. Having watched the improvement in health in Bob and those around him, he decided there had to be something good about blood electrification.

In addition to blood electrification [via the electrical pulse box], Dr. Beck devised a simple method to produce ionic-colloidal silver in the home [using this same box]. This revived interest in an almost forgotten natural antibiotic.

The AIDS project also brought to his attention the importance of the lymph system and the need to clear pathogens that could easily lay dormant there and later reinfect the blood. The Magnetic Pulse Generator was born [distinct from the electrical pulse box] to create the necessary microcurrents in the lymph and tissue.

He then started lecturing at health shows to let others know of his discoveries and experiences. He was careful not to sell anything except the information with the schematics to allow others to build their own units. Instead he endorsed a manufacturer: SOTA Instruments Inc.

In 1996, when SOTA Instruments, Inc. expanded their line to include the Silver Pulser and Magnetic Pulser, Dr. Beck immediately gave the units his enthusiastic endorsement. When Dr. Beck came up with the idea of freshly ozonating a glass of water to help flush out toxins, he endorsed SOTA’s Water Ozonator as well.

Russell J. Torlage, founder of SOTA Instruments Inc., works closely with Dr. Beck to ensure any design changes meet with his approval.

In his article Bob talks about other instruments for making colloids and ozonated water, of which you’ll find details on the websites. These other products will enhance

Expanded Instructions For Experimental-Theoretical HIV Blood Neutralization

Suggestions For Acquiring And Using An Inductively Coupled, Magnetic Pulse Generator For Theoretical
Lymph And Tissue HIV Neutralization

In a remarkable discovery at Albert Einstein College of Medicine, New York City, in 1990, it was shown that a minute current (50 to 100 microamperes) can alter outer protein layers of HIV virus in a petri dish so as to prevent its subsequent attachment to receptor sites (Science News, March 30, 1991 page 207).

It may also reverse Epstein-Barr (chronic fatigue syndrome), hepatitis, and herpes B.

HIV-positive users of this information may expect a NEGATIVE p24 surface antigen or PCR test (no more HIV detectable in blood) after 30 days. This is reminiscent of a well proven cure for snakebite by application of electric current that instantly neutralizes the venom's toxicity (Lancet, July 26, 1986, page 229). And there may be several other, as yet undiscovered or untested, viruses neutralizable with this discovery.

This very simple blood clearing treatment offered great promise as a positive method for immobilizing known strains of HIV still present and contaminating some European and US blood bank reserve supplies. It was further suggested that infected human HIV carriers could be cured by removing their blood, treating it electrically, and returning it by methods similar to dialysis. Dr. Steven Kaali, MD, projected that "years of testing will be in order before such an IN VITRO (blood removed for treatment) device can be made ready for widespread use" (Longevity, December 1992, page 14). This paper reveals a "do-it-yourself" approach for healing INVOLVING NO MEDICAL COSTS or dialysis.

In the writer's opinion, both blood and lymph can be cleared IN VIVO (which means blood isn't removed) simply, rapidly, and inexpensively with similar but NON-INVASIVE techniques described herein. Electronic and controlled electroporation approaches may well make vaccines (even if possible someday), pharmaceuticals, supplements, oxygen, and diet therapies, plus other proposed remedies, obsolete—even if they worked and were free.

In a public lecture (October 19, 1991) the writer's opinion proposed this theoretical do-it-yourself method for accomplishing HIV "neutralization" IN VIVO. Subsequently, his original modalities and protocols have been extensively peer reviewed, refined, simplified, and made universally affordable (under $75 for BOTH devices, including batteries when self-made).

These two simple treatments, used in tandem, can potentially nullify well over 95% (and perhaps 100%) of known HIV strains residing in blood, lymph, and other body tissue and fluids. Following is a summary of two years of offshore feedback with this non-iatrogenic, do-it-yourself, simple, and inexpensive experimental solution to the ever escalating AIDS dilemma.

There are no known side effects since milliamperic currents are much lower than those in FDA-approved TENS, CES, and muscle stimulators which have been in daily use for many years. Battery replacement costs are under 25¢ per month per user, or about 1¢ per day for a typical 21-day "spontaneous remission". No doctors, pharmaceuticals, ozone, or other intervention appears necessary.

The pocket-sized, battery-powered, BLOOD clearing instrument is basically a miniature relay driven by a timer chip set to 0.67 Hz. Its 0 to 36 V user-adjustable biphasic output minimizes electrode site irritation. The described system delivers stimulation through NORMALLY CIRCULATING BLOOD via electrodes placed at selected sites (such as one electrode behind ankle bone on inside of foot and another identically located on opposite foot) over the sural, popliteal, posterior tibial, or peroneal arteries where the subject's veins and arteries are accessibly close to the surface. Optimum electrode positions are reliably located by feeling pulse.

Micro-current treatment is of such low amplitude that it creates no discomfort when used as directed and is demonstrated to have no harmful side effects on healthy blood cells or tissue. A major obstacle to this simple and obvious solution is disbelief, and subjects must assume responsibility for their own health—a “heresy” in today’s society where we’re conditioned to look for answers only to a medical establishment that has no current knowledge remotely promising “cures” for numerous well known terminal diseases.

Using neutralization approximately 8 to 20 minutes per day for about three or four weeks should, in the writer’s opinion, effectively immobilize well over 95% of any HIV, and simultaneously any other electrosensitive viruses in blood.

In heavy infections, shorter application times could prevent overloading the patient with toxins. Simply treat for a greater number of days. In time, the restored immune system will handle residual problems.

In the special case of impaired circulation due to diabetes, longer treatment times may be indicated. Immobilized viruses may be expelled naturally through kidneys and liver. More rapid neutralization is easily possible, but not recommended, because of potential excessive toxic elimination reactions (Herxheimer’s syndrome). T-cell counts may drop initially (because of lysing and subsequent scavenging by macrophages) but should recover to over 200 within 90 days.

Latent/germinating HIV reservoirs in the body’s LYMPH or other tissue may theoretically be neutralized with a SECOND and separate device by the strategy of generating a very high-intensity (19 kilogauss), short-duration (10 microsecond) magnetic pulse of greater than 35 joules by discharging a modified strobe light’s capacitor through an applicator coil held at body points over lymph nodes and other possible internal sites of infection.

By the physics of eddy current/back emf “transformer action” (Lenz’s law), the desired criteria of minimum current induced through infected tissue, on the order of 50 to 100 microamps, should be readily attained. Several pulses repeated at each site may insure a reliable “overkill” for successful HIV neutralization. A magnetic “pulser” is very inexpensive and simple to build.

These “theoretical solutions” are being disclosed under constitutional freedom-of-speech guarantees in spite of extensively organized hostile opposition to non-pharmaceutical cures. Data can be LEGALLY offered only as “theoretical” and no medical claims can be made or implied.

Anyone at his discretion and assumed responsibility should be free to build, use (on himself), and network his “research” results. With these data, an average intelligent high school student should confidently be able to assemble BOTH theoretical blood and tissue clearing modalities in about three hours and for a total investment of around $75. Components are widely available.

After assembling, “cures” cost under 25¢ per patient for batteries. If electronically unskilled, “busy”, or technically illiterate, call an “Amateur Radio Supply” store (Yellow Pages) and find a ham radio operator, hobbyist, or TV repairman, or pay any kid on the block to do it for you.

After “spontaneous remissions”, some users may wish to interest their doctors. But be advised that ELECTRONIC cures may be vigorously suppressed or ignored because there is presently no credibility, nor drug cartel profit, in a 25¢ AIDS solution. Also, the 1910 Rockefeller-Flexner Report attempted to discredit electromedicine with a conspiracy to inflate pharmaceutical profits.

I’m definitely NOT soliciting funds. This was independently developed by Bob Beck at his private expense and offered freely for “theoretical and informational purposes only” and with absolutely no profit motive. Non-FDA approved devices are illegal to use within the USA—except via little known FDA regulation loopholes whereby doctors and RESEARCHERS are allowed to use ANYTHING on patients if they build it themselves [Code of Federal Regulations 21 § 807.65, subsections (d) & (f).]

Expanded Instructions For Experimental-Theoretical HIV Blood Neutralization Hypothetical Protocols For Experimental Sessions

Revision: December 18, 1995

PRECAUTIONS: DO NOT use on subjects with cardiac pacemakers. Any applied electrical signals may interfere with "demand-type" heart pacers and cause malfunction. Do NOT use on pregnant women, while driving, or using hazardous machinery.

Users MUST avoid ingesting anything containing medicinal herbs, foreign or domestic, or potentially toxic medication, nicotine, alcohol, recreational drugs, laxatives, tonics, etc., and certain vitamins for one week before starting because blood electrification can cause electroporation which makes cell membranes pervious to small quantities of normally harmless chemicals in plasma. The effect is the same as extreme overdosing, which might be lethal. [See "Electroporation: A General Phenomenon For Manipulating Cells And Tissues" by J.C. Weaver, Journal of Cellular Biochemistry 51:426-435 (1993).] Effects can mimic increasing dosages many fold. Both the magnetic pulser and blood purifier cause electroporation.

Do NOT place electrode pads over skin lesions, abrasions, new scars, cuts, eruptions, or sunburn. Do NOT advance output amplitude to uncomfortable levels. All subjects will vary. Do NOT fall asleep while using.

Do NOT place electrodes above waist. (See Exception Note.) Generally use only on feet (SEE GRAY'S ANATOMY FOR BLOOD PATHS) so as to minimize possible current paths through unhealthy heart. The magnetic pulser should, however, be safe to use anywhere on body or head. Avoid ingesting alcohol 24 hours before using. Drink an 8 oz. glass of distilled water 15 minutes before and immediately following each session, and drink at least four additional glasses daily for flushing during "neutralization" and for one week thereafter. This is imperative. Ignoring this can cause systemic damage.

If subject feels sluggish, faint, dizzy, headachy, nauseous, or has flu-like symptoms after exposures, reduce number of pulses per session and/or shorten applications of blood clearing. Use caution when treating patients with impaired kidney or liver function.

To avoid shock liability, use batteries only. Do NOT use any line-connected power supply, transformer, charger, battery eliminator, etc. with blood clearing device. However line supplies ARE OK with well-insulated magnetic pulse generators (strobe lights).

Health professionals: Avoid nicotine addicts, vegetarians, and other unconsciously motivated death-wishers and their covert agendas of "defeat the healer". Tobacco, the most addictive (4-1/2 times more addictive than heroin) and deadly substance of abuse known, disrupts normal cardiovascular function. True vegetarian diets are missing essential amino acids absolutely necessary for the successful rebuilding of AIDS-ravaged tissues. Secondary gains (sympathy/martyrdom, free benefits, financial assistance, etc.) play large roles with AIDS patients. "Recovery guilt" as friends are dying has even precipitated suicide attempts masked as "accidents". Avoid such entanglements.

SUPERIOR ELECTRODES: Excellent, convenient, and vastly superior electrodes, reusable indefinitely, can be made by butt-soldering lead wires to ends of 3/32" diameter by 1-1/8" long type 316 stainless steel rods available from welding supply stores. Use "Stay Clean" flux before soldering (zinc chloride/hydrochloric acid). Shrink-insulate TWO tight layers of tubing over soldered joints to prevent flexing/breaking and lead/copper ions from migrating. Wrap two turns of 100% cotton flannel around rods; wrap with a few turns of strong thread, wrap and tie both ends and cut off excess cloth. Treat end windings and knots with clear fingernail polish or "Fray Check" (fabric & sewing supply stores) to prevent unraveling. Soak in a strong solution of sea salt (not table salt) containing a little wetting agent, like Kodak Photo Flow, ethylene glycol, or 409 kitchen cleaner. Add a few drops of hydrogen peroxide, silver colloid, etc., for disinfectant. Store solution for reuse.

Saturate these cotton "wicks" each time before applying to skin. Tape soaking wet electrodes tightly over pulse sites with paper masking or Transpore tape or with 1" wide stretch elastic bands with tabs of Velcro at ends to fasten.

Electrodes should closely conform precisely along blood vessels, not skewing ever so slightly over to adjacent flesh. This insures better contact and provides very low internal impedance. Avoid crossing arms or legs while treating, since this may shunt the current. Rinse and blot-dry electrodes and skin after each use. NEVER allow bare metal electrodes to touch skin (during use) as this will cause burns manifested as small red craters taking weeks to heal.

ELECTRODE PLACEMENTS: Locate MAXIMUM pulse position (NOT to be confused with acupuncture, reflexology, Chapman, etc. points) on each foot by feeling on inside of ankle 1" below and to rear of ankle bone, then feel top center of instep. Place electrode on whichever pulse site on that foot feels strongest. Scrub skin over chosen sites with mild soap and water or alcohol swab. Wipe dry. Position the electrodes lengthwise along each left and right foot's blood vessel. We presently prefer foot-to-foot electrode placements, which will encompass about five times the volume of circulating blood undergoing pathogen neutralization compared to the earlier foot-to-back-of-same-knee placements originally suggested in our 1991 paper.

Exception Note: with subjects having perfectly healthy hearts and not wearing pacers, it is convenient to use left-wrist-to-right-wrist exactly over ulnar arterial pulse paths, instead of feet. Wide rubber bands over wires at elbows keep leads out of the way when using hands.

With electrode cable unplugged, turn switch ON and advance amplitude control to MAXIMUM. Push momentary SW. 2 "Test" switch and see that the red and green light-emitting diodes flash alternately. This verifies that polarity is reversing 4 times per second (frequency is NOT critical) and that batteries are still good. If LEDs don't light, replace all three 9V batteries. When the white incandescent bulb dims or appears yellowish, or relay isn't clicking, replace all four AA cells. Zener diodes will extinguish LEDs when the three 9V batteries' initial 27V drops below 18V after extended use.

If subject has a perfectly healthy heart, wrist-to-wrist placement is more convenient. Never use any electrode larger than 1-1/8" long by 1/8" wide, to avoid wasting current on surrounding tissue. Confine exactly to blood vessels ONLY. Add a drop of salt water to each electrode's cotton cover every 10 minutes to keep electrodes thoroughly saturated during entire session.

Now rotate amplitude control to MINIMUM (counter-clockwise) and plug in electrode cable. Subject now advances dial slowly until he feels a "thumping" and tingling (at the electrode placements on the wrists). Turn as high as tolerable, but don't advance amplitude to where it is ever uncomfortable.

Adjust this voltage level periodically as subject adapts or acclimates to current level after several minutes. If subject perspires, skin resistance may decrease because of moisture, so setting to a lower voltage for comfort is indicated. Otherwise it is normal to feel progressively less sensation with time. reactions. For very heavy infections, go slower so as not to overload body's toxic disposal capability. With circulation-impaired diabetics, etc., you may wish to extend session times up to 90 minutes to two hours. Again, HAVE SUBJECT DRINK LOTS OF WATER. You may be overexposing if post treatment discomfort is felt.

Subjects may feel sleepy, sluggish, listless, nauseous, faint, or headachy, or have flu-like reactions if neglecting sufficient water intake for flushing toxins. We interpret this as detoxification plus endorphin release due to electrification.

Let them rest and stabilize for 45 minutes before driving if indicated. If this detoxing becomes oppressive, treat every SECOND day. Treating at least 21 times should "fractionate" both juvenile and maturing HIV to overlap maximum neutralization sensitivity windows and interrupt "budding" occurring during the HIV cells' development cycles.

Treatments also safely neutralize many other viruses, fungi, bacteria, parasites, and microbes in blood. See US patents: 5,091,152 and 5,139,684 and 5,188,738 and 5,328,451 and others, as well as numerous valid medical studies which are presently little known or suppressed.

Ingesting a few ounces of 5-to-20-parts-per-indicated. Otherwise it is normal to feel progressively less sensation with time.

You may notice little or no sensation at full amplitude immediately, but feeling will begin building up to maximum after several minutes, at which time amplitude must be decreased. Typical comfortable input (to skin) is 3mA, and maximum tolerable input (full amplitude) is 7mA, but this "reserve" limit is unnecessary and uncomfortable. Current flowing through blood is very much lower than this E X T E R N A L measurement because of series resistances through skin, tissue, and blood vessel walls.

Apply blood neutralizer for about an hour daily for 21-30 days. Use judgment here. Carefully monitor subject's million of silver colloid solution daily can give subjects a "second intact immune system" and minimize or eliminate opportunistic infections during recovery phase. This miracle substance is pre-1938 technology and, unlike ozone, is considered immune from FDA harassment.

Silver colloid can EASILY be made at home electrolytically in minutes and in any desired quantities and parts per million strength for under 1¢ per gallon plus cost of distilled water. It is ridiculous to purchase it for high prices.

Colloidal silver has no side effects, and is known to rapidly eliminate or prevent hundreds of diseases. Silver colloids won't produce drug-resistant strains as will all other known antibiotics. No reasonable amount can overdose or injure users, either topically, by ingestion, or medical professional injection.

Suggestions For Acquiring And Using An Inductively Coupled Magnetic Pulse Generator For Theoretical Lymph And Tissue HIV Neutralization

Revision: December 18, 1995

Note: These data are for informational and instructional purposes only and are not to be construed as medical advice. Consult with your licensed health practitioner.

In keeping with do-it-yourself, inexpensive, hypothetical approaches to self-help, the simplest and most rapid means for obtaining a capacitor-discharge magnetic-pulse lymph and tissue pathogen neutralizer would be to find and modify a used, functioning, portable, battery-and-AC-powered electronic flash (strobe light) for cameras. These are acquired at swap meets, yard sales, pawn shops, or in junk boxes at used camera stores. Or purchase a new Vivitar (brand) model 1900 (around $22) carried at some professional camera stores. This compact, lightweight, inexpensive, rapid recharging flash is only 17.5 watt-seconds of power but is readily available and easily modified. It works well enough for casual use, but runs on batteries only, so has greater operating expense than an AC/DC unit.

California swap meet prices for USED strobes range from $4 to about $18. One Sunday the writer found a dozen ac-dc strobes, all in good working condition. Carry four AA batteries with you so you can test flash units before purchasing. I chose to modify a long-discontinued Vivitar (brand) model 110 because it was larger than the rest and seemingly more powerful; however, almost any brand or model of comparable output power (35 watt-seconds) should work. PREFERABLY SELECT ONE WITH 115V AC AS WELL AS BATTERY OPERATING (DC) CAPABILITY.

First wind the applicator coil. Junk VHS videocassette reels are cheap, plentiful, and adequate for this application. Remove 5 screws from shell, remove reels, and discard tape. Be SURE alternative spools (if used) are non-conductive or system will not work. Avoid shorter length VHS tape reels which may have center hubs larger than 1" diameter, and won't hold sufficient wire. Drill 1/4" holes through hub and through center of flange(s). Make two 4" discs from 1/4" thick plastic or fiberboard; drill 1/4" center holes and another 1/4" hole off-center so coil's inside lead wire can be pulled through. These "stiffeners" will sandwich the reel's flanges so they won't warp or split as wire pressure builds up while winding progresses. A 2" (or longer) 1/4-20 machine nut and bolt with washers through centers will clamp flange stiffeners and reel and also provide a shaft to hold in a variable speed drill motor or similar winding device, if used. Then remove bolt and stiffeners.

SPECIFICATIONS: 130 turns #14 plain enamel insulated copper magnet wire wound onto 1" ID hub and 3-1/2" OD VHS spool with a gap width for wire of 5/8". Scrape enamel insulation 1/2" from end. Pull inside end of magnet wire through hub and stiffener and to outside. 130 turns (about three 1/2 lb rolls spliced together) should fill spool. Remove bolt, stiffeners, and finished coil.

Fig. 342.—The deep lymphatic vessels and glands of the abdomen and pelvis.

Now solder ends of 3 ft. of HEAVY two-wire extension cord to each side of coil. Finished coil weighs 1 lb 3 oz, has 0.935 millihenry inductance, 0.34 ohms resistance, and takes 20 minutes to hand wind or 3 min. with drill motor. An excellent alternative is an AMS (brand) air-core crossover inductor for home audio, MCM Electronics, Centerville, OH 45459, (800) 543-4330 (catalog #50-940; #16 gauge, 0.58 ohms, 2.5mH, 2-7/8" dia., $10.65).

STROBE MODIFICATION consists simply of wiring the finished applicator coil with 4 ft. leads in series between the flash tube and its storage capacitor. Be extremely cautious when working with case open because a strobe's capacitor can hold a residual high-voltage charge for a long time even when "off". Before modifying and to avoid shock, short out the capacitor by placing clip leads directly across the flash tube. Remember to remove this shunt later.

To install coil, unsolder either wire from flash tube and connect one lead wire from coil to that side of tube. Connect the other lead from coil to the wire you just removed from tube. Insulate connections with tape. This places your coil IN SERIES with the flash tube and enables the tube to act as an ionized gas relay or "thyatron" that dumps most of the capacitor's stored energy through the coil when fired. Lamp will still flash, but less brightly. Cover flash window with black paper. Replace case. You're done!

IS IT WORKING PROPERLY? A good way to test for strength of pulsed magnetic energy is to lay a thin steel washer (one strongly attracted to a magnet) flat on top of the coil, 1/2" off center. A 1" diameter "fender" washer with 1/8" center hole works well. Let the flash unit charge for about ten seconds or until the strobe's "ready light" comes on, then push the flash button and see how high the washer is "kicked" by eddy current repulsion. A 35 watt-second strobe repels a washer about 14 inches vertically. Think of your pulsed coil as the "primary" of a transformer and anything conductive nearby (living tissue included) as the "secondary" into which current is induced when cut by the coil's time-varying magnetic lines of flux.

Your do-it-yourself magnetic pulse generator delivers a measurable output intensity SEVERAL THOUSAND TIMES more powerful during each cycle than $7,000 German "Magnetotrons", Elecsystem "Biotrons", or Canada's "Centurion"—devices widely exhibited at holistic medical expos, none of which is NEARLY powerful enough for HIV, herpes, hepatitis or Epstein-Barr neutralization or adequate electroporation.

It is functionally similar to the "Diapulse" miracle-working healing modality when the coil is applied over the liver and other organs. Magnetic fields—and therefore induced currents—penetrate ALL body cells, bones, and tissues in proximity to the coil (effective approx. 4 inches deep) and can theoretically neutralize electro-sensitive viruses such as Herpes B, HIV, Hepatitis, Epstein-Barr, and possibly many others as yet undiscovered that can hide WITHIN nerve sheaths and are therefore untouchable via the immune system, white cells, or injectables. This may account for the impossibility of curing many known chronic infections via pharmaceuticals, antibiotics, or any presently known conventional treatments other than electrotherapy.

Use this magnetic pulser on body sites daily, concurrently with the blood-clearing electrical pulse box. This pulser is considered safe to use anywhere on the head, chest, and body, except with cardiac pacemaker users. SEE GRAY'S ANATOMY for lymph gland locations.

TO USE: press fully insulated coil flat against body over lymph glands and other selected locations. Let strobe build up to full charge (about 10 seconds or longer between pulses) and fire coil while contacting each site. Subjects will feel no physical sensations except for light "thumps" during this phase of treatment. Exposure levels are considered safe because the intensity of this magnetic pulser is much lower than Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) imaging that is in routine use on tens of thousands of patients.

But, should subject feel "headachy" or nauseous or sluggish or display flu-like symptoms after exposures with either of these two devices, reduce number of pulses or time (duration) of application, and drink more water.

If the immune system is very badly damaged, you may need to repeat all routines after several months to insure permanent and complete neutralization. WHEN USING, KEEP ELECTROMAGNET COIL SEVERAL FEET AWAY FROM CREDIT CARDS, WATCHES, ANY KIND OF MAGNETIC TAPE, COMPUTERS, FLOPPY DISKS, HOMEOPATHIC REMEDIES, ETC., since its powerful magnetic field can degauss and erase magnetic data as well as subtle energy potentized medicines.

As an unanticipated serendipity, pulsers are reported to erase deeply rooted lymph and tissue pathology and possibly even classical "miasmas" as well as many other microbes, fungi, bacteria, parasites, and viruses. The pulser (flash) should preferably be used with AC power to save battery costs, since you'll only get about 40 full pulses per new set of alkaline batteries. For sanitary purposes, enclose the coil in a plastic zip-lock sandwich bag that is discarded after each user. When treating numerous subjects, if there's no AC adapter, it is economical to purchase and utilize a small, rechargeable 6V lead-acid "motorcycle"-type storage battery.

HOW MUCH SHOULD THIS COST? Used electronic flash lamps cost approximately $4 to $18. Three 0.5 lb. spools of #14 magnet wire retail for about $9.66 each at Action Electronics. (You'll need approximately 1.5 lb.) 4-AA alkaline batteries cost about $ 2.89. A 12 ft., #14, 2-wire, 15 amp. AC extension cord costs about $2 and makes 4 sets of leads, or use heavy-duty speaker wire. VHS spools cost approximately 50¢. Wholesale wire can be gotten from $2.50 to $4.35/lb. in 10 lb. rolls at Pacific Wire & Cable, 1228 S. Village Way, Santa Ana, CA 92704; (714) 558-1864; approximately 1 week delivery.

Doors Opening For The SPECTRUM Video Tape Now Available

3/22/00 RICK MARTIN

In our first real "venturing out" amongst the public, The SPECTRUM recently presented a booth at the February 18-20 Preparedness 2000 Expo in Sacramento, California. While this Expo was not overly mobbed with crowds—maybe due to Y2K not happening or the bad weather of that weekend—many EXCELLENT professional contacts were made which will lead to future sharings in this newspaper.

One such contact was Reno, Nevada television host Dennis Grover. Very appreciative of the mission of The SPECTRUM, Dennis offered to have Gail and myself as guests on his 60-minute, LIVE (with audience), cable-access television program.

Soooo, after much trepidation and general nervousness, we decided to dive right in and embrace the television medium. His weekly program, called "Liberty And Justice For All" and sponsored by the Washoe County Libertarian Party, was taped and broadcast on Wednesday evening, March 1. Tapes of the program are distributed to a worldwide audience and thus the session is rebroadcast at many different times and places.

The title of this particular program session was "Publishing The Truth". The discussion focused on the trials and tribulations encountered by those attempting to offer a truly free press. Part of that general topic was a discussion of the many challenges encountered when publishing information such as that offered through The SPECTRUM.

For those of you who may be interested in this subject and our "performance" in the television medium, we are now able to offer a videotape of the program for a cost of $12 (shipping is included). To order the tape, you may call us toll-free at 1-877-280-2866, or send your request with a check or money order for $12 to our mailing address: 9101 W. Sahara Ave., PMB 158, Las Vegas, NV 89117.

We, of course, would like to extend our deepest thanks to Dennis Grover for offering to us the opportunity of speaking to a much wider audience through the television medium. Tapes of his program are subscribed to as far away as Greece, so we have high expectations of making many new friends through this avenue.

Continuing down this same path of expanded public visibility, by the time you receive this edition of The SPECTRUM we will have attended, as exhibitors, the 2000 Freedom Rally, held in Irvine, California. Again we expect to make new friends and open up still more opportunities for making people aware of this unique publication and its information.

And to those of you who have so kindly offered—and have taken the time and energy—to disseminate The SPECTRUM at events and places all over the planet, we offer our deepest appreciation. Every day excited calls come into the office from those who are asking to subscribe and wanting ALL of the back issues. They are thrilled by what they have read and, with a buoyant energy in their voices, are so thankful to have found this publication—usually through a friend like YOU!
