Column inches are measured vertically. Each page has 3 columns and each column is 3.37" wide.

Display ads: Send your camera-ready ad and this order form to The SPECTRUM Ad Dept., P.O. Box 1567, Tehachapi, CA 93581, or feel free to use the fax. If you wish, you may send a 3.5" floppy disk or an IOMEGA zip disk with your camera-ready ad or ad information. The ad must be in Pagemaker or Photoshop 6.5 format, or have a graphic extension (i.e. tif, gif, jpg). Please send the best quality image you can. We will always do our best to make your ad look great; remember, poor quality camera-ready ads make poor ads. You may also send information via e-mail: spectrumads@tminet.com.

Classifieds: Classified ads are charged per line, at $5 per line. There is not limit on how many lines your ad may be. An average line has between 40-44 characters (including spaces, letters, and punctuation). Classifieds are easy to do over the phone with a credit card.

Ads will only be processed when payment is received. Rates are locked-in only for as long as you commit; rates subject to change.

* Discounts: If you wish to run your ad for more than one issue, then discounts are as follows: For 2-6 issues, deduct 5%; for 7-12 issues, deduct 10%. (These discounts apply to classifieds as well as display ads.)

 Design fee: If you do not have a camera-ready ad, we can design a nice ad for you (at a rate of $25/hour). Please call for an estimate.

All display and classified ads are due by the 15th of each month. Any ads received after the 15th are placed on a first come, first served basis, and any ads that do not make it into the upcoming issue will be placed in the next. We reserve the right to refuse any ad as an editorial decision. All payment will be refunded if this is the case. We reserve the right to resize ads to "fit" (ads will never be sized down, and you will not be charged for the larger ad size).

If you wish to place an ad that does not conform with the above chart, or you have any questions, please feel free to call us for cheerful answers .

WHY THE END?

Two Millennia Of Prophecy And It's Fruitless Attempt To Awaken Humanity

J.T. REVELATOR

The book that dares to ask the ultimate question. Many prophets over the last two millennia, each with their own perspective, have tried to warn humanity about the “future” catastrophic “end-time events” in the hopes of altering them. That time is now upon us.

WHY THE END? is a distillation of prophecies and messages spanning the last 2,000 years, sorted by topic for you, the awakening human. Unlike other books that dwell on past history or vague fragments of events, WHY THE END? gets to the point, chronicling the diverse range of prophecies and offering the facts and clues from scientific disciplines.

You may have pondered on some of these questions:

Why is time “speeding up”?

Why are animals exhibiting strange behaviors, some dying inexplicably?

Why is the weather fluctuating and getting more severe?

Are you feeling on edge as if something profound is about to happen soon?

Is there a limit to humanity's abuse of the planet?

When does the “New Age” begin?

WHY THE END? intends to answer these questions and more in a no-frills, uncompromising manner. Some of these projections are quite harsh and could be interpreted as “doom and gloom”, depending on your perspective. But if you have an appetite of what is really on the horizon, then WHY THE END? is the book for you. May you have the eyes to see.

The bottom line is that the Purification of the Earth is underway, and will escalate very soon. WHY THE END? will prepare you mentally for the events, while those less informed will become incapacitated by fear as they witness the end of life as we know it. In reality, it is the cleansing of the old to make way for the new “Golden Age”. It then becomes your choice as to how you will witness the events.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu “sanusi” or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, “The world must know this—and know it now.”

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the “Chitauli” to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of travelling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET “gods” for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead “greys” many times, he has seen them examined behind their “grey” exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

“This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words”.

—David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The Blockbuster of all Blockbusters!! With Stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions and documents the suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

—VIDEO—

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps, and when he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and their relevance to your daily life.

Christ said: “If those who lead you say to you, ‘See, the kingdom is in the sky,’ then the birds of the sky will precede you. If they say to you, ‘It is in the sea,’ then the fish will precede you. Rather, the kingdom is inside of you, and it is outside of you. When you come to know yourselves, then you will become known, and you will realize that it is you who are the sons of the living Father. But if you will not know yourselves, you dwell in poverty and it is you who are that poverty.” — The Gospel of Thomas

Happy First Anniversary!

To All Of YOU Who Have Helped

The SPECTRUM

Achieve This Important Milestone

A round of applause and congratulations is in order as we arrive at this one-year milestone for The SPECTRUM newspaper. You who have helped us get to this point—through so many avenues, from financial support, to spreading "the word" about this paper to others, to blessing us with the most wonderful notes and calls of encouragement—deserve kudos as least as much as we do.

At the beginning of my introductory remarks for the Premier Issue of June 1, 1999, I stated: "Our path of coming to life has been quite a bumpy one, and our birthing pains a bit arduous, but here we are—finally!"

That was, of course, an understatement of the actual nasty events which conspired to try to keep us from coming to life. And the dark energies have not let up their harassment one bit as we proceeded down the road of this past year. Commander Hatonn has some interesting things to say about this subject in an unexpected "anniversary" message for this issue of The SPECTRUM.

Somehow, twelve months and twelve papers later, we continue to grow in popularity and (according to your notes and calls) quality of journalistic presentation. For example, in response to our Front Page story last month on the "Black" Pope and that missing link in the conspiracy puzzle, a thankful Ms. F.S. of Pacifica CA expressed in a brief note what many, many of you also conveyed to us:

"This is the best issue yet and I didn't think it could get any better!"

"I've looked for many years for the man at the top—am so happy to find out! I've found the Masons, Bilderbergers, Trilateral Commission, etc., but I knew there was someone else and I could never figure out why they hit Christians so hard—now I know! No wonder we get paranoid!"

"Thanks to you all, F.S."

Then there was the kind of P.S. that I mentioned earlier is part of what has helped us to grow and become better known with each passing month:

"Please send my son a copy. Thanks."

And then there was another P.S. which brings home a most important point we encounter frequently from you who are senior enough citizens to have caught a whiff of some of the shenanigans pulled by the dark, so-called "elite" controllers of this planet back in the days before the media and other sources of information were so well controlled:

"I recall hearing about a 'Black' Pope about 60-65 years ago, but all they knew was that there were two Popes. So I forgot about it. Maybe that's why some people were anti-Catholic—they couldn't distinguish all the fine points!"

The above kind of astute "connecting the dots" is what The SPECTRUM is all about and certainly what gives us a thrill and encourages us to continue bringing forth The Truth as such is caused to cross our path to share with you.

Speaking of which, it may come as a shock to many of you (it certainly aged me a bit) that we came very, very close—one afternoon a few weeks ago—to having to send you, rather than this paper this month, a one-page letter saying something along the lines of "there will be no newspaper until further notice". It happened that a primary funding source could no longer help us and, were it not for another angel who stepped forward with typical quiet grace, we would be dead in the water now.

That's how much we depend on your help. That's how close we come, every month, to not being able to bring you the kind of features that prompted the wonderful note from F.S. above.

As Commander Hatonn also mentions in his "anniversary" message, some of you who might otherwise help us financially remain in a state of withdrawal from having been "stung" in the past. Only YOU can recognize and overcome that fear reaction, though our article this month on the Dave Overton/Phoenix Institute/"Pot O'Gold" case may provide some frequently-asked-for insights concerning the sordid matters which caused this newspaper to come into existence in the first place.

We intend to keep on track as long as there is "fuel in the tank" with which to keep the machinery running. And we are truly grateful for the help of all kinds that has allowed us to reach this First Anniversary milestone.

As you look out with discernment upon the events happening all around us, it is becoming more and more clear that, in this time of the Great Awakening, the walls of lies and deceit are crumbling faster than the dark ones can fix the growing leaks. Our articles herein on Sai Baba and "chemtrails" are just two examples of what's happening with greater and greater frequency. Things are SURE getting interesting!

FORGOTTEN FACTS

From a reader and supporter, 5/16/00: [quoting]

Here's an interesting long lost fact:

Back in 1969, a group of Black Panthers decided that a fellow Black, named Alex Rackley, needed to die. Rackley was a fellow Panther suspected of disloyalty. Rackley was first tied to a chair. Once safely immobilized his "friends" tortured him for hours by, among other things, pouring boiling water on him.

When they got tired of torturing Rackley, Black Panther member Warren Kimbo took Mr. Rackley outside and put a bullet in his head.

Rackley's body was later found floating in a river about 25 miles north of New Haven, Conn.

Perhaps at this point you're curious as to what happened to these Black Panthers. In 1977, that's only eight years later, only one of the killers was still in jail. The shooter, Warren Kimbro, managed to get a scholarship to Harvard. He later became an assistant dean at Eastern Connecticut State College.

Isn't that something? As a '60s radical you can pump a bullet into someone's head, and a few years later, in the same state, you can become an assistant college dean! Only in America! [Sorry, but this goes on all over the world!]

Erica Huggins was the lady who served the Panthers by boiling the water for Mr. Rackley's torture. Some years later she was elected to a California School Board.

How in the world do you think these killers got off so easy? Maybe it was in some part due to the efforts of two people who came to the defense of the Panthers.

These two people actually went so far as to shut down Yale University with demonstrations in defense of the accused Black Panthers during their trial.

One of these people was none other than Bill Lan Lee. Mr. Lee, or Mr. Lan Lee, as the case may be, isn't a college dean. He isn't a member of a California school board. He is now head of the U.S. Justice Department's Civil Rights Division.

Ok, so who was the other Panther defender? Is this other notable Panther defender now a school board member?

Is this other Panther apologist now an assistant college dean?

No, neither!

The other Panther defender was, like Lee, a radical law student at Yale University at the time. She is now known as the "smartest woman in the world".

She is none other than the unofficial [now official] Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate from the State of New York—our lovely First Lady, the incredible Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Pass this on.

HAVE A GOOD DAY! [End quoting]

As most of our readers already know, the so-called elite who rule this world from behind the scenes are almost all criminals of one kind or another, as are most of the puppets they place into important positions, and should be in prisons. Meanwhile, many of the ones who are in prisons are whistle blowers, etc., who have tried to do the right thing but were not aware of just who they were up against.

FOURTH AMENDMENT

SNEAK ATTACK!

RENO'S OUTRAGEOUS "SECRET SEARCHES" MEASURE

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 5/21/00: [quoting]

The Reno Department of Justice is very good at being sneaky. The DOJ's lobbyists are on the verge of successfully sneaking into law a provision which will authorize federal agents to stealthily enter people's homes, search the homes, and not tell anyone.

The Secret Searches measure is so outrageous that it would have no chance of being enacted as a bill on its own, when subjected to public scrutiny and debate. So instead, the DOJ has nestled the Secret Search item deep inside a long bill dealing with methamphetamines. The measure is further disguised with the innocuous title of "Notice Clarification".

Subject to virtually no public discussion, the Secret Searches item has already passed the Senate, hidden inside the methamphetamine giant S.486. Next week, the House Judiciary Committee will take up H.R. 2987, the House version of the Senate bill, which also contains the buried clause on Secret Searches (section 301). The federal bankruptcy reform bill (which has passed both houses, and is currently in a conference committee) likewise has the hidden Secret Searches language.

If the Secret Searches provision became law, it would apply to all searches conducted by the federal government, not just searches involving methamphetamines or bankruptcy.

When conducting searches, federal agents are currently required to announce their presence before entering, and to provide an inventory of any items they take. Because the person whose home or business is being searched knows about the search, he can exercise his Fourth Amendment rights, and make sure that the police have a properly-issued search warrant. He can also see if the search is being conducted according to the warrant's terms, i.e., the police are searching only for items authorized by the warrant, they are searching the right address, etc.

But under a Secret Searches law, federal police could enter a person's home surreptitiously, conduct a search, and not tell the homeowner until months later.

Even months later, the police would not have to provide an inventory of "intangible" items which were taken in a search. So if the police entered your home secretly, and photocopied your diary or made a copy of your computer hard disk, they would never have to inform you of their actions.

Should the Secret Searches item be deleted from the methamphetamine and bankruptcy bills, it is likely that Clinton will try to sneak the item into a gigantic budget bill, during the Congressional Republicans' annual fall appropriations surrender. Take note: In a previous Congress, Clinton was able to obtain authority for warrantless wiretaps, which had been defeated after public debate earlier in the year, by hiding the authority in the year's omnibus budget bill. [End quoting]

Are we going to let them get away with this while we are entertained by sports, TV, etc.?

ARE WE FIDDLING WHILE ROME BURNS?

WAS ELIAN'S FREEDOM FLIGHT STAGED?

From RUMOR MILL NEWS (RUMILLS), (<http://www.rumormillnews.com>), 5/25/00: [quoting]

On January 7, 2000, a Rumor Mill News source stated: "that a joint operation between Cuba and the United States arranged for the small group of Cuban refugees to make an attempt to reach the United States in a small boat.

"Once the boat was near shipping and fishing areas, it was sabotaged. Elian was the only survivor."

The anonymous source stated that Elian had NOT been in the water for two days.

The following article from the Miami Herald seems to confirm our source's information. If Elian's "rescue" was a staged event, then there are many questions that need to be answered.

Where is Elian's mother and her boyfriend?

Are they dead—i.e., were they murdered to create "The Elian Crisis"?

Are they in prison in Cuba? Was Elian's father right when he told Elian that his mother was alive and back in Cuba?

Who are these other two survivors? Are they Cuban agents or American agents?

Why did Donato Dalrymple go fishing with his cousin on that eventful day?

Like many low-level CIA agents from the cold war days, Dalrymple has a Russian wife. (Remember Marina Oswald?) Is Dalrymple an agent—and if so, which government does he work for? Russia, the United States, or Cuba?

Rumor Mill News still has its agents out gathering more information on this. As it comes in, we will pass it on. Meanwhile, consider the following:

ACCOUNTS OF SURVIVORS IN ELIAN SAGA DISPUTED

By Alfonso Chardy,
<achardy@herald.com>:

SAGA OF ELIAN

<<http://www.herald.com/content/archive/news/rafters99/docs2/029395.htm>>

A doctor who examined Elian Gonzalez shortly after he was rescued on Thanksgiving Day told immigration authorities the boy probably had been in the water less than 24 hours, newly released U.S. Coast Guard records show.

The records, and interviews based on them, also cast doubt on the commonly told story of how the two adult survivors of the rafter tragedy came ashore.

A man listed in the documents as a witness told The Herald on Tuesday that he found Arianne Horta and Nivaldo Fernandez several miles out to sea and brought them to Crandon Park Marina so they would not be returned to Cuba.

The two survivors have insisted that they swam to shore by themselves, a story Horta repeated again this week.

The records, released to The Herald in response to a request filed under the federal Freedom of Information Act, are unlikely to change the basic legal issues in the court battle over whether Elian Gonzalez is entitled to a political asylum hearing.

But they show that six months after Elian was plucked from the sea, there is still much that is not known for sure about the sinking of the boat that carried Elian, his mother, and 12 other people on an ill-fated journey to the United States.

Resolving those discrepancies could prove difficult. Only Horta, Fernandez and Elian, who was then 5 years old, survived the sinking, and the documents suggest that Horta and Fernandez have changed some of the details of their account since they were first interviewed by U.S. authorities.

But Coast Guard officials also were cautious about the accuracy of information contained in the phone and radio logs provided to The Herald.

"Many times, the information in the logs is hearsay" said a Coast Guard spokeswoman who asked that her name not be published.

According to the most oft-repeated version of the events, the boat in which Elian, his mother Horta, 22, and her boyfriend Fernandez, 33, were traveling capsized late at night Monday, Nov. 22. That would mean that Elian, Horta, and Fernandez spent more than 50 hours in the water before being rescued on the morning of Nov. 25, Thanksgiving Day.

There is little doubt that the boat left Cuba Nov. 22. Cuban authorities telexed the U.S. Coast Guard that day reporting that a badly overloaded boat had left for the United States. And a phone bill shows that Elian's grandfather, Juan Gonzalez Hernandez, placed a collect call to his sister in Miami, Georgina Cid, at 9:01 p.m. that day, to report that Elian and his mother were on their way to Miami.

But it is less clear what happened between that time and 6:25 a.m. Thanksgiving Day—the time listed on a Miami-Dade police report taken on the discovery at Crandon Park Marina of Horta and Fernandez. Elian was located about two hours later off Fort Lauderdale.

In an interview Tuesday, Horta repeated her version of events that she, Fernandez, and Elian were in the water from around 10 p.m. Monday Nov. 22 until their discovery Nov. 25.

"I remember distinctly that we went into the water Nov. 22 because it was my birthday" Horta said. "I spent my birthday in the water."

A Coast Guard log entry at noon, Nov. 25, however, contradicts Horta. It says the boat capsized "early morning Tuesday."

DEEP SUSPICION

Another Coast Guard log entry written at 6:52 p.m. Nov. 25 reflects deep Border Patrol suspicion that the survivors could have been in the water since Monday night. It quotes an unidentified Border Patrol agent as saying it was "not believable that a 5-year-old survived on a raft for 3 days".

Yet, the same log entry notes that "Miami medical personnel" had indicated to the Border Patrol that Horta and Fernandez "look like they could have been out there for that long".

Another entry, this from Nov. 26, the day after the rescues, claims that a doctor had said the boy had been in the water much less time than the commonly believed version would suggest.

"Doctor said the boy wasn't in the water 24 hrs" the entry says. The notation was made by an unidentified Coast Guard mission coordinator.

The coordinator obtained the information from a U.S. Border Patrol officer who—in turn—was relaying the gist of a conversation with one of the doctors who treated Elian at Joe DiMaggio Children's Hospital in Hollywood.

The Coast Guard said this week that it did not have the name of the doctor. A spokeswoman for the hospital, Lauri Brunelli, declined to comment, citing patient confidentiality.

Inconsistencies about the timing of the capsizing are compounded by differing versions of how Horta and Fernandez reached shore.

Horta, in a story The Herald published Nov. 28, was quoted as saying she and Fernandez were rescued by a passing boat. But in a later story, published Dec. 13, Horta left the impression she and Fernandez swam to shore—a version Horta repeated Tuesday, saying that she and Fernandez made the swim after seeing the lights of Key Biscayne.

WITNESS NAMED

But a previously unreleased police report gave the name of a witness, Reniel Carmenate, who when contacted by The Herald on Tuesday, gave two accounts of how Horta and Fernandez were rescued, both of which differed from Horta's version.

In the first, Carmenate said that he and other people pulled Horta and Fernandez from an inner tube as it floated in the water near Crandon Park Marina on the west side of the Rickenbacker Causeway near Key Biscayne.

But when told that Horta claimed that she and Fernandez had swum to shore, Carmenate changed his story.

"I guess I'll have to tell you what really happened" he said. "The real story is that we found them several miles off Key Biscayne.”

Carmenate said he took Horta and Fernandez to shore before calling authorities so the couple would not be automatically returned to Cuba. Cuban migrants intercepted at sea are generally repatriated, while those who reach shore usually stay.

Carmenate said he was aware of the policy because he had been a “rafter” himself. Carmenate said he arrived from Cuba by boat two years ago.

Told of Carmenate’s version, Horta insisted Wednesday that she and Fernandez swam to shore by themselves and that she had never met Carmenate. Fernandez could not be reached for comment.

But there is little doubt that Carmenate was one of the sources of the first reports to authorities about Horta and Fernandez. His name is listed in a Miami-Dade police account of the incident, and a Coast Guard log entry notes that a Border Patrol agent believed that the fishermen who found Horta and Fernandez somehow were involved.

GENE-ALTERED FOOD CLEARS FDA HURDLE

From ASSOCIATED PRESS, 5/12/00: [quoting]

Food labels will NOT have to disclose whether ANY ingredients are genetically engineered, the Clinton administration decided Wednesday.

“The scientific evidence does not show that these products are any different from a health and safety standpoint” said Joe Levitt, director of the Food and Drug Administration’s Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition.

Instead, the administration adopted a series of industry-backed steps intended to assure the public that genetically engineered plants and animals are safe to eat.

Critics of the industry say there isn’t enough knowledge about possible allergic reactions to the food or potential harm to the environment, and they have demanded both a labeling requirement and tougher testing standards for biotech food.

The administration’s plan would formalize the FDA’s review process for new biotech crops and set labeling standards restricting the claims made for biotech-free foods.

Biotech companies will be required to turn over their research data and to notify the FDA at least four months in advance of releasing new genetically engineered ingredients for animal-feeding products or food directly consumed by humans. [End quoting]

It looks like we’re going to have to really speak LOUD AND CLEAR to our representatives in Congress if we are going to persuade them to allow us to have just plain unadulterated food to eat. If we don’t, we can only expect much harsher poisoning with no way to tell.

STUDY SAYS CHEMO DULLS THE INTELLECT

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 3/29/00: [quoting]

Ordinary doses of chemotherapy sometimes appear to permanently dull survivors’ intellectual powers, leaving them with poor memories, muddy thinking, and inability to do math in their heads, new research suggests. Cancer patients often complain of “chemobrain” or “woolly-headedness” during treatment. While they are typically reassured this will go away, little attempt has been made until now to see if these subtle problems linger years later. The new study, conducted at Dartmouth Medical School, found that people who get s t a n d a r d chemotherapy appear to be about twice as likely as other cancer patients to score poorly on various intelligence tests an average of 10 years after their treatment. [End quoting]

It does far more than deaden the brain. Why do you think, along with radiation, it’s the dark, so-called elites’ favorite treatment for one of the biggest killers?

Remember the game plan is to get your money and then kill most of the world’s population. The way to accomplish this is to get you sick and let you die slowly. Then they get your money, and you don’t even suspect, much less blame them.

Meanwhile, many legitimate cancer cures have been around for most of a century, yet these are mostly not among the choices you are allowed by the medical police out to “protect” you, through suppression, unless you go to Mexico or elsewhere.

The FDA is now also trying to outlaw any practioner of natural help for getting well. This is being acted upon at the present time, and if we don’t speak up very soon, it will be too late!

HUGE ICEBERGS ADRIFT FROM ANTARCTICA

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 5/11/00: [quoting]

Three giant icebergs have broken off the Ronne Ice Shelf in Antarctica and are adrift, the National Ice Center reported Wednesday.

Iceberg A-43 was detected by satellite on May 5, having broken free on May 4.

Iceberg A-44 broke loose May 6, at about the same time A-43 broke in half to form A-43A and A-43B.

The center said A-43A measures 107 miles by 21 miles; A-43B is 53 miles by 23, and A-44 is 41 by 20 miles.

When an iceberg is first sighted, the National Center in Suitland, MD, documents its point of origin and assigns a letter, dividing Antarctica into quadrants. For example, A-44 is the 44th iceberg the ice center has found in quadrant A, which is the area due south of South America.

The ice center is a joint activity of the Navy, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and the Coast Guard. [End quoting]

If this isn’t enough to wake us up to radical changes in climate and weather, then the storm in Liberty, Texas the night of May 19 should do the job. They had 18.5 inches of rain in—believe it or not—5 hours, between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m. Saturday morning! That is an average of 3.7 inches per hour for 5 hours straight!

Another article I read said that certain parts of Australia had 10-15 times the normal rainfall for the first 3 months of this year.

The weather patterns are shifting drastically and, along with other indicators, suggest that severe Earth changes are soon upon us.

Also remember that the normal media prostitutes are usually instructed to play down these kinds of storms and, with only passing attention, don't even consider them "newsworthy"—while keeping your attention focused on "important" matters like the latest fashions.

People have made fun of those who prepared themselves for emergencies, and yet the news today is stating that many thousands of people along the East Coast of the U.S. are without power for many hours from a severe storm. The power industry is warning there will probably be many areas of the country that will have blackouts this summer because of lack of sufficient power and distribution. So just who is so stupid and paranoid to have emergency supplies handy?

TOO MANY CONTRADICTIONS FOR THOSE WITH EYES TO SEE

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, 5/10/00: [quoting]

If what is heard is true, then our economy is the greatest in history. Why then are so many new programs being created for the poor? A contradiction.

If the unemployment percentage or figure is the lowest in history, why then are the homeless numbers not dropping, but increasing? A contradiction.

If the wages and salaries are the highest ever, then why is the poverty level not decreasing? A contradiction.

If the states and federal government all have the largest surpluses in history, then why is the extra money not being returned to the rightful owners of those funds, the people, and the tax rates lowered? A contradiction.

A government rule, regulation, or law covers every single facet or phase of our lives. If our premise in this country is freedom and liberty, why then do we have less of those two rights than we had yesterday? A contradiction.

If George Orwell's 1984 book is a fictional account of what he foresaw for the future, why then do we have "secret witness" and "inform on your neighbor" programs? A contradiction.

If our government is honest as it proclaims itself to be, why then are these questions being asked?

The truth is absolute and cannot be changed or denied. — Ronn Jackson, Canton, South Dakota [End quoting]

Just carefully watching the evening news programs on our vidiot boxes can quickly add quite a few more items to the above list. Seems a lot like 1929 all over again, shortly before the Stock Market crash that October.

SUICIDE SEEDS ON THE FAST TRACK

From STRATEGY, Australia, Intl., 3/2000: [quoting]

Rural Advancement Foundation, 2/25/00
TERMINATOR 2 YEARS LATER:

SUICIDE SEEDS ON THE FAST TRACK

"We've continued right on with work on the Technology Protection System [Terminator]. We never really slowed down. We're on target, moving ahead to commercialize it. We never really backed off." — Harry Collins, Delta & Pine Land Seed Co., January, 2000

ISSUE: Despite mounting opposition from national governments and United Nations' agencies, work on Terminator and Traitor (genetic trait control) moves full speed ahead. After Monsanto and AstraZeneca publicly vowed not to commercialize suicide seeds in 1999, governments and civil society organizations were lulled into thinking that the crisis had passed.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Last year AstraZeneca conducted its first field trial on genetic trait control technology in the UK. According to industry sources, it is not the first company to conduct field tests. Can commercialization be far behind?

PLAYERS: Delta & Pine Land, the world's largest cotton seed company, proudly asserts that it is "moving ahead to commercialize" Terminator. Monsanto and AstraZeneca have each merged with other companies since they pledged not to commercialize suicide seeds. The Gene Giants collectively hold over 30 Terminator-type patents. Corporate commitments to disavow Terminator are short-lived and virtually meaningless in light of the eye-popping pace of corporate takeovers and makeovers. The United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) Director General Jacques Diouf has joined many governments in opposing Terminator. Despite massive public protest, the US Department of Agriculture (USDA) continues to defend and support anti-farmer, Terminator research.

IMPACT: Without government action to firmly reject Terminator and Traitor, these technologies will soon be available commercially, with potentially disastrous consequences for farmers, food security, and biodiversity.

Chemically dependent seeds are the goal of Traitor technology—will hold farmers and food security hostage to a handful of multinational enterprises.

National agricultural production could become wholly dependent upon foreign exports of critical chemical inducers. Entire countries could be forced to surrender national seed sovereignty and be held in biological bondage if governments decided to use the technology to enforce trade sanctions or resolve trade disputes. Could genetic trait control technology become a biological weapon used for agro-terrorism?

POLICY: The future of Terminator/Traitor Technology rests with national governments and multinational corporations. The pressure points for political action are, first and foremost, with national governments around the world.

Second, pressure should be applied at key international forums such as the Convention on Biological Diversity, FAO, the World Trade Organization's Trade-Related Intellectual Property (WTO/TRIPs), at the upcoming Global Forum on Agricultural Research in Dresden, and at negotiations in Geneva to strengthen the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention. RAFI's work in Year Three of the Terminator will be in these international areas.

HANDYMAN SAVES KNIFING VICTIM'S LIFE—BY SEALING HIS WOUND WITH SUPER GLUE!

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich.—Hero handyman Larry Vurtenbrad saved a stabbing victim from bleeding to death by sealing the wound with glue!

The quick-thinking jack-of-all-trades used the super-strong, super glue-type adhesive to close up the wound in 41-year-old Dave Cleardow's belly after a vicious mugger slashed the victim wide open.

"Had it not been for the swift and resourceful actions taken by Mr. Vurtenbrad, Mr. Cleardow would not be alive today" said an emergency room physician who treated the victim.

The incredible drama unfolded one night in early April as Vurtenbrad headed back to his truck, toolbox in hand, after spending 12 hours repairing the plumbing in an aging apartment building.

"I was dog-tired and just ready to plop into bed" he recalls.

But as he passed an alley, he heard groans of agony—and when he glanced down the dark passageway, he saw a man lying in a heap.

"He was moaning, 'Help me, I've been stabbed’” said the 35-year-old handyman.

Vurtenbrad rushed to the victim’s side and was horrified by what he saw. Not only was the trucker lying in a pool of blood, his abdomen had been slashed horizontally and his intestines were literally hanging out of his body. “I knelt next to him and kind of pushed his guts back in and squeezed the two flaps of flesh back together” the Good Samaritan says.

But Vurtenbrad knew the situation was grave. He told Cleardow to hold the flaps of skin together with his hands, then yelled to a passerby to call 911 while he looked for something to use as a bandage.

Desperately, he threw open his toolbox and reached in for his trusty duct tape.” When I saw that my last roll was empty, I thought we were out of luck” he recalls.

Then the handyman saw it: A tube of the industrial-strength glue, guaranteed to bond virtually any type of material instantly.

After telling the bleeding man to line up the two flaps properly, Vurtenbrad applied the glue liberally to the wound, pushed the flesh together, and prayed.

Within seconds, the bleeding stopped and the flaps were holding together on their own, as if stitched by a trained surgeon. About 21 minutes later, an ambulance showed up. But doctors admit that if it hadn’t been for the glue, Cleardow would have died in the filthy alley.

Now recovered from his injury, Cleardow is grateful to his rescuer. “The robber came up behind me and I really thought I was going to die” he said. “But Larry Vurtenbrad saved my life. He’s a hero.” [End quoting]

Hopefully this information may help to save other lives in an emergency situation.

OUR FOREFATHERS ON FIREARMS

From THE KEYSTONE SENTINEL, Vol. V, #4, 4/00: [quoting]

“Firearms stand next in importance to the Constitution itself. They are the American people’s liberty teeth and keystone under independence. — George Washington

“Americans have the right and advantage of being armed, unlike the citizens of other countries whose governments are afraid to trust the people with arms.” — James Madison

“The strongest reason for the people to retain the right to keep and bear arms is, as last resort, to protect themselves AGAINST TYRANNY IN GOVERNMENT. [emphasis mine] — Thomas Jefferson [End quoting]

These quotes are included here as a reminder of the practical wisdom of our Founding Fathers in a very imperfect world. They knew all too well that it would only be a matter of time before the so-called elite, who had already accomplished their stranglehold on Europe, would be seducing the political prostitutes in America into selling this country too. That goal has pretty much been achieved, while most of the public sleeps in front of their television sets. Is it any wonder that actor Charlton Heston and the National Rifle Association have endured such extreme harassment. THE “MILLION MOM MARCH” FARCE (OR — HOW THE NWO DISARMS AMERICA: ACT II - SCENE 3)

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 5/14/00: [quoting]

By Ken Adachi

First, let’s review:

The Clintons are under direction of the Illuminati to do their part to effect the disarming of America. The script being followed is the same one the Illuminati used to effect the disarming of British and Australian citizens. The Clintons aren’t necessarily involved in planning or strategy, since the Bilderbergers, the Tavistock Institute, and the Committee of 300, for example, attend to those details, but the Clintons are required to implement the agenda (at least until Gore or Bush becomes the next U.S. President, and then either one of those Illuminati puppets will continue the job).

Act I, remember, required a lot of young, innocent blood to be splattered across America’s TV sets and newspaper headlines. So practically overnight it seems, we have high school shootings, elementary school shootings, preschool shootings, playground shootings, park shootings, fast-food restaurant shootings, bus stop shootings, church shootings, office building shootings, and post office shootings. (Did I leave anything out? Well, no matter, the Illuminati will eventually round out the list).

In most cases, expendable, mind-controlled individuals are used to perform the shooting sprees (along with unrecognized “helpers” as evidenced from Oklahoma City, Waco, and Columbine) with the dutiful cooperation of munchkins in TV Media Land providing the horrifying video. The purpose, of course, is to create a tidal wave of national (& emotional) opposition to guns and pass legislation to ban the ownership of all firearms. For the time being, they wish to call it “gun control”, but, in the end, the final goal is “gun banning”.

Why?

Well, when these deceptive little devils kick in their “national emergency(ies)” or “martial law” or “national crisis” scenarios, they will come-a-calling to you and I. The steel helmeted, flak jacketed, assault weaponed, armed individuals outside your front door will want to come in and have a look around. They will tell you that Federal Law # blah, blah, blah (based on “LAWFUL Presidential Executive Orders”) requires them to confiscate all firearms, “excessive” food, radio equipment, and perhaps even YOU, under the rubric of “national security”.

Now, they wouldn’t like it if you dissented TOO vigorously. It’s OK if you just shout and yell and they have to carry you away in cuffs and ship you off to one of their “Detention Centers” dotted across the landscape. No problem. But they definitely don’t want you to take out your .45 or Uzi and start SHOOTING AT THEM! Good Lord, NO! We can’t have that!

Back to the play:

For starters, the organizers of this performance have said that there aren’t REALLY going to be a MILLION moms protesting guns this Sunday. No, they’ve already stated publicly that it’s more likely to be 150,000 people or so.

Huh?

Yeah, well, it boils down to image and spin doctoring. After all, 150K sounds so—well, pedestrian. You have to admit that a MILLION sounds a lot more impressive than a TENTH of a million and, to prove the point, look at Louis Farrakhan’s 1995 “Million Man March” on Washington. How many people are aware that less than 250,000 people showed up for that? It’s the image, man; it’s the IMAGE that counts!

Ok, but will stay-at-home, cookie baking, soccer moms be the bulk of the marchers?

Well, not exactly.

That’s what we’re SUPPOSED to think, of course, but in reality this effort will be attended by organized (& well funded) anti-gun people. For instance, look at the leader of this Million Mom “grass roots movement”: Donna Dees-Thomases. She just happens to be the sister-in-law of Hillary Clinton’s best friend. Gee, you can’t get any more grassroots than that!

I particularly loved this quote from a story posted by CNN on May 11 about the “March”: “...sponsors of the demonstration emphasized that a small group of moms are responsible for the event.

“Dees-Thomases said Thursday that many of the planners ‘never organized anything more complicated than a car pool’.”

Yeah. Right.

Thankfully, Americans aren’t as stupid as the Illuminati assumes they are and they are seeing through Messrs. Reno’s and Clinton’s subterfuge with growing clarity. God Bless those 5 Texas women who started the Second Amendment Sisters <<http://www.sas-aim.org/>>.

Let’s just hope there are enough politicians left in Congress who are ALSO interested in preserving our liberties.

<Educate-Yourself.org> [End quoting]

Remember that we here at The SPECTRUM

do not advocate guns. However, the fact that the law is on the books and they know some people will have them, is a very big deterrent to all kinds of criminals—including, most especially, the ones of the elite and government. History has proven, over and over again, that once you outlaw guns, the criminals in high places become fearless and the people become nearly powerless to stop their enslavement.

HOW TO SURVIVE A HEART ATTACK WHEN YOU ARE ALONE GIVE YOURSELF CPR

From A READER, 5/1/00: [quoting]

Many people are alone when they suffer a heart attack.

Without help, a person whose heart stops beating properly begins to feel faint and has about 10 seconds left before losing consciousness. However, these victims can help themselves by coughing repeatedly and very vigorously. A deep breath should be taken before each cough, and the cough must be deep and prolonged, as when producing sputum from deep inside the chest.

A breath and a cough must be repeated about every two seconds without let-up until help arrives, or until the heart is felt to be beating normally again.

Deep breaths get oxygen into the lungs and coughing movements squeeze the heart and keep the blood circulating. The squeezing pressure on the heart also helps it regain normal rhythm. In this way, heart attack victims can get to a phone and, between breaths, call for help. You'll be giving yourself CPR with this technique. [End quoting]

Tell as many people as possible about this, it could save a life.

THE LAW OF DIMINISHING RETURNS?

From "Politically Incorrect", by Dr. Richard Schulze, a column in his GET WELL newsletter for May 2000: [quoting]

The United States lost again for the country with the longest life expectancy, and Japan won again. We didn't even make it into the top ten, not even close. Numerous countries all over the world have longer life spans and are outliving us, like Greece, Spain, Israel, Sweden, Holland, even Iceland; the list is long. We did make the top ten on something though: countries that spend the most on medical care. We rank #1 in the world! Interestingly enough, none of the countries listed above, where people lived the longest, were in the top ten of money spent on medical care.

This proves without a doubt that medicine is definitely a case of the more you spend, the less you get.

JUST SAY NO TO DRUGS!

Our kids don't stand a chance anymore. No, not from the pushers who lurk in the alleys around schoolyards, but from the pushers inside the schools—the school nurses. Yes, in thousands of schools all across America nurses are pushing drug carts from classroom to classroom with paper cups filled with pills, just like in the hospital, to medicate our supposedly misbehaving children.

In my clinic, hundreds of my patient's children were sent by their teachers to medical doctors to put them on powerful psychiatric and mood-altering drugs.

I would read the teachers' reports of the children's horrendous crimes of daydreaming, having a vivid imagination, touching the other kids, singing, laughing, wiggling, doodling, hugging too much, having too much fun and even praying.

Have you ever noticed these are all the same great traits we adults are now paying our good money to take classes in, trying to re-learn. Now, in the new millennium, Fortune 500 companies are sending their top executives on vision quests and self expression seminars, in hopes to undo their frozen, unimaginative minds, to develop new innovative products and new ways of doing business, while at the same time their kids are having their imagination drugged out of them in school.

This is insane.

For most of us, the school system destroyed our sense of freedom, imagination, spontaneity, love, and laughter, and filled us with fear, anxiety, insecurity, and self doubt. It turned us into a race of followers who don't dare to color outside of the lines, rarely disagree with anyone, never question authority, follow the status quo, follow the rules, and behave like good little boys and girls.

In my day, they just scared, intimidated, threatened, and occasionally beat us into submission. But today, powerful chemical mind-zapping drugs are being used by dysfunctional school systems and bad, lazy teachers in overcrowded classrooms to get all the kids to come to attention, line up, shut up, do as you're told, and learn.

I have taught for over 20 years, all over the world, and call me old fashioned, but I always thought the best way to get a student's attention was to be personally excited, passionate, and involved in the subject, and figure out ways to get the students excited, having fun, and involved too.

Check it out for yourself, almost every murdering kid, from the Columbine High School murderers, to the numerous other school shootings, to even that boy who raped, sodomized, and then drowned that little girl face-first in the toilet of a Nevada casino, was on mood-altering, medical-doctor-prescribed, teacher-requested, pharmaceutical drugs. The press is too damn scared to talk about this one,

I think because so many adults today are on Prozac, other antidepressants, and mood-altering drugs, and hundreds of thousands of our kids are on them too.

The problem is of such magnitude that it scares the hell out of people, so we pretend it doesn't exist. The only solution would be for people to take responsibility for themselves and their families—and God only knows we are all too busy to do that.

Ritalin and other drugs of this nature are known to backfire when the kid is agitated and pushed too far, and have been proven to cause abnormal behavior all the way to frank psychotic episodes (disturbances of such magnitude that there is personality disintegration and loss of contact with reality.

I would say that our kids who are assaulting, sodomizing, raping, and murdering their classmates, have definitely had personality disintegration and lost contact with reality. Some don't even remember what they did when they are taken off the drugs.

A dear friend of mine told me last week that their wonderful kid was just prescribed Ritalin because the teacher said they looked at the classroom door and lost their attention when another kid walked through it; they were distracted. I said: thank God the kid was alert, since nowadays that classmate coming through the door could be some pharmaceutical-drug doped-up, suicidal zombie with a pipe bomb.

Prozac is now a commonly prescribed drug for 2- and 3-year-old children who medical doctors, day care workers, and nursery school teachers believe need to be psychologically altered.

"We are all born geniuses, and some of us get less damaged than others as we grow up."

Readers of The SPECTRUM should be quite familiar with Dr. Schulze, who has been frequently under attack by the medical police for promoting wellness with too much success for their liking, and for a very long time. Go back to the December 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM for a wonderful wellness prescription from Dr. Schulze. And while we're on the subject:

YOUR LIVER: IS IT YOUR FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE OR JUST A TOXIC DUMPSITE?

From GET WELL, Dr. Richard Schulze's newsletter, May 2000: [quoting]

"You can heal yourself of ANYTHING. ANY disease. ANY illness. Your body knows exactly how to create perfect health and heal you. All you have to do is STOP doing what you did to make yourself sick and START doing what will assist your body in healing itself. Then the Miracle happens. Tomorrow is what you believe and do today."

— Dr. Richard Schulze

Your liver is the LARGEST organ in your body.

It is your BLOOD CLEANING FILTER.

It PROTECTS you by CLEANING your blood of toxic chemicals and poisons that are in your food, water, and air. Modern living and our modern diet, the "Good Life", OVERLOADS your Liver.

It gets CONGESTED with thick, muddy, toxic SLUDGE that concentrates and ends up filling your gallbladder with hundreds of STONES and ROCKS. Imagine if you drove your car for 50 or 60 years and never, ever changed the oil or air filters.

Why is the liver so important? IT KEEPS YOU ALIVE!

Both the #1 and #2 causes of death are directly linked to the liver. The #1 cause of death is heart attacks and stroke caused by cholesterol blocking either coronary or cerebral arteries killing the heart and the brain. IT'S THE LIVER'S JOB TO FILTER THIS CHOLESTEROL OUT OF YOUR BLOOD.

The #2 cause of death is cancer. Everyone now agrees that almost all cancers are caused by toxic carcinogenic chemicals in our food, water, and air. These poisons get into our bloodstream, kill our cells, create tumors, cause cancer and kill us. IT'S THE LIVER'S JOB TO ELIMINATE THESE POISONS FROM OUR BLOOD.

No one ever just gets sick. Disease doesn't just happen, it is created. And often diseases are created by a sick, weak, overloaded liver.

As your liver congests, it can't do its filtering job. As it begins to back up, you get a SLOW TRICKLE OF POISONOUS, TOXIC WASTE entering your blood. This can go on for years, causing all sorts of chronic aches, pains, and illnesses. Eventually, when it fails, you get a TOXIC TIDAL WAVE OF POISON, and now you're in deep trouble. Most experts agree, from constipation and cataracts, to even cancer, many diseases start first with a sick, constipated liver.

Viral Hepatitis (liver inflammation) has reached epidemic proportions.

As if Viral Hepatitis A and B weren't bad enough, Hepatitis C has now infected MILLIONS of Americans, about 1 person out of every 50. There are now 6 different types of Viral Hepatitis and "C" is the #1 cause of liver transplants.

500,000 people this year will have their impacted Gallbladders carved out of their belly. Some will die; the rest will have impaired liver function and bad digestion for the rest of their life.

The key word inside the word liver is LIVE!

BASIC FACTS TO KNOW ABOUT VACCINATIONS!

From THE VacLib LETTER, Spring 2000: [quoting]

Vaccination Liberation, North Idaho Chapter 1-208-765-8421

1. Vaccines are toxic.

Vaccines contain substances poisonous to humans (i.e. mercury, formaldehyde, aluminum, etc.). Vaccine package inserts contain this and other information required by law to be disclosed to the public. Although these inserts are produced for consumers, doctors do not make them available to their patients.

Vaccines are grown on, and contain, foreign tissue and altered genetic material of both human and animal origin.

2. Immunization (the act of injecting vaccines) depresses and disables brain and immune function. Honest, unbiased scientific investigation has shown vaccinations to be a causative factor in many illnesses including:

- Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (aka SIDS, crib or cot death);
- developmental disorders (autism, seizures, mental retardation, hyperactivity, dyslexia, etc.);
- immune deficiency (i.e. AIDS, Epstein-Barre Syndrome, etc.);
- degenerative diseases (i.e. muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, arthritis, cancer, leukemia, lupus, etc.)

3. The high rate of adverse vaccine reactions is being ignored and denied by conventional medicine.

Prior to 1990, doctors were not legally required to report adverse reactions to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC).

Adverse reactions are considered "normal", are ignored or diagnosed as other diseases. Even with this poor system, reported damage is substantial.

Despite their current legal obligation, less than 10% of doctors report the damage they witness to the CDC.

4. Mass Vaccination Programs systematically and recklessly endanger the public while disregarding our rights.

Since vaccination breaks the skin, it is technically a surgery. All surgeries by law require informed consent. Informed consent is rarely attained before vaccines are administered.

Doctors vaccinate the unwitting and uninformed. The vaccine manufacturers' package inserts, which contain biased industry claims and the bare minimum required by law to reveal, are not routinely made available to consumers so that they can make a more informed choice.

Double-talk and unethical enforcement, such as threats, intimidation, and coercion are used to ensure vaccination compliance.

5. There is no proof that vaccinations are safe or effective.

There are no control group studies. Authorities consider that "to not vaccinate" is unethical and have refused to study unvaccinated volunteers. If control studies were done according to honest science, vaccination would be outlawed.

Studies which have been done are not designed to eliminate the examiner's bias. Authorities who compile and report disease statistics work closely with, and have a vested interest in, companies which produce the vaccines. In other industries, this kind of bias is not tolerated. Injuries and deaths in these studies are attributed to anything but vaccination to skew the results and make it appear that vaccines have some merit.

6. Laws allow drug companies to violate the public trust.

In private vaccine damage suits, information is revealed condemning vaccines as deadly.

Vaccine manufacturers use "gag orders" as a leverage tool in vaccine damage legal settlements to restrict the plaintiff from disclosing to the public the truth about the dangerous nature of vaccines. Our government has allowed these unethical tactics to be used which jeopardize public welfare.

7. The National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1987 is a pacifier.

This compensation program pretends to acknowledge the existence of vaccine damage by making "right" the wrongs done. Nothing in this Act attempts to avert these adverse events from happening in the future.

This Act is the result of vaccine producers pressuring the government to "immunize" them from private lawsuits which can run an average of $4 million per case. The fund is made up of tax added into the cost to the consumer of each vaccine, thereby making vaccine consumers pay for one another's, and perhaps their own, injury; the vaccine manufacturers have made themselves quite "immune" from accountability. In recent years it has become even more difficult to be compensated through this program due to the parameters for determining vaccine damage changing and coroners now ruling out vaccine damage and charging the parents with Shaken Baby Syndrome.

8. Private insurance companies, which do the best liability studies, have totally abandoned coverage for damage to life and property due to:

- Acts of God
- Nuclear war and nuclear power plant accidents
- Vaccination

9. Vaccination is not emergency medicine. It is claimed that vaccines avert a possible future risk and yet people are pressured to decide on the spot. A doctor's use of fear and intimidation to force compliance is not ethical. Vaccines are drugs with potentially serious adverse reactions. Time and forethought should be given before a decision is made.

10. There is no law enforcing vaccination for babies or anyone else.

Vaccination is linked with school attendance but is not compulsory. Exemptions from vaccinations, although restricted and monitored, are part of every state public health law and can be expanded by public pressure.

Departments of Health, Education, and the American Medical Association personnel profit from the sale of vaccines. They keep the existence of, and details about, exemptions relatively unknown.

We can go all the way back to the great 1988 book by superb researcher Eustace Mullins, called MURDER BY INJECTION: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy Against America, for an eye-opening account of the quackery and big business that passes for the healing arts under the watchful eyes of the AMA and FDA medical police.

BILL GATES GIVES $925 MILLION FOR VACCINATIONS!!

From THE VacLib LETTER, Spring 2000: [quoting]

Vaccination Liberation, North Idaho Chapter: 1-208-765-8421.

Patty Stonesifer of the Bill and Linda Gates Foundation has tabulated the Gates' philanthropic largess. The numbers are no less staggering than the charities to which they are being donated.

WHERE THE MONEY GOES

- $1 billion over 20 years to establish the Gates Millennium Scholarship Program, which will support promising minority students through college and some kinds of graduate school.

- $750 million over five years to the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization, which includes the World Health Organization, the Rockefeller Foundation, UNICEF, pharmaceutical companies, and the World Bank.

- $350 million over three years to teachers, administrators, school districts and schools to improve America's K-12 education, starting in Washington State.

- $200 million to the Gates Library Program, which is wiring public libraries in America's poorest communities in an effort to close the "digital divide".

- $100 million to the Gates Children's Vaccine Program, which will accelerate delivery of lifesaving vaccines to children in the poorest countries of the world.

- $50 million to the Maternal Mortality Reduction Program, run by the Columbia University School of Public Health.

- $50 million to the Malaria Vaccine Initiative, to conduct research on promising candidates for a malaria vaccine.

- $50 million to an international group called the Alliance for the Prevention of Cervical Cancer.

- $50 million to a fund for global polio eradication, led by the World Health Organization, UNICEF, Rotary International, and the U.N. Foundation.

- $40 million to the International Vaccine Institute, a research program based in Seoul, South Korea.

- $28 million to UNICEF for the elimination of maternal and neonatal tetanus.

- $25 million to the Sequella Global Tuberculosis Foundation.

- $25 million to the International AIDS Vaccine Initiative, which is creating coalitions of research scientists, pharmaceutical companies, and governments in developing countries to look for a safe, effective, widely accessible vaccine against AIDS. [End quoting]

As if the evidence against the practice of vaccinations was not overwhelming enough, when you allow for the PURPOSEFUL inclusion of very nasty stuff in serums, as part of the depopulation agenda of the New World Order thugs, you have a great formula for, as Eustace Mullins titled his book, MURDER BY INJECTION.

Do you think Bill Gates is simply "doing his part" for this NWO agenda? The SPECTRUM newspaper could live for a looong time on mere crumbs from Bill's philanthropy table; do you think that has any chance of happening?!

WHAT HAPPENED TO DR. BURZYNSKI?

From the CALIFORNIA SUN, Spring Edition: [quoting]

By Angelina Ferragomie

The California Sun was one of the first newspapers in the country to cover the plight of Dr. Stanislaw Burzynski (Dr. B) and his fight with the Food & Drug Administration (FDA) back in the May issue of 1996. During that time, Dr. B was entrenched in a fierce battle with the FDA over his right to practice medicine using his own protocols for cancer, called anti-neoplastins.

Dr. Burzynski discovered there are certain proteins (peptides and amino-acid derivatives) that are found in healthy blood, but at extremely low levels in cancer patients. By administering anti-neoplastins (peptides & amino acids), Burzynski could actually reprogram the cancer cell's life cycle so the cells will die.

The FDA indicted him on 72 counts and was actually trying to put him in prison for life. After 10 years of legal costs, Dr. B finally won, or so we were told.

In an interview conducted on the former Shoong and Chappell Show called HeartBeat, Radio Free America, in September of 1999, Dr. B admitted to Nicole Shoong and Dr. James Chappell that he was "granted" permission by our illustrious government to conduct FDA approved trials of his anti-neoplastins on a selected, by the government, group of cancer patients. The government would oversee every case and decide who lives, who is treated, who is turned away, and who dies. The significance of what this meant didn't really dawn on me until just recently.

While purusing through a popular health magazine, I read a story about a four-year-old child named Thomas Navarro. The story refers to this young boy with a medulla blastoma (a brain tumor) and Dr. B's dilemma in NOT being able to treat him.

Apparently the FDA has demanded all potential patients of Dr. B undergo radiation and chemotherapy first. This, in spite of the fact that radiation and chemotherapy are totally ineffective and are NOT normally recommended for children.

This is because chemotherapeutic agents are the most highly toxic drugs known, with a litany of horrific side-effects. Radiation, at the dose typically used, is also known to aggressively destroy the immune system. In addition, these hideous treatments cause irreversible and permanent brain damage, including blindness, deafness, cognitive damage, and growth disturbances, as well as the possibility of developing leukemia and other diseases.

A study reported in the December 1999 issue of the Journal Of Clinical Oncology showed that, of 29 infants and young children with medullablastoma, 23 experienced disease progression during chemotherapy. All of the children went on to receive radiation, all lost cognitive function, experienced a decline in sensory functions, required hormone replacement therapy, and all had growth abnormalities!

What happened to the tenacious Dr. B who fought so hard to provide a non-toxic cancer treatment that once showed miraculous results and who once said he would never cower to the Gestapo tactics of the FDA? You don't have to be a doctor to know that little Thomas will surely die without a non-toxic treatment immediately. If not death, orthodox medicine's own statistics show those with a medullablastoma will suffer severe brain damage and a host of other permanent disabilities.

Where is Dr. Burzynski in all of this? Why does he feel the need for FDA approval? Why can't he open a satellite clinic in Mexico or Nassau and save a multitude of lives? For some reason, he is now playing into the hands of his former enemies. Why?

The FDA is the strong arm for the pharmaceutical companies; their only interest is in drugs and sustainable disease. Does Burzynski really think by buckling under FDA restraints he will receive a patent on his anti-neoplastin therapy? How many lives will be lost by adhering to governmental double-blind studies? What is to happen to Thomas Navarro?

Now that Dr. B is working for the FDA, he must incorporate two prerequisites: First, all tumors must be measurable; and second, all patients must first undergo immune destroying chemotherapy and radiation with recorded failure. What chance does anyone have at survival after the medics destroy their immune function with toxic chemotherapy and burning radiation?

What is wrong with this picture? Where are we coming from America? We have allowed a strong-arm group of AMA puppets, FDA, to regulate our health. We have given them authority over our children's welfare! We have given them carte blanche over our lives? When will we wake up? [End quoting]

One wonders whether Dr. B has sold out or if he is naive enough to think that by cooperating with the medical authorities he will somehow eventually be allowed to practice any kind of true healing. He should have a good, long talk with Dr. Schulze!

HERO DOG OF THE YEAR

From the ARCAMAX WEIRD NEWS, "ArcaMax" <ezines@arcamax.com>, 5/26/00: [quoting]

Honor, the golden retriever, has been named "Hero Dog of the Year" by Dog Fancy Magazine. The pooch "called" for help after her companion, Maribel Schumann of Bryan, Texas, suffered a severe head injury when she fell off a porch swing.

Honor is a service dog, trained by the Texas Hearing and Service Dogs organization to help the wheelchair-bound Schumann live independently. Schumann was sitting in the swing when it collapsed, knocking her out. Honor roused her, got her back in her wheelchair and into the house, and then pushed a button on the telephone to call 911. [End quoting]

Anyone who doubts there are angels among us constantly need only be around our faithful animal friends for awhile to see miracles quietly unfold. The popular Chicken Soup For The Soul series of books has several astonishing volumes of collected stories on this subject. And the great British research scientist, Rupert Sheldrake, has just recently published a new volume called: Dogs That Know When Their Owners Are Coming Home, And Other Unexplained Powers Of Animals. We have so much to learn!

HOW DO BEES FLY?

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 5/16/00: [quoting]

Here again we have a mystery. How do bees fly? Lets see if this makes any sense.

One day I was sitting on the ground looking at a large bumble bee going from clover to clover. As I watched it seemed he had a hard time lifting off and moving around. He had a huge body and very small thin wings which seemed strange, and at first I thought they were cut off or worn off from going in and out of flowers.

As I watched him, he would make a sound and raise up a little, then the sound would change to a different pitch and he would rise and move ahead. His wings moved so fast they seemed invisible.

As I watched, he would make different sounds, and his wings, like on a helicopter, directed his flight, and the sounds would raise and lower him. I watched him for over two hours, and he kind of knew that I was watching him, so he made a couple of passes around my head and I could see how he worked his wings and sound to maneuver around.

Maybe we could learn something from him after all. C.B. [End quoting]

If you think the idea that they may be using sound to fly and wings to guide them is crazy, think again. There is much recent research beginning to come forth on this subject. The Bible tells about using musical instruments—sound—to crumble the walls of Jericho, and some Tibetan monks are known for their rumored use of sounds, made by musical instruments, to raise huge stones up the sides of mountains for construction.

SATELLITE RADIO AROUND THE CORNER

From an unknown source: [quoting]

Ford and General Motors recently inked separate deals with upstart satellite radio companies that will bring digital radio to your car, possibly as early as next year. Offering CD-quality sound and dozens of listening choices from around the world, digital radio promises to be the biggest change to in-car entertainment since FM stereo.

The service will initially be available through two networks: Ford has joined forces with CD Radio of New York City, while GM has signed up with XM of Washington, D.C. Other carmakers are expected to follow suit.

CD Radio's network will consist of three satellites, while XM's will have two. Each hopes to launch its first late this year or early in 2000, with XM slated to use a platform at sea. The satellites provide the basic coverage, and ground-based transmitters fill in the areas in which the signal could be blocked, such as in high-rise cities. The plan is to deliver as many as 100 digital channels, half of which will feature specialized commercial-free programming, and the other half digital broadcasts of existing channels. Current over-the-air channels will still be available as well.

Satellite radio will initially roll out in just a few select cities, but should quickly spread across the United States. Both networks will offer the service to subscribers for $9.95 a month. To receive the signal, vehicles will be equipped with a digital radio and a small external antenna.

While the networks are not designed for two-way communications, each is capable of identifying and transmitting signals to an individual subscriber. This could eventually mean a variety of other services, including the ability to start the car from a distance or unlock the vehicle at the request of an owner who has lost his or her keys. — D.M. [End quoting]

It also means they will probably be tracking your car every second—even though your radio is not on—and maybe even monitoring your in-car conversations.

COMPUTER HARD DRIVE

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, June 2000 [quoting]

Abandoning conventional magnetic materials will make it possible to build computer hard drives that store 10,000 times more information than the best systems currently in existence, say Indiana University researchers. The current storage record of 3 gigabits (3 billion bits) of digital information on 1 sq. cm of area was set last year by IBM researchers, using cobalt magnetic material.

Chemist George Christou told a recent meeting of the American Chemical Society that he and his colleagues found a way to fit 30,000 billion bits on the same amount of space. "My group makes molecules containing the metal manganese" he explains. "Each molecule can be considered an ultra-small magnetic particle, and this promises access to the ultimate high-density information storage devices." [End quoting]

It is ironic that, at the same time some scientists are working so hard to improve our lives, others are working to kill us off!

CELL PHONES MAY BE LEAKING HAZARDOUS CHEMICALS

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 5/14/00: [quoting]

Swedish scientists have claimed that hazardous chemicals emitted by mobile phones could be causing symptoms such as headaches in phone users.

The researchers claim this is the first report of possible leaching of chemicals from mobile phones in use.

According to Bo Brstell and colleagues at Malm-based contract testing laboratory IMTEC, mobile phones warmed to body heat, as they could be when pressed against the ear, emitted a range of chemicals, including phenol, creosol, and biphenyls.

They suggest that these could enter mobile phone users' bodies through the skin or by inhalation.

"This may explain why many frequent users of mobile phones complain over constant headaches and dizziness" Brstell told Swedish magazine New Technology which first reported on the IMTEC scientists' two-year investigation.

Responding to the news, Mats Pellbck-Scharp, of major Swedish mobile phone maker Ericsson, said he could not understand where the chemicals originate from. "We will of course look into this immediately" he said.

Sweden's Chemicals Inspectorate has requested a copy of the scientists' report for evaluation and the Swedish Institute for Research on the Workplace will also follow up the research.

Brstell and colleagues are not sure where the chemicals originate.

"They may come from details on the phones made from phenolic plastic. Another source may be the liquids used to facilitate the release of the phone shell from plastic presses at the factory. Circuit cards may also be the villains," Brstell said.

Meanwhile, a new report from the United Kingdom's Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones (IEGMP) recommends a "precautionary approach" to the use of mobile phones. The panel specifically discourages the use of mobile phones by children and the marketing of phones to children.

The panel says information about radiation exposure from different mobile phones—known as specific absorption rates (SARs)—should be "readily accessible to consumers". These numbers should be published "on the box" of new phones. The government should also circulate a leaflet to every household in the U.K. of the possible impact of the phones on health.

Further research is needed, the panel concludes, recommending a "substantial" research program, cofunded by the government and industry and run by an "independent panel".

In its response, the UK government has already agreed that information on SARs should be widely available and to set up a research program. More information, and the full text of the report, are available at: <<http://www.iegmp.org.uk/>>. [End quoting]

Considering the lengthy parade of denials for some years now about longterm effects of electromagnetic radiation from cell phones held so close to the body, especially the brain, is it any wonder that a new culprit might be introduced to deflect attention from the culprit which has much wider implications. If ever electromagnetic radiation is acknowledged as being harmful from cell phones, then it is a very small jump to also include electric power lines. And the power companies have been generating disinformation campaigns (to tell you power lines are safe) for a lot longer than have the cellular phone manufacturers.

THE NOSE KNOWS

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, April 2000: [quoting]

Soon, your refrigerator may tell you when the beef in its drawer has passed its prime. A California company has developed a device that lets appliances "smell". Cyrano Science's Nose Chip sensor consists of a polymer matrix that expands like a sponge when exposed to an odor. As the polymers expand, their electrical resistance changes; since each polymer is engineered to respond to a particular chemical, each odor produces a distinct electronic "fingerprint". (Spoiled food gives off chemicals that are characteristic of spoilage.) By comparing this fingerprint to an electronic database, a microprocessor can identify the type of odor and its strength.

The electronic nose concept has been around for at least a decade, but Cyrano says it has miniaturized and standardized the materials to the point where, in the next couple years, it will be able to manufacture sensors for about $1 apiece.

Bruce Hemann, Cyrano's director of applications engineering, says the company is talking with appliance manufacturers about putting the sensors in new refrigerators. The technology would be a boom for the elderly, who tend to lose their sense of smell over time, making them vulnerable to food poisoning.

INFORMATION PLEASE

From a READER and supporter, 5/22/00: [quoting]

When I was quite young, my father had one of the first telephones in our neighborhood. I remember well, the polished, old case fastened to the wall and shiny receiver on the side of the box.

I was too little to reach the telephone, but used to listen with fascination when my mother used to talk to it. Then I discovered that somewhere inside the wonderful device lived an amazing person and her name was "Information Please" and there was nothing she did not know.

"Information Please" could supply anybody's number and the correct time. My first personal experience with this genie-in-the-bottle came one day while my mother was visiting a neighbor. Amusing myself at the tool bench in the basement. I whacked my finger with a hammer. The pain was terrible, but there didn't seem to be any reason in crying because there was no one home to give sympathy. I walked around the house sucking my throbbing finger, finally arriving at the stairway.

The telephone!

Quickly, I ran for the footstool in the parlor and dragged it to the landing. Climbing up, I unhooked the receiver in the parlor and held it to my ear.

"Information, please" I said into the mouthpiece just above my head. A click or two and a small clear voice spoke into my ear.

"Information"

"I hurt my finger!" I wailed into the phone.

The tears came readily enough now that I had an audience.

"Isn't your mother home?" came the question.

Nobody's home but me!" I blubbered.

"Are you bleeding?" the voice asked.

"No" I replied. "I hit my finger with the hammer and it hurts."

"Can you open your icebox?" she asked. I said I could. "Then chip off a little piece of ice and hold it to your finger" said the voice.

After that, I called "Information, please" for everything. I asked her for help with my geography and she told me where Philadelphia was. She helped me with my math.

She told me my pet chipmunk, that I had caught in the park just the day before, would eat fruit and nuts.

Then, there was the time Petey, our pet canary, died. I called "Information, please" and told her the sad story. She listened, then said the usual things grown-ups say to soothe a child. But I was un-consolated. I asked her, "Why is it that birds should sing so beautifully and bring joy to all families, only to end up as a heap of feathers on the bottom of a cage?"

She must have sensed my deep concern, for she said quietly, "Paul, remember that there are other worlds to sing in."

Somehow I felt better.

Another day I was on the telephone.

"Information, please."

"Information" said the now familiar voice.

"How do you spell fix?" I asked.

All this took place in a small town in the Pacific northwest. When I was nine years old, we moved across the country to Boston. I missed my friend very much. "Information, please" belonged in that old wooden box back home and I somehow never thought of trying the tall, shiny new phone that sat on the table in the hall.

As I grew into my teens, the memories of those childhood conversations never really left me. Often, in moments of doubt and perplexity, I would recall the serene sense of security I had then. I appreciated now how patient, understanding, and kind she was to have spent her time on a little boy.

A few years later, on my way west to college, my plane put down in Seattle. I had about half-an-hour or so between planes. I spent 15 minutes or so on the phone with my sister, who lived there now. Then, without thinking what I was doing, I dialed my hometown operator and said, "Information, please."

Miraculously, I heard the small, clear voice I knew so well.

"Information."

I hadn't planned this, but I heard myself saying, "Could you please tell me how to spell fix?"

There was a long pause. Then came the soft-spoken answer: "I guess our finger must have healed by now."

I laughed. "So it's really still you" I said. "I wonder if you have any idea how much you meant to me during that time."

"I wonder" she said, "if you know how much your calls meant to me. I never had any children and I used to look forward to your calls."

I told her how often I had thought of her over the years and I asked if I could call her again when I came back to visit my sister.

"Please do" she said. "Just ask for Sally."

Three months later I was back in Seattle. A different voice answered "Information".

I asked for Sally. "Are you a friend?" she said.

"Yes, a very old friend" I answered.

"I'm sorry to have to tell you this" she said. "Sally had been working part time the last few years because she was sick. She died five weeks ago."

Before I could hang up she said "Wait a minute. Did you say your name was Paul?"

"Yes."

"Well, Sally left a message for you. She wrote it down in case you called. Let me read it to you."

The note said: "Tell him I still say there are other worlds to sing in. He'll know what I mean."

I thanked her and hung up. I know what Sally meant.

Never underestimate the impression you may make on others. Whose life have you touched today? [End quoting]

What have we lost in today's "sophisticated" world that once allowed "Information, please" to have such a wonderful warmth? It's amazing the effect that a few words can have on a person's life. A few kind words can go a long, long way.

Staying The Course Despite Rough Seas

5/29/00 HATONN

Good afternoon, my scribe. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come to you this day IN THE LIGHT, LOVE, AND ONENESS OF CREATOR SOURCE—THE ONE LIGHT. Thank you for seeking clarification, for the dark “tricksters” are forever looking to exploit the smallest of weaknesses, and familiarity often causes ones to let their guard down.

I will take a brief moment to acknowledge you of The SPECTRUM team (this includes all of you quiet donors and supporters) who have persisted through trying times and have continued on the tedious path of the Wayshower. The Light you are shining forth in a world accustomed to darkness is truly a worthwhile endeavor. I thank each of you for your persistence and perseverance.

This first anniversary is an achievement in and of itself. Despite all sorts of blatant lies and slanderous, childlike attacks from those you split away from, you have heeded our instructions very well in that you have just let the would-be attackers to their own delusional perceptions of reality, and let them to their own path of choosing. If another tries to pick a fight with you, and you do not respond, then there is NO battle. And more importantly, there is no needless drain of energies—physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual—off course and into distraction, which is the adversary’s purpose all along.

We of the Lighted realms of Creation see no value in trying to tear down another or discredit anyone, for their actions will always bear the fruit of intent. Each individual must deal with their own intentions and their subsequent inner emotional response.

The frequency-raising responses will always garner great happiness for the ones who are truly following their Higher Purpose. Low-frequency stress is often the result of going against the flow of your true inner desires.

If you sit in indecision as to which path is correct for you, then simply look to those who are following any particular path, and choose the one that resonates with YOU. DO NOT WORRY about making a wrong choice, for there are NO wrong choices! Any choice is better, from a growth perspective, than sitting in indecision (stagnation). Even a choice that eventually proves to be counter to your true soul purpose will eventually help you to focus more clearly on what it is you truly want, for you will have eliminated one or more choices or directions in which to seek.

Look not to tear another down for following their chosen path. There is no absolute RIGHT or WRONG from which you have the ability to perceive for another. You can judge what is RIGHT or WRONG for yourself, but beyond this it is quite an unworthy endeavor to dwell upon or judge the choices of another. Discern for yourself and walk YOUR path with certainty, curiosity, and with a willingness to grow when you make a mistake.

Many become so embarrassed, when they are shown to be on a less productive path than they themselves wish to perceive, that often these ones will put forth great energy in attacking those who are attempting to offer or show a better way. The more enlightened viewpoint will see no need to attack the less enlightened viewpoint, for there will be a greater understanding, and thus compassion, for the other, less encompassing viewpoint, and thus no threat is perceived.

If you feel threatened by another, it is due to your own insecurities, NOT because you are somehow “right”. Your world history is full of examples of people who need to destroy those who think differently than they do.

The underlying FEAR that these reactionary ones have is that others will see them as being weak, wrong, stupid, or even insane. The EGO fears having any perceived weakness exposed, for the ego equates this sort of exposure to a threat to the survival of the entity. And yet every en-Light-ened teacher will strive to teach their students to OVERCOME the ego, and learn humility, grace, and thus compassion for self and others.

Once the ego is tamed, great advancements along the infinite spiritual journey can be made. The third-dimensional schoolroom is a great teaching environment for this very lesson. Many ones, who had the opportunity to become great spiritual leaders and Lighted wayshowers, have succumbed to the power of the EGO. This happens when they have made a mistake and, instead of admitting to the error, they try to cover it up and destroy (or discredit) any ones who KNOW the truth.

We have witnessed this very scenario more times than we wish to dwell upon, for it is often with great sadness that we notice, as the child begins to walk, and falls, that instead of getting back up, the child just sits there in an incapacitating “tantrum” of sorts.

It must be reiterated here that each and every one of you have AT LEAST two personal Guides from the Lighted realms to help direct and guide you along your spiritual journey—which includes the “physical” environment in which you now find yourself. And, if this were not enough, you each have the ability and right to go directly to Creator Source—the One who created you, God—and get your Guidance directly, if you so choose. There are no exceptions! Even persons who have committed the worst imaginable acts have Lighted Guides TRYING to assist them.

From the perspective of a Guide, there is no judgment other than what will best serve the individual, given their current circumstance, regardless of their past actions or deeds.

Dear friends, our crew at The SPECTRUM are under constant attack from those who do not wish to see the world awakened. These attacking ones are the ones who FEAR the exposure of their INSANITY; these attacking ones employ the “dark” arts of nonphysical manipulation of energy that some call “black magic”. (It is, in actuality, a neutral—neither black nor white—potential available to all ones.) The so-called “dark elite” of your world use this potential for very self-serving, manipulative purposes—usually to enslave others—and thus you have a “dark” (unenlightened, often ego-controlled) overtone (perhaps “under”-tone would be a better description, considering the frequency range of these ones) to the energy.

These non-physical attacks have been dealt with by our SPECTRUM crew in a very enlightened way. Typically, when such an attack enters the awareness of the individual, there will result a very subtle disturbance of sorts. Sometimes it will be a restless sleep, or it will be a few little nicks, cuts, or bumps (seemingly unrelated) happening in a relatively short period of time. Other times it will be another person, around the targeted one, who comes under great attack, and the resulting effects often slop over onto the targeted one’s plate to deal with. These are all part of the challenges that you ones came to face. All players involved are playing their parts well.

With each such attack, our crew is getting stronger and wiser to the SUBTLE ways of the dark “tricksters”. As the experience continues, there will continue to be distractions and attacks. However, as I have promised the SPECTRUM crew before, I will reiterate here: Stay the course and all the resources (people and money) necessary to continue will be provided. This may not allow for a lot of extra, for there are many ones who have been “taken to the cleaners” in the past by ones claiming to be walking the Wayshower path—and some were. But when the temptation was great, they sought their own comfort, securities, and desires, rather than serving those who were seeking their assistance. We understand quite well the situation, and it is understandable that ones, who otherwise could, are quite hesitant to offer their assistance in your current situation. It is up to each individual to recognize and appreciate opportunities to help.

I tell you ones there is NOTHING to worry about, for there are great unexpected “twists” and “turns” in the road ahead. Allow the spontaneity of the unfolding drama you call “life” to present to you ones the challenges, obstacles, and most importantly the inner rewards (knowledge, truth, happiness, and Love) that come from being in service to others. The physical “treasures” are but distractions along the way that the EGO desires so as to have “status” to compare self to others, and thus somehow JUDGE who is better or who is higher on the “pecking order”.

None is better than another, and each of you have something special to offer. If you know not what else to offer, then offer a prayer of protection to those whom you love and to those who are standing on the frontline, attempting to offer a Light in the midst of a dark and nasty storm, by which you might find YOUR unique path to a greater understanding.

This information will not resonate with all ones—be assured. However I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, tell you that these words WILL withstand the greatest of scrutiny. I ask that you each question every word carefully and discern for yourself what you will. You can never ask too many questions, and we of the Lighted realms do NOT take offense at being challenged, for we have nothing to fear, such as being exposed for being anything other than exactly what and WHO we say we are.

The Truth is quite different than what many of you ones currently perceive. That is an important reason for the existence of The SPECTRUM newspaper. All lies WILL be exposed, for in the quickly coming awakening experience, the frequency-raising alone will cause the lie to glare in one’s mind as a shrill warning siren and red flashing lights.

For this reason, the ego-driven ones (of low frequency, usually overshadowed by darker, control-oriented, non-physical entities) will strive to keep anger, fear, and apathy alive within those who resonate with same so as to keep their dark, delusional idea of reality going as long as possible. These darkened ones will have great hardship dealing with this coming expansive shift in awareness, for their days of dark trickery, deceit, and manipulation are quite short now.

To you of our ground-based crew (if this message reaches you, consider it for you), thank you for your persistence and perseverance in these most challenging times. Together you can and ARE making a very positive contribution to the awakening masses of the planet. Each seemingly small thing you contribute toward helping another is a step toward freeing the souls who have become “trapped” in the karmic wheel of this planet’s third-density illusion.

We of the Host of God are as near as your breath, and we are ALWAYS waiting and willing to offer a Guiding Hand when such is requested. Call upon the Light (that which is dedicated to serving, in knowingness and truth, the will of Creator Source), still your mind from distraction, and allow the Inspiration to come. Question all such offerings, for there are NONE who are completely immune to the subtle influence of the darkened energies (self-serving power seekers) who have mastered the ability to impart their thought upon your own, if YOU allow them to, through careless acceptance of “anything” that comes.

Be at peace, and may the intent of these words find their proper place within your conscious understanding. I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn. I come with the Host of Creator God—The One Light—in service to ALL ones on and in and around your planet at this most grand of experiences: the birthing of a world into the next evolutionary level of existence.

The challenges are great, but the rewards will be beyond your current ability to perceive. Stay the course, and keep the Light of God about you at ALL times.

Blessings and Peace—Salu!

The Curious Case Of Dave Overton's Gold And The Phoenix Institute

Editor's note: For our newer readers, the following information will likely have little meaning and only passing interest. However, for those longtime readers and supporters of this newspaper—which came into existence exactly because of shady shenanigans, pulled on those of us who previously WERE the CONTACT newspaper, by those associated with the management of the Phoenix Institute—we feel we have an obligation to present some news of ever so revealing interest, especially to those of you who can read between the lines and have a vested FINANCIAL interest in said Phoenix Institute.

(See the www.contactnews10.com website, which is operated by a private archiving consortium that has been under almost constant attack by those who do not wish The Truth to remain available for scrutiny, for details of the clash which birthed this newspaper—in the final three issues of “our” CONTACT, for the dates of 3/15/99, 3/22/99, and 3/26/99.)

First we present a fine summary article by Dave Overton's good friend and sometimes contributing writer to this newspaper, Calvin Burgin. We asked Calvin to write this because of the imbecilic travesty that the so-called regular media did with the story, such as what we share nearby from the Austin American-Statesman for Tuesday, May 16, 2000. With this kind of “help” from the mainstream media “professionals”, it's no wonder why so many turn to newspapers such as The SPECTRUM for more factual and unbiased information.

Calvin Burgin is as precise and thorough a researcher as he is a common-sense, fluent writer. (As an aside here, we are presenting an information box near this article listing his available scholarly works.)

Calvin also just happened to be a good, personal friend of Dave Overton. Dave Overton, meanwhile, was a very gifted being who often “colored outside the lines” as does any genius—and was ridiculed for that, as is often the case, by those whose minds could not stretch beyond the conventional status quo.

As an educator, Dave Overton knew the power of knowledge. And, going the extra step of wanting to put that conviction into action, Dave had a vision of making financial resources available to see that important, long-suppressed information could be made widely available to the public—the kind of information that The SPECTRUM provides on a regular basis. That vision and goal is hardly what was conveyed in the mainstream newspapers.

For obvious reasons, following Calvin's tasteful, first-hand story, we then present a short chronicle of the recent history of the Phoenix Institute—where Dave Overton wanted his gold to go BEFORE many curious (and still unanswered) questions began to crop-up concerning both the veracity and the solvency of said Phoenix Institute—whose longtime main management have, by the way, been “away” in the Philippines for almost TWO YEARS now!

We will leave it up to the discerning reader to connect the dots and read between the lines—and pursue further what may be of personal or legal interest, especially from a financial perspective. It does not take the equations of rocket science to come to the conclusion that something does not seem to add up very well where the Phoenix Institute is concerned.

OVERTON GOLD FINALLY SOLD

On Monday, May 15, 2000, about nine years after Dave Overton gave nearly $390,000 in gold to the Phoenix Institute, disposition was finally made of the gold. As reported in the newspapers, more than half the gold ($160,000) was awarded to The Phoenix Institute for Research and Education. Heirs of Overton's estate received $104,000 in gold, and the estate's administrator, attorney Chuck Grigson, got $14,000. The gold is now worth considerably less than what it was when it became entangled in the court cases.

I remember my surprise when I read in the CONTACT newspaper that George Green had stolen a shipment of gold that had been shipped to the Phoenix Institute by Dave Overton. The gold had been sold to Dave by Larry Spence

With man's fortune divvied up, the Pot o' Gold case is closed

David Overton: Wanted coins to promote space alien's teachings.

BY DENISE GAMINO
American-Statesman Staff

A Travis County courtroom became an old-fashioned counting house Monday as lawyers sat under wooden ceiling fans and divvied up stacks of gold coins to settle the estate of an Austin man who thought his fortune would buy him intergalactic immortality.

After the lawyers presented Probate Court Judge Guy Herman with a settlement agreement, the judge surprised them by pulling two cast-iron pots from behind the bench so the lawyers could place the gold inside. The fight over the gold coins was known informally at the courthouse as the Pot o' Gold case.

In the end, more than half the gold — $160,000 — was awarded to a California group, the Phoenix Institute for Research and Education, which promotes the teachings of a 9½-foot extraterrestrial named Hatonn, “Commander in Chief of the Pleiades Sector Flight Command.” The estate of Dave Overton, an eccentric genius and retired University of Texas mathematics instructor who had lived like a pauper, got $104,000 in gold. The estate's administrator, Austin lawyer Chuck Grigson, got $14,000 in coins.

The gold originally belonged to Overton, who gave more than $500,000 to the Phoenix Institute

Rare Coins. Larry Spence Rare Coins consists of Larry Spence and Calvin Burgin—I am Calvin Burgin. Dave Overton was my customer and I had no idea until then that he was reading CONTACT newspaper!

The Phoenix Institute is a Nevada Corporation [Editor's note: See the story following Calvin's here for some intriguing details about the curious status history of the Phoenix Institute of late!], and the Nevada courts ruled that George Green had stolen the gold. The lawyers then tied up in courts the disposition of the gold until after Dave Overton died of cancer.

Eventually the gold was sent to Texas, as another ploy to hold up disposition of the gold, to see if perhaps the heirs of Overton's estate should get the gold. I often talked with Dave and it was his wish that the gold should have gone to the Phoenix Institute to further distribution of the writings of "Georgeos Ceres Hatonn". Dave had made other provisions for his friends and heirs; he had no intention of them getting the gold. The shipment of the gold to the Phoenix Institute was long before Dave died and should never have become entangled in his estate proceedings.

In my business as a coin dealer, I continually see so many people going nuts over gold, brothers and sisters becoming enemies because of greed over gold, even murders being committed. Such is humanity.

And when lawyers get involved, truth and justice flee faster than a speeding bullet. At the end of the court proceedings, the gold was sold to Larry Spence, and before Larry could take the gold, Judge Guy Herman pulled out a cast iron pot from under the desk and had the gold poured into the pot so that he could have his picture taken with the "pot of gold".

The day before the gold was divided by the court, the Austin American-Statesman newspaper had a front page article about Dave Overton. The author of the article had spent a couple of hours with me asking about Dave, but chose to mostly ignore what I said and published nonsense statements about Dave's beliefs from neighbors who admitted "We just didn't understand it." The newspaper stated that Dave "believed gold could buy his immortality". It was claimed that Dave believed "to get on the spaceship, you had to because he believed Hatonn would land a spaceship in Overton's front yard and beam him up to life everlasting. Overton, a widower with no children, died in an Austin nursing home in 1996 at age 81.

Overton had shipped the gold coins to the Phoenix Institute in 1991 to help it promote Hatonn's teachings. At the time, the coins were worth $390,000. But a Nevada state judge ruled in 1994 that the Phoenix Institute had swindled the gold from Overton.

Before the gold could be sent back to Overton, he died of prostate cancer.

His will, which left most of his belongings to his two close friends — Hal Fellows and Ron Flory — did not mention the gold. But lawyers for his estate staked a claim to it because the shipment of coins had never reached the Phoenix Institute. A breakaway member of the group had intercepted the coins when they arrived at the Institute and buried the gold treasure in his Nevada backyard.

The estate's lawyers also argued that $170,000 in loans Overton made to the Phoenix Institute had to be repaid.

The Phoenix Institute and the estate's administrator recently agreed to settle the lawsuit by dividing the gold coins and dropping the fight over the $170,000 in promissory notes.

"I was concerned over how a jury might see the case," said Randy Doubrava, an Austin lawyer who represents the Phoenix Institute, "because of the beliefs in Hatonn and the Commander and it being something outside of mainstream beliefs."

Grigson, representing the estate, said he opted to settle the case even though he believes a jury probably would have awarded the gold to Overton's estate rather than the Phoenix Institute.

"The gold would have gone away," he said. The coins "would all be eaten up in the expenses of the litigation."

buy a ticket. And that's where the money went."

Dave was an electrical and mathematical genius. He taught math at the University of Texas, and, as generally happens with geniuses, was considered eccentric and "hard to understand" by his friends and neighbors.

Well, Dave, I remember our meetings and I understand.

5/30/00 SPECTRUM STAFF

THE PHOENIX INSTITUTE FOR RESEARCH & EDUCATION, LTD.

(An Update To Our Readers)

In response to the many inquiries that have poured into our offices over the past year concerning the "status" of the Phoenix Institute, we would like to take this opportunity to inform you of some facts of public record. It will be obvious from carefully reviewing this data exactly how well "tended" the Phoenix Institute has been.

As you can see from Calvin Burgin's article above, the Dave Overton gold case has finally been resolved.

When reviewing the legal status of the Phoenix Institute at the Nevada Secretary of State's website (<http://sos.state.nv.us/corp>) on May 12, 2000, we found that the Phoenix Institute was in "REVOKED" status, and that Nevada Corporate Headquarters, Inc. had RESIGNED as the Phoenix Institute's longtime Resident Agent.

When asking the Nevada Secretary of State's staff the question: What causes a corporation to receive a "revoked" status? The answer was: "For not filing an annual list of officers and paying the annual fees on time. Initially the fees are due in the month of incorporation. The following month, if not received, it goes into "delinquent" status. Then, after 9 months, it is revoked."

When asked when Nevada Corporate Headquarters resigned as Resident Agent for the Phoenix Institute, the Secretary of State's Office informed us that the resignation took place on May 10, 1999. When asked when the Phoenix Institute received its "revoked" status, we were told it occurred on December 1, 1999. This means that since March of 1999 the basic fees and bookkeeping matters to keep the Phoenix Institute in proper and legal standing had not been paid to the Secretary of State's Office.

In summary, as of May 18, 2000, the Phoenix Institute was "revoked" by the Secretary of State of Nevada—which means: no annual corporate fees had been paid, no Resident Agent was responsible for the corporation, and no officers or directors had been filed with the State of Nevada.

And then, all of a sudden, on May 19, 2000, Mr. Ron Kirzinger paid outstanding fees and filed documents with the Secretary of State's office identifying him as BOTH the Resident Agent for, and President of, the Phoenix Institute for Research & Education, Ltd. The address listed is: 5344 Images Court, Las Vegas, Nevada 89107. Doris Ekker is still listed as Secretary for the corporation, and E.J. Ekker is still listed as Treasurer.

Remember that E.J. Ekker WAS on file as both the President AND Treasurer of the Phoenix Institute previous to this latest maneuver. See the scanned copies of the printouts of the actual corporate records on file with the Nevada Secretary of State's Corporate Information database both before (on 5/12/00; 1:58 p.m.) and after (on 5/23/00) this latest "adjustment" to the Phoenix Institute situation.

It is very, very, very interesting, to say the least, to observe the timeline on this sequence of corporate bookkeeping events with respect to the timeline of the final disposition of Dave Overton's gold.

On May 15, 2000, the judge issued his ruling on the Dave Overton gold case, and monies were disbursed. This was four days BEFORE the Phoenix Institute was resurrected from its grave. This therefore begs the enormously provocative "$160,000" question:

If, on May 15, 2000, the Phoenix Institute for Research & Education, Ltd. was legally and fiscally in a "revoked" status by the Nevada Secretary of State's corporate records office—which, again, means there were legally no officers, no directors, no fees paid, and no Resident Agent—THEN EXACTLY WHERE did the gold go and WHO GOT THAT GOLD?

And even much more importantly there begs the question: How about the welfare of all of those honest and well-meaning people who invested in the Phoenix Institute and who, upon suspecting less-than-honest business conduct, have repeatedly asked for (and been denied, with a myriad of excuses) the return of their sometimes substantial funds?

One can't help but wonder: if Dave Overton's gold was not forthcoming to the Phoenix Institute, how much longer would the Phoenix Institute have remained in the "revoked" status? Maybe indefinitely? And, as a possible investor in said Phoenix Institute, where would that leave YOU?

For those of you with a strong moral or financial interest in finding out further information about the Phoenix Institute, we strongly suggest you contact Mr. Kirzinger at the corporate address listed earlier in this article—and also listed on the most recent corporate record form from the Nevada Secretary of State’s website that is reproduced nearby. And one last note of intriguing insight: according to the most recent (5/30/00) public records of the Nevada Secretary of State’s Office, Mr. Ron Kirzinger ALSO happens to be Resident Agent for: Global Alliance Investment Association, Mountain Land Corporation, and Ruth Holding Corporation. E.J. Ekker is listed as the President and Treasurer of all of these; Doris Ekker is listed as the Secretary of all of these. Moreover, we find that Mountain Land Corporation and Ruth Holding Corporation show a “reinstated” status description. Reinstated from what? (A further check on 6/4/00 shows seven MORE corporations “awakening” under this same curious management umbrella.)

We are aware that some who had entrusted sometimes substantial funds to the Phoenix Institute are currently in the process of pursuing legal avenues of redress, as well as conducting a vigorous investigation into the legitimacy of that operation due to, as several legal experts have put it, the strong appearance of “a pattern of fraudulent activity” where the management of the Phoenix Institute is concerned.

Does all of this suggest a track record of forthright and responsible corporate management—or something much, much different?

You be the judge. We only wonder what Dave Overton would say right now.

A Talk With The Ishaya Monks:

discussions with Dennis Grover in Reno NV (remember the video we have been offering in this newspaper resulting from Gail and I appearing on his cable-tv interview show a few months ago). What I learned was so interesting that there was a natural desire to find out more about them. As it turns out, that was easily accomplished. They are very accessible—by design. In fact, they will come and teach in your town, if you invite them and perhaps even offer to sponsor them.

The Ishayas have a www.ishaya.com website. You may receive their electronic newsletter by sending a message to subscribe@ishaya.com and hear about their courses at the www.ishaya.com/courses web address. They may also be reached directly by letter at: Society for Ascension, 272 Biodome Drive, Waynesville, NC 28786; or by telephone at: 828-926-7853, fax: 828-926-5150. They have a number of centers within the United States and abroad. The centers in the United States are: Seffner, Florida: 813-651-5731; St. Louis, Missouri: 314-989-0305; and Sparks, Nevada: 775-626-8332. In Canada their center is in Moncton, New Brunswick: 506-857-4230. They also have centers in England, Japan, Mexico, and Venezuela. There are a number of books available through their centers, including: First Thunder; Ascension!; Enlightenment!; Second Thunder; Third Thunder; Third Thunder, Part II.

A few weeks ago, on May 11, I was able to conduct a telephone interview with 3 monks (of the 90) in North Carolina. But before we share that discussion with you, let's backtrack just a bit and take a look at some introductory information about their teachings.

While their terminology for some matters is different, you longtime connoisseurs of the spiritual messages shared in this newspaper will find a great deal of similarity—which is to be expected when dealing with Truth. For instance, they use the term “ascending” to mean the process of “frequency raising” and they center a lot of their teaching focus upon that very worthwhile endeavor.

Moreover, keep in mind that this is the time of the Great Awakening on planet Earth. One part of this awakening process is the exposure of long-held lies and other deceptions which constitute a profound web of mind control. However, another and equally important part of the awakening process is the bringing back into active human consciousness of skills inherent in man (HU-man; Higher Universal man) but long dormant or suppressed by that web of longstanding lies. The Ishaya monks focus much of their effort quite effectively on this “reawakening of latent skills” spiritual path.

Before presenting some of the Ishayas' teachings, let us begin with a quote from a long respected Indian spiritual teacher which sets the stage for much that is to follow:

“There is no greater mystery than this, that we keep seeking reality though, in fact, we ARE reality! We think that there is something hiding our reality and that this must be destroyed before reality is gained. How ridiculous! A day will dawn when you will laugh at all your past efforts.” — Ramana Maharshi

Let me now extract some information from the Ishaya's own literature to begin to set the stage for the discussion forum of the interview: (Direct quotes contained within this article are copyrighted by the Ishayas and the Society for Ascension, and all rights are reserved.) [quoting]

WHO ARE THE ISHAYAS?

The Ishaya Tradition

(Note: The following is not something you need to believe in order to practice Ascension. The Ishayas' Ascension is a teaching centered around personal experience and empowerment—and requires no belief whatsoever.)

The Ishaya Tradition holds that, as a young man, Isha-ben-Joseph, Jesus the Christ, traveled to the Himalayas in search of Enlightened Masters. He spent seven years with the Ishayas learning these techniques, which he then taught during his time in Judea.

Subsequently, his disciple John returned to the Himalayas to help preserve these Teachings until the time when the world was ready to receive this tradition of Enlightenment. That time is Now!

History Of The Ishayas And The Ishayas' Ascension The Ishaya Tradition

Any discussion of the Ishayas' historical tradition must begin with a reminder that the Ishayas' teachings are centered around personal experience and empowerment only, and require no belief whatsoever. All religious traditions teach some form of inward contemplation or prayer, and the Ishayas' Ascension—being a very powerful tool to achieve this inward movement—can exist within and even without any system of belief.

Nonetheless, the history of Ascension itself is quite long and beautiful. Several segments of that story are recounted in the Thunder series of books, which hint that Ascension has been active in the human sector for many thousands of years—far longer than most historians would consider plausible.

Other than the present time, the most recent revival of Ascension began approximately 2,500 years ago in India, when a young boy named Shankara set off to become enlightened. Being especially gifted, he achieved his goal at an early age, attracting a large following in the process. He rediscovered the principles of Ascension, and founded the four major schools, or Maths, that still exist in the four corners of India. Before disappearing from the world at about age 30, he taught at the northern Math. To this day, principal teachers at all four Maths are given the honorary title of Shankaracharya. Descendants of that tradition were traveling in Egypt some 500 years later, and met another very special young seeker known as Isha, Yeshua ben Joseph, or Jesus, son of Joseph.

From a very early age, this gifted youth had known and lived one central truth—that I and my Father are One—and had an intense desire to share this forgotten but explosively beautiful human legacy with others. He had, with the assistance of his merchant uncle, traveled extensively, seeking a spiritual tradition that resonated to this Truth, but to no avail. When he met these sages from India, however, he knew that his search had ended.

Jesus made the dangerous journey to India and practiced this tradition for several years, then returned to Judea to complete his mission. Second century Tibetan records exist that recount his return journey. The New Testament describes many aspects of the three years of Jesus' public ministry. For the most part, however, it details the public mission, and refers only off-handedly to the teaching he was giving his rather large body of followers—those going out in pairs to share his teaching with others.

There are many casual references to the esoteric teachings throughout the Scriptures, but because they were ignored by the Pauline tradition, they are much more apparent in texts that have not undergone centuries of editing. Of these, the recently discovered and authenticated Gospel of Thomas serves as a clear link between the inner and the outer teachings of Jesus.

After the Crucifixion, the remaining disciples traveled to the boundaries of the known world to continue their mission. It was, of course, in the Roman Empire that Pauline Christianity flowered, flourished, and finally crowded out teachings it labeled as heretical. John the Beloved was entrusted with assuring that the inner teaching would survive undistorted. He was captured by the Romans and exiled to Patmos for a number of years, where he wrote the Book of Revelation and perfected his practice of Ascension.

Upon his release, he and twelve companions began a journey to the mountains of India. He and the three others who completed the pilgrimage contacted the Masters who had originally welcomed Jesus. With their assistance, the Ishaya (meaning “for Christ”) Order was established in a remote valley of the Himalayas. This beautiful and remarkably temperate garden setting, which has been a favorite retreat of enlightened sages for millennia, has been referred to in the legends and lore of many cultures. The Ishayas call it Vashti, and it is there that the tradition of ascension has been preserved for the last 2,000 years, awaiting its advent into the modern world. It was in Vashti that MSI (Maharishi Sadashiva Isham) was trained in the Ascension techniques, and it was from there that he brought the Ishaya Tradition to America.

Upon his return to the United States, MSI began teaching the techniques to all who were willing to learn. He also instructed those who responded to their heart’s desire to fully live the Ishayas’ tradition how to teach and share Ascension. Hosted in living rooms throughout America, the teaching quickly expanded to several countries including Canada, Europe, Japan, New Zealand, and Australia.

Today, the teaching continues to expand wherever the interest is expressed. As it has in centuries past, the Ishayas’ Tradition continues to serve the desire of all who choose to remember their natural birthright of enlightenment. [End quote]

Let us now turn to some introductory remarks from the book Ascension by MSI. Note how closely this (and later) information parallels the longtime writings of the Ascended Masters on these same subjects as shared in the pages of this newspaper: [quoting]

They hold that the original teachings of Jesus were not a belief system at all, but rather a mechanical series of techniques to transform human life into a constant perception and knowing of the perfection of divinity within every human heart.

What is the source or goal of human life? The mind in the waking state is filled with opposing thoughts. Is the perfection of life to be found after death? Is Heaven a far-off state, one to be attained by living a “good” life, or is it something that is at hand—a reality that can be attained here and now, an Ascended reality that is possible to be achieved in the present?

Is it possible to live an ideal, Heavenly life in this world? Is it possible to live every moment in an upward-directed, Ascending mode, in which every thought, word and deed is filled with bliss and love and life? Can individual life become ideal? Can it be completely healed of the pain of past loss and faulty belief?

Logically, it is impossible to heal individual life if the world is not healed. No one is isolated from the rest of humanity; all are woven together in a tapestry of energy and synergy in which the lives and actions of one reflect in all others. If one person suffers, all suffer—at least to some extent. Recognizing this, the ancients formulated a lofty ideal, perhaps best expressed as the Boddhisattva pledge in Buddhism: “I will not leave this world until all are enlightened.”

These teachings are comprised of 27 Attitudes or Techniques, divided into 7 Spheres, each Sphere more powerful than the one before. The First Sphere, which is generally taught over a weekend, contains the first Four Ascension Attitudes or Techniques, which are comprised of, in general terms: (1) Praise; (2) Gratitude; (3) Love; (4) Compassion. Most of the 27 attitudes have three parts: one for the heart, one for the mind, and one to focus awareness. Following the First Sphere weekend teachings, there are Advanced Meetings/Techniques, as well as residential courses. [End quoting]

I now want to share a few statements from the book First Thunder by MSI:

“We learn how to use the mind differently! Instead of incessantly thinking, chattering away, never ever stopping for rest, thinking the same thing we thought yesterday and the day before and the day before that, over and over and over again, pointlessly noisy, going nowhere—instead of all that, we rediscover silence inside. We learn to experience the present. We stop regretting the past, we stop worrying about the future. We begin to be Here and Now. Then the full power of the mind is available every moment.

“Appreciation, or in one syllable, Praise. Appreciation is almost as powerful as Love and Gratitude, and it’s a lot easier to turn on at will. You can simply shift your mind toward appreciation instead of criticism; your body responds by making you healthier as your mind becomes happier. We can choose to be sad that a glass is half-empty or choose to be happy a glass is half full. It’s completely within our power; it’s all a matter of choice. And the simple truth is that condemnation never helps anyone improve, whereas appreciation always does.”

Christ said, “Preach from your housetops that which you will hear in your ear. For no one lights a lamp and puts it under a bushel, nor does he put it in a hidden place, but rather he sets it on a lamp-stand so that everyone who enters and leaves will see its light.” — The Gospel of Thomas

Turning again to a quote from Ascension by MSI:

“Cosmic Intelligence is one name for that Force which pushes our individual lives and our world toward perfection. It is the Source of the harmony between the opposing natural laws that causes all of life to progress, in spite of the appearances on the surface. According to the Ishayas, our only responsibility here on Earth is to make sure that we are not working against Cosmic Intelligence, either consciously or unconsciously.

“Evolution on Earth is accelerating at an ever-increasing rate. The vibratory rate of our world is changing upward so quickly now that there is a real danger large numbers will fail to make this transition. It is our obligation to do whatever we can to enable as many as possible to negotiate this global shift in awareness successfully. This should not be considered a burden; it is a joyous movement upward into the Light; every step forward on this path is not only great good fortune for every individual, but a large upsurge in life for the world’s billions.”

Before we enter the discussion with the monks, I would like to take some time to share with you a few parables, stories, and quotes from the Ishaya newsletters and website.

In the Vol. 2, No. 7 edition of the Ishaya newsletter, The Ascenders Connection, we find the following parable:

Where The Greatest Treasure Is Hidden

One day, the gods, having stolen from man his divinity, met in council to discuss where they should hide it.

One suggested that it should be carried to the other side of the Earth and buried; but it was pointed out that man is a great wanderer, and that he might find the lost treasure on the other side of the Earth.

Another proposed that it be dropped into the depths of the sea; but the same fear was expressed—that man, in his insatiable curiosity, might dive deep enough to find it even there.

Finally, after a space of silence, the oldest and wisest of the gods said: “Hide it in man himself, as that is the last place he will ever think to look for it!” And it was so agreed, all seeing at once the subtle and wise strategy.

Man did wander over the Earth, for ages, seeking in all places high and low, far and near, before he thought to look within himself for the divinity he sought.

At last, dimly, he began to realize that what he thought was far off, hidden in the “pathos of distance,” is nearer than the breath he breathes, even in his own heart.

Christ said, “The images are manifest to man, but the Light in them remains concealed in the image of the Light of the Father. He will become manifest, but His image will remain concealed by His Light.” — The Gospel of Thomas

In the Vol. 2, No. 5 edition of The Ascenders Connection, we read the following wise version of the “making lemonade from lemons” perspective:

The Mule Who Fell In A Well

A farmer owned an old mule. The mule fell into the farmer’s well. The farmer heard the mule ‘braying’—or whatever mules do when they fall into wells.

After carefully assessing the situation, the farmer sympathized with the mule, but decided that neither the mule nor the well was worth the trouble of saving. Instead he called his neighbors together and told them what had happened, and enlisted them to help haul dirt to bury the old mule in the well and put him out of his misery.

Initially, the old mule was hysterical! But as the farmer and his neighbor continued shoveling and the dirt hit his back, a thought struck him (as if mules could think). It suddenly dawned on him that every time a shovel load of dirt landed on his back, he could shake it off and step up!

This he did, blow after blow. “Shake it off and step up; shake it off and step up; shake it off and step up” he repeated to encourage himself. No matter how painful the blows, or distressing the situation, the old mule fought panic and just kept right on shaking it off and stepping up.

It wasn’t long before the old mule, battered and exhausted, stepped triumphantly out of the well onto solid ground. What seemed like it would bury him, actually blessed him—all because of the manner in which he chose to handle his adversity. (Story submitted by Wendy Waller of New Zealand)

Christ said, “He who is near me is near the fire, and he who is far from me is far from the kingdom.” — The Gospel of Thomas

In the Vol. 2, No. 6 edition of The Ascenders Connection, we are reminded of the power of reconciliation in the following:

The Farmers And The Carpenter

Once upon a time two brothers, John and George, who lived on adjoining farms, fell into conflict. It was the first serious rift in 40 years of farming side-by-side, sharing machinery, and trading labor and goods without a hitch. Then it all fell apart. It began with a small misunderstanding and it grew into a major difference, and finally it exploded into an exchange of bitter words, followed by weeks of silence.

One morning, there was a knock on John’s door. He opened it to find a man with a carpenter’s toolbox. “I’m looking for a few days work,” he said. “Perhaps you would have a few small jobs here and there. Could I help you?”

“Yes” said the older brother. “I do have a job for you. Look across the creek at that farm. That’s my brother. In fact, it’s my younger brother, George.

“Last week, he took a bulldozer to the meadow and now there is a creek between us. He may have done this to spite me, but I’ll go him one better. See that pile of lumber curing by the barn? I want you to build me a fence—an 8-foot fence—so I won’t need to see his place anymore. Cool him down, anyhow.”

John had to go to town for supplies, so he helped the carpenter get the materials ready, and then he was off for the day. The carpenter worked hard all that day measuring, sawing, and nailing.

About sunset, when the farmer returned, the carpenter had just finished his job.

The farmer’s eyes opened wide; his jaw dropped.

There was no fence there at all. It was a bridge—a bridge stretching from one side of the creek to the other! A fine piece of work—handrails and all—and George, his younger brother, was coming across, his hand outstretched. “John, you’re quite a fellow to build this bridge after all I’ve said and done.”

The two brothers stood at each end of the bridge, and then they met in the middle, taking each other’s hand. They turned to see the carpenter hoist his toolbox on his shoulder.

“No, wait! Stay a few days. I’ve a lot of other projects for you,” said John.

“I’d love to stay on,” the carpenter said, “But I have many more bridges to build.” (Submitted by Christine O’Connor)

Christ said, “It is I who am the Light which is above them all. It is I who am the all. From me did the all come forth, and unto me the all extend. Split a piece of wood, and I am there. Lift up the stone, and you will find me there.” — The Gospel of Thomas

Let us now turn to some extremely powerful suggestions and insights by MSI:

“If one can, even for an instant, be free from the limitations of belief, judgment, and previous experience, the Universe instantly becomes completely different. It is not that one breaks physical laws; rather, one flows in harmony with different physical laws, those that are not commonly known or used. When one is adept with this ability, the full range of the natural Universe is open for exploration and development.

“It is not that some precious few are open to Higher experience and ability. All are. It is not that only a fortunate few can break the restricting confines of their limited pasts and be born into a New World of manifest splendor. All can.

“What is required is nothing more than to stop supporting the old, destructive beliefs by our continual, unconscious choice. How can a choice be unconscious? If we turn often enough from the Light, we may forget that we possess the power to turn back toward the Light at any instant of time. This act of forgetting makes us as if unconscious of our continual, every-moment-repeated choice to believe that we are limited, finite beings, not the Sons and Daughters of God. As we believe, so we act.” — from Flying With The Eagles, Running With The Lions

For some further spiritual insight, clarification, and inspiration, let’s now consider a lengthier article by MSI: [quoting]

THE ASCENDANT

When we perceive the external world, we are looking at our definitions of forms and objects, but not the underlying Unified Field in which they appear. Similarly, our inner world, feelings and thoughts, clutter our awareness, but the awareness of awareness itself is never known. The Ascendant is the space in which things exist; it is the essence out of which everything is made: thoughts, feelings, computers, my aunt Daisy.

This is not a void, as some have claimed; this is not an emptiness or negative reality. Rather, the Ascendant is a positive state of fullness, of Infinite potential energy out of which everything comes. Since the Ascendant underlies and permeates everything in creation, it is called Omnipresent. Everything comes from it and exists only because of it. Nothing can or does exist in isolation. Everything is composed of the Ascendant, continually flowing in and out of manifestation.

The Ascendant cannot be measured or defined. We can assign a name to it, like Infinite or Unbounded or Absolute, but these still imply it is something. Any name for the Ascendant or belief about the Ascendant is not the experience of the Ascendant. It is only when we abandon our insistence on attempting to limit the Unlimited by assigning waking-state concepts to it that the Infinite Light of the Primal World dawns within. Freed from mental fabrications about the nature of Reality, awareness is experienced as Absolute and identical with everything that is.

The Ascendant is without prior cause: it is its own cause; it is ever the same, unchanging. Like water, it is not altered, regardless of how much dirt is added to it: only the clarity of it is shrouded while its essential nature remains the same. The Ascendant is perfect stability; it is the Ground of all grounds. There is no experience of duality in the Ascendant, there is no difference between the self and the Self. There is no separation. Like a peak experience while painting, writing, or composing music, there is no subject-object duality. There is no thought in the Ascendant; there is no feeling; there is nothing other than Silence: Eternal, self-sufficient.

The Ascendant is the Ultimate Reality from which everything has come and in which everything continues to exist forever. To experience this as our True Nature is enlightenment; to remain ignorant of this means remaining caught by the boundaries of illusion, life after life, caught on the wheel of samsara, of cyclic change. Through Ascending, the Ascendant is experienced as our own essential nature, as awareness of awareness itself, as pure Unlimited consciousness. This is the experience of Infinite Freedom. This is liberation from the boundaries of the ego. Since the Ascendant is the Source of everything, recognizing that “I am That” means that I recognize that I am All-pervasive. This is the state of Is-ness, free from any and every duality, freed from the sense of My-ness or even Am-ness. The Ascendant simply is. And

That I am.

Even though the experience of the Ascendant is impossible to define in words, it is a real experience. In fact, the experience of the Ascendant is more real than any waking-state experience. The experience of the Unbounded is infinitely abstract, and yet infinitely concrete. Having once tasted this clearly, life cannot remain the same. There is no previous behavior pattern, habit, judgment, or belief that can withstand the force of Unbounded Awareness, for the Ascendant is the root of everything.

When the mind is experiencing the silence of the Ascendant, there is no motion of thought. Like a perfectly still pond untouched by the wind, there are no waves, no ripples, no motion of any kind when the mind is opened to the experience of the Ascendant. This state is measurable by the electroencephalograph: coherence of brain waves is the objective measurement of the subjective experience of Ascending.

The mind consumes vastly less energy when it floats in the Ascendant; because of this, the body settles down to its deepest possible state of rest. In the perfect state of Infinite silence, there is no necessity for breath: the individual retains life by recognizing that he or she is part of Universal Life, in no way different or separate from Eternal existence. In other words, life continues because life is the essence of the Ascendant. In this state, no decay is possible, no illness, no death, no suffering, no pain.

The Ascendant is the source of everything. Nothing lies outside it; nothing is built of anything other than it; nothing can exist for the small fraction of a moment outside of it. It is the conscious part of consciousness; it is the part of existence that exists. It is all that ever was, all that will ever be; you, with your human nervous system have, by your birth, been given the ultimate gift—a machine that cannot only experience the Ascendant but direct it in any way you choose.

You are actually already directing the Ascendant all the time. But if your mind is not continually focused on one desire at a time, your mutually contradictory thoughts and desires cancel each other out. Not entirely, of course, or else you would be a catatonic schizophrenic—you would do nothing but sit and stare off into space. Since you are reading this, it is safe to assume you are not so self-contradictory that you are sailing in entirely useless circles in the boat of your mind.

The mind in contact with the Ascendant is like a perfectly still pool. Thoughts and desires are like stones dropped into the pool. If one stone falls, perfectly concentric ripples spread beautifully over the water and reach the far shore. If two stones are dropped, there will be crests and valleys that cross over each other, emphasizing some, canceling others. If a whole handful of stones hit the water at once, chaos is the result—there is no order left. The reflection in the pond is broken into a myriad of imperfect shards. The full Moon can be sailing serenely above, but the pond will show only frenetic motion.

On any sandy beach, the kind and quality of the waves very much determine the shape of the sand. The kind and quality of our thought waves very much determine the overall shape of our minds. The ripples caused by our thoughts and desires produce both immediate (surface) and long-term (underlying) effects. When the pattern of thinking and desiring is chaotic, the result will necessarily be abnormal experiences—mental, emotional, or physical—and abnormal behavior. The extent of the chaotic thinking directly determines the extent of the disorder in life. When the pattern of thinking and desiring is orderly, the result is health, happiness, joy, progress, creativity, fulfillment.

This may be easy to grasp intellectually regarding the individual life: if my thinking is disordered, my actions and life will be disordered. But since the Ascendant is the Source of everything, it is also true that my chaotic thinking will react with all parts of the Universe at all times and all places. Like salmon returning to their hatching grounds to spawn, there are no accidents of fate; there are only our own thoughts returning to their source in our individual minds.

There is quite literally no one to blame, no one to condemn, no one to judge in any way whatsoever. My desires have created my Universe, just for me; your desires have created your Universe, just for you. The fact that so many of our Universes seem so similar and seem to share many common features is a happy or a useful coincidence that defines our common humanity. (Those whose individual Universes are much out of synchrony with the majority of humanity tend to end up in mental hospitals or prisons.) This implies that the best cure for all disease, mental or physical, is the same—reconnecting the individual mind consciously to the Ascendant.

The human mind is so infinitely flexible that it can stretch in its experience from the most concrete to the most abstract—from the physical reality experienced by our senses to the abstract, internal reality of Consciousness itself.

The unifying thread of life is Love. From the most abstract to the most concrete, at every level of existence, at every level of experiencing, runs this slender thread. It seems delicate, a fragile thing, easily lost or broke, but is not so. It is more obdurate than granite; it can never be broken, never diminished, never lost; and it is forever growing, primarily by being given away. We cannot fall out of it, although sometimes we mistakenly believe that we do. Rather, what happens when we feel that we have fallen out of love is that our mutually contradictory projected desires have made it impossible for our relationship to provide further growth. This is the kindest and most accurate description.

For, underlying all our desires—the melange of contradictory impulses we drop into the still waters of the Ascendant—there forever remains our original intention, crystalline, flawless, pure, directing our being through situation after situation, life after life, world after world. And what is that original intention? It is to return to our Source. We are not and never will be at home here; we will always feel that we are the dispossessed wanderers of time. That, truly, we are. Like Pellinore of the Arthurian legends, we have lost our kingdoms and queendoms and wander aimlessly about, slowly rusting since our home has become invisible to us.

Yet is our exile self-imposed? We chose to be here; we can choose to return whence we came whenever we so desire. Nothing can stand between us and our re-union with our Source, for we never truly left the Ascendant. We only thought we did; we have traveled exceedingly far in our imaginations, but it is fantasy merely. The Ascendant will wait patiently for us to remember, throughout all Eternity if need be. For we are the Ascendant. No matter how long we forget this simple fact, no matter how long we adamantly deny that this is true or continue to build up false dreams and strange beliefs, the Ascendant waits patiently for us.

There is no thought we can think, no action we can perform, that will ever change this simple fact. The Ascendant is the root of all that we are, it is the fullest expression of all we shall ever be; it is the Source not only of us but of everything, everywhere, at all times. Life, therefore, is extremely easy to understand.

If this seems difficult to grasp, it can only be because there is some part of it that has not been properly understood. It can only be because there are still some dark areas of our personalities that have not yet been addressed. How can we change this? In any way that works!

Ascension is a systematic procedure for re-educating the mind to free itself from judgment and condemnation. This is a completely automatic process; once begun it continues much by itself. The mind is similar to a phonograph record—there are grooves in our brains, neuronal circuits, formed by repeated experiences and thoughts. It is possible to retrain the mind so that the deepest grooves are those that lead to expansion of consciousness, to liberation. The mind just needs to learn how to take the correct angle, then the entire process is perfectly natural. The older grooves are overshadowed and eventually erased.

The natural state of the human mind is enlightenment! [End quote]

Now that this information has been shared with you for background, let's move directly into the interview with the Ishaya monks for a better understanding of their philosophy and teaching techniques.

The 3 monks with whom I spoke are called Gomati Ishaya, Himavat Ishaya, and Vasistha Ishaya.

Martin: Historically, do the Ishaya monks have a link with the Himis Monastery in Ladak, referred to historically by the great researcher Nichols Notovitch?

Himavat: Not that I'm aware of.

Martin: Is the origin of the teachings from Kashmir?

Himavat: No.

Martin: Where does this come from, specifically? Is it near a place called Jagannath, Rajagriha, Benares, in the country of Orissa? I know that Christ spent time in a monastery there. Can you give me a clue as to where the Ishayas originate from?

Vasistha: 500 years before Christ, the Shankaracharya revitalized the teaching of enlightenment in the northern Math (school) of India.

Martin: I see, ok, so this was pre-Christ?

Vasistha: Yes.

Martin: Ok. Let's talk about what you refer to as the First Sphere, which consists of 4 attitudes. What are those attitudes and why are they so important as a foundation to your teaching. And please, take as long as you need to discuss those 4 attitudes.

Vasistha: (laughter) Ok. The 4 attitudes are based on: praise, gratitude and love...

Martin: Why were you laughing at that question?

Vasistha: It's like saying, "Tell us the attitudes without telling us the attitudes."

Martin: Oh, no, no. (laughter) Tell us the attitudes, by all means and...

Himavat: We can say the attitudes in a context of what we call the First Sphere weekend, and they comprise the core, the foundation of the teaching. We will not give you the attitudes, per se. That happens in the context of the weekend workshop.

Martin: I see. I have the attitudes from your Internet site, and from the newsletters. Do I not mention the attitudes in the introductory remarks?

Himavat: We do talk about the praise attitude, the gratitude attitude, the love attitude, and the compassion attitude. So, that's what we'll tell you—about that.

Gomati: But not what the attitudes are, per se.

Martin: I see, ok. Let's just talk about the First Sphere.

Gomati: What would you like to know?

Martin: Everything. (laughter)

Himavat: One of the loveliest things about this whole teaching, for me, is that it is only about your experience. In other words, there's all this stuff that I may believe or not believe, and it is irrelevant to what we really teach. Because what we teach is, when you use these ascension attitudes, you will have an experience, and that, for me, is truly the beginning and the end of what this is all about. Even where it came from doesn't matter, on one level.

Martin: Right.

Himavat: We keep coming back to that, over and over, and then, of course, we talk about it. And so, in praise, for instance, we talk an attitude that is an ascension emotion—an emotion that's uplifting, an emotion that helps to align you with the ascending currents of Creation.

Martin: Ok.

Himavat: It's really that simple.

Vasistha: What's unique about this teaching is that these attitudes have been cognized by the enlightened, and have been held for humanity since the beginning of human. And what's so unique about the attitudes is, because they come from the deepest level of being, the ground of all being, which we call the Ascendant, you use them from the surface level of wherever you're at; it always, always, always takes you into the deepest level of being—always.

At first, your awareness may not be able to follow the attitude all the way in. It's like, when you have a large onion, if you take a knife and cut to the center of the onion and pull the knife out, you only see a cut on the surface of the onion. You can't see the center of the onion. But if you make several thousand cuts, eventually there's an opening where you can actually see the center of the onion. And the psychologists have considered humans like onions, where you have to peel-off layers before you get to the core of the true level of being where pure unconditional love exists, always, and has never not been there. This is a direct path in, where you don't have to peel-off layers—you cut right through the layers to the center of being.

Gomati: And there's no "belief" required. Basically, we talk about this in the First Sphere weekend, that everything we say, including the answer to the question about the origins of the techniques—everything we talk about is for the person to believe or not, as they choose. It does not affect—what Vasistha and Himavat were talking about—which is, THE EXPERIENCE. The experience is what is uniquely yours, and that is really what the focus is on. That's what the emphasis is on. That's what it's all about—being infinite on the inside, and experiencing that fully, regardless of any belief.

Himavat: I could share with you my experience of the attitudes. The very first attitude, the praise attitude, is one which I come back to over and over, no matter how many I may have learned. And my experience of using the attitude is that, number one, I've begun to redefine what a miracle is in my life because of what I experience, using these attitudes.

For instance, I'll be in a conversation with someone; we might be disagreeing and really wanting to hold a position, and then I'll remember to introduce this first ascension attitude into my thought-stream, and all of a sudden, I'm not invested as much. It's like I've lost half of the investment in needing to hold a position. Then I'll do it again and, by God, almost the rest of my needing to have to be right is gone.

And, for me, I've come to understand that THAT'S the miracle! (laughter)

Vasistha: The other thing that's so awesome, almost everybody on Earth is familiar with mind-chatter, where your mind is chattering or talking all the time, whether it's emotions, or thoughts, or pictures, or sounds—the mind is moving all the time. One of the gifts these attitudes give, in a very experiential way, is that you can actually experience the mind shutting off, being still—I mean, BEING STILL. It is the first stage, the very, very beginning stage of experiencing the Infinite, on the inside, when the mind gets still.

Himavat: We'll also say, we also tell people, that all you need is the first ascension attitude to significantly accelerate the growth of your consciousness.

We also say this is not the only path. This just happens to be the most powerful path I've found, which is why I'm excited to be making it available to other people.

And so, over the First Sphere weekend, which is on a Friday night, and all day Saturday, and then all day Sunday, we teach the first four ascension attitudes so that there can be more than just the beginning to work with.

The mind loves to be charged. Vasistha was talking about the ascension attitudes coming from the deepest level of consciousness. My experience is that they work all by themselves. And when I was told by my teacher that these ascension attitudes already exist at the cellular level inside all of Creation, and that they resonate naturally—which is why they are so easy to do—it gave me, my mind, a context in which to begin to understand how come this is so easy.

And some people don't care. And, anymore, I don't care. But the mind loves to be entertained. And it was consistent with my experience. I've never found a teaching that was so easy. I've tried to meditate. I've tried dozens of different techniques and had a few teachers and read hundreds of books, and every time I used a technique, I would use it for a while and it would be wonderful, but then there would come a point where it seemed to be too much like work, even if I would do it anyway.

This has given me the experience of how easy it can be. There's another miracle for me: It is, it's effortless.

Gomati: Between the three of us sitting here, Rick, we had 50 years of meditation experience BEFORE we came to ascension. All three of us were seekers, in our own way, and tried a lot of different things. And one of the things that excited me about this path, too, is the fact that THERE IS NO OUTER GURU. There is no person who you give your energy to who stands between you and Source.

There was an MSI, and he's no longer in the body. What he always talked about is what we live now—which is to know the guru within, to grow our own Universe, and to know what we know from our intimate connection with the Infinite, and not to put any other person between us and Source, but to know that that connection is always there, within us.

Martin: Well, see, that's the key. I'm sure that will be the key to our readers. I believe that's the key, going directly to Source and never forgetting that. And the tendency in this culture is to forget that, to be programed to either traditional religion, or cults, or guru situations; it's very unfortunate.

I grew up in California, and I caught the tail end of the '60s and went to college in the early '70s in the San Francisco Bay Area. So, I've ridden the “guru wave” for many years, and I've done a lot of spiritual reading over the years. I heard Ram Dass talk many times, and Alan Watts, you name them, I heard them—Lama Govinda, Swami Satchidananda, Krishnamurti, and others—and, of course, the conclusion has been, for me, for many years, that there should be no separation between Source and self. The answer lies within. Just like Immanuel, the Christ always taught, “The kingdom of God is within you.” It's music to my ears, and I'm sure it will be music to our readers' ears, to hear you say that it is an experiential thing, and that it is with self, and that there is no guru. It is individual, and it is direct, and I think that is really nice. And I should step off my soapbox here, for a minute, and let you talk.

Vasistha: What you had to say was awesome, and there's one thing that is taught very clearly—that it's a natural, normal stage of every human being to experience the Infinite on the inside; it is actually normal. We're subnormal when we're not there. It is just because of the habit of riding the senses outward that we lost contact with the inner self.

Martin: I agree!

Vasistha: And this is a teaching that effortlessly retrains the senses to go inward, first, to the Source of Being, and then come out from there. And it has been confirmed by everybody who has been able to touch this Source, that yes, things do come from there; and yes, techniques do take you there, very easily; and yes, there may be some stress in the way, which—almost everybody is stressed. And when you're so wrapped-up in stress, you can't feel deeply enough on the inside to find the peace or the sound that underlies everything.

So, the First Sphere is designed to move stress out of the nervous system so that you can experience, inside, that which has no edges or boundaries that the mind can grab a hold of. Usually, when people first begin to experience this silence, with no edges to grab a hold of to define anything, the only similar situation the mind has for that is sleep. So many times, at first, the mind, the body will say, “I must be asleep.” That is not the case. Over time, you can bring the stillness from deep inside you closer to the surface of your being, so you can walk it and live it all the time.

You don't have to—with this practice, you can do it while you're walking, while you're talking, while you're driving. And it's safe to use while you're driving because it gets you more present in the body, not spaced-out of your body. It brings more of you to the table, instead of just the 5 percent. It brings all of you to the table, to be present, in this moment, with all of you instead of just a small portion.

Himavat: I would like to share a little bit about my experience with some of what Sadashiva (MSI) wrote. Sadashiva is our teacher. His name is Maharishi Sadashiva Isham. We've self-published 5 books. And when I was a student in college in the late '60s and early '70s, I studied the religions of India and China and Asia, and came across Patanjali for the first time, the Yoga Sutras, and I literally got a headache trying to...

Martin: (laughter)

Himavat: ...and in the ensuing 30 years, I was, over and over again, drawn back to try to understand Patanjali. Then I would come across different translations, wherever I was at that time, whatever bookstore had the Yoga Sutras, and each time I would end-up with a headache, again. It was really frustrating for me.

When I came across Sadashiva's translation and commentary, I was so excited. In his preface, the forward, he talks about why would another person want to translate this book; it's one of the most widely translated books on the planet. He says, because typically it's been translated by scholars who did not understand the level of consciousness that Patanjali was writing from.

And so, I said to myself: “Well, this is interesting.” And, the implication was that Sadashiva—I don't remember how he states it—you'll have to check out the book yourself, but my experience is that he is coming from that same level of consciousness. And, for me, the most exciting thing—are you familiar with the Yoga Sutras by Patanjali?

Martin: Many years ago.

Himavat: There's a whole chapter talking about the different stages of enlightenment, stages of consciousness as we grow. Typically it's been translated as a "how to" book. Through these suggested things that he's telling you to do in the book, then you will achieve these results.

And Sadashiva differs dramatically from that. He says: "No, it's a map. It's not a manual." So, if you want to get from San Francisco to L.A., you look at a map, but then you actually have to get in the car.

And Sadashiva says: "This is not a manual." You've got to actually do it. You have to have adequate tools. And he refers to ascension attitudes as, of course, adequate tools. Again, they are not the only tools. We do not pretend this is the only path, but they are adequate.

And for what Patanjali was saying, in terms of Sadashiva's translation and commentaries, one of the most exciting things about the book for me was the first verse, which is known as the sutra, in the first of the four chapters. And in there, he translates—it's lovely because he gives you the actual Sanskrit; then he transliterates, so that you can just pronounce the Sanskrit; and then he translates, so you get the English translation of the Sanskrit. And then he gives you a lovely commentary.

Now, in the translation of the first verse, he said: "Now, the teaching of yoga." And that comma, Rick, makes all the difference in the world. And since Sadashiva has published that book, I'm noticing other people are getting that and bringing that forward in things like The Yoga Journal. The point is the NOW, in the teaching of yoga; if we can just be in this moment, innocently, then we get what Union Yoga is all about.

And that innocence it what is engendered, every time we introduce an ascension attitude, and that innocence builds. It gives us an opportunity to let go of everything that we thought we were, and allow the Source to come through us more purely, to let go of any notions. And that innocence is just real exciting.

Vasistha: It's like, how can you know the Infinite if you don't know it, if you don't have a direct experience of it? You can have all kinds of ideas. So, the way you begin to find out who you are is to let go of who you are, and that's all the clouds in the way of the Sun, and then the Sun dawns naturally when the clouds move. It's not like it wasn't there. It's always been there!

Martin: Right.

Vasistha: It's always been there. Just let go of what poofs out of us, what stress needs to move out of us—fears and hurts move out of us—and then who we are dawns naturally, and it's there in everyone. It's already there! It's the normal stage of human life.

Gomati: This is so contrary to what we have been programed to do and be our whole lives, which is about striving to achieve and working and "making something happen". And, the whole concept of enlightenment is very much about letting go and relaxing TO your own enlightenment. It's about letting go, and letting go. And there's always—what I find in my life and my process is, there's always more ways that I can let go. And when I find those and release whatever it is that I'm still holding onto, in any way, the growth is incredible. And my experience of the Infinite expands every time that happens, as well. And so, it's constantly a process of being willing to BE, be present, and let go. So—let go!

Vasistha: Actually, the attitude facilitates quite naturally. It's not like something that you have to consciously do. It's like, you're hit in the arm and it hurts, you clench around it, your body clenches around it because it's painful. When we have emotional pain, we tend to clench around that too, and what that does is not lock the pain out, but actually locks the pain in.

Because these attitudes take you toward deeper states of relaxation and rest, naturally, without effort, when you're totally relaxed, you can't clench. Whatever stress is in there begins to move naturally and effortlessly because you're so relaxed you can't hold it in anymore. So, it moves out of you.

Quite often it moves out quite gracefully, and sometimes it moves out where you're aware of it. But anyway, it comes out of you, and it's awesome. And the result of that, letting go of what is stuck on the inside is—you can ask anybody, anywhere on Earth, "Have you ever experienced pain in your life?"

"Well, of course I have." And we all have clenched areas on the inside that can be removed very easily and gracefully, if you just relax them.

Gomati: One thing, Rick, about this teaching that makes it really unique that was such a powerful attractor for me, from my experience, in past meditation and spiritual practices, is the fact that this is the only teaching that I, personally, have ever found that helps to release all of the emotional blocks that have built-up over a lifetime of living on planet Earth. All the things, all the ways that we believe, or have believed in the past, that we were "less than perfect", that there was something wrong with us, that we're disconnected from Source, that our bodies are unattractive, we're unlovable, we don't deserve love, all those basic root-stresses that life on planet Earth seems to engender in all of humanity—I used to think that it was just the U.S. But I've been traveling around the world teaching ascension; I have found it to be a common denominator.

Gomati: And it is what keeps ones from being, fully, who they are. Because it is the emotional attachments to these old, limiting beliefs that keep us from being fully present in the moment, that cause us to be scattered, when going over past moments, or even projecting fear into the future, or worry, or whatever we do with the past—as opposed to being in the Absolute Present Moment.

Martin: One of the questions that I had for you, and you're answering it as you're talking, I believe: what do you find in the First Spheres, as you go out on an Arch—and probably you should mention what that is—as you're talking to people, or teaching people in the First Sphere; what do you find are some of the most difficult blocks for people to overcome in order that they can move forward with the training?

Vasistha: The first thing that I face a lot is: "Why do you charge $200? If it's truth, why don't you just give it out for free?" You know, it's usually money that is the sticking point for a lot of people.

Martin: Well, sure. A lot of people can't afford it.

Vasistha: Or they say they can't. Everybody I've come across, of those people who said they can't afford it, and then when I said, "It's not about the money, it's about if you want this, really, can you get what you want?" And it happens for people when they really desire it.

The second thing is: Do you want to support people's limitations? We don't choose to support people's limitations. The hardest thing the ego cannot do is ask for help, and say, "Can you do something else? Can you work something else out?" And that's an individual call, by each of the individual teachers.

But the first thing, to use a metaphor, is how a flower receives the infinite light of the Sun and lets its inner essence out, lets it open—but the opening has to come from the inside of the flower, from the human heart. We give a part of ourselves, we create an opening to receive the gift. And the part of ourselves that almost everybody is most tightly wrapped around is money. I mean, almost everybody. And so, absolutely, what's required for enlightenment is to take a step and not know where your foot's going to land.

Martin: Right.

Vasistha: So, you pay $200 [the cost for a First Sphere weekend] and you don't know if it's going to be worth it or not. I've been to 10,000 other workshops, and is this going to disappoint me, again? You decide to do it, and you find out. And that's a step of unknown. Then you get to experience, and it's just an awesome gift to have people take that step.

Himavat: Things that I notice in myself, and just about everybody else who I come across as students, or even in my life, is—I have this incredible tendency to focus on the problem. Like, "I cannot do this, because..." or "What's wrong?" And what the ascension attitudes teach us is to focus on the solution. So, what do you want? Do you want to take a risk that the universe might support you in that?

When I find something to praise—in you or anyone else who I’m talking to—then the miracles start to happen. But what I’m doing is shifting a real, fundamental trick of the ego to focus on the truth of the ascending currents of Creation, and a solution, and then the problem gets washed away.

I’ve spent a lot of good money on therapists, for a long time; all we did is focus on the problem and we made a little progress. Ok, fine. We got through some stuff and that was fine.

This is what I find: We have this incredible tendency, wherever I go, to continue to focus on the problem. And we can do that if we want, but it’s just so slow and tedious. And so, yes, we acknowledge the problem. There is NO “Pollyanna” here. There is NO “ostrich” here. Yes, there is a pink elephant, and that’s what I’m feeling. I’m feeling scared, or whatever, and notice it, but don’t focus on it.

We focus on solutions, which is in finding praise, finding gratitude, finding love, and finding compassion. And when we focus on that, that’s when the miracles happen.

That’s the biggest thing I find, wherever I go, and it manifests in all kinds of different ways. Sometimes it’s money, sometimes it’s the place, a simple venue. “Oh, my house is too small.” I was in Japan teaching and there was so much self-consciousness about people’s homes, and they were really scared to bring the teacher into the homes, because they had all this self-consciousness. And it all boils down to that same thing, that “there’s something wrong with me”. And what we do is, we cut to the chase. We say, “Ok, that’s your belief and that may be your experience, but here, I’m going to give you something that I see in you that’s praiseworthy, right here, and right now. So, there’s the miracle.

Gomati: I find that there’s a lot of people who experience pain of love lost, or pain from feeling hurt by a loved one, lifetimes of repressed pain and sadness and rejection and abandonment, and all those deep issues that go way back, and they underlie a lot of programs that get run in the head—about not being worthy, about not being deserving, about not deserving to have money, about not being able to do things, about not understanding anything beyond the limitations that are imposed by those underlying beliefs.

And so, with the ascension attitudes, they go right to the source of all the old, limiting beliefs that people come with, and by the very use of them, actually help to release the emotions related to them. And they come out, sometimes, just while you’re simply ascending. You could be lying down, totally relaxed, very peaceful, old emotions might move in ways without expressing them. And then there might be emotions that come up that are strong, that need to be spoken out—where you have a “charge”, that you just need to say whatever it is you feel the charge is about, so that you can move the emotions.

The process of healing the “emotional body” is key to expansion of consciousness; it’s integral. And so, it is a natural part of the process, and it automatically evolves with the use of the attitudes; it unfolds.

Vasistha: One of the things we draw in an introductory talk, or a Sphere, is that a mind is like a blank slate; there’s infinite potential there. And then the mind gets covered in with life experiences of hurt and pain, and whatever else happens in our environment that gets us to feel more and more limited until, by the time we’re adults, we’re pretty predictable in many ways and we have used less than, I would say less than 5%, probably 1% or 2% of our brain in a “conscious” way. Most of our actions become unconscious; most of what’s running through our head is unconscious.

When we effort to change, from the conscious level, all of our unconscious stuff, it is almost impossible. It’s like one stone in the river trying to divert the river. But when you go beneath, below all the unconscious, to the level of the Source of Truth, from that level, from the level of the Ascendant, the stuff moves gracefully out of our nervous system that blocks our awareness of our true and immortal self. It just gradually moves that out, the attitudes. Everybody has thoughts all the time anyway. If you have a thought that takes you to the Source of Being, that begins to move all of the stuff out of the way, and your awareness of that, conscious awareness of...(voice fades out).

Martin: I’m sorry, you’re cutting in and out. Are you there?

Vasistha: Yes. I get inspired and I start speaking softer, sometimes.

Martin: Well, yes, I do the exact same thing. And the tendency is, as your consciousness goes up, the voice tends to fade-out. (laughter)

Vasistha: I’ve been told about that, a few times.

Martin: Let’s keep talking along this line. Let’s talk about emotional blocks, about these attitudes like gratitude, compassion. On an experiential level, you know, it’s very easy to live in the country, which I do, and be compassionate as you are walking out and looking at the blue birds and watering the garden, and then you go to the post office and you run into a big long line, then somebody pulls out in front of you, in the parking lot. And, I mean, there goes compassion, right out the window. (laughter) So, on an experiential level, living in the inner city (laughter)—I’m being facetious now—but you know what I’m saying. How do you maintain that “center of peace” while living in the REAL world?

Himavat: We lose that center all the time, don’t we?

Martin: Absolutely.

Himavat: And so, what we have now is—I have the most dependable tool, the most reliable vehicle I’ve ever had. In other words, I get angry. I get frustrated. I project out. I have all those feelings. They’re not compassionate, and they’re not gentle.

So then, I have this vehicle, this tool, it’s such a simple thought. And I introduce this thought into my consciousness, and it works all by itself. I don’t even have to figure out how I’m going to be a nice guy, or how I’m going to change my emotions, or which block it is, or how it’s going to work out, because what we call the Ascendant—and it doesn’t matter, you can call it the Source, you can call it God, you can call it Nature, you can call it the Infinite—we don’t care what you call it. We just use the word Ascendant for the reasons that we have. But when I introduce the ascension attitude in the way—and the way that Vasistha described it was lovely, about cutting to the core of the onion with a knife—you may not see it, but that’s the miracle. I mean, I continue to experience miracles after doing this for 4 years, and the miracles just keep coming and coming and coming.

And the miracle is, the anger goes away. The urges to push, or to have it my way, go away. It doesn’t mean they don’t come back. We’re talking full human consciousness. And full human consciousness includes all of that. It includes wanting to have it our way—includes the anger, the frustration, the sadness, the pain, the deep emotional scares, the superficial emotional scares. What we learn to do is embrace them. I mean, when we engage the ascending attitude of love by using, for instance, the love technique that we teach in the First Sphere weekend, then something happens that is beyond my conscious mind. It goes to the Source. And the surface of the mind, where we have all this consciousness, where the mind lives, that really only comprises about 5% of what really is possible for us, as humans, to access through the miracle of the brain and nervous system.

And so, these ascension attitudes begin to wake-up the part of us that’s been asleep, the part of us that knows that there’s no separation, the part of us that DOES create the miracles all by itself. And so, if someone cuts me off in traffic, I introduce an ascension attitude and I’m not angry like I used to be. It’s really that simple.

Gomati: Living the attitudes with the eyes open, all day long, as you go about your life, is what’s referred to in the Bible as praying without speaking. It is that constant connection with Source that IS the shift in consciousness. It is the nervous system being cleared. And it takes a cleared nervous system to be a perfect vehicle for consciousness. And it is through a clear nervous system that ones return to who they really are, and get to fully experience their Divine Essence, with the Divine Essence.

So, the importance of being with the attitudes all the time, using them as you go throughout your day, is that you are constantly releasing stress—you know, the kind that you were talking about, Rick, standing in the line at the post office, or being cut-off in traffic, and all of the things that happen every day to everybody. These are then just occurrences in your life, and they are not big deals, and they don't push your buttons the way they may have in the past. That's because, in that moment, you have a choice. You have this awesome gift and you can choose to be totally connected with Source at every moment.

Vasistha: It's sort of like, naturally, learning to take a half-step inward, and then you're in this ocean of peace. And then how can the outside be more dominant? How can the outside twirl you around, when you take that half-step inward? And so, actually, it's learning by using the attitudes to take a half-step inward.

And this is not a system that is a mantra. It's very important to not have it as a mantra, but as a hallowed space between the attitude and the next time you introduce the attitude. So, it's not a mantra.

And it is something you can choose. Usually, people on First Sphere, many times, at least the ones who I've taught, get so relaxed and change, over the course of the weekend—which is a miracle in itself—get so relaxed over the course of the weekend that they say it's like they become aware of the body being totally deeply relaxed and they feel like they need a month of sleep because they got so relaxed; they're finally aware of how tired they really are.

And all that negative stuff moving out. It's like, a lady I taught in Australia, it's so funny. She smokes, and she's a mile-a-minute talker, so you know she had a lot of "mind chatter" going on all the time. You know, yak-yak-yak inside the mind, thoughts going all the time. She said, at six weeks after the First Sphere, she was out picking grapes and she looked up and there was something wrong. She was looking around and there was something really wrong.

Vasistha: What was wrong was, the mind was silent.

Martin: It was quiet. (laughter)

Vasistha: It was quiet. It was like, she went on working and she'd look up again, and it was still quiet on the inside. It was like a shock to her, it was so quiet. And that's so awesome; that's the gift!

If you have inner quiet, what disturbs your ocean? The little wind that blows on the outside isn't enough to disturb the depths. And the other thing that's so awesome is because, when you're in this place of that half-step inward, it's like what energy comes out of you has a coherent, laser-like quality that touches every nervous system around you. And, it's like you bring this with you, this can touch people just because you're there in that awareness in your nervous system, so powerful and so coherent, it goes out from you and it's like a coherent, unified field; it just touches everything around you. It's awesome.

The inside and the outside begin to match. It's like you're the bringer of peace into your environment, not because of a behavior pattern, but because you're actually experiencing peace in a deep way, and it just brings peace all around you, because that's the natural condition of human life. And the mind-chatter and the stress are self abuse that we've done to ourselves all our life, by getting lost on the outside and not knowing that we had any other choice. And now, with these ascendant attitudes, we have a choice that makes a huge difference. And all of Nature and all of life support this, because it is built into the structure of Creation.

And so, in just choosing an attitude—I mean, it's awesome what it can do and what it does. All of life supports everybody in waking up. What if it's really true that each one of us is an Infinite Immortal Being who just forgot, and believes the forgetfulness?

Martin: I just received, by e-mail, your latest newsletter. One of the questions in the newsletter is, "How do I plan for the future while staying in the present moment?" (The question comes from Chen-Meng Tan, Petaling Jaya, Malaysia.) Care to comment on that?

Vasistha: Sure. We'd love to comment on it. For me, when I strain to make things happen, it's like I'm fighting the river, and it can beat me up, you know? And when I relax a little bit, there's a flow that seems to happen. And being in that flow, that half-step inward, where actually things come to me BEFORE I try to make them happen. It's like, look what's happening in your life, actually.

Martin: That's well said.

Vidya: Hi, I'm Vidya. I'm the guy who wrote the answer to that question written in the newsletter. I'm the one who sent you the newsletter.

Martin: Oh, good, thank you.

Vidya: Basically, you got the answer already that I wrote there. I can just tell here what I wrote, which was that, it's very simple. You stay in the moment, no matter what you're doing. Perpetual consciousness is about being aware of what you're doing in every single moment; be aware that, hey, there's something that needs to be planned for in the future, but you don't lose the now. So, it's not about going into the future, or into the past, but just being here, now, and doing whatever you're doing in this moment, whether it's planning or anything else.

Himavat: This is another way of using these attitudes which have many, many layers that they operate on. One of the subtle things that happens is, every time we introduce one of the ascension attitudes, our awareness is brought inward. Everything in our culture, and all around the world, is wanting to draw our awareness outward. And so, we have all of these belief systems that are based on "come outward to get your answers" and "come outward to find your solution" and "come outward to deal with this outside world".

What we're saying is, now you have a choice. When you go inward, something different is going to happen, and you're going to begin to have different experiences based on this new focus, which is 100% inward, if only for a moment. And then, of course, our attention is drawn outward again.

But the future, on the outside, is something that we have all these systems to cope with, depending on how we've created our life right now. And what we're saying is, there's a new way—however the Universe wants to present itself, whether it's the future or in this present moment, or whatever—and that the more you take your focus inward, the more you line-up with that part of the Universe that wants to support you totally, in every moment, including this one, by focusing on this moment, now, which comes back to that innocence.

We're used to looking to the future, and it's not like we don't make plans. Of course, we still do make plans, because we are IN the world. And what we are remembering is: we are NOT OF the world, and so, that's the tricky part.

How do we be in the world and not of the world? We remember both.

I have a physical body. I need to pay rent next week. The electric bill is due. You know? So, what am I going to do? And then we go inside, and then something happens. And to the extent that we allow that, and learn more discernment about how that wants to play-out, by continuing to take this focus to the Source and allow the Source to become more a part of our experience, then the inner and the outer begin to blend, to become more in harmony with each other, and things take care of themselves—maybe not the way that we expect them, but maybe the best way for our growth. And it's a question only you can answer.

Martin: All these are great answers. I'm trying to interject as little as possible to just let you all talk.

Vasistha: Go ahead and interject, it might spark something!

Martin: I've literally found, in these interviews, if I just allow the space for people to speak, it gets very interesting very quickly. So, I just want to allow the space for you all to speak while we have the time.

Let's keep talking about this. Let's talk about this inward experience. Very often I have had the experience with spiritual beings in my life, who basically—I suppose we could go back, speaking of the late '60s, we could go back to “turn-on, tune-in, and drop-out”. That tends to be a tendency of many people to, literally, just withdraw on the inner; then inner life becomes so rich that the outer life becomes less and less important. You see that in India, of course, a lot. So, using the ascension attitudes, I guess the question would be, how do you balance a rich inner life, and still function IN the world without becoming sucked into being OF the world?

Vasistha: It sounds like some people try escaping, and that's not what this does, because it does bring you totally into your body, totally present, and more able to function. You know, I've had tapes which are meditation tapes that say: “Do not use while driving or operating heavy equipment.”

Vasistha: But we say, these adages that we give: “Safe to use while driving or operating heavy equipment.” So, this brings you more present, and at the same time, more peace. It's like there's more of you, with less stress, available.

And it's the gentle half-step inward that brings you—I mean, why do we plan for the future? Because our past hurts and pains have told us that we have to do something in the future to prevent pain from happening in the present.

When we begin to heal the pain, then we can let go enough to be open to much more of the Universe coming to us. Most people have thoughts like: “I want the perfect job, the perfect wife, the perfect family, the perfect whatever, great income” and yet we don't manifest that in our lives because 95% of the undercurrent in our lives, called the unconscious, says: “You don't deserve that.” “You're not worthy.” “You're not good enough.”

This happened as a child, and because this happened, you shut down a part of yourself, emotionally or mentally. And these ascension attitudes heal those layers of internal, unconscious hurts and stresses that have blocked us from fulfillment in our lives, blocked us from knowing, from direct experience—that the Universe really does support us, totally. That is, we're supporting the Universe, and the Universe is supporting us, and we're all right together in a unified way that's awesome, that's beyond the mind's, the brain's ability to comprehend. It's more experiential, and by feel this begins to wake-up, naturally, on the inside, natural evolution called expansion of consciousness, expansion of the mind, and expansion of the heart. For the mind to experience the Infinite, the heart to experience the Infinite—the inside and the outside and the connection in-between.

Gomati: And a natural part of that is when you share it with other people. What we have here, based out of North Carolina, are 90 teachers, and when we're here we have each other and a lot of support, in a really beautiful setting, in the Smoky Mountains. The energy is really intense and awesome because we ascend here 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. And yet we all choose to go out and teach and be in the world because sharing what we have is such a great gift, and so rich and fulfilling for each of us, that we all really look forward to, and are very enthusiastic about, traveling all around this country, and all around the world, and meeting people who also are excited about being who they fully are, and growing.

It's such an organic, natural extension of inner expansion to share it on the outside, and to be there for other people so that when they go through stages of experiences that you have had, you can be there to support them through those stages. And it can be a whole experience in itself, just that opportunity to be there; it's such a privilege and such an honor, and such a high. We all just really love it.

Martin: It's part of what we call giving and giving.

Himavat: Just to be pedantic for a moment and to define what we mean when we say “We ascend here”. It's so, so simple. What we mean by that—'cause I know that word has a lot of definitions in the metaphysical community anymore—

Martin: Sure it does.

Himavat: —so, specifically, what we mean is: we introduce these ascension attitudes, and then we have an experience, and then we introduce the ascension attitudes, again. And so, that's the beginning and the end of the program. And whatever happens is going to happen.

So, when we say we ascend, it's—I like to tell people it's a cross between prayer and meditation. Because, for me, it's easier than any meditation I EVER used, and it's because it works WITH the mind, not trying to still the mind. All the meditations I ever used, I was always trying to still the mind, and I don't try to do anything with this. And so, I introduce the ascension attitudes, or series of ascension attitudes, however my program looks, and then something happens. And that's all we mean. It's not like we're trying to conjure up anything besides that. It's amazingly simple.

Vasistha: The other thing is, on the property we do have ascension times from 4-6 p.m., two hours in the afternoon where we consciously do closed-eyed ascension as a group, and it's awesomely glorious to have that group focus, then. It's like you can feel the whole energy of the property drop to a much deeper level. Even people coming onto the property, who are sensitive, can feel a big shift. And there's a time in the morning, usually around 7:30-9:30 a.m., where people do it also, closed-eyed ascension.

And then the recommendation is to do open-eyed ascension as much as possible. And there's a lot of support for remembering to do that, and support for moving through whatever clouds come in front of the Sun, whatever stress needs to move out of the way, so you can be more fully who you are.

Himavat: I was out of the room for a few minutes. Did we define for you what an Arc is?

Gomati: No.

Martin: No, not yet.

Himavat: I'll get back to that, real briefly. It's a word that came out of wherever it came from, to define a particular way that we go out traveling as a teacher. For instance, I might go out with Vasistha, and he and I would decide, either with sponsors, or knowing that there are sponsors we would contact, we'd go, say, to California and Arizona and New Mexico. To pick an example, we'd travel in that area for an extended period of time, say, it might be as briefly as a week and a half or two weeks; it might be as long as three or four months. We ALLOW the Ascendant to show us where to go a lot. And, of course, we make phone calls, we make plans, we make commitments. The First Spheres that we teach are based on commitment of sponsors who open-up, who find a venue for us, or students who commit to the First Sphere class.

We also have advanced classes, or advanced meetings for anyone who's been through the First Sphere weekend, who then becomes what we call an advanced ascender, and there are programs for them. And sometimes those advanced programs are built into this tour; I suppose that would be another way to describe what we mean when we say we're going on an Arc.

It's very individual. Each teacher or group of teachers will define it, depending on how they are moved, and how the sponsors have invited them, and all kinds factors that play into it. Hopefully that gives you some idea of what we mean when we say that we're going out on an Arc.

Martin: Yes, it does, perfectly. We have a few minutes, as many minutes as you want to give, here.

As you've traveled out in the world and throughout the United States, over the last few years, have you noticed—it's my personal belief that the planet is shifting in frequency, is increasing in frequency. There is a greater, call it a “love vibration” or “God energy” on the planet. The millennium is a key time, spiritually, for the planet, and also evolutionarily—geophysically and emotionally and spiritually, on all levels. Have YOU noticed a change or a shift over the last number of years? Has your reception been, say, even warmer and better in the last year or two than earlier? What have been your observations as you've done this?

Vasistha: What I've noticed is that people start further along. When I first started teaching, just 4 years ago, people's starting point was much lower. And now, when I teach, people are much more conscious when I teach them. It's awesome.

Yeah, I've had awesome responses and the people are much further along, and much more awake, and examples in the world are all the unconscious stuff is being made conscious. The hidden stuff can't be hidden anymore. Also, more people are reaching to wake-up, and it's an awesome experience. And it doesn't take everyone to wake-up for the whole field of human consciousness to wake-up. It only takes enough, a very small number actually, to wake-up to shift the whole field of human consciousness.

Gomati: One of the ways I've observed the shifts and changes happening are in the cultural changes that have been going on. For example, in Ireland, as recently as 2 or 3 years ago, if you'd been there, there would have been a lot of activity every Sunday in the churches. In Southern Ireland, in particular, it would be the Catholic Church. What has evolved over the last, just the last 2 or 3 years, is that attendance has dropped off so much in the Catholic Churches that, now there are not so many people attending every Sunday. However, vacant Catholic Churches, that have been abandoned for lack of use, have been turned to alternative uses, like lighting-fixture stores, cafes, clothing stores. This would have been sacrilege only 3 years ago.

The life that existed for the Irish people after work—of going to the pub, and sitting around and sharing beer with your buddies, and exploring all of the emotions that are stuck in there, has totally shifted, and now home and the heart are with the family, much more. And the pub is much more an outer accouterment than a place that people go for their social belongingness, and their ability to work through emotions, and live in the world.

So, all these old mores, not just in that culture but in a lot of other cultures where I've taught, are falling away. It's like the old programs that kept people locked into patterns that were not helpful for their growth, and which kept them thinking small and feeling small, are slowly but surely falling away.

In Asian cultures, there is a Confucianism whereby the children gave their power away to their parents, not just during childhood, but after adulthood, where their parents decided who they would marry. Their parents decided what job they would have. Their parents decided what their life would be like. And that has been honored for centuries in a lot of Oriental cultures. And, again, it's falling away.

Finally, people are starting to ask: "What do I want? What is MY future?" And to actually believe that they deserve to know who they fully are and explore their own spiritual growth. I mean, all kinds of exciting things like this are happening, planetarily, every day, and it's getting more and more speeded-up, in my experience, so that people are coming to their deepest desires; they're wanting to know who they are, and feeling for the first time in their life the freedom to explore those options to find out the answers to those questions.

Martin: Art Bell liked to use the expression "The Quickening" and I think that's a very appropriate phrase.

Himavat: In the First Spheres, no matter where I teach, whether it's in Japan or Australia or anywhere in the United States or Canada, the people who come to the First Sphere weekend quickly understand material that we used to have to really take a lot of time with; it amazes me. In other words, we have things that we like to talk about that help the mind and the heart to come together over the First Sphere weekend, wrapped-up with the art of ascension, if you would like to call it that. And so there was all this material that I used to go over, and all these examples that I used to use for people, and I find that I'm not, hardly, using any material any more.

I mean, there's some fundamental material that I love to hear, and it still has great value, but most of it people get so quickly that I find myself just sharing my experiences, and then people are so much more open at the get-go, at the beginning of the weekend, that they're sharing their experiences.

It's awesome that people get so deep, so quickly now, with these ascension attitudes, in a way that's exponential compared to—I mean, I might see someone really so vibrantly alive, 1 person out of 7 or 8, 3 years ago, and now 6 or 7 out of 8 are just lit-up like a Christmas tree, far before the weekend is over, because they're ready. We're ALL ready, because this truth wants to come through us. It's so much faster now than it was 3 years ago; there's just no comparison.

Martin: Is the goal of the Ishayas to just maintain the number of monks you have now, and just go out into the world and teach this teaching? Are there those among you who are writing a lot? Are you publishing? Is your task more along the oral tradition path, to teach this method and that's, basically, it?

Vasistha: Actually there is a goal, and in the next 15 or 20 years, we'll know if we've done it. And the goal can be stated several ways.

One way is for 144,000 people to reach the first stage of enlightenment, or 10,000 to reach the unified consciousness stage. That will be enough to shift all human consciousness out of the sleep state and into awareness of the Infinite, on the inside, as a reality. This would be something that is experientially present, that this shift will come and the peace that passes understanding will be a viable experience in human consciousness, not something that's talked about and was only experienced a long time ago.

Himavat: And we let the Universe support us. It's like a play, where it's opening and evolving and writing itself every day, as long as we continue to focus ourselves by using these ascension attitudes, all the time, day and night; then we are moved to respond to all that's out there. People want this.

And one of the tricks is: some people already know that this is what they want; some people know that they want something, but they don't know what it is, and so we get to see the beginning of the bridge for those people who don't even know what it is they want; they just know that they want something.

So we make this available however the wants present themselves. The ways that we make it available continue to evolve. Some of us like to write. Some of us prefer to do the computer. Vidya, who has spoken here, is our key player to the computer web. And some of us like to travel, and there's all kinds of ways that we want to get this out.

Gomati: One of the things I wanted to say in response to your question, also, was that while we have 90 people who have already gone through teacher's training, who are teachers, or monks, if you will, we have at this moment, as we speak, another 60 who are in the process, at one stage or another, of becoming teachers of ascension.

This is an ongoing process we have all the time, and what we call this property here in North Carolina is the Academy, because it is a teaching academy for people who are ready to make the commitment in their lives, to dedicate their life to their own healing, and in so doing, heal the planet. This begins from our own internal healing, our constant connection with Source, so that we can then affect those around us, and hence the entire planet.

What we've found, just being here on this property in the last 4 years, are amazing changes in the local area. We've only really checked in this particular location here in North Carolina, but there have been marked decreases in fatal accidents, murders, there's none of those any more. Car accidents, emergency room visits, I mean, it's been huge—and I don't have the numbers in my head at this moment, but huge decreases in some of the few measures that their are; we're seeing how consciousness impacts.

Vasistha: That's with an increase in population!

We do continue to teach teachers, and it's not by the intellectual process. It's by ascending as much as possible, and going inward to have a direct experience that can become a continuous direct experience, which is what we require for people, for teachers to go out and teach. And there is a clear thing that MSI says in the first appendix of the Enlightenment! book, about what a travesty it is to have anyone teach about God who does not have a continual, direct, conscious experience of that, 24 hours a day. They may have had one or two experiences, and then speak from a place of ego or personality, instead of direct, personal experience.

Martin: Our paper does go around the world. We have a lot of Canadian readers, as well as many in the United States. And some of them are all by themselves, out in some small town, in some out-of-the-way place. So, they may be reading this. What would you say to those people who may be feeling alone or isolated in their given area?

Himavat: We have books. We have a website. We have teachers who travel. Once you learn to ascend, you get a monthly newsletter. We are always willing to talk, 24 hours a day, on the phone. We have the Ascension! book on tape. We have an introductory tape.

It's just a matter of how people want to create their lives. If they want to be out and appreciate that alone time, then that's what they've created. And we can go as far as we can go, when there are groups of people who want to get together, or our coming to be with them, physically, and we do everything we can to support the people. Once we are done with the class, our intention is to continue to support people once we've talked with them. We encourage people to call and write, use the web, the e-mail, whatever.

Gomati: The class, the First Sphere, is not over at the end of the weekend, you know. We don't walk out of people's lives because we have dedicated our lives to this and it's not like a job or something like that. We are there for anyone who wants us, who can reach us in all the different ways Himavat just mentioned.

And we would like for everyone to know that they are not alone. I mean, no one is alone. We've never been separate from Source in the past; we aren't now; and we never will be.

It's very much an individual choice in terms of how a person wants to connect and how it fits into their lifestyle and what they want to create for themselves. There are a lot of options available, including they could create a group right where they live, in the middle of nowhere, if there are like-minded people who also want to learn how to use these techniques. Then, once the weekend is over, they can choose to get together on a weekly basis, or however often suits their lifestyles, to share their growth together. And this is a very, very powerful way for people to not only connect with each other, but to grow emotionally and spiritually in their own right.

We just came back from a class in Massachusetts with a group that meets regularly. Most of the group of about 10 or 12 people have been meeting consistently now for about 4 months, and they have supported each other through some major emotional growth periods, and encouraged each other, and in the absence of a teacher, when we're in North Carolina and they're in Massachusetts, they are a powerful support group for each other, a powerful love-force for each other, and constant inspiration for each other.

Then, when we're in the area, we come by, as available, to be there for their, what we call, advanced meetings. In that case, we offer what we can offer in that moment, as well; but it's something that people can do wherever they live on this planet, and whatever they're doing in their lives, as well as just being in constant connection with Source, on your own, whether you choose to live in isolation or in the middle of a very active city.

Vasistha: And the awesome thing is that when people ascend together, it seems to amp-up tremendously. And if you're living, as you are, out in the mountains, then all of Nature supports you waking-up. And, actually, the deepest part of you supports all of life everywhere in reaching higher levels of being; it's the natural connection, inside and outside, that can occur very easily.

Martin: That last response from all of you was perfect, by the way. This is exactly the kind of supportive feedback that I think will be really helpful to our readers in understanding what this is about, and allowing people to reconnect with Source, because I think that is the Great Deceiver, feeling that they really are alone, when in fact, they're never alone. It's very easy to start believing that after awhile, and it's very unfortunate that that's the case, but it IS often the case.

Himavat: I have experienced THAT as one of the root stresses that will still come up for people, once they've been ascending for awhile; they begin to feel that "aloneness" as that sense of separation gets bigger. And we do everything we can, as teachers, to encourage people to call at any time, and to call each other. Because a lot of times, as you've probably already seen, people will be experiencing a lot of the same issues at the same time.

Martin: Sure.

Himavat: And we do everything we can, because we do say that stress will move, and sometimes it will a lot, and sometimes it will be a little. But please, please—we just continue to ask people to call us, or at least call each other, so that when the stress moves, you have a chance to talk about it. That's why they're called emotions, of course—they move! We have a tendency, sometimes, to repress them, and we encourage people, please, just to call us, let them move, and let them come out—especially that root stress that deceptively says that we are alone.

Vasistha: It's so incredible. It's like having an inside hug, a hug on the inside all the time. You KNOW, from direct experience, after a while, that you are loved, you are connected, there is an unlimited amount of support for every one of us.

Martin: A lot of people in cities, well, just a lot of people in this country, obviously struggle day-to-day, to make ends meet, and most of the day-to-day life has to do with survival issues, money issues, getting the children to school, picking the children up from school, getting to work, driving in traffic, and I can almost hear some of those people saying: "Well, yeah, ascension attitudes, it's easy for YOU to say, you're on a beautiful property in North Carolina; but what about me? I have 4 kids, and a wife, and a job, and I'm just trying to pay the rent!"

Himavat: That's an excellent question; I'm glad you brought it up. It's something that, when I bump into it when I'm talking to people on the phone, I am so excited at what happens, over and over again. What I remember, and what we teach, is that WE ARE CREATORS!

The opposite of that is that we perceive ourselves as victims: "I cannot do this." "The Universe will not support me in this." "I am broke; I don't have the money." "I don't have the time; I cannot do it."

I taught a woman back in Massachusetts a couple of weeks ago, who really, really wanted this. She didn't know where she was going to get the day-care. For one person the issue is time; for another person the issue is money.

What I remember and hold in my consciousness—and this has something to do—Vasistha mentioned earlier how it is contagious when we put the focus inside and let the Ascendant come out through us, that it has an effect on our outside world. It's what I do over and over with people.

What I ask people is: What do you REALLY want? And then, let's see how the Universe is going to support you. And really, the bottom line is: What do we REALLY want? Because sometimes we'll say: "I really want this First Sphere weekend" or "I really want enlightenment". But it may not be true. It may just be what we THINK we want.

Maybe there's something more important in our nervous system that we really DO want. And so, we get a conflict. We're telling the Universe two different things at the same time. And so, what I do with people is, I stay with them. I listen to them. And I ask them questions that help them to know that they ARE creators, help them to know more in that moment, whether they learn to ascend or not, what it is that they really do want.

Then I say: "Let's watch how the Universe supports you." And so, this is the funniest thing, I wanted to be able to teach this one person all 4 attitudes on the weekend, and she wanted to learn them, too, but she had all these problems.

It ended up, I only got to teach her the first

2 attitudes when I was there with her. And that was what the Universe was telling both of us—that, yes, you have this desire, and here is how it's going to work. And that's where we let it go. We learned detachment. And, so, she is very excited about sponsoring a class when she has more time, because she learned about my being there at the last minute, so timing was a factor.

So, we continue to hold people in the knowingness that they're creators. And if people want to perceive themselves as victims, ok, they'll continue to remind people—here, look at how, in your life, you've already created certain things that you do want and the Universe has supported you. That's what I focus on, the solution to the problem.

Gomati: And at the risk of repeating what we've already said, when you use these attitudes with your eyes open, it shifts and changes all those stresses that are, seemingly, big, and seemingly bringing you down, in sort-of the day-to-day world, because giving the attitudes helps one to view everything with a totally new perspective. It offers you a fresh perspective in every moment, of everything on the outside being exactly the way it was before you learned how to use the attitudes, but now it feels totally different. Again and again I've taught people who have said: "Everything in my outside world changed" or "All my friends have changed, and everything else" when, in effect, what was actually the case was that the person changed from the inside. The perception that everything was changing was coming from seeing the world through different eyes.

Vasistha: And the other thing is, you're going to have thoughts and emotions anyway; you are. So, you can choose thoughts and emotions that bring you more and more stress. I mean, it's real simple. All you have to do is criticize everything you can for about 15 or 20 minutes and see how you feel. It's likely you'll feel bad. And then, if you have a way of being able to honestly think of something you can appreciate, honestly, whether it's the light in somebody's eyes or the shine off somebody's hair, just something you can appreciate, then do that for 5 or 10 minutes and see how your body feels. You'll be surprised at how different that is.

And yet, we don't even say to do that. We don't say you have to make a shift on how you deal with everything. All we say is, simply, if you're going to have a thought, choose a thought like an ascension attitude that makes a difference, that takes you inward to the Source of Being, and allow that to begin to come out from you.

I mean, if you're going to have thoughts, choose ones that make a huge positive difference. And so, this is really simple because all you have to do is, not change your behavior and not change anything on the outside, just spend time choosing these thoughts that have a tremendous power to them, and are supported by an Alignment that goes back to the beginning.

Martin: These are all great answers. This is going to be a good read.

Himavat: Would you send us a copy of your read? (laughter)

Martin: (laughter) Of course. Can we just take a few minutes more to make some closing comments which you would like to leave our readers with, some food for thought, generally?

Vasistha: Ok, I've got something. Food for thought. Just a real simple question. And the question is: What is your purpose here on Earth? Why are you here? Is it to work 9-5 for 50 years? What is your purpose for being here? You don't have to answer, but it is sure something to be aware of, a little bit. Why am I here?

Himavat: My experience of all the great teachers and all the great teachings is they have consistently pointed the finger back to my own heart. And I am so excited how this particular, there is a technique, this teaching, has given me the most dependable, the most reliable vehicle for that, that I have ever experienced. Words cannot tell you how much love I feel for myself and for all the people I come in contact with anymore, because that's where I continue to put my focus. And, it's so easy. That's what it's all about. And it's not about anything I say. It is totally about the experience YOU have when you introduce this one, simple, new thought. That's what I love about it.

Gomati: People have life experiences that are really different, one from the other. And some people have been on spiritual paths for a long time; others have never even thought about spirituality. The techniques that we teach take people right where they are, work with everyone, regardless of where they're coming from, move them along, incrementally, at a rate that they're ready to go at. It's an organic process. It's very natural, and it's very powerful, both because it is so effective and because it is so simple. And it transforms people's lives.

I get to see how much it transforms people's lives every day. And I feel, very strongly, that now is the time because this IS the great period of transformation on planet Earth, and there are so many changes and shifts happening, and it is so important to be grounded during all of this and to be connected to Source, constantly. That is what's being asked of us, now—to choose to be in the Infinite all the time, and that we make that choice, constantly, so that we can be part of the evolutionary process, and note all Lightworkers and supporters of this constant evolution that's occurring. And we can stand-up and be counted!

Martin: That's a perfect place to end, perfect—unless someone else has something to say. What you just said was just wonderful.

Vasistha: You can edit this out if you want, but I'm just going to say it: I've meditated for 30 years before ascension, and this is absolutely the best decision I've ever made in my life, and the results are phenomenal as far as inner-conscious communion with The One, on an experiential level, not a "belief" level. It is just completely awesome—life changing!

Martin: Thank you all for such an uplifting discussion!

Chemtrails:

Did An Airline Mechanic Stumble Upon The Truth?

“Project Cloverleaf”

Editor's note: Many of you have personally watched the crisscross patterns being formed in your local skies from “jet contrails” that not only don't go away quickly (as contrails should), but continue to expand and expand into a gossamer-like haze across the sky within a few hours. Many instances of illness, especially respiratory and often quite serious, leading to overflowing hospital emergency rooms, are reported in conjunction with these mysterious sprayings. Analyses of the contents of the sprayings—when such have been able to be accomplished amidst frequent clandestine interference—have revealed some bizarre and truly scary ingredients.

And if the sprayings themselves are not puzzling enough, the silence so far about WHAT is going on, WHY it is going on, and WHO is responsible for such a large-scale assault upon large populations of citizens (not just in the United States) has been even more bizarre. Before Art Bell “retired” from his late-night talk-radio program, he covered this subject several times, presenting the best researchers available, and yet with even his twenty million listeners, not one “insider” came forth to help open up what appeared to be a tightly sealed box.

It seemed preposterous that something that was happening so frequently, and on such a massive scale, could be kept so well silenced. Of course maybe that's a sad commentary on how “soft” people have become, and so easily intimidated into complete silence—even when their own families and friends and pets are being sprayed and oftentimes made ill, sometimes to the point of death.

But silence is finally losing its grip. The following was assembled by our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, because of some very recent and astonishing “cracks” in the wall of silence on this subject. God bless and watch over those few who have been daring enough to finally come forth with what they know. It goes without saying that the greatest safety is in large numbers of others also coming forward and telling what they know.

Remember that this is the time of the Great Awakening. ALL lies and deceits shall be exposed and replaced with the Light of Truth. No small part of the events of this time are the testings for each of us. Will we—each in our own way—stand for Truth or fold to the bribes and intimidations of the dark, so-called “elite” controllers? Whether we pass or fail our testings is entirely up to our own choosing.

Something this utterly massive cannot move forward, day after day, without the cooperation (intimidation, spinelessness, bribery, cold-heartedness, etc.) of many, many, many people—from pilots to air traffic controllers to secret chemical truck drivers, to you name it. No wonder, as one airline manager admits below, his conscience bothered him. Indeed it should! Hooray! That means he's alive. Remember the old adage about all it takes for bad things to happen is for good people to look the other way and do nothing.

As I (E.Y) write this, the skies overhead have been crisscrossed for yet another time, today. This was maybe the fourth time this month. It has been going on for well over two years now. Once again I watched the mystery unfold overhead with growing feelings of anger and helplessness. This evening I'm coughing again; something just won't clear from my lungs. And I'm mad as hell about this—along with a large and growing number of you.

Hopefully by spreading the following astonishing new information around, as widely as we all can, it will induce others “in the know” to finally come forth and tell their Truth about this matter. Please. Otherwise, how many will regret what they could have done to help stop this travesty—after it is too late and the end-of-exam bell has rung?

5/28/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

CHEMTRAILS—DID AN AIRLINE MECHANIC STUMBLE UPON THE TRUTH?

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 5/17/00: [quoting]

(Note: We cannot confirm the following statement but the implications are enormous, and we expect there will be serious efforts to investigate and evaluate these allegations quickly. — Sightings website editor)

For reasons you will understand as you read this I cannot divulge my identity. I am an aircraft mechanic for a major airline. I work at one of our maintenance bases located at a large airport. I have discovered some information that I think you will find important.

First I should tell you something about the “pecking order” among mechanics. It is important to my story and to the cause to which you have dedicated yourself.

Mechanics want to work on three things: the avionics, the engines, or the flight controls. The mechanics who work on these systems are considered at the top of the “pecking order”. Next come the mechanics who work on the hydraulics and air conditioning systems. Then come the ones who work on the galley and other non-essential systems. But at the very bottom of the list are the mechanics who work on the waste disposal systems. No mechanic wants to work on the pumps, tanks, and pipes that are used to store the waste from the lavatories.

But at every airport where I have worked there are always 2 or 3 mechanics who VOLUNTEER to work on the lavatory systems. The other mechanics are happy to let them do it. Because of this you will have only 2 or 3 mechanics who work on these systems at any one airport. No one pays much attention to these guys and no mechanic socializes with another mechanic who only works on the waste systems. In fact I had never thought much about this situation until last month.

Like most airlines, we have reciprocal agreements with the other airlines who fly into this airport. If they have a problem with a plane, one of our mechanics will take care of it. Likewise if one of our planes has a problem at an airport where the other airline has a maintenance base, they will fix our plane.

One day last month I was called out from our base to work on a plane for another airline. When I got the call the dispatcher did not know what the problem was. When I got to the plane I found out that the problem was in the waste disposal system.

There was nothing for me to do but to crawl in and fix the problem. When I got into the bay, I realized that something was not right. THERE WERE MORE TANKS, PUMPS, AND PIPES THEN SHOULD HAVE BEEN

THERE.

At first I assumed that the system had been changed. It had been 10 years since I had worked on one. As I tried to find the problem, I quickly realized the extra piping and tanks were not connected to the waste disposal system. I had just discovered this when another mechanic from my company showed up. It was one of the mechanics who usually works on these systems. I happily turned the job over to him. As I was leaving, I asked him about the extra equipment. He told me: "Worry about your end of the plane and let me worry about mine."

The next day I was on the company computer to look up a wiring schematic. While I was there I decided to look up the extra equipment I had found. TO MY AMAZEMENT THE MANUALS DID NOT SHOW ANY OF THE EXTRA EQUIPMENT I HAD SEEN WITH MY OWN EYES THE DAY BEFORE. I even tied into the manufacturer files and still found nothing. Now I was really determined to find out what that equipment did.

The next week we had three of our planes in our main hanger for periodic inspection. There are mechanics crawling all over a plane during these inspections. I had just finished my shift and I decided to have a look at the waste system on one of our planes. With all the mechanics around I figured that no one would notice an extra one on the plane. Sure enough, the plane I chose had the extra equipment!

I began to trace the system of pipes, pumps, and tanks. I found what appeared to be the control unit for the system. It was a standard looking avionics control box, BUT IT HAD NO MARKINGS OF ANY KIND. I could trace the control wires from the box to the pumps and valves, but there were no control circuits coming into the unit. The only wires coming into the unit was a power connection to the aircraft's main power bus.

The system had one large and two smaller tanks. It was hard to tell in the cramped compartment, but it looked like the large tank could hold 50 gallons. The tanks were connected to a fill-and-drain valve that passed through the fuselage, just behind the drain valve for the waste system. When I had a chance to look for this connection under the plane, I FOUND IT CUNNINGLY HIDDEN BEHIND A PANEL UNDER THE PANEL USED TO ACCESS THE WASTE DRAIN.

I began to trace the piping from the pumps. These pipes lead to a network of small pipes that ended in the trailing edges of the wings and horizontal stabilizers. If you look closely at the wings of a large airplane, you will see a set of wires, about the size of your finger, extending from the trailing edge of the wing surfaces. These are the static discharge wicks. They are used to dissipate the static electric charge that builds up on a plane in flight. I discovered that the pipes from this mystery system lead to every 1-out-of-3 of these static discharge wicks. THESE WICKS HAD BEEN "HOLLOWED OUT" TO ALLOW WHATEVER FLOWS THROUGH THESE PIPES TO BE DISCHARGED THROUGH THESE FAKE WICKS.

It was while I was on the wing that one of the managers spotted me. He ordered me out of the hanger, telling me that my shift was over and I had not been authorized any overtime.

The next couple of days were very busy and I had no time to continue my investigation. Late one afternoon, two days after my discovery, I was called to replace an engine temperature sensor on a plane due to take off in two hours. I finished the job and turned in the paperwork.

About 30 minutes later, I was paged to see the General Manager. When I went in his office I found that our union rep and two others who I did not know were waiting for me.

The GM told me that a serious problem had been discovered. He said that I was being written up and suspended for turning in false paperwork. He handed me a disciplinary form stating that I had turned in false paperwork on the engine temperature sensor I had installed a few hours before.

I was floored and began to protest. I told them that this was ridiculous and that I had done this work. The union rep spoke up then and recommended that we take a look at the plane and see if we could straighten it all out. It was at this time that I asked who the other two men were. The GM told me that they were airline safety inspectors, but would not give me their names.

We proceeded to the plane, which should have been in the air, but was parked on our maintenance ramp. We opened the engine cowl and the union rep pulled the sensor. He checked the serial number and told everyone that it was the old instrument. We then went to the parts bay and went back into the racks. The union rep checked my report and pulled from the rack a sealed box. He opened the box and pulled out the engine temperature sensor with the serial number of the one I had installed. I was told that I was suspended for a week without pay and to leave immediately.

I sat at home the first day of my suspension wondering what the hell had happened to me. That evening I received a phone call. The voice told me: "Now you know what happens to mechanics who poke around in things they shouldn't. The next time you start working on systems that are no concern of yours, you will lose your job! As it is, I'm feeling generous; I believe that you'll be able to go back to work soon." (click)

Again I had to pick myself up off the floor. I made the connection that what had happened was directly connected to my tracing the mysterious piping.

The next morning the General Manager called me. He said that, due to my past excellent employment record, the suspension had been reduced to one day and that I should report back to work immediately. THE ONLY THING I COULD THINK OF WAS WHAT ARE THEY TRYING TO HIDE AND WHO ARE THEY?!

That day at work went by as if nothing had happened. None of the other mechanics mentioned the suspension and my union rep told me not to talk about it. That night I logged onto the Internet to try to find some answers.

I don't remember now how I got there, but I came across your [Sightings] site. That's when it all came together. But the next morning at work I found a note inside my locked locker. It said: "Curiosity killed the cat. Don't be looking at Internet sites that are no concern of yours."

Well that's it. THEY ARE WATCHING ME!

Well you already know what they are doing. I don't know what they are spraying, but I can tell you how they are doing it.

I figure they are using the "honey trucks". These are the trucks that empty the waste from the lavatory waste tanks. The airports usually contract out this job and nobody goes near these trucks. Who wants to stand next a truck full of s--t.

WHILE THESE GUYS ARE EMPTYING THE WASTE TANKS, THEY ARE FILLING THE TANKS OF THE SPRAY SYSTEM. They know the plane's flight path, so they probably program the control unit to start spraying some amount of time after the plane reaches a certain altitude. The spray nozzles in the fake static wicks are so small that no one on the plane would see a thing.

God help us all. A concerned citizen. [End quoting]

AN AIRLINE MANAGER'S REVEALING STATEMENT

From the INTERNET,
<www.carnicom.com>, 5/22/00: [quoting]

Posted by C.E. Carnicom, on behalf of the author.

I read the e-mail you [C.E. Carnicom] received from the anonymous mechanic, and I felt compelled to respond to it. I, too, work for an airline, though I work in upper management levels. I will not say which airline, what city I am located in, nor what office I work for, for obvious reasons. I wish I could document everything I am about to relate to you, but to do so is next to impossible and would result in possible physical harm to me.

The e-mail from the anonymous mechanic rings true. Airline companies in America have been participating in something called PROJECT CLOVERLEAF for a few years now. The earliest date anyone remembers being briefed on it is 1998. I was briefed on it in 1999. The few airline employees who were briefed on Project Cloverleaf were all made to undergo background checks, and before we were briefed on it, we were made to sign non-disclosure agreements, which basically state that if we tell anyone what we know, we could be imprisoned.

About twenty employees in our office were briefed, along with me, by two officials from some government agency. They didn't tell us which one. They told us that the government was going to pay our airline, along with others, to release special chemicals from commercial aircraft. When asked what the chemicals were and why we were going to spray them, they told us that information was given on a need-to-know basis and we weren't cleared for it.

They then went on to state that the chemicals were harmless, but the program was of such importance that it needed to be done at all costs. When we asked them why they didn't just rig military aircraft to spray these chemicals, they stated that there weren't enough military aircraft available to release chemicals on such a large basis as needs to be done. That's why Project Cloverleaf was initiated, to allow commercial airlines to assist in releasing these chemicals into the atmosphere.

Then someone asked why all the secrecy was needed. The government reps then stated that if the general public knew that the aircraft they were flying on were releasing chemicals into the air, environmentalist groups would raise hell and demand the spraying stop.

Someone asked one of the g-men: "Then if the chemicals are harmless, why not tell the public what the chemicals are and why we are spraying them?" He seemed perturbed at this question, and told us in a tone of authority that the public doesn't need to know what's going on, but that this program is in their best interests.

He also stated that we should not tell anyone, nor ask any more questions about it. With that, the briefing was over.

All documents in our office pertaining to Project Cloverleaf are kept in locked safes. Nobody is allowed to take these documents out of the office. Very few employees are allowed access to these documents, and they remain tight-lipped about what the documents say.

Mr. Carnicom, I am no fool. I know there's something going on. And, frankly, I am scared. I feel a high level of guilt that I have been aware of this kind of operation, but unable to tell anyone. IT'S BEEN EATING AWAY AT ME, KNOWING THAT THE COMPANY I WORK FOR MAY BE POISONING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. I hope this letter will open some eyes to what's happening.

Again, I wish I could give you documented information, but you have to understand why I must remain totally anonymous.

Reply Re: An Airline Manger's Statement

This is a very interesting statement on top of the mechanic's. I do believe that when more people feel they can speak out about the spraying, we will get more people saying what they know. I have been reading all the pros and cons on the mechanic's statement, and however it is being used to spray us all, the important thing is that it is being done, and as we gather more and more information, the pieces of the puzzle will fit together. I believe we are on our way to the complete puzzle soon.

Reply Re: An Airline Manager's Statement

Mr. Carnicom, thank you for posting this man's letter on your website and this forum.

This manager should be praised for coming clean with what he knows about the involvement of commercial airlines in the chemtrail enigma.

When reading the airline mechanic's statement about his company's participation in the chemtrail spraying program, I realized it all made some sense. Even if the airlines weren't spraying massive doses individually, there are enough of them in the air to add a considerable amount of spray material on a daily basis.

TPTB like to have arcane meanings/inferences to their project code names. What could "Cloverleaf" really mean? Planes going over, under, and around each other in four directions, spraying God-only-knows-what. And a project having three parts or participants—civilian, national military, and international military U.N. (Other countries are getting sprayed too.) But for what purpose?

Nevertheless, it is amazing at this point that something is finally coming out about this situation; however, IMHO I think we should realize that TPTB are going to try to put their best spin on this story: nothing toxic being sprayed, just harmless everyday common substances, etc., etc.

Maybe more people will come forward with their part of the puzzle; don't forget they have families too.

Reply Re: An Airline Manager's Statement

First of all I would like to say thank you to the Airline Manager. You are indeed a brave soul. This secret would eat at me too.

Finally, someone "in the know" has come forward. Unless this is some disinformation hoax, this goes a long way to answering some questions. Okay, now: what is in the spray? Anyone?

Reply: God Bless This Manager!

Another brave person placing his job and maybe his neck on the line. We owe him a debt of gratitude and our prayers for his safety. May God place his angels around this man and his family and protect them and bless them and give him the wisdom and quick-wit to outsmart those who would come against him and his efforts to get his testimony out.

May God inspire others also in the know to come forth with their testimonies of what they have seen and heard.

Reply Re: An Airline Manger's Statement

Let me see if I can make this sound half-way sensible.

Firstly, anyone who read my postings on the mechanic's statement thread will know that I was somewhat skeptical of that statement. However, the manager's statement goes a long way in my mind toward lending credence to the mechanic's statement.

Whether either or both of these statements are true or false seems to be irrelevant at this point. If they are to be taken at face value, then they go a long way toward explaining a lot of what is being observed in the skies. If they are designed as disinformation, then what exactly are they trying to cover up?

In an earlier posting I asked how many people know about this, and why weren't they coming forward? Well, one more has now come forward, and I have no doubt that this may be the beginning of a deluge of guilt-ridden souls involved in the civil aviation industry who will now feel compelled to tell their stories.

This, I believe, is huge, because we know that whistle-blowers in the military are few and far between. After all, secrecy and subterfuge are a part of military life. For those involved in civil aviation, however, such secrecy is foreign (except perhaps in the upper echelons of corporations).

Hopefully, therefore, we can count on more involved in civil aviation across the continent (yes, I know that the risks are huge, and we all

Reply Re: Project Cloverleaf

I just researched Project Cloverleaf using the Alta Vista search engine, and after reading 150 entries, I found this one to be “wacked out” enough to copy. It does closely resemble some of the projects that NASA has done in reference to the Giza Pyramid, 33.3 degree Masons, and other off-the-wall programs of theirs.

As we all know by now, the so-called shadow government is comprised of some very loosely wrapped individuals who are “consorting with alien space races”. Okay, I’ll buy that theory as long as we all realize that these “aliens” are fallen angels and they are here or will be shortly coming here as “angels of Light”. But we Christians know better.

Now, being as this “shadow government” has pretty much openly admitted to manipulating man-made catastrophes in an effort to hurry up the End Times and usher in their anti-Christ, this does make a whole lotta sense. I believe in and “stand upon” the Word of God, and I also follow William J. Cooper’s advice. Coop says: “Listen to everyone; read everything; believe absolutely nothing unless you can prove it in your own research.”

Now for the Project Cloverleaf (www2.eu.spiritweb.org/Spi...shtar.html): This bizarre website speaks of the arrival of technicians, support personnel, etc. and the people (of Earth) being able to see them and their craft and of the darkness and hysteria this sight will cause. You have to read it to believe it; it certainly sounds like a big cover-up of some “alien” invasion. [End quoting]

UNUSUAL TRUCK ACTIVITY

From the INTERNET, 5/8/00: [quoting]

The following information was reported recently on the message board attached to <www.carnicom.com>:

An interesting event happened last Friday (5/8/00) on a trip down California’s main north-south highway (I-5). Somewhere around Yreka, California, I was passed several times by a tanker truck as we went up and down the mountain grades. This truck did not display any Department Of Transportation (DOT) placards giving the code of its contents (such as the 1206=gasoline). It was obviously a chemical hauler and obviously was carrying a load.

As I pulled into the Weed, California, rest area, this truck pulled in next to my rig. The cylindrical silver stainless steel tank had an expanded metal walkway running the full length of the top of the tank, some type of gauge on its left side, a conical rear section, AND WAS DRIPPING YELLOW-AMBER-BROWN STICKY-LOOKING FLUID FROM THE TOP VENTS DOWN THE SIDES OF THE TANK.

THIS IS THE SAME FLUID APPEARANCE OF THE STUFF THAT HIT MY WINDSHIELD LAST JUNE 10, AND BURNED MY EXPOSED SKIN, and caused Sun coronas, so I didn’t touch or sample this fluid, and returned to the road.

The tanker and I continued to pass each other on down the highway, and as we drew up to the Northern California Highway Patrol Truck Inspection Station at Dunsmuir, California, I expected to lose my road companion as: “ALL TRUCKS MUST STOP FOR INSPECTION” and all trucks were pulling in—EXCEPT THIS TANKER!

This was in broad daylight. There are three sets of truck-monitoring equipment: cameras, radars, and height infra-red lights just prior to this station, and the station never closes, as it is the northern portal of entry to California. This tanker slowed down to 50 mph on the highway, the driver looked directly at the station office, and cruised by all the trucks in line. I laid on the horn for one half mile as this went down, so the truckers waiting in line could see this. Again, there was no bypass signal on, and trucks in front of, and behind, this tanker pulled into the station.

Now this truck had my full attention and, as I passed it, I photographed it and got its numbers: Tractor unit=dark blue Ray Booth, Cottonwood, California; Tank unit=Trimac Western, McMinnville, Oregon?

Tank unit’s licence plate=Tennessee Apportioned #006 197 T.

Tank serial number=481016 “Non-SPEC”.

As I was getting this truck’s numbers, I got tagged by a very dark blue new Chevy Caprice with an anti-sway bar under the rear axle [meaning the car was fitted for heavy-duty use like a police car is outfitted] and a man in his late 30s or early 40s with blond hair and a stone glare and wrap-around sunglasses. Although we were now in a 70 mph zone around Redding, California, this car paced me at 75, 45, 35, 55, 35, 75, etc., for about 20 miles until I forced it to either crash into me or get in front of me. Then I paced him and made a very abrupt exit and changed my course.

On my return trip Sunday I came around a bend at Vollmers, California, on Highway I-5 to find a similar tanker, Trimac Western, with a different tractor and driver going north, broken down on the side of the road. I stopped to assist the driver and found he was hauling “paint” (the sky?). He also had no Department Of Transportation (DOT) placards, also had Tennessee Apportioned plates, but his tank was freshly washed and not dripping goo.

From the <www.dsiti.com> website we read: “Trimac is the fifth largest tank company in the United States, with a system of tanks, ships, tank farms, rail car tanks, highway tankers and terminals serving the chemical industry. Trimac is owned by Rentokil Initial of the UK which employs 140,000 people in over 40 countries.” They haul pesticides and chemicals for BASF, DuPONT, BAYER, and all the other big chemmies.

- No Department of Transportation placards.

- No stopping for California Highway Patrol inspection that all trucks must stop for.

- And escorted by spooks? [End quoting]

CONTRAIL VS. CHEMTRAIL

From MILITIA OF MONTANA, 5/22/00: [quoting]

A. A contrail disperses. A chemtrail spreads into cloud cover and sometimes has fallout (cob-web-like filaments, red/yellow powders, milky-white fluid).

II. Purposes (weather modification, protection from ozone holes, bio-vaccination, culling - ???)

A. Weather modification.

- Openly stated goal of the U.S. Military is “owning the weather” <www.au.af.mil/au/database/research/ay1996/acsc/9025ag.htm>.

- UN environmental Program “Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change” <www.ipcc.ch>.

- UN “Capacity Development Initiative” on climate change—in partnership with THE WORLD BANK as financiers (remember Seattle protests) <www.gefweb.org/Capacity_Dev.pdf>.

- Dr. Bernard Eastlund took up the Tesla theories. Eastlund released his research and concerns on the Internet AFTER the military took over, to cover his butt. <www.borderlands.com/newstuff/research/HPEMRAD/Eastlund.htm>.

- When DOD took over Dr. Eastlund’s research, the birth of HAARP took place. HAARP is based in Alaska and it is being applied to the Earth’s ionosphere for weather control and mind control purposes. Angels Don’t Play This HAARP, Dr. Nick Begich [Earthpulse Press, PO Box 201393, Anchorage, AK 99520]; Concerned citizens group paper at <www.geocities.com/Area51/Shadowlands/6583/project116.html>.

- US Air Force IS involved. Early April 2000, KC135s were grounded, and during the period immediately following, spraying reports across the US significantly dropped. See <<http://clubs.yahoo.com/clubs/> chemtrailtrackingusa> (OVER 700 members—daily reports to track). Also see the research of William Thomas, author: The Scorched Earth, Bringing The War Home, Probing The Chemtrail Conundrum <www.islandnet.com/~wilco/investsky.htm>, e-mail: <wilco@islandnet.com>.

- Our weathermen KNOW. The data doesn’t support the cloud cover. For instance, last year in Sante Fe, NM there was a 21-day period of continuous cloud cover when humidity/dew point levels were no higher than 30%. Clouds can only form when humidity/dew point levels are 60% or higher.

HOW DID THE CLOUDS FORM??

(see <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>)

B. There has definitely been biological warfare testing of UNKNOWING U.S. citizens and OUR GOVERNMENT IS FULLY AWARE OF IT.

- 1977 hearings before the U.S. Senate Committee on Human Resources Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research (see <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>).

- AGAIN 5/6/94, U.S. Senate testimony of Dr. Leonard Cole (author, Clouds Of Secrecy) before the Committee on Veteran’s Affairs (see <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>).

- 3 segments aired on ABC/Ted Koppel’s Nightline which included the testimony of Peter Kawaja on the biowarfare exposure of Gulf War vets. Of the initial 697,000 soldiers deployed to the Gulf War, 489,400+ (70%) are now discharged, THOUSANDS have died and are dying, 67% of their babies born after are born deformed, family/friends/doctors/nurses becoming sick. Mycoplasmas are a part of their sickness.

- UN Wildlands Project—the “re-wilding of America”. 50% of the United States is being set aside for global parklands with NO HUMANS ALLOWED. Papers state “human population must be reduced”. Concerned citizens site: <www.wildlandsproject.org/html/summary.htm>.

- Damning patents. U.S. patent 5534413 for invasive mycoplasma infection (isolated from the urine of AIDS patients), and THE VACCINE YOU NEVER, EVER HEAR ABOUT: U.S. Patent 5242820. Mycoplasmas can cause Epstein-Barr/mono, Lupus, ALS, MS, Meningitis, Lymphoma, Leukemia, Alzheimers, Crohn’s Disease, PID, Arthritis, Fibromyalgia, Allergies, Asthma etc.

See: <<http://members.aol.com/ghylak/mycoplasma.htm>> and <www.gulfwarvets.com/article24.htm>.

- Lab results from ground samples taken from 2 unassociated parties (Sacramento and E. Oregon) after flyovers from unmarked aircraft reveal biowarfare bacterias named in over 160 Pentagon patents referencing biowarfare applications, toxic molds, ethylene dibromide (a pesticide banned by the EPA which damages lungs/heart/liver/kidneys). (See <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>).

“The flu that’s not the flu.” Hospitals filled to capacity, TURNING AWAY patients:

“THIS VIRUS IS A MUCH MORE SUCCESSFUL PARASITE” says Dr. W. Paul Glezen of the Influenza Research Center at Baylor. NEVER has “parasite” been associated with a “virus”. A parasite FEEDS FROM THE HOST. A virus, on the other hand, NEEDS A SUSCEPTIBLE HOST’S CELLS TO MULTIPLY. What’s Dr. Glezen talking about? Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz states: “Based on the evidence that my colleagues and I have accumulated, I conclude that this flu-like illness IS most likely associated with chemical and biological co-factors.” (His e-mail: <tetra@tetrahedron.org>.)

• Fluorescent black-light reveals filaments—LOTS—which glow blue, red/orange. Contain barium titanate, a dielectric used to keep electricity flowing. Using this to: trap moisture to create clouds; build up Earth pressures to cause earthquakes, tornados, volcanic eruptions; to create extra tension and stress in humans. The fibers are in a twisted ribbon shape ~3-5 microns thick by ~10 to 13 microns wide. They have imperfections that manifest as small clumps of polymer whiskers ~0.5 to 1 micron in diameter by ~5 to 10 microns long. They are large enough by themselves and in sufficient quantity to cause possible long-lasting lung disease. WHERE ARE YOU, AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION?

YEARS of 1996, 1997 and 1998. The difference is significant—at the 99.9% plus level. The conclusion reached is that the microscopic air particle count in New Mexico in 1999 is STRIKINGLY different from that of the preceding 3 years combined. (See <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>).

C. Ominous developments.

• Unusual truck activity across the U.S. Trimac Western tanker trucks that DO NOT display D.O.T. placard codes giving their contents, being WAVED THRU mandatory truck inspection stops! People who slow down to take a “look see” are being shadowed 20-30 miles by civilian cars escorting the tanker trucks. Trimac is owned by Rentokil of the United Kingdom—they haul pesticides and chemicals for BASF, DuPont and Bayer. (See <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>.) Let all truckers, commuters, etc. know to keep their eyes open for these Trimac tanker trucks. If one is spotted, take down any D.O.T. placards, license #s, identifying markings, date/time/location and forward it to Cliff Carnicom at <cecarnicom@hotmail.com>. We need to tie this together with the statement below on “aircraft waste disposal system”.

• COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT ARE NOW BEING USED TO SPRAY—particularly BOEING planes. Also, an aircraft mechanic from a major airline received anonymous “warning” call, job suspension, and threats left in his locker after his observing an extra 50 gal. plus 2 smaller tanks located near the aircraft waste disposal system. The extra tanks WERE NOT connected to the waste disposal system, but instead piping from them led to deliberately “hollowed out” wiring connected to the edges of the aircraft’s wings. (See <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>).

• Also of anti-chemtrail activists reporting harassment, but on 5/19/00 Cliff Carnicom, owner of the most proactive anti-chemtrail website, contacted the FBI regarding impersonation, libel, professional hacking, and death threats. His site alone has submitted 3,087 letters to federal officials and 828 letters to state officials and TO DATE NO RESPONSE HAS BEEN RECEIVED.

D. Announcements.

• E-mail Congressman Tom Udall. He told a constituent he would ask for Congressional hearings. Let’s hold him up to that. <tom.udall@mail.house.gov>.

• Nationwide organization “Citizens Against Chemtrails” is putting together a massive petition for Congressional hearing purposes. Submit your name/address/e-mail at Cliff site: <www.carnicom.com/contrails.htm>, or e-mail <ohwarriorgoddess@earthlink.net>.

PROJECT CLOVERLEAF THE PLOT THICKENS

From THOMAS BUYEA, <ranger116@webtv.net>, 5/24/00: [quoting]

About a year and a half ago, one of the Chemtrail websites was doing research on who the all-white tankers with no ID numbers belonged to and they saw one that had a green shamrock on the tail (shamrock=cloverleaf?). They were able to research and find that the green shamrock was the logo of a company that leased large aircraft! Maybe that is where the government got the name for this operation—from the tail insignia that was on some of the tankers they leased? [End quoting]

NEW MEXICO REP. POSTS CHEMTRAIL LETTER

From the INTERNET, Thomas Buyea, <ranger116@webtv.net>, 5/16/00: [quoting]

A letter from Congressman Tom Udall of New Mexico was sent to a citizen of that state about CHEMTRAILS! The Congressman says that he has asked many government and military agencies about chemtrails with no information forthcoming and that “He is considering holding Oversight Hearings in Congress” on the subject of chemtrails!

It couldn’t hurt to write, e-mail (tom.udall@mail.house.gov), and call him to help push him into having the Oversight Hearings in Congress! [End quoting] ☺

Learn To Balance In The “Now”

Editor's note: The following writing started out as a private message to the receiver of many of the spiritual messages shared in this newspaper and the WISDOM OF THE RAYS volumes. However—clever Teachers that these Higher Guides are—the message took an ever-so-subtle turn within one of the early-on paragraphs and all of a sudden became a general writing that clearly was meant to be shared herein.

5/18/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace, for there are reasons for ALL happenings that, when fully understood, play a perfect part in the unfolding drama of what you perceive of as life.

Nothing is more important than the moment of “now”. What was is gone, and what will be is yet to be determined. Learn to use the “now” time for that which will be of service to the greatest number of people.

Let the guilts of yesterday and yesteryear to their respective time periods. This is to say, let the past be in the past, and let not the memories be constantly recreated within the perceived reality of the mind. Your perception of reality is what you “think” it to be, but the truth of the matter is often different than your current perception of same.

As the unfolding play continues to run its course, you shall be witness to many events that will challenge your viewpoint of what is really real. You will have need for a strong grounding point from which to establish a stable mental focus.

You currently use many small grounding points that you “fall” back upon when the perceived reality begins to cause overload and invoke the reactionary impulses to run away or give up. This is to say you already use this sort of stabilization method, and we encourage you to do so. Our caution to you is that things will, in all probability, seem to get worse before there is a “break” in the perceived “reality” of your current experience.

Many times past we have given you the equivalent of this very message, using many different ways to approach the same underlying subject. We will not force our point of view or our understanding upon another. Rather, we will offer the Guidance that we deem appropriate in the moment, and allow the recipient to take what they feel they can “digest” at the time, and leave that which is beyond their current willingness to accept. We judge NOT, for that is not our place, nor is it beneficial to anyone involved.

Learn to live IN THE PRESENT, and see each day as an opportunity to contribute to the Whole of Creation. There are no “perfect” choices when it comes to the third-dimensional physical plane, nor are there any completely imperfect choices, as each choice will ultimately lead to a greater understanding and growth along the infinite journey of the soul.

Nothing is more important than the moment of “now”. What was is gone, and what will be is yet to be determined. Learn to use the “now” time for that which will be of service to the greatest number of people.

Let the guilts of yesterday and yesteryear to their respective time periods. This is to say, let the past be in the past, and let not the memories be constantly recreated within the perceived reality of the mind. Your perception of reality is what you “think” it to be, but the truth of the matter is often different than your current perception of same.

In short, you cannot fail at the game of life. The game is one of skill. Each of you are like an apprentice working on mastering the various talents and abilities that will enable you to take full, responsible control over the physical density.

In other words, as you progress along through the challenges set in front of you, you will gain great insight and knowledge that will enable you to responsibly and knowingly direct your energy in a deliberate, focused, and balanced manner, so as to CREATE (manifest) what it is that your HEART (not the head) truly wants. When the heart and the head (the emotional and the analytical) are truly in agreement, there is a resulting focus of energy that is, in essence, the Prime Mover from which all creations precipitate.

In your current environment there is a deliberate barrage from all directions that is meant to distract you from finding what it is your heart truly desires. These distractions come in all shapes and sizes, and most often it is the day-to-day SMALL things that tend to be the most difficult ones to recognize—and thus to deal with and overcome.

The feeling of “no goal to focus on” is a byproduct of the misalignment of the heart and the head. You will tend to go in circles until a greater balance is achieved. The more you approach this balance, the greater the inner clarity will be, and the more deliberate will be your ability to focus energy and manifest your desires.

Any deliberate focus will result in energy flow, and the manifestation process will occur. The difference is that, when the heart and the head are in alignment, the deliberate focusing is EFFORTLESS. This is because there will be no inner contradictions or reactionary impulses of FEAR (perhaps the greatest distraction of all) to cause a “cancellation of net manifestation energy”. The cancellation effect is like pushing on the gas pedal and the brake at the same time in your automobiles—a lot of energy is being expended to go nowhere.

If money is your greatest desire (we choose this example quite deliberately), and you care not how you achieve it, then you will, in all likelihood, have plenty of it. But, at what PRICE is it if you achieve same without balance? Do you destroy others so that you may have your physical perceptions of value? Are you willing to pay the EMOTIONAL (guilt) price for achieving something without balance?

Many who follow their heart, while integrating the analytical, find something fulfilling to focus upon, and the outcome is a tremendous energy flow that results in a very balanced and abundant and fulfilling life. Rarely do truly happy and balanced people ever worry about such matters as the accumulation of material items—and yet they will often have all that they could ever want.

Your current general society is programmed to place “the cart before the horse” when it comes to understanding the creative process. This is BY DESIGN so as to keep you OFF BALANCE and in a near panicked state of confusion when it comes to truly understanding the actual nature of your being.

Find your heart’s desire and learn to appreciate its simple nature. Find within that which brings the greatest satisfaction, and learn to recognize the value in following the heart’s impulses. Many a great person has had to walk through a torturous “hell” as they struggle with balancing the two energy pathways between the heart and the head.

These are the challenges of the third-dimensional schoolroom. You must learn to master these things for self. There is no one who can or would do this for you, for you are created in uniqueness and no other would walk YOUR path exactly (as uniquely) as do you.

Your unique path is why you have chosen to come forth; it is what brings you to the present moment of “now” in which you find yourself. All prior choices lead to the ever evolving present situation in which you find yourself. Whether it be laying on the beach on a lazy Sunday afternoon, or trying to just “get through the day” in a house full of demanding children, the choices YOU make dictate your current situation. Learn to achieve balance and

It has been said many times: “Life is a journey, not a destination.” There is no end to the journey! It is a forever unfolding moment of “now”.

The role you currently play is transient. You “only” take with you the knowledge gained from the experience. All else is part of the third-dimensional illusion created within the “concrete” dreamworld of the play itself—which we refer to as this planetary “schoolroom”.

This is to say that the SOUL matters of the geophysical orbs are as much a concern for me as are the physical shiftings of crustal plates. You can help your planetary orb regain her balance by balancing self.

I am a member of the Host of Creator God of Light—The One Light. I have been sent to answer the calls of those who petition for Guidance. My challenges are many and the rewards for my service benefit the entirety of The Creation.

It is an honor and a duty to serve in the manner in which I “now” find myself serving. In Light and Love—blessings to you all.

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

Exposing A Sick And Demented Fraud: The Truth About “Holy” Sathya Sai Baba

Editor's note: What you are about to read below will come as a great shock to many who have given great respect and honor and homage (and maybe even some money?) to Sathya Sai Baba. However, as we have said many times in these pages, we are in the time of the Great Awakening. This is a time when ALL lies and deceptions shall be exposed.

Some of you will say: “Well, how could these gullible dupes be so stupid?” The answer is as old as the science of mind control itself. And that weakness is further exploited in this situation through the deep yearnings we all have for a personal relationship with God.

The spiritual messages from Master Teachers we frequently share in this newspaper always and without exception counsel that God is WITHIN each of us and therein is where the communication must take place—not by chasing after some self-proclaimed magic-performing guru in very physical form.

You have all seen this mistake repeated over and over again, especially in our modern era where a “cult” can be manufactured (by such as the CIA) almost overnight.

The “carrots” of attraction remain the same mind-control tricks (sometimes mixed with outstanding theatrical dazzle) which have always worked on unsuspecting mankind, especially through what we call “religions”.

We thank those brave and decent people who have come forward to tell the truth, and we also thank David Icke Magazine (on the Internet) for acting as an information source for the collection and dissemination of this most important material. More information can be found at the www.davidicke.com website. And as David's magazine cautions: “The articles being presented and published are not necessarily the views and research of David Icke. David Icke, and/or the editors and publishers, may or may not agree with the assumptions, the articles, or the conclusions of the authors. Each article is presented to give everyone every possible source to TRUTH available. Discerning TRUTH is the responsibility of each reader.”

We here at The SPECTRUM couldn't agree more and simply work to do our part toward seeing that information such as the following gets spread far and wide.

SAI BABA'S INFLUENCE

His influence seems to be pervasive among some of the world's elite—presidents from Costa Rica and other countries.

Some members of the Spanish royal family, Antonio Craxi of Italy, even Prince Charles wanted an audience, according to Sri Indulal Shah, the head of the Sai Organization. The last governor-general of Canada, Romeo Le Blanc, sent public birthday wishes; so did a mayor from the Ottawa area. Fergie, the Duchess of Windsor, visited Sai Baba. John Lennon did visit, but stormed off in disgust for some reason. Ravi Shankar is a devotee. Presidents and prime ministers of India visit him almost regularly. The king of Nepal visited him, along with some European bishop. Michael Jackson is also reputed to be a follower, as reported in the Link newspaper in Vancouver. Hillary and Bill Clinton's advance party went to Puttaparthi, but no visit occurred. Sai devotees even claim Al Gore as sympathetic. Isaac Tigrett, the founder of the Hard Rock Café and House of Blues, is a well known devotee and contributes millions of dollars.

So his influence is all the way throughout society and doesn't just include millions of ordinary people. It is reputed his devotees number as many as 100 million. However there are problems since people like Connie Larsson went public with exposure of Sai Baba's sexual antics; this was published in a Swedish magazine, Sokaren, and reported in the Swedish daily newspaper, Afton Bladet, in February 2000.

Sai Baba claims to be able to bi-locate and shape shift, and there is much reporting of this. Al Drucker claims Sai Baba shape-shifted into the shape of an S.S. Colonel, who was in the same railway carriage, and advised Al to go West and escape Germany, as there would be no Moses this time. Al escaped and ended up working for NASA and being a major devotee and writer for Sai Baba. He appeared to Larsson in Sri Lanka and prevented his suicide. He appeared as two big Black guys to rescue a Dr. Gadhia of the U.K. who was in East Africa and had a car crash in a lonely place.

There are reports that he has shape-shifted to animal shapes, such as dogs and snakes. He once appeared as a group of different people, in order to prevent a suicide in India. He seems to take advantage of the weak!

He bi-locates in his subtle body frequently, and I, along with my daughters, have experienced this on more than one occasion. He visits people in their dreams often, as well.

Many devotees' houses have ash and honey manifesting, and dripping off of pictures in their houses. I have seen this personally in Vancouver, in India at the temple at Sri Rangapatnam, and in other places around the world. Most of the so-called materializations he does at the Puttaparthi Ashram are just conjuring and, strangely, he admits he doesn't materialize all the time.

Many reports and even affidavits have been produced telling of his molestation of pubescent boys. He is reputed to be a hermaphrodite, both male and female genitalia.

He claims to be God continually and says he is Rama and Krishna come back again. He claims to be "the Father" who sent Jesus into incarnation. This indoctrination is extant right through his international organization. I myself was the secretary of the Vancouver Center, and have been a member of different Centers around the world, particularly in Australia. I was a devotee for fifteen years, before finding out the truth.

I don't know whether he has taken reptilian form, but if you read the great Indian spiritual epic, The Ramayana, it is full of the shape-shifters who occupied the planet before Adamic man, and could take any form. In fact, there was no human template when these beings first descended. Edgar Cayce comments about them in his readings. These astral beings haven't gone anywhere; they are still around.

The question that I have, with regard to these famous people and leaders, is: why do they flock to this "being"? Who is he and why is he here? Has it something to do with capturing souls for this plane and the astral? Is this the phony spiritual movement that is to be used to try and completely dominate the planet?

Sai Baba has obviously, up until now, been protected by some kind of pedophile network, for he doesn't molest for so many years in a vacuum. Are these famous leaders also pedophiles? I believe that even the British police regard this organization as being involved with pedophilia, and a judge is looking at their tax status.

A judge in Hyderabad has opened the doors for a suit, possibly criminal charges against the Sai hospital in Puttaparthi for selling organs. A man donated his kidney to his father, but the father didn't get it and died. The man went back demanding compensation and was run off by the local police. It goes on and on, cover-up after cover-up.

Deccan Chronicle, 5/11/99:

"Hyderabad, Nov. 4: Justice G. Raghu Ram of the Andhra Pradesh High Court on Thursday admitted a writ petition seeking initiation of criminal prosecution against the doctors of the Sri Sathya Sai Institute of Higher Medical Sciences, Puttaparthi, in Anantapur district, alleging malpractices regarding the transplantation of kidney.

"The writ petition has been filed by Balaji Triambak Rao Karavande, who has alleged that the doctors of the institute removed a kidney from his body and did not transplant the same to his father.

"After he offered to donate one of his kidneys to save his father's life, the doctors at the institute operated on him on April 25, 1994 and told him that the same would be transplanted to his father.

"B.T. Karavande said that his father died in December, 1995 and, to his shock, the doctors claimed that his father's body did not show signs of a new transplanted kidney. He informed the court that after this revelation, he lodged a complaint with the Latur [Maharashtra] police, who exhumed the body, conducted a post-mortem, and confirmed that no kidney transplant has taken place.

"He alleged that the police at Puttaparthi did not register the complaint, and that he was thrown out of the hospital when he confronted the doctors with the relevant documents. He sought compensation of Rs 20 lakh and direction to the police to register a case and punish the guilty who played fraud upon him."

This story is also reported in The Hindu,

Hyderabad, 5/11/99.

Apart from the obvious fraud and theft, if the allegations are proven, the persons and doctors responsible at the Sri Sathya Sai Institute of Higher Medical Sciences have also, at least, committed manslaughter and possibly murder (if a deliberate intent can be established).

I doubt this will go that far considering the influence Sai Baba has on the governments in India. There will probably be a scapegoat.

SAI BABA SCANDAL! THE FINDINGS

by Faye Bailey

INTRODUCTION

The findings are something that both David [Bailey] and I [Faye Bailey] never thought or knew existed, and although neither of us could have ever even imagined that one day we would be compiling them, the unthinkable has happened.

The following is the spelling out of a situation that exists with Sai Baba. Sadly, it is extremely negative, and will possibly shock and distress you greatly as it did us, when we found ourselves in the incredible position of being presented with information we could not ignore.

Once David accepted that something was very, very wrong, he began his own research. He has been very thorough, meanwhile hoping and praying every moment that the things he was uncovering were untrue. These findings are the last thing we both would ever have wanted.

However, they exist. We ask only that you read them all before forming any judgment.

Apart from our separate personal experiences, there are also included experiences of others, chosen from many such, which are an integral part of unveiling this huge, illusory global scam—the biggest hoax in the God business.

A veritable mountain of information is now available, far more than I can possibly place before you. My task is to report the findings I do offer accurately, while presenting a cross-section of untenable behavior, lies uncovered, and magic exposed. David has spent long hours and many months talking to people all over the world, whilst unraveling this tangled skein of years of deceit accumulated around the said "divinity incarnate", but he is not alone in this. Courageous people on every continent are banding together to expose the monumental spiritual fraud which has been perpetrated for the personal gain of a select group, headed by Sai Baba.

Disillusioned people of every rank and file, who have also found what lies behind the facade—including ex-students of the Sai colleges, judges, doctors, government ministers in Europe, the Americas, Australia and beyond—are in agreement that it is now time to share their findings. There are hundreds of personal accounts which tear the veil from the “avatar”. I give only a few. Due to verbosity from some of the contributors, I have edited the information, but not altered its context. Contributors have given permission to be quoted and identified. The accounts that follow are merely a fraction of those available, all describing a situation that has been functional for many years. This is an opportunity to become aware of it, thus moving into a position enabling informed choice, rather than one coming from ignorance.

I begin with my personal revelations. Those who read David’s and my books (written before our discoveries and since removed from sale by us), know our history. How devoted we were to Sai Baba, to the point of each marrying the other, even though we were strangers from opposite sides of the world. How we travelled the world speaking of the wonder of him.

So, what happened to change everything?

When the dark side of Sai Baba began to be revealed to David, at first I refused to listen, unable to bear hearing anything negative about my beloved “avatar of the age”. This unhappy state of affairs continued for six months until, on our next visit to India, I had my own validation of David’s findings.

Can you imagine how it felt as I began to see beyond the veil? For years I had enjoyed the privilege of being called to the interview room, and had spent every moment there, focused only on Swami’s face—until David suggested that I shift my attention to his hands.

Watching rings, watches, and other trinkets being palmed, or pulled out from the side of chair cushions, and seeing vibhuti tablets held between fingers before being crushed and “manifest”, was a horrifying revelation, a personal catastrophe for me. I had given up my life, my marriage, husband, children, home, career, and homeland because of my love for Sai Baba—only to find trickery at the epicenter of all I held dear.

During subsequent interviews, increasingly aghast as I watched the same things happen again and again, I kept silently pleading: “Why? Why do it?” This illusionist activity totally destroyed my trust in one whom I expected to practice the truth he preached. But magician’s tricks were the very least of it. As time passed, and people began sharing their own experiences and findings with us, my world of divine guru-centered spirituality came crashing down.

While still at the ashram, the worst thing for me—as a mother of sons—occurred when a young man, a college student, came to our room to plead with David: “Please, sir, do something to stop him sexually abusing us!”

These sons of devotees, unable to bear their untenable position of being unwilling participants in a pedophile situation any longer, yet unable to share this with their parents because they would be disbelieved, placed their trust in David, a trust which had built over his five years as a visiting professor of music to the Sai college.

Later that night the same young man returned to our room in great distress, to implore David not to reveal his name, saying that he feared expulsion from the college, and even worse than that, for his personal safety, if it were to be found out that he had spoken of these things. David was able to reassure him that he didn’t know his name, therefore could not, and would not, ever identify him. But this interaction and shocking revelation was merely the tip of an iceberg of sickening information—an iceberg that was to batter, then sink our years of blind devotion.

Becoming increasingly cognizant of Sai Baba’s sexual activity involving violation of basic human rights with the children (as young as seven years old) under his care, and the growing list of one-deceit-after-another in activities stemming from him, brought awareness of the depth of our own emotional investment.

Awareness also of the devastation these discoveries wrought in us. We were placed in an untenable situation, unable to risk creating similar chaos in other spiritual seekers of like investment. The only course was to say little and move away, which caused a furor of angry and untrue rumours about us to proliferate.

Last year, David felt it appropriate to share his findings when personally questioned, but the dilemma of whether to speak or not tested me sorely. I felt keenly the responsibility of holding this negative knowledge, recognizing that silence made me part of the conspiracy, but kept praying that, given time, somehow all of it would be satisfactorily explained away.

It was not to be.

Over the past eighteen months we have become privy to so many serious and horrific allegations, and so much damning information sent from disillusioned ex-devotees from all over the world (in particular, from ex-students of Sai Baba’s male colleges) which supported our own findings, that it is now impossible to remain silent.

As editor of a magazine that has as its mandate the seeking of truth, I have no option but to fulfill my responsibility to that mandate. My decision to do so follows much personal anguish and earnest prayer, and I have been given the necessary support and courage by my Inner Guidance and outer, true friends.

It is not the doctrine of Sai Baba that is being scrutinized, but his practices within it; not the message, but the messenger. His message is, for the most part, one of universal verities, even though his teachings have been found to have many contradictions, misquotes, and proven anomalies.

The allegations I have gathered to record here are in regard to the global scam he perpetrates, including his chicanery, illusion, fraud, embezzlement, implication with murders, ongoing pedophile activities, and the almost impenetrable fortress of lies creating his “divinity”. There is also the weight of detailed descriptive testimony regarding his participation in sexual activity with willing and unwilling partners (both students and visiting foreigners), discounting the widely distributed justification of “kundalini raising”. The super speciality hospital and water project have been shown to be paper tigers, with apparent embezzlement of money, organ theft, and unfulfilled hydration promises.

There are known investigations at governmental levels worldwide. The Sai school has been closed in Sweden. A veritable volcano is about to erupt, due to the disquiet of many, many people. The Internet has had a major role in this. The mass of experience and evidence being presented there is hard, thrusting, knife-edged, and backed by courageous ex-devotees prepared to put their names to such statements for the good of all.

David has personally contacted many of the contributors, and listened as they verbally verified and further described their own experiences. Sadly, there is no way this letter can be gently worded.

The truth that THIS SITUATION EXISTS will stand. It will stand whether it is believed or not.

I fully appreciate the grief and awful sense of loss that reading these revelations may bring to you. David and I have experienced the same and we know how terrible it can be. I send you my love and empathy.

— Faye Bailey, Editor of The Quarterly

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES

by David Bailey

I have written this because so many rumors (often completely untrue) have spread about Faye and myself, as to why we moved away from Sai Baba. I know that what you are going to read here may cause you deep distress. The situation I am about to reveal is certainly not something we could ever have imagined possible.

I only ask you to read it all, while accepting that these are my personal experiences. I share with you my truth. No more, no less.

There have been many sleepless nights as I grappled with the task of what to do and how to cope with this indisputable factual information, in the light of my responsibility to the many, many people who read my books and heard me speak.

The following findings are a result of my heart-aching research, over a period of three years.

VIBHUTI DURING DARSHAN

Sai Baba carries vibhuti in tablet form between the third and fourth fingers of his right hand, with spare tablets in the hand holding up his robe. He crushes a tablet when required, and transfers tablets during the taking of letters. I have watched this happen innumerable times. Once on the mandir porch he dropped a tablet in front of me, and told a member of the Trust to “eat it quickly”. Tablet-palming can be clearly seen on many videos, if slowed down to frame-by-frame viewing, including in our wedding day interview video, used at the beginning of God Lives In India. This video has been removed from sale by the Trust.

Australian television, in its program 60 MINUTES (their equivalent of PANORAMA) showed how these “B-grade” conjuring tricks are done.

Vibhuti tablets explains why vibhuti distribution runs out in the interview room before everyone has had some.

All powdered vibhuti is produced by roasting cow dung with sandalwood, and manufactured vibhuti, bought elsewhere, is then double sieved by ladies of the ashram seva dal, before being packaged for interview-room distribution.

Use of vibhuti on open wounds consistently causes infection in them, a fact commented by Faye to me when she was called to deal with people having these infections in the ashram.

JEWELRY

All are worthless trinkets. Some are bought in Puttaparthi village, but mainly they come from Bangalore and Hyderabad. I made it my business to meet one of the jewelers concerned and have this information verified.

I was told by Sai Baba, and also by members of his inner circle, that my “materialized” ring with its huge stone was a sixty-four-faceted diamond of great commercial value. After leaving the ashram in December 1998, I damaged one of the clasps on the ring and took it to a jeweler in southern India, many hundreds of kilometers away. This stranger immediately recognized it as a “Sai Baba” ring. He told me that the metal it was made of was not gold, also that the stone was a valueless zircon, and under it there was a piece of silver paper to make the zircon glitter, which was why the back of the ring was solid. He informed me that these hard-backed rings are especially made for Sai Baba. As he took the stone out to repair the damaged clasp, sure enough, a piece of silver paper fell out, and the stone thus revealed was seen to be a zircon.

The then Sai organization co-ordinator of Ireland was with Faye and me at the time, and another lady, who had a Baba ring in which a face (attributed to Baba because of the black head of hair around a small “face”) could be seen. The jeweler showed us how these are made. A piece of colored glass has a small piece of silver paper behind it so that at certain angles it reflects the color of one’s own face. This is surrounded by a circular ring of black enamel to give the impression of hair. He lifted the stone out of the ring and proved this also was so. The Irish co-ordinator took photos of the rings. On his return to Ireland, he resigned and left the organization.

When Sai Baba decides to give someone a robe in the interview room, he does so as a cover to get further trinkets from his store in the back room. More than a few times Faye and I have heard the sound of a drawer being opened and the tinkle of metallic things being moved. He returns with them hidden under the robe (and we have watched him transferring trinkets from under the robe on his lap, to his right hand—it’s just so obvious when you look) before waving his hand while faking a materialization. His velvet chair contains objects hidden in the sides. We have seen them there and then observed his sleight of hand as he brings them out of hiding.

But, well before I was aware of these things, I began to have some doubts about the authenticity of Sai Baba’s claims of divine manifestation.

During my second interview, one of the first things I noticed which bothered me was that someone asked him to repair a broken chain on a japamala, and another had lost a stone from a ring. He did nothing at the time, but said: “No, no, I will change for new one tomorrow.” I found this very perplexing. Why, if he could create anything at will, which is what I had been told, did he not blow on these things and repair them then?

I now know why: He cannot.

HEALING

I have not seen him do a genuine healing on anybody in all my time of being close to him, and having had innumerable interviews. I have seen him tell people to stand up, and get out of wheel chairs, but the effect is not lasting. He generally ignores the sick and frail ones, giving out as the reason, their karma.

The Australian “pink twins” continue to use wheel chairs, in spite of Sai Baba’s claims of healing them and their claims of being healed.

A sad case for me is Maynard Ferguson, with over three years of deterioration in his hearing. During several interviews with him and his wife, he, his wife and myself asked—pleaded—with Swami, to heal him. Every time, he promised to do so, but now Maynard is very deaf and has to rely on two powerful hearing aids to help him. As a fellow musician, I know what this must mean to him in his heart.

Once Faye and I had an interview in the company of an elderly, rather frail Indian gentleman who used to sit on the veranda near me. He asked Sai Baba for help for his failing health. Swami, behind his back shrugged his shoulders at us, saying in what we both thought was rather an unfeeling aside: “And what can I do? Cancer. Too far gone, too far gone.” Faye has had her own experience of him giving health advice she trustingly followed, which nearly caused permanent damage to her, before she at last resorted to western medical treatment for her complaint.

The German co-ordinator, whom I visited in the super speciality hospital after he’d had a stroke, was eventually taken back to the veranda, but Swami did not heal him. The elderly man has gone back to Germany, and some two years later is little improved.

I believe any healing claimed by Sai Baba is, in fact, a personal inner healing activated by the person himself or herself.

MISCELLANEOUS MUSINGS

The mandir ceiling is now covered in gold leaf. I was shown a piece of this gold leaf which had fallen from the ceiling.

I ask myself: “Why, in a country of such appalling poverty, does he allow this escalating show of opulence to occur?” The mandir, at my last count, had one hundred and sixty-seven chandeliers instead of the original thirty-six. What on Earth for? Sai Baba now has several luxury cars supposedly “gifted” by rich devotees. Why is more than one necessary? This is reminiscent of other cult leaders, such as Rajneesh.

I know Sai Baba doesn’t live only on rice and chappattis as he claims. His evening meal consists of six to eight different dishes prepared for him every night, and Faye and I have shared the “leftovers” several times, having gone with someone to collect the remains of the meal from his rooms. He claimed to Faye that he “drinks no tea, no coffee, only hot water” yet has drunk coffee with me.

During the preparation of the 1997 Christmas Day students’ program, I was in interview with the students, and we were discussing with Swami the music and story of Jesus’ birth, which the boys were going to present. When “We Three Kings From Orient Are” was mentioned, Sai Baba directed that this song not be sung, saying: “No, no, no! There were no kings. They did not exist.” Yet, in his January 1996 discourse, he said: “When Christ was born, three kings came to see the infant.”

It is claimed by a few people that different lights can be seen around Sai Baba. Everybody has an aura, which one can learn to see. There is a book by Mark Smith, for example, called Auras—See Them In 60 Seconds. The existence of this light does not confirm divinity. There's only been a handful of people around the world who claim to have seen Sai Baba's aura. Anyone who has made this claim to me has been an ardent devotee.

I have been shown photographs with unrecognizable light shapes on them, and been told by the presenter that these represent Sai Baba, Krishna, Gopis and others. What would be the point of divinity appearing in this indistinguishable way? And what proof can it be of the said divinity? According to Kodak laboratories, light emissions on photographs are caused by intermittent camera malfunction and/or film idiosyncrasy, and the most common emission colors are orange and white.

THE SUPER SPECIALITY HOSPITAL

I know that one wing has never been opened, supposedly through lack of funds.

Yet, we are told that just one of the many donations given for the building was US $49,000,000.00 (forty-nine million US dollars!). This converts to approximately ST £30,000,000.00 (thirty million pounds sterling!). Names of many other large benefactors are listed in the hospital reception area, making the funds donated for this complex absolutely mind boggling.

In relative terms, money can buy five times in India what it can here. I question what happens to these huge amounts of donated monies.

A doctor I sat near on the mandir porch, who works in this hospital, told me never to let anyone I cared about go there, as the sanitation is disgusting and the lack of aseptic technique is appalling. This allegation has been repeated numerous times in correspondence we have received, by people who have seen through the hospital.

The Renal Department is now also closed.

There is bad publicity regarding allegations of theft of a kidney and subsequent current legal action being taken in India.

In 1997 Australian national television 60 MINUTES critically investigated the super speciality hospital, and Sai Baba's claims of divinity.

THE WATER PROJECT

It has been claimed that all seven hundred and fifty villages in the Sai Baba Water Project are now receiving water. This I believed until I was shown a Telegu newspaper with a front page feature article showing photos of villages with no water, broken pipes, no pipes, pipes and no tanks, and many with nothing at all. The headlines, translated, read: "SAI BABA, WHERE'S OUR WATER? YOU'VE CHEATED US AGAIN!"

I went to some of these villages within the project radius and found for myself that the report was correct. My questioning of local businessmen in the area revealed some interesting information. General opinion concurred that the project had been set up because the ashram had many problems with its own insufficient well supply, one of which was constantly recurring gastric disturbances, particularly by foreign devotees.

Request for permission to lay a water pipeline to the ashram fell on the government's deaf ears, the response being that unless villages along the proposed line could also be supplied, permission would be withheld. Hence the huge global fund-raising, which also perplexed me—having been indoctrinated with the "no fund-raising" policies given out by Sai Baba.

Within twelve months, an effective pipeline to the ashram and a selection of villages was established, and then the work stopped. At my consternation at being told of this scandalous situation, the village elders simply shrugged their shoulders, saying: "What can we do?"

FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

As Faye and I travelled around the world, speaking to Sai Baba groups, after almost every meeting people would come to us asking for help because of the financial trickery they had experienced at the ashram. In particular about giving many thousands of pounds, dollars, marks, or whatever for a unit there, and never getting one, let alone being given a receipt for the money. Then, when eventually disheartened, they attempted to retrieve their money, they were told there were no records of the transaction. We heard this story many times.

It is a common practice at retreats and meetings for new devotees to be told that Sai Baba does not need donations.

This happened at Downe House public school (near Newbury), where a series of weekend retreats were held during school holidays. However, when the new devotees had been to more than one weekend, they were taken aside individually and given a bank account number at the Bank of India in Andhra Pradesh, to which donations can be sent.

On some occasions, with particularly gullible targets, a printed paragraph was given—to be inserted into a will for donations to be made. Such people were also told that sending money to the Sathya Sai Medical Trust in India was inheritance tax effective, as the Indian Trust is a registered charity in the United Kingdom. This, of course, is untrue. Such donations do not attract inheritance tax relief. The above allegation of fraud is supported by a statement from a lawyer and others who were personally involved.

Not surprisingly, Downe House has since banned any further Sai organization meetings on its premises.

PERSONAL PROBLEMS

We spoke to people who had written dozens of letters over serious personal situations and had no response, and no change in the situation. Desperate and despondent, these people turned to us as their last hope, asking us to intercede for them with Sai Baba, whom they believed was omnipotent (but not, seemingly, omniscient).

SEXUAL PROBLEMS

Concerned mothers, and young men of various ages, would ask to speak to me in confidence about intimate incidents they had with Swami. They told me about alleged sexual activity, each story replicating the previous one. Swami would take these young men and boys into the private interview room, alone with him, then insist that they take their trousers down, and he would massage them, often masturbating them, and/or insisting on oral sex, and sometimes collecting their semen in his handkerchief.

This left me speechless! I knew of the book written by Tal Brook in the '70s called Lord Of The Air where he detailed the sexual harassment he had undergone with Sai Baba, but this book had always been dismissed by long established devotees as a collection of mischief-making lies told by an angry young man. And yet Faye's own son had been kissed repeatedly on his cheeks and the corners of his mouth when alone in the inner room with Sai Baba, and also sexually touched. And when it was obvious to Sai Baba that this behavior was unwelcome, he began berating the young man in subsequent interviews with Faye, calling him "Mad dog! Hard hearted!" and so on. At the time this seemed incongruous; it was only after we began traveling the world that the inconceivable and incomprehensible began to make itself clear.

When I asked various co-ordinators about these many disturbing incidents reported to me in our travels, I was told that Swami was "raising kundalini". I questioned this in my mind. If he was capable of doing anything, why did he have to physically touch the boys, especially when they were unwilling? And what about when he had them actively engage in sex with him? It seems that an ongoing, serious, and untenable infringement of basic human rights is being scurrilously perpetrated in the name of "divinity".

On my last visit to Puttaparthi, a male student came and asked me for help, on behalf of some of his fellow students, because they were desperately in need of someone to stop Swami sexually abusing them. I was told how Sai Baba had for years been demanding that these particular boys have oral sex and group sex for his pleasure. Their details matched what I had already been told so many times around the world. I asked him if this was an acceptable practice in India, and his look of horror, as he denied it, spoke volumes.

Then he asked me a question I couldn't answer: "Sir, why do you think ex-students tried to kill him in '93?" (!!!) I turned to several longtime devotees on the veranda for explanation of these nefarious activities, and worried them with questions and suppositions until, in the end, they realised that I had found the truth, and then admitted that these things do happen—and then agreed with each other that it was for his pleasure and nothing to do with kundalini raising.

Different national co-ordinators I spoke to, both in India and after we returned home, continued for a time to deny that it happens. But when it became obvious that I was not going to leave this issue alone, a couple of them telephoned me to say that, yes, I was correct, and they had known of this for years.

"But he is god, and god can do anything he likes." (!!!) Early in 1999 a young Swedish man returned from a visit to the ashram and made a full statement to his co-ordinating committee about his sexual experiences with Swami during six interviews. Within hours of this revelation, one of the top officials of Sweden's Sai organization was on our doorstep, asking why we had left Sai Baba. He and his wife, both really lovely people, were absolutely devastated to hear the young man's story confirmed. After saying brokenly "I cannot be part of this" he went outside and sat on the steps in our front garden and sobbed his heart out. He had been a devotee for more than twenty years, and his wife had written two books on Sai Baba and another was already at the point of being printed.

He went home to resign his position from something he had given years of his life and his love to, and she cancelled her book and withdrew the others from the market. Within days there was public confirmation—that these things I had spoken about through the year to a small number of serious seekers of truth—were indeed happening to others as well.

Soon after, the Sai school in Sweden closed.

Due to this courageous young man's statement, the unmentionable began being mentioned, then mentioned increasingly loudly, by increasing numbers of young men. The Swedish publicity began a flurry of exposures.

Swedish film star Conny Larsson revealed his own experiences, which are included in this fact file. Our phone ran hot with young men from all over Europe sharing their pain.

One teenager rang from France and confided that he had wanted to commit suicide ever since his own experience of sexual harassment, as he couldn't live with the thought that he must be gay. He said he was very relieved to hear that there were other victims.

The Education in Human Values system was developed by Dr. Gokak, at one time a member of Sai Baba's professorial board. Sai Baba has not written any part of this system. Dr. Gokak left Sai Baba some years ago.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

I was led to believe that the schools and colleges in Puttaparthi and Whitefield had been set up to give free education to local children. This is not the case. Last year the fees at the lower grade schools were 20,000 rupees per child for one year, plus books, plus uniform, plus accommodation if required.

The village school is government run, as are all village schools throughout India, and is free—parents pay only for books and uniform.

Assuming that the college boys I taught were local lads, I was amazed at their learning capacity, until I discovered that these boys were brought in from all over India and had to pass very strict entrance exams, needing 85-90% pass marks. As one of the tutors said to me: "Sai Baba takes only the best. They'd have to try, to fail."

One of my concerns with these lads was that they had no career officer to guide them as to where they may find a job, and they would return after leaving college and ask me for advice about how to get employment. This occurred regularly over the five years I interacted with them.

THE FINDINGS, PART 2

by David & Faye Bailey

Peggy Mason, a professional journalist who wrote for spiritual magazines, went to see Sai Baba with her husband, Ron Laing, and had a number of interviews during their short stay. Both she and Ron were enchanted with Swami (as indeed I was at first), and this one visit was the basis for their subsequent writings.

In December 1997 on our way to Gatwick airport to leave for India, we collected a letter written to Swami by Peggy. I gave the letter to him during the next afternoon darshan. The following morning I received a fax to say that Peggy had died.

A few days later I had an interview in the company of the editor of the Sanathana Sarathi, and he told Swami that Faye was now editor of Peggy Mason's magazine.

SB: Yes, yes. It's in very good hands, now make it go! How is Peggy Mason?

Me: She has merged with you.

SB: Yes. She lives near you in England?

Me: She lived eighty miles from me, but she died a few days ago Swami. She is with you!

SB: Yes, yes, her husband was a good man. When you go home, give my regards to her.

Me: She is dead, Swami. Dead! She has merged with you!

SB: Give her my love when you get back to England.

Me: I cannot, Swami, because she is DEAD!

SB: Oh?? Oh...

In another interview, a few days later, this time with Faye, Swami seemed very confused and spoke randomly without making coherent sense for a minute or so, and ended by telling all in the room that Peggy Mason had played the trumpet very well during the Christmas celebrations just completed in the ashram. He was not making a joke and we were both nonplussed and very disturbed, and everyone else there also looked puzzled and somewhat concerned about these ramblings, as they had all heard Maynard Ferguson play trumpet on Christmas day.

On two occasions he called us into the private interview room and questioned me intently about someone in the outer room. Then after we had both returned to the outer room, he repeated everything I had just told him—no more, no less, while implying he was getting the information by "tuning in".

This possibly explains why he thought I was American in the first instance, even referring to me in his discourse as American. Perhaps someone had given him incorrect data?

My greatest difficulty at this time was finding someone other than Faye to talk to about all these disturbing findings. Everyone I knew from the West had much less interactive experience with Swami than I had. During my six years of being devoted to him I had over one hundred close encounters in the way of interviews and work sessions, and been very involved with him during my times of teaching the students in the male college.

For most devotees, a visit to the ashram means sitting in the darshan lines looking on, wishing and hoping for interaction, while listening to the stories others tell. This is very different to being "in there"—seeing how things work behind the scenes. I had to find someone who had the same level of experience as I had.

I began to look for Terry Gallagher, an Australian whom I heard had been close to Swami before my time. Terry had been Central Coordinator for the Sai organization in Australia for three years, and had been given very preferential treatment from Sai Baba for a number of years. I traced him to Kiama in New South Wales, Australia.

I knew he had left the ashram vowing never to return, and I wanted to know why? I soon found out. Terry had discovered the unmentionable inner workings of Sai Baba as I had now done. Exactly the same—but more. Terry left, never to return after the assassination attempt by ex-students in 1993. I wanted to know what Terry knew. I soon did.

Is this why there are so few really “longstanding” western followers around? Do those who get close, get too close and discover that the mighty “Wizard of Oz” is just a little magician? In this case, a little magician who is also a pedophile? Do they then discern that “God wouldn’t do that” and leave? Premanand, another with a very close connection to Sai Baba some years before Terry’s time, had also discovered the truth behind the facade and left. Premanand now shares his findings on the Internet.

PHENOMENA

There are many instances of vibhuti, etc., appearing on pictures around the world. Very often in homes and temples where non-stop bhajans are sung, which may well have something to do with the appearance of this phenomena. Generally speaking, we in the West know so little about mind power and the power of vibration. However some of these appearances of vibhuti are fake, and can be created by chemical means.

Some would appear to be genuine, but my research in this area leads me to determine that the appearance of phenomena does not automatically mean it comes from Swami, or has any divine connection whatsoever. Whilst in India, Faye and I saw many examples of phenomena. Enough to know that the ability to do phenomena does not make one divine.

My suspicions, once aroused about Swami’s divinity, gave me no peace.

Things I blindly accepted because I had been told they were so, did not stand up in the light of close scrutiny. Even the men in power around him, although they act out a role of subservient adoration when in front of Sai Baba, play a different part away from him. On occasions I was with members of the inner circle, Mr. Rao for example, in the main office. Once, I had been sent by Swami for something and the reply he gave me ended with the words: “Swami doesn’t know what he is talking about.” (!) Yet they perpetrate the idea that he knows everything.

Over this questioning span of many months I have had my share of indoctrination procedures from those in high places. While at the ashram, my very first queries brought intense social interaction from an Indian inner-circle member who, unknown and uninvited, visited Faye and me in our unit after almost every darshan for a week, to tell us of the many wonders of Swami’s miraculous powers. Only later did we understand why he did this.

Once back home, when rumors were beginning to fly about our defection from the fold, I received several phone calls from longstanding devotees from the VIP lines, telling me that I had a problem. I had to decide if Sai Baba was God or not. If he was God, then he could do everything he wanted to anyone, sexually, fraudulently, drugs, trickery, etc. But, of course, if I did not accept him as God, then I had my own view of morals, and the laws of my land to follow. For me there was no choice to make.

I know there are instances worldwide of people going to Prashanthi, and coming back with a new lease on life, but so do people who visit the many other gurus in India, or Mother Meera, or Lourdes, and so on. My investigations into mind power find simple explanations for this.

If even only a handful of people sit quietly together to do yoga meditation, circle work, or just to meditate, they expect, and often get, a lovely atmosphere, and sometimes healing happens.

Imagine the energy that might be generated by hundreds of people sitting quietly focused for an hour or two in darshan. Among these are probably some natural or trained psychics, and natural or trained healers, as well as many people sitting still and focused for a lengthy period, perhaps for the first time in their lives. Different experiences are bound to occur. Nothing to do with Sai Baba.

I think the “love connection” people experience is simply one connecting with one’s Self.

When one gets involved with Sai Baba, a very subtle brainwashing commences. Sitting for hours in darshan is one of these. When one sees all around with hands in prayer position, one naturally follows suit. Once attached and involved, common sense and logic progressively disappear, until one reaches the point of attributing every small act of living to Sai Baba.

Where to now? No more gurus for me.

Once more, for me the true connection with God is inside me.

No more giving my power away.

To sit still quietly and talk to God within, I find gets real answers.

To accept who I am in this life, and to do my best with my gifts, knowing that I am part of the Great Picture, is enough.

CONCLUSION

If I take any other subject, I look at the pros and cons fearlessly.

For example, where I shop: Is the price good? Do they sell what I want? Or perhaps: Is this car what I really want? How many miles to the gallon? Insurance cost, deterioration, repair bills?

I choose from being presented the true facts.

The car salesman was not knowingly waiting there for me, to give me an experience I needed for my life. I gave myself the experience by deciding to go to that showroom.

I consider this attitude should also be applied to spiritual subjects.

I spent a lot of time believing what I was told by others—that this was a great test for me, and Swami was doing it to give me an experience.

From my conversations and observations with Swami, I know for myself that this is not the case. I gave myself the experience, by listening to very well meaning people when I first heard about Swami, who in their turn had not done any research into the truth, but just believed others.

There are fantastic stories going round about Sai Baba’s supposed powers, but in five years searching I have not found one to be genuine.

Always secondhand information. People repeat these stories in good faith and then say: “I know this was so.” But how can they know? They were not there.

The above is first-hand information.

Subject: DISILLUSION

Dear Faye and David:

When speaking to you recently I was so pleased to hear about your decision not to mention or publish anything further about Sai Baba in your Quarterly Spiritual Digest.

The information you have uncovered about Sai Baba, I have also found out from personal experience to be true.

What began as a wonderful spiritual journey ended with total disbelief and bitter disappointment when we found out the truth.

Perhaps I should start at the beginning with a brief account of that journey.

After reading a book called Man Of Miracles, I set off for India (and Puttaparthi), with my wife and three young daughters, in an organized group for Christmas 1983.

What we found when we arrived in India was something I had been searching for all my life. The most beautiful, peaceful atmosphere, with wonderful people searching for their own spiritual truth, living in a community whose whole objective was that of improving self-awareness and achieving self-realization, through the teachings of a living guru—Sai Baba.

Adjacent to the ashram and provided free of cost to the students was a primary school for boys and girls, and various colleges for boys, where spiritual teachings were incorporated into the normal academic disciplines.

We were all very impressed and motivated towards learning as much as possible about what Sai Baba had to teach us.

The celebration of Christmas came and went, after which our family was called for an interview with Sai Baba. As a result of this interview and what appeared at the time to be the most perfect environment for students and devotees to advance their spiritual lives, I made a substantial donation to the Central Trust to help them fund their educational programs.

Upon leaving the interview, I was told by Sai Baba that I should sit on the veranda of the Mandir in the future, with students from the colleges and other devotees.

As it turned out, this gave me the opportunity to meet people and observe events very closely that I otherwise may not have had the opportunity to do.

We all had mixed feelings when we had to leave the ashram and return to Australia—sad in having to leave and joy in what we had experienced.

We returned to the ashram again in 1985 for one month; then in 1986 we stayed for seven months, at which time our daughters attended Sai Baba's school.

It was during this time that I began to observe things that made me question what I had experienced on previous visits. Having a scientific background, I began to observe a set routine that Sai Baba followed each morning and evening during darshan, and in particular, how he materialized vibhuti (holy ash).

I will never forget the look of anguish on Sai Baba's face when he came onto the veranda of the Mandir early one morning and dropped two vibhuti pellets in front of me, as he attempted to accept a rose from a college student. There was no vibhuti materialization during darshan that morning!

In the months that followed, I observed how he transferred these vibhuti pellets from one hand to the other, using the letters he collects from devotees to disguise his movements. In the many interviews that followed, I also observed more than thirty instances of rings, "diamonds", japamalas, vibhuti containers, etc., all being produced by sleight of hand and deception.

At first I kept this information to myself. I reasoned that if this was what made people come to see Sai Baba, resulting in them becoming more spiritual, what harm could it do? Eventually I told my wife and children, who also saw through this "materialization" trickery.

It was the observations and information that followed on from these initial findings that concerned me most, especially those relating to students being sexually interfered with in grotesque ways by Sai Baba.

We returned to the ashram several times during the following years, making further observations and having these confirmed by college students and longterm devotees living at the ashram. During this time I was the central coordinator for three years for the Sathya Sai organization in Australia.

It wasn't until 1993, following the assassination attempt on Sai Baba, resulting in the murder of four college students and two assistants in the Mandir, that we made our last visit to India.

The purpose of this visit was to find the reason why former students of Sai Baba's college would want to kill him, particularly when they had been given a free education! The eye witness accounts were horrific! After bursting into the Mandir, four students found themselves trapped upstairs where Sai Baba was staying. Each was interrogated by police, then one at a time they were executed! The stench of death was everywhere.

I made further inquiries about Sai Baba having sexual relations with college boys and male students—some of these as young as seven years of age—and whether this was the reason for former students wanting to kill him. I was told, to my horror, that this was an acceptable Indian practice! I felt sick, and just wanted to take my family and leave the ashram and India as quickly as possible.

Before we did, we were all called for an interview with Sai Baba, and we told him what we had experienced and been told.

Sai Baba made no comment on our accusations and was only anxious to know who had told us these details, requesting us to tell him several times! Having had dozens of interviews over the years, this was the most stressful and uncomfortable interview our family had ever experienced.

Sai Baba was tense and agitated and his body language told us all, that what we had found out about him was the truth! We left the interview and returned to Australia.

The following years were very difficult spiritually. We concentrated on all the positive aspects we had experienced over the past ten years and found this comforting.

When we attempted to tell others about our experiences and the truth about Sai Baba, no one would believe us, except those who also had similar experiences, and mostly it is fear which prevents them from telling others! It has only been in the past twelve months that former students and devotees of Sai Baba have begun communicating with each other, confirming experiences to be true and supporting each other spiritually and emotionally when necessary.

I now know the truth about Sai Baba and sincerely pray that others, too, will follow both their logic and intuition to also find the truth.

Warm regards, Terry Gallagher

Subject: Dr. Bhatia (head of SSH blood bank); why did he leave?

Regarding the notice of expulsion of Dr. Bhatia in the Sanathana Sarathi magazine, please note: Three young students from Sai Baba's junior male college were called for interview. One of them, a seven-year-old boy student, came out of the private interview room crying. He continued to cry for two days, and was unable to eat or study.

That evening, Dr. Bhatia, on duty in the children's canteen, was asked to find the cause of the child's distress. He questioned and then examined the child, and found that he had been sexually penetrated via his anus. The child was taken to Bangalore and re-examined. A second medical opinion confirmed sexual abuse.

Dr. Bhatia had been involved in sexual activity with Sai Baba for six years, believing that he was serving divinity. He went to Sai Baba: Why do you do this to such a young child when you have all of us adults and the older students to play with? Sai Baba's reply: Don't bargain with God!

Soon after, five men went to Dr. Bhatia's home, threatening his life with knives. He made his escape by car, fleeing to Delhi.

Once there, Dr. Bhatia was unable to practice medicine because he had left all his personal papers behind in Puttaparthi. He wrote asking for them. They have not yet been released. However, the doctor now practices at a Delhi hospital.

A promissory agreement has been offered from Puttaparthi, that Dr. Bhatia's personal belongings will be released to him on the proviso that he remain mute about the happenings concerning the little boy student, and he does not make any legal claims against the Super Speciality Hospital, and he keeps his sexual relationship with Sai Baba a secret.

A rumor given out for his "dismissal" was that he was caught selling blood, another that he was having an affair within the ashram, and yet another claiming jealousy between departmental heads at the hospital.

I offer this for the sake of truth.

Subject: Sathya Sai Baba—The Good, The Bad And The Ugly.

Posted on: <soc.culture.tamil> by ex-student Meenakshi Srikanth in 1993 after some students tried to kill Sai Baba but failed.

Meenakshi writes: The following is a chronicle of my experiences in the Sri Sathya Sai Institute of Higher Learning (Whitefield Branch). You have my word about the truth of this article, which has no intention to pass judgment about the personality under consideration. Meenakshi warns that the information may shock.

THE GOOD: An excellent orator in Telegu; does not have a radically new philosophy; effectively preaches age-old values. Many followers attempt to practice the ideals, and there are numerous charity programs organized in his name.

THE BAD: How does he get his following? “Miracles”. A few days after I joined the college, during darshan time, Swami was casually talking about the power of meditation or some such thing when all of a sudden he waved his hands in the air and produced a pendant containing a beautiful picture of Lord Muruga. I was stunned. I had not seen anything like that before. I was not a devotee when I joined the college (my father asked me to), so this was something that really shook me. I went back to the hostel and waxed eloquent about the power of Swami to some of my seniors.

They nodded sagely and smiled cryptically. It was not long before some of them called me aside and said: “Don’t start believing all this stuff. It does not take much to become a devotee, but it takes a lot to come out of it.” Saying this, one of them waved his hand and produced vibhuti, and another produced a ring. Then they told me all.

The simplicity of this is going to baffle you, so be prepared for the gullibility of the common man.

Swami produces things out of “thin air” by turning his right palm to face the ground while rotating it (parallel to the ground) a few times. He then makes a sudden upward motion (as if he is plucking a low-lying fruit) and gives out whatever he has produced. The mechanism of doing this is simple. When he comes out of the mandir, his left hand will be holding a kerchief or letter or his flowing robe.

Don’t look at his smiling face or his overflowing hair. Look at his left hand: clutched in his hand with (mostly) the middle finger, ring finger, and the little finger is whatever he is going to give out that session.

These items include such as vibhuti (from pellets; those of you who have seen him give out vibhuti will recollect that he makes a powdering action with his fingers when he is actually delivering), rings or whatever. Just keep looking at his hand. There will be a time when a devotee will fall at his feet or when he will lean forward. At that time the stuff gets transferred to between his fingers in the right hand. This would be visible too if you are looking for it. Very soon thereafter, the “materialization” takes place.

Right, so you think this method is so stupid that even a goat would have found it out by now. Let me tell you something: just practice this a few times, and try it on your friends. You will be surprised by their surprise. I can do this easily now and have fooled many of my friends. Only I don’t call myself God and have VIPs fall at my feet.

I have seen these things happen hundreds of times. I have received vibhuti, laddu, and such myself. In our hostel there was a coterie (select group) who knew about all these tricks. We used to have a ball of a time in darshan line and then share the hilarious experiences after the show was over.

Once, Swami was out of the mandir and was collecting letters. He had a small silver pendant in his hand, which we had all seen when he had gone past us in the line. He had transferred it to his right hand and was just waiting for someone to give it to, when a devotee from a back row extended a letter. Swami bent forward and stretched out his right palm to receive it.

It was a fine Bangalore morning; the Sun was out and the pendant in his hand was gleaming for all to see! We went black and blue for a second and, suppressing a threatening-to-explode laugh, looked away. Swami went ahead, unperturbed, and gave the pendant to some important-looking guy down the line. We were talking about this for a whole week and even thought of writing a letter to Swami asking him to be more careful.

On another occasion, a singer had come to Brindavan and we were listening to him. Swami wanted to give him a watch, and it was in readiness beneath his left thigh in the sofa on which he was sitting. I was sitting three rows from Swami and watching him closely. The song over, Swami shifted a bit on his seat and the watch was now in his left hand. He bent forward and moved the watch to his right hand. I saw this, then looked up and saw Swami was watching me. I turned red but so did Swami!

He started shifting around a lot and asked one of the students to change the direction of the table fan. When the audience was looking away, he put the watch back in his left hand. Now, the student who was changing the fan was a nervous wreck with everyone watching him, and whatever happened, there were sparks flying out of the socket! Other students set it right, but by now the watch had gone back below the thigh. The singer never got it that day. (I really felt sorry for him.)

The next morning in darshan line Swami came near me and, opening his empty right palm, called me a “doubting Thomas”. I wished I could have asked him to open the left palm, since I knew he had something there.

Now, this seems funny, but I got very scared and wrote a very apologetic letter to him.

There are a couple of other tricks he does. During Dussehra he does a vibhuti abhishek of Shirdi Sai Baba. He gets a pot, turns it upside down to show it’s empty, then puts his hand inside and vibhuti starts flowing out. Even a goat with a rational mind would figure out what he is doing.

Take a pot, fill it with vibhuti and solidify it with some water and let it stand. Until you disturb it, nothing will fall out.

Another thing he used to do was materialize linga. He does this by regurgitation. (Yes!) He makes motions as if he is trying to get it out of his stomach, and soon enough, has it out of his mouth. You will find plenty of these if you visit the museum in Puttaparthi. The way he does this is also simple. There is always a queue of trusted lieutenants (secret police?) who stand by him and pass him white handkerchiefs on which he would eventually place the linga.

In one of these the linga will come, and all he has to do is to take it close to his mouth and make a motion as if the linga had just dropped into the kerchief. I have not seen this myself (he no longer does it) but I have seen videos of this. My point is, once you have proved that one of his “miracles” is magic, the rest don’t need any proof.

Some students in the college know this and live a life of forced devotion and false pretence. They have to, for if they don’t, life can get very unpleasant. The parents of these students are very ardent devotees, whose lives have been defined by their devotion to Swami. It would be impossible to convince them that Swami is not what they think he is, but only a cheap charlatan doing popular tricks.

The lives of these students are truly pitiable. They live a constant Jeckyl-and-Hyde life from which there is no reprieve. But the lives of some students are more horrible.

THE UGLY: This I have not had personal experience with (thank holy heavens for that!) but it is 100% true because I have heard firsthand accounts of these bizarre things. I have looked at enough circumstantial evidences along with these witnesses’ accounts that I have no hesitation in telling that the following is true.

How do I start telling this to you, gentle reader? In my very first few days in our hostel, I had the distinct impression that something ugly was going on about which everybody knew but none wanted to talk. Whenever Swami came to Bangalore, there always used to be a few students who got interviews every other day.

These students were often referred to as those who are “in form” (a cricket analogy) with Swami. These students were among the most privileged in the hostel. They could go outside the hostel (not normally allowed) when they like, and behave specially. The wardens and lecturers used to consult them before anything significant was done in the hostel. These students kept within themselves for most of the time. I was preoccupied with my own troubles and did not keep any close look at these, though I was curious.

When I got to know about Swami from my seniors, they asked me if I noticed anything strange about the hostel. I told them. They smiled and asked me to keep an open eye, promising they would tell me all about it soon. It did not take me very long to find out what was different about these students. They were all gay.

Now, kindly bring down those raised eyebrows my dear reader. All the indications, body languages, special jokes about husbands and wives, etc., were there and it did not take a sleuth's effort to divine what was going on. I told about this to my seniors and the fact they told me was startling to say the least.

Many of these students were made gay ("sodomized" would be an unrefined word) by Swami, who himself is gay. I did not believe it when they told me this. But not long after, I heard the experiences as narrated by students who had undergone the trauma themselves. Now, it so happened that a couple of these students were Tamils, with whom I became friendly quite soon. One of them used to tell me harrowing stories.

When Swami was in Brindavan he used to get the call for interview at least once in three days. Whereas a student, when he gets an interview, is usually so elated and pleased that Swami has recognised his devotion, etc., this boy, let's call him Nandan, always had a grim face as he walked into the bungalow.

He never attended classes those days in which he got an interview. I have often seen him show marks on his chest and chin and say a flow of choice words of slang. Nandan often used to get covers (envelopes) from Swami in public, and sometimes he would be asked to open one. It would contain crisp hundred-rupee notes.

There is another word for giving money for such acts. Nandan was helpless. He could not go home and complain. His family and parents were devotees for thirty years, and their very lives had been defined around Baba. Nandan, since he knew the world, has been knowing Swami, and none else, as God. He was first initiated into doing this when he was in school. Swami told him that he (Swami) was the only purusha in the world and the whole world was his wife. Nandan was asked to think of himself as Radha, devoted to the Krishna.

Nandan's whole attitude towards life is now irrevocably changed.

There was another boy, Kumar (say), who was called for interview the first time. He was so elated. That afternoon a bunch of us went up to him (he was our junior) and asked him what happened. He had a blissful look on his face as he spoke: "Swami asked me if I had stomach ache. I said, 'By Swami's grace I don't.'" Swami laughed and said, "Why do you have to hide it from me? Tell me, do you have stomach ache?"

"I don't know why, but I said yes. Swami then said he will cure it and produced sandalwood oil from thin air and rubbed it on my stomach and below. I will never forget the experience."

We did not need such proofs, however. It was always obvious. Jokes with double meanings, pattings on the cheek, pinching students. He had the horrible habit of putting his hand inside the shirt pocket and pinching the chest.

Students who entered this quicksand of destruction, whether willingly or otherwise, lead an unspeakable life. Devoted students held them in awe, and the students who knew either despised them or pitied them. And they had no recourse.

There were students who went dangerously close to such a fate and escaped. My friend Ramana (say) was high on the hit list when he smartly realised this and moved out of sight by not attending bhajans or hiding in the back rows. That was the time I was on the hit list too, but our guardian angels intervened in the form of a summer vacation.

Towards the end of my stay in the place, the disease was only spreading. I was in Bangalore. In Puttaparthi (where we used to go some five times a year) things were far worse in numbers. I heard that many students there are gay, either directly by the big man or transitively. The atmosphere—an all-boys place with zero outer-world exposure for a prolonged period during adolescence—is only conducive to such a thing.

This, in my opinion is the ugliest part of Swami. We used to divulge the information about Swami to our juniors, whether advisable or not. I always said it should be done if only to make them realise about this ugly part.

Subject: It's time for action!

I know a great deal about what is happening in Puttaparthi. I personally know an ex-student who spent eleven months in Sai Baba's room a few years back. He was sent out of college by Sai Baba when, into the first year of his master's degree, he got too close and knew too much, and because then he didn't go along with what Sai Baba wanted.

He told me that the students in Sai Baba's inner chamber are in charge of all the preparatory activities before darshan and interviews, and have access to all his personal things.

They are asked to open all mail addressed to Sai Baba, and most times he allows them to keep the money that is sometimes enclosed, if it is less than Rs5000. It is such common practice.

These students hardly go to classes, and the great Chancellor doesn't mind at all! Even staff of the college and other officials of the ashram are very deferential to them. They play Western music on their stereo systems, that only they are allowed to have. Usually there are three or four students living with him at any given time.

The officials of the Trust know something of this nature is going on. They are making hay while the Sun shines, and most of them have eaten enough money after coming to know Sai Baba is hardly divine. The way these close people talk about him is enough to figure out that they are in no way worried about his "divinity", and have scant regard or respect for him, which would not be the case if they had knowledge of any divine power.

Subject: My account regarding Sai Baba

Here is a brief account of my experiences with Sai Baba. I apologize for the graphic language of this message, but it is the only way to share my experiences.

I travelled to India three times, from 1991 to 1993. On my first visit to India I was already a devotee of Sai Baba and believed he was God. I had a total of seven private interviews in the first two trips. In the first private interview Sai Baba asked me to undo my pants and drop my underwear. Since I believed he was God, I did as he asked. He had already "materialized" oil and he applied it in the area between my penis and anus.

I was told after the interview, by some devotees, that this act is done by gurus to their disciples to open a chakra, or source of spiritual energy in the body of the disciple. However I am not sure if this is what, in fact, Sai Baba had done. My research since has not found this initiation ceremony in any Hindu books or scriptures, or among Hindu followers of other gurus.

In every private interview after the "initiation" private interview, Sai Baba asked me to drop my pants and underwear, and he would rub my penis. Once he was rubbing it so hard it was obvious to me that he wanted me to get an erection.

I was busy talking to him about my problems, the problems of my country Iran, and my family's problems, and I was asking him for his blessing for all of them.

I was not interested in sex or anything, especially with a guy, and so my penis did not grow, no matter how hard Sai Baba tried. Finally he gave up and threw my penis up and turned away with a very angry face and mumbled something. When he turned back to me, he told me to put my pants on again and the private interview was over.

You may ask why I didn't stop Sai Baba doing what he was doing, if it was so obvious to me that he wanted me to get an erection? Due to my being brainwashed, I thought I had to throw out this thought, as it was another obstacle on my way to reaching God. According to Sai Baba, all bad thoughts have to be thrown out immediately and replaced with good, pure thoughts. And so I threw out the idea of Sai Baba trying to give me an erection, even though I knew he was.

In another interview, Sai Baba asked me to kneel in front of him while he was standing. He took my head with his right hand and pushed it hard into his stomach. He then took my other hand with his left hand and tried to rub it against his penis.

I did not grab his penis. I just let him direct my hand to his penis, using the outside of my hand, not the palm of my hand. While he was rubbing my hand on his penis, he was moaning sexually.

In the middle of this act, I tried to look up to see his face, as I wanted to see his emotions; he didn't let me. He pushed my head into his stomach harder, and this made me stop my desire to see his face altogether. He finally gave up, realising that I was not interested in grabbing his penis, since I wasn't willing to use my palm to touch him.

Even this incident didn't shake my faith in him. That's how strong is the brainwashing in Sai Baba's organization.

In all the private interviews that I had with Sai Baba, he would also hug or kiss me, or ask me to kiss him. I had come to reason with myself that he was touching my penis because he was probably healing me of some disease or handicap. I reasoned to myself that Sai Baba asked me to kiss him, or kissed me, because he loved me, and kissing on the cheeks is all right; kissing on the cheeks between men is okay in my country.

It was not until I saw a movie, that showed Sai Baba cheating, that my faith in him started to crumble. It was only after I left Sai Baba (six months after seeing that movie) that I realized his real intentions in those private interviews.

I am willing to testify in any court of law or in any gathering about the above experiences.

I have been very active on the Internet for the past six years and I have saved numerous people from falling into Sai Baba's evil trap.

Subject: Experiences of an ex-Sai Baba devotee

Hello David Bailey,

I am giving you a thorough account of my traumatic experiences with Sathya Sai Baba and hope that this will help people understand what he is all about. All the details are the truth and can be seen as testimony. I could and would testify to the following in an open court.

I am thirty-five years old and have been interested in spiritual matters since my childhood. For a long time I worshipped Jesus and Padre Pio; then, after reading Yogananda's Autobiography Of A Yogi, I turned towards the yogi path.

In October 1988 I became an ardent follower of Sathya Sai Baba, and came to Puttaparthi for the first time in September 1989. Since then I visited Puttaparthi regularly every year and was totally absorbed in the "aura" of Sai Baba. I was fully convinced of his avatarhood and became so devoted that I was thinking and contemplating all the time about him alone.

In 1989 I read Lord Of The Air, by Tal Brooks (a young male USA ex-devotee who wrote of Sai Baba's sexual abuse of him), but I did not believe, thinking "Tal only wants to decry Baba". I was just ignoring the facts.

Over the years I had hundreds of darshans but never an interview. In 1993 I became a little suspicious about Sai Baba's lifestyle and the activities in the ashram. Every year I could see costly new buildings and felt an increasing commercialization was going on. In 1996 I saw Sai Baba leaving the ashram in an expensive Jaguar and other costly cars like Mercedes and BMW of the big class. But I still believed him to be the Kali avatar of the age.

On 17 January 1996 I got my first interview and he was very kind, telling me nice things like "I will give you everything" as he touched and stroked my head. He said "I know you're not sure about your life and future and so on. Also unhappiness from women. I know, don't worry. Also you have some bad thoughts, not good."

Then he said: "I give you everything according to health, spirituality, and life. Everything. I give you infinite love. You and me will become one." I touched his robe and he put his hand on the top of my head, saying "I give you separate interview."

On 20 January 1996 I got the second interview. Already days before, he had established a strange eye-contact with me indicating the coming interview. My wife and I went to the interview, and he acted very disappointed at seeing me together with my wife. He took me alone into the interview room and said: "She is diseased and much older than you. Please separate from her." I was really shocked and replied: "She is attached to me."

I asked him to give her some spiritual instruction, which he readily agreed to do, but he had something else on his mind. Without asking permission, he started kissing me on my lips for some time, and later asked me to open my trousers and "materialized" some oil which he rubbed on the skin above my genitals. I felt very bad about all of this, but accepted, as I fully trusted Sai Baba.

Then he took my wife into the private interview room alone, and told her: "Either you separate from the boy, or I throw you out of Puttaparthi!" He appeared wild and furious (my wife told me afterwards) and she shivered all over. When she reappeared in a very short time, looking red-faced and very scared, nobody dared ask her what happened in there.

He saw me again some days later in darshan and asked whether I had separated or not. I said "Not yet." He turned away and shouted so all people could hear: "Bad, bad boy!" He was so aggressive and seemed to radiate such an aura of evil that I was really shocked. We immediately left and went to north India for some pilgrimage.

This was a turning point, but after a time I decided to go once more to Sai Baba to clarify the matter. At the end of 1996 I returned to India and got an interview on 4 December. In the interview he said: "Where are you from?" When I told him I was from Germany, he responded: "You are also a Hitler!" Shocked, I thought to myself "He is not very kind, is he?" Nevertheless, in the private room the greedy old man kissed me again, direct and continuously on my lips, for about twenty seconds, and gently stroked my back. By now I was certain that something was very wrong.

On 28 December I was again called for an interview, and he produced a golden ring which didn't fit well on my finger in spite of his blowing on it.

In the private chamber he said "come" and again kissed me on the lips for some time as before. This time I resisted, and he gurgled "Have no fear." I said "I have no fear." Then he said: "This is a good opportunity, so many waiting for months and will not get." This baffled me. I'm sure people don't wait for mouth kisses in Puttaparthi.

Then his mood totally changed and I did have some fear. He commanded me to remove my trousers, unzipped my fly, and went with his right hand into my underpants. Sathya Sai Baba, the "divine", touched and massaged my genitals unasked. He expected some erection, but this didn't happen, for I didn't feel any sexual excitement, no lust in the presence of a seventy-year-old man. I was really disgusted.

Then he had the impudence to say: "It is very weak, don't waste energy." When I looked at him, I realised the truth about him and was shocked indeed. Soon afterwards, without another word, he sent me out of the room.

Back in Germany I did intense research on the Internet and came across an article from Jed Geyerhahn and was very happy to have found somebody with similar experiences.

As I still had some luggage in Puttaparthi, I returned in November 1999 to collect it, taking with me two Internet pages to discuss with some friends there. Unfortunately a lady came into possession of the material and took it to the Puttaparthi police station. Then I went through several interrogations with the police there.

A Mr. Reddy repeatedly asked from whom I got the material, and what would be the password. I told him India is still a democracy and I can carry whatever material I have with me, but he took no heed of my words. I told him that no password was needed to enter the net and everyone has free access to the material there. He sent me to an e-mail shop, accompanied by a policeman who waited, but the computers connected with Hyderabad are very slow, and therefore I could not enter the website.

Finally the inspector, Mr. Reddy, took my passport away and said: “Unless you give me the password and name of the person, I declare you guilty and will not allow you to leave Puttaparthi.” He treated me very badly, like a criminal, especially during the last interrogation, and I had several witnesses to this incident. All of this because I had been in possession of two pages which I had not even written myself.

He then walked me, my wife, and an American friend into the ashram, and once inside the gate, he again asked me the stupid question about the password. At the time I couldn’t understand why he should do so, but today I know he was showing us to some people or trustees whom we could not see or recognise.

I had another appointment on 1 November with the police, which was the day I intended to go to Delhi, but without my passport it would not be possible. On 30 October, late in the evening, two people whom I know and an unknown person, came to our unit and one of them warned me that my life was in danger and I should leave immediately.

My wife and I left very early the next morning for Delhi. At Dharmavaram rail station the police were searching for us, but we entered the train at Anantapur. There is a police station near the platform which we had to pass to enter the train, and the very moment I saw that, I told my wife to go into the train separately. My wife heard a group of policemen talking about searching for somebody and caught the words “passport, Delhi and telegram”. We were in serious danger, but fortunately I was dressed like an Indian, and escaped identification.

So we escaped and reached Delhi, and went immediately to the German Embassy. I got a travel document after telling them of my experience, and the Embassy official said a protest note would be sent to the Indian Government. He told me such an act is illegal and they knew of similar cases.

I want to inform you that, at the police station in Puttaparthi, the policeman had a bunch of both foreign and Indian passports in a drawer under a table, and once I saw them in his hand. This is just an observation; I don’t know to whom they belonged.

During this frightening time at Puttaparthi, I met an Italian couple we knew there and tried to tell them what had happened to me in interview with Sai Baba. They just closed their eyes and the lady shouted: “Be quiet! Shut up! Sai Baba is our God, and all the bad stories are not true!” Then they turned away.

These same people had told me, many years before, that they could never find any peace at the ashram, and couldn’t understand it. But they would not listen to those who know it better. Nobody can possibly imagine how I felt while all of this was happening. I suffered a lot.

I met one ex-soldier from Ruanda who is very tall and handsome. This person has also been sexually molested by Sai Baba and he told me his story. He is married and his Japanese wife is a fanatical Sai Baba supporter. They have one child. He totally depends on her and can see no way to get free from Sai Baba. He has been given many gifts from Sai Baba, like rings, bracelets, a gold watch. Sai Baba touched his testicles and massaged his genitals at least twice. The gifts look like payment for prostitution, but a prostitute and her customer have a mutual agreement, whereas the male devotees are molested against their will, and they come for a completely different purpose.

Our strong faith in Sai Baba has been misused by the same Baba, through his pedophile behavior, and this is the most disgraceful thing he could do.

However there are many other irregularities waiting to be clarified. I also want to let you know that Baba was willing to leave Puttaparthi on 28 November 1999 for Bangalore for a heart treatment, but he didn’t because of the Internet story about it. This is known to me from the police inspector who blamed me for having brought the Internet pages to Puttaparthi. I have a good friend in Puttaparthi who is a shopkeeper, and he had already told me that, in November 1999, Baba had two heart attacks and went for treatment to Bangalore. He also said that most of the people who know about it don’t believe that Sai Baba will survive the next two years.

The Trustees are very concerned and alarmed about the Internet.

Further, I want to let you know (in case you do not) that Sathya Sai Baba was not born in Puttaparthi, but in Karnatakka-Nagepalle village near Puttaparthi. Baba’s mother came from this place and, according to tradition, she has to deliver the child where she comes from. I know this from a person who was born in Puttaparthi and lives there for over forty years. The villager said it is an open secret, everyone knows it but is fearful to say it. You see, from the very beginning Baba and his followers were lying.

Please study the statement that Krishna, a friend of Sai Baba’s youth, made to Erlendur Haraldsson. Never was a devotee so close to Sai Baba for such a long time as Krishna. He spent twenty-four hours a day with Sai Baba for some time. This was almost sixty years ago. Eventually Krishna left Sai Baba and went to Hyderabad. In an interview with Haraldsson, Krishna said that even in those days Sai Baba was more like a politician or chieftain of a feudal system. Krishna also said: “Whatever Baba may have, one thing he has not, and this is compassion.”

I hope that this nightmare comes to an end and I hope that, by the Grace of the Almighty, all people round the globe may know about the misdeeds of Sai Baba, a mighty demon who came in the guise of a spurious saint, only interested in self-glorification, name, and fame.

He is a master—of deception.

Yours sincerely, Jens and Gurprit Sethi

Subject: (Feature article with full front-page photograph of Sai Baba:) FOR THE SAKE OF TRUTH—CONNY LARSSON’S STORY, THE SWAMI WHO DECEIVED A WHOLE WORLD

Conny Larsson (a Swedish film star) has been very close to Sai Baba. Today Conny runs a home for young abusers and criminals near Valdemarsvik, a small town on the coast of the Baltic Sea in Sweden.

Conny says:

“I went to his ashram in Puttaparthi. There Sai Baba walked up to me and said: ‘So you have arrived now.’ Later I was invited to Sai Baba for talks almost every day. He kissed my cheek and was physically very close to me. That didn’t worry me; even in Sweden we sometimes do like that.

“But then he touched my trousers between my legs and started to massage my penis. ‘Don’t be afraid’ he said, ‘This is a divine touch.’ He took out my penis and touched it, and I touched his penis. He explained that my kundalini was to be changed.

“Because he was God, I let it happen. I became a kind of favorite to him. I had frequent private talks with Sai Baba.

“We were always very close physically. He never came that close to women. He is interested in boys and men from the age of eight up to thirty. When you become thirty, you are no longer interesting.”

Conny Larsson became one of the movement’s spiritual leaders in Sweden. In 1983 there were rumors that Sai Baba was cheating with his materializations and that he had sexual relations with young boys. Conny couldn’t believe that this was true.

“But in 1986 I finally understood that he was doing the same things to other boys that he had done to me many years ago. I got to know the boys and asked them questions. They all told me the same story. The swami had oral sex with them, of whom many were heterosexual (sexually attracted to members of the opposite sex). The explanation was always that he was going to change their kundalini. You wonder whether women don't have the kundalini power."

Conny also became witness to Sai Baba's cheating with materializations.

"I decided never to tell anybody about this. I thought he tested my faith in him."

Conny felt worse and worse about what he had found out. Sai Baba had been the center of his whole life for so long.

"In January 1999 I got in touch with a Swedish boy, who had six interviews with the swami. I noticed that the boy was shaken. He told me about the same things that had happened to me. It was about masturbation; the swami opened the boy's trousers and started to masturbate him.

"The boy withdrew, but the swami insisted. Afterwards the boy turned to a medical doctor for help, but because of his age, the doctor had never been exposed to the swami's improper advances, so he told the boy he must have misunderstood the situation.

"During the last interview the boy had with the swami, the boy's mother was present. She had come to take her two sons home with her. She said: 'I saw how Sai Baba took things out from behind the cushion and then 'manifested' them 'miraculously'. Then everything crashed for me.'

"The boy left the ashram completely broken-hearted.

"According to the latest information from India, the shop is found where Sai Baba buys the things he 'materializes'. It's a shop in Hyderabad.

"Some of us who have received gold things and 'diamonds' from Sai Baba have had them examined by experts, and been told they are all junk pieces and not gold; the 'diamonds' are zircons and stained glass."

In Sweden, the Gimle school, which was grounded in Sai Baba's philosophy, has been closed because of Baba's sexual actions. And Conny Larsson has stopped a movie about his life, in which Sai Baba's importance to him was the core.

Conny points out that there are leaders in the movement who have known for a long time what the swami does with boys and young men.

"They say it is 'divine'. There are also leaders who know about the cheating with miracles, and protect him. There are strong interests behind Sai Baba and his reputation to be an avatar."

What effects have these unveilings had on Conny? He says he's had to change his concept of God.

"Now I believe in God inside me, and in all human beings.

"I feel tired, and have compassion for all who have believed in Sai Baba and been duped. But at the same time I wish to thank all the Sai friends for our moments together at satsangs, camps, and courses, where we generated love and truth in spite of the illusion we, in good faith, all lived in."

Conny Larsson is currently touring many countries at his own expense, presenting his truth about Sai Baba. He is prepared to travel, and speak wherever and whenever he is invited to do so.

Subject: Letter to members about winding up the Sai organization in Sweden

As you know, some of our young boys have testified that Sai Baba has molested them sexually. It is a matter of serious sexual abuse; among other things, oral sex.

Furthermore, it has turned out that the materialization of vibhuti, rings, etc., is a bluff. It is only usual magic, built on sleight-of-hand.

Large-scale economical frauds and misuse of donated means exist in Prashanthi Nilayam. There are bad conditions in the hospital and the water project is uncompleted and full of problems.

Statements are supported by serious investigations and personal testimonies, which can be read on the Internet.

Scotland Yard and other police organizations are making investigations of other crimes. The information about what is going on is of that kind.

We cannot hide behind the statement "we did not know". All in the Swedish organization know.

These are hard words that hurt us all who have Baba in our hearts. But since in the organization there have been attempts to cover up, tone down, and lessen what has happened and still happens, we consider it necessary to be very clear and unambiguous in the formulation.

Naturally everyone is free to keep having Baba as his/her spiritual guide and personal image of God, in spite of what has come out. But is it possible for the Sai organization in Sweden to remain? Our answer is: For decency's sake, no.

What can we say to the person who comes to the organization to get information about Baba? What kind of message will the organization give on its homesite on Internet? Can one continue to sell books, which we know describe false facts? What can one tell the person who has perhaps put his savings on a journey to Baba, and then comes home telling that Baba has molested his son, and they have seen things that make them doubt the authenticity of the materializations, and they have heard rumors of economic irregularities? Do we answer with: "Well, we already knew. It has been known for years." ??? He, who through "advertising" Baba, entices others into going there or donating money, might have made himself guilty of the crime of encouraging criminality.

So what will the leaders of the organization say on the day when the press or police ring the door bell and want to know? Do they say "Of course we knew, but since we have not personally had anything but good experiences with Baba, we did not feel that we needed to bother." ??? No, dear friends, let us instead, through a forceful disassociation, send the message through the Sai hierarchy to Sai Baba himself:

This is what we have learned and we cannot accept it! Stop the sexual violations immediately; give up the bluff materializations; and get competent and honest persons to run the activities.

If the unsatisfactory state of things stops through voluntary action, it may be possible to save the good parts. Otherwise the activity will sooner or later be broken down more violently through other measures from international police, press, international service organizations, etc. Then all the good which exists will disappear, along with the evil. And, in such a scandal, India as a nation could be damaged.

Through winding up the Sai organization in Sweden and spreading information about that through a statement to all central coordinators and to other appropriate key persons, we take our responsibility for the persons who have been abused and cheated, and for those who run the risk to be abused and cheated.

This action will likely result in other people in other countries starting to act, and taking their responsibility.

We the undersigned, and many more of us, hereby demand that the president of the Sathya Sai Organization in Sweden call an extra annual meeting at once, where the decision to discontinue the association can be made in a correct way.

If the meeting comes to the decision that the association should not be discontinued, a restructuring and complementary elections to the coordinating committee has to be made, since some of the members will leave the organization, and whole centers will discontinue. Likewise a new treasurer and a new auditor has to be elected.

This is a tragic process for everybody. But the work on our spiritual growth does not stop with Baba, and some of us have already discussed the forms for continued meetings for ex-devotees, where meditation and study circles, retreats and summer celebrations, can be held.

So, with or without Baba, together or in different groups, life goes on.

CLASSIFIED ADS

Fill out the form below with your ad. If your ad runs longer, please write it out on a separate piece of paper and attach it to this form.

Signature _____

By signing you agree that the above ad is exactly as you want it to be presented in the paper.

Column inches are measured vertically. Each page has 3 columns and each column is 3.37" wide.

Display ads: Send your camera-ready ad and this order form to The SPECTRUM Ad Dept., P.O. Box 1567, Tehachapi, CA 93581, or feel free to use the fax. If you wish, you may send a 3.5" floppy disk or an IOMEGA zip disk with your camera-ready ad or ad information. The ad must be in Pagemaker or Photoshop 6.5 format, or have a graphic extension (i.e. tif, gif, jpg). Please send the best quality image you can. We will always do our best to make your ad look great; remember, poor quality camera-ready ads make poor ads. You may also send information via e-mail: spectrumads@tminet.com.

Classifieds: Classified ads are charged per line, at $5 per line. There is not limit on how many lines your ad may be. An average line has between 40-44 characters (including spaces, letters, and punctuation). Classifieds are easy to do over the phone with a credit card.

Ads will only be processed when payment is received. Rates are locked-in only for as long as you commit; rates subject to change.

* Discounts: If you wish to run your ad for more than one issue, then discounts are as follows: For 2-6 issues, deduct 5%; for 7-12 issues, deduct 10%. (These discounts apply to classifieds as well as display ads.)

 Design fee: If you do not have a camera-ready ad, we can design a nice ad for you (at a rate of $25/hour). Please call for an estimate.

All display and classified ads are due by the 15th of each month. Any ads received after the 15th are placed on a first come, first served basis, and any ads that do not make it into the upcoming issue will be placed in the next. We reserve the right to refuse any ad as an editorial decision. All payment will be refunded if this is the case. We reserve the right to resize ads to "fit" (ads will never be sized down, and you will not be charged for the larger ad size).

If you wish to place an ad that does not conform with the above chart, or you have any questions, please feel free to call us for cheerful answers .

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The Blockbuster of all Blockbusters!! With Stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions and documents the suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world." No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

—VIDEO—

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps, and when he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and their relevance to your daily life.

Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse

One half of the world's current population should soon be dead according to authoritative projections. Will you, your family, and friends be among the survivors or the deceased?

Dr. Len Horowitz and Dr. Joseph S. Puleo investigate 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge, power, and "healing codes" to humanity. It offers new hope for the loving masses to survive the worldwide plagues, famines, and weather changes that are now at hand. In perfect time for these cataclysmic events, Healing Codes presents an urgent, monumental, and inspired work that will be hailed for generations to come.

Emerging Viruses - AIDS & Ebola

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein. This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). Included is Dr. Robert Gallo, the notorious discoverer of the AIDS virus. The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when these researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses, and experimented with an assortment of antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

“Fear and intimidation are the basic techniques by which the conspirators maintain their control over all aspects of our health care, as they ruthlessly crush any competitor who challenges their profits.”

— Eustace Mullins, Murder By Injection: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy Against America (1988).

It's no secret that the power-elite-controlled pharmaceutical companies are making billions of dollars in profits every year. Never mind the trail of dead bodies that can only be called “acceptable losses” to those sitting in plush corporate office suites counting their profits. The saga of human suffering that accompanies these dangerous chemicals so freely dispensed by the medical establishment in today's “practice” of medicine is vast in scope and devastating in outcome.

Update From Our Editor

Several months ago we were invited to join the AMA. No, we haven't sold out to the medical police! This AMA is the American Media Association and we are honored and delighted to be a member of this group—even if we're more than a bit tardy in conveying that news to you.

In one sentence, the AMA stands for truth and responsibility in the media. Or as their own literature puts it:

"The American Media Association consists of a cross section of media organizations and journalists who have associated themselves for the purpose of supporting each other in the now dangerous occupation of resisting 'establishment' media moguls and powerful globalist interests, through publishing the Truth on various subjects and current affairs.

"AMA members generally consider themselves to be patriotic, God-fearing Americans who wish to warn their respective audience(s) of the clear and present danger to our liberty. Each publisher, journalist, and/or broadcaster has his or her own area of expertise and focus. Some concentrate on exposing the ongoing abuses of the federal government and its numerous alphabet-soup agencies, while others concentrate on law, taxes, health, or religious persecution. Some may have non-political agendas, focusing simply on the news of the day.

"Members' publications range from small, home-spun newsletters, to large-circulation weeklies, daily newspapers, or magazines.

"Editors, publishers, freelance journalists, researchers, talk radio and television hosts, Internet publishers, and even pastors and evangelists all grace our ranks."

Well, that says a mouthful. And I would offer that even if the focus is "simply" upon the news of the day, if reported honestly and with thoughtfulness, that alone HAS to bump into the purposely engineered ills and injustices overwhelming modern society. That is, if your intentions rest upon responsible journalism, it's just about impossible to avoid, from one angle or another, having to confront longstanding conspiracies against we-the-people!

Whether we look at the recent "retirement" of popular late-night talk-radio host Art Bell, or the raiding of the offices of, say, a small publication that may be printing a version of our Constitution containing the original (and now conveniently missing) 13th Amendment (which said that nobody having a "Title of Nobility" may hold high public office; among other things, that means no lawyers in the government), sharing Truth can be a perilous pursuit. Or as the AMA states it:

"While not all have been 'branded' as members of the 'vast right-wing conspiracy', many AMA members are and have been the subjects of demonization, abuse, and/or attack by special interest groups and/or media organizations and particular government agencies.

"Their only crime is that of exercising their First Amendment right to freely publish their views and expose wrong-doing as they see fit....

"It is a sad commentary for our nation when so many pro-American, independent news-gathering and dissemination organizations and individual journalists feel it is NECESSARY to band together for their own survival and defense—but alas, it has become necessary; hence, the reason for this important association.

"We associate together as a matter of survival to save this nation, its laws and its moral ethics—and we do so in the name of God, for our posterity's Liberty."

Amen.

Next item on the agenda is to remind a large segment of you about renewal time. There is a general notice elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM, and the address label on the envelope carrying your paper lets you know how many issues you have left. I only mention this subject here because a large number of you are at the end of a one-year subscription cycle if you've been aboard from the start.

There was a "happy accident" at the printer (Are there REALLY any accidents?!) when the last issue of The SPECTRUM was published. The result was the paper being printed on "50-pound offset" (heavier, whiter) paper. I only mention this here because we were startled by the number of you readers who commented about how much you liked the way the paper looks and feels and stores as a result of that paper stock. Of course it costs a bit more to print on that paper, and mailing the heavier papers raises postal costs some, but maybe it's worth it. This issue has been printed on the same high-quality paper. Please let us know what you think about this change.

From: Christopher Ruby, safetrek@mcn.net

American Death Camps

by Samuel Foster
(submitted by Nicky)

We live in strange times. Suffice it to say I am a captain (not my actual rank, but at least that) in the National Guard; but I can't tell you which state, as that information surely will be the quick road to my demise. I have faithfully served my country in Desert Storm and Panama, both events having nothing to do with the national security safety of this great country of ours.

My wife has the same disease I have, and the doctors are still telling me I have the flu. Does a flu last eight years? We'll get to that later. We both are under the age of forty, but we no longer look young.

Nothing can change my mind that my superiors—so-called officers and gentlemen—have murdered us.

One of my duties requires me to train, through rotation with other units, the ongoing guard staff of various clandestine prisons which many Americans and oversight committees do not know exist. These prisons, or "camps" as we call them, were built for no other purpose than for the common American taxpayer. I know. I helped build three of them.

Somewhere along the way, I have lost my soul in the process.

I know for a fact that this government of ours plans to turn America into a wasteland of proportions that stagger any imagination. It is the Pentagon's and Wall Street's ambition to create no less than a slave state by the year 2001. They will do it, too—with the media's help—because, in many ways, they have already succeeded in destroying our civil liberties and making the middle-class an ancient idea.

How can I say these things? From where do I speak?

A few years ago, I was called to a meeting in Fort Mead to join the augmenting of a unit which would report directly to FEMA in the event of national disasters. Did we discuss earthquakes, tornados, or flooding? Not on your life. After obtaining several new written security clearances, and after having signed no less than eleven documents—all giving away my life and liberty should I ever speak out—I was let in on the following plan.

Before giving out the structure of this plan, I beg anyone who reads this document to share, with as many people as possible, what I consider our last, best chance to reverse the horrible course this country is going to take very soon. The outline is as I remember it, as everything was verbal; nothing was ever written down.

Troop movements, orders, and materiel were all coded with words that meant something other than what they were. For example, if we needed 150 new prison cells, we didn't call them prison cells; they became "Cfood units, CIV". Given a code sheet, we could then interpret and act upon any written order. Most were email in our net and were to be destroyed once the order was carried out. This was routine policy and is still in effect today.

1. Establish a network of prisons to deal with the estimated twenty million Americans who will not go along with the New America. This new country will no longer resemble the USA we all grew up in. It will be a dictatorship with institutionalized and mandated slave labor.

2. Schools will no longer teach actual history. The schools of the future will mainly be warehouses for the young. They will teach the party system: that family is dead, and that work is good. Discovering this point made me so violently ill I became incontinent.

3. Voting will be suspended. Many of us already know that the American vote is a sham. Officers above the rank of Major are well aware of who gives the orders in this country. Not the White House, but the CIA. The White House and its changing occupant are merely the visible servant of something much darker, and the President's sole purpose is to create laws which lower real income, create war states, and keep the military machine running with ever-expanding budgets. I know. I was there at many meetings where foreign policy was dictated by four-star Generals.

4. Gun owners will have their guns taken, by force if necessary, before many of the plan's points are made operational.

5. The enforcers of the plan will be NATO and UN forces, working in cooperation with the US military, and headed by the product from the Intel groups and FEMA.

6. Use the lists compiled by the FBI and NSA, and round-up all those men and women who have ever shown any inkling whatsoever in the Constitution or civil rights. This especially includes gun owners and religious persons.

7. Using lists obtained from grocery stores and banks, individuals with income spent on stockpiling of goods will also be rounded up and their property absconded.

8. The teachings of Hinduism, Christianity, and Islam will be considered anti-American. Pastors, preachers, and holy men and women are to be rounded-up for "re-education".

9. The establishment of work colonies and the takeover of the media by the Pentagon.

10. Free trade of stocks will be frozen, and the assets of many individuals outright taken away.

11. The creation of mass crematoriums in Arizona, Texas, and Washington. The dead will no longer be buried, but will be sent to a place where they will be "cleansed".

12. The creation of a national police force with complete power. This point, as with many others, has already occurred, and the force is now 80% operational.

Friends, there is little more that I can say, except to give you my promise that I will constantly provide as much facts as possible to lead you to the truth. You want camp locations? I'll get them out. You want dates and places? I'll get them too.

God help us in our time of need. Sam.

[End quoting]

For several years now there has been a steady stream of credible reports concerning these "holding centers" being worked on or completed, usually in rural or remote locations. Like with the chemtrails issue that we reported new information on last month and again in this issue of The SPECTRUM, if just SOME of those who have had to "sell their soul" to make these projects run were to come forward and tell the truth about what they know, the New World Order's agenda of slavery would be on shaky ground.

ELEVEN DAYS—FOUR RIOTS—
ANARCHISTS—BLACK PANTHERS—
WHAT'S NEXT?

From RUMOR MILL NEWS (RUMILLS), (<http://www.rumormillnews.com>), 6/21/00: [quoting]

ELEVEN DAYS—FOUR RIOTS—
WHAT'S NEXT?

So much has happened in the last eleven days that it appears we are getting ready to see the long, hot summer of anarchy, rape, and race riots that Rumor Mill News sources have predicted.

Sunday, June 11:

WOMEN SEXUALLY ASSAULTED IN CENTRAL PARK

The current set of events started in New York's Central Park after a Puerto Rican parade. Over 40 women were attacked, stripped, and sexually assaulted.

Friday, June 16:

NEW BLACK PANTHERS, IN FULL UNIFORM, CARRYING AK-47'S DEMONSTRATE IN HOUSTON

Next came the New Black Panthers who marched on a Republican meeting in Houston. They were in uniform and fully armed with AK-47s. They demanded that Texas reverse the death penalty for a prisoner on death row.

Monday, June 19:

ANARCHISTS RIOT IN OREGON

Then came the Anarchists who rioted in Oregon on the anniversary of another anarchist riot one year before.

Tuesday, June 20:

RIOT AFTER BASKETBALL GAME IN LOS ANGELES

The last incident in this current set of four occurred in Los Angeles where riots broke out after a basketball game.

Are these isolated incidents? Or is there something that draws all of these events together? Is there a shadow network of operatives who are "handling" each one of these events? Are these being orchestrated to divert our attention from other more important things, or are they being staged to bring on martial law and the takeover of the United States by a One World Government?

In December of 1999, Rumor Mill News placed a video on our Forum. It was called Times Square Military Assault. The video was a training video that was made to show operatives of a clandestine operations group, what the area in New York City looked like so they could better understand their mission.

Many people did not feel the video could be real. Rumor Mill was told that it was made in order to derail a race war that was going to be incited by the NWO in Times Square on New Year's Eve. Turning the races, the genders, and the economic classes against each other has been the plan of the NWO for over 50 years. They divide in order to conquer.

If the race war had been successfully launched, the United States would have been engulfed in riots of all types. Martial "rule" would have been imposed, United Nation troops would have been brought in to maintain the peace, and the America we knew would be history.

The event in Central Park 11 days ago, reminded me of the central theme of the Times Square Video. A White woman, who was a member of the special operations team, was scheduled to be stripped naked and raped by Black men.

This was the fuse that would ignite the race war. The race war would bring about martial law, which would allow the government to eliminate all the undesirables. After the undesirables are gone, the United States would be reformed under a One World Government.

As said before, this divide-and-conquer scenario has been on the books for at least 50 years.

Are the events of the last 11 days precursors to even more violence? Will the Mexican border war erupt into a race war between Hispanics and Whites? Will the New Black Panthers create an incident that causes a race war? Even though these events have been planned for 50 years, can we somehow avert them? Or do we have to go through them in order to wake up and realize how good we have had it.

STRIPPED NAKED, VIDEO TAPED, AND RAPED

The above words were used by the women who were attacked in Central Park.

The husband of a French woman who was attacked told Fox News: "The marauders threw her down and stripped her naked."

Another victim, Anne Peyton Bryant—in an interview on Fox News, talked about the gang who threw her to the ground and tried to rip off her clothes. She said: "They got a White girl."

The following sentence is taken from the transcript of Times Square Military Assault video. Notice how similar it is to what was said by Anne Peyton Bryant and the French husband.

"OK, so our girl is gonna go and do her thing right here. She's jumped, she's stripped, and she's screamin' by 23:10."

The above was said by the commander of the operation. The team had a member who was a White girl. The Black members of the special operations group will attack her, strip her, and try to rape her. She will start screaming, just as the girls in Central Park started screaming.

It would be just like the NWO to stage a racial incident where a White woman is attacked by Black men in Times Square. This incident would be used to bring about planned chaos and martial law.

<<http://www.rumormillnews.com/cgi-bin/config.pl?read=449>>

Four events have just happened in the United States. Two were race or gender related, two appeared to be pure anarchy. Are these four events in eleven days mere coincidences, or do we have more coming?

<<http://www.rumormillnews.com/cgi-bin/config.pl?read=3724>>

Check the above Internet site for documentation of the above mentioned uprisings—and for the transcript of the Times Square Video. [End quoting]

We need to take into account what the officers who were to maintain control did after the riot started in Los Angeles: They were told to stay back and watch until they were ordered to move in. That is exactly what they did in the last huge riot in LA (Watts) and were told that is the wrong thing to do, but the cops on the line were deliberately told to do the same thing again. (According to the reports, the officers were complaining about standing and watching instead of moving in.) Does this leave much doubt in anyone's mind what the intention was and how this probably was staged? How about this being a WAG THE DOG script as usual, but through help from the Lighted Ones it failed? And the same for the other 3 above? I have a definite feeling we are being helped from some good people or beings, otherwise we probably would be under martial law. I also feel that many more events will be attempted before this year is over.

CANADIAN FARMER IN CRUCIAL GM FOOD WAR WITH MONSANTO

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 6/20/00: [quoting]

Environment News Service, SASKATOON, Saskatchewan (ENN)—On the Great Plains of Canada, farmer Percy Schmeiser has engaged in a David and Goliath battle which could save farmers and consumers around the world from a genetically modified food (GM) nightmare beyond anything they have experienced so far.

Farmer Schmeiser's fame in North America is guaranteed to cross the Atlantic as details of his epic tussle in Canada's Supreme Court with the GM seed company Monsanto builds up steam.

Monsanto has accused the farmer of "stealing" its rape oil super-seeds.

Schmeiser is counter-suing the giant American biotechnology company for about £4.2 million (US$6.5 million) for polluting his GM-free farmland without his knowledge.

"If just one farmer in Britain or Europe gets one of these Monsanto rape oil seeds that invaded my land, there will be nobody who won't have contaminated crops in just a matter of years—whether they like it or not" said 69-year-old Schmeiser as his legal team confronted Monsanto's lawyers in the prairie city of Saskatoon.

The outcome of the landmark Schmeiser vs. Monsanto case could influence how much control biotechnology companies like Monsanto and Advanta—the Canadian company which this year inadvertently distributed genetically contaminated rapeseed oil in Europe—have over the world's food supply in this century.

"Farmers here are calling it a reign of terror" said Schmeiser as he recalled the bizarre chain of events which brought him into unyielding conflict with Monsanto.

The court battle has huge implications for farmers everywhere.

If Monsanto wins and Westminster eventually approves the commercial growing of GM crops, Roundup Ready canola may reach European shores intentionally.

It has already arrived accidentally, shipped by the Canadian company Advanta last month mixed in with a shipment of traditional seeds. Farmers across Europe tore up crops grown from the Advanta seeds, some of the work paid for with government funds.

Schmeiser, who has grown rapeseed oil—known as Canola in the United States—on his 1,400 acres for 40 years, first detected trouble three summers ago. He sprayed the powerful Monsanto weed killer Roundup around electricity poles and in ditches on the borders of his farm. The herbicide killed all the weeds except for a thin scattering of rapeseed oil plants, which stubbornly refused to die.

Schmeiser had been crossbreeding his own rapeseed oil for more than 30 years, saving seeds from each year's harvest to replant his fields the following season, as farmers have done for thousands of years. Now, he wondered, had he accidentally created some kind of Frankenstein mutant? The same thing happened when he sprayed a trial strip 30 yards wide in the middle of one of his rapeseed oil fields near the hamlet of Bruno, Saskatchewan. Again, some of the plants refused to die.

Schmeiser mentioned his Frankenstein plants to neighboring farmers. Then private investigators arrived uninvited and snipped samples of his crops for DNA testing.

Some of the samples tested positive for a gene Monsanto had genetically engineered into rapeseed oil to produce an entirely new, high-yielding variety the company christened Roundup Ready Canola. The new gene, taken from a bacterium, enabled Roundup Ready Canola to survive Monsanto's flagship Roundup weed killer.

North American farmers were deeply impressed by the Monsanto breakthrough.

Roundup Ready Canola guaranteed increased profit margins because there was no longer any need for expensive herbicides. "Cleaner fields, higher yields" went the marketing slogan.

Some 20,000 farmers use the genetically modified rapeseed in Canada. But Monsanto, whose 210-acre complex near St. Louis is reputed to be the biggest biotechnology research center in the world, needed to recover the huge investment—an estimated £250 million (US$387 million) over 10 years—it had put into developing Roundup Ready Canola.

So the company patented the new gene and required farmers who bought the seed to sign a technology-use agreement preventing them from saving or replanting the seed or selling it to others.

To get Roundup Ready Canola's advantages, farmers have to buy new seeds from Monsanto every year. The agreement also states they must destroy any leftover seeds each year and let Monsanto inspect their fields. Craig Evans, Monsanto's biotechnology manager, said the company has the legal right to enforce its patent because "the gene still belongs to Monsanto, and you need the technology agreement to use the gene." In effect, Monsanto merely "leases" its seed.

"If we can't protect intellectual property, why would we make those investments?" Evans asked. "Twenty-thousand growers in Canada are watching us, and I want growers to know we are serious about protecting their interests." When Monsanto detected its gene in the samples taken from Schmeiser's fields, the company threw the book at him. Monsanto launched legal proceedings, accusing him of "stealing" its seeds and infringing its patent.

Monsanto demanded compensation to the entire value of Schmeiser's 1998 crop, plus punitive damages, court costs, and his signature on a non-disclosure agreement requiring him to stay silent about the affair. Monsanto considered the case critical if it hoped to protect its patent rights.

But the company had picked a dangerous man as an enemy. He had been Bruno's mayor for several years, a member of the Saskatchewan provincial parliament, and a hardy mountaineer who had made three attempts on Mount Everest.

He was outraged by Monsanto's behavior and countersued for £4.2 million (US$6.5 million) for trespass, crop contamination, and defamation, accusing the company of "arrogant, high-handed, and shocking conduct and callous disregard for the environment."

Schmeiser said he had never bought Monsanto's seed. Far from being a criminal who wanted to profit from stolen technology, Schmeiser declared he was a victim of that technology invading his property and crops uninvited. It is impossible for the amount of genetically modified rapeseed found in Schmeiser's fields to have been wind-driven, Monsanto lawyer Roger Hughes said last week, during the first of what is expected to be a three-week trial.

"This was something that was unleashed into the environment and cannot be controlled" countered Schmeiser's lawyer, Terry Zakreski. "The widespread use of Monsanto's genetically modified seeds has let a genie out of a bottle."

Schmeiser, who has hired an armed guard since counter-suing, says pollen from Monsanto's Roundup Ready Canola is all over the place. Some 75% of rapeseed oil on the prairies is grown from GM seed.

"The seed blows in the wind (from other farms) and cross-pollinates" Schmeiser said. "I suspect it blew onto my land from a neighbor who planted Monsanto seeds so close to my fields that there wasn't even a fence line in between. Or maybe from the big clouds of Canola seed I've watched blowing off loaded trucks passing my farm at harvest time."

"I think Monsanto is trying to make an example of me because other farmers have found unwanted GM seeds on their land" he added. "But I didn't watch my grandparents clear the land and build this farm just to have the profits taken over by a big multinational corporation." [End quoting]

This is an aspect of GM seed coercion tactics that the likes of Monsanto did not anticipate. While the GM pushers try to get all the farmers to use their products—and sign away the farmers' freedom and livelihoods in the process—these pushers did not anticipate that Mother Nature might spread around the seeds and cause the GM control plan to backfire. This courageous farmer deserves all the support that can be directed his way.

"INTRUSIVE"

CALIFORNIA BILL PERMITS

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 6/15/00: [quoting]

INTERROGATION OF CHILDREN

by Lawrence Morahan

CNS Senior Staff Writer, (CNSNews.com)

Protests by parents and civil rights groups are forcing changes in legislation passed by the California Assembly that seeks to permit the interrogation of children by pediatricians on such politically-charged subjects as whether their parents own handguns and what sort of television programs they watch.

The bill, authored by Representative Darrell Steinberg (D-Sacramento) and passed by one vote last month, will be made "less intrusive" before it goes to the state Senate committee on Health and Human Services.

The bill adopted recommendations by the American Academy of Pediatrics in a policy statement that advises pediatricians to screen children for risk factors indicating violence.

Under the bill, the AAP guidelines would be used by the Child Health and Disability Prevention program, which is administered by county governments for poor families under the supervision of the state Department of Health Services.

Passage of the bill caused an uproar after civil rights groups noted it would allow pediatricians to ask children as young as five whether their family had a history of mental illness, domestic violence, drug use, and whether the parents were unemployed or divorced.

The bill also sought to permit doctors to ask the child if his or her parents owned a handgun or whether the child had been exposed to violence, either directly in the family or indirectly through movies or TV.

"The impact of this bill on our privacy is frightening" a local resident wrote to the Sacramento Bee newspaper after learning about the possible impact of the bill.

"Interrogating children about their parents was a ploy much favored in Nazi Germany. It's obscene to consider such tactics in a free, democratic society—even in the name of 'doing good'" wrote another.

"This type of invasion of the family will interfere with trust between parents and health-care providers” said yet another. “It would be confusing for the children who may not understand that what they say could cause their separation from their parents.”

Steinberg claimed that people were reading into the bill what was not there and announced he would amend the legislation. An “entirely different” version of the legislation would be published in about 10 days, his office said.

“Children were never going to be the subject of questioning, and we are going to clarify that in the bill” a spokeswoman for Steinberg said Wednesday. “Our intent was to give parents additional tools to try and help their children if they have issues of concern.”

Steinberg made a commitment when the bill came off the Assembly floor that he would amend it to make sure it wasn’t intrusive or overly broad, and to clarify “the misconception that doctors would be talking to children about things, which was never the case” the spokeswoman said. Doctors would only be talking confidentially to parents, she said.

But even in amended form, the legislation opens the door to violations of privacy protected by the Constitution, legal watchdog groups report.

“All [Steinberg] is doing is taking the particular and making it more general” said Brad Dacus, president of the Sacramento-based Pacific Justice Institute, a non-profit organization that defends religious and family rights. Dacus’ watchdog group is monitoring the bill’s progress. “You’re still opening the door for questioning of the children” he said.

Dacus sees the bill as another attempt by legislators to broaden the government’s authority over the family. The current system rewards local governments with federal dollars for every child it registers in its Child Protective Services system, he said. An example of this abuse is the fact that one Sacramento county registered a 400% increase in the number of children in its books over the past 10 years, he said.

The overwhelming majority of parents that will be affected by the bill come from a lower income bracket, and they “will be more easily intimidated by the government agency and may even be lured to give information to the agency they would not normally give in the hope they would qualify for the services” Dacus said.

“The bottom line is (that) state and local governments have no business engaging in these kinds of fish-hunting expeditions to find kids who are the age of five or six that are allegedly mentally ill” Dacus said.

Depending on the final wording, “we may end up challenging it in the courts on constitutional grounds as an invasion of family privacy. We’re really alarmed” Dacus added. [End quoting]

So many different avenues are being exploited to attempt to control the public and eliminate basic freedoms. Notice how enticing monetary incentives for local governments are built into the federal legislation.

GUN CONTROL EQUALS GENOCIDE

From RUMOR MILL NEWS (RUMILLS), (<http://www.rumormillnews.com>), 6/19/00: [quoting]

Paul Harvey’s Comment On The Second Amendment

Before you read this think about when the time comes when they outlaw your fishing boat because it doesn’t meet emission standards or they confiscate your golf clubs because they create ozone when compressing that round sphere.

The point is, it begins somewhere and will end when they have you backed in the corner. Lead shot or steel.

HISTORY

Are you considering backing gun control laws? Do you think that because you may not own a gun, the rights guaranteed by the Second Amendment don’t matter?

CONSIDER THIS:

In 1929 the Soviet Union established gun control. From 1929 to 1953, approximately 20 million dissidents, unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

In 1911, Turkey established gun control. From 1915-1917, 1.5 million Armenians, unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

Germany established gun control in 1938 and from 1939 to 1945, 13 million Jews, gypsies, homosexuals, the mentally ill, and others, who were unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

China established gun control in 1935. From 1948 to 1952, 20 million political dissidents, unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

Guatemala established gun control in 1964. From 1964 to 1981, 100,000 Mayan Indians, unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

Uganda established gun control in 1970. From 1971 to 1979, 300,000 Christians, unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

Cambodia established gun control in 1956. From 1975 to 1977, one million “educated” people, unable to defend themselves, were rounded up and exterminated.

That places total victims who lost their lives because of gun control at approximately 56 million in the last century. Since we should learn from the mistakes of history, the next time someone talks in favor of gun control, find out which group of citizens they wish to have exterminated.

It has now been 12 months since gun owners in Australia were forced to surrender 640,381 personal firearms to be destroyed, a program costing the government more than $500 million dollars. The results Australia-wide: homicides are up 3.2%; assaults are up 8%; and armed robberies are up 44%. In that country’s state of Victoria, homicides with firearms are up 300%.

Over the previous 25 years, figures show a steady decrease in armed robberies and Australian politicians are on the spot and at a loss to explain how no improvement in “safety” has been observed after such monumental effort and expense was successfully expended in “ridding society of guns”.

It’s time to state it plainly: Guns in the hands of honest citizens save lives and property and, yes, gun-control laws only affect the law-abiding citizens. Take action before it’s too late; write or call your delegation.

If you are naive enough to think “It’ll never happen here” you will also believe that when the “agents of cleansing” come knocking on YOUR door that they “are here to help you”. [End quoting]

Does that not say it all? Go back and re-read Charlton Heston’s Harvard speech, printed back in our January 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM, for a superb refresher course on the larger picture here.

VETERANS VINDICATED

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 6/19/00: [quoting]

A $3 million Pentagon-sponsored study shows significant brain damage in Gulf War veterans due to exposure to low levels of nerve gas.

Researchers at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center found that N-acetyl-aspartate (NAA), a vital brain chemical necessary for the good health of brain neurons, was 25% lower in the sick veterans studied. NAA is considered a dramatic indicator of brain cell health, researchers noted. More than 15% of the 697,000 troops who served in the war have complained about mysterious chronic symptoms, such as memory loss, depression, and insomnia. The Pentagon discounted the complaints and later claimed that psychological stress was the cause. [End quoting]

Slowly the truth comes out after many of these veterans and families have suffered years of pain and many have died. A superb movie you can rent from, say, Blockbuster on this subject is the ironically titled Thanks Of A Grateful Nation which came about as close to telling the truth as was possible and still get made.

CLINTON’S WAR ON THE MILITARY: THE ANTHRAX VACCINE SCANDALS

From THE McALVANEY INTELLIGENCE ADVISOR (P.O. Box 84904, Phoenix, AZ

85071), 6/00: [quoting]

It is no secret that Bill Clinton has done massive damage to the U.S. military—cutting its size by over 52% to its lowest level since 1938; and, as General Albion Knight said, dramatically “weakening it physically, mentally, and spiritually”.

Given Clinton’s long-term hatred for the U.S. military and his long-term love for America’s enemies (Russia, China, Cuba, etc.), it should be no surprise that he has done everything in his power to demoralize and destroy the U.S. military. The forced anthrax inoculation of 2.4 million members of the U.S. armed services is his latest effort to demoralize and weaken our military.

It wasn’t just idle words when Bill Clinton said he ‘loathed’ the military. He has damaged U.S. Armed Services in so many ways that it’s no wonder morale, recruitment, and retention levels are at all-time lows. Clinton has used the military to indulge in social experimentation to appease the feminists and gays, and in interventionist experimentation to please his globalist friends. He has also ordered medical experimentation through compulsory anthrax vaccination.

It adds up to a shocking betrayal of the men and women in the U.S. Armed Services. Since the Pentagon is in denial and cover-up, we can thank CBS 60 Minutes for its February 6, 2000 exposé of the case of Major Sonnie Bates and thank Rep. Christopher Shay’s (R-CT) Subcommittee on National Security of the House Government Reform Committee for its scathing report on the vaccine, released February 17, 2000 (www.house.gov/reform/Ins) and reported in the New York Times 2/18/00.

Clinton responded to Congressional hearings by issuing Executive Order 13139 on September 30, 1999. It denies servicemen the right to refuse experimental vaccines that are “not yet approved by the FDA for its intended use”, language that obviously covers the anthrax vaccine.

The 60 Minutes segment was a sympathetic portrayal of Major Bates, a 14-year decorated pilot and the highest ranking of some 300 servicemen who have been punished for refusing the vaccine, with penalties from prison to bad-conduct discharge to “correctional custody”. The Pentagon then reduced the threat to court-martial Bates to a lesser punishment.

More than 1,000 servicemen with exemplary records are awaiting trial on a felony charge of refusing to take the anthrax shot. Hundreds more, including dozens of pilots described as “the cream of the crop”, have left the services. Congressional testimony indicated that, for every one who reported vaccine reactions, three others did not report them because they feared that it would be a career killer.

The lengthy report of the Shays Subcommittee concludes that the anthrax policy “lacks an essential element in a medical program: trust”. The Pentagon’s “absolutist declarations, heavy-handed propaganda, and ad hominum attacks” against those who question the policy are seen as another chapter in a long history of “military, medical malfeasance” that includes lies about nuclear testing, Agent Orange, and Gulf War drugs and vaccines.

The long-term effects of the anthrax vaccine have never been studied, but the immediate reactions include autoimmune disorders, lesions, rashes, memory lapses, thyroid problems, blurred vision, inability to drive or read, crippling bone-joint pain, loss of concentration, and chronic fatigue. The military has reacted by calling those so affected as liars, whiners, hypochondriacs, malingerers, hysterical, depressed, or in need of counseling. [McAlvaney note: Very similar to the attacks they launched at the 200,000 sick victims of Gulf War Illness.]

The Shay’s report states that the anthrax vaccine is based on old (1950s-era) medical technology, a “dangerously narrow scientific and medical foundation”. Currently, the “safety of the vaccine is not being monitored adequately”. A newly built anthrax vaccine plant failed its FDA safety inspection on December 13, 1999 (Washington Post, 12/14/99).

According to the Shay’s report, even the “efficacy of the vaccine against biological warfare is uncertain. The vaccine was approved for protection against cutaneous (under the skin) infection in an occupational setting, not for use as mass protection against weaponized, aerosolized anthrax”, which is how an enemy would use anthrax.

The sole and exclusive manufacturer of the anthrax vaccine, BioPort of Lansing, Michigan, has been cited repeatedly by the FDA for quality deficiencies. It not only has a checkered safety record, but also a checkered financial history.

The anthrax vaccine was originally produced by Michigan Biologics Products Institute. It was taken over in September 1998 by BioPort Corporation, a new company created by Intervac L.L.C., in which former Joint Chiefs Chairman Admiral William J. Crowe owned 22.5% of the stock, even though he hadn’t invested a penny (ABCNEWS.com, 3-12-99).

The very next month, BioPort was awarded a Department of Defense (DOD) contract valued at $25.7 million to produce anthrax vaccine. Crowe will be remembered as the former Joint Chiefs Chairman who endorsed Bill Clinton for President in 1992 and gave Clinton “cover” when his draft record was under attack.

On August 5, 1999, the DOD agreed to pay

BioPort nearly double the price specified in the contract: $49.8 million instead of $25.7 million, including advance payments of $18.7 million. DOD also indemnified MBPJ/BioPort against all liability from adverse reactions because, according to Army Secretary Louis Caldera, the vaccine involves: “unusually hazardous risks associated with the potential for adverse reactions in some recipients and the possibility that the desired immunological effect will not be obtained by all recipients”.

It is particularly dangerous to require all service women to receive the anthrax shots since the Centers for Disease Control has warned that pregnant women should not be vaccinated: “because it is not known whether the anthrax vaccine can cause fetal harm” (www.cdc.gov/ncidod/dbmd/diseaseinfo/anthrax_g.htm). Most military women are of childbearing age and at least 10% are pregnant at any one time.

The mandatory anthrax vaccination of 2.4 million members of the Armed Services should be terminated immediately. And all those who have had the courage to speak out against this policy, which doesn’t pass the common-sense test, should be restored to duty and their convictions and punishment expunged from their records. [End of Schlafly article.]

These inoculations, like the experimental Gulf War vaccines forcibly administered to all of our troops, have the potential of making our entire armed forces sick, or of severely weakening them before future conflicts. The first to be forced to take these “experimental” anthrax inoculations should be the Commander and Chief of the U.S. Armed Forces—Bill Clinton.

Many of our best and brightest young people, who might otherwise seek careers in the U.S. military (this writer’s son included), are avoiding same because of these forced experimental inoculations. Bill Clinton and his Marxist friends have found yet another way to undermine and weaken the U.S. military. Is this, as General Knight suggests, what a Marxist president would do? [End quoting]

What better way for the so-called “elite” controllers to “level the playing field” for a One World Government than by covertly weakening the defensive capabilities of a strong and potentially independent nation like the United States?

INTERNATIONAL RECTIFIER ANNOUNCES NEW GENERATION OF POWER CHIPS

Breakthrough In Electronic Motor Control
Could Turn Electricity Shortage Into Surplus

From the INTERNET, 6/22/00: [quoting]
Los Angeles-based International Rectifier (NYSE:IRF—news) today announced a new generation of power chips that can reduce electricity consumption in a wide range of home appliances and industrial motors.

According to the Electric Power Research Institute, motors account for over half the energy consumed in the U.S. With energy savings as great as 50%, these power chips offer huge potential to relieve a power grid that is already falling short of peak summer demand.

These chips—called power integrated circuits—combine integrated circuit (IC) “brain” with power “brawn”. Maytag has already adopted the archetype chip for their proprietary product family, which substantially cuts energy use and improves performance in its Neptune washers.

During the next 12 months, Electrolux, Frigidaire, and other major appliance manufacturers plan to use the new generation of these chips in their most advanced home appliances. Market leaders in factory automation and other industrial applications are adopting the same proprietary IR technology to improve performance and cut electricity consumption.

Most standard motors run full-on or off, with no ability to change speed or torque. International Rectifier’s proprietary new chips make it possible to vary the speed and action of the motor to wash clothes more gently, control refrigerator and air conditioner temperatures more precisely, and gain versatility in leading-edge manufacturing plants.

International Rectifier’s new IC chips represent the latest advancements in a technology called power management. “Power management breaks electrical power into small packets of electricity and then efficiently delivers exactly the type of power the end product needs, exactly when it needs it” explained David Tam, Vice President of Power Integrated Circuits for International Rectifier:

“IR is applying the latest advancements in power technology to motors. We are integrating more and more functions into a single analog power IC that makes motors more versatile, more reliable, and far more energy-efficient. And the greater level of integration makes the technology more cost-effective for mass-market applications.”

As major manufacturers worldwide adopt this new technology, household appliances could eventually house more semiconductors than a typical home office does today. Advancements in power management chips offer the potential to recoup much of the approximately $70 billion of electricity wasted every year by inefficient motors.

This is helpful but I have an uneasy feeling that they’ll charge enough extra for their products, by the time they get into your hands, that you’ll be prepaying any savings in your electric bill to the motor and appliance manufacturers for a few years.

And what kind of a step in progress is this compared to the “free energy” devices being purposely hidden from public awareness to satisfy the greed of those who wish to maintain their great profits with current technology? We could have automobiles (or other gasoline engines) that get well over 200 miles to the gallon—but who wins and who loses if such engines are allowed?

CLINTON LOOKING TO BUY A HOME IN ENGLAND

I have read that Clinton is looking at homes in England and the possibility that he will use it mainly to escape possible prosecution for his illegal actions while president of the US.

TESLA, AT 78, BARES NEW “DEATH BEAM”!

From the INTERNET, 6/23/00: [quoting]

Invention Powerful Enough To Destroy 10,000 Planes 250 Miles Away,
He Asserts

Defensive Weapon Only

Scientist, In Interview, Tells Of Apparatus That He Says
Will Kill Without Trace

Nikola Tesla, father of modern methods of generation and distribution of electrical energy, who was 78 years old yesterday, announced a new invention, or inventions, which he said, he considered the most important of the 700 made by him so far.

He has perfected a method and apparatus, Dr. Tesla said yesterday in an interview at the Hotel New Yorker, which will send concentrated beams of particles through the free air of such tremendous energy that they will bring down a fleet of 10,000 enemy airplanes at a distance of 250 miles from a defending nation’s border and will cause armies of millions to drop dead in their tracks.

This was over 55 years ago. Can you just imagine the technology that the so-called “elite” have now?

For those of you who don’t yet know who this man was: He was one of the greatest geniuses ever on this planet and the power elite broke him, discredited him, left him penniless, and finally had him killed to shut him up after they stole all of his knowledge and patents. They also removed most information about Tesla from the libraries and schools so you would not learn about him, and then gave several other inventors credit for many of Tesla’s inventions, particularly Marconi (radio) and Edison (electric power generation and distribution).

LARRY NICHOLS BEATEN

From FREE AMERICAN NEWSMAGAZINE, 6/2000: [quoting]

In what appears to be a staple of the current Administration, outspoken Clinton critic and talk show host, Larry Nichols, was beaten with a baseball bat by unknown assailants at his home in Conway, Arkansas.

Best known for his appearance on the video Clinton Chronicles, Larry Nichols has appeared on innumerable talk shows and finally got one of his own, on WWCR 12.160 short wave, daily at 10 a.m. central time.

An unknown Hispanic knocked on his door, telling him that he thought he had run over Larry’s pet dog. When Larry rushed outside to see, he was set upon by two men wielding baseball bats. He was struck many times about the body and suffered 7 broken ribs and other contusions.

Police had no leads and Larry was unable to see his attackers clearly.

The absence of firearms leads to the speculation that Clinton had sent some of his kinder, gentler anti-gun folk to do his dirty work. This was obviously a message to Nichols, who has endured at least eight of these type of attacks over the eight years that Clinton has been in office.

Nichols has just completed a book about Clinton’s methods which he says are destroying America. Nichols says that Clinton’s “circle of power” will maintain its grip on this country if they are not stopped.

Obviously, his message hit a nerve.

[End quoting]

Each time such an event as this occurs, it only causes MORE attention to be focused upon whatever is trying to be stopped from reaching public awareness. Another example was Richard Hoagland’s “heart attack” about a year ago now. In the aftermath, that only brought forth an even larger groundswell of support for him and interest in what his research team has been discovering about space exploration, and Mars in particular, that NASA and NASA’s bosses did not want the public to know about.

FAMED COLUMNIST SAYS SOUTH AFRICA REGRESSING TO JUNGLE STATUS

From FREE AMERICAN NEWSMAGAZINE, 6/2000: [quoting]

By Ross Benson in Johannesburg.

I have seen cities abandoned in war. This is the first city I have ever seen abandoned to the barbarians in a time of peace.

That South Africa is still in one piece is a tribute to this moral force, but this is not a country where it is safe to stand on a street corner eating fruit or watching games of chance, no matter where you are—and certainly not if you happen to be White.

“What kind of government is it that could allow this to happen?” asks Troy Leon, leader of the predominantly White Democratic Party—which, against all expectations, took nearly 10% of the vote in the April general election to become the official opposition.

You do, and you remember them as you stroll through the botanical gardens or walk along the seafronts of Cape Town and Durban.

They create the kind of fear that has you leaping at shadows and climbing out of bed in the middle of the night to check, yet again, that you have double-locked the door.

If you live here, you make sure the first payments you make every month are to the “armed response” security firm that guards your house. But whatever precautions you take, they’re never enough.

Thapelo Mofokeng, who runs his own transport company and drove me into Soweto, tried to add up the number of his friends who had been mugged. He lost count.

Two women a mutual friend asked me to look up were not receiving visitors when I got here. They are still recovering after being robbed and badly beaten in their home.

You cannot have dinner with a politician or businessman without being regaled with the horror stories that are driving 7000 highly qualified doctors, lawyers, and business people out of the country every year.

As Pieter Meyer, one of the security men who accompanied me, remarks: “It isn’t something you read in the papers or hear about on the television news any more. It’s happening to your friends, your brother, his wife, your sister, your mother.”

Even though Meyer carries a gun, he knows it could happen to him. In Mandela’s “Rainbow Nation” the dream is running blood red.

Nowhere is that brought home more forcefully than in Johannesburg. Built on the largest seam of gold ever discovered, this was once the richest city in Africa. A gleaming steel and glass citadel rising out of the brown ocean of the veldt, it was a testament to the economic power of the White community that built it, but also an example of what can be achieved by hard work and individual enterprise.

The skyscrapers are still there, but the people who gave them life and prosperity have gone, driven out by the hordes of squatters, beggars, and illegal traders who bought Mandela’s promise of “a better life for all”—and demanded instant delivery.

Barbeques made of old oil cans blaze in the marble foyers of what used to be the headquarters of banks and airlines. There are goats tethered in hallways. Corrugated-iron huts have sprung up on the once manicured lawns.

This is not an environment in which any respectable business person, whether they be Black or White, can live or work—and most have fled.

The Carlton Hotel, where I used to stay, has closed and sold all its contents. The Holiday Inn is a deserted fortress, its 800 empty rooms protected by reinforced steel shutters.

South African Airways, that international symbol of pride, has decamped to the comparative safety of the suburbs. The Stock Exchange plans to follow suit, and there has even been talk of the mining companies, which built this town, going the same way. The Supreme Court is still here, but the muggers who prowl the alleyways leading to it aren’t open to appeal; that has helped ease the backlog of cases.

It gets worse at night. As dusk falls, the streets begin filling with prostitutes and criminals pushing drugs, and pills that turn a Black skin White—before eventually killing you, if AIDS hasn’t claimed you first. Up to 10% of the population carry the virus and three-quarters of the health budget will soon be spent on treating the incurable.

You can hear the occasional sound of gunfire rolling down from Hillbrow—by cruel coincidence, Johannesburg’s first integrated neighborhood.

The police keep promising to move in and clean up the place. They never do, but it probably wouldn’t make any difference. The minister in charge of so-called security recently admitted to parliament that a policeman is three times more likely to commit a serious crime than an average member of the public.

DEATH BY PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

From The Bob Livingston Letter, 3/00: [quoting]

The dictionary term is iatrogenic death. This means death induced in a patient by a physician’s activity, manner, or therapy, according to the American Heritage Dictionary.

Our society has many contradictions and quirks, but they don’t seem to bother us.

The politicians want gun confiscation while they purposely overlook 250,000 deaths a year at the hands of the medical establishment’s drug deaths. All the wars in history and all gun deaths are no match for drug deaths. And I don’t mean illegal drugs. I mean prescription drugs.

If we were sane, we would say this is nothing but mass murder. It makes gun control the biggest hypocrisy on Earth.

In fact, many serious crimes are committed by victims of Prozac, Luvox, Solof or Paxil.

Prescription drugs can turn people into monsters. If people would read the inserts of the everyday drugs that they are taking they would run from doctors. These inserts tell you the high risk, but who reads anymore?

Many people are dead by prescriptions. Seniors beware! Fraud, deceit and murder are legal in America. [End quoting]

FDA USES LEGAL PLOY UPHOLDS BAN ON NUTRIENT

From THE SPOTLIGHT, by Don Harkins, 5/22/00: [quoting]

The “Federal Death Agency” continues to play games while thousands are denied a cheap and effective treatment for neurological disorders.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has filed motions in Florida federal court to prevent Jay Kimball of Discovery And Experimental Development Inc., from defending the legal status of the nutritive plant product, Liquid Deprenyl Citrate (LDC). The federal agency is prosecuting the Florida medical products developer for marketing LDC as an over-the-counter dietary supplement rather than as a prescription drug.

“The government anticipates that defendant Kimball will seek to introduce evidence at trial that deprenyl meets the statutory definition of a dietary supplement. Furthermore, the government anticipates that Kimball will assert that because deprenyl meets that definition it is not a ‘drug’ and a ‘prescription drug’ as charged” stated FDA attorneys in a motion heard April 27. Curiously, in the very next statement the FDA admits that the terms, “dietary supplement” or “nutrient” and “drug” are not mutually exclusive.

“In a complete about-face, the government files motions with the Tampa federal court asserting that LDC is both a drug and a dietary supplement. The government then asks the court to preclude us from admitting any evidence that would support our claims that LDC should be classified as a dietary supplement by law” commented Kimball.

The FDA has been persecuting Kimball since 1990 when his small medical products company became the first to successfully stabilize selegiline in a manner that has produced zero reported negative side effects after thousands of applications.

The FDA justifies its persecution of people who use certain products based upon “intent”.

The FDA attorneys went on to cite several court rulings that determine a substance to be a dietary supplement or a drug based on the application and not on the chemical composition of the substance in question.

"If an item fits the statutory definition found at 21 U.S.C. 321(g) (1), as a product intended for use 'in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment or prevention of disease in man...' irrespective of whether it also meets the definition of a dietary supplement, it is a drug" FDA attorneys argue.

In other words, if you use ordinary table salt to enhance athletic performance, then table salt is a dietary supplement. If you place table salt into capsules because you wish to use salt to cure your cancer, according to the FDA, table salt is to be considered a drug.

The method of action for LDC is not disputed by the FDA.

As we age, the body's ability to produce dopamine decreases. Aging is, among other things, a direct result of diminished dopamine production. The manifestation of degenerative diseases such as Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's disease, multiple sclerosis and cancer are also the result of the body's inability to produce adequate amounts of dopamine which provides for bodily systems to maintain peak performance, repair damage, and resist disease. Natural selegeline derived from the ephedra plant is absorbed into the body where it promotes the body's ability to produce dopamine. LDC, in essence, boosts the body's immune response so that it can begin repairing the ravages of degenerative diseases.

"Since the court allowed the FDA to enforce a ban on the use of LDC last fall, the quality of life has been dramatically reduced in thousands of people" said Kimball. "The ban is currently killing many people afflicted with Parkinson's disease. We know of one death already."

Since 1991, Kimball has been jailed twice. FDA agents and their state and local law enforcement deputies have raided his home and office on four occasions. Kimball and his company have suffered numerous other ultimately frivolous and malicious persecutions and investigations. [End quoting]

The pressure is on to close down all true healing professionals—those who are not under the control of the drug companies and their many brainwashing facilities also known as medical schools. But the wall continues to crumble for these would-be controllers as more and more people are fed up with the medical establishment and more and more people are actively seeking alternative healing modalities. Just look at the statistics of those who are injured or killed because of prescription drugs and you have more than enough reason to turn toward a more sane avenue for healing. For example:

ARE DOCTORS MORE DANGEROUS THAN GUN OWNERS??

From The Bob Livingston Letter, 5/00:

[quoting]

Brett Axton of Rock Mountain Roosters in Colorado, forwarded copy from an article in the Seattle Washington Post Intelligencer concerning accidental deaths caused by physicians. The original statistics were compiled by Laura Key.

Mr. Axton wrote: "This triggered a chain of thought that resulted in the person cruising the web (not me) for doing some statistics and doing a few calculations.

- Number of physicians in the US: 700,000.
- Accidental drug deaths per year: 120,000.
- Number of gun owners in the US: 80,000,000.
- Number of accidental gun deaths per year (all age groups): 1,500.
- therefore, doctors are approximately 9,000 times more dangerous than gun owners."

Steve Daley sent information from the January-February American Handgunner. It contained similar information that the odds are 4:1 that you will die while being treated by a doctor versus a gunshot wound. (1 million Americans are injured in hospitals every year, of which 180,000 die, versus 40,000 deaths a year from gunshots.)

A 1998 study published in the Journal Of The American Medical Association (JAMA) estimated that 106,000 HOSPITAL patients die, and 2.2 million are injured each year by adverse reactions to prescription drugs. Within the GENERAL population, tens of thousands of people are hurt or killed each year by drugs that are supposed to HEAL them. Patients should never assume that drugs prescribed by a doctor or dispensed by a pharmacy are SAFE.

December 1999, was NOT a good month for doctors. On December 13, 1999 a Senate health subcommittee opened hearings on a report that medical errors kill between 44,000 and 98,000 hospitalized Americans every year.

The Institute of Medicine recommended an end to medicine's "culture of secrecy" about the problem. One of the Institute of Medicine's recommendations is that a mandatory national reporting system be established, so that experts can seek out patterns of problems and take action.

The American Medical Association (AMA) opposes such a system, saying doctors will continue to keep mistakes secret if they fear discussing them can lead to punishment or lawsuits. Dr. Nancy Dickey (former president of AMA) said if consumers see data on mistakes, they must be put in context: "Take, for example, that some of the best hospitals get sued because they care for the sickest patients, those most likely to die."

A study published in the December 2, 1999, Annals Of Internal Medicine looked at a policy in effect since 1987 at the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Lexington, KY. The policy calls for "full disclosure to patients who are injured either accidentally or through medical negligence". Dr. Steve S. Kraman, hospital Chief of Staff, said: "This diminishes the anger and desire for revenge that often motivate patients' litigation."

He added that plaintiffs' attorneys become more willing to negotiate a settlement without trying to punish the institution with a big verdict. Arthur Levin, director of the New York City-based Center for Medical Consumers said: "It flies in the face of the perception of most healthcare providers who think 'My God, if I admit my error, I'm a dead duck in the courtroom'—I think it's a very healthy move." BIG BROTHER'S PLAN BACKFIRES ON LOCAL OFFICIALS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 6/5/00: [quoting]

Cameras set up at stoplights to catch drivers who run redlights exposed more than the speeders. It uncovered some real discrepancies with the traffic laws.

By F.C. Blahut

Has the police department in your town installed cameras at certain key intersections to catch people running red lights?

It's the latest trend. Vienna, VA, a Washington, D.C. suburb, is typical. Or is it? And is that good?

Sold to the public as a two-pronged effort—an attack on reckless drivers and scofflaws and a safety measure to reduce accidents—the idea is the darling of the mainstream media.

In Vienna, Va., the town installed cameras to enforce traffic laws at three of its 13 signalized intersections late last year

Enter the National Motorists Association (NMA), which discovered some interesting statistics.

In 1997, there were 100 redlight citations issued for the entire year. After eight months of camera enforcement at only three intersections, approximately 2,357 citations had been issued. Were the cops really missing that many red light runners?

The figures alarmed NMA member Gene Quinn, according to the National Motorists Association News (May/June 2000).

In January, Quinn began measuring the yellow-light time (cops and traffic-control like the term "amber", but the hoi polloi still say "yellow") given drivers at the intersections with cameras and without.

CHECK THE LAW

Then he checked the engineering codes and the Virginia state laws relating to yellow-light time. He discovered that 33% of the intersections measured, including one photo-enforced intersection, failed to give even the minimum yellow-light time needed to make a so-called "safe" stop.

None of the intersections provided the minimum yellow-light time required for safe passage and clearance of the intersection.

As of May, the yellow-light time provided to drivers was still below the minimum required by state law, says the NMA.

Quinn contacted his town's officials and they have promised to do something about the timing. But will they be returning the fines paid by uninformed motorists? Not yet. Quinn contacted the NMA and enlisted the aid of other interested motorists in his area and they have been measuring the timing of yellow lights against state laws. The results are not encouraging.

So far, says the NMA: "All of the intersections measured have failed to provide the minimum yellow-light time required for a vehicle to make safe passage and clearance of an intersection and many fail to provide sufficient yellow light time to stop."

According to Virginia law—and probably the law in your state—drivers are entitled to the yellow-light time to accomplish both of these tasks.

If you've been cited for running a red light, you might want to check the timing of the yellow light, says the NMA.

Even local officials have to obey the law. [End quoting]

One point the above article does not emphasize is just how much of a cash cow these new automated systems are for the towns who employ them. Just like the incentives dangled at state and local levels to push federal programs of a dubious nature, the revenue aspect is luring more and more of these systems into Everytown USA—while we get used to "big brother" watching us in more and more ways. Which leads to the following:

"GRADUAL HABITUATION" HOW WE ARE ALLOWING OURSELVES TO BE TURNED INTO SLAVES

From Ken McCarthy, Brasscheck, <ken@brasscheck.com>, 5-27-00: [quoting]

"What happened was the gradual habituation of the people, little by little, to being governed by surprise, to receiving decisions deliberated in secret, to believing that the situation was so complicated that the government had to act on information which the people could not understand, or so dangerous that, even if people could understand it, it could not be released because of national security. The crises and reforms (real reforms too) so occupied the people that they did not see the slow motion underneath, of the whole process of government growing remoter and remoter.

To live in the process is absolutely not to notice it—please try to believe me—unless one has a much greater degree of political awareness, acuity, than most of us ever had occasion to develop. Each step was so small, so inconsequential, so well explained or, on occasion, 'regretted' but necessary.

Believe me, this is true. Each act, each occasion is worse than the last, but only a little worse. You wait for the next and the next. You wait for one shocking occasion, thinking that others, when such a shock comes, will join you in resisting somehow.

Suddenly it all comes down, all at once. You see what you are, what you have done or, more accurately, what you haven't done (for that was all that was required of most of us: that we did nothing).... You remember everything now, and your heart breaks. Too late. You are compromised beyond repair."

A German professor describing the coming of fascism. From They Thought They Were Free by Milton Mayer, a stunning and chilling account of ordinary people in extraordinary times. [End quoting]

To top it off, every time someone would try to warn the people, the so-called "elite" controllers trained the masses of people to call them scaremongers or threaten them or their family or worse. So then the people started keeping their mouths shut, afraid of being hurt mentally or physically.

The only thing the people have going for them is if a large enough group WAKE UP before the crooks drop the final noose around our whole society. WITH GOD'S HELP WE CAN AND WILL DO IT!

NEVER FALL FOR THESE SCAMS!

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 5/26/00: [quoting]

I'm sure some of you may have seen this before. If so, it doesn't hurt to offer it again. To be aware is to be alive!

Life, Liberty, Property —Ric

This notice was posted on JCPenney's e-mail this morning:

To all Female Associates:

Recently, on Inside Edition, there was an article about several new scams to abduct women:

1. In one, a man comes up to a woman in a mall or shopping center and asks if she likes pizza. When she says she does, he offers her $10,000 to shoot a commercial for pizza, but they need to go outside where the lighting is better. When the woman goes out of the mall, she is abducted and assaulted.

2. Another ploy is where a very nicely dressed man asks a woman if she would be in a Public Service announcement to discourage drug use. The man explains that they don't want professional actors or celebrities; they want the average woman and/or mother to do this. Once she leaves the mall, she is a victim.

3. The third ploy, and the most successful, happens when a very frantic man comes running into the mall and asks a woman to please help him, his baby is not breathing. She runs out of the mall following him and also becomes a victim.

These have been happening in well-lit parking areas, in daylight, as well as nighttime, all over the country. The abductor usually uses a van to abduct the woman.

Inside Edition set up a test in a mall and 10 out of 15 women went out of the mall on the Pizza scam and the PSA scam. All of them went out of the mall on the Baby scam.

Please pass this along to your friends and family. Now that it has been shown on nationwide TV, there are bound to be copycats of this. The third one, I think, is the scariest. You might resist pizza or becoming a commercial celebrity, but who would be able to resist a frantic father asking for help for his child?

A woman was shopping at the Tuttle Mall in Columbus. She came out to her car and saw she had a flat. She got her jack and spare out of the trunk. A man in a business suit came up and started to help her. When the tire had been replaced, he asked for a ride to his car on the opposite side of the mall.

Feeling uncomfortable about doing this, she stalled for a while, but he kept pressing her. She finally asked why he was on this side of the mall if his car was on the other side. He claimed he had been talking to friends.

Still uncomfortable, she told him that she had just remembered something that she had forgotten to pick up in the mall and she left him and went back inside the mall. She reported the incident to the mall security and they went out to her car. The man was nowhere in sight.

Opening her trunk, she discovered a briefcase the man had set inside while helping her with her tire. Inside the briefcase were a rope and a butcher knife. When she took the tire to be fixed, the mechanic informed her that there was nothing wrong with her tire, that it was flat because the air had been let out of it.

PLEASE BE SAFE AND NOT SORRY!

ALWAYS BE ALERT AND USE YOUR HEAD!

PASS THIS ALONG TO EVERY WOMAN YOU KNOW. [End quoting]

WHO ARE THE REAL TERRORISTS?

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, 6/00: [quoting]

In a letter sent to The Washington Post, a letter which the paper still has yet to run, Dr. Norbert Bikales compares last April's police-state abduction of Elian Gonzales to a similar event he experienced in a Berlin apartment more than 60 years ago—when the Nazis came to his house and took his father and brother away.

"But unlike the Clinton-Reno goons who first gained admittance by breaking down the door" Dr. Bikales says, "even the Gestapo men who came that night rang the door bell, wore no masks, spoke quietly, and did not remove their sidearms from their holsters.

"They carried sidearms, not automatic weapons. The SS Luger was, after all, a pistol.

"Whenever it is convenient, government and the dominant media refer to Nazi Germany and the [so called] Holocaust as a reminder of how evil and horrible people can be toward one another. Funny they never compare Hitler's SS to U.S. federal agents whose behavior of late makes the SS appear as choirboys." [End quoting]

Many people were so shocked by what they saw on television at the time of the Elian Gonzales abduction and raid that they are in a state of denial. Meanwhile, most of the rest have been properly conditioned by the violence of modern movies to simply accept what happened as a fact of life. Go back and re-read our outlay on this case in the May 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM for a number of events that did not make it to the news reports and which add important layers to the intrigue puzzle.

TWO-WAY MIRRORS

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 6/4/00: [quoting]

How to determine if a mirror is 2-way or not. (Not a joke!)

Not to scare you, but to make you aware. This was passed on by a policewoman who travels all over the US and gives seminars and techniques for business women.

HOW TO DETECT A 2-WAY MIRROR

When we visit toilets, bathrooms, hotel rooms, changing rooms, etc., how many of you know for sure that the seemingly ordinary mirror hanging on the wall is a real mirror, or actually a 2-way mirror where "they" can see you, but you can't see them?

There have been many cases of people installing 2-way mirrors in female changing rooms. It is very difficult to positively identify the surface by just looking at it.

So, how do we determine with any amount of certainty what type of mirror we are looking at? Just conduct this simple test: Place the tip of your fingernail against the reflective surface, and if there is a GAP between your fingernail and the image of the nail, then it is a GENUINE mirror. However, if your fingernail DIRECTLY TOUCHES the image of your nail, then BEWARE, FOR IT IS [likely] A 2-WAY MIRROR.

So remember, every time you see a mirror, do the "fingernail test". It doesn't cost you anything. It is simple to do, and it might save you from peeping toms!

Remember: "No space, leave the place!" Ladies: Share this with your girlfriends. Men: Share this with your wives, daughters, girlfriends, or any woman you care about.

I thought this was worth passing along.

—Connie [End quoting]

This is probably a good rule of thumb to keep in mind. What you are really checking for is whether the mirror is coated with reflective material on the front surface or on the other side of the thickness of glass, called a "rear-surface reflecting" mirror. However, from an optical engineering point of view, there is nothing to stop the manufacture of a 2-way mirror with a semitransparent coating applied to the REAR surface of the mirror, which would pass the fingernail test. Thus the policelady's test is helpful but not certain.

A SIMPLE SMILE

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 6/1/00: [quoting]

I know this woman and she's that honest.

—Charles Beaudry

Such a blessing. I just had to pass it along!

I am a mother of three (ages 14, 12, 3) and have recently completed my college degree. The last class I had to take was Sociology. The teacher was absolutely inspiring with the qualities that I wish every human being had been graced with. Her last project of the term was called "Smile".

The class was asked to go out and smile at three people and document their reactions. I am a very friendly person and always smile at everyone and say hello anyway, so, I thought, this would be a piece of cake, literally.

Soon after we were assigned the project, my husband, youngest son, and I went out to McDonald's one crisp March morning. It was just our way of sharing special playtime with our son. We were standing in line, waiting to be served, when all of a sudden everyone around us began to back away, and then even my husband did.

I did not move an inch; an overwhelming feeling of panic welled up inside of me as I turned to see why they had moved. As I turned around I smelled a horrible "dirty body" smell, and there, standing behind me, were two poor homeless men. As I looked down at the short gentleman, close to me, he was "smiling". His beautiful sky-blue eyes were full of God's Light as he searched for acceptance.

He said "Good day!" as he counted the few coins he had been clutching. The second man fumbled with his hands as he stood behind his friend. I realized the second man was mentally deficient and the blue-eyed gentleman was his salvation. I held my tears as I stood there with them.

The young lady at the counter asked him what they wanted. He said "Coffee is all, Miss" because that was all they could afford. (If they wanted to sit in the restaurant and warm up, they had to buy something. He just wanted to be warm.) Then I really felt it—the compulsion was so great I almost reached out and embraced the little man with the blue eyes. That is when I noticed all eyes in the restaurant were set on me, judging my every action.

I smiled and asked the young lady behind the counter to give me two more breakfast meals on a separate tray. I then walked around the corner to the table that the men had chosen as a resting spot. I put the tray on the table and laid my hand on the blue-eyed gentleman's cold hand. He looked up at me with tears in his eyes and said "Thank you!" I leaned over, began to pat his hand and said "I did not do this for you. God is here working through me to give you hope." I started to cry as I walked away to join my husband and son.

When I sat down, my husband smiled at me and said "That is why God gave you to me, honey. To give me hope." We held hands for a moment and, at that time, we knew that only because of the Grace that we had been given were we able to, but we are believers. That day showed me the pure Light of God's sweet love.

I returned to college, on the last evening of class, with this story in hand. I turned in "my project" and the instructor read it. Then she looked up at me and said "Can I share this?" I slowly nodded as she got the attention of the class. She began to read and that is when I knew that we, as human beings and being part of God, share this need to heal people and be healed. In my own way I had touched the people at McDonald's, my husband, son, instructor, and every soul who shared the classroom on the last night I spent as a college student.

I graduated with one of the biggest lessons I would ever learn: UNCONDITIONAL ACCEPTANCE.

Much love and compassion is sent to each and every person who may read this and learn how to LOVE PEOPLE AND USE THINGS— NOT LOVE THINGS AND USE PEOPLE.

This is so true!

Learning:

I've learned that having a child fall asleep in your arms is one of the most peaceful feelings in the world;

- that being kind is more important than being right;

- that you should never say no to a gift from a child;

- that I can always pray for someone when I don't have the strength to help him in some other way;

- that no matter how serious your life requires you to be, everyone needs a friend to act goofy with;

- that sometimes all a person needs is a hand to hold and a heart to understand;

- that life is like a roll of toilet paper—the closer it gets to the end, the faster it goes;

- that money doesn't buy class;

- that under everyone's hard shell is someone who wants to be appreciated and loved;

- that to ignore the facts does not change the facts;

- that when you plan to get even with someone, you are only letting that person continue to hurt you;

- that love, not time, heals all wounds;

- that everyone you meet deserves to be greeted with a smile;

- that life is tough, but I'm tougher;
- that opportunities are never lost—someone will take the ones you miss;

- that when you harbor bitterness, happiness will dock elsewhere;

- that one should keep his words both soft and tender, because tomorrow he may have to eat them;

- that a smile is an inexpensive way to improve your looks;

- that I can't choose how I feel, but I can choose what I do about it;

- that when your newly born grandchild holds your little finger in his little fist, that you're hooked for life;

- that everyone wants to live on top of the mountain, but all the happiness and growth occurs while you're climbing it;

- that I have a wealth of good friends, and my life would be a terrible place to live without them. [End quoting]

Not a bad list of guidelines for happiness, is it?!

HAVANA LOOKS TO REACH GOALS WITH ELIAN CASE

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 6/30/00: [quoting]

"At Last in the Fatherland!" declared the front page headline in the official newspaper Granma, above pictures of Elian Gonzales stepping off the plane and being swept up in a relative's arms, an emotional end to the seven-month custody battle that captivated this nation. Despite the triumphal headline, the newspaper quickly reminded readers that the child's return was just the beginning of renewed efforts by Cuban officials who want to see an end to the trade embargo. They contend that the embargo and other policies weaken their economy and encourage people, such as Elian's mother, to risk their lives at sea while seeking political asylum elsewhere.

For those reasons, the Cuban government plans to continue the public rallies and televised discussions that provided a daily political play-by-play during the Elian custody battle, including a rally in Mantanillo, where 200,000 people are expected.

Foreign officials based in Havana see the continuing campaign as an attempt to tap into the Cuban public's overwhelming support for Elian's return in the hope of rekindling a revolutionary ardor that had cooled in recent years, especially among young Cubans who were not yet born during the Cuban revolution. They said the battle over Elian was the perfect issue and opportunity for President Fidel Castro to restore his appeal.

"He got himself front and center before the country on a daily basis" said one foreign official. "He re-established himself in his image as the sole leader in Cuba who still has the oomph and fire to carry on the revolution. He got an issue through which he could mobilize the youth, who are his audience and a group that he had not had effective outreach to before."

It is not clear whether, or how, the Cuban leader will be able to sustain his new appeal in the coming months. Some people said they had tired of the government-sponsored rallies for Elian that took them away from work and home. Many said they simply wanted the boy home with his family. And other Cubans said they would now like to see something else on television besides the hours-long talks about the ills of American society.

"Politics is politics" said Maria Gonzales, who was shopping at a Havana market. "Human feelings should not be mixed up with that."

Yet Thursday's Cuban newspapers were filled not only with praise for Elian and his father, Juan Miguel Gonzales, but also for the many youths and students who attended the countless public rallies organized by the government. While insisting the government would not trot out the child as a symbol, the official newspaper made clear Elian's importance to a battle that it said must continue "immediately and without a truce".

"We have to enjoy internally the conquest of reuniting the boy with his family" one article said. "Ahead of us is the challenge that no new Elians continue to appear."

Already, the huge billboards with Elian's face have been replaced by others that call for the United States to end its Cuban Adjustment Act, which grants political asylum to Cubans who reach U.S. soil. But while the emotional custody battle strongly affected many Cubans, these more abstract policy issues now being tackled by the Cuban government may not have the same resonance.

"Elian's story was so visual with this child and his father" said one foreign official. "Can you keep that up with the Cuban Adjustment Act without any such visuals? It will be difficult."

Elian's case was a godsend for the Cuban government, which had spent much of 1999 stepping away from the openings of previous years and taking a harder line to restore public order and to crack down on dissidents. During a summit meeting of Spanish-speaking nations last November, Cuban officials cringed when many visiting dignitaries went out of their way to visit several dissidents. [End quoting]

A HORSE IN BALANCE WEARS A CROWN OF LIGHT

A story honoring en-Light-ened riding masters who developed Guidelines to bring: discipline-beauty-grace and balance in the movements of a horse, from a girl who desired to be a better rider. She became the first equestrian American woman in Olympic history. This is her own life story; how their Guidelines produced oneness with her horses, also the realization of Creator-God, the Balancing Fulcrum, from riding the Figure 8. The en-Light-ened Equestrian masters were Fritz Stecken and Ludwig Von Zeiner, Head Rider of The Spanish Riding School.

Prescription For Disaster

This is a story that carries as much outrage as tragedy. We first presented the tip of this iceberg back in the September 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM and made a mental note to return to the matter in more depth when the opportunity became possible to do so. On May 31, I was able to have the distinct privilege of speaking with Dr. Ann Blake Tracy, a courageous expert on the subject of Prozac and related SSRIs (selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors, also known as “serotonin boosters”), the so-called new “antidepressants” that are sweeping across America and the globe. What you will learn from her experience and research is not what you are likely to hear through normal media channels. At times we laugh during the interview—but not so much because of any matters of humor, though often irony runs deep. Rather, laughter can be a “safety relief valve” when the implications of what we are discussing are so far past what used to be normal human decency standards that the only other option is to cry—and get mad.

But first I must ramp-up to the interview with several items of important background information which are like pieces of a large puzzle. Longtime readers of this publication already know about the demoralization and depopulation agendas of the so-called “elite” controllers who have long been busy orchestrating their New World Order of refined slavery and mind control of the mostly asleep and receptive public. It is THAT larger picture in which the subject of Prozac and its many clones fit ever so “perfectly” like ticking time-bombs just waiting to explode.

Prozac, the world’s best-selling antidepressant, on the market since 1988, makes a cool $7 million a day for its manufacturer, Eli Lilly and Company. In a May 7 article appearing in The Boston Globe, Leah R. Garnett writes: “By the end of last year, more than 35 million people worldwide were using the drug, which provided Lilly with more than 25% of its $10 billion in 1999 revenue.” Prozac is reportedly the third best selling drug in the country. And let’s not forget to mention the tidbit that, according to longtime researcher Eustace Mullins, former president George Bush and vice-president Dan Quayle are major stockholders in the Lilly Company.

“The public is being misinformed about the precision of these selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors.” —Candace B. Pert, Research Professor, Georgetown University Medical Center, Washington.

“Never before Prozac has a medication been so misrepresented by so many people for so long in the absence of adequate data.” —Dr. Mantosh Dewan and Dr. Prakash Masand, Department of Psychiatry, State University of New York, Journal Of Family Practice, Vol. 33, No. 3, 1991.

Zoloft, a Prozac clone, is closing the gap with 1999 sales of $2.1 billion. The total number of prescriptions for SSRIs worldwide, comprising a number of Prozac clones, according to The Boston Globe, has now peaked 84 million. According to a recently aired 20/20 program, SSRIs constitute a $6 billion-a-year industry.

In an editorial appearing in The Boston Globe on May 15, we read: “While the drug companies and the US Food and Drug Administration have a system for maintaining an adverse-event database, doctors are not required to report the serious problems patients have with a drug. As a result, there are distinct limitations in the system to track bad reactions and then add new warnings on the drug’s label or withdraw it altogether. Public Citizen, a watchdog group in Washington, DC, reports that actual surveys of medical records turn up 10 times as many drug reactions as are reported voluntarily by doctors.”

While these SSRI pharmaceutical manufacturers have succeeded in being relatively legally “bullet-proof”, usually by throwing unlimited funds and countless law-firms into the fray, there is a hole in the dike: Lilly’s 14-year patent on Prozac is about to expire. In a recent patent application filed by Lilly for a “new and improved Prozac” called R-fluoxetine (U.S. Patent no. 5,708,035), they say that the new drug will decrease such side-effects as: “headaches, anxiety and insomnia, and also inner restlessness (akathisia), suicidal thoughts and self-mutilation.” What more of an admission of “guilt” could one ask for? Further, Judge Kay, in the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii, in Civil case no. 95-00185 ACK, Susan K. Forsyth vs. Eli Lilly and Company, recently found scientifically reliable, legally admissible evidence linking Prozac to suicide.

Dr. David Healy, an expert on the brain’s serotonin system and the director of the North Wales Department of Psychological Medicine at the University of Wales, estimates that: “Probably 50,000 people have committed suicide on Prozac since its launch.”

In an article titled “Spiral Of Violence Blamed On Prozac”, written by Anthony Browne, Health Editor for The Observer, we read: “In the US, the widespread use of antidepressants and easy availability of guns is thought to be responsible for mass killings. Eric Harris, 18, from Columbine High School in Colorado, who last year shot 12 fellow students and a teacher, had been taking Luvox, similar to Prozac. In 1998, Kip Kinkel, 14, killed his parents before going on a shooting spree at his high school in Springfield, Oregon, killing two and injuring 22. He took Prozac.”

Dr. Ann Tracy spares no strong words when it comes to warning about these serotonin boosting antidepressants. To gain a better perspective on the vast devastation brought on by these new SSRI medications, let’s turn now to an article written by Dr. Tracy on this lethal subject. And we must remember, also, as with any court proceeding, to look at the BODY OF EVIDENCE, taken as a whole. Then, once you have done this, reach your own conclusions.

Warning: It should be noted that a gradual tapering off of medications is the safest withdrawal method to avoid serious withdrawal effects.

(Often there is the terrible withdrawal associated with the SSRIs. Unless patients are warned to come very slowly off these drugs by shaving minuscule amounts off their pills each day, as opposed to cutting them in half or taking a pill every other day, they can go into terrible withdrawal which is generally delayed several months. This withdrawal includes bouts of overwhelming depression, terrible insomnia and fatigue, and can include life-threatening physical effects, psychosis, or violent outbursts.)

Note: Keep in mind that these drugs are all serotonergic agents and clones or “copy cat” drugs of Prozac—the first SSRI antidepressant introduced to the market in America. Basically what applies to one, applies to the others. For instance, we have more data out on Prozac because it has been around longer, but as the mode of action is the same for all of these meds, the effects will be the same for the other drugs on this list as it is for Prozac. If we are discussing one drug, similar effects would be expected from any other company’s version of the drug. In fact, it would be more honest to give them the titles of Prozac #1, Prozac #2, Prozac #3, etc., rather than the brand names they have been given—from the second clone, Zoloft, to the latest Prozac clone, Celexa. My concern is that each new SSRI introduced seems to be a little stronger on serotonin reuptake and therefore potentially more dangerous. And the all-too-common practice of going from one SSRI to another blocks additional receptors and magnifies the harmful effects of these medications.

It is crucial to learn that, according to medical research, the theory behind this group of drugs is invalid. Known as serotonin reuptake inhibitors, they are designed to block serotonin in the brain, thereby increasing brain levels of this neurotransmitter. Yet for three decades researchers have been intensely interested in serotonin because LSD and PCP produce their psychedelic effects by mimicking serotonin. Elevated serotonin is found in: psychosis or schizophrenia, mood disorders, organic brain disease, mental retardation, autism and Alzheimer’s. Low levels of the metabolism of serotonin (which also produces high serotonin) are found in those with: depression, anxiety, suicide, violence, arson, substance abuse, insomnia, violent nightmares, impulsive behavior, reckless driving, exhibitionism, hostility, argumentative behavior, etc. The drugs increase serotonin and decrease the metabolism of serotonin leading to any and all of the above results.

This information is extremely crucial for patients and physicians to learn as soon as possible. We have a high rate of use of these drugs nationwide. Raising serotonin and lowering the metabolism of serotonin in such a large number of people can produce very serious, widespread, and long term problems for all of society.

So why are we now, in the ’90s, being told that increased serotonin is good for us? Is it because it is good for the pocketbooks of the manufacturers? One manufacturer is running full-page newspaper and magazine ads and half-hour TV infomercials to bring in over $7 million daily, while on the other hand they are settling Prozac suicide cases for huge amounts of money in exchange for silence from victims’ families on the details of those settlements. The silence in the court cases insures that the drug will be allowed to finish out its patent time, thus bringing in the highest possible profits for the company.

They know that with $7 million coming in daily, they can afford to settle a large number of lawsuits and still come out “smelling like a rose” financially. Eli Lilly has been sued for Prozac-related deaths in numerous state and federal courts with most of these cases being settled or dismissed—many were dismissed due to the unethical manipulation of the Wesbecker verdict (see Time Line for details).

We have witnessed no decrease in suicide, but increases in murder/suicide, suicide, unwed pregnancies, domestic violence, manic depression, MS, hypoglycemia, diabetes, bankruptcies, divorce, mothers (parents) killing children, road rage, school shootings, cancer, chronic fatigue syndrome, and fibromyalgia since these serotonergic drugs have become so popular and I relate it directly to the effects of these drugs.

The death toll has continued to climb drastically since I wrote Prozac: Panacea Or Pandora? Some of the cases you may be familiar with are: Mr. and Mrs. Phil Hartman (Zoloft); Prozac was found in the van of Mark Barton, the Atlanta day-trader who recently killed his family and others in a shooting spree before taking his own life; Neal Furrow, an LA Jewish school shooting was reported to have been court ordered to be on Prozac along with several other medications; the Salt Lake Family History Library shooting; school shootings in Littleton, Colorado (Luvox), in Atlanta, Georgia and Springfield, Oregon (Prozac), and Caldwell, Idaho; another boy in Pocatello, ID in 1998 who, in seizure activity from Zoloft, had a standoff at the school; 15-year-old Chris Shanahan (Paxil) in Rigby, ID who out of the blue killed a woman; the shooting at the lottery in Connecticut last spring by Matthew Beck (Luvox) that left five dead in a murder/suicide; the New York City subway bombing by Edward Leary (Prozac); little 10-year-old Timmy (Prozac) in southern Florida; Nick Mansies (Paxil) in New Jersey who was convicted of killing a little boy who was selling cookies door-to-door; in Orange County, CA Dana Sue Gray (Paxil) who co-workers described as a very caring nurse killed several elderly people; officer Stephen Christian (Prozac), one of the finest officers on the Dallas police force, who ran into a police substation shooting at fellow officers and was killed; 13-year-old Chris Feters (Prozac) in Iowa who killed her favorite aunt; David Rothman (Prozac) killed two co-workers and himself at the Department of Agriculture in Inglewood, CA; Williams Evans (Zoloft) shot one co-worker at the Ohio Bureau of Employment Services before shooting himself in Columbus, OH; Winatchee, WA where 43 people were wrongfully imprisoned in a false accusation of sexual abuse “witch hunt” fury started by a child under the influence of Prozac and Paxil; Christopher Vasquez (Zoloft) killed Michael McMorrow in Central Park; Megan Hogg (Prozac) duct-taped the mouths and noses of her three little girls and took a handful of pills; Vera Espinoza (Prozac) in Randolph, VT shot her small son and daughter before shooting herself; an elderly man (Prozac) in Layton, UT axed his wife and daughter to death; Margaret Kastanis (Prozac) used a knife and hammer to kill her three children before stabbing herself to death; an elderly man (Paxil) in Dallas, TX strangled his wife before shooting himself twice in the chest; Larramie Huntzinger (Zoloft) blacked out and ran his car into three young girls killing two in Salt Lake City, UT; Mary Hinkelman (Prozac), a nurse in Baroda, MI shot her two small daughters and her sister before shooting herself; Lisa Fox (Prozac) shot her small son and her dog before shooting herself in Brighton, MI; Debi Louselle (Zoloft) shot her daughter and then herself in Salt Lake City, UT; a father in Wyoming shot his wife, daughter, and baby granddaughter, then himself after only days on Paxil; a mother (Prozac) in Pleasant Grove, UT killed her 17-year-old son with a sledge hammer while he slept, before she attempted suicide, by drinking Drano; Larry Butzz, a superintendent of schools in Ames, IA shot his wife, son, and daughter before shooting himself.

Many cases pending in court are not mentioned. This is only a handful of MANY, MANY more cases—there would not be room for anything else if I continued listing the cases.

A few additional famous victims: Princess Di (Prozac) and Dodi Fayed, via their driver Henri Paul (Prozac); Monica Lewinsky (Prozac, Zoloft, Effexor, Serzone and Phen-Fen); Chris Farley (Prozac); Pres. Clinton’s ex-partner Jim McDougal (Prozac); Abby Hoffman (Prozac); Del Shannon (Prozac); Danielle Steele’s son (Prozac); INXS singer Michael Hutchence (Prozac); Sarah, Dutchess of York (Phen-Fen).

The latest figures show Prozac has about 44,000 adverse reports filed with the FDA. Out of those reports there are about 2500 deaths, with the large majority of them linked to suicide or violence.

The suicide statistics relating to women are shocking. According to the Centers for Disease Control, there are about 30,000 suicides yearly in the United States. Out of those, about 6,000 are women—a ratio of about 4.3 to 1, male to female. About twice as many women as men are treated for depression, demonstrating that generally men are more than 8 times as lethal in their suicidal gestures as women.

Women were known to use less lethal means until the SSRI antidepressants hit the market. But on Prozac and Paxil, women committed 40% of the suicides—many were strikingly violent and clearly leaving no means for rescue. (Remember that, because Prozac was the first of this group of drugs, its track record gives us a vision of what is to come with other serotonergic antidepressants, especially when they are so powerful in the reuptake of serotonin.)

TIME LINE OF CRITICAL INFORMATION DISCOVERED SINCE THE BOOK

Note: Any documents beginning with PZ are Lilly documents on Prozac which have been ferreted out by attorneys and are now being used in lawsuits against the drug company. (Christian vs. Eli Lilly, by Vickery & Waldner, Houston, TX)

- Mid 1950s: Dr. Felix Sulman began his research on those who suffer from high serotonin levels because of an inability to metabolize serotonin. He found that serotonin is a stress neuro-hormone leading even rabbits, the most docile of creatures, to be aggressive. He coined the term “serotonin irritation syndrome.” He found that those who were unable to break down serotonin would have increased levels. They “were in effect being poisoned by the serotonin produced by their own bodies. The irritation victims suffered from migraines, hot flashes, irritability, sleeplessness, pains around the heart, difficulty in breathing, a worsening of bronchial complaints, irrational tension and anxiety...horrific nightmarish. It also caused volunteers to sleep badly—that is, always on the edge of consciousness so that they were not properly rested—and to wake after only a few hours of sleep.” (This is known as sleep apnea.) He also found it caused pregnant women to abort.

- October, 1977; Slater, et.al., Inhibition Of REM Sleep By Fluoxetine, A Specific Inhibitor Of Serotonin Uptake, [Editor’s note: This is from a law case; the specific reference is unknown at this time.] at p. 385: Prozac was found to affect sleep habits, specifically to suppress deep sleep, which the scientists call REM (rapid eye movement) sleep in cats. By the fourth day of drug treatment the cats receiving the larger doses, which had been friendly for years, began to growl and hiss. After cessation of the drug treatment the cats returned to their usual friendly behavior in a week or two; those on the higher doses recovered more slowly.

- 1977 (PZ 1298 1999): “A total of six dogs from the high-dose group were removed from treatment...due to severe occurrences of either aggressive behavior, ataxia, or anorexia.”

- July 31, 1978 (PZ1061 1025-28, July 31, 1978): Human subjects began to be used by Lilly in controlled clinical trials. The first group of patients showed no improvement in their depression, but there were a “large number of reports of adverse reactions”. The first human to receive Prozac experienced “dystonia resembling an extrapyramidal reaction”—an uncontrollable, Parkinson-like shaking or trembling.

- July 23, 1979 (PZ 1297 969): The clinical studies in depression showed that “some patients have converted from severe depression to agitation within a few days; in one case the agitation was marked and the patient had to be taken off the drug. In future studies the use of benzodiazepines to control the agitation will be permitted.”

- August 3, 1979: The clinical trials excluded patients who had serious suicidal risk (e.g. control #001519, IND Protocol No. 14, August 3, 1979; PZI 135 695, July 2, 1986 memorandum of Dr. Wernicke).

- December 17, 1984; (PZ 65 449, report of Lilly to FDA): Lilly reported to the FDA that benzodiazepines and other sedatives were given with Prozac throughout the clinical trials. This was to help offset the stimulant effect of the drug. In a memorandum of Lilly scientist Charles Beasley (PZ 5412007-08) issues of “agitation vs. sedation” and concomitant sedative medications like benzodiazepines (to control the agitation) are discussed. Concerns are that agitation in a suicidal patient can induce suicide.

- March 3, 1986: Lilly controlled the flow of information to the FDA and decided that suicide data on Prozac should not be evaluated: “In the safety-update for the FDA the number of suicides and suicide attempts will not be especially evaluated” (PZ 879 1966, March 3, 1986 telex).

- September 12, 1986: German BGA very concerned with the risk of suicide and ultimately approved Prozac on the condition that physicians be warned of the risk of suicide and told to consider using sedatives and closely monitor patients (PZ 878 1383, report of Lilly consultant Pohlmeier; PZ 2467 299, September 12, 1986). Lilly actually warned physicians in Germany and other countries that this measure “can be necessary” to minimize the risk of suicide (PZ 1341 402, December 6, 1989 German warning; PZ 2469 490).

- February 7, 1990: In response to the Harvard study, Teicher, et al., Lilly’s top scientist, Leigh Thompson, told his fellow executives that “Lilly can go down the tubes if we lose Prozac” (PZ 1941 827, February 7, 1990). In the ensuing months Dr. Thompson spoke frequently with his principal FDA regulator about the issue, once at 6:15 in the morning (PZ 391 1959, July 18, 1990). Lilly later described the man as “our defender” (PZ 1941 2256, September 12, 1990).

- May 29, 1990: Lilly added “suicidal ideation” in the section dealing with post-marketing reports (PZ883 562, July 26, 1990 memorandum).

- September 14, 1990: Contrary to the advice of his staff, Dr. Thompson told the Eli Lilly Board of Directors that suicide and hostile acts were probably caused by the patients' underlying disorders rather than Prozac (PZ542 2101, September 14, 1990; PZ4002 889, Board Minutes). The staff was concerned because they knew that this issue was never studied during the clinical trials.

- September 11, 1990: Note from Dr. Bruce Stadel, Chief of the Epidemiology Branch, attaching an analysis done by Dr. David Graham, Section Chief within the Epidemiology Branch, of Lilly's July 17, 1990 submission to the FDA on the Prozac/suicidality/violence issue. The following factors were (a) brought to the attention of those in the higher echelons of the FDA, but (b) ignored, discounted, or "trashed" by them: (#1) Lilly's analysis improperly excluded 76 out of 97 suicides; as Dr. Stadel expressed it: "it is inappropriate in a safety analysis to exclude such a large proportion of cases"; (#2) Lilly admitted that its clinical trials "were not designed for the prospective evaluation of suicidality" and that "in these trials, patients with current suicidal ideation were excluded"; (#3) Lilly admitted that the HAMD-3 rating scale it used to assess suicidality in clinical trials was inadequate, and that Lilly's statements about violence only demonstrated "how great under-reporting is" and that "the actual data showed a higher percentage of treatment-emergent suicidality among fluoxetine (2.9%) than tricyclic (0.8%) patients...[which percentage] was similar to that reported by Teicher."

- July 1, 1992: A study led by Dr. Lome Brandes of the Manitoba Institute of Cell Biology in Winnipeg, Canada was published in Cancer Research linking the two most popular anti-depressants, Elavil and Prozac, to cancer.

- 1993: A study headed by Edward Domino showed LSD flashbacks and LSD reactions induced by Prozac.

- June 9, 1994: The New York Review Of Books article by Dr. Sherwin Nuland slams Peter Kramer for pushing Prozac in his book Listening To Prozac. He pointed out that all docs are taught in med school this little poem about serotonin: "This man was addicted to moanin', confusion, edema, and groanin', intestinal rushes, great tricolored blushes, and died from too much serotonin." He listed constriction of lungs and intestines, diarrhea, wheezing, flushing, mental confusion, tightening of bronchioles, and lessening conscious control over behavior from increases in serotonin. "Moreover . . . it is still too early to arrive at a reliable estimate of possible dangers that may appear in the long term" and 15% dropped out of the clinical trials on Prozac because of adverse reactions. He also discussed the similarity of serotonin to the psychedelics like LSD and PCP.

- November, 1994: Krysiel JH, Webb E, Cooney N, et al., "Specificity Of Ethanol-like Effects Elicited In Serotonergic and Noradrenergic Mechanisms," Archives Of General Psychiatry, Vol. 51, Issue 11, pgs 898-911, 1994, demonstrated that an increase in brain levels of either of two neurotransmitters, serotonin or noradrenalin, produces: (#1) a craving for alcohol, (#2) anger, (#3) anxiety. They found this to be especially true for those who have a history of alcoholism. An increase in serotonin, in turn, increases noradrenalin. Numerous reports have been made by reformed alcoholics who are being "driven" to alcohol again after being prescribed a serotonergic drug. And many other patients who had no previous history of alcoholism have continued to report an "overwhelming compulsion" to drink while using these drugs.

A few personal accounts:

(#1) A young woman, a recovering alcoholic, reported that during the eight-month period she had been using Prozac, she found it necessary to attend AA meetings every day in order to fight off the strong compulsions to begin drinking again.

(#2) In the southeastern United States, a middle-aged psychologist, also a recovering alcoholic, after being prescribed Prozac, found herself needing to attend AA meetings morning, noon, and night to keep from destroying the sobriety she had achieved.

(#3) A young father, who was Mormon and had never before in his life used alcohol, found himself drinking Ever Clear and exhibiting bizarre as well as violent behavior, after being prescribed Prozac and Ritalin.

(#4) A young mother, who had never used alcohol before, began drinking large amounts within weeks of being prescribed Prozac and quickly found herself committed to a mental institution due to the psychotic behavior that resulted. Added to her Prozac prescription were anti-psychotic meds and electric shock treatments. She then began to experience seizures and was started on anti-seizure meds.

(#5) A concerned neighbor reported her friend was drinking straight Vodka on a regular basis after being prescribed Zoloft.

(#6) A daughter reported her father, sober for 15 years, began drinking again on Prozac.

- December, 1994: "Not guilty" verdict on Wesbecker wrongful death suit against Lilly's Prozac.

- Treatment emergent suicidality with Prozac has been demonstrated to be two to three times higher than any other anti-depressant (Jick, et al., Antidepressants And Suicide).

- May, 1995: Judge John Potter who presided over the Wesbecker case filed documents to demand that Lilly be forced to disclose the secret deal they made with the plaintiffs to withhold very damaging evidence in exchange for settlement. In his pleading to the court Potter stated: "Lilly sought to buy not just the verdict, but the court's judgment as well."

Potter accused Lilly of "giving the verdict the widest possible publicity" accompanied by the claim that Lilly had "proven in a court of law that Prozac was safe". Furious with Lilly's attempt to turn his courtroom into an advertising agency for Prozac, he claims his motion reflects "the court's duty to protect the integrity of the judicial system". He believes, as do prominent legal ethicists, that a full and open disclosure of the terms of the settlement is a necessary public safety issue.

- July, 1997: Mayo Clinic found that the increased serotonin, which produces blood clotting, was causing a gummy, glossy substance to build up on heart valves. Dr. Heidi Connolly, with the Divisions of Cardiovascular Diseases and Internal Medicine, who headed the study stated: "We do know that fenfluramine and phentermine (Fen-Phen) alter the way the brain chemical serotonin is metabolized, and serotonin that circulates in the blood can cause valve injury." Fenfluramine produces a rapid release of serotonin, inhibits serotonin reuptake, and may also have receptor agonist activity. The study's revelations should send a loud and very clear warning throughout the medical community concerning all serotonergic medications.

- August 25, 1997: Letter to Dr. Tracy: "I caught the last part of your presentation on Radio Station KEX, Portland, while flipping through the dial last night. I was flabbergasted to hear you speak of the horrible potential side-effects from Prozac, which I have been taking for approximately four years, particularly since I have been diagnosed recently with cardiomyalgia, severe artery disease, congestive heart failure, and also fibromyalgia. (I was a very 'well' person prior to taking the Prozac and am now exhausted all the time, with horrible aching joints and considerable pain and a massive heart problem.)" The adverse cardiovascular effects from Prozac—the one drug in this class of drugs out long enough to have somewhat of a track record—are listed in the drug information sheet put out by the manufacturer. The "frequent" effects listed are hemorrhage and hypertension. The "infrequent" effects include very serious adverse effects: congestive heart failure, myocardial infarct, tachycardia, angina pectoris, arrhythmia, hypotension, migraine syncope, and vascular headache.

- September, 1997: Redux and Phen-Fen were pulled from the market.

- October 20, 1997: Dr. Candace Pert, Research Professor at Georgetown University Medical Center, past head of the brain chemistry department at the National Institute of Health, and author of the new book Molecules Of Emotion, sounded an alarm in TIME, October 20. She stated: "I am alarmed at the monster that Johns Hopkins neuroscientist Solomon Snyder and I created when we discovered the simple binding assay for drug receptors 25 years ago. Prozac and other antidepressant serotonin-receptor-active compounds may also cause cardiovascular problems in some susceptible people after long-term use, which has become common practice despite the lack of safety studies."

As we are being led to believe these drugs produce effects only in the brain, Dr. Pert accuses the medical profession of oversimplifying the action of these drugs and adds that "the public is being misinformed about the precision of these selective serotonin-uptake inhibitors". It is critical that both physicians and patients be made aware of these adverse physical reactions. She points out that the medical profession not only oversimplifies the action of these drugs in the brain, but "ignores the body as if it exists merely to carry the head around!" And that "these molecules of emotion regulate every aspect of our physiology." The body plays a very significant role in how we feel and act the way we do. This fact can no longer be ignored.

- Serotonin and serotonin receptors exist throughout the body, as well as the brain, and every aspect of the body's physiology is affected by these serotonergic medications. In fact, approximately 90% of the body's serotonin is produced in the intestinal tract. According to Dr. Michael Gershon of New York's Columbia Presbyterian, this is the reason why Prozac produces so many gastrointestinal side-effects.

- March, 1998: Two new studies published; one shows that Prozac so strongly inhibits one particular serotonin receptor that this produces both obesity and seizures, the other study discusses the blockage of muscle and neuronal nicotinic acetylcholine receptors indicating interactions between the serotonergic and cholinergic systems in the central nervous system.

- April, 1998: Our next generation of guinea pigs. One month before, a 15-year-old on Prozac, Kip Kinkel, in Springfield OR, killed his parents and two classmates. The American Psychiatric Association and the American Academy of Pediatric Psychiatrists asked the FDA to consider the serotonergic antidepressants for use in children as young as two, and drugs for anxiety, aggression, and manic depression in babies ONLY one month old! The use of Prozac among young children, ages 6-12, has increased an alarming 400% from 1995 (51,000 new prescriptions) to 1996 (203,000 new prescriptions).

- June, 1999: Clinical Psychiatry News reported that Dr. Malcolm Bowers, a psychiatrist at Yale, has found that physicians are not paying enough attention to patient factors that could make initiation of SSRIs dangerous. He found that "SSRI-induced psychosis has accounted for 8% of all general hospital psychiatric admissions over a recent 14-month period." And "What is surprising is that this particular group of side effects is really underplayed." (The 8% figure represents over 150,000 SSRI-induced psychotic breaks per year!!!!!!)

- Warning: Children so often get coughs and colds, yet using a cough or cold medication with dextromethorphan could cause the serotonin syndrome, a very serious and potentially fatal adverse reaction and/or produce PCP reactions.

- Serotonin syndrome remains an often misdiagnosed or unrecognized fatal reaction due to the medical profession being so uninformed about this drug-induced disorder.

- Developing brains are far more vulnerable than adult brains, and brain damage generally becomes more apparent after the brain is fully developed, rather than immediately. Increases in cortisol produce brain damage, while medical research shows that one single 30 mg dose of Prozac DOUBLES the level of cortisol. This drastic increase in cortisol causes a multitude of serious physical reactions including impairment of linear growth, as well as impairing the development and regeneration of the liver, kidneys, muscles, etc.

In light of so many unspeakable tragedies, I have grown weary of all the silly philosophical discussions we have heard since Kramer's Listening To Prozac came out. Patients are dying or having their health destroyed mentally as well as physically.

When do we begin to discuss the very serious physical side-effects associated with high levels of serotonin?

These patients and their families are frantically searching for answers while this research sits right under our noses and could easily be made available to them. The widespread use of Prozac and its clones is not a statement of either their safety or their effectiveness. It is a statement about the effectiveness of an infinite marketing budget and incredible advertising campaign!

These drugs have very serious physical side-effects, as well as dangerous psychiatric side-effects. To prevent further tragedy, this medical research must be acknowledged and addressed in headline news without delay, rather than remain buried in seldom read medical research documents as has been the case in the past with other mind-altering medications, once thought to be safe, which were subsequently prohibited by law, such as LSD, PCP, cocaine, etc.

- October 1998 note from a British nurse:

"I started having bad reactions.... October 1996 I found Prozac to be causing joint and muscle pain itself...signs of Cushing's Syndrome.... I was very pro-Prozac until last October and wouldn't have listened to anything said against it until I got problems. Thought it was saving my life, while all the time it was insidiously and slowly killing me!

"When I first heard about your book on the Internet, I was interested but quite skeptical. However, since reading it and having suffered so many problems with Prozac, I have come to the conclusion that the book is brilliant, and a lifeline as far as I am concerned. I tried to fault the research and reasoning, but could not and still can't.

"I would like to extend my thanks to you for your heroic stance on this enormously important issue. I have tremendous respect and admiration for your hard work, determination, and courage in pursuing this subject so vigorously, against so much powerful opposition, for the benefit of people like me. Your integrity puts many, if not most, doctors and psychiatrists to shame. It is reassuring to find that there are a few people who are prepared to fight for the truth, for the benefit of mankind."

We are actively discouraged from thinking constructively and questioningly, and once an individual has accepted the numb acquiescence so encouraged, an insidiously vicious circle has successfully been promoted. Another rather convenient result of such a situation is that people who don't think constructively and questioningly don't even realize it.

THE CIA, SANDOZ, LSD AND THE MIND CONTROL AGENDA

To put the issue of Prozac into its proper context in the Larger Picture, we must take a moment to turn back the clock to Eustace Mullins' classic work: Murder By Injection: The Story Of The Medical Conspiracy Against America from which I extracted the Front Page quote which sets the tone at the beginning of this entire article.

We read from Eustace's classic and formidable 1988 research volume:

[Quoting]

The CIA drug story begins in 1943, when the organization was still known as the OSS. A Dr. Albert Hofmann was experimenting in the Sandoz Laboratories in Switzerland (Sandoz was then controlled by the Warburg [money and banking] family). Although Sandoz has been manufacturing a substance known as LSD, or lysergic acid, since 1938, it had only been used in experiments and monkeys. A later form of this substance, LSD-25, produced amazing psychotropic effects, as Dr. Hofmann accidentally discovered, when he absorbed a small quantity of rye fungus, the base for the drug, while he was working. This happened during August of 1943, at the height of the Second World War. Dr. Hofmann later reported: "There surged upon me an uninterrupted stream of fantastic images of extraordinary plasticity and vividness and accompanied by an intense kaleidoscopic-like play of colors.... I thought I was dying or going crazy.”

This was the first “trip”, the precursor of millions of such experiences by drug cultists. By 1958, Dr. Hofmann had expanded his interests to Mexican mushrooms and mescaline, both of which then became very popular among leading bankers in New York, and among prominent Hollywood personalities.

At the time of the discovery of LSD, Allen Dulles was posted in Switzerland, as though by precognition. It was under his leadership that the CIA became transformed into the foremost operation of Dope, Inc. He was then engaged in various activities with officials of the Nazi regime. To this day, no one has been able to ascertain whether he was trying to preserve the Hitler regime, or to overthrow it. The most likely assumption is that he was trying to preserve it to a point, lest the war end too soon for the profit-minded munitions makers, but at the same time to prevent any sort of victorious ending for his Nazi cohorts.

The notes of Gotterdammerung had already been sounded. Dulles’ association with the Hitler regime went back to a fateful meeting in Cologne in 1933, when he and his brother, John Foster Dulles, assured Hitler the money would be forthcoming to guarantee the fruition of his goals as he had set them forth in Mein Kampf. Allen Dulles later became a director of the Schroder Bank, which handled Hitler’s personal bank account. Interestingly enough, no one has ever been able to trace one cent of Hitler’s considerable personal fortune, which he had received from the sale of his books and other income. Unlike his opponent, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Hitler had no trust fund from his mother (the proceeds from the China opium trade).

Dulles, as an international spymaster, would probably have been aware of Dr. Hofmann’s experiments. After he had returned to the United States and became director of the newly created CIA, Dulles ordered 10 kg of LSD from Sandoz, the stated purpose being “for use in drug experiments with animals and human beings”. As there are some 10,000 doses per gram, this meant that Dulles ordered one hundred million doses of LSD.

Meanwhile, a Dr. Timothy Leary had been hired by the National Institute of Health to experiment with psychedelic drugs, including LSD. Leary had already been forced to resign from West Point, and was later fired from the faculty of Harvard, perhaps the only person who could say this.

Leary’s NIH study was financed by a grant from the Uris Foundation of New York City. It continued from 1953 to 1956, when it was moved to the U.S. Public Health Service, the experiments going on until 1958, and also at HEW from 1956 to 1963. A CIA memo dated November 1, 1963 featured glowing accounts of the work of Dr. Leary and his associate, Dr. Richard Alpert, who also was later fired from the staff of Harvard.

They invented the turn-on, tune-in, drop-out movement which incapacitated the youth of America for an entire generation. The movement, in which the CIA always had a proprietary interest, was given academic status when it was launched from the ivy-covered halls of Harvard by Leary and his group. After their forced departure from Harvard, they were ensconced in a million-dollar estate in New York by the wealthy Mellon heir, Tommy Hitchcock. Their movement swept over the campuses of American universities and destroyed the educational opportunities for thousands of American youths.

A later governmental investigation of the CIA, which was chaired, naturally enough, by Nelson Rockefeller, made this comment in its Rockefeller Report to the President on CIA activities: “Beginning in the late ’40s, the CIA began to study the properties of certain behavior-influencing drugs.... All the records concerning the program were ordered destroyed in 1973, including a total of 152 separate files. CIA also contracted with the then Bureau of Narcotics to have mind-influencing drugs given to unwitting subjects in ‘normal life-settings’.”

The above referred to several unfortunate incidents, in which CIA employees, who had been given doses of LSD without their knowledge, committed suicide under its malign influence. The families of these victims learned many years later of the true circumstances of these “suicides” and successfully sued the government to obtain financial settlements.

Of the various CIA projects, the most notorious was MK-Ultra. These programs were supervised by another prototype of the “mad doctor”, a Dr. Sidney Gottlieb. Despite the havoc wrought by his activities, Dr. Gottlieb was never brought to trial. Indeed, the then director of the CIA, Richard Helms, made certain that all records of the MK-Ultra operation were destroyed during his last days in office, leaving Dr. Gottlieb immune from prosecution.

Dr. Gottlieb, who has been described by observers as “a pharmaceutical Dr. Strangelove”, envisioned dosing entire populations with hallucinogenic drugs.

BETTER LIVING THOUGH CHEMISTRY?

We now turn to Dr. Tracy’s book PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? for the next piece of important background information before starting the interview:

[Quoting]

A large portion of this information [in her book] on the CIA and LSD was reported at the Annual Meeting of the American Academy of Neurology in 1990 by Drs. Robert F. Ulrich and Bernard M. Patten in a presentation entitled The Rise, Decline, And Fall Of LSD. LSD’s developer was Albert Hoffman. Drs. Ulrich and Patten related that “Hofmann himself suspects that the materialistic American life-style and resultant feelings of alienation from Nature and lack of a meaningful philosophy of life drew people” to LSD. He “favored the potential uses of LSD, stating that if people learned to use the drug more wisely under the proper conditions, in medicinal practice, and in association with meditation, it could become a ‘wonder child’.” (Keep in mind that this is a drug known to twist every perception we possess as humans and was first marketed to chemically induce psychosis.) These two doctors reacted to Hofmann’s opinion by stating: “We now know that will never happen. LSD was part of an era of crazy faith in better living through chemistry.”

Only three years after this presentation was made to the nation’s neurologists, this “crazy faith in better living through chemistry” they expected to never happen again is exactly what Dr. Peter Kramer’s new book, Listening To Prozac: A Psychiatrist Explores Antidepressant Drugs And The Remaking Of The Self, is rehashing for us. It would be interesting to learn how Drs. Ulrich and Patten feel about Dr. Kramer’s suggestion that we create a better living through the chemistry of Lilly’s latest “wonder drug” Prozac. In fact, it would be interesting to know if Dr. Kramer himself recognizes himself that he is proposing, once again, Hofmann’s philosophies. As we proceed further [in the book] and take a closer look at the similarities in action which these two drugs, Prozac and LSD, have within the brain, you will see why it is so curious that such similar arguments have been raised to justify the use of these two Lilly progenies.

ELI LILLY AND COMPANY: A CLOSER LOOK

Let’s take a little detour for a moment to look at this company responsible for Prozac.

Eli Lilly and Company is a global, high technology company founded by Colonel Eli Lilly in 1876 in Indianapolis, Indiana. Lilly currently employs more than 31,000 people worldwide, and markets its medicines in 179 countries.

The Chairman of the Board, President, and Chief Executive Officer for Eli Lilly is Sidney Taurel. Let’s take a look at who sits on the Board of this powerful pharmaceutical company.

• Sidney Taurel, Chairman, President, CEO: Sidney Taurel, 51, a director since 1991, has been the company’s CEO since July 1998, and Chairman of the Board since January 1999.

He joined the Company in 1971 and held management positions in the company's operations in Brazil and Europe. Mr. Taurel served as President of Eli Lilly International Corporation from 1986 until 1991, as Executive Vice President of the company from 1993 until 1996, and as President and Chief Operating Officer of the company from 1996 until July 1998. He is a director of ITT Industries, Inc., and The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., a member of the Board of Overseers of the Columbia Business School, and a trustee of the Indianapolis Museum of Art.

• Charles E. Golden, Executive Vice President & Chief Financial Officer: Mr. Golden, 53, has been a director since 1996, joined the company as Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer in 1996. Prior to joining the Company, he served as Vice President of General Motors Corporation (GM), and Chairman and Managing Director of Vauxhall Motors Limited, a subsidiary of GM in the United Kingdom, from 1993 to 1996. Mr. Golden joined GM in 1970 and held a number of executive positions in that company's domestic and international operations. Mr. Golden is a director of Clarian Health Partners, a trustee of the Indianapolis Museum of Art, a member of the U.S. advisory board of INSEAD, and a member of the National Advisory Board of Chase Manhattan Corporation.

• Kenneth L. Lay, Ph.D., Chairman of the Board, CEO, Enron Corp: Kenneth L. Lay, 57, a director (with Lilly) since 1993, has served Enron Corp. as Chairman of the Board since 1985. He joined Enron as President and Chief Operating Officer in 1985. Prior to joining Enron, he served as Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Houston Natural Gas, and as President, Chief Operating Officer, and a director of Transco Energy Company. Mr. Lay is a director of Compaq Computer Corporation, EOTT Energy Corp., Azurix Corp., and Trust Company of the West.

• Alva O. Way, Chairman of the Board, IBJ Whitehall Bank & Trust Company: Mr. Way, 70, a director since 1980, became Chairman of the Board of IBJ Whitehall Bank & Trust Company in 1986. He also serves as a director of and consultant to Schroeder p.l.c., London, and related companies. Mr. Way previously served as President of both The Travelers Corporation and American Express Company, and served in executive positions with General Electric Company. He is a director of Gould, Inc., and Ryder Systems, Inc. Mr. Way also serves as a member of the Board of Fellows and Chancellor Emeritus of Brown University.

• Steven C. Beering, M.D., President, Purdue University: Dr. Beering, 67, a director since 1983, has served as President of Purdue University since 1983. He served as Dean of the Indiana University School of Medicine and Director of the Indiana University Medical Center from 1974 until 1983. Dr. Beering is a fellow of the American College of Physicians and the Royal Society of Medicine and a member of the National Academy of Sciences Institute of Medicine. He is a director of American United Life Insurance Company, Arvin Industries, Inc., Veridian Corporation, and NiSource, Inc. Dr. Beering is the past national chairman of the Association of American Universities.

• Franklyn G. Prendergast, M.D., Ph.D., Edmond and Marion Guggenheim Professor of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, Mayo Medical School, and Director, Mayo Clinic Cancer Center: Dr. Prendergast, 54, a director since 1995, is engaged in medical research and has held several other teaching positions at the Mayo Medical School since 1975. Dr. Prendergast serves on the Board of Trustees of the Mayo Foundation and its Executive Committee.

• Kathi P. Seifert, Executive Vice President, Kimberly-Clark Corporation: Mrs. Seifert, 50, a director since 1995, joined Kimberly-Clark in 1978 and has served in several capacities in connection with both the domestic and international marketing of consumer products. Mrs. Seifert is a director of the Aid Association for Lutherans, ThedaCare Health Group, and the Fox Cities Performing Arts Center. She also is a member of the Chancellor's Advisory Board of the University of Wisconsin, Oshkosh.

• Alfred G. Gilman, M.D., Ph.D. Regental Professor and Chairman, Department of Pharmacology, The University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center (since 1981): Dr. Gilman, 58, a director since 1995, has held the Raymond and Ellen Willie Distinguished Chair in Molecular Neuropharmacology at the university since 1987 and was named a Regental Professor in 1995. Dr. Gilman was on the faculty of the University of Virginia School of Medicine from 1971 until 1981, where he was named a Professor of Pharmacology in 1977. He is a director of Regeneron Pharmaceuticals, Inc. Dr. Gilman was a recipient of the Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine in 1994.

• Karen N. Horn, Ph.D., Managing Director, Marsh Private Client Services, Marsh, Inc. (since 1999): Mrs. Horn, 56, a director since 1987, prior to joining Marsh, was Managing Director and Head of International Private Banking at Bankers Trust Company; Chairman of the Board, Bank One, Cleveland, N.A.; President of the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland; Treasurer of Bell of Pennsylvania; and Vice President of First National Bank of Boston. Mrs. Horn is a director of TRW, Inc. She also serves as director of Delta Capital Management (the U.S./Russia Investment Fund), a Presidential appointment.

• August M. Watanabe, M.D., Executive

Vice President, Science & Technology (since 1996): Dr. Watanabe, 58, has been a director since 1994. Prior to joining the company, he was on the faculty of the Indiana University School of Medicine from 1972 to 1990. He joined the company in 1990 as Vice President of Lilly Research Laboratories and was named Group Vice President of Lilly Research Laboratories in 1992. He was appointed a Vice President of the company and elected to the Board of Directors in 1994. He is a fellow of the American College of Physicians and the American College of Cardiology, a director of the Indiana University Foundation, the Regenstrief Institute for Health Care, and the Indiana Symphony Society, and a member of the Board of Visitors of Wheaton College.

THE CIA, ELI LILLY, & LSD

The connection between Prozac and LSD is not likely a coincidental happening. It would seem like a huge, horrible joke to have a covert agenda to "turn on" large segments of the population if the facts of the matter were not as they are. Let's return for a moment to Dr. Tracy's book PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA?:

[Quoting]

The CIA had a real heyday with LSD research. In 1953, as they turned a hopeful eye to LSD, their secret project focusing on chemical warfare and mind control, MK-Ultra, was born—a project which would not be known to the public for many years to come. They were initially funded $300,000 for investigation of several drugs from cocaine to nicotine. The Agency considered LSD to be of such promise that in November 1953 they sent two men with a black bag containing $240,000 (80% of their funds) in cash to Switzerland to buy up Sandoz's entire supply of LSD. They were authorized to purchase an unbelievable amount of 10 kilos—100 million doses. Much to their surprise they discovered that Sandoz's total output of LSD since its discovery in 1943 was only forty grams, not quite two ounces. After negotiations Sandoz agreed to supply the CIA with 100 grams of LSD every week and also to notify them of anyone else who was ordering the drug.

The CIA then turned to Eli Lilly, the makers of Prozac, who had previously introduced heroin and methadone to their products list, as a domestic source for LSD. They proposed that Lilly develop a synthetic LSD since the natural source of LSD, ergot fungus, was difficult to cultivate. A company memo dated October 26, 1954 by Eli Lilly to then CIA head Allen Dulles announced that they had been able to bypass the need for ergot fungus in processing the drug and had come up with an LSD made solely from synthetic sources.

They went on to suggest that with this breakthrough in mass production that “in a matter of months LSD would be available in tonnage quantities”. Lilly also went on to state that they were continuing their research to develop a “covert use” of LSD. (Acid Dreams)

The following December TIME magazine reported that LSD “may actually help psychiatrists clear up mental illness”. It was also promoted as a cure for alcoholism and as an “aid in facilitating psychoanalysis”. In fact, the LSD advertising campaign now has an all too familiar ring as we recognize many of the same claims Lilly has been making for Prozac over the last six years. The Merck Directory lists Lilly as obtaining two patents on LSD just two months after the TIME article hit the press. Lilly offered to supply unlimited amounts of LSD to the CIA, and in a memo to Agency head, Allen Dulles, pointed out, this “meant that LSD could finally be taken seriously as a chemical warfare agent.”

What debt we owe to those who introduced us to the wonders of LSD. The pharmaceuticals have given us one dangerous and highly addictive psychoactive prescription drug after another: heroin, methadone, cocaine, LSD, the amphetamines and methamphetamines, steroids, PCP, qualudes, ecstasy, etc., etc., etc. The list goes on and on and has not stopped yet. Once these drugs have been released to the public for medicinal purposes, how do we ever control their use?

Education as to their effects appears to be our only hope. If we can understand what we are doing to ourselves and the cost involved to each of us, personally, and then to society as a whole, perhaps we will see the insanity behind our reaching out so rapidly and with such trust, devouring each new drug as fast as they offer one more.

This memory of past mistakes with these previous drugs, which time and experience have proven to be extremely dangerous, should warn us of impending problems in the future and instill a far more cautious approach to our use of prescription drugs, especially new ones. Learning from past mistakes is one of our most important reasons for the keeping of records and studying history, because learning from the mistakes of others is far less painful than learning from one’s own mistakes.

Yet have we really learned anything from these devastatingly disastrous mistakes in our past with such seriously mind-altering, highly addictive drugs—drugs which in the beginning were thought to be “safe”? How long can it take us to learn that, once out there, it takes lots of time and red tape to remove them from the market? And even after they are removed, stopping their illegal use, once a large population has become addicted to them, is next to impossible.

Although these drugs have caused some of the most terribly violent and destructive behavior known to man, it does not appear to be the case that we have learned our lesson on drugs and their effects as yet. We jump to try all the new ones as they are candy coated and dangled in front of us on our television sets, in magazines, in newspapers, etc., etc.—yes, even by the doctors we are trusting with our lives.

* * *

And the reason we must pose the question about Prozac being the LSD of the ’90s is at the least threefold. Number one, it is patented and manufactured by the same pharmaceutical company who gave us LSD, Eli Lilly. Number two, the advertising campaign and promotional push for the two drugs has been extremely similar. Number three, the target in the brain for both Prozac and LSD is the neurotransmitter, serotonin, and both act as enhancers of serotonin; that is, they both raise the level of serotonin.

[End quoting]

Remember the Larger Picture of mind control of the masses in order to keep the sheep docile and readily susceptible to the will of the so-called “elite” controllers—whether that will be broadcast via conventional mass media modalities, such as radio and television, or “implanted” through more covert electromagnetic mechanisms.

And with that food for thought as background, let us begin a most astonishing interview.

AN INTERVIEW WITH AUTHOR ANN BLAKE TRACY, PH.D.

Martin: First of all, let me say your book is fantastic! I knew it was good when I got it, but I didn’t know how good until I actually started reading it—really, really informative. I can’t believe all the information about drug reactions on different drugs you have in there. You really crammed a lot into a fantastic package for people. Really good job!

Dr. Tracy: Well, I hear that all the time. I hear doctors tell me that I put fifteen books together into one.

Martin: Oh, yes, it’s just amazing. I’ve read a lot of pharmacological information over the years. In the late ’70s, I worked for two years at the Drug Detoxification Unit of the Haight-Ashbury Free Medical Clinic.

Dr. Tracy: Really?

Martin: There was a doctor of pharmacology there who I was fortunate enough to take some pharmacology classes from. So, I have a little background on the subject. When I was reading through the book, I was just very appreciative of the information that you’re sharing with people, and I know the value of it.

There’s a lot of talk about Prozac and related drugs. Let’s begin this conversation with an in-depth examination of a much misunderstood and mostly overlooked subject: serotonin levels within the human body.

Now, I have a string of questions on serotonin. I’ll give them to you up front, then I’ll give them to you one at a time, if you need them—but just so you can see where I’m going: Why is serotonin so important? What is serotonin turnover? What is serotonin reuptake? What is serotonin irritation syndrome? What is 5HT and what about the 5HTP supplement? What is the correlation between serotonin and LSD? And serotonin levels being out of whack, let’s just hit that subject. And now I’m going to shut-up and you can inform us. (laughter)

Dr. Tracy: (laughter) Just take off, huh? (laughter) Ok, some of this is going to be a review, then, since you’re printing my article, The Aftermath [back a few pages as part of the introductory material preceding this interview].

Martin: Yes.

Dr. Tracy: What people need to understand about serotonin is that, what they have heard in the news for the last decade is completely the opposite of the truth. Serotonin is not something so beneficial that you need to be increasing it in every way possible throughout the system, and in the brain.

Dr. Felix Sulman, in the mid-’50s, found that serotonin is a stress neurohormone. He found that it would lead even rabbits, the most docile of creatures, to be aggressive. He also found in his research that there were individuals who, because of problems in their own systems, were unable to break-down serotonin.

Keep in mind that WHAT these most popular drugs that we are discussing do—they impair the metabolism [breakdown] of serotonin, and in doing so, increase the levels of serotonin in the body.

Serotonin Irritation Syndrome is what Dr. Sulman coined to describe what these individuals were going through. He said that these individuals were, in effect, being poisoned by the serotonin produced by their own bodies.

Because of that inability to metabolize the serotonin, and it building up to high levels, he said that these victims suffered from migraines, hot-flashes, difficulty breathing, bronchial complaints, sleeplessness, pains around the heart, irritability, tension and anxiety that would come out of nowhere, and horrifying nightmares.

Those volunteers who subjected themselves to increases of serotonin would find that—and he would inject them with it—he found that they would sleep badly, they were always on the edge of consciousness, so that they were not properly rested; and they would awake after only a few hours of sleep, basically sleep apnea.

He also found that it would cause pregnant women to abort, because one of the original uses of serotonin was to induce labor. You get constriction of the muscles, constriction of the bronchial tubes, constriction of arteries and blood vessels. You need to keep in mind that at least 90% of the serotonin in the system is found in the intestinal tract, and it's purpose there is to cause the intestines to constrict and expel what is there.

We need to keep in mind that is what we're doing when we increase serotonin, we are producing all these effects. And when you read through the side-effects listed on these new serotonergic medications, you will find all of these things listed as side-effects.

Well, I wonder why?

Another thing to keep in mind is that, right about the same time that Dr. Sulman was doing his research on serotonin, a drug that became very popular among those who were looking for mind-control substances was LSD. It became the drug of choice for the CIA.

They were so excited about LSD that they used 80% of their initial budget, when they were first formed, to go to Switzerland to buy-up all the LSD that Sandoz Pharmaceutical Company had available. Unfortunately, they found that they only had an ounce or two, and not enough to do what they intended to do with mind control.

They came back to the United States and went directly to Eli Lilly Pharmaceutical Company and asked them to produce a synthetic form of LSD, so that they would then have it in sufficient quantities to use as a mind-control agent. And, Lilly did patent their LSD in 1956, and Eli Lilly, later, gave us Prozac.

Martin: What was their LSD patented under? What was the brand name?

Dr. Tracy: You know, I don't know. I think it was only given a number. I don't think they got to the point of giving it a name. If they did, I don't know. But anyway, let's go on.

People need to understand that the effect of LSD, and PCP as well, is an increase of serotonin and decrease of serotonin metabolism, exactly the same condition that existed in the individuals that Dr. Sulman was diagnosing as having Serotonin Irritation Syndrome. Chemically, LSD and PCP could produce this same effect that his patients were suffering from. Also, the new anti-depressants, drugs like Fen-Phen and Redux, increase serotonin while they decrease the metabolism of serotonin.

Martin: What is 5HT? And what about the 5HTP supplement?

Dr. Tracy: 5HTP increases serotonin. Whether or not it decreases the metabolism of serotonin, I am not aware of that. But we do know that it does produce an increase of serotonin by providing the precursors of serotonin. We do have many reports of adverse effects from that, as well.

This whole serotonin frenzy has just exploded in the public to such an extent that it has spilled over, even into the health industry. We've gone mad with serotonin. "Serotonin Madness" is a perfect term!

Martin: What happens when serotonin levels are extremely high in people?

Dr. Tracy: We know, through medical research over the last 50 years, that an increase in serotonin is found in psychosis or schizophrenia, mania, mood disorders which include depression, anxiety, organic brain disease, mental retardation, autism, and Alzheimer's. These are all conditions in which we find elevated serotonin. Anorexia is also a condition where we find high serotonin levels.

And yet, when we look at low levels of serotonin metabolism, which, of course, we know produces the high serotonin, we find this in depression, anxiety, suicide, especially violent suicide and repeated suicide attempts, violent crime, arson, substance abuse including compulsions for alcohol and other drugs, insomnia—very violent nightmares, impulsive behavior, reckless driving like road-rage, exhibitionism, hostility, argumentative behavior.

That's why I call them the "divorce pills", these new drugs, because when you're producing argumentative behavior and all of these other things, the hostilities, the impulsive behaviors, it certainly is not conducive to any kind of relationship. And patients who go on these medications often begin to cut-off relations with all of their friends, their family. It's very tragic when you look at just the death that comes of various relationships throughout our society.

Martin: I read, online on your site, the article from May 15 from The Boston Globe, and in there it says that there are 84 million prescriptions a year for SSRIs (antidepressants)! Is that right?

Dr. Tracy: Whew. Wow, I hope not, but probably not far off at all.

Martin: This affects a huge number of people. If we're talking about behavior dysfunction, which is what we're talking about with elevated serotonin levels, the impact on society is HUGE!

Dr. Tracy: Yes, it is. Now you see why I have devoted the last 10 years to nothing but educating the public about this—because ten years ago I saw TODAY and said "Oh, my gosh, it could never get that bad. Surely, we will wake up to this serotonin madness before then." But we haven't. And you don't want to see what I see for the NEXT 10 years, if we don't!

Martin: I would imagine that what you see—and don't even want to say you see—is: a radical increase in road-rage, in murders, in acting-out with violent rages in the work-place, in the home, and probably increased divorce rates—basically a breakdown of society.

Dr. Tracy: Right. Not to even mention the physical effects for many of these individuals if they stay on the drugs any length of time at all. They could end up on disability, physical disability, as well as mental, but many with physical disabilities. The rate of diabetes has gone up drastically, here in the state of Utah, where we use 3 times more of these types of medications than anywhere else in the nation.

Martin: And why do you think that is?

Dr. Tracy: I think it is a combination of different things. We have more doctors, per capita, and they have to be doing something.

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Tracy: We also have a very high rate of diabetes in the state of Utah, and that is, of course, because we consume more sugar than any other state. When you look at the fact that we have a very high diabetic rate, it should follow that we have a very high hypoglycemic rate, which is the beginning stages of the pancreas breaking down. The pancreatic function begins to break down and manifests itself as hypoglycemia.

One of your main symptoms of hypoglycemia is depression, and also mood-swings. So, when you look at that, it's easy to see why a doctor would take just a couple of minutes to write-out a prescription for Prozac, or Zoloft, or Paxil, or one of these new anti-depressants, instead of taking an hour or two that it would take to explain to a patient how they need to change their eating habits, and completely change their life-style, actually, to take care of the serious problem of hypoglycemia.

I think that is probably why Utah's use of these drugs has become so high.

Martin: Nutritionally, or in terms of vitamins, supplements, or herbs, what are some good things to boost the pancreas, to rebuild the pancreatic function?

Dr. Tracy: There is a combination of herbs that I know Dr. John Christopher has on the market, that he calls Panc-Tea, and he has all of the herbs in that combination that are beneficial to rebuilding the pancreas.

[Editor's note: Dr. John Christopher may be reached by writing to: Dr. Christopher's Original Formulas, 1195 Spring Creek Place, Springville, UT 84663, or by calling: 1-800-453-1406 or 1-801-489-8787; fax: 1-801-489-7207. Dr. Christopher's website address is: www.drchristopher.com—although you will find that the products section is temporarily under reconstruction.]

And another thing that's good for the pancreas, you should say, is the Omega-3 oil, like flax-seed oil.

What is most important to remember with hypoglycemia, and with pancreatic malfunction, is that the first organ hit by any chemical that comes into the body is the pancreas. So, of course, protecting the pancreas, staying away from chemicals, is of utmost importance; staying away from sugar, which is a chemical because it is so completely processed that the nutrient level is pretty much absent by the time they're finished. Staying away from sugar is extremely important, and staying away from any stimulants is very important for healthy pancreatic function.

And of course, your extremely processed, very refined, white flour products will also turn to sugar quickly in the system. Those are the things that are very important to avoid in protecting pancreatic function, and restoring pancreatic function. And, also, what is very, very important is to keep the blood-sugar level up, and to keep it normal. Patients, generally, should be eating every 2 or 3 hours—eat small amounts every 2 or 3 hours.

Martin: Before we talk about bringing the serotonin levels back into balance, this would, actually, be considered a tangent, but because it affects so many people in America, also—let's talk about the combination of coffee and white sugar. What does that do to the body?

Dr. Tracy: Of course, any time you're using multiple stimulants, together, it's going to have a more damaging effect on the system. As I go through in my book and explain, it is this constant forcing of ourselves beyond the ability that we have provided with nutrients, beyond the energy level that we have provided with nutrients, it's that forcing us beyond that's leading us to the point where we just collapse, and feel like we need an even stronger stimulant, like one of these antidepressants. The opposite of a depressant, of course, is a stimulant!

And we go on to these more deadly, dangerous, very powerful stimulants to keep us going. It's like kicking a nearly dead horse. It's not fair to ourselves; it's not fair to our children that we push into these situations; it's not fair to employees that bosses are forcing them beyond their capabilities. We're using ourselves up before our time, and that's basically what is wrong when we reach for so many stimulants in our lives.

Martin: Well, even people leaning on over-the-counter pain medications, like Excedrin, for example. When you combine acetaminophen, aspirin, and caffeine—100 mg of caffeine, or whatever—that's a powerful combination, those three drugs together, just in simple, over-the-counter medication. God knows how many people reach for that.

Dr. Tracy: People have no idea what they are doing with drugs, whether it's over-the-counter or prescription. It's absolutely amazing.

I just lost my aunt who was like a mother to me. We were very, very close. And last year, I had mentioned to her, when I found out that she was using high-blood pressure medication, that I would feel better if she would get off of the high-blood pressure medication. I told her that she was aware of many natural alternatives to that, and that I felt there was absolutely no need for her to be taking the high-blood pressure medication.

I didn't push the issue with her. I wish, now, I would have, because the day before New Year's, her doctor called in a prescription for her for Amoxicillin, because she had been suffering from flu symptoms but was almost over the flu; and she mentioned this to the pharmacist when she called to see about picking up that prescription, that she thought she was having a sinus headache. The pharmacist, who should have known better, threw-in a sample of Tylenol Sinus Allergy for her to take for her sinus headache.

It only took TWO PILLS to kill her. She was dead within hours.

Martin: Was it a synergistic reaction?

Dr. Tracy: You cannot take antihistamines with beta-blockers, because you produce strokes. She had 3 in a row. So, we need to start paying attention to what we are doing with over-the-counter medications.

For instance, with these serotonergic medications, patients and many doctors seem to be completely unaware that you cannot, should not, be mixing over-the-counter cough syrups and cold medications that have dextromethorphan in them. Anything with dextromethorphan can produce a synergistic effect and produce Serotonin Syndrome, which is a condition where the serotonin gets so high that it can kill a patient within a 24-hour period. It can be fatal.

I had one young teen-age girl, she was just 14, who had been put on Paxil, and after a nightmarish year on the drug, her mother found my book and began to, slowly, help her daughter come down off of this drug. Well, unbeknownst to the mother, she somehow had missed that cough is listed as a side-effect of these serotonergic anti-depressants, because one of the things that serotonin does, remember, is constrict the bronchial tubes, so you're producing the cough in the patient.

In not realizing that it was just a side-effect to the Paxil, the mother went down and got cold medications and cough medications, over-the-counter, that had dextromethorphan in them. On the second day of giving her those cold and cough medications, this 14-year-old tore her schoolroom apart, ripped it up from one end to the other.

The school, of course, called the mother. The mother ran to the school and, in a panic, called me, saying "Oh, my gosh, please can you help me? This is what's happened to my daughter." We took her to the emergency room.

It was obvious her blood-sugar had dropped drastically, from this effect of the serotonin increase, so we gave her, of course, some juice to bring her blood-sugar back up, as she was rushed to the emergency room and checked. It is just a terrible tragedy that individuals are completely unaware of this aspect of mixing certain things.

When are we going to realize that drugs mean poison, and that there are many synergistic effects of mixing various poisons together?

Martin: This is the $10,000 question; well, this is one of them, but this is an important one, I feel. If you know that your serotonin levels are out of whack, and it is safe to say that it's out of whack for a lot of people in America, what is the most effective way to properly regulate these levels back to a balanced state within the body? Are there any specific nutrients or vitamins to regain serotonin balance?

Dr. Tracy: That is something I've spent 10 years searching for, is how to overcome the effects, once this has happened. We do know that there are things that can help to increase the metabolism of serotonin, so that those high levels come down.

We know that sunshine helps to increase the metabolism. Garlic is something that is supposed to help in increasing the metabolism of serotonin. Of course, supporting liver functions, so that the liver is functioning as it should, will help to increase the metabolism of serotonin. As far as finding what does, we don't know yet. It seems to me that Noni juice seems to help, from what I have seen with patients using the Noni juice.

Martin: From Hawaii?

Dr. Tracy: Right. But the one thing that we've found that's most important is for these individuals to rebuild their system with lots of good nutrition, and good vitamin therapy, and good organic vitamins, so that you're not introducing more chemicals into a body that, at this point, is completely overwhelmed and very chemically sensitive.

Martin: Let's talk about people who are on multiple medications, or just on Prozac. You mentioned the importance, in your book, of gradual withdrawal, as opposed to sudden withdrawal. What are some examples that you could give our readers? What has happened, that are very public examples, when someone just tries to go cold-turkey off these antidepressants?

Dr. Tracy: That's not a pretty picture; that's not a pretty picture. Going cold-turkey is probably the most dangerous thing that anyone on these drugs can do. Coming off of the drugs too quickly is the biggest mistake patients make. Especially once they discover how dangerous the drugs are, they are inclined to come off of the drugs far too quickly, which is tragic, because the results are very dangerous, and also self-defeating because the key to getting off of these drugs and staying off of the drugs, and doing so faithfully, is to taper, extremely slowly, down off of the drugs.

The body needs a chance to readjust all of its hormonal levels, all of the other chemical levels, neurotransmitter levels throughout the brain and throughout the body. You don't want to jerk the carpet right out from under you by going cold-turkey off of a medication that your body has adjusted to. And patients just don't stop and think about that.

The one very public example of what can happen when you drop off one of these drugs cold-turkey is Eric Harris in the Columbine shooting, the ringleader in the Columbine shooting. Eric mentioned that he was going to drop off the Luvox he was taking—which was Prozac-clone number 4, I believe. He was going to drop off his antidepressant to “fuel the rage” is how he put it. And we now have medical studies talking about the rage that comes from missing even one pill when you're on these medications. So, if you can throw someone into an uncontrollable rage through their cold-turkey withdrawal, I think anyone can understand why that would be so dangerous.

Martin: Well, obviously the pharmaceutical industry has come so far in the last hundred years that it stretches the imagination to think that these effects are not only known, up-front, but in fact, intentional. And if we talk about intentional production on this kind of massive level, and on this kind of massive mind-control and population manipulation, it is so diabolical that it is beyond scary.

That was a statement. Was there a question in there? (laughter)

Dr. Tracy: (laughter) I'm not sure. Read through it again.

Martin: I didn't read it, I just thought it.

Let's talk about our favorite people, Eli Lilly. (laughter)

Dr. Tracy: (laughter)

Martin: A couple of things about Eli Lilly. First of all, they have been unbelievably successful in their legal defenses, to date.

Dr. Tracy: If you call that success.

Martin: Let's talk about their new patent blunder, and what that could mean for concerned Prozac victims, out there in readerland?

Dr. Tracy: It was quite a revelation to find that they actually included, on their application for a patent on their “new, improved Prozac” that the reason why the new, improved Prozac needs to be approved, to extend their patent another 14 years—which, of course, means a lot to Eli Lilly. They're making $7 million a day on Prozac. So, sit down, do your math, and see what an extra 14 years is going to do for them. Vested interest? You bet.

The reason why the FDA needs to approve this “new, improved Prozac”, to bring in the $7 million a day, at least, for the next 14 years for Eli Lilly, is because the new, improved Prozac lacks many of the symptoms and side-effects brought on by the old Prozac. Where have we heard that before?

“This one doesn't have the side-effects....” Anyway, those side-effects are things like insomnia, self-mutilation, suicidal thoughts, and akathisia. Akathisia is the Greek term meaning you can't sit still. It's an agitated state that is believed to lead individuals to murder and suicide. In stating this in their patent application, it's actually admitting that the Prozac they've already had out on the market for the last 12+ years DOES produce those things!

That IS the implication, and that is why The Boston Globe exposed this, through their investigative report, and then went on to show what has been coming out in the court cases that have been filed over the last several years, and settled in secret over as many years.

They knew that all of these side effects were there from even before the drug was approved, which happened once before with a drug that they put on the market for arthritis. They were charged criminally, in 1985, for the drug Oraflex. They were charged, criminally, in the deaths of 139 patients, I believe. What happened was, the drug Oraflex had already been introduced in Europe.

Lilly knew that patients were dying there, and that, of course, these deaths were linked to the use of Oraflex. They did not disclose that to the FDA, as the FDA considered approving the drug here in America. And in a very short period of time, I believe it was only 3 months on the market, there had been reports of between 130 and 139 deaths. So, Lilly was charged criminally for those deaths, and ended up with—are you ready for this? A whopping $20,000 fine!

Keep in mind this is the same drug company that is bringing in $7 million a day, just on one of their drugs, Prozac.

Martin: Not even a slap on the wrist.

Dr. Tracy: No.

Martin: What is the Wesbecker verdict?

Dr. Tracy: A farse. (laughter) Are you going to print that?

Martin: Of course I will.

Dr. Tracy: Shall we go over the Wesbecker case first?

Martin: Sure. I want to take the time remaining and use it the best way we can.

Dr. Tracy: Then let's go from the little Oraflex fiasco that we've just discussed right into the Wesbecker case.

The Oraflex information is very important for the public to become aware of because that IS the information that Eli Lilly was so adamant not be disclosed to the jury in the Wesbecker case.

The Wesbecker case was the first Prozac case to go to court. It was the first high profile, murder/suicide case that ever hit the courts, here in America. Joseph Wesbecker worked at the Standard Gravure Corporation (in Kentucky). This was a printing company, and though he had recently been prescribed Prozac, after being prescribed Prozac he became very agitated, became delusional, was beginning to think that one of his bosses at work was making him perform oral sex on him in front of other workers—just completely bizarre types of thoughts he was having, but he felt that Prozac was helping him to remember what had happened.

So, his psychiatrist immediately jotted down in his notes that he felt that Prozac was the cause for this drastic change in his patient, and recommended to his patient that he come off of the drug. Only two days later did Joseph Wesbecker go into his place of work and he shot 20 people, I believe, which resulted in 8 deaths. He killed 7 co-workers and himself.

When that case went to court, I think Eli Lilly knew that they had to put everything into this case that they had. All stops were pulled. And when the plaintiff finally got permission from the judge to introduce the evidence to the jury about the Oraflex situation with Eli Lilly, that had happened just a few years before, both the plaintiffs and the defendants called for recess.

During that time we now know that a settlement agreement was reached between Lilly and the plaintiffs. But, part of that settlement agreement was that both parties would go back into court, no further evidence would be presented against Lilly, including the Oraflex information that they just received permission to introduce. And that they did.

After adjourning to reach the settlement, they went back into the courtroom and the plaintiffs told the judge that they had no further evidence to introduce, which he thought was very strange because he had just given them permission to do what they had wanted to do from the beginning, which was introduce the Oraflex information. And when the jury went in to make their decision, they of course went without any of the evidence that they needed to hear, and they came back and by a very slim margin found Lilly to be not guilty in this terrible murder/suicide situation.

After that, the way the public found out what happened was that the judge wasn't born yesterday. He figured out what was going on and was irate that his courtroom had been used as a marketing ploy by Eli Lilly—because they, of course, went on national television using this case to say: “Our drugs have been vindicated. Prozac was found not guilty. We have gone head-to-head with our accusers and have been found ‘not guilty’.”

Martin: And this is the so-called Wesbecker verdict?

Dr. Tracy: That is the Wesbecker verdict.

And they're still using it today, as evidence that there's no problem with their drug Prozac, even though it cost them about $50 million dollars. That is what investigators have determined the amount was. Both sides have refused to disclose the amount, but in some court documents involving divorce of some of the individual plaintiffs, figures had to be disclosed. And that's an approximate figure, that it is close to $50 million dollars that Eli Lilly paid out.

But you need to understand how beneficial that was to them because there were, approximately, 140 lawsuits waiting in the wings to go to court, at the time this happened. Most of those, if not all of those, were dismissed as the individuals, of course, lost faith that any justice could be found in a courtroom. So, how much did they save on all those cases?

Martin: Are there any law firms you're aware of, currently, who are going head-to-head with Lilly?

Dr. Tracy: Oh, yeah.

Martin: Are there any you could recommend?

Dr. Tracy: Andy Vickery of Vickery & Waldner. The address is: Vickery & Waldner, The American Tower, 2929 Allen Parkway, Suite 2410, Houston, TX 77019; phone: 1-713-526-1100; fax: 1-713-523-5939; email to info@justiceseekers.com and they have a www.justiceseekers.com website.

They were the lead attorneys for Phil Hartman.

Martin: Now, apparently there is a class-action suit that's just been filed against the producers of Ritalin?

Dr. Tracy: So I've heard. I don't know too much about it, but I have heard that.

Martin: Is there anything you care to say about Ritalin while we're on that subject?

Dr. Tracy: Not really. I'd rather just leave Ritalin right out of it. I would include your comment about the class-action suit being filed. The people need to know that. There's a lot out there on Ritalin. I think what people really need to know is about these antidepressants, because they're replacing Ritalin with these antidepressants.

Martin: I was not aware—I read in your book that Prozac multiplies many other medications by 10 times or more! Talking about synergistic effects, that's incredible. I don't know how many people really know about that. That is unbelievably dangerous.

Dr. Tracy: Even doctors seem to be completely unaware.

Martin: Let's go back to Prozac, and the latest antidepressants, and the dangers of people acting-out. What do you want to tell our readers who may have sons or daughters or sisters or brothers—or any family or friends—on Prozac? What should they look for? What behavioral things should they try to observe? What would you recommend to those people?

Dr. Tracy: First of all, let's point out that Prozac was only the beginning of this serotonin madness, because we also have Zoloft, Paxil, Luvox, Effexor, Serzone, and Celexa, as well as Belbutran or Ziban that's being given to stop smoking, which is far too similar to these drugs. We have all these medications that do increase serotonin.

How do I respond to your question in a nutshell? It took me 425 pages in a very condensed book to explain exactly what it is that you look for, but let's see if we can list just a few things, and are basically what you're told to look for when you're looking to see if they're using illegal drugs.

You look for drastic changes in their personality. You look for irritability. You look for an inability to sleep at night. Nightmares is another thing; nightmares are really critical.

You also look for what is called a beneficial, or what many people look at as a beneficial effect of these drugs. You look for someone who suddenly becomes very happy-go-lucky, in other words, high, too giddy, too exuberant.

You see, when you give these drugs to patients who are shy and bashful, someone might look at that as a beneficial effect of the drug, when in fact it is a sign that the brain is being damaged to the point that the individual is actually becoming high.

The reason why the nightmares are something that should really be watched out for is because when these drugs repress the REM sleep state, which is your dream state, the body forces you into a dream while you're awake, and then the increase in serotonin is producing nightmares and your brain forces you into a dream while you're awake, and it's a nightmare that you begin to act out. That is why, on these drugs, we have mothers who are very caring, loving moms who are killing their children, because their worst nightmare is something terrible happening to their children.

And, so far, about 90% of the moms who are taking the lives of their children are on these medications. They're not on meth (methamphetamines). They're not on cocaine. If they were, it would be headline news. Instead they're on their medications. But what so many people don't know is that most illegal drugs were once considered "safe" medications, "safe and effective" medications. Few people know that PCP was on the market for 7 years before it was pulled, marketed under the name Sernyl, meaning peace or tranquility.

Martin: Pretty scary drug.

Dr. Tracy: Oh, yeah. You won't find a police officer anywhere who wants to run into anybody on PCP.

Martin: No. Just the super-human strength aspect.

Dr. Tracy: Right. And I have never seen a group of drugs so similar to PCP than these new serotonergic agents that are on the market today. In fact, it was a drug enforcement official who made the first statement that made me start to really look at PCP and the similarity. And he said "Whenever I run into anyone on Prozac, I take several steps back because I never know what to expect out of them." That's exactly what officers say about someone on PCP.

Martin: Is law enforcement being trained, now, about the dangers of these mood-altering antidepressants?

Dr. Tracy: Well, they're being trained just by everyday experience with people who are on these medications, because they see it all the time. In fact, I had an officer tell me, who came to check on a break-in at my home years ago, clear back in '92 or '93, when I mentioned to him that I was researching Prozac, he said: "Oh, Prozac, I rarely investigate a suicide where I don't find Prozac in the medicine cabinet."

Martin: Wow, that's quite a statement.

Dr. Tracy: And I've got a coroner out of Florida who told me that the standard statement when a coroner/investigator walks into an autopsy on a suicide is: "So, have you found the Prozac yet?" When we're hearing these kinds of statements from police officers and coroners, who are the ones who clean-up after one of these tragedies, we better start listening. They're the ones who see it; the doctors don't. The doctors hand out the drugs, but they don't have to go in and clean-up after these tragedies. I know police officers here in Utah, for years, have referred to those on Prozac as "Prozac junkies". I've often said, if you want to learn the truth about these medications, you need to talk to a coroner or you need to talk to a police officer, and get the truth from them.

Martin: Prozac, in your book, doubles cortisol levels. Let's talk about that.

Dr. Tracy: Wow, yes. Let's point out, as we begin to talk about cortisol, that it is the body's version of cortisone, which is a steroid. And we'll show that relationship, because many people are familiar with cortisone and it's effects.

Cortisol has been called the "death hormone", the "stress hormone"; it is the hormone to check to see if the patient is stressed or depressed. They expect to see both when cortisol levels are elevated.

With the Prozac doubling the cortisol level with only one 30 mg dose, you can get an idea of the damage that it can cause in doing that. We have known, for a very long time now, that as cortisone, pregnasone, other types of steroids, were introduced to the market, patients can go psychotic as a result of this increase in steroids, and yet one single 30 mg dose given to an individual who has not taken Prozac before, and does not take it again, can actually have the cortisol level doubled. It's just mind boggling.

To give you an idea of how damaging that can be, I called an endocrinologist and I said: "Can you tell me how long the human body can possibly tolerate having the cortisol level doubled on a daily basis?"

He gasped for air and said "Oh, my gosh. You can't do that to someone!"

I said "If you could, can you tell me how long the human body could tolerate that type of an effect?"

He said "Well, maybe a month or two, certainly no longer." And then he asked why I would ask such a question.

I said "That's the effect that Prozac has."

And he immediately protested, saying "Oh, no, no. Prozac is a wonderful drug. It doesn't have that kind of effect on cortisol levels."

So I had to give him the study reference, and have him go read it himself, because he had never heard of this. It's tragic because I have just run across all kinds of research by Ray Fuller, who is one of the two developers of Prozac, that he was looking at the effect of this drug on cortisol levels clear back in the '70s.

Martin: Let's talk, for a minute, about the two developers of Prozac. Who are they?

Dr. Tracy: About the only thing I have to say about the two developers is that I do know where they will, most likely, spend eternity.

Martin: With a drug of this magnitude, and so many people on it, I have to immediately think the worst, in my paranoid thinking, and immediately jump to: Ok, are they CIA? If they're not CIA, who are they? Who are they working for? Who's paying them, other than the pharmaceutical companies? Who's behind them? Who signs their paycheck? Those are the questions I want to know.

Dr. Tracy: One thing we should say, as part of your inquiry of the developers, is to point out that Dr. Candice Pert, who was one of the two developers of the serotonin binding process which made all these drugs possible, came out in TIME magazine in October 1997 and said that she was alarmed at the monsters that she had created. She went on to explain how tragic she felt this whole situation is that exists in our country today, with the use of these drugs. She now sits on the Advisory Board for The International Coalition for Drug Awareness, which I head.

Martin: Let's talk about that for a moment. What is the purpose of your organization?

Dr. Tracy: The purpose of the organization is to alert the public to problems with various prescription drugs. We started with these medications. We want to expand to include many others. Then the patients will begin to get some idea of what we know about these medications, with some of the latest research and information coming out, because we've basically been turned into one, big, clinical lab experiment, the way the drugs are being introduced to the market, so rapidly, with so little research being done on them.

Then, I think it's important for the guinea pigs to become aware of what we're learning from their own input. Prescription drugs are one of the leading causes of death in America. It is, according to their own figures, the third leading cause of death in this country today!

We lose 200,000 people a year to prescription drugs—anyway, that's the figure that they admit to—while, on the other hand, between 15,000 to 20,000 people are lost to illegal drugs. Because of that, we felt that it was really important to start addressing the third leading cause of death, because no one was.

Partnership For A Drug-Free America wouldn't address it, and we learned that the most likely reasons why is because much of their funding comes from the pharmaceutical companies. Sometimes I wonder if the whole drug war, that we see out there against the illegal drugs, was created just to divert attention, and to get rid of competition for the pharmaceutical companies.

[Editor's note: And don't forget the biggie: some aspects of our government ARE IN the drug business to generate revenue for covert projects while assisting with the New World Order agenda item mandating the breaking down of society. This drug business was "artistically" depicted in the movie Air America and sort-of exposed in the Ollie North hearings. The so-called "war on drugs" hides the machinery in place to crush any outside competition to that lucrative business enterprise while giving the public relations impression of an effort working to eliminate drugs from our streets. Meanwhile we have Prozac and its clones introduced to "legally" bring down a much larger group of society who may not be drawn to the illegal drugs on the streets to get the job done.]

Martin: Sure, it's a big distraction.

What is CRF (corticotropin-releasing factor)? Is that important at all?

Dr. Tracy: It is, in the fact that it does cause a release of cortisol. But there is a whole chain of reactions that get you to that point. And it's the stimulation of the hypothalamus, pituitary, adrenal axis that does produce that effect. So that is just how the drugs work by providing the stimulus to get you to the point that the cortisol is released. The end result is what is significant; that huge increase in cortisol is so damaging, both physically and mentally.

Martin: On the front of your book you have a whole string of names: Prozac, Zoloft, Paxil, etc., and it almost begs the question that—it's almost like a "sleight-of-hand" trick.

They keep throwing new ones at us, in the hopes that no one is paying attention, and that includes the doctors. And, of course, the doctors are being kept in the dark because what they're being fed is the very information that the pharmaceutical companies want them to have. So, regardless of how bad Prozac is, the strategy seems to be: "We're going to throw ten more at you, just like it, under different names, under a different cover, and before you can realize what's going on, there will be ten more behind that!"

Dr. Tracy: Right. And that frightens me so much. I cannot believe how many doctors are telling patients, who walk into their office saying "I don't want Prozac or anything like it" that these other Prozac clones, they tell them, are nothing like Prozac; and yet, they're basically Prozac coming out in stronger and stronger forms, under different names. Celexa, the newest one on the market, scares me to death. I held my breath for years, hoping that they would never get that one approved.

Martin: And what is Celexa?

Dr. Tracy: It's a serotonin reuptake inhibitor, just like Prozac. But what is so frightening about Celexa is it's extremely strong effect upon increasing serotonin, much stronger than any of the others. Paxil is probably right behind it, a very, very strong effect.

And yet, these drugs are marketed on afternoon television as if they're just the greatest thing since apple pie. I mean, with Paxil we're told that we "will come into life". I'd love to do a commercial for them and point out that it's the AFTER-life you're coming into with Paxil! The drug is deadly, so damaging.

I have several cases of young boys who, within days on Paxil, have brutally murdered family members, very brutal cases; one where a young man stabbed his grandmother 61 times, then jumped into a car and rammed it into a cement abutment on a bridge, or something like that, trying to kill himself. Just really tragic situations. And that was only 5 days of taking Paxil.

Martin: To date, have there been any legal defenses put forward that the drugs were the CAUSE of the crime?

Dr. Tracy: Oh, yeah.

Martin: And what has been the result of those cases?

Dr. Tracy: Tragically, the drug companies have become very much a part of those cases, as well, sticking their noses into criminal proceedings and helping prosecutors to put these individuals into prison so that their drugs would not be held accountable for what was happening. This is because, if their drugs are found to be guilty, rather than the individual, then they end up facing lawsuits.

So, because of that, they have actually—Lilly, early on, told doctors that if they were sued for prescribing Prozac, using their guidelines, that they would come in and help to defend them. So, it's tragic to see how individuals have had to fight so hard to show that this is what has happened to them.

For instance, put yourself in the place of one of the victims of these drugs, who has done something so completely and horribly out of character, as killing someone who they loved. If there was someone at work who was slipping LSD or PCP into your food every day, or your drinks every day, unbeknown to you, and after several months of doing that you ended up killing your family, who's accountable?

Martin: Theoretically, it SHOULD open a whole new branch of law, and a whole new legal defense.

Dr. Tracy: That's right.

Martin: Not by reason of insanity.

Dr. Tracy: Involuntary intoxication.

Martin: But by reason of DRUG INDUCED INSANITY.

Dr. Tracy: Right.

Martin: You could call it the Serotonin Defense. (laughter)

Dr. Tracy: Yeah. (laughter)

Martin: I'm amazed that we don't hear more about this.

Dr. Tracy: It IS happening. I've been testifying on the cases for 8 years, but as I said, it is very difficult to fight when you've got the drug companies that—I've gotten a report that they've even sent attorneys in to help the prosecutors. They do provide them information in the cases, to help fight these individuals. And it's really tragic.

There have been quite a few cases in the last couple of years, finally, where we have seen people who have been acquitted and/or people who have just been put on probation for instances where death was actually a part of the case—drug-induced murder. So, it IS looking up. How a patient ever puts their life back together again, when someone has done this to them, I don't know. I don't think anyone could possibly give them a punishment that is worse than what they have already gone through.

Martin: Just having to remain living is punishment enough.

Dr. Tracy: Yes, knowing what someone has chemically induced you to do that is so completely and totally out of character from anything you have ever done in your life, have ever conceived of doing, such is a tragedy.

Martin: Let's talk, for just a minute—you mention in your book Aldous Huxley and his Brave New World. As an American society, starting with the '60s, and its just gone on from there, we are a culture, more than any other culture, that reaches for a bottle of pills for that "quick fix".

Dr. Tracy: That's why you will see the statement at the top of my book that says "TURNING THE '90S UPSIDE DOWN", because we're reliving the '60s. We're using the same type of drug, without even realizing it, and it's coming from our family doctors, people who we trust, and what we are seeing is, basically, what we saw then, and yet we have not yet woken-up to it. We have no idea how extensive the damage will be—not just to individuals, but to society as a whole—and the cost is beyond anything we can conceive at this point.

Martin: In your mind, what are the key issues about these pharmaceuticals that are still being avoided by the mainstream media?

Dr. Tracy: The key issues?

Martin: Yes.

Dr. Tracy: Practically all of it! (laughter)

Martin: I'm trying to get into a summary portion here, where we can round-up some big concepts, closing thoughts, food for thought, that kind of thing.

Dr. Tracy: The media is basically ignoring this issue altogether. The last few months there has been some new information that has come out, and I have to applaud the media for finally addressing these issues. They are beginning to address murder, violence, and suicide. They're beginning to address the damaging effects, such as tardive dyskinesia. [Editor's note: Technically speaking, this is an impairment of voluntary movement resulting in fragmentary or incomplete movements and/or involuntary and uncontrollable muscle twitches or contractions. In the recent 20/20 television segment on these SSRI drugs, a person who exhibited these symptoms looked like a puppet whose arms and legs were being violently jerked about by a deranged puppeteer. The shaking of Parkinson's disease, which we see Janet Reno exhibiting more and more these days, is somewhat similar but very, very mild in comparison to the range of spasmodic motions endured by those who have tardive dyskinesia. Though the person who was interviewed with this on 20/20 was relatively young and quickly got off the SSRI drug she was taking once the symptoms manifested, it was expected she would have to contend with this condition for the rest of her life! One can but hope that some who practice the True Healing Arts will find a way to surmount that dismal expectation and return persons such as this lady to good health.]

They're beginning to address the withdrawal associated with these drugs, which is beyond anything I've ever seen with any drug before. So, at least they're addressing a few issues.

Divorce is something that has totally been left out of the picture, which is bad, because this dissolving of relationships probably affects more people than just about any of the other effects of these drugs. Relationships are the fiber of our society, and when you see families being broken-up, to me that is possibly one of the most critical issues with these drugs that's being ignored. Also being ignored is the fact that patients who are on these medications generally leave their religion. So, we're ending-up with a society that is without the bond of family, and without the guidance of religious beliefs.

Martin: That sounds like the Communist Manifesto all over again.

Dr. Tracy: Well, they said that they would destroy us from within. What did they mean? Did they mean from within our own bodies?

Martin: It certainly seems like they're very successful, doesn't it?

Dr. Tracy: It certainly does. What I have seen happen to our society in the last 10-12 years is just overwhelming. I have seen more death, more bloodshed in the last 10 years to last me a lifetime, an eternity. If people saw what I see every day, you would have every individual in this country doing everything they could to stop the flow of these drugs.

Martin: What made The Boston Globe step forward, I wonder?

Dr. Tracy: Very good question.

Generally speaking, it is so tragic that we seem to have to wait until it affects us, so close to home, before we do anything.

Martin: I think that's the nature of human. It seems to be.

Martin: Wait until it reaches a crisis. Wait until it affects our pocketbooks.

Dr. Tracy: And it is, that's just it. We don't understand how much we're being affected by these drugs, whether we're using them or not, because I don't care where you go every day, you could be in danger of someone going off the deep end on one of these drugs and going on a shooting spree, or deciding to ram your car with theirs, or you could be sitting in your own home, while your own neighbor, who's on these drugs, runs through your front door and kills your family, and then kills themselves. We've had several situations already where that has happened.

And beyond the violence, what is affecting people the most, that they seem to be unaware of, is the very nasty individual who you get on the other end of the phone line when you're trying to resolve an issue over a bill, or something that has been a mistake, or situations where you're being over-billed—all because somebody can't think straight on these drugs, who's working for the company that you're dealing with—or lawmakers on the medication who, in their delusions, are passing laws or supporting laws or changing laws that are going to negatively affect you.

Martin: I would think that the Justice Department, and all of the judges in the country, should have a bulletin put out to all of them informing them of these facts about these drugs, so that they could look in their courtrooms, as cases come up, for any correlations.

Dr. Tracy: True. In order for there to be fair judgement, that should be the case. But we don't even know how many judges might be on these drugs!

Martin: That's right.

Dr. Tracy: Another area that is affecting society is the large number of bankruptcies being filed by people who go manic on these drugs, because part of mania is "wild spending"; some of these people go through half-a-million dollars without blinking an eye. And they will borrow money from friends and relatives to do that. They stop at nothing to get the funds, to spend like crazy, on wild ideas, that they wonder where on Earth did they come from when they get off the drug. So, there's the bankruptcies.

There's also the high insurance rate. There's the high taxes. The insurance rates, of course, are going up because of accidents that happen because of the drugs, poor judgement. Also, the number of accidents from cars that may have been put together by someone who's on the drugs when they do the work. You've got to remember that these drugs have amnesia listed as one of the frequent side-effects. And if someone is putting a car together, and they're suffering from amnesia, you may have some very critical parts that are not being included in the car, or in that airplane, or in that bus, or truck. And that could cost you your life, or, as I said, cost you increased insurance rates because of the increased number of accidents, due to things such as that.

And beyond that, you also have higher taxes because of the increased number of people going to prison for these drugs, and also the increases in Medi-Care payments or disability payments, from people who end-up disabled from the damage caused by the drugs. I know, I just recently testified in a pre-trial for a young man who ended-up taking a plea bargain; while on Paxil he attacked someone. And, actually, when you look at what happened, his reason for attacking him was not out-of-line for someone who wasn't on medication, but in this fight that he had with this individual, he bit the man's ear and a piece of the ear was bitten off, and could not be reattached. So, that made it a worse offense than if he almost beat him to death with a baseball bat, or something. He ended-up having to take a plea bargain. He will spend 8 years in prison for that. What's that going to cost the public? This is a kid with a 3.8 grade-point average, who had never been in any kind of trouble with the law before. It will cost us, at least, half a million dollars to keep him in prison, now, for the next 8 years, not to mention the productivity that we've lost from him, as he's locked in prison.

Now, that's just one case; multiply that by thousands, because we know, according to Yale, that 8% of those going into psychiatric hospitals today are there as a direct result of going psychotic on one of these medications, one of these anti-depressants.

Martin: Did you say 8%?

Dr. Tracy: 8%. Now, according to the figures I've seen, that comes out to be 150,000 people a year going into psych wards because they've gone psychotic, and that's just the psychoses produced by the drugs.

Martin: Gone psychotic over an anti-depressant drug.

Dr. Tracy: Right. How many more didn't make it into a psychiatric hospital, who ended-up going psychotic and doing something for which they were thrown into jail, or because of which they ended-up dead? We don't know how many more thousands of them there are, but we've got an idea that it's got to be pretty high.

If you look at that one case of this young man who's going to spend 8 years in prison and cost us that much money, multiply that by the thousands of others out there, and you've got some idea of the increase in costs this is giving all of us.

And we might point out, also, that Mike Tyson only ended-up with a fine; he was on Zoloft when he bit somebody's ear completely off.

Martin: I was just going to ask you. I was just thinking about him.

Dr. Tracy: The biting is a very common effect of the increase of serotonin; the clenching of the jaw, that tightening of the muscles. We have a case of a woman, a Berkeley professor who I mention in my book, who, after a month on Prozac, and having the cravings for alcohol that come with it, bit her mother to death. I believe it was 21 chunks of flesh that she took out of her mother. The mother did die from it. This was a Berkeley professor, a woman, committing such an incredibly violent act, after a month on Prozac.

And, perhaps, one thing that we should go into is the cravings for alcohol, because that is something that is being ignored. That's the first thing I saw with these drugs. Sitting in the middle of Utah, surrounded by tea-drinking Mormons, perhaps this is why it stood out like a sore thumb here, where it may not have somewhere else. But I saw people who had never drank in their lives, becoming alcoholics overnight, and the only thing that they all had in common was a prescription for Prozac.

When you go into the research that we have on serotonin, and its effects on blood sugar, you begin to understand how these drugs are causing the craving for the alcohol, which I believe is a drastic drop in blood-sugar levels that is producing this craving for the alcohol. But the mixture of the alcohol with the Prozac, or the Zoloft, or the Paxil, can produce psychoses even faster than just taking the drug alone.

So, it's causing an extremely dangerous situation when it's producing these cravings for alcohol. Princes Di's driver is, possibly, the most visible case that we have seen of this. His blood alcohol content was 3-4 times the legal limit, and the minute I heard that, I said "you've got a driver on Prozac" and a week later they said "we've got a driver on Prozac". When you see such overwhelming compulsions to drink, you see them consume huge amounts of alcohol, you also see them consume small amounts of alcohol, but the level goes way up. So we do know, from most cases, we can see that there is an effect of the drug magnifying, or magnifying the effect of the alcohol, or impairing the metabolism of the alcohol, so that you're getting high levels, high alcohol blood levels from that.

Martin: Our reading audience is fairly proactive. What would you recommend that people do, actually do? If they could do one thing, one act, what would you suggest that they do to help?

Dr. Tracy: I believe that the most important thing to do is to educate everyone you can, any way you can. Certainly, getting the information to those who are making decisions in this country is important. But everyone is being affected by these drugs.

You will be surprised, as you begin to ask, how many people you know are on these medications. It is extremely important to educate the public to help them to understand that they have been lied to about these drugs, that they have been lied to about the whole serotonin issue.

That is why I wrote my book [PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? Ordering information is nearby]. I knew that I would not be able to reach people individually, for much longer, because there's only one of me and I was definitely running out of the time that I needed to eat and sleep, and still educate as many people as had questions; so I had to write the book to, basically, clone myself to get the information to more individuals.

So, I would encourage people to get the information in the book to others. Get our website [www.drugawareness.org] out to others, so that they will be informed, and please inform us of any bizarre situations in your own areas that involve these drugs, so that we can help the families, and so that people will know when these drugs are involved in these cases, because one of the hardest things that I do is to follow-up on these cases to find out which drug was involved in which incident. And if we're not made aware of those incidents, we don't know. There are so many at this point that they're not being carried from one newspaper to another, like they used to be. There's just too many.

Martin: I think we've pretty well covered it. Do you have what would amount to a closing statement or some final thoughts?

Dr. Tracy: I guess all I could say, in closing, is: This is the most subtle, and diabolically horrifying situation this country has ever faced. We are in the middle of the worst drug problem we've ever seen. And if we don't wake-up to it, and wake-up to it quickly, we will see blood run in our streets in America, even more than what we're seeing today. We're talking about safe schools—we've just got to talk about a safe society, period, safe homes. As long as someone has healthy brain function, normal brain function, they tend to make correct choices. I really believe that people will choose good. I have faith in my fellow human beings.

But, when the brain is altered, when the brain is damaged, the individual is no longer capable of doing that. We need to understand that anything that we are doing to damage our brain is creating chaos, and tragedy, and violence in our society. It's just long past time for us to understand this very, very critical issue in our lives.

Martin: That's perfect. Thank you so much for taking the time. I think that you'll find that this will get out and be read by a lot of people, and it will be helpful. Again, my deepest thanks and full support to you. Thank you so much.

PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA?

Ann Blake Tracy, Ph.D.

"PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? is an incredible compilation of medical data that will lay the groundwork to educate other professionals and the general public about the new SSRI antidepressants—Prozac, Zoloft, Paxil, Luvox, Effexor and Serzone." —Jeff Wise, psychologist, Salt Lake County Drug and Alcohol Abuse

"In 15 years of reading books on drugs I have never read a book with more information or so well documented as PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA?" —Dr. Kevin Millet, Bountiful, UT

"As I lecture to physicians nationwide on the medical use of psychoactive drugs, PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? always accompanies me in my briefcase." —Dr. Bruce Woolley, neuropsychopharmacologist, Brigham Young Univ.

"I found PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? fascinating reading and the most complete analysis of the various factors pertaining to the Prozac controversy." —Attorney Donald Sokol, Susanville, CA

"PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? literally saved my life, and if I'd known about it a year earlier, could have saved me untold grief and agony as well. It is the only collated, comprehensive source I know of for this information.... This book described everything that had happened to me in great detail, gave scientific reasons why it happened, backed it all up with solid research, included testimonials from hundreds of others in the same situation; it immaculately details, explains, and refers one to the latest research on a whole hornet's nest of 'atypical' side- and/or after-effects from the use of these antidepressants. It also contains information on how to reduce the severity of problems encountered while starting on or going off these meds." —Nick Jameson, Prozac patient

"Magnificent! This text is a monument to Ann Tracy's tenacity and love for her fellow human beings." —Dr. Paul Kennedy, N.J.

"PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? has not left one question about these drugs unanswered! Ann Tracy has covered them all." —Margaret McCaffery, N.Y. (lost her daughter, a neurosurgeon, in a Prozac suicide)

"The work Dr. Ann Blake Tracy is doing is very important and she is truly a heroine." —Dr. Candace Pert, Washington D.C, one of the two developers of the serotonin binding process which made possible the development of the serotonergic drugs. (Dr. Pert has boldly stated, speaking of these serotonergic medications: "I am alarmed at the monsters I created!")

Are You Ready For All That May Cross Your Path?

Good evening, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in the Radiant Light of The One Light—Creator Source. Be at peace.

Allow for the message to come at its own pace. There are great efforts being made by those dark entities who do not wish this type of message to go forward. Keep the Light of Creator Source about you at all times, and be not hesitant to call upon the Lighted Brotherhood for protection. The call from a sincere, petitioning heart is always responded to. Again, be at peace.

As the current play continues to unfold, you ones will find yourselves being bombarded with one atrocity of "justice" after another. You are seeing and will continue to witness a systematic tearing down of your basic rights and freedoms. The illusion you now live in is fast crumbling, and the harsher "reality" of the actual plans which the so-called "elite" have laid out will soon become more and more evident and blatant as they play their "trump cards".

Many a great skeptic will find their stomach churning as they suddenly become aware of what is going on and realize they have been "hiding" from acceptance of all the clues that have been present for quite some time now. This sort of "slap in the face" awakening is not pleasant, and many will become quite despondent as the larger picture comes into their conscious awareness.

This is the greater reason we have placed so many of you who are Ground Crew all over the globe. When the ones you have come to assist are in their time of great confusion and near shutdown (emotionally and analytically) is when you each will begin to understand that you have been prepared for these events and that you have a duty/responsibility to offer a helping hand to these ones.

The forthcoming events will not likely throw the majority of you who are of Ground Crew into a state of shock because you have been aware of the various planned depopulation efforts of these quite insane power-brokers for some time now. No, shock will not be your response. But annoyance, anger and such may very well be your response! If so, quickly allow these to pass through your experience, for it will do little good to remain in such a state.

You will not have a tendency to shut down like the ones who have been jolted awake as the claws of the beast are clenching their throats and staring them directly in the face. These ones will need your strength, your certainty, and your wisdom.

They will NOT need the "I tried to warn you!" or the "I told you so!" type of response. This will be your opportunity to shine forth your INNER LIGHT so that your brethren will have the opportunity to see that there is HOPE and that there is a solution to be recognized.

You each will be given to know what to do if and when such situations present themselves. Call upon the Lighted Brotherhood for assistance. Call upon Creator Source—The One Light—for Guidance. EXPECT an answer and follow your "gut" feelings and intuitions.

Remember, always, that MANY will reject your offers at first, for they will be in shock. Many will, at first, lash out against anyone and everyone. These are the ones who are the Lighted souls who internally are reacting to an inner sense of recognition that they have (once again) fallen for the Adversary's "lullabies"—only to wake-up and find that they have been living in a world of lies. These are the ones in whom we are most interested, for they are the ones who have the greatest potential for

Be always kind to the ones who cross your path—especially the ones who seem the most hostile toward The Truth you bear—for these are the ones who, indeed, most need the message you carry. Harbor NO ill feeling for these ones. Let their attacks pass quickly away from your experience, and be quick to again offer assistance when the opportunity comes to do so. Set the ego reactions of the physical aside, for in times of great confusion once rational persons can become quite irrational and thus dangerous, and what once may have caused a minor squabble could result in the premature ending of your present Earthly experience.

Never underestimate the power of kindness. A kind act taken from a position of compassion will do wonders for a confused and frightened individual. Show these ones that they are still very much cared for and that the challenges they face are for their ultimate growth as an individual—and that God NEVER gives them more than they can handle.

Remember these words for yourself as well! There will be truly challenging times for ALL ones experiencing on the planet. This message will not be new to many of you, but we see that there are many wanting to know what their purpose is in the larger play at hand. Your purpose will be, in general, to help others to help themselves. Perhaps you will be the one who simply offers a smile as you hand someone a bowl of soup. The smile may, in turn, help ones realize they have value and there is hope.

The Lightworker's role is often the quiet, unassuming position of humility and service to others. The smallest actions of kindness offered without expectation of reciprocation are often the most impacting and helpful to ones who are in a state of emotional crisis.

Stand firm in your own convictions. But be quick to discern the appropriateness and timing of what you have to offer. Again, the kind words of encouragement will go much further than the sermon of "I told you so" in times of crisis.

You EACH have much to contribute to the whole of Creation. You each have talents, abilities, and skills that can instill in others a sense of confidence and certainty that survival

MOST OF ALL—AT ALL TIMES
KEEP THE LIGHT OF CREATOR
SOURCE AROUND YOU AND AROUND THOSE WITH WHOM YOU COME IN CONTACT.

This will help you to stay centered (balanced) and thus more easily recognize the Guidance offered. It will also have a calming effect on those around you and help to keep away those who are of dark intent—both physical and non-physical.

is possible as long as everyone contributes their unique gifts when the situation warrants same.

Prepare for the coming times not with anxiety, but rather with anticipation. Approach any challenging situation with a sense of knowing that the answers will present themselves to you, and that by keeping calm and keeping your frequency up, you will be able to connect with Higher Guidance and find solutions to ANY problem with which you may be faced.

Sometimes the solution may come through a small child who many would rather ignore than take the time to listen to. Other times an answer may come in the form of a strong personal intuition that strikes you and you “just know” what is the right thing to do. Be flexible in your thinking and you will not be likely to miss the solution when it is presented to you.

MOST OF ALL—AT ALL TIMES KEEP THE LIGHT OF CREATOR SOURCE AROUND YOU AND AROUND THOSE WITH WHOM YOU COME IN CONTACT.

This will help you to stay centered (balanced) and thus more easily recognize the Guidance offered. It will also have a calming effect on those around you and help to keep away those who are of dark intent—both physical and non-physical.

There is no easy way to emphasize the importance of the subject we are discussing here without it sounding like “doom and gloom”. Offering a picture that evokes thoughts, ideas, and (most importantly) cognitive understanding of the intent of our message is how we of the Lighted Realms of Creation operate. We are quite careful NOT to usurp your free will by saying that you MUST do this or that. We offer to you, through this forum, general answers that will hopefully spark within you each a greater awareness of your TRUE self.

If you desire greater personal counsel from your Guides or from any others of We of the Lighted Realms of Creation, then please consider that YOU EACH have the ability to go within and establish a conscious connection to Source—Creator God. You need no special tools or training. All that is truly needed is a strong conviction supported by a clearly focused question, asked with sincerity of the heart, and an expectation that an answer WILL be given.

Please re-read the last sentence until you truly understand for yourself what it means. Get a dictionary out; look-up the definitions of “conviction” and “sincerity”.

You each are children of God, and you each have the innate ability to establish an inner, conscious connection with The One who created you—Father/Mother Source. Learn to recognize this connection. It is free. There are no price tags, conditions, or penalties for establishing and using your ever-present connection to Creator Source. In fact, it is more-or-less expected that you will cause conditions (challenges) for yourself so as to bring about a desire/need for, and thus recognition of, this very connection. (This is a more general way of saying that there are no atheists in a warzone foxhole.)

We who come to you in this forum are well aware of the many needs, desires, and “complications” you ones are faced with from day to day. We offer the following as a means for consciously strengthening your inner connection to Source:

Set aside as little as 30 minutes a week and find a quiet place.

First, get a clear question formulated in your mind that you would like to have the answer to and write it on a piece of paper.

Next, call upon the Light of Creator Source and the Lighted Brotherhood for protection and guidance.

Next, write out all of the reasons you feel this question is so important.

Next, write out how you expect that the answer to this question will change your life and your understanding about self or the world you live in.

Now, re-read your original question and see if there is perhaps a better question to ask. If so, write it down and start the process over again, starting with calling upon the Light of Creator Source and the Lighted Brotherhood for protection and guidance.

If the question still stands as the foremost question you can possibly ask, sit quietly and expect the answer to present itself to you. The answer may come in many forms—a thought, an idea, an image (or series of images), and so forth. If the answer is not immediate in the coming, be patient, for it

WILL come.

Re-read your question and the reasons for asking it and the expectations you have. Write down any other thoughts you may have as they present themselves to you.

Write down how you think, let’s say, Hatonn (or Sananda, Germain, Michael, etc.) would respond to this question if it were posed to them. Just write whatever comes to mind, even if it does not make sense to you.

If you follow these steps conscientiously, you will be well on your way to finding your own answers, and we of the Lighted Realms will find great reason to rejoice, for you will also be well on your way to a clearer sense of your innate personal connection to and through Creator Source. Revealing Article About Phoenix Institute Directors: Paying Back What Debt?

Editor's note: Like icing on a cake, it is too bad that the following most remarkable and revealing article was not brought to our attention in time for inclusion in a special report titled "The Curious Case Of Dave Overton's Gold And The Phoenix Institute" starting on page 16 of last month's issue of The SPECTRUM.

The "icing" is the following article, which is from the March 27, 2000 edition of the Mindanao TIMES (in the Philippines) and offers some very, very intriguing information for those who read with objectivity, discernment, and understanding—and may have a personal or financial interest in the subject under discussion.

As was stated in the Editor's note introducing last month's special report herein on Dave Overton's gold and the Phoenix Institute, the following information will likewise be of no particular interest to some of our newer readers. However, it could be of GREAT interest to those longtime readers and supporters who are acutely aware of the history and events surrounding the formation of this newspaper—which came into existence exactly because of the shady shenanigans which were pulled on those of us who previously WERE the CONTACT newspaper, by the primary ones mentioned below as responsible for the Phoenix Institute and, according to the TIMES article, are: "here in Davao City to transact his [E.J. Ekker] business and pay some debts to his former employer.... He and his wife Doris, both of Tehachapi, California, first arrived here in the Philippines in August 1998 allegedly to look for money to repay their debts to the Nevada corporation Phoenix Institute...."

Just what debts might those be? Just what inferred condition might the Phoenix Institute be in which requires such need for repayment of said debts? Just what happened to all the funds/gold supposedly entrusted to the Phoenix Institute by well-meaning investors?

The correct answers to those (and other, related) questions about the solvency of the Phoenix Institute are perhaps why all such inquiries (especially by ones with large financial holdings entrusted to the Phoenix Institute) have routinely gotten evasive answers. We will leave it up to the perceptive reader to read between the lines and connect the dots which point to The Truth.

We here at The SPECTRUM certainly concur with the general picture painted in this outlay and we praise whatever thorough research and investigatory machinery was utilized by Mr. Mitchel R. Confesor (How about that name?!) of the Mindanao TIMES in order to assemble a report of such high journalistic quality—especially considering the complexity and out-of-the-ordinary nature of the subject.

(See the www.contactnews10.com website, which is operated by a private archiving consortium that has been under almost constant attack by those who do not wish The Truth to remain available for scrutiny, for details of the clash which birthed this newspaper—in the final three issues of "our" CONTACT, for the dates of 3/15/99, 3/22/99, and 3/26/99. Data from the 3/15/99 issue is even referred to below.)

Remember that this is the time of the Great Awakening—when The Truth shall be revealed in ALL areas. For ones who supported the stated mission of the Phoenix Institute with integrity and generosity, there is much food for thought in what you are about to read.

US $250-BILLION
"GOLD" DEAL IN DAVAO
CIA, Peruvian Account Mired
With Sect Members, Lawyers

Davao City has just become a playing ground of international intrigue as an American national with ties to the United States' premier spy agency is currently wooing Davaoños in a business transaction involving a U.S. $1,000 "gold" certificate issued by Peru in 1875.

E.J. Ekker, a Californian who formerly works for a Nevada-based publication agency, allegedly has in his possession this Peruvian "gold" certificate with a 125-year accrued interest originally owned by a former agent of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency way back when ex-U.S. President George Bush was CIA director between 1976 to 1979.

Ekker, who is now affiliated with the CONTACT newspaper after his stint as proofreader of the Phoenix Journals, is said to be here in Davao City to transact his business and pay some debts to his former employer through the enticement of a U.S. $250-billion account.

He and his wife Doris, both of Tehachapi, California, first arrived here in the Philippines in August 1998, allegedly to look for money to repay their debts to the Nevada corporation Phoenix Institute, which had been designed to provide funding for its journals and other projects.

The "gold" certificate, which has now reportedly ballooned to billions of dollars, was originally acquired by the late CIA operative Russell Herman, and was later used as a "Superfund" to help Bush's candidacy for the White House.

"GRANDFATHERED"

Under the Monroe Doctrine, the U.S. assumed Peru's debt—along with those of many other countries—to persuade them to stay out of World War I, which began in 1914 and ended in 1918.

Some gold certificates, like those later acquired by Herman, eventually became a debt against the U.S. Treasury.

Later, the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank assumed all debts against the U.S. Treasury, including payment to the Herman gold certificate.

Herman's treasure was then "grandfathered" with its accrued interest to 1875, and if paid in full today in the year 2000, would reportedly bring down U.S. federal reserves to its knees.

When this certificate was presented to Bush in the late 1970s when he was then CIA director, he being Herman's ultimate superior, the money in it was reportedly used as a "Superfund" to finance his campaign for the Oval Office.

It was learned that Herman was able to apportion his share of the gold to his wife Katherine and grandmother V.K. Durham [actually these are the same person utilizing, at different times, three different names: Katherine, V.K. Durham, and Grandma] who both took 52 percent, which reportedly amounted to a whopping U.S. $10 billion.

The remaining 48 percent went to Herman's good friend Rick Martin, reportedly of the CONTACT staff. Sources bared that Herman was later killed by rogue CIA agents.

EKKER'S TREK

Martin promptly placed his financial asset under the control of another Nevada-based group, the Global Alliance Investment Association, which later became an affiliate of the Phoenix Institute.

A few months later, particularly on August 11, 1998, the Ekker couple, Martin, and their colleague Charles Neil arrived here in the Philippines.

The quartet reportedly wanted to establish a worldwide gold banking system and in the process raise funds to finance CONTACT. But a falling-out sparked among the group as Martin and Neil accused the Ekkers of overspending and financial manipulation.

Both of whom are California natives, Martin and Neil returned to Tehachapi early last year, specifically on February 19, 1999. Martin's account of their Philippine-Malaysia journey is recorded in CONTACT's March 15, 1999 issue. CONTACT editor-in-chief Edwin Young implied that the CIA's influence was evident in E.J. Ekker's agenda and the latter's dealings with various nations, including here in this country.

"Rick and Charles did NOT abruptly return from the Philippines for the reasons circulated by e-mail and fax postings by Doris and E.J. Ekker," wrote Young. The two, Young added, "returned in disgust because of what they had been witnessing for some time, and finally confronted: a dark energy presence operating through the remaining members of that working team."

The TIMES learned that Ekker and his people here in Davao City have even tapped the services of some members of a religious sect, and have also attempted, but failed, to tap the services of a law firm.

Are Fed & Treasury Manipulating Gold For Gain Of Few?

Editor's note: The following is extremely important and insightful information for all of you who (1) are curious about the actual questionable state of our nation's gold reserves, (2) are wondering about the artificial suppression of gold prices, and (3) have your suspicions about the likely crooks-in-high-places behind such damaging shenanigans.

Look at the powerful stated credentials of several of the Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee members and KNOW that there are some very experienced people efforting to protect a fundamental building block of this nation's (and the world's) economic health.

Quoting from a letter from the Secretary of this courageous Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee at the time of the publication of the earlier of the two Open Letters shared below, we read:

"Dear Friend of GATA and Gold:

"Here's the text of GATA's two-page advertisement to be published Thursday, December 9, 1999 in Roll Call, the weekly newspaper that covers the Congress of the United States and is considered the best-read publication at the U.S. Capitol.

"We're very excited about this, hopeful of making a big impact, and mobilizing the gold industry and gold's friends, and deeply grateful to those whose financial contributions have helped to make this possible.

"Once the ad is published, we will call on gold's friends everywhere to ask members of Congress to ensure that GATA's questions are answered.

Nothing upsets the shenanigans of the dark, so-called "elite" as much as shining the Light of publicity/awareness on their actions. This is the time of the Great Awakening when The Truth shall out in ALL areas. What we DO with such information is the testing underway.

"GATA is fighting for the gold cause. If you haven't joined us yet, please do.

"Gold's enemies won't stop until gold fights back, and they are confident that they have intimidated the whole industry and even the countries whose livelihoods depend on gold.

"Let's prove them wrong.

6/15/00 GOLD ANTI-TRUST ACTION COMMITTEE

In GATA's (Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee) continuing search for the truth about what is really going on in the gold market, we presented the following centerfold, An Open Letter To Senate And House Banking Committee Members: Gold Derivative Banking Crisis. This was published in Roll Call, a Washington, D.C. publication [on 5/9/00] which is delivered to the House, the Senate, the White House, and many other venues in our country's capital.

An Open Letter To Senate And House Banking Committee Members Gold Derivative Banking Crisis

Extensive research has led the Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee (GATA) to the conclusion that the gold market is being recklessly manipulated and now poses a serious risk to the international financial system.

Annual gold demand, currently at record levels, exceeds mine and scrap gold supply by more than 1,500 tonnes. In the Washington Agreement of September 26, 1999, 15 European central banks announced that they were capping their lending of gold and would limit their official sales of gold to 400 tonnes per year for the next five years. Some major gold producers have reduced their forward sales, and speculators have reduced their borrowed gold selling. Commodity prices and wages are rising. Yet the price of gold has declined steadily. With demand so much greater than supply, the price of gold should be rising sharply.

According to the Office of the Controller of the Currency, the notional value of the off-balance-sheet gold derivatives on the books of U.S. commercial banks exceeds $87 billion, which is greater than total U.S. official gold reserves of approximately 8,140 metric tonnes.

Gold derivatives surged from $63.4 billion in the third quarter of 1999 to $87.6 billion in the fourth quarter, after the Washington Agreement was announced. The notional amount of off-balance-sheet gold derivative contracts on the books of Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. went from $18.36 billion to $38.1 billion in the last six months of 1999.

Veneroso Associates estimates that the private and official-sector gold loans stood at 9,000 to 10,000 tonnes at the end of 1999. Most of these loans represent gold that has been sold in the form of jewelry and cannot be retrieved. Mine supply of gold for all of 1999, according to trade sources, was only 2,579 tonnes. Thus the gold loans are far too big too be repaid back in a short time. The swift $84 rise in the gold price following the Washington Agreement caused a panic among bullion bankers. But that was only a warning of what is to come.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers, responding to GATA's inquiries through members of Congress, have denied any direct involvement in the gold market by the Fed and the Treasury Department. But they have declined to address whether the Exchange Stabilization Fund, which is under the control of the treasury secretary, is being used to manipulate the price of gold.

Several prominent New York bullion banks, particularly Goldman Sachs, from which the immediate past treasury secretary, Robert Rubin, came to the Treasury Department, have moved to suppress the price of gold every time it has rallied over the last year.

The Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee believes that U.S. government officials and these bullion banks have induced other governments to add gold supply to the physical market in recent years to suppress the price. Britain's National Accounting Office is now investigating the Bank of England's decision to sell off more than half its gold. Contrary to proper accounting practice, reductions in gold in the earmarked accounts of foreign governments at the New York Federal Reserve Bank are being listed by the Commerce Department as the export of non-monetary gold. These "exports" from the Fed occur upon rallies in the gold price.

Why would anyone want to suppress the price of gold?

1. Suppressing the price of gold has made it a cheap source of capital for New York bullion banks, which borrow it for as little as 1% of its value per year. Gold is borrowed from central banks and sold, and the proceeds are invested in the financial markets in securities that have much greater rates of return. As long as the price of gold remains low, this "gold carry trade" is a financial bonanza to a privileged few at the expense of the many, including the gold-producing countries, most of which are poor. If the price of gold was allowed to rise, the effective interest rate on gold loans would become prohibitive.

2. Suppressing the price of gold gives a false impression of the U.S. dollar's strength as an international reserve asset and a false reading of inflation in the United States.

Too much gold is being consumed at too cheap a price. Massive amounts of derivatives are being used to suppress the gold price. If this situation is not corrected soon, there will be a gold derivative credit and default crisis of epic proportions that will threaten the solvency of the largest international banks and the world standing of the dollar.

As you are aware, a 90-page document of our extraordinary findings was personally delivered to your offices last Thursday.

The Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee requests that a full and complete investigation be launched into this matter as soon as possible.

The longer the gold price is artificially held down, the bigger the eventual banking crisis.

THE ORIGINAL ROLL CALL AD

In GATA's continuing search for the truth about what is really going on in the gold market, we presented the following centerfold, An Open Letter To Alan Greenspan, Chairman Of The Federal Reserve System, And Lawrence Summers, Secretary Of The Treasury: What Are You Doing With America's Gold? This was published in Roll Call, a Washington, D.C. publication [on 12/9/99] which is delivered to the House, the Senate, the White House, and many other venues in our country's capital.

ALAN GREENSPAN Chairman, Federal Reserve System AND LAWRENCE SUMMERS Secretary Of The Treasury What Are You Doing With America's Gold?

Dear Chairman Greenspan and Secretary Summers:

On July 24, 1998, before the House Banking Committee, and six days later before the Senate Agricultural Committee, Chairman Greenspan made the following statement: "Central banks stand ready to lease gold in increasing quantities should the price rise."

Ever since that comment was made, there has been a growing controversy about whether the Federal Reserve and the Treasury Department have been actively involved in the gold market. There has been speculation that the U.S. government, through your agencies, has been seeking to lower the gold price to rescue certain financial interests, much as the Fed orchestrated the rescue of Long-Term Capital Management last year. Aggressive bullion dealers, hedge funds doing the gold "carry trade", and unwise price speculation disguised as hedging by gold mining companies are most frequently cited as the beneficiaries of this government intervention in the gold price. As with LTCM, there is concern about severe risk to the world financial system, this time because of irresponsible gold lending policies of central banks.

The gold controversy reached the floor of the British Parliament last June 16, after the Bank of England announced plans to sell 415 tons of its gold:

"We cannot allow these rumors to grow, because they are extremely dangerous to public confidence. It has been suggested that the market is very short of gold, that the short positions may be a substantial multiple of the total amount of gold currently held by the Bank of England, and that the bank's real motive is to save the bacon of firms that are running those short positions. If such a suggestion is being made seriously, it must be dealt with authoritatively and definitively, and we want an answer from the government now. — Quentin Davies, Member of Parliament"

The Bank of England's announcement collapsed the price of gold from $290 to $252 per ounce. But when, on September 26, fifteen European central banks announced that they would restrict their gold sales and gold lending for the next five years, the gold price soared to $337. Word spread that the bullion banks were panicking again.

As if right on cue, but in uncharacteristic fashion, the government of Kuwait then announced it was depositing its 79 tons of gold with the Bank of England for lending purposes. There was speculation that the New York Federal Reserve Bank was using all means at its disposal to push the gold price down to accommodate the financial interests that were short gold.

THE QUESTION DEMANDS AN ANSWER:

Is the government of the United States intervening in the gold market and, if so, why? Chairman Greenspan, we will take you at your own word that you are intervening in the gold market as you said you would if the price rose.

The Federal Reserve Bank's Open Market Committee may have the authority to deal in gold coin and bullion, but all purchases and sales, according to 12 USC 263-359: "shall be governed with a view to accommodating commerce and business".

If, rather, the Federal Reserve Bank or the Treasury Department is depressing the gold price in order to help various and numerous gold short sellers, it is a clear and illegal violation of the bank's purpose clause. The government's intervening to help one side over another in a private contract is illegal, fraudulent, and unconstitutional. For the U.S. central bank to use its powers to benefit one class of citizens to the harm of another class of Americans is a gross violation of the Constitution's equal protection clause.

If the Federal Reserve intervened in the gold market after the October price rise as you said you were prepared to do, it was not to accommodate commerce and business, but to accommodate one half of the parties to a private contract who had shorted gold. The other half of the parties to this same contract who bought gold were cheated and deprived of a fair market price, denied the equal protection of the law, and cheated of profit potential. It would be an illegal and fraudulent act that was perpetrated by bankers who are unelected bureaucrats reigning like tyrants without legal or political supervision.

The manipulation of the gold market has caused irreparable harm to gold owners, gold companies, and gold miners as well as all Americans. It destroyed a free market, depressed the fair value for an important financial asset, distorted the value of gold companies on the New York and American Stock Exchanges, and decreased the value of its own and America's gold assets.

The Fed's price-fixing action should be investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. Indeed, the SEC should be concerned that both the gold market and the stock market generally may be constantly manipulated now by surreptitious government intervention.

Whatever the policy and practices of the Fed and the Treasury Department are in these respects, this is a matter of the most profound public policy and it should be a matter of public record.

TO CLEAR UP THIS MATTER, THE GOLD ANTI-TRUST ACTION COMMITTEE WANTS THE ANSWERS TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS:

1. Does the Federal Reserve or the Treasury Department, either on their own behalf or on behalf of others, including other government agencies, such as the Exchange Stabilization Fund, lend gold or silver, facilitate the lending of gold and silver, or trade in any securities, such as futures contracts and call and put options, involving gold and silver?

2. If the Fed or the Treasury Department do lend these precious metals, do they do so only on a swap or repurchase arrangement basis, or do they also lend unsecured?

3. What are the credit criteria that a potential borrower needs to establish with the Fed or the Treasury?

4. What credit limits are applied to borrowers? How do they vary between secured/swap lending and unsecured lending?

5. How often are counterparty positions marked to market in these transactions?

6. What happens if market price movements cause the credit limits to be exceeded?

7. Does the Fed or the Treasury have any counterparty credit utilizations in excess of 90% of the limit?

8. Have any precious metal-related credit limits been amended other than in credit limit reviews in the normal course of business?

9. Do the Fed or the Treasury Department or any other government agency ever own or deal in derivatives that are connected with precious metals? Do any of these agencies write call options against the Treasury's or Federal Reserve's gold holdings, or write naked call options?

10. Do the above-mentioned credit limits and mark-to-market provisions apply to derivatives as well?

11. Have the Fed, the Treasury, or any other government agency, either directly or through their management of foreign custody accounts, collaborated with the Bank for International Settlements, the Bank of England, or any other central bank with a view to managing, smoothing, or otherwise affecting the market price of gold?

There is also great concern that U.S. gold reserves have been lent or sold. Those gold reserves are a great national financial asset, yet they have not been audited officially since the Eisenhower Administration. So, in addition to answering the above questions, we ask you to arrange an independent audit so that the country may be assured that its gold remains in public hands.

Most Profitable Industry In America? Our Prison Systems!

Editor's note: Keep the following eye-opening News Desk Special Report in mind when next you hear your local political puppets preaching the need for more money (higher or special taxes) for prisons. Never mind the sad conditions of social stress which have been purposely engineered to guarantee a steady prison population increase—and thus a blooming “customer” base to supercharge the business agenda and guarantee a “slave labor” pool to beat any foreign sweatshop.

The following has been excerpted by our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, from the Internet website illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com and posted on 5/28/00. Beneath the stated message, this information reveals something truly diabolical about a society which has found a way to make such a big business out of a tragic aspect of social dysfunction.

Meanwhile, the term “slave labor” is now describing a more prostituted situation within our prison systems than it has since the days before the Civil War. Honest prison employment is one thing—and sets a good example for ones who may not have been exposed to same in their often rough past; what example is set by a forced working arrangement which makes the Chinese Communist approach to labor seem like philanthropy?

When reading the following, try to figure how many ways “conscience” ought to be a part of the equation. Is this a stark measure of just how far down we’ve slipped as a society?

7/1/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

What is the most profitable industry in America? Weapons, oil, and computer technology all offer high rates of return, but there is probably no sector of the economy so abloom with money as the privately-run prison industry.

Consider the growth of the Corrections Corporation of America, the industry leader whose stock price has climbed from $8 a share in 1992 to about $30 today and whose revenue rose by 81 percent in 1995 alone.

Investors in Wackenhut Corrections Corporation have enjoyed an average return of 18 percent during the past five years and the company is rated by Forbes as one of the top 200 small businesses in the country. At Esmor, another big private prison contractor, revenues have soared from $4.6 million in 1990 to more than $25 million in 1995.

Ten years ago there were just five privately-run prisons in the country, housing a population of 2,000. Today nearly a score of private firms run more than 100 prisons with about 62,000 beds. That’s still less than five percent of the total market—but the industry is expanding fast, with the number of private prison beds expected to grow to 360,000 during the next decade.

The exhilaration among leaders and observers of the private prison sector was cheerfully summed up by the headline in USA Today: “Everybody’s Doing The Jailhouse Stock.”

An equally upbeat mood imbued a conference on private prisons held last December at the Four Seasons Resort in Dallas. The brochure of the conference, organized by the World Research Group, a New York-based investment firm, called the corporate takeover of correctional facilities the “newest trend in the area of privatizing previously government-run programs.... While arrests and convictions are steadily on the rise, profits are to be made, profits from crime. Get in on the ground floor of this booming industry now!”

A hundred years ago private prisons were a familiar feature of American life, with disastrous consequences. Prisoners were farmed out as slave labor. They were routinely beaten and abused, fed slop and kept in horribly overcrowded cells. Conditions were so wretched that by the end of the nineteenth century private prisons were outlawed in most states.

During the past decade, private prisons have made a comeback. Already 28 states have passed legislation making it legal for private contractors to run correctional facilities, and many more states are expected to follow suit.

The reasons for the rapid expansion include the post-1980s free-market ideological fervor, large budget deficits for the federal and state governments, and the discovery and creation of vast new reserves of “raw materials”—prisoners.

The rate for most serious crimes has been dropping or stagnant for the past 15 years, but during the same period severe repeat offender provisions and a racist “get-tough” policy on drugs have helped push the US prison population up from 300,000 to about 1.5 million. This has produced a corresponding boom in prison construction and costs, with the federal government’s annual expenditures in the area of $17 billion. In California, passage of the infamous “three strikes” bill will result in the construction of an additional 20 prisons during the next few years.

The private prison business is most entrenched at the state level, but is expanding into the federal prison system as well. Last year Attorney General Janet Reno announced that five of seven new federal prisons being built will be run by the private sector. Almost all of the prisons run by private firms are low or medium security, but the companies are trying to break into the high-security field. They have also begun taking charge of management in INS detention centers, boot camps for juvenile offenders, and substance abuse programs.

Roughly half of the industry is controlled by the Nashville-based Corrections Corporation of America, which runs 46 penal institutions in 11 states. It took ten years for the company to reach 10,000 beds; it is now growing by the same number every year.

CCA’s chief competitor is Wackenhut, which was founded in 1954 by George Wackenhut, a former FBI official. Over the years its board and staff have included such veterans of the US national security state as Frank Carlucci, Bobby Ray Inman, and William Casey, as well as Jorge Mas Canosa, leader of the fanatical Cuban American National Foundation. The company also provides security services to private corporations. It has provided strikebreakers at the Pittston mine strike in Kentucky, hired unlicensed investigators to ferret out whistle blowers at Alyeska, the company that controls the Alaskan oil pipeline, and beaten anti-nuclear demonstrators at facilities it guards for the Department of Energy.

Wackenhut has a third of the private prison market with 24 contracts, nine of which were signed during the past two years. In a major coup, the company was chosen to run a 2,200-capacity prison in Hobbs, New Mexico, which will become the largest private prison in the US when it opens late this year.

Esmor, the number-3 firm in the field, was founded only a few years ago and already operates ten corrections or detention facilities. The company's board includes William Barrett, a director of Frederick's of Hollywood, and CEO James Slattery, whose previous experience was investing in and managing hotels.

US companies also have been expanding abroad. The big three have facilities in Australia, England and Puerto Rico, and are now looking at opportunities in Europe, Canada, Brazil, Mexico, and China.

The companies that dominate the private prison business claim that they offer the taxpayers a bargain because they operate far more cheaply than do state firms. As one industry report put it: "CEOs of privatized companies are leaner and more motivated than their public-sector counterparts."

But even if privatization does save money, and the evidence here is contradictory, there is, in the words of Jenni Gainsborough of the ACLU's National Prison Project: "a basic philosophical problem when you begin turning over administration of prisons to people who have an interest in keeping people locked up."

To be profitable, private prison firms must ensure that prisons are not only built, but also filled. Industry experts say a 90 to 95 percent capacity rate is needed to guarantee the hefty rates of return needed to lure investors. Prudential Securities issued a wildly bullish report on CCA a few years ago, but cautioned: "It takes time to bring inmate population levels up to where they cover costs. Low occupancy is a drag on profits." Still, said the report, company earnings would be strong if CCA succeeded in "ramp[ing] up population levels in its new facilities at an acceptable rate."

A 1993 report from the State Department of Corrections in New Mexico found that CCA prisons issued more disciplinary reports, with harsher sanctions imposed, including the loss of time off for good behavior, than did those run by the state. A prisoner at a CCA prison said: "State-run facilities are overcrowded and there's no incentive to keep inmates as long as possible. CCA on the other hand reluctantly awards good time. They give it because they have to, but they take it every opportunity they get. Parole packets are constantly getting lost or misfiled. Many of us are stuck here beyond our release dates."

Private prison companies have also begun to push, even if discreetly, for the type of get-tough policies needed to ensure their continued growth. All the major firms in the field have hired big-time lobbyists. When it was seeking a contract to run a halfway house in New York City, Esmor hired a onetime aide to state Rep. Edolphus Towns to lobby on its behalf. The aide succeeded in winning the contract and also the vote of his former boss, who had been an opponent of the project. In 1995, Wackenhut Chairman Tim Cole testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee to urge support for amendments to the Violent Crime Control Act, which subsequently passed, that authorized the expenditure of $10 billion to construct and repair state prisons.

CCA has been especially adept at expansion via political payoffs. The first prison the company managed was the Silverdale Workhouse in Hamilton County, Tennessee. After Commissioner Bob Long voted to accept CCA's bid for the project, the company awarded Long's pest control firm a lucrative contract. When Long decided the time was right to quit public life, CCA hired him to lobby on its behalf. CCA has been a major financial supporter of Lamar Alexander, the former Tennessee governor and failed presidential candidate. In one of a number of sweetheart deals, Lamar's wife, Honey Alexander, made more than $130,000 on a $5,000 investment in CCA. Tennessee Governor Ned McWherter is another CCA stockholder and is quoted in the company's 1995 annual report as saying that "the federal government would be well served to privatize all of their corrections."

The prison industry has also made generous use of the junket as a public relations technique. Wackenhut recently flew a New York-based reporter from Switzerland, where the company is fishing for business, to Florida for a tour of one of its prisons. The reporter was driven around by limousine, had all her expenses covered, and was otherwise treated royally.

In another ominous development, the revolving door between the public and private sector has led to the type of company boards that are typical of those found in the military-industrial complex. CCA co-founders were T. Don Hutto, an ex-corrections commissioner in Virginia, and Tom Beasley, a former Chairman of the Tennessee Republican Party. A top company official is Michael Quinlan, once director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons. The board of Wackenhut is graced by a former Marine Corps commander, two retired Air Force generals, and a former under-secretary to the Air Force, as well as by James Thompson, ex-governor of Illinois, Stuart Gerson, a former assistant US attorney general, and Richard Staley, who previously worked with the INS.

Because they are private firms that answer to shareholders, prison companies have been predictably vigorous in seeking ways to cut costs. In 1985, a private firm tried to site a prison on a toxic waste dump in Pennsylvania, which it had bought at the bargain rate of $1. Fortunately, that plan was rejected.

Many states pay private contractors a per-diem rate, as low as $31 a prisoner in Texas. A federal investigation traced a 1994 riot at an Esmor immigration detention center to the company's having skimmed on food, building repairs, and guard salaries. At an Esmor-run halfway house in Manhattan, inspectors turned up leaky plumbing, exposed electrical wires, vermin, and inadequate food.

To ratchet up profit margins, companies have cut corners on drug rehabilitation, counseling, and literacy programs. In 1995, Wackenhut was investigated for diverting $700,000 intended for drug treatment programs at a Texas prison. In Florida the US Corrections Corporation was found to be in violation of a provision in its state contract that requires prisoners to be placed in meaningful work or educational assignments. The company had assigned 235 prisoners to be dorm orderlies when no more than 48 were needed, and enrollment in education programs was well below what the contract called for. Such incidents led a prisoner at a CCA facility in Tennessee to conclude: "There is something inherently sinister about making money from the incarceration of prisoners, and in putting CCA's bottom line (money) before society's bottom line (rehabilitation)."

The companies try to cut costs by offering less training and pay to staff. Almost all workers at state prisons get union-scale pay, but salaries for private prison guards range from about $7 to $10 per hour.

Of course the companies are anti-union. When workers attempted to organize at Tennessee's South Central prison, CCA sent officials down from Nashville to quash the effort.

Poor pay and work conditions have led to huge turnover rates at private prisons. A report by the Florida auditor's office found that turnover at the Gadsden Correctional Facility for women, run by the US Corrections Corporation, was 200 percent, ten times the rate at state prisons. Minutes from an administrative meeting at a CCA prison in Tennessee have the "chief" recorded as saying: "We all know that we have lots of new staff and are constantly in the training mode. Many employees [are] totally lost and had never worked in corrections."

Private companies also try to nickel-and-dime prisoners in an effort to boost revenue. A prisoner at a Florida prison run by CCA has sued the company for charging a $2.50 fee per phone call and 50 cents per minute thereafter. The lawsuit also charges that it can take a prisoner more than a month to see a doctor.

A number of prisoners complain about exorbitant prices. "Canteen prices are outrageous" wrote a prisoner at the Gadsden facility in Florida. "[We] pay more for a pack of cigarettes than in the free world." Neither do private firms provide prisoners with soap, toothpaste, toothbrushes, or writing paper. One female prisoner at a CCA prison in New Mexico said: "The state gives five free postage-paid envelopes per month to prisoners, nothing at CCA. State provides new coats, jeans, shirts, underwear, and replaces them as needed. CCA rarely buys new clothing and inmates are often issued tattered and stained clothing. Same goes for linens. Also ration toilet paper and paper towels. If you run out, too bad; 3 rolls every two weeks."

General conditions at private prisons appear in some respects to be somewhat better than those found at state institutions, a fact possibly linked to the negative business impact that a prison disturbance can cause private firms. For example, the share price of stock in Esmor plunged from $20 to $7 after a 1994 revolt at the company's detention center for immigrants in Elizabeth, New Jersey.

Nevertheless a number of serious problems at prisons run by private interests still exist. Back in the mid-1980s, a visiting group of professional guards from England toured the CCA's 360-bed state prison in Chattanooga, Tennessee, and reported that inmates were "cruelly treated" and "problem" prisoners had been gagged with sticky tape. The warden regaled his guests with graphic descriptions of strip shows performed by female inmates for male guards.

Investigators at a CCA jail in New Mexico found that guards had inflicted injuries on prisoners ranging from cuts and scrapes to broken bones.

Riots have erupted at various private facilities. In one of the worst, guards at CCA's West Tennessee Detentional Center fired pepper-gas canisters into two dormitories to quell a riot after prisoners shipped from North Carolina revolted over being sent far from their families.

In addition to the companies that directly manage America's prisons, many other firms are getting a piece of the private prison action. American Express has invested millions of dollars in private prison construction in Oklahoma, and General Electric has helped finance construction in Tennessee. Goldman Sachs & Co., Merrill Lynch, Smith Barney, among other Wall Street firms, have made huge sums by underwriting prison construction with the sale of tax-exempt bonds, this now a thriving $2.3 billion industry.

Weapons manufacturers see both public and private prisons as a new outlet for "defense" technology, such as electronic bracelets and stun guns. Private transport companies have lucrative contracts to move prisoners within and across state lines; health care companies supply jails with doctors and nurses; food service firms provide prisoners with meals.

High-tech firms are also moving into the field. The Que-Tel Corporation hopes for vigorous sales of its new system whereby prisoners are bar coded and guards carry scanners to monitor their movements. Phone companies such as AT&T chase after the enormously lucrative prison business.

About three-quarters of new admissions to American jails and prisons are now African-American and Hispanic men. This trend, combined with an increasingly privatized and profitable prison system run largely by Whites, makes for what Jerome Miller, a former youth

Thanks to prison labor, America is again attracting the sorts of jobs that were formerly available only to workers of the Third World. A US company operating in Mexico's maquiladora zone shut down its data processing shop and moved it to the San Quentin State Prison in California. A Texas factory booted 150 workers and set up shop at a privately-run prison in Lockhart, Texas, where worker-inmates assemble circuit boards for companies including IBM and Compaq. Oregon State Rep. Kevin Mannix has even encouraged Nike to shift production from Indonesia to his home state, saying the shoemaker should "take a look at transportation and labor costs. We could offer competitive prison labor (here)."

corrections officer in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, calls the emerging Gulag State.

Miller predicts that the Gulag State will be in place within 15 years. He expects three to five million people to be behind bars, including an absolute majority of African-American men. It's comparable, he says, to the post-Civil War period, when authorities came to view the prison system as a cheaper, more efficient substitute for slavery. Of the state's current approach to crime and law enforcement, Miller says: "The race card has changed the whole playing field. Because the prison system doesn't affect a significant percentage of young White men, we'll increasingly see prisoners treated as commodities. For now, the situation is a bit more benign than it was back in the nineteenth century, but I'm not sure it will stay that way for long."

SIDE BAR

Private prison companies have been predictably enthusiastic about the booming market for convict labor. Between 1980 and 1994, the value of goods produced by prisoners rose from $392 million to $1.31 billion. Prisoners now make articles such as clothes, car parts, computer components, shoes, golf balls, soap, furniture, and mattresses, in addition to staffing jailhouse telemarketing data-entry and print-shop operations. Some states have even begun assigning prisoners to institutions after matching up their job skills with a prison's labor needs.

Prisoners at state-run institutions generally receive the minimum wage, though in some states, such as Colorado, wages fall to as low as $2 per hour (workers receive only about 20 percent of that amount, with the rest going to pay room and board, victim compensation programs, and other fees). As an added bonus, companies that employ prison labor have no need to offer benefits, vacation days, or sick time to employees, and many states offer such firms tax breaks and other advantages as well.

Lured by such enticements, many big firms have moved eagerly into the prison-industrial complex. Trans World Airlines pays prison workers $5 per hour to book reservations by phone, less than a third of the rate it previously paid to its own employees. The EAU succeeded in shutting down a program at an Ohio prison where the Waste corporation was paying prisoners $2.05 per hour to assemble parts for Honda cars.

For businesses, the deal is even sweeter at private prisons, where pay rates can be as low as 17 cents per hour for a six-hour maximum day, which translates into a monthly paycheck of about $20. The maximum pay scale at a CCA prison in Tennessee is 50 cents an hour for what are classified as "highly skilled positions".

Given such rates, it's not surprising that a prisoner there complained about the relative generosity of publicly-run programs, saying: "At federal prisons you can take home $1.25 per hour and work eight hours a day, sometimes even double shifts. A two, three, or four hundred dollars a month check isn't unusual in the feds."

Strange Bedfellows—CCA's Political Connections, by Alex Friedmann

CCA's connection with local politics began when the Nashville-based company was formed during Governor Alexander's administration. When CCA made a bid to operate Tennessee's entire prison system in 1985, the governor's wife, Honey Alexander, was criticized for owning $5,000 of CCA stock. She realized a substantial profit ($100,000) when she converted the stock to a blind trust in order to avoid an apparent conflict of interest.

CCA chairman emeritus Thomas Beasley, who co-founded the company in 1983, was previously a chairman of the Tennessee Republican Party.

Among CCA's board members is Clayton McWhorter, an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Tennessee governor in 1994.

From 1994-96, Doctor Crants, CCA's chief executive officer, and CCA's chairman emeritus Thomas Beasley donated at least $60,491 to Tennessee lawmakers, including $38,500 to Sundquist's re-election campaign (this includes donations from Beasley's wife, Wendy). In 1996 alone, Crants donated $22,450 to 46 state political candidates, including $2,000 to Rep. Randy Rinks, House Democratic Caucus chairman, and $1,350 to Senator Jim Kyle, chairman of the Select Oversight Committee on Corrections. CCA has seven registered political lobbyists in Tennessee.

In 1995, Governor Sundquist endorsed a controversial arrangement whereby CCA could contract with Hardeman County, TN, to construct and operate a 1,540-bed "jail", funded with $47 million in municipal bonds guaranteed by the state, to house state prisoners. This arrangement circumvented a Tennessee state statute that allows only one privately-managed state prison to operate in Tennessee at a time.

State Senator Robert Rochelle, who received at least $1,000 in campaign contributions from CCA board members, sponsored a bill to permit privatization of any newly-built state prisons. He has sponsored other legislation on behalf of CCA.

Peaches Simkins, Governor Sundquist's former Chief of Staff, reportedly owned CCA stock while she was advising the governor on prison privatization.

The Speaker of the House in Tennessee's General Assembly, Jimmy Naifeh, is married to CCA political lobbyist Betty Anderson.

In terms of connections on a U.S. Congressional level, CCA employs several former high-ranking members of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, as well as Dr. Tyree Tanner, the brother of U.S. Representative John S. Tanner.

"The Boys" Of Chicago: Law Bought & Sold For Bargain Prices

Editor's note: While the following information stands well enough on its own, backed by Mr. Skolnick's longstanding track record for thorough and "well connected" research, we share it here because it also stands as a template for how the "business" of law is being conducted in more and more places around this nation. No wonder the old Perry Mason television show reruns are kept in front of us constantly—to brainwash us into thinking the straightforward innocence of that show is the way things really are!

6/19/00 SHERMAN H. SKOLNICK

Part 1

Those who understand the area call it by various names: The Hub. "The Boys".

Sizeable corporate interests prefer to have their litigation in the federal courts, not just in any place, but in Chicago. Why? "The Judges here are whores and they are the cheapest in the country" is the way one law expert put it who refuses to be quoted by name.

By the 1970s, Chicago's notoriety as a money laundry center was getting entirely too well known. The criminal interests centered in the Windy City began moving west of town.

A small, out of the way place about a hundred miles west of Chicago was Oregon, Illinois. Many never heard of the spot before it became known in the 1980s, exposed as part of "The Pizza Connection". A pizzeria started there. The owner mixed well with the locals. He became a glad-hander. His pizzas were some of the finest that some have eaten. And they were low-priced. The FBI later contended it was a transit point, along with other pizza parlors and such, for a worldwide dope cartel, linked to New York, Turkey, Sicily, Italy, and a number of other criminal hotspots never reformed by the Powers That Be.

Those who really understood things just laughed to their confidants and to themselves. Why? Because of all of the offices of the FBI, the most corrupt always has been the Chicago office. Residents of New York, Miami, and Los Angeles—I can hear them screaming already that THEIR town, as to FBI corruption, should be on the top of the list.

For a long time, under Director J. Edgar Hoover, the Federal Bureau of Investigation alleged there was NO MAFIA. Yet Hoover himself, after his death, was exposed as the recipient of personal and financial benefits from a foundation reportedly set up by criminal interests in the booze industry. (See the book by Anthony Summers called Official And Confidential: The Secret Life Of J. Edgar Hoover.) Then the FBI admitted, reluctantly, that there was a criminal cartel, BUT kept insisting it was made up primarily, if not only, of Italians and Sicilians.

In the popular press—what some call the monopoly press—WHO did they leave out of the finger-pointing picture? Here is a short list:

[1] The transit points are through the markets in Chicago: THE CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE, run by the Irish Catholic aristocracy, not the common people of that ethnic and religious group. THE CHICAGO MERCANTILE EXCHANGE, run by the Jewish aristocracy, not the common people of that ethnic and religious group. And, an overlapped group of both, called THE CHICAGO BOARD OPTIONS EXCHANGE, which some simply call the gambling hell basement.

[2] Foreign intelligence operatives who find Chicago a convenient location. Some you might call renegades of their spy shop: operatives of Israeli intelligence, The Mossad (The Institute). Operatives of the French CIA and British Counter-Intelligence, MI-6, just to name a few. Some offer an excuse for Israel that comes entirely too close to aiding bigots who envision a so-called worldwide "Jewish Conspiracy". (The White Anglo-Saxon Protestant establishment has promoted this idea by surrounding Clinton as President with swarms of apparent criminal types who had Jewish surnames but did not necessarily practice Judaism. If scandals develop, those with such surnames become convenient scapegoats.) The excuse: "Israel is a small, endangered nation, surrounded by enemies, and Israel has to raise funds for their existence as best they can."

At the time of Hitler, Jews in Europe were prevented from sending their funds, if they had any, to safety in foreign money centers. Hence, since the foundation of Israel in 1948, the nation has NO laws against money laundries, residents there being ever mindful of how the Nazis sought to track down any valuables of Jews. So Israel inevitably has become a money laundry center for criminally-minded sorts.

In 1993, six weeks before we cablecast our TV show about money laundries, I personally confronted the top bosses in Chicago of Bank Leumi, owned 80% at the time by the State of Israel. I had some of their own secret records showing they apparently were sheltering a major criminal using their Chicago facilities as a money laundry. I warned them if they do not mend their ways: "There will be a furniture store on this corner instead of Bank Leumi."

They arranged the arrest of the culprit, Clifford Sugarman, in one of the strangest events I have come across. A swindled victim threatened to murder Sugarman with an umbrella. The wife of the assailant called the police hoping to deter her husband. Guess who was arrested? Not the umbrella man, BUT SUGARMAN. He was kept in jail with apparently no charges. The judge was informed that it was a "national security" matter because Sugarman had done espionage favors for the U.S. Treasury Department while he went about swindling millions from poor suckers looking to re-do their mortgages. So Sugarman was kept in jail a long time for "protective custody".

[3] Former foreign intelligence operatives, such as former officers of the Soviet secret political police, promoting "state security" with bloodshed if necessary, the KGB. They make up the bulk of the Russian mafia, such as in Chicago, Cleveland, and New York.

Are you tired of living a quiet, peaceful life? Well, compile a few details on the Russian mafia in the U.S. and report that to your local, corrupt FBI, such as their Chicago office. The one who will come under intense FBI scrutiny will be YOU, not the Russian mafia. The FBI has given virtual total immunity to the Russian gangsters in America who specialize in superior quality counterfeit U.S. and foreign currency (Hey, how come the U.S. Secret Service is likewise asleep on this?); trafficking in stolen data from credit cards; and the Russian mafia, with total local immunity, run the Red Light District, such as in Chicago, with total immunity as well from the Chicago IRS and the Illinois Department of Revenue corrupt bosses AND THE FBI.

Why is this happening? A simple explanation: the FBI is terribly fearful of the highly competent criminals that make up the Russian mafia in the U.S. The FBI does not want to tangle with these former KGB assassins and cut-throats.

An example: Congressman Henry Hyde, a Republican whose district is several western suburbs of Chicago. Earlier in his career he reportedly was the intelligence agency "fixer" and "bagman" for the former Justice Department Organized Crime Strike Force CRIMINALS who took over the gambling casino on Paradise Island in the Bahamas. That is the best trick of all: alleged "lawmen" taking over the dirty game of other criminals, chasing and wiping them out, and then proceeding with the same illicit dealings.

Hyde wears two hats: one, as known, as a Congressman, head of the House Judiciary Committee with power to introduce Impeachment Resolutions against the President or crooked judges; and two, as unknown, Hyde as head of CIA's "black budget" financing mayhem and political assassinations, the works. With the reported corruption of top bosses of the Chicago IRS and the Illinois Department of Revenue, and the willful blindness of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, INS, Hyde reportedly runs a strip joint in an unincorporated west suburban area of Chicago.

Using mostly Russian women lured to the U.S. under false promises of legal jobs, the club reportedly specializes in dancing numbers with total nudity. Hyde reportedly keeps no records as required for tax purposes. Was that the reason—blackmailing of Hyde—that he limited the Impeachment Resolution against Clinton to sex matters only, and not including treason with China and such?

So, the Government-Criminal Connection, the Hub, "The Boys", have fanned out North, Northwest, and West of Chicago, to places little mentioned, such as Ottawa, Illinois; Galena, Illinois; the resort area of Starved Rock; Oregon, Illinois; Bloomington, Illinois (worldwide insurance company center—a money laundry?); and Peoria, Illinois.

If you look very, very carefully, you can find businesses in these places that are not what they seem to be. Well-equipped restaurants run by very odd Russians, Israelis, and others, who really do not want your business. They are, in plain language, a front for the Hub, "The Boys", the Chicago markets and their aristocracies.

If you somehow come across such a place, and you sense what they really are, well, there are repercussions. Helping with our controversial weekly public-access cable TV program Broadsides in Chicago has been Joseph Andreuccetti and his wife Noemi. In August, 1997, while on a short recreation trip, they started to unravel such a front. It will take several parts of this series to lay out all the details and pieces.

A few days later, here is what happened at the Andreuccetti residence in Bensenville, a west suburb of Chicago. A heavily-armed, four-person, Gestapo-like team, at gunpoint forced their way into the Andreuccetti residence. They searched every corner of the house. By apparent prior surveillance, they knew that our TV show kept confidential records and documents and tapes there for upcoming shows we were working on about high-level corruption of State and Federal officials, our cable TV specialty. This criminal force also knew that I am a paraplegic using a wheelchair, and Joseph often transports and assists me in our work. Since 1991 I am a regular panelist on the weekly show, and since 1995, moderator/producer. Joe and Noemi have assisted in the planning and production of our TV shows since 1992.

The Gestapo force was made up of two purported revenue investigators (tied to those we were planning to finger on upcoming shows) and two supposed Bensenville "police". (Much later we found out the other two were apparent police imposters, for a private security service operating inside the Bensenville police station, using police cars, guns, uniforms, and police computers.) They plundered our records, tapes, and such, and took these items.

They were in a position to know that the Andreuccettis are most often home during the day, taking care of their tiny grandchildren. Without provocation, this criminal band threatened to shoot Noemi Andreuccetti and took the tiny grandchildren away from her and threw them to the floor. The Andreuccettis were forced to go with these criminals and leave their grandchildren unattended in an open house.

The Gestapo had no search warrant. This outrage has become the subject of several damage suits in the Chicago courts against these culprits and their bosses/instigators.

Who all is reportedly implicated in all this? Who are some of the criminals from "The Hub" trying to scare those who understand these matters and have already put some of this before the public, through our cable TV shows?

- RAHM EMANUEL, former Clinton White House Senior Advisor, who also is, in effect, reportedly the Deputy Chief of the Mossad for North America. After leaving the Clinton White House, Rahm became managing director of Wasserstein Perella & Co., worldwide purported "investment bankers", head office in New York, and an office in Chicago. (Visit THEIR website. If you understand a few things, you will learn plenty: www.wassersteinperella.com) They are tied worldwide to Nomura Securities Co., Ltd., a Japanese firm that reportedly has overlaps with the huge Japanese mafia, the Yakuza. And what about the tremendous influx of dope from Red China, intake point for the U.S. being Chicago? The proceeds of the Red Chinese trade, including trafficking in human body parts from doomed political dissidents, is reportedly done through the Chicago markets where Rahm Emanuel and his gang play quite a role.

- A law firm showed up to defend the so-called "Bensenville police" in our damage suit.

They used most every trick to try to stop our litigation. After almost three years, the law firm suddenly gave up their law license, closed their office, and are gone. What caused that? (More in later parts of this series.)

- Most of the Bensenville police force has been fired. What did THEY find out and had to be blackmailed and lopped off? What kind of worldwide government-criminal connections have been formed north, northwest, and west of Chicago? More coming. Stay tuned.

This is about judges and a million-dollar embezzlement that benefitted them. As we told you in Part 1, the Government-Criminal Connection has moved their operations just west, northwest, and north of Chicago. And we told you about the Gestapo-like raid on the residence of my associates who assist with our weekly public access cable TV show about high-level government corruption. State and local operatives, WITHOUT A SEARCH WARRANT, seized our documents and other items for a then upcoming TV show about corruption of the Chicago IRS and the State Revenue Department jointly with the state and federal judges.

For our weekly show, we taped a one-hour program called "Corruption: Chicago To The White House". While the unlawful search mess was pending in court, surrogates for the Clinton White House went one step more and, also WITHOUT A SEARCH WARRANT, seized the master tape of our show about the high-level corruption of Illinois state and federal officials and judges tied to the White House, along with the State Revenue and the Chicago IRS.

Just west of Chicago is Du Page County. There, in court, we demanded the return of our news media items grabbed without legal formalities. Regarding the judges hearing our demand for the return of these items, we insisted the judges remove themselves. Why?

As we showed in court, confronting them to their face, we were working on an upcoming TV show about the one million dollar embezzlement of the Du Page County Bar Association. The rip-off had been covered up by the Chicago IRS and the State Revenue top-level official criminals.

And how have the embezzled Bar Association funds been used? To secretly finance judges in Du Page and nearby counties in their election campaigns to be put on the bench. Pursuant to our demand, we issued subpoenas for records from the chief judge in Du Page, Michael R. Galasso, as well as from Christine Ory, then president of the Du Page County Bar Association. When we confronted them in court, two of the tainted judges hearing the case did not deny that they were secretly benefitted in getting on the bench from the embezzled Bar funds. Nevertheless, they refused to remove themselves and ordered the subpoenas quashed, thus protecting themselves. Hey, what about the age-old principle of law that a person must not sit as a judge in their own case?

So we took an appeal to the next higher court, which is one step below Illinois' highest tribunal, the Illinois Supreme Court. That is, to the Appellate Court of Illinois, Second District, in Elgin, Illinois. Just as the appeal process started, the Du Page chief judge was promoted to the higher court in Elgin. A coincidence, right? And replacing him as chief judge—get this—was one of the tainted judges who refused to remove himself.

Our undisputed court papers showed the corrupt background of a number of judges in the area, including some sitting in the Appellate Court in Elgin. For example, we detailed how a court "bagman" (that is not someone packing groceries at the mart) had from time to time invited, at his expense, various judges to visit his lavish villa in Jamaica. The judges arrived there, not with their wives, but with their mistresses. The bagman arranged to photograph the judges cavorting with their mistresses—for blackmail, naturally. One of the judges was in on the "fix" of a $58.4 million case in his court later related to the corruption of Bill Clinton and the embezzlement of an Arkansas bank reportedly by Bill and Hillary.

The judges on the Illinois Supreme Court are not court-reformers or whistle-blowers. (In 1969, our group touched off the biggest judicial bribery scandal in U.S. history, causing the downfall then of the Illinois high court and two judges were removed and one croaked in the commotion. See some of our other stories about their current corruption regarding Buying

A Judgeship.) The Illinois Supreme Court judges ordered all the Appellate Court judges in the Second District to step aside. They especially assigned, from another district, a three-judge panel to hear and consider our appeal. Sounds like musical chairs, right? That is, three judges from the Appellate Court of Illinois, Third District, Ottawa, Illinois. (Read Part 1 of this series about Ottawa, Illinois and "The Boys".)

In running for re-election, earlier in the year 2000, was one of the Third District judges, Judith E. Koehler, one of the three-judge panel assigned to our appeal. According to various authorities, on primary election day, she reportedly apparently committed criminal violations of the state election laws. Authorities say the judge was "electioneering" inside at least 12 polling places on election day and she did not present any candidate poll-watcher credentials at any of the precincts. State law forbids promoting candidates within the polling places and within so many feet of a polling place on election day.

Guess what happened on the same day, Friday, June 2, 2000? A state prosecutor said he intended to prosecute Judge Judith E. Koehler for criminal violations of state election laws. But on second thought, he decided not to try to put her in jail. He filed a 25-page report stating why he changed his mind. Quoting Special Prosecutor Thomas R. Davis: "For those reasons, I have chosen to file no criminal charges against Judy Koehler and, unless directed by the court, I intend to pursue no further action in this matter." (Story in the lawyer's newspaper, The Chicago Daily Law Bulletin, Monday, June 5, 2000, front page.)

On that same Friday, Appellate Judge Judith E. Koehler issued a ruling, dismissing our appeal without hearing it. The other two judges on the panel concurred. In writing the decision, Judge Koehler committed a fraud upon her own court. She knowingly relied on the fraudulent statement of the state authorities that they grabbed our news media items about court and IRS corruption with search warrants while pursuing criminal charges against us. As the judge knows from the undisputed appeal record and our Appeal Briefs, there were no search warrants and none are in the undisputed appeal record.

And the criminal offenses planned to be mentioned in upcoming TV shows by us were/are about the embezzlement of the Bar Association, benefiting the judges, and high-level corruption of key judges jointly with the Chicago IRS and the State Revenue Department. Even if there were search warrants (which there were none), state law protects news media items from being grabbed. A special hearing is required before state authorities in Illinois can grab news media items. As shown by the undisputed appeal record, and Judge Koehler knew it, there was no special hearing and there were no search warrants.

Zits

To put it directly, Judge Koehler committed judicial perjury and we have challenged her ruling, covering up the corruption, as being a fraud upon her own court which makes her decision void. (Our filed petition confronting her is pending as this is posted. Updates will follow.)

Putting fake "facts" into their supposed "ruling" we call judicial perjury. (Lawyer-cowards are afraid to even whisper the term.) In key cases, it happens more often than common folks know or understand. Finding fake "facts" in rulings of judges we already suspect of bank and other corruption, is one of the ways we go about investigating judicial bribery. Crooked judges cannot easily change the judge-made-law, called case law, so they change the facts, putting in supposed "facts" out of the air. When the undisputed court record shows it is "DAY", the crooked judge in making a "fixed" decision says it is "NIGHT", and applying case law as to "NIGHT", makes a corrupt decision most often against underdogs like us.

Is it just a coincidence? On the same day she found out a Special Prosecutor was not, after all, going to send the judge to jail, she throws out our appeal involving high-level corruption of her court colleagues? (Note: our way of investigating judicial corruption over the last 40 years has resulted in the jailing, for bribery, of 20 local judges, 40 local lawyers, and a Chicago federal appeals judge, formerly the governor. Visit our website for details.)

Since 1958, Mr. Skolnick has been a court reformer. Since 1963, founder/chairman, Citizen's Committee to Clean Up the Courts, disclosing certain instances of judicial and other bribery and political murders. Since 1991 a regular panelist, and since 1995, moderator/producer, of one-hour, weekly public access cable TV show Broadsides cablecast on channel 21, 9 p.m. each Monday in Chicago.

For a heavy packet of printed stories, send $5.00 (U.S. funds) and a stamped, self-addressed business-sized envelope (that is, a 4-1/4 x 9-1/2 #10 size) WITH THREE STAMPS ON IT, to Citizen's Committee to Clean Up the Courts, Sherman H. Skolnick, Chairman, 9800 South Oglesby Ave., Chicago IL 60617-4870. Office, 7 days, 8 a.m. to midnight, (773) 375-5741. (PLEASE, no "just routine" calls.) Before sending a fax, call.

More Information About Chemtrails Mystery "Poison Cobwebs From Hell"

Editor's note: Starting on page 33 in last month's edition of The SPECTRUM, we presented some new and quite revealing information about the very provocative "chemtrails" phenomenon that has been causing a great deal of misery in the process of weaving secretive spider web-like, jet airplane-like contrails across many North American skies for the past several years. The new information has, in large measure, resulted from some daring ones coming forward to reveal what they know—despite the possibility of personal negative repercussions. Whatever is going on has been wrapped in such effective layers of secrecy that penetrating this subject has so far been more difficult than finding out what's going on at super-secret Area 51 in the Nevada desert!

Below we add more pieces of the puzzle from one who has been a pioneer in exploring this field. William Thomas was the first journalist to break the chemtrails story back in January of 1999. Some of you will remember his several outstanding sessions on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program before Art's "retirement" several months ago. Through the keen eye of our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, we share the following as a News Desk Special Report, extracted from the outstanding sightings.com Internet website.

You can sense the author's frustration with the still-secret nature of whatever is going on, despite all the work he has put into cracking its wall of silence. Meanwhile, regular readers of this newspaper will appreciate the additional clues and other research results presented in the following summary and overlook some possibly short-sighted conclusions that Mr. Thomas makes—especially in conjunction with our last presentation on this subject last month.

It is probably more difficult for an honest and hard-working news professional like Mr. Thomas to embrace the outrageous levels of conspiratorial shenanigans going on all around us than it is for our regular readers to think in that larger, often bizarre context! In one sense, what's one more crazy scheme on a playing field full of such insane plots to further the New World Order agenda?

Nevertheless, the role played by this chemtrails activity still does not come into clear focus within the larger picture that, for instance, our Front Page story this issue easily fits into. Stay tuned as more ones hopefully come forward with their pieces of the story. Till then, watch the sky and watch out for what may be falling out of that sky!

SOME COMMENTS & CONCLUSIONS ON CASSANI & CHEMTRAILS

Erminia Cassani deserves thanks and congratulations for her long and sometimes personally perilous investigations into low-level air drops of pathogen-bearing gel and red powder over suburban neighborhoods in Ontario, and across the USA. Throughout her research I have kept our confidentiality agreement on certain aspects of her work until she was ready to publish her preliminary findings. It is time that we heard from this key researcher, and I am glad she has come forward now.

After 19 months' investigation, I believe that the higher-level "chemtrail" operation involving 700 US Air Force tanker planes and some civilian airliners is separate, though possibly related to, the splattering of lab-tested bacteria, molds, and fungi over homes from aircraft flying at tree-top level.

Even more disturbing are recently witnessed deliberate spray attacks on some vocal aerial observers' headquarters and homes. Seen in the context of earlier low-level attacks against William Wallace and his wife Anne in the remote mountains of Washington state (after Wallace went to the media insisting they cover chemtrails) these attempts at intimidation are serious acts of military aggression that prove that something sensitive is indeed going on.

But what?

I concur with Cassani's conclusions that it makes zero sense for a government to randomly sicken its entire citizenry with air-delivered organisms. Nor are repeated attacks of self-replicating bio-agents necessary. If continued, such overt bio-attacks could destroy the US economy, while risking rebellion from an armed and angry populace. More to the point: no disease-causing organisms have ever been found in chemtrails.

While lab techs were startled and concerned by the biological organisms and markers turning up in samples from low-level drops that left at least one homeowner stricken with a heart attack, the molds and fungi that turned up in the only tested sample of rainwater taken immediately after heavy high-level chemtrail spraying were deemed by an independent Ontario lab as entirely normal “with no one species predominating”.

CONTEMPLATING A CULL

What about an airborne “cull” of the elderly and similar “useless eaters” burdening cash-strapped governments with their burgeoning needs for subsistence and medical assistance? A little-publicized high-level summit last January saw president Clinton (invited) and former heads and top officials from Japan, Germany, the World Bank, security agencies, and major financial firms discussing the “Impacts Of Aging On Business”. Corporate-controlled governments are extremely and increasingly concerned about aging populations, which are seen as growing threats to corporate bottom-lines.

Couple this concern with decades of documented US and British funding and research into Nazi-copied “eugenics” intended to selectively cull unproductive resource consumers—and the high percentage of fatalities among the elderly during two consecutive epidemics (1998-2000) of deaths from Influenza-Like-Illness and related pneumonia and cardiac arrest appear very sinister indeed.

Yet, “Why go to the expense and risk of blatantly spraying pathogens from jets to get rid of older folks?” (He asks, counting his own gray hairs.)

A less obvious and much cheaper course is to quietly encourage euthanasia in hospitals across North America and Australia, where doctors and nurses now admit that up to 40% of elderly patients are being deliberately killed—without their consent, and in many cases without any terminal ailment involved.

Another effective tactic is to scare people into lining up for experimental vaccines often contaminated by pathogenic material. The constant hyping of vaccines for the flu, migraines, and meningitis symptoms often seen in the wake of chemtrails is suspiciously coincidental.

It is clear that, at the very least, heightened death rates among the elderly caught under heavy aerial spraying are being viewed as “acceptable collateral damage” to a program deemed essential to national-corporate interests. For this reason, any official whistle-blower who dares to come forward with verifiable documentation concerning chemtrails will face legal repercussions that will make Daniel Elsberg’s long incarceration for exposing the fake Gulf of Tonkin “attack” and other Washington lies concerning Vietnam feel like a stay in a summer spa.

Unless we rally to support and protect this brave soul.

FUNGUS AMONG US

Let’s look closer at the illness rampant among our families and communities. While the corporate-controlled media continue to bleat about the “flu”, the CDC has consistently reported blood tests showing that between 65% and 99% of acutely ill patients jamming emergency rooms and clinics do not have the flu. Instead, officials with that infectious disease-tracking agency have publicly attributed epidemic death rates to an “unknown pathogen”.

Now the CDC is reporting that this mystery killer is a “parasite”. For “parasite” read “fungus”. Based on extensive research—including input from experts on fungal symptoms and outbreaks—I fully concur with Cassani that we are in the midst of a massive fungal invasion fueled by warmer, wetter temperatures from a rapidly heating atmosphere.

The rapid extinction of amphibian “canaries” confirms this—and should sound an urgent warning. Chytrid fungus has just been implicated as a probable cause of 50% amphibian die-offs in pristine areas around the globe.

Fungus among us is no joke. The same mycotoxins present in the fungi growing silently in many North American homes and offices have been cultivated, air-dried, and delivered to American soldiers in the warheads of SCUD missiles by the world’s most experienced proponents of biological warfare—the Iraqi Chemical Corps. There is no difference between biowar mycotoxins and domestic stachybotrys (pronounced stack-ee-bot-ris)—an especially lethal black mold now proliferating wildly across the USA.

FUNGAL INFECTION = CHEMTRAIL ILLNESS

Exposure to fungal infections leads to the same symptoms seen in sufferers from Chemtrail-Related Illness (CRI). These include: acute asthma and allergies, joint pain, headaches, bloody noses, abdominal pain, gas and bloating, indigestion, heartburn, constipation, diarrhea, gastritis, extreme fatigue, and severe headaches—as well as depression, anxiety, sudden mood swings, lack of concentration, drowsiness, lethargy, insomnia, memory loss, and “spacey” light-headedness.

In a recent survey among 179 patients reportedly suffering from chemtrail-related illness, naturopathic Dr. Joseph Puleo found that fully 99% were found to have fungus in their blood.

JUST A TEST?

With regard to Erminia Cassani’s hypothesis, why are certain neighborhoods being hit with fungal “cocktails”? These are obviously not attempts to wipe out pot plantations grown in more remote areas with killer fungi now being bred and tested for this purpose. Yet, fungal outbreaks in suburban settings dire enough to require aerial intervention with anti-fungi fungi would certainly be apparent to residents and local media.

Most likely, these are tests. The low-level splattering of fungi-filled “gel” and red powder appears to be an outgrowth of potentially lethal “open air” biowarfare tests that have been carried out on hundreds of US, Canadian, and British cities since 1949.

INFORMED CONSENT

Whatever the threat—or imagined threat—nobody I know has been notified, or asked for their vote or opinion.

The entire issue of chemtrails and a concurrent low-level spray program rests on informed consent. Regardless of what is going on—or why such hazardous projects are deemed necessary by a silent, unseen elite—these daily violations of the Nuremberg Principles constitute war crimes against public citizens by their own elected government, and the military hired and sworn to defend them.

SUNSCREEN

I believe that Erminia Cassani is also on the right track when she calls chemtrails a solar shield. In recent weeks I have independently arrived at a similar conclusion.

Based on all available evidence, including:

- a call by Edward Teller for an aerial “sunscreen” to reflect 1% of incoming sunlight away from Earth in order to cool out-of-control greenhouse warming;
- a study by the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory where computer climate models showed this could be done at a cost of $1 billion a year;
- a patent issued to aerospace giant, Hughes Aircraft Company, to spray highly-reflective aluminum oxide aloft “to reduce global warming”;
- falling local temperatures and greatly reduced UV radiation levels measured under chemtrail overcasts;

my best guess is that the deliberate overcasts caused by repeated chemtrail obscuration of “blue sky days” is a desperate attempt to head off the superstorms, floods, and droughts of global warming—without reducing fossil fuel burning and harming the balance sheets of all businesses enmeshed in a petroleum-powered economy.

Insurance companies bigger than Big Oil and the international arms trade are being hammered by catastrophic storm losses caused by a rapidly heating atmosphere. They are telling Washington, Whitehall, Ottawa, and other allied nations over which the spray planes are appearing, to cool global warming—or else. If the big insurers go down, so will the money markets in which they invest so heavily. And so will the banks that back them.

Follow the money. It leads, in every case, to corporate interests—a tune to which all governments must dance.

You can be certain that chemtrails are not being spread for your own good. Whatever their intended purpose, which I now believe to be atmospheric modification, this unprecedented aerial assault is further amplifying wild weather swings—while sickening millions of people, pets, and other animals. And killing a significant number of elderly, along with others made vulnerable by weakened immunity.

CHEMTRAIL RAIN SAMPLES ANALYZED

The sole disease-causing agents we know to be found in chemtrails come from rainwater samples tested at an independent lab by the Ontario Ministry of Environment following heavy chemtrail spraying over Espanola, Ontario:

- The filament strands of radar-reflecting “chaff” (used to track dispersal) is highly toxic and can lead to severe allergic reactions.
- The mica and carbon black used by the US Air Force to form rainclouds is also toxic if inhaled.
- But the principle component of the tested

Ontario sample was found to be aluminum—at seven times government safe levels. High enough, said the lab, “to kill fish”.

The aluminum called for in the Welsbach patent issued to Hughes Aircraft for atmospheric modification was intended to be put into the fuel of jet airliners. If it is added to the plane’s auxiliary fuel tanks, chemtrails will appear only at cruising altitudes after the flight crew switches to aux tanks. Switching to main tanks for take-off and landing will leave no chemtrail clues close to the ground. (Disturbing videotape showing an MD-80 commercial airliner laying a distinctive chemtrail is included in my definitive documentary video, CHEMTRAILS: MYSTERY LINES IN THE SKY due for release in July, 2000.)

Similarly, tanker aircraft observed switching sprays on and off are probably switching fuel tanks.

According to a former engineer for Alcoa, aluminum oxide in the size ranges called for in the sunscreen patent would polish jet turbine blades without harming them. These compounds would form brilliant white plumes in the sky.

But the engineer warned that metallic particles intended to remain aloft for a year could settle quickly to the ground. High levels of aluminum have been blood-tested in CRI sufferers in Toronto and Vancouver. I now urge that more chemtrail patients insist on being screened for aluminum poisoning.

ALUMINUM POISONING = CHEMTRAIL ILLNESS

Among other signs, medical text symptomology states that aluminum toxicity “can lead to gastrointestinal disturbances, headaches, forgetfulness, speech disturbances, memory loss, weak, aching muscles”.

By preventing nerve impulses from being correctly carried to and from the brain, this potent neurotoxin also causes “dizziness, impaired coordination, and a loss of balance and energy”.

Whether a chemtrail or commercial flight, it is possible and even probable that pseudomonas (which dine on fuel) and various molds and fungi routinely grow inside cavernous aircraft fuel tanks—to rain down on everyone along these flight paths, along with dozens of other toxic benzene derivatives. Aluminum and other sprayed compounds can also serve as a matrix for fungal growth that may be activated rather than attenuated by increased UV levels at spray altitude.

CORPORATE COMPLICITY AND THE NEW WORLD ORDER

Anyone worried that the New World Order is about to enslave us all need a reality check. We are already virtually enslaved by giant corporations whose control of extremely sophisticated media mesmerization techniques has turned most citizens into somnambulists who refuse even to look up at what is taking place right over their heads.

Fear of “terrorist attack” is manufacturing consent to dangerous and illegal abrogation of constitutionally guaranteed freedoms, while the threat of unemployment is being used very effectively to silence debate and dissent.

Meanwhile, the fully documented cynical importation of banned narcotics by CIA aircraft to finance covert operations, and the widespread sale of other soporifics, keeps an increasingly edgy public pacified. [Editor’s note: Our Front Page story for this issue of The SPECTRUM is a sobering expansion of the points made in the above paragraph.]

In this mockery of democracy, no one ever gets to vote for the few folks really calling the shots. Instead, we are treated to flag-waving distractions by a military-industrial-entertainment complex that must continue to manufacture threats requiring ever-increasing expenditures on weapons whose deployment threaten us all. (Ask a sick Gulf War veteran how she or he feels they’ve been treated for serving their country and the word they most often use is “treason”.)

As the first journalist to break the chemtrails story back in January 1999, I have stayed with this frustrating and often infuriating investigation knowing that its answers will ultimately go far beyond aerial spraying to address the fundamental democratic issues of public consent and political accountability. The hour is very late for people everywhere to reclaim control over their destinies and daily lives—as well as the future freedom and well-being of our children.

But there is still time. And because they are so blatantly and consistently in our face, chemtrails could be that catalyst.

“COBWEB” COMPLEXITIES

Again, my deepest thanks to Erminia

THE FAMILY CIRCUS

Cassani for her unstinting work on the low-level attacks against North Americans. While so many others ought to be included on this roster of gratitude, Jeff Rense deserves special notice for his support and regular web updates on this issue. Clifford Carnicom must also be singled out for his web-published investigations into cobweb-like filaments found draped over mountain forests, oil rigs, porches, powerlines, highways, and police cruisers across the USA.

The presence of human blood cells on these artificial filaments cannot be explained as “weather control”. They do, however, match the findings by a hospital lab tech of similar human cells on gel-material splattered over Oakville, Washington in August, 1994.

WHAT WE CAN SAY

In late June 2000 we can say with certainty that an unprecedented aerial spray campaign high over at least 13 allied nations is causing serious illness and fatalities on the ground, while interfering with local cloud cover and weather patterns. Whatever their original intent, once the perpetrators of both high- and low-level spraying know that high numbers of sick, dying, and dead people follow in the wake of these missions—all further spray flights become deliberate attacks.

After nearly two years of dogged research by some very dedicated people, we now have some answers to the chemtrail conundrum.

At the very least—without any suppositions or allegations—chemtrails captured on thousands of photographs and seeming miles of videotape constitute a severe air-quality and public-health threat that must be thoroughly investigated by respective responsible agencies.

Dangerous flying by formations of heavy aircraft over populated areas also contravenes many flight regulations—requiring a response from the FAA better than “flights from Japan” or “flights from Russia” and “delayed Christmas traffic”.

No matter how heartfelt and courageous, anonymous e-mails from “mechanics”, “managers” and “pilots” aren’t enough. Despite the penalties for breaching “National Security” laws, we can only pray that a “whistle-blower” brave enough to come forward will soon present verifiable evidence of what is really going on. While the US Supreme Court has ruled that the commands of military commanders supercede even civilian law, the Military Code of Justice still stipulates that carrying out illegal orders is illegal.

Most of all, we need these high- and low-level aerial attacks to cease while we are informed of their purpose and decide as sovereign citizens how best to proceed in light of whatever threats—or elite agenda—presents itself.

It does not take evil intent to result in evil consequences.

I Hear Your Call, Do You Hear Mine?

6/27/00 ESU “JESUS” SANANDA

Greetings, my scribe. It is I, Esu “Jesus” Sananda. Yes, I come in the Holy Light of The One Light—Creator Source. Please be calm for there is a much needed message that I wish to deliver.

Many ones are petitioning for my input on various matters and I wish to let all ones know that I indeed DO hear the many calls and that they do not go unnoted. You ones who seek Guidance through this particular source should go back and re-read many of the writings again—very carefully. You will see, often, that the words from a particular named entity will often include statements such as “We of the Lighted realms...” and such.

Please be assured that I, Esu Sananda, am one of those “We” mentioned. We of the Lighted Realms often blend our energies (thoughts) with others so as to maximize the efficiency and the time of the various scribes who volunteer to serve in such a public capacity as is represented by this present message. If you look to the prior message with Soltec’s name ascribed to it, you will, upon close scrutiny, see that there was a lot of Korton (an Entity who specializes in communication) in that particular message, and yet it is titled Soltec.

[Editor’s note: See elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM for Soltec’s writing; it should be obvious to longtime readers where Korton’s contribution is particularly strong. Hint: look at the latter part of the message where the topic focuses upon how to COMMUNICATE with Guides from the Higher, Lighted Realms of Creation. For those of you who are newer readers, the two volumes (so far, with the third in production) of the WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach series are the collected spiritual writings first offered in this newspaper format, with an introduction to many of the Master Teachers located in the front of Volume I.]

We often work with and through our receivers on whatever frequency and wavelength suits them best at any particular time. In other words, we adjust our frequency to closely match theirs and will often relay our messages through one who has established the connection. The name is often ascribed for the benefit of you, there in the physical, for from our perspective there is little to no differentiation.

WE ARE ALL ONE!

Please know that I have not left you
ones ever.

Many ones are petitioning for my input on various matters and I wish to let all ones know that I indeed DO hear the many calls and that they do not go unnoted.

I work diligently to assist those of you who have the “eyes” to see and the “ears” to hear. These terms are quite figurative. I’ve come to tell you that you each have the “eyes” and “ears” of which I speak, and yet many of you are quite reluctant to use them, or only use them when you are “in the mood” to do so.

This is all well and fine, for We of the Lighted Brotherhood who come in service to The One Light do not make demands upon you, our brethren; we are not of force, coercion, or subtle manipulation. We honor your free will to choose, as you wish, above all else, for it is Creator’s desire that you each have freedom to choose as you will. We do hope that it would be your choice to be attentive to “the call” at all times, and that you each make a diligent effort to recognize your inner conscious connection to Source.

Many are asking “What can I do to help?”

We of the Lighted Realms are always looking for hands who will write or mouths who will speak our messages. If this is an overwhelming suggestion, then perhaps you could offer assistance to those whose actions and work you feel are a worthy cause.

I, Esu “Jesus” Sananda, have a great responsibility and duty to the overall welfare of your planet. I see that the majority of your world still sleeps in ignorance of the nature of the larger game being played on your planet. There are very real elements of what you ones would refer to as “darkness” who wish to use these sleeping ones as easily manipulated pawns who, by sheer numbers, can “distort” the perceptions of the rest of the players who either are awake or are beginning to awaken to the startling reality of the game.

Yes, my scribe. My scribe asks me to explain the nature of this distortion. And so I shall.

The large number of the masses who I refer to above as being “asleep” are ones who mostly just live a reactionary life, not really concerned with anything outside their current circle of interaction.

These ones are easily swayed by the “opinion” of the general media. They don’t really question anything that is told to them. They mostly just exist without much thought to their personal spiritual growth.

These ones, though they do not see or perceive same, have God-force energy flowing to them and through them as do any and all aspects of the physical environment. These ones can and are being used as low-level focusers of this very energy.

For example, raise the gasoline prices (which impacts most ones on your planet) and you will create a higher general level of anxiety in the “ethers”. This equates to a net infusion of negatively oriented energy about and around the planet. This added negative energy will, at times, make it more difficult for we of the Lighted Realms (positively oriented energy) to get our message through.

The dark, manipulative ones who usurp the energy of these sleeping ones in such a manner do so without regard for the long-term effects it will have on THEIR OWN soul evolution, let alone what effect it has on the ones who, for the most part, see not that they have been and are being used.

The net effect that we observe from our perspective is simply an attempt to distort the perceivable reality of the rest of the planet by getting everyone “worrying” about everything and anything EXCEPT what is truly important—self-determined exploration of one’s own spiritual heritage.

This distortion can most easily be observed in the excessive compulsion for materialism, money, and self-aggrandizement so prevalent in your world—especially in the United States.

Be not alarmed, for these same “sleepy” ones will one day be pushed too far by the puppet masters who pull their strings and push their buttons, and the game will quickly fall apart. The “elite” controllers grow quite arrogant and self assured as they literally pull off one preposterous atrocity after another.

This has instilled in them a false sense of assuredness, and they have grossly overestimated the gullibility of these “sleepy” ones who, when awakened, will become the mechanism of their undoing.

Our efforts as Lighted Truthbringers is one borne of great compassion. We know that we will not reach all ones whom these messages would benefit, but we are reaching a great number of you ones who will, in turn, be able to spread your understanding of same to those with whom you interact. In this way you (we) will thus touch, and make a very real impact upon, many a soul who cries out for understanding and yet sees not the response, for seldom does the answer come in the form you imagine. Nay, very few have an angel appear to them in white flowing robes, descending upon a beam of light as depicted in the mind-control machinery you ones call movies and television. The more likely Angel will come as a very real flesh-and-blood person who offers a helping hand to someone in need.

Many of you who are learning to use your God-given talents and abilities are the Angels sent to assist your brothers and sisters in a time of great and rapid change. You will have great need to remember and share your general understanding with those with whom you come in contact.

NEVER underestimate YOUR importance in the larger overall mission that is well underway. You each are a unique aspect of CREATOR GOD. God did not make any mistakes in sending you ones who volunteered for the job. Though you may not see it at this particular time, you each have something to contribute that will help others to, in turn, help themselves.

Remember, please, that the greatest gift you can give others is knowledge or ability to help themselves. The Wayshower is one who shows others a way through their challenge, but the choice is always left to each individual as to whether or not they will walk a given path.

Please know that I DO hear the many petitions that come from your sincere desire to connect. Know, too, that I am as close as your very breath, and that in the stillness of your mind you can hear me.

I shall not abandon any ones regardless of the choices and decisions they may make, but I do witness many ones who have deliberately ignored my call and who have turned away from the Lighted Assistance that is forever awaiting to be of service. To these ones I say that I am here for you as well, for it is not my place to judge what is appropriate or inappropriate for you. My Love is offered without conditions or expectation of reciprocation or understanding.

I am Esu “Jesus” Sananda, along with many a kindred soul who hail from within the Lighted Realms of the Creation and who find great joy in serving you, our brethren. In Light and Love to you who “hear” and “see” (as well as to those of you who seem to make a career out of ignoring us).

Blessings and Peace to you ALL! Salu!

The net effect that we observe from our perspective is simply an attempt to distort the perceivable reality of the rest of the planet by getting everyone “worrying” about everything and anything EXCEPT what is truly important—self-determined exploration of one’s own spiritual heritage.

"Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren't working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that's where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually 'the Phoenix will arise from the ashes' after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

"Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk."

Classic Research Works by Eustace Mullins

THE CURSE OF CANAAN A Demonology of History

“After forty years of patient study of the crises which face humanity, I arrived at a very simple conclusion—all conspiracies are Satanic!”

The “Will of Canaan” which has been the guiding rule of The Conspiracy for three thousand years is explained in explicit detail. Some topics covered are: The War Against Shem; The Transgression of Cain; Secular Humanism; American Revolution; The World Wars; French Revolution.

242 pages $15.00

MURDER BY INJECTION The Story of the Medical Conspiracy Against America

Eustace Mullins unveils the Conspiracy to deny you low-cost alternative health-care and how federal agents commit acts of “Criminal Syndicalism” to protect the profits of the “Drug Trust”. The world’s 18 largest drug firms are listed. Some of the topics covered are: Profits of Cancer, AIDS, Contamination of the Food Supply, Death and Vaccination, The Rockefeller Syndicate.

THE WORLD ORDER Our Secret Rulers

Eustace Mullins shares his discovery of the hidden manipulators of the World Order who have maintained their power by a very simple technique—a disguise which enables them to carry on their Satanic work without being identified and prosecuted. The topics covered are: The “New” World Order; The Rothschilds; Soviet Russia; Franklin Delano Roosevelt; The Business of America; The CIA; The Bechtel Complex; The Foundations; The Rule of the Order.

297 pages $15.00

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the “London Connection”. The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and documentation from many sources.

WHY THE END?

Two Millennia Of Prophecy And It's Fruitless Attempt To Awaken Humanity

J.T. REVELATOR

The book that dares to ask the ultimate question. Many prophets over the last two millennia, each with their own perspective, have tried to warn humanity about the "future" catastrophic "end-time events" in the hopes of altering them. That time is now upon us.

WHY THE END? is a distillation of prophecies and messages spanning the last 2,000 years, sorted by topic for you, the awakening human. Unlike other books that dwell on past history or vague fragments of events, WHY THE END? gets to the point, chronicling the diverse range of prophecies and offering the facts and clues from scientific disciplines.

You may have pondered on some of these questions:

Why is time "speeding up"?

Why are animals exhibiting strange behaviors, some dying inexplicably?

Why is the weather fluctuating and getting more severe?

Are you feeling "on edge" as if something profound is about to happen soon?

Is there a limit to humanity's abuse of the planet?

When does the "New Age" begin?

WHY THE END? intends to answer these questions and more in a no-frills, uncompromising manner. Some of these projections are quite harsh and could be interpreted as "doom and gloom", depending on your perspective. But if you have an appetite for what is really on the horizon, then WHY THE END? is the book for you.

The bottom line is that the Purification of the Earth is underway, and will continue to escalate. WHY THE END? will prepare you mentally for the events, while those less informed will become incapacitated by fear as they witness the end of life as we know it. In reality, it is the cleansing of the old to make way for the new "Golden Age". It then becomes your choice as to how you will view and interpret and experience these events.

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original inhabitants of America, the Native Americans. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

The first 16 parts of Ray Bilger's ongoing research are compiled into the book: The Untold History Of America, Vol. I.

The Indigo Children

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The “Indigo Child” is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes, revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern has singularly unique factors that call for parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to assist them in achieving balance and harmony in their lives, and to help them avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children, such as:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- How come a lot of our children today seem to be “system busters”?
- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober bring together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in “knowing” who they are—so they must be recognized, celebrated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA?

Ann Blake Tracy, Ph.D.

(Featured interview in the July 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

This text contains critical life-saving information to educate patients, their physicians, families, and friends. Read about medical studies which demonstrate that:

- depression is determined biologically by elevated cortisol hormone in the blood, yet one single 30mg dose of Prozac clearly doubles cortisol levels (one of the fight or flight hormones). This should prove to be a perfect formula for producing rage, panic, and severe rebound depression.
- when the SSRIs (Prozac, Paxil, Zoloft, Lovan, Luvox) raise 5HT serotonin, they lower 5HIAA serotonin—the serotonin researchers originally hoped to increase.
- Prozac multiplies many other medications by “10-fold or greater” which greatly increases the danger of life-threatening toxic drug reactions and toxic drug interactions.
- SSRIs may initially increase concentration and energy through increased production of adrenalin hormones, but according to patients this method results in the same long-term effects associated with steroid or amphetamine use—memory impairment, poor concentration, mental disability, etc.
- disruption of serotonin alters perceptions; reality and dreams seem one in the same, and a hypersuggestible state is created—logical reasons for large numbers of Prozac patients consistently reporting false memories of abuse.
- when the SSRIs lower the critical 5HIAA serotonin, compulsions can be induced for sex, spending, shoplifting, sweets, diet soda, alcohol, tobacco, and other substances.
- patients often report after-effects of withdrawal, severe rebound depression, memory loss, impaired concentration, sleep disorders, panic attacks, and chronic fatigue.

TURNING THE '90s UPSIDE DOWN

In 1956 Eli Lilly patented LSD, and in 1987 they gave us Prozac. Has Lilly turned the '90s upside down for us to relive the '60s with their latest miracle drug, Prozac? LSD, the most notorious of the psychedelic drugs, was first marketed by Sandoz in Europe with the suggestion that it be used to chemically induce insanity in “normal subjects” with the hope of discovering how mental illness is produced. Yet in December 1955, two months before Lilly obtained their patent on LSD here in America, TIME magazine featured the drug, declaring that LSD “may actually help psychiatrists clear-up mental illness”. It was also promoted as a cure for alcoholism and as an “aid in facilitating psychoanalysis”. Now, a generation later, many of these same marketing claims are being made for Prozac that were once made for LSD. Just how similar in action are these two drugs? How much evidence is there that those who feel they cannot live without Prozac are addicted or dependent upon it? As our latest panacea, it is being prescribed for everything from headaches and flu, to acne and home sickness. Yet, according to FDA spokespersons, there have been more adverse reaction reports on Prozac than any other medical product. We are being media blitzed to believe these new mind-altering chemicals have a large margin of safety, but will time prove otherwise or has it already? Considering the widespread use of these products, we have no time to lose in learning the answer.

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world". No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

—VIDEO—

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

(Featured interview in the October 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu "sanusi" or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now."

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli" to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of traveling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

"This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words". —David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse

One half of the world's current population should soon be dead according to authoritative projections. Will you, your family, and friends be among the survivors or the deceased?

Dr. Len Horowitz and Dr. Joseph S. Puleo investigate 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge, power, and "healing codes" to humanity. It offers new hope for the loving masses to survive the worldwide plagues, famines, and weather changes that are now at hand. In perfect time for these cataclysmic events, Healing Codes presents an urgent, monumental, and inspired work that will be hailed for generations to come.

Emerging Viruses - AIDS & Ebola

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein. This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). Included is Dr. Robert Gallo, the notorious discoverer of the AIDS virus. The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when these researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses, and experimented with an assortment of antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

Update From Our Editor

If my gripe ever developed into a full-size dissertation, I thought it should be called "The Amazing Magnifying Wire" or maybe "Selling Air And Getting Away With It" or something like that.

It started innocently enough one day a few years ago while I was installing solar panels and related alternative-energy-source equipment at my residence, and naturally, as a result, I was making a lot of trips to the electrical aisles of such places as Home Depot.

On one of those treks I spotted some two-conductor, clear-insulation wire—like you would use for a lamp cord or speaker wire—that looked to be really hefty. It caught my attention exactly because of how substantial it seemed. I went over for a closer examination since wire like that was hard to find anymore outside of high-end audio stores.

Then came the catch: When you looked closely at the wire from an end-on view, like looking through a straw, it was two very skinny little parallel wires (not good for much of anything) wrapped in thick insulation. What was going on was that the thick, clear, rounded insulation magnified the wire when observing it from a side view, like a magnifying lens would do, and made it LOOK like something much more substantial than it actually was! Hence my dubbing this deception with the sarcastic title of "The Amazing Magnifying Wire".

About this same time I also started to notice how much air was being packaged for sale along with the products I thought I was purchasing. Large, tightly sealed, but only half-full, bags of potato chips looked like they were about ready to explode they were so puffed-out on the supermarket shelves, as were candy bars, whose plastic, air-tight, "expanded" wrappers were several sizes too large for the meager product inside. Thus was generated my dubbing this deception as "Selling Air And Getting Away With It".

I also noticed how boxes of tea bags, that were still designed for 24 bags, were now containing 20 or even 16—in order to sell a lot more air and a lot less product—for the same or elevated price.

About this same time Consumer Reports started to document a much wider spectrum of even more absurd cases of this same sleazy con-game in their "Selling It" column, which is compiled from sometimes stunningly outrageous examples sent in by readers.

These shenanigans don't speak well either for the true state of our economy or for our business ethics. The products that are shrinking in size/weight while offering the delusion of substance are simply hiding what would otherwise be a consumer-noticeable whopping price increase. That is, make the product somewhat smaller and make the price somewhat higher—and hope nobody notices.

Of course this is not a sign of a healthy business economy. But beneath that—and much more fundamental to the point of this discussion—such behavior is not a sign of healthy business ethics. And yet it is occurring all around us. And you can be sure that the absolutions in most company board rooms go something like: "...well, we HAVE to do it that way 'cause everyone else is in order to stay in business and keep that competitive edge".

Excuse me? What ever happened to a fair price for a fair product? That "amazing magnifying wire" I mentioned to launch this discussion could, by the way, be downright dangerous to use in many cases where you might think it adequate. And its price was fair only if you fell for the deception!

What got me thinking about all this was the perennial obstacle we deal with here at The SPECTRUM in working to provide you with The Truth. Many of you readers deal with this same issue with friends and relatives who "just can't believe" such things as we address could really be happening all around us.

For example, the HAARP system shenanigans which we report on in this issue "just can't possibly" be the case because, you know, "'they' would never do something like that" to us.

Oh?

If "they" can—and do—cheat and lie and steal with reckless abandon in the consumer marketplace, day in and day out, right under our noses, and with a straight face call it "just doing business", then what is so hard about believing the next little step which likewise shows the very same disregard and disrespect for we-the-people?

That's what makes the hypothetical speech—by the elite, for the elite—on "population reduction" so right-on and so well worth sharing in this issue. Is the premise of that speech really any harder to believe than the assault that, say, the tobacco companies have been perpetrating upon the public for so long now? Note that these "invincible" tobacco giants have just lately gotten the punitive shock of their collective life from the recent Florida class-action lawsuit's jury verdict of the largest monetary damages figure EVER pronounced anywhere. It's about time.

As the great (and quite controversial) literary genius Mark Twain (whose works generally dealt with penetrating moral issues in disguise and were often banned by the so-called "elite" controllers) put it a century ago: "Why should we help the nation lie the whole day long and then object to telling one little individual private lie in our own interest to go to bed on? Just for the refreshment of it, I mean, and to take the rancid taste out of our mouth." Indeed. What irony we swim in.

A friend of mine says that the true measure of the advancement of a society is its level of COMPASSION for one another. What do you think? Right now I have the uneasy sense that THAT commodity is shrinking even faster than those "new and improved" candy bars!

BLACK GOLD BLUES

By Charles Smith (originally posted 5-9-00 <WorldNetDaily.com>)

Oil ministers from OPEC nations have quietly told national security advisors on Capitol Hill that the oil production cutbacks—and resulting price increases—are being implemented at the request of the Clinton administration on behalf of Russia, Indonesia, Mexico, and Iran. Russia, Mexico, and Indonesia are reported to be directing their increased oil profits toward paying back overdue Western loans.

According to one government defense adviser, the windfall profits are part of a larger scheme to use the American public to pay off failed and corrupt investment schemes in the three countries. "The American public is paying off bad loans to bad countries made by bad bankers" stated the national security adviser.

The largest Middle Eastern oil producers reportedly agreed on the cutback of oil production in order to increase income for weapons purchases. Several oil states have announced major weapons buys from the West, including a recent multi-billion-dollar purchase of Lockheed/Martin F-16 fighter jets. "Iran is also trading oil to China in exchange for missile technology" stated the national security adviser.

The gas hike has raised several concerns about the Clinton energy policy and U.S. national security. In recent years, OPEC has flooded the market with oil, lowering prices worldwide. The lower prices, according to Denise Bode, a commissioner on the Oklahoma Corporation Commission, were designed to discourage investors in U.S. domestic oil production, maintaining a world monopoly for OPEC. "The OPEC cartel clearly understands that the Clinton energy policy is based on instant gratification" stated Bode "seeking low gasoline prices and ignoring future consequences with a foreign cartel in charge of our national energy resources.

"In 1997, OPEC acted to consolidate the American market by sending much cheaper oil, dumping it at historically low prices. The most significant energy policy initiated by the Clinton administration is a 4.3 cent increase in the gasoline tax" said Bode. "Another 30,000 Americans have lost their jobs. Domestic oil production has moved from holding steady to a 5.4 percent decline. Even though OPEC has recently cut back production and raised the price of oil to $30 a barrel, there has been no increase in domestic production."

"It's very clear what OPEC should do if they want to retain control" stated Donald Hodel, former secretary of energy and secretary of interior during the Reagan administration. "Periodically, they should announce they are going to produce excess volumes of crude oil. The announcement itself will scare away some capital investment from new production. Secondly, if that doesn't work, and from time to time to prove their point, they would have to overproduce, drive the price down dramatically, so that marginal wells in the United States will be shut down and new investment will be shut down worldwide."

According to Hodel, the "green" movement has combined with OPEC to "erect straw arguments" against the U.S. energy industry. "I've never met anyone who said I want to breathe dirty air or drink polluted water" noted Hodel. "Yet, the green movement has succeeded in using clean air, clean water, and garbage control as a means to seek de-industrialization in the U.S. The problem is that the schools have been captured by the flaming environmentalists" noted Hodel. "We are not doing a decent job of getting the educational establishment to acknowledge the facts about the importance of energy production to our economy.

"If we were rational about our energy policy, we would have a growing component in our society of nuclear power. The people who fought nuclear power have successfully stopped coal. They are now turning toward natural gas and oil. We made the point over and over that offshore drilling is less of an environmental hazard than transporting imported oil by tanker." Hodel concluded: "Our dependency on foreign oil affects our national security and our environment."

Charles Smith is a national security and defense reporter for WorldNetDaily. [End quoting]

I think there are additional, complicating reasons for the U.S. oil/gasoline crisis which are being exploited for the larger "world control" agenda. One of them is that because of Y2K chip problems, there are many refineries that have had fires and explosions that aren't being reported to the public, or if they are, they are not reported as a Y2K problem. Another excuse that they are using is they have had to change the formulation for "pollution" control and that has caused a slowdown. (In California they have to undo this process because they are destroying the water supply with the new formulation.)

Another one to consider is that a major election is coming up and they will manipulate anything to steer the win. If they make everybody happy by dropping the price just before you go to the poll, it might help certain individuals win. One thing you can be sure of—they won't tell you the PLAIN truth.

Note that if anyone stirs people up about eliminating (or even just lowering) the gasoline tax—which brings BIG bucks into the federal government daily—then all of a sudden the prices go down a bit till the sheeple go back to sleep. Moreover, when OPEC said a few weeks ago that they "could increase production" to lower prices, the U.S. oil industry was then quick to say: "Well, we're at maximum production capacity anyway, so even if you do generate more crude, we can't refine any faster, thus the price would stay the same." (??!!) Doesn't sound like there's any honest aspect of this so-called gasoline shortage!

CARNIVORE EATS FBI

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.skolnicksreport.com>>, 7/20/00: [quoting]

By Sherman H. Skolnick

Remember Frankenstein's monster? It turned on its creator.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation created a system called CARNIVORE. It has become the Big Ear and the Big Eye at Internet Service Providers (ISPs) and Online Services. Without court orders, but with the apparent acquiescence, if not complicity, of e-mail servers, it intercepts and analyzes gargantuan amounts of e-mail supposedly for FBI investigations. (The Bureau-crazies have been spending too much time emulating George Orwell and his "Big Brother".)

Some believe it to be a spy system, an offshoot of PROMIS, super software used by secret political police, like the FBI, worldwide, to track so-called "terrorists"—code word for those unfriendly to the Established Order. After all, in many big cities in the U.S., the FBI is quietly using PROMIS, with its zillion lines of code, as software for federal prosecutors' and other federal agents' case management, software stolen from its rightful owners, INSLAW.

By the way, one of the super-secrets of the Microsoft Affair is that the Justice Department and their step-sister, the FBI, stole and are using copyrighted software of Microsoft without paying royalties.

If it dared, Microsoft could blow apart the Justice Department's Anti-Trust case against it by counter-claiming for theft of Microsoft's intellectual property. The Internal Revenue Service, however, could jump in, claiming Microsoft, despite its out-of-this-world revenue, pays NO TAXES and is a frightful tax evader. Auditors familiar with Microsoft's accounting system contend the software bogeyman is technically, if not actually, bankrupt, with billions of shares issued and peddled, on which it pays no dividends, enriching insiders with various dark-mirror, money-siphoning tricks.

Microsoft, its judges, and its bankers, are all in a position to know the truth of Microsoft with its MacBeth's cyber witches, and their bookkeepers' kettle, reportedly cooking the software monster's books.

Foreign intelligence operatives are reportedly laughing about all this, all the way to their windowless "sterile" rooms, supposedly themselves exempt from interception. They have found a way to REVERSE the FBI's CARNIVORE evil robot. At the hands of these spooks and their computer wizards, the FBI system has reportedly become a devilish turn-the-tables burrowing tool, digging out the Bureau's own family jewels. The FBI's super-secret Counter-Intelligence inner sanctum, Division Five, has reportedly been exposed and unmasked, at least to the inside delight of foreign intelligence hackers, or those claiming to be.

A super computer honcho, asked by us about all this, confirms that reversing the FBI's spy device is a known great possibility if not an immense actuality. "The Bureau" he told us "has either shown their incompetence or has been infiltrated. Reversal is known to be possible by appropriate software, with 'trap doors', not just by counter-spies compromising from inside the Bureau."

A retired Central Intelligence "black operations" agent, when asked about this, said: "The Bureau should have known better. Reversing their spy machine serves them right. Of course, since its birth, 'The Firm' has viewed FBI as a meddling, incompetent would-be competitor which should not be operating offices as they do overseas."

Funny thing. Publicly, the so-called "American Civil Liberties Union" was among the first in July, 2000, to supposedly rail against CARNIVORE as an invasion-of-privacy issue. As a legal entity, however, ACLU ceased to exist in 1967, and was at that time taken over by the Roger Baldwin Foundation and a team of related so-called tax-exempt entities reportedly financed, at least in part, through covert funding by the American CIA, passed through other Foundations to hide the tracks.

The alleged "American Civil Liberties Union" has been in the forefront of those reportedly watering down the Freedom of Information Act, exempting the CIA from certain disclosures. Masquerading as the alleged "American Civil Liberties Union", the Roger Baldwin Foundation has helped screw up the FOIA by leaning on pliable members of Congress. This is being done to the detriment of common Americans seeking divulging of records to understand the operations of their government.

Do not count on the alleged ACLU telling you about how the FBI CARNIVORE devices have been reversed. At the time the ACLU was taken over in 1967, there was a now-forgotten huge CIA-Foundation scandal, exposing how the CIA manipulates dissidents through layers of "foundations" to disguise covert funding. (Check the New York Times INDEX volume in a good reference library for the summary of stories of 1967. Bobby Kennedy played a role in fingering this mess, probably an additional reason for his assassination in 1968. President Kennedy and brother Bobby, as Attorney General, were dedicated to splitting up the CIA and scattering it to the wind for the CIA's many crimes.)

Cynics claim the reputed "foreign intelligence" hackers and software experts reversing the FBI's CARNIVORE spy devices, are really just the American CIA and their latest dirty trick to boomerang against their illegitimate, uncooperative step-sister, the FBI. Remember: the Bureau has no statutory or other legal basis for its existence. This, unlike the American CIA, which has a charter authorizing some of their acts and doings.

In the name of "national security", the FBI has been tracking e-mail through their Halloween hobgoblin, CARNIVORE. Now that their ghoulish machine has been reversed on itself, to spy on its creators, does the FBI have a valid gripe? The FBI system, like a scary hologram projected on the sky as if real, has damaged the security, national and otherwise, of many ordinary Americans.

We expect to post more on this. Stay tuned. [End quoting]

It's always has been said that "What goes around, comes around" and this is the time to see more and more of this happening.

CARNIVORE'S REAL PURPOSE TO DISABLE INTERNET?

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 7/23/00: [quoting]

FBI Carnivore PostScript

Last issue, we reported on the FBI's CARNIVORE computer wiretap. Since then, public outcry has led the Justice Department to investigate its use. Online privacy advocates have also complained about the system. One major ISP, EarthLink, initially refused the FBI's requests to hook up CARNIVORE until compelled by a court order, at which point CARNIVORE promptly brought down some of its servers. EarthLink came to an agreement with the FBI and will now perform court-ordered monitoring with its own equipment and software. CNet has that story. Robert X. Cringely, meanwhile, speculates on the real purpose of CARNIVORE: to give the US government the ability to turn off the Internet.

NEW MEXICAN PRESIDENT-ELECT KEEPS CURIOUS COMPANY

Excerpted from the INTERNET, 7/9/00: [quoting]

The Narco News Bulletin, <<http://www.narconews.com/newboss1.html>>, Simón Bolívar

Where's [Mexican president-elect] Vicente Fox Today?

No, not with U.S. Drug Czar Barry McCaffrey.

No, not with Ambassador Davidow (that was Friday).

El Universal, July 8, 2000, reports:

"Vicente Fox Quesada and his family traveled yesterday on a vacation to the island of Punta Pajaros, Quintana Roo, property of Roberto Hernández, president of the banking group Banamex-Accival..."

Narco News must be making this up? The largest newspaper in Mexico is reporting that the President-elect is on the most famous narco-property of the Caribbean?

El Universal continues:

"Fox left Mexico City at midday to the Toluca airport. At 2 p.m. he boarded a private Cessna airplane, license number 650EASPC, to be taken to the city of Cancún, Quintana Roo. At 6:55 p.m. a helicopter transported Fox and his family to the island of Punta Pajaros, located three hours by land and sea from the principal tourist zone of Mexico..."

But isn't that where the old boss Zedillo vacationed with the "narco-banker?"

El Universal continues:

"One cannot arrive easily at the island of Punta Pajaros. Armed people guard the island 24 hours a day. This place is frequented by President Ernesto Zedillo, who this weekend also happens to be in Quintana Roo..."

"The Cocaine Peninsula—is 43 kilometers of beach where tons of cocaine have been unloaded, owned by narco-banker Roberto Hernández Ramírez." SOURCE: The Daily Por Esto! (Mexican Courts Ruled "All of these reports were based on the facts.")

Reader Letters from Cozumel and Oaxaca on This Stunning Development:

Fox's New Summer Home?

La Jornada Has Confirmed the Story:

“By Correspondent David Sosa, Cancún, Quintana Roo, July 9, 2000: Sunday afternoon, president-elect Vicente Fox returned to Mexico City to restart his activities after vacationing this weekend in a residence of his friend Roberto Hernández, president of the banking group Banamex-Accival.

“The mansion is located on the island of Punta Pájaros, near the protected Nature reserve of Sian Ka’an, where, according to close sources, he went diving, fishing, walking on the beach, and using an aqua-motorcycle.

“Accompanied by his four children—Ana Cristina, Paulina, Vicente, and Rodrigo—Fox arrived at the airport of this tourist destination in a white Dauphin helicopter, license number XACCI, appearing to be property of the banker, who was a studying partner of the next president in the Ibero-American University campus at León, Guanajuato....

“The media was prevented from getting near anyone, including leaders, militants, and candidates of the Alliance for Change who accompanied Vicente Fox in these days.

“Although one story had circulated that president Ernesto Zedillo met with his successor, this was not confirmed.... The residence of Roberto Hernández in Punta Pájaros has served to host President Ernesto Zedillo and his family on diverse occasions when they have vacationed in this state.”

WATCH-ING YOUR BLOOD PRESSURE

By Charles Beaudry <dorji@olemac.net>

All of my life I have enjoyed having the blood pressure of an 18 year old, 120/60, which always surprised every doctor that I have been to since age 30.

And a pulse rate of right around 72. I hadn’t monitored my pressure for years and had never used one of the electronic machines.

A few months back, when I decided to stop smoking, I decided to keep an eye on it as it is supposed to come up a bit when you quit. So,

I took a before-quitting reading for comparison purposes. It was something like 180/85 and my heart rate was a whopping 94. I continued to monitor it and didn’t note any appreciable rise without the smoking. I was a little disturbed that it had crept up like this, and also concerned about the rapid heart rate.

You will never guess what was causing it: not my microwave oven, not my cell phone, but my wristwatch! I just happened to not be wearing it the other day, and sat down at the machine, and the numbers were 154/59 and heart rate 73!

I went over to visit my sister afterward and was talking to her and my nephew about it, and they and my sister’s girlfriend went over to Fred Meyer and sat down at the machine, alternating taking their readings with a watch on and with it off.

RADICAL difference in every case. Apparently—at least this is my theory—the quartz timing mechanism in the watch acts as a pacemaker, triggering your heart to beat faster, which raises your blood pressure as well.

Do you realize all the possible ramifications of this—the lawsuits—oh my God—and why hasn’t the medical profession picked up on this? Be sure and tell any of your friends and family who are concerned about their blood pressure/heart rate to check it without wearing their electronic watch! We probably shouldn’t be wearing a device that causes our hearts to race along like that. [End quoting]

This is certainly a discovery that you should check out and see for yourself if it is true or not for you. There are many possibilities for what was observed but it is certainly an interesting area to explore—and may herald the return of the wind-up watch!

THE HAIG-KISSINGER DEPOPULATION POLICY

By Lonnie Wolfe—Special Report EIR (Executive Intelligence Review)

(Note: This 20-year-old story is making the rounds on the net. With 6 billion people now on the planet, it would seem that, by any measure, such policy has not been effective. However, with the proliferation of WMD and the explosion of AIDS, HepC, and the resurgence of TB, including the untreatable variety—the prospects for future mass population reduction appear notable.)

WORLD DEPOPULATION IS TOP NSA AGENDA—CLUB OF ROME

Investigations by EIR have uncovered a planning apparatus operating outside the control of the White House whose sole purpose is to reduce the world’s population by 2 billion people through war, famine, disease, and any other means necessary. This apparatus, which includes various levels of the government, is determining U.S. foreign policy. In every political hotspot—El Salvador, the so-called arc of crisis in the Persian Gulf, Latin America, Southeast Asia, and in Africa—the goal of U.S. foreign policy is population reduction. The targeting agency for the operation is the National Security Council’s Ad Hoc Group on Population Policy. Its policy-planning group is in the U.S. State Department’s Office of Population Affairs, established in 1975 by Henry Kissinger. This group drafted the Carter administration’s Global 2000 document, which calls for global population reduction, and the same apparatus is conducting the civil war in El Salvador as a conscious depopulation project.

“There is a single theme behind all our work—we must reduce population levels” said Thomas Ferguson, the Latin American case officer for the State Department’s Office of Population Affairs (OPA). “Either they [governments] do it our way, through nice clean methods, or they will get the kind of mess that we have in El Salvador, or in Iran, or in Beirut.” Population is a political problem. Once population is out of control, it requires authoritarian government, even fascism, to reduce it. “The professionals” said Ferguson, “aren’t interested in lowering population for humanitarian reasons. That sounds nice. We look at resources and environmental constraints. We look at our strategic needs, and we say that this country must lower its population—or else we will have trouble. So steps are taken. El Salvador is an example where our failure to lower population by simple means has created the basis for a national security crisis. The government of El Salvador failed to use our programs to lower their population. Now they get a civil war because of it.... There will be dislocation and food shortages. They still have too many people there.”

Civil wars are somewhat drawn-out ways to reduce population, the OPA official added. “The quickest way to reduce population is through famine, like in Africa or through disease like the Black Death” all of which might occur in El Salvador. Ferguson’s OPA monitors populations in the Third World and maps strategies to reduce them. Its budget for FY 1980 was $190 million; for FY 1981, it will be $220 million. The Global 2000 report calls for doubling that figure.

THE SPHERE OF KISSINGER

In 1975, OPA was brought under a reorganized State Department Bureau of Oceans, International Environmental, and Scientific Affairs—a body created by Henry Kissinger. The agency was assigned to carry out the directives of the NSC Ad Hoc Group.

According to an NSC spokesman, Kissinger initiated both groups after discussion with leaders of the Club of Rome during the 1974 population conferences in Bucharest and Rome. The Club of Rome, controlled by Europe's "black" nobility, is the primary promotion agency for the genocidal reduction of world population levels. The Ad Hoc Group was given "high priority" by the Carter administration, through the intervention of National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski and Secretaries of State Cyrus Vance and Edmund Muskie.

According to OPA expert Ferguson, Kissinger initiated a full about-face on U.S. development policy toward the Third World. "For a long time," Ferguson stated, "people here were timid." They listened to arguments from Third World leaders that said that the best contraceptive was economic reform and development. So we pushed development programs, and we helped create a population time bomb. "We are letting people breed like flies without allowing for natural causes to keep population down. We raised the birth survival rates, extended life-spans by lowering death rates, and did nothing about lowering birth rates. That policy is finished. We are saying with Global 2000 and in real policy that you must lower population rates.

"Population reduction and control is now our primary policy objective—then you can have some development."

Accordingly, the Bureau of Oceans, International Environmental, and Scientific Affairs has consistently blocked industrialization policies in the Third World, denying developing nations access to nuclear energy technology—the policies that would enable countries to sustain a growing population. According to State Department sources, and Ferguson himself, Alexander Haig is a "firm believer" in population control. [End quoting]

And in conjunction with this item, see the hypothetical speech on population reduction elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.

REPUBLIC OF TEXAS PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT COMES TO SAN ANTONIO

If this is true, then we now have 49 states.—Charles Beaudry <dorji@olemac.net>

Posted by Vice President Daniel Miller:

"The Provisional Government will be holding a session of the General Council on July 22, in San Antonio, starting at 10:00 a.m.

"The meeting will be held at the historic Crockett Hotel, adjacent to the Alamo in downtown San Antonio.

"Dr. Patrice Chairoff, the European Emissary of the Republic of Texas Provisional Government, is scheduled to appear.

"Topics of business include Texas' recent formal application to the Unrecognized Nations and Peoples Organization, the addition of overseas consulates, a new transitional plan, and a major border initiative.

"The Republic of Texas has recently announced the opening of a General Consulate in Spain as well as a Consulate slated for Dublin, Ireland.

"They are also under consideration for membership in the Unrecognized Nations and People Organization.

Texas has been militarily occupied by the United States since 1865. The Republic of Texas was lawfully reestablished as a sovereign nation by a Citizens' convention called in December of 1995, which also created the Provisional Government and elected a General Council. The General Council has worked to achieve international recognition to promote the nation's international standing.

FDA WARNING COMES 40 YEARS TOO LATE ON MELLARIL

We are grateful to our e-group member, Martin Hirschfeld, and also to Vera Hassner Sharav, President, CIRCARE: Citizens for Responsible Care & Research, for forwarding this information to us.

AFTER 40 YEARS OF USE—the FDA has put new restrictions on the use of the antipsychotic, Mellaril. Obviously for many patients, this strong warning about life-threatening side-effects has come 40 years too late! How many patients would still be alive had the warning come when it should have—40 years ago? This should cause us to ask just how many more drugs are as damaging—or even more dangerous—that we have yet to be warned by the FDA of their dangers?

For those using SSRIs, note that an additional warning of contraindication is issued to those using Luvox or another drug often given in conjunction with SSRIs, propranolol. Considering the accumulation rate of SSRIs, including Luvox, the contraindication for Mellaril should include anyone who has been on Luvox in the recent past as well. And because psychosis is listed as a "frequent" side effect of Luvox, the prescribing of an antipsychotic such as Mellaril could be a fairly common practice threatening the lives of many. —Dr. Ann Blake Tracy

DID SPACE ALIENS HELP INDIANS BEAT CUSTER?

Even if Col. George Armstrong Custer had led 10,000 men against the Sioux in the 1876 battle at the Little Big Horn, they still would have been massacred—because the cavalymen were zapped dead in their saddles by aliens from outer space!

The spacemen—whom the Sioux looked upon as powerful gods who guided and controlled their destiny—also bathed each Indian in an invisible ray that made him invincible and unable to be killed.

Experts now believe it was those protective rays that left mysterious "scars" in the Earth at the battle site—scars that baffled scientists and historians for more than a decade.

"These scars can only be seen through special infrared scopes" explained archaeologist Dr. Angela Day Brewer. "I and many of my colleagues had always suspected they were caused by alien beings. Now we know for certain they were."

The scars and the incredible role played by alien beings in the famed battle known as Custer's Last Stand came to light when computers finally managed to decipher electronic data taken from the wreckage of a UFO that crashed near Roswell, NM, in 1947. It has long been believed that the mangled bodies of several humanoid creatures were removed from the UFO wreckage and taken to a secret site for study.

"The U.S. government doesn't want the public to know about the dead aliens," declared Walter Frobels, a CIA cryptographer who helped decipher the data. "There's good solid evidence that the dead aliens were the same beings that actually recorded the events at the Little Big Horn," Frobels explained.

"And, of course, if they recorded the events, they more than likely were the same aliens who helped the Sioux win the battle.

"The data reveals that the aliens made certain there were no White survivors," Frobels said. "Custer and all of his men had to die. None could survive." Frobels said the spacemen knew they couldn't allow a surviving soldier to tell how some Sioux warriors couldn't be killed even when shot at point-blank range.

"According to what we were able to decode, the aliens gave the Sioux an unbeatable advantage over Custer's 7th Cavalry—they started zapping the soldiers dead, one after the other, with laser beams.

"It was no contest."

The CIA agent said the beings, from a star system in a galaxy billions of light-years from our own, apparently had been overseeing and controlling the development of various North American Indians.

The inhabitants from that other world may even have been involved in the development of man ever since he appeared on Earth. "One passage we decoded clearly explains their reason for getting involved in the Little Big Horn massacre. The passage reads, 'We know the Indians' days on Planet Earth are numbered because there are so many White men and they are so greedy.

"But this is not the time, and today the Sioux must be the victors.

"But soon the Indian will fall. His doomsday will come at a place called Wounded Knee.

"And all that we have done since the beginning of their time will vanish like cosmic dust on the winds of space.'" [End quoting]

This is an intriguing story with just enough substance to have a ring of truth. It certainly isn't the first time our Elder Brothers—call them angels, space aliens, or whatever—have intervened on this planet, and certainly they have been working overtime lately to prevent us from blowing ourselves to bits in our playpen.

ASTRONAUT REVEALS NASA MIND-CONTROL PROGRAM INVOLVING CHILDREN

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 7/22/00, by Andrew D. Basiago <AndrewDBasiago@aol.com>.

LOS ANGELES—Astronaut Gordon

Cooper, one of the original seven Mercury astronauts, has confirmed the existence of a mind-control program administered by NASA in the 1950s and 1960s involving gifted American schoolchildren.

The astronaut's revelation was made during a July 19 interview by host Mike Siegel on the popular late-night radio program Coast To Coast.

During a discussion that primarily focused on Cooper's beliefs that extraterrestrial beings are visiting planet Earth and that some UFOs are alien spacecraft, Siegel asked Cooper: "Who were the space kids?"

Cooper answered that "the space kids were children with exceptional mental abilities run through a kind of MK-(Ultra) program, like the things that are coming out now."

He went on to describe how NASA's mind control program emphasized cultivation of the children's psychic abilities and that it involved telepathy, remote viewing, and out-of-body-experiences (OBEs).

Cooper's remarks generally support the claims of a growing cadre of Americans, now in their thirties, forties, and fifties, who are recovering memories of unusual classes that they were enrolled in as young children during the advent of the Space Age.

These "study groups" included speed reading lessons that enabled students to comprehend entire passages at a single glance, the use of learning machines to teach them vast amounts of information, card games and other situational exercises involving clairvoyance, and seminars in the guided imagination that forms the basis of remote viewing.

It is believed that NASA's mind-control program was directed at preparing children who would later be able to communicate with the non-human intelligent species that humanity might encounter in space.

This thesis is supported by the fact that one experiencer remembers being tutored in a hieroglyphic alphabet that author Fritz Springmeier has identified as a set of "intergalactic symbols" developed by NASA for the purpose of communicating with extraterrestrial civilizations.

The accounts of some individuals suggest that, in some cases, the children involved were given drugs to enhance memory and learning and were physically spun on table top-like devices to induce the altered state of consciousness associated with OBEs.

Cooper's book, Leap of Faith, will be released to the public in August. [End quoting]

This interview was astonishing in several ways, not the least of which was the way Cooper tossed-out gems like the above without much dancing around the subject. It was a difficult interview in other respects as Cooper sounded like he was either under mind-control himself and/or on his deathbed (or not very alive for this late-night interview). In any event, one has to wonder how much of this kind of "revelation" is cool-and-calculated to be made known at this time, at least as "damage control" because of the many people coming forward with memories surfacing of the kinds of shenanigans which Cooper talks about. UFO investigator and author Whitley Strieber came across this "secret school" phenomenon several years ago and has since published an intriguing book dealing with that matter. Assume that any revelation is meant to deflect deeper probing into even more outrageous shenanigans of this variety. If even half of the mind-control experiments are true that have been slowly surfacing over the past several decades, then The Truth would cause shock and outrage among the general population if known.

GENE-ALTERED FOOD CRUCIAL TO FIGHT HUNGER, EXPERT SAYS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 7/12/00: [quoting]

LONDON—To combat world hunger, rich nations must boost funding for research into genetically modified crops and poor farmers must be protected from corporate control of the technology, a group of science academies said Tuesday.

In an unprecedented report by seven independent academies from both the developed and developing world, experts agreed that genetic modification of crops is crucial to addressing the problem of the world's growing population and shrinking land for growing food.

Today "800 million people don't have access to enough food" said Brian Heap, vice president of Britain's Royal Society and chairman of the group that wrote the report.

"Increasing production without increasing land use will require substantial increases in yields per acre. This technology needs to be used in the future" he said.

Genetically modified, or transgenic, crops are created when scientists introduce a gene from one species into another. The technique be used to make crops more resistant to disease and pests, fortify them with extra vitamins or vaccines, and boost their tolerance to drought.

The academies' report, launched in London by the Royal Society, urged companies and research institutions to share their knowledge and called for a ban on broad patents covering GM technology. Corporations must have incentives to produce characteristics needed in the developing world, and small farmers in developing nations should enjoy special exemptions from licensing agreements, the report said.

Meanwhile, the public sector must create more genetically modified crops that benefit poor farmers in developing nations, such as corn, rice, wheat, yams, plantains, and sweet potatoes, it said. [End quoting]

Scientists who truly want to help should first do something to stop the likes of Monsanto before they put any more genetically modified crops out. Most of these so-called “experts” probably don’t even know that the elite already have the answers to save the poor and feed them. They should get their noses out of the lab long enough to know that the elite are purposely depopulating this world through starvation, wars, diseases, weather modification to destroy crops, etc.

Create the hunger problem through drought, disease, and weeds, and then tell us the ONLY way to remedy it is to use their genetically modified (programmed with all sorts of surprises) seeds to keep food supplies up. Moreover, what better way to coerce farmers reluctant to use genetically modified seeds than to make it imperative that they do so? They always use the same basic psychological manipulation scenario as was brilliantly displayed in the movie Wag The Dog.

FIELDING CRITICISM ON GM FOODS

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, Aug. 2000: [quoting]

The biotechnology revolution in agriculture is losing speed [“Genes: They’re What’s For Dinner,” April].

Farmers intend to plant fewer acres of genetically modified corn, soybeans, and cotton this year than they harvested in 1999, the U.S. department of Agriculture reports.

Farmers are shying away because of the high cost of engineered seeds, and also because of growing consumer resistance to genetically altered foods. However, consumers will have a hard time determining whether a particular food contains biotech ingredients. Federal regulators recently declined to require disclosure on food labels. —Doug McInnis [End quoting]

When are we going to WAKE UP and DEMAND labeling of genetically-modified foods? A recent CNN News report listed several major food manufacturers—among them H.J. Heinz Company and Gerber Baby Foods—who were refusing to buy such genetically modified food products. At least that is a start because such major purchasers CAN choose THEIR raw materials and will probably be more than happy to tell you so on their labels!

WORLD’S FIRST AIR-POWERED CAR

From NEW TIMES SURVEY, Australia, Feb. 2000: [quoting]

The world’s first vehicle to run on air is going into production in Mexico. To start with, 40,000 ZP (Zero Pollution) taxis and urban delivery vehicles will be produced by Dina, a government licensee and the aim is to replace all Mexico City’s 87,000 petrol and diesel taxis.

The Mexican authorities searched the world for a silent engine with no pollution before discovering Guy Negre’s engine laboratory in Brignoles in France. The inventor has taken three years to perfect his motor, which runs on a tankful of compressed air. In trials, the engine powered a Citroen chassis for 10 hours with a top speed of 60 miles per hour. And, as it drives along, its carbon filtering system can suck in polluted air and breathe out clean air. The Mexican version, designed by an Italian, looks like a small family car with a separate compartment for the driver and four seats in the back. Monsieur Negre, who worked on racing cars for 30 years said “Formula One cars have started using compressed air. In my car the compressed air is the fuel which drives the engine.”

When the whole system is in place, 300 litres of compressed air can be pumped into the tank under high pressure in three minutes and the car can also be refueled at home in four hours.

The electricity for the home air compressor would cost about $2—but the air, of course, is free!

Let’s hope this inventor doesn’t have any untimely “accidents” any time soon. The more of these kinds of vehicles on the road, the less likely the so-called “elite” will be able to stop progress and keep us locked in their antiquated stranglehold on the world’s energy production. It is only a small step from such a vehicle as this to one which operates on “free energy”—say to run the air compressor motor. The current solution is a compromise since one has to account for the amount of pollution and fossil fuel burning at the power plant to generate that $2 worth of electricity multiplied by the number of vehicles. But it is certainly a big step in a good direction.

THE TREND IN WORLDWIDE SEISMIC ACTIVITY IS INCREASING AT A FASTER PACE!

From the INTERNET, 7/00: [quoting]
<<http://members.aa.net/~mwm/phoenix/trilogy/briefs/Xwavechartrelease.ht>>

[I have rephrased and shortened this story.]

Worldwide seismic activity has increased by four times for earthquakes of magnitude 2.5 and over since 1973. This increase fulfills one of Edgar Cayce’s most important predictions.

The Trend In Worldwide Volcanism.

A study of volcanism shows a similarly large increase in total tectonic activity. Total volcanism is now at least four times greater than was true of the first half of the 20th Century. This increase is most likely the cause of all global warming. The sharp pulsations in volcanic activity is induced by the wobbling motion of the earth’s crust and directly causes El Nino weather phenomenon. [End quoting]

This is a good clue of what to expect in the near future. And there was a July 17 article in USA TODAY with the ominous headline “All Coasts Face Tidal Wave Risk” concerning the restless under-ocean activities going on (such as underwater landslides) that could generate strong tidal waves hitting any and all shorelines. The larger picture suggests looking over and replenishing your emergency supplies—especially if even the controlled media is letting you know about these activities!

MAGNETIC RIDE

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, Aug. 2000: [quoting]

When the road ahead takes a deep dip followed by a steep rise, your teeth clench involuntarily as you anticipate the crash of your bottomed-out suspension, followed by a short wingless flight.

Luckily for me, I’m testing a radical new suspension system developed by Delphi Automotive System. No only did I keep my fillings, but all four wheels stayed solidly on the pavement.

The magnetorheological fluid in the prototype MagneRide system has no moving parts. The system’s quick reflexes help it respond hundreds of times during a wheel’s up and-down motion over a bump.

A production version will not be on the market for several years. Regardless, it’s virtually eliminated body roll in corners.—D.M. [End quoting]

Sounds like an elegant solution to an annoying problem. And it could save some lives since many loss-of-control accidents are a result of one or the other or a combination of what this system smoothes out.

“KRYSTAL NACHT IN FIJI” & REPEAL OF THE GST

From THE STRATEGY, Australia, 6/00: [quoting]

News from Lake Woebegone, Australia

A racially divided nation is vulnerable to exploitation of racial prejudice by agents provocateurs. In Fiji, PM Mahendra Chaudry's abolition of the GST (consumption tax), strict regulation of banking, and price controls on critical consumer goods flew in the face of the IMF. An armed “coup”, and racial riots directed at Indian businesses followed.

Coup “leader”, George Speight has turned out to be no more than the front man.

Former Fijian PM Sitiveni Rebuka is reported to have said that George Speight is taking orders from “The Old Man”—meaning Ratu Tlisoni Ligairi. Ligairi, after having served in the British Special Air Services, “retired” to Fiji and was appointed by Rebuka to form the Counter Revolutionary Warfare Unit. With Fiji's Police Commissioner and the head of the Army overseas, it was child's play to assemble an unruly mob of Fijians to smash down the display windows of shops belonging to Indians, reminiscent of Germany's Kristall Nacht rampage against Jewish businesses, under Hitler.

As is to be expected, ASIS (Australian Secret Intelligence Service) is involved in this operation according to those familiar with counter terrorist operations. UK SIS, according to Robin Cook, UK Foreign Secretary, was operating in East Timor since 1997. ASIS was, according to reports, also involved in the destabilization of East Timor.

Alexander Downer's comment that PM Mahendra Chaudry would not necessarily be reinstated reinforces the view that “democracy” in Canberra is an empty slogan. As far as the Australian government is concerned, the people's choice, democratically elected, is of no consequence. He should be removed, lest he shows to Australians, by example, that the GST must be abolished.

The London and Wall Street masters have shown once more that politicals who aim to promote economic measures aimed at prosperity will be removed from office in the shortest possible time.

We must look to ourselves, we must be prepared to stand up and be counted. Universal condemnation is the only measure which will bring down dictator governments. We must not wait for the financial crash to wake the politically dead, for then it may be too late. We must activate our fellow citizens NOW! A tax which costs $2 to $3 to collect $1 is not a “tax”—it is insanity! It is also economic suicide. [End quoting]

It is said that travel broadens the perspective and sharpens the mind. Here we see the same formula being employed as is utilized all over the planet in order to maintain control over peoples. Why don't we here in the United States—who ought to have as much savvy as Fiji—wake up and kick out the same kind of leaders and tactics in our country?

HIGHER TEST SCORES JUST PROVE CHEATING

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 7/16/00: [quoting]

By Alan Bonsteel

On Monday the California Department of Education will release the results of the third annual Stanford 9/STAR series of tests of California public school students in second through 11th grade.

These tests tell us virtually nothing about how our children are doing in school, because cheating is rampant.

The department violated rule No. 1 of meaningful test giving: Make sure the test is secure and that test takers don't know the questions in advance. Every question on this year's Stanford 9 test has been repeated from the previous two years. Old copies of the test are easily available, having passed through the hands of about 250,000 teachers.

Some school districts have purchased versions of the Stanford 9 test used in other states—which are virtually identical to California's—and give them as practice tests, allowing the students to see the questions and discuss the correct answers with their teachers before the “real” test.

Further, the Stanford 9 is an off-the-shelf nationally “normed” test, and no one claims that it is in alignment with California's official curriculum.... [End quoting]

No matter how hard all of the conscientious parents try to improve the deteriorating school system, the school system always finds a way around not educating our children. Until we replace the incompetents, and quit expecting “the foxes to guard the henhouses”, we will still continue to get the same very low quality instruction. After all, it's “only” our children who are the losers in this selfish game. The sad thing is how long this has been going on. Maybe now we can better appreciate Mark Twain's dry comment of a century ago: “In the first place God made idiots. This was for practice. Then He made School Boards.”

VOUCHERS STRIKE BACK

THE CTA's (CALIFORNIA TEACHERS ASSOCIATION) REIGN OF TERROR IS FINALLY COMING TO AN END

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 7/10/00: [quoting]

When it comes to education, we Californians have tried it. We've tried new math and old math, phonics and whole-language reading, bilingual education and immersion.

We've tried replacing School Boards. We've tried firing and hiring Superintendents.

Through it all, we've kept spending more and more money.

And it hasn't worked.

Decades of trying make it clear: no amount of tinkering will fix our broken schools.

The real problem is that California education is controlled by a mammoth and inefficient monopoly. Until that monopoly buckles and parents have some control over their kids' education, public schools will continue to fail.

Enter Timothy Draper.

The Silicon Valley entrepreneur is sponsoring a statewide ballot initiative that would bring vouchers to California. Under Draper's plan, parents would get a check for $4,000 for each child—to be redeemed at any school, whether public, private, or parochial.

Coming to Draper's aid is the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled Thursday that the government can use taxpayer money to support private schools.

The education establishment is scared to death. It knows that if parents can afford to choose nonpublic schools for their children, they will, until and unless the public schools offer better quality.

The California Teachers Association managed to quash school choice in 1993, when it used compulsory deductions from teachers' salaries to outspend voucher proponents 10-to-1.

Draper has deep pockets. That won't happen again.

Now the only way the CTA can possibly hope to defuse the voucher movement is to start educating California's children.

That means accepting accountability and reform—allowing for performance-based pay and granting school districts the power to fire bad teachers.

Otherwise voters will choose vouchers, and parents will choose private schools.

One way or the other, the state of education will soon get better—at long last. [End quoting]

The reason I include this is that California may be able to set the example for your area, and so you should keep an eye on this. It's time we start winning this war against inferior education. It would also help if you would get the ball rolling where you are.

PROTECT YOUR PRIVACY

From UNKNOWN source, 7/00: [quoting]

It takes smarts and hard work today to keep personal information private. Here are some steps you can take to safeguard you identity:

- Remove your Social Security number from your checks.

- Don't carry your Social Security card with you. Keep birth certificates in a safe place.

- Ask why before giving out your Social Security number. Only your employer needs it, for tax purposes. All others, including banks, use it as a convenient identifier.

- Know the privacy policies at your work, your doctor's office, your bank and online shopping pages, or catalogs you order from. Your personal information should not be given out without your consent.

- Opt out of direct marketing associations that sell their membership lists.

- Shred pre-approved credit card applications before you discard them.

- Report any suspicions to the Social Security Administration or the Federal Trade Commission's Identity Theft Hotline (1-877-IDTHEFT).

- Use <junkbusters.com>, <the-cloak.com> or <idzap.com> to cover your Internet trail (<epic.org> has a complete list of privacy tools).

- Get your name removed from telemarketers' and junk-mail lists. — Krishna Chachra

YOUR TAX DOLLARS AT WORK!

From MIDDLE AMERICAN NEWS, June 2000: [quoting]

Such A Deal

Clinton's Department of Housing and Urban Development has sold a housing project, which cost taxpayers $17 million, to a nonprofit group for $10. That's ten dollars—not ten million dollars.

That's Why Stamps Cost so Much

U.S. Postal Service regulations do not allow payment of moving expenses for employees who relocate within 50 miles of their current duty station. Nevertheless, USPS did approve $105,817 to move one top employee 30 miles and $142,311 to move another just 10 miles—and both still reported to the same location as before the moves! The lucky pair also claimed $25,000 each in "miscellaneous allowances".

Stick It To Uncle Sam

The U.S. House of Representatives pays

$77 a ton to dispose of its trash in a landfill—nearly twice the $44 per ton average price for that service. [End quoting]

How much of these gross overpayments for services do you suspect has to be kicked back into some politician's pocket? Do you begin to see some of the methods of how the "bosses" get all of those millions of dollars for their election campaigns? This is just one of many, many scams to milk the taxpayers. How can we expect our nation to survive and even prosper when this kind of activity is just "business as usual" with no checks and balances—or conscience?!

WATER PURIFICATION USING CHLOROX BLEACH—NEW INFORMATION FROM RED CROSS

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 7/17/00: [quoting]

Information for anyone who responds to inquiries about water treatment after disasters:

The Red Cross National Headquarters has received inquiries from the public about the fact that the Chlorox Company is introducing a new product, "Chlorox Ultra", which increases the concentration of Sodium Hypochlorite from a level of 5-1/4% to 6%, and adds Sodium Hydroxide to the mix, which has not been in Chlorox before. I contacted the Chlorox Company for an explanation. Their explanation follows.

Yes, it is true that Chlorox is changing the concentration of its regular household laundry bleach from having a 5-1/4% concentration of Sodium Hypochlorite to 6%, and that they have added Sodium Hydroxide to the formula. They are doing this to reduce the size of the containers and in response to market research. They are introducing "Chlorox Ultra" slowly across the country, starting in the West and Midwest. It will be on the East Coast by Fall. They will completely eliminate offering the "old" Chlorox bleach upon introduction of the "new" Chlorox Ultra.

However, the Chlorox representative stated that the new formula has been tested and is safe to use to treat water at home. The only reason why it has not been approved by the EPA for use is simply that the company has not completed that process yet. (It takes a long, long time for all that paperwork.)

The recommendation to use for water treatment remains the same:

1. Filter out/remove any solid impurities.
2. Add 16 drops of the bleach per gallon of water and stir. This is the same recommendation for either the 5-1/4% or 6% concentration.
3. Let stand 30 minutes.
4. If it smells slightly of chlorine, you can use it.
5. If it does not smell of chlorine, add another 16 drops and wait another 30 minutes.

6. If it still does not smell of chlorine after two doses, discard it and find other water.

If you have further questions, or other individuals contact you with technical questions about Chlorox Bleach that you can't answer, let me know, and I can give you the name/number of the Chlorox representative to refer these people to.

Sincerely, Rocky Lopes, Community Disaster Education, American Red Cross National Headquarters [End quoting]

Even though there are better ways of purifying water (such as using 10-12 drops of 35% food-grade hydrogen peroxide per gallon), in an emergency Chlorox may be available when nothing else is, so please cut and place where it will be handy—just in case.

THE MAN WHO HAD NO FACE

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 7/6/00: [quoting]

Here is a true story by Paul Harvey. Pass it to anyone who you think would find it interesting and inspiring. You will be surprised who this young man turns out to be. (Do not look at the bottom of this letter until you have read it fully)

Years ago a hardworking man took his family from New York State to Australia to take advantage of a work opportunity there. Part of this man's family was a handsome young son who had aspirations of joining the circus as a trapeze artist or an actor. This young fellow, biding his time until a circus job or even one as a stagehand came along, worked at the local shipyards which bordered on the worst section of town.

Walking home from work one evening, this young man was attacked by five thugs who wanted to rob him. Instead of just giving up his money, the young fellow resisted. However, they bested him easily and proceeded to beat him to a pulp. They mashed his face with their boots, and kicked and beat his body brutally with clubs, leaving him for dead. When the police happened to find him lying on the road, they assumed he was dead and called for the morgue wagon.

On the way to the morgue a policeman heard him gasp for air, and they immediately took him to the emergency unit at the hospital. When he was placed on a gurney, a nurse remarked, to her horror, that this young man no longer had a face. Each eye socket was smashed, his skull, legs, and arms fractured, his nose literally hanging from his face, all his teeth were gone, and his jaw was almost completely torn from his skull.

Although his life was spared, he spent over a year in the hospital. When he finally left, his body may have healed, but his face was disgusting to look at. He was no longer the handsome youth who everyone admired.

When the young man started to look for work again, he was turned down by everyone just on account of the way he looked. One potential employer suggested to him that he join the freak show at the circus as The Man Who Had No Face. And he did this for awhile. He was still rejected by everyone and no one wanted to be seen in his company. He had thoughts of suicide.

This went on for five years.

One day he passed a church and sought some solace there. Entering the church he encountered a priest who had seen him sobbing while kneeling in a pew. The priest took pity on him and took him to the rectory, where they talked at length. The priest was impressed with him to such a degree that he said that he would do everything possible for him that could be done to restore his dignity and life, if the young man would promise to be the best Catholic he could be, and trust in God's mercy to free him from his torturous life.

The young man went to Mass and Communion every day, and after thanking God for saving his life, asked God to only give him peace of mind and the grace to be the best man he could ever be in His eyes.

The priest, through his personal contacts, was able to secure the services of the best plastic surgeon in Australia. There would be no cost to the young man, as the doctor was the priest's best friend. The doctor too was so impressed by the young man, whose outlook now on life, even though he had experienced the worst, was filled with good humor and love.

The surgery was a miraculous success. All the best dental work was also done for him. The young man became everything he promised God he would be. He was also blessed with a wonderful, beautiful wife, many children, and success in an industry which would have been the furthest thing from his mind as a career, if not for the goodness of God and the love of the people who cared for him. This he acknowledges publicly.

The young man?

Mel Gibson.

His life was the inspiration for his production of the movie The Man Without A Face. He is to be admired as a Godly man, a political conservative, and an example to all as a true man of courage.

JAMA'S ARK

From GUIDEPOSTS, September 1999, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

I watched 10-year-old Sarah sitting by herself under an oak tree, far from the other kids playing kickball in the Georgia sun. Staring at the ground, she picked at a tuft of grass. Since she'd arrived at our foster home a week earlier, she hadn't said a word to me or my husband, Charlie, or to the other kids. Nor had she wanted to play with any of the displaced animals on our farm, Noah's Ark Rehabilitation Center.

"She's been abused from a young age, the social worker had warned us. No one's been able to help her." "I'll be able to" I thought. But whenever I went to hug Sarah, she stood as stiff as a pole, arms clamped to her sides. Never in eight years of caring for foster kids had I met a child who couldn't hug back. Now I wondered if, once again, I'd taken on too much.

Ever since I was a little girl I'd been rushing to catch up with my dreams. My dad was an itinerant preacher, so my family was always on the road. One morning I found a scraggly stray puppy outside the motel we'd stayed in. I smuggled him into the backseat of our beat-up station wagon, but the puppy yelped and gave us away. "Now, Jama" Dad said gently, "you know we can't have pets with us on the road."

"When I grow up, I'm going to have lots of animals, just like Noah did on his ark" I declared. "I'm going to have run-down horses and three-legged goats and runty pigs and toothless tigers. I'll take in all the stray, hurt animals nobody else wants." That was the first dream.

The second came on a trip to Mexico, when we were giving money we'd collected to an orphanage. My stomach tightened when I saw the kids slept on metal beds without sheets. I told my parents I was going to build a home for kids without families. "And we'll have bedspreads on the bunk beds and books and toys all over the place" I said breathlessly.

"Honey, calm down" Mama said. "In time. Pray about it and wait."

I could pray, but how could I wait? Those children needed help, and I needed to help them.

With every stray animal or lonely kid we had to leave behind, I told my parents all about my dreams again. By the time I was a teenager, I was good and tired of the word wait.

One night Dad was leading a revival in Crossville, Tennessee. I noticed a handsome fellow with dark curly hair at the service. I could not take my eyes off him! I asked a gal who he was. "That's Charlie Hedgecoth."

My pulse started to race. I felt certain God had put Charlie in my path. "I'm going to marry him" I decided. And two months later that's exactly what I did, despite my parents' urgings, as always, to wait. Eventually, my family had to move on. Charlie and I stayed put. As I watched a dust cloud kick up behind the old station wagon, I wiped away my tears and squared my shoulders.

Now I was on my own. It was time to make all my dreams come true. Eager to get started, I headed to the grocery store. That evening I showed Charlie what I'd bought.

"We've got some crackers and chips and look—cupcakes" I said, setting the goodies on the counter.

Charlie peered into the empty bags. "But, Jama, did you get any real food, like chicken or potatoes?"

"Why would I get that?" I asked. "We can go out to eat that sort of stuff."

Charlie stared at me. I had grown up in motels. I barely understood how eggs got from their shells into omelettes. All at once I felt overwhelmed: "Lord, I know I'll have to work hard. But you put these dreams in my heart. Help me follow them."

Charlie and I moved to Indiana, then to Georgia, where we rented a small farm. We had three sons and two daughters, and I'd soon gathered more than 200 unwanted and disabled animals—everything from monkeys to raccoons to cows. A local couple even donated the money to build an eagle-care facility. It was a never-ending battle to keep the house clean. Cages filled with rabbits and possums crowded the living room. Charlie worked hard for a trucking company. When he got home, he plowed and planted. After school, I took the kids with me on a film delivery route. But even working as hard as we did, we were way beyond broke.

Time and again our electricity was cut off. I resorted to rifling through dumpsters behind grocery stores to find food for the animals. Some sympathetic store managers set aside a few things. Then one day I found a teenager sleeping by a dumpster. We barely had enough for our own kids, but this boy had nothing. "Yes, help him" a voice inside me urged. I took him home, and a procession of displaced kids soon followed.

There was always another mouth to feed. One spring morning I was too tired to get out of bed. The children and Charlie were playing catch outside with an old football we'd found at a yard sale. Suddenly I wondered: "What's wrong with me, God? I wanted to make a cozy home with toys for orphaned children, but I don't have enough money to take care of my own family, not to mention the animals." The trash was filled with empty cans of dog food, the hamper crammed with unwashed clothes. Hadn't there been a time when a toothless poodle wouldn't let Charlie get into bed? "More room" I thought, "that's what we need."

I pulled myself up and went outside to my family. "Pack up, because we're moving to a bigger place where Noah's Ark can grow." We piled into our van and just started driving, looking for a farm. After six months Charlie finally said, "Jama, I'm really worried. This is crazy even for you. We're using nickels and dimes to put gas in the car. How much longer can we do this?"

"Charlie" I said, "we have to keep looking. God will help us and show us the right place."

Finally, one day as we were driving through Locust Grove, Georgia, we passed a For Sale sign nailed to a tree. "Stop, Charlie!" I yelled.

He slammed on the brakes.

"What's wrong?"

"This is our farm!" I jumped out of the car and ran through the tall grass to a knoll where a small two-bedroom house with a porch stood in a pecan grove. I sank to my knees. "Thank you, Lord. This is it!"

I had no earthly idea how we were going to pay the $497,000 asking price, but I borrowed the $12,000 deposit from my father's friend and we signed a contract promising to pay the total amount the following June of 1991. Meanwhile we'd pay rent. Deep down I knew I was being impractical, but I couldn't help myself. I had to keep my dreams alive.

May 1991 came, and not only did we not have the $485,000, but we were $6000 behind on our rent. I called an attorney to ask about our options. "Jama, you've got thirty days to vacate" he told me. "There's really nothing else we can do. I'm sorry I can't help you more."

After I hung up, I started bawling. "God, I'm in a mess again" I said. "I have more than three hundred animals, and all of these children, with no place to go." Again, my dreams were getting away from me.

Then God seemed to answer: "It's in My hands."

"All right" I said, "but you haven't got much time." I looked at the calendar on the wall. Where would we be in the next couple of days? How would I tell my family we would have to move again?

The phone rang. It was the attorney. "My client who donated the eagle facility to you last year just called. I happened to mention your plight to him. You're not going to believe this, but he and his wife would like to pay off your property!"

I nearly dropped the phone.

Soon after the property was purchased, our benefactor came by to visit. His wife's eyebrows rose when she saw a colt in a sleeping bag on our bedroom floor. She pulled me aside. "Jama, you and your family deserve a bigger place. Find an architect and build a house with ten bedrooms and ten bathrooms."

I wrapped my arms around her, speechless. Finally, my kids and animals would have a place to call their own.

We converted our original two-bedroom home into a wildlife rehabilitation center and moved into our spacious new quarters—enough to house up to 12 foster kids at a time. At last all of the pieces were in place. Our farm had more animals than a zoo, the foster home more books and toys than we could count.

Yet here I was, watching 10-year-old Sarah, unreachable despite all my efforts. I was so used to seeing results just so long as I kept plugging away. Now I felt as helpless as I had as a little girl who couldn't keep a stray puppy.

The night Sarah came to us, she barely ate a bite of her dinner. I asked her, over and over: "Honey, what can I do for you?" Sarah just gave me a blank stare. A couple of nights later Charlie and I passed by her room and heard sobbing. I knocked and went in. Sarah hushed, but I could see her body trembling.

Back in the hallway I'd whispered to Charlie: "How do we reach Sarah?"

"We can give her food and clothes and love, but we can't force her to respond to us. Maybe we just need to wait, Jama."

There was that word again. "She's hurting now" I insisted. "We've got to do something right away!"

That afternoon as I watched Sarah pick listlessly at that tuft of grass, I was about to ask for the thousandth time, "Honey, why are you hurting?" when I spied one of our fawns. It wobbled close to Sarah, who looked up for a second, then dropped her head. I drew in my breath as the faw as I'd hoped and planned. Yet sometimes the most important thing to do is wait. After all, the least I can do is be as patient with God as He is with me.

On Illegality Of Income Tax

7/7/00 ROBERT SCHULZ

(acta@capital.net)

The following is the text of a full-page ad in today's USA TODAY. If you have any questions, call me at (518) 656-3578. My name is Bob Schulz. I'm the chairman of the Foundation that ran the ad.

Dear We The People:

- MOST CITIZENS ARE NOT REQUIRED TO FILE AN INCOME TAX RETURN.
- THE 16TH ("INCOME TAX") AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION IS A FRAUD.
- IF YOU FILE, YOU WAIVE YOUR 5TH AMENDMENT RIGHTS.

These are the major points expressed in a Remonstrance that was hand-delivered to leaders of the three branches of the federal government on April 13, 2000, by a group of citizen-delegates representing all 50 states. These grievances concern alleged illegal operations of the federal income tax system and the IRS.

The Remonstrance was signed by thousands of citizens, and was delivered as part of an event sponsored by We The People Foundation for Constitutional Education, a not-for-profit corporation dedicated to research and education in matters of taxation & governance.

The main propositions of the Remonstrance are:

(1) The 16th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (the "income tax" amendment) was fraudulently and illegally proclaimed to be ratified in 1913. Exhaustive legal research from both state and national archives documented conclusively that the amendment did not even come close to being legally approved by the required number of states. The Courts have refused to hear this issue.

"[Defendant] Stahl's claim that ratification of the 16th Amendment was fraudulently certified constitutes a political question because we could not undertake independent resolution of this issue without expressing lack of respect due coordinate branches of government."

[U.S. v Stahl (1986), 792 F2d 1438]

(2) Filing a federal income tax return is, in fact, voluntary, because there is no statute or regulation that requires the vast majority of U.S. citizens to file and pay income taxes—or to have taxes withheld from the money they earn. Neither the IRS nor the Congress can cite an authorizing law or regulation.

(3) Citizens cannot "voluntarily" file a federal income tax return without surrendering their 5th Amendment right not to bear witness against themselves. You can be criminally prosecuted for your "voluntary" return.

Robert Schulz, chairman of the Foundation, and Joseph Banister, a former special agent of the Criminal Investigation Division of the IRS (accompanied by a videographer) delivered copies of the Remonstrance to designated officials of the three branches.

At the White House and the Capitol, the delegates had the opportunity to explain and discuss the contents of the Remonstrance, and to ask that the government send experts representing the three branches to a conference to be held in June, where those experts could debate the tax issues with a group of researchers invited by the Foundation.

The officials agreed to the idea of having such a conference, and the Foundation scheduled the meeting for June 29.

The officials to whom the delegates delivered the Remonstrance were:

At the White House: Jason Furman, Senior Director and Senior Economic Advisor of the National Economic Council; at the Capitol: Dr. William Koetzle, Legislative Director for Speaker Hastert, and Keith Hennessey, Policy Director for Senate Majority Leader Lotte.

However, on June 2 the White House reneged on the promises it made during the April 13 meeting. As with three previous conferences, the government has again refused to debate the grievances. Jason Furman told Robert Schulz: "The legality of the income tax is not a high priority item at the White House, and we will not participate in any conference on the subject."

WE HAVE NOW REACHED THE POINT WHERE THE GOVERNMENT'S EVASION MUST BE REGARDED AS AN ADMISSION.

If the government had valid counter-arguments to the Remonstrance, it should be a simple matter to clarify the law, provide the appropriate regulatory references, and promptly settle the matter. Our government's repeated avoidance of these debates should speak volumes.

On this, the 224th birth celebration of our one Nation under God, the We The People Foundation offers the following facts, Internet links, and a challenge for each American: Read the facts for yourself. Judge what is truth. Pass it on.

We hope you will join many who now believe that the time has come for our government and our nation to begin a long-overdue process of public debates concerning the economic, political, and constitutional problems posed by the true legal restrictions upon our current system of taxation.

As a nation of justice and due process, we cannot tolerate a tax system, or a government, that seizes our property, sends us to prison, and induces fear in our hearts—while refusing to provide us basic proof of their legal authority, clearly written tax codes, and unambiguous legal rulings on Constitutional and legal issues concerning the income tax.

We pray that you be convinced that nothing less than our freedoms, our property, and our Republic are at stake. The Soul of America needs illumination. Please join us.

Legal Facts & Did You Know Proposition #1

The issue of the fraudulent ratification of the 16th Amendment has never been decided by a court of law. The courts have instead tossed the issue into the lap of Congress as a "political question", even though fraud is a clear issue for judicial review, not a political question.

A brief report printed by the Congressional Research Service in 1985 states up front that: "The report does not attempt to rebut specific factual allegations." It then goes on to make the astonishing assertion that the actions of a government official must be presumed to be correct and cannot be judged or overturned by the courts! [John Ripy, "Ratification of the Sixteenth Amendment", CRS, 1985.]

An attorney speaking for Senator Orin Hatch in 1984 offered to pay former tax investigator William Benson a fortune not to publish his research proving that the 16th Amendment did not even come close to being legally ratified by the required number of states in 1913.

Philander Knox, Secretary of State from 1909 to 1913 during the Taft administration, proclaimed the 16th Amendment to be ratified just a few days before he left office in 1913, to make way for the Wilson administration, even though he knew it had not been legally ratified.

Philander Knox had for many years been the primary attorney for the richest men in America, including Carnegie, Rockefeller, Morgan, and the Vanderbilts. He had created for them the largest cartel in the world, then was appointed, at their request, as Attorney General in the McKinley/Roosevelt administrations, where he refused to enforce the Sherman anti-trust laws against the cartel he had just created.

The income tax amendment was pushed through Congress in 1909 by Sen. Nelson Aldrich, father-in-law of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. and grandfather and namesake of Nelson A. Rockefeller, and would not have been ratified if Knox had not fraudulently proclaimed it so.

Example: Kentucky's legislature rejected the amendment, but Knox counted Kentucky as having approved it.

Example: Oklahoma's legislature changed the amendment's wording so that it meant just the opposite of what was submitted to the states by Congress, but Knox counted Oklahoma as approving the amendment.

Example: Minnesota did not submit any results or copy of their vote to Knox, yet he counted Minnesota as approving the amendment.

Legal scholars have agreed that if any state violated provisions of its own state constitution in the ratification process, its approval would be null and void. At least 20 states were guilty of serious violations of their constitutions.

For example, Tennessee's constitution provided that the state legislature could not act upon any proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution submitted by Congress until after the next state legislative elections. Yet the Tennessee legislature acted on the proposed 16th Amendment the same month it was received and before any elections.

Judges have been extraordinarily unwilling to allow defendants in "failure to file" cases to present evidence or testimony of expert researchers regarding the constitutionality of the 16th Amendment.

Proposition #2

Juries have been acquitting defendants in failure-to-file income tax return cases due to lack of demonstrable evidence that there is any law or regulation that requires it.

An increasing number of employers have stopped withholding taxes from their workers, and stopped filing W-2s and 1099s for the same reason.

Unless one is a foreigner working in the U.S., or a U.S. citizen earning money abroad, one is not liable for the federal income tax.

The OMB Number on Form 1040 is cross-referenced in the Code of Federal Regulations to the section covering taxes by resident aliens, which, therefore, doesn't apply to most Americans.

Responding to an inquiry by a constituent who was a tax consultant, Sen. Daniel Inouye told him that based on research performed by the Congressional Research Service, no provision of the Internal Revenue Code requires an individual to pay income taxes. He then went on to warn that Section 7201 sets forth numerous penalties for not paying income taxes owed.

However:

The failure-to-file law applies to alcohol-tobacco-firearms taxes (Section 7201), not to income taxes, and convictions are based on the mis-application of the alcohol-tobacco-firearm regulations.

No law requires employees to provide a Social Security Number to an employer, nor for an employer to demand one from an employee.

Proposition #3

The 10th Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled that the filing of an income tax return (Form 1040) and the information on the 1040 is not compelled, and, therefore, the principle that no one may be forced to waive their 5th Amendment rights in order to comply with a law is not applicable to federal income tax returns.

"The [5th Amendment] privilege protects against compelled testimonial communications." U.S. v Conklin (1994), WL 504211 (10th Cir. Colo.)

No one has been able to collect the $50,000 reward offered by William Conklin (www.anti-irs.com) to anyone who can:

(1) show how to file a federal income tax return without waiving one's 5th Amendment rights, and

(2) identify what statute in the Internal Revenue Code makes a typical worker liable to pay an income tax.

FDA Boosts PMS Insanity With Prozac In Disguise

Editor's note: For those of you who were properly stunned by our Front Page feature last month about Prozac and related drugs, the following information is an update by the courageous interviewee of that story. Dr. Ann Blake Tracy's book: PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA? is available from Wisdom Books & Press $19.95 + S&H; call toll-free 877-280-2866, outside US 661-823-9695, or see catalog insert with this issue of The SPECTRUM.

7/7/00 DR. ANN BLAKE TRACY

Sarafem. What a nice-sounding name for such a deadly drug.

How many patients will know that they are really getting Prozac with a different name?

Why is a name change necessary? If it said Prozac on the label, would the patient take it?

We will not know with the FDA allowing Lilly to change Prozac's name when being prescribed for this disorder. Giving these SSRIs different brand names does nothing to change the dangers of these drugs, but much to confuse the patient about the dangers and just what drug they are really getting. Talk about "failure to warn"!

For some time now, doctors have given SSRI antidepressants for PMS. They have encouraged patients to take the drugs in the most dangerous manner I am aware of—taking them for a week or so and dropping "cold turkey", then doing the same the following month! Well, if we thought we saw rage before with PMS, just wait! Now we can see SSRI withdrawal rage every month rather than the PMS. At least we will see a change in the time it occurs and the intensity, right? And now we can, with the FDA's approval, cure PMDD with drug-induced psychosis, suicide, or murder/suicide. What a novel idea!

Sorry about the sarcasm. I guess I have seen too many people die or have their lives destroyed as a result of using serotonergic drugs. Just how much longer can these terrible heart-rending tragedies be the "acceptable" risk in another's feeling better due to a drug-induced haze for things like PMS or shyness?

Please, someone, tell me where the "acceptable" risk is in using these powerful and very dangerous drugs for such minor health problems when there are so many simple and harmless natural solutions like Omega 3 oils? It couldn't be because those harmless solutions don't make anywhere near the $30-$40 million per day that these drugs bring in, could it? It is clear whose interest the FDA has in mind with this approval.

FDA APPROVES FLUOXETINE TO TREAT PREMENSTRUAL DYSPHORIC DISORDER

FDA has approved fluoxetine (Sarafem) as the first drug treatment for Premenstrual Dysphoric Disorder (PMDD), a disorder that causes mood changes and physical symptoms such as bloating and breast tenderness in women. Fluoxetine was approved as Prozac in December 1987 for treating depression, and has also been approved for treating obsessive compulsive disorder and bulimia.

On November 3, 1999, the FDA's Psychopharmacologic Advisory Committee unanimously recommended approval for fluoxetine to treat women with PMDD. The committee concluded that fluoxetine was effective for the condition and that PMDD has well-defined, accepted diagnostic criteria. The committee also advised that the drug should be used only to treat women whose symptoms are severe enough to interfere with functioning at work or school, or with social activities and relationships.

According to the American Psychiatric Association Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM-IV), a diagnosis of PMDD requires that patients experience at least five of the symptoms that characterize PMDD. PMDD has both affective (mood) and physical symptoms, and is characterized by depressed mood, anxiety, tension, affective lability (a tendency to alternate between cheerful and somber moods), and persistent anger or irritability. Other features include decreased interest in activities, difficulty concentrating, lack of energy, change in appetite, headache, joint and muscle pain.

The mood symptoms often cause disturbances in social relationships. Physical symptoms include weight gain, bloating, and breast tenderness. To support a diagnosis of PMDD, the symptoms must occur regularly in the luteal phase of a woman's cycle, and disappear after onset of menstruation. (The luteal phase corresponds to the period between ovulation and onset of menstruation.)

Fluoxetine's effectiveness for the treatment of PMDD was established in two double-blind placebo-controlled trials. In the first study, 320 patients were given fluoxetine continuously throughout the menstrual cycle. This study showed that the drug was significantly more effective than placebo by measurements of changes in mood and physical symptoms of PMDD. In a second study, 19 patients were treated with fluoxetine and placebo continuously throughout the menstrual cycle for a period of three months each. In this study, fluoxetine was significantly more effective than placebo on a scale measuring changes in mood, physical and social impairment symptoms.

Sarafem will be marketed by Eli Lilly, of Indianapolis, Ind., with a patient information brochure and physician labeling specific for the drug's use. The drug was not studied in women who were taking oral contraceptives. Common side effects were similar to those experienced by other fluoxetine users and included nausea, tiredness, nervousness, dizziness, and difficulty concentrating.

Ramtha's School Of "Enlightenment"?

spiritual curriculum in the world."

Before we take a much closer look at JZ Knight and Ramtha's School of Enlightenment, let's first ask the question:

WHO IS RAMTHA?

Turning to the Ramtha Bible, simply referred to as The White Book, published in 1986, we read:

"I am Ramtha, 'the Ram'. In the ancient language of my times it means 'the god'. I am the great Ram of the Hindu people, for I was the first man born of the womb of woman and the loins of man who ever ascended from this plane. I learned how to ascend, not through the teachings of any man, but through an innate understanding of the God that lives in everything. [Emphasis added.] I was also a man who hated and despised, who slew and conquered and ruled—right into my enlightenment.

"I was the first conqueror this plane knew. I began a march that lasted sixty-three years, and I conquered three-quarters of the known world. But my greatest conquest was of myself—coming to terms with my own existence. When I learned to love myself and embrace the whole of life, I ascended with the wind into forever.

"I ascended in front of my people on the northeast side of the mount called Indus. My people, who numbered more than two million, were a mixture of Lemurians, the people from Ionia (later to be termed Macedonia), and the tribes-people escaping from Atlatia, the land you call Atlantis. It is my people's lineage that now makes up the populace of India, Tibet, Nepal, and southern Mongolia.

"I lived but one lifetime upon this plane, what is called in your understanding of time, 35,000 years ago. I was born in ignorance and desperation to an unfortunate people, pilgrims from the land called Lemuria living in the slums of Onai, the greatest port city of Atlatia in its southern sphere. I came to Atlatia during what is called 'the last hundred years', before the continent broke up and great waters covered its land."

ANSWERING THE CRITICS

To provide an understanding of intent and motive here at the beginning of this story, as I'm sure many Ramtha followers will immediately dismiss this article out-of-hand, let me share some background information that may help in strengthening the overall picture being presented here.

After an intensive investigative effort on this story, as with similar exposés, I have elected to utilize portions from various other sources on this subject. For the record, I do not have a Ramtha axe to grind, nor am I a former employee.

My only intent with this story is to put forth some observations based upon many hours of research on this subject. This is a story about people giving their power away into the hands of a guru. Many in the Ramtha School would take exception to such a statement. They would probably say something like: "No, no. The Ramtha School of Enlightenment is about personal empowerment."

But is it really?

Behaviorally, particularly when substances such as tobacco and alcohol are involved, people can be harmed. And when you throw into that mix powerful techniques (which will be covered later in this article) such as those utilized by the Ramtha School, mind manipulation can and does occur.

It always becomes a question of whether, under the First Amendment, such activities may operate with impunity, which they have thus far, or whether we should be more attentive to possible consequences of such activities under the auspices of a "school".

Concerning the incredible amount of sources and information utilized to assemble this particular story (which I normally wouldn't take the time or space to even mention), due to the numbers of people involved with this subject, I will take a moment to list some of the sources of information:

- I have spoken with current students of Ramtha's school;
- I have spoken with local "in the know" residents of Yelm, Washington where the Ramtha School is located;
- I have read the Ramtha White Book;
- and Voyage To The New World (the second Ramtha book);
- heard (or) viewed over a hundred hours of Ramtha videotapes and audiotapes (from the mid-80s);
- viewed the recent Ramtha School of Enlightenment videotape titled Ramtha's School: A Look Within;
- viewed the most recent 3-videotape set titled The Two Paths (October 1999);
- read the Ramtha School website;
- read numerous articles from the Internet;
- interviewed cult expert Joe Szimhart;
- read the works of world-class hypnosis experts Gil Boyne and Ormond McGill;
- read the works of mind control experts Walter Bowart, Mark Phillips and Cathy O'Brien, Richard Bandler and John Grinder, Milton Erickson, M.D.;
- read the works of psychotherapist Stanislov Grof, M.D.

After reviewing all of this material, what you are about to read is representative of some key points—from a news and informational perspective—that I believe should be viewed and carefully considered concerning the present state of affairs at The Ramtha School of "Enlightenment". (And yes, I do mean that with quote marks around the word.)

It has been a source of much questioning and controversy, ecstasy and agony. What do you think? Read on and let's explore the intriguing pieces of a patchwork quilt—from the glaring facts to the subtle innuendoes which seem to paint a much different picture from the public-relations image so carefully cultivated for the infamous Ramtha School.

RAMTHA'S SCHOOL OF ENLIGHTENMENT

At Ramtha's School of Enlightenment in Yelm, Washington, students pay a minimum of $1,350 per year to encounter Ramtha, who, according to Joan Connell: "learn a blend of yoga, quantum physics, and mental exercises they claim enhance spiritual awareness and psychic abilities; achieve spontaneous healings of everything from corns to cancer; and impart the power to 'manifest' or transform thought into reality."

Robert Carroll, from a website titled The Skeptic's Dictionary, has this to say about

Ramtha's School:

"Unsurprisingly, there has been some opposition to Ramtha's little cult of about 3,000 followers. They're just trying to find the God within, though I wonder if they realize that you don't get past the door without the price of admission.

"One would think that it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that the likelihood "One would think that it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that the likelihood of a 35,000-year-old Cro-Magnon ghost suddenly appearing in a Tacoma kitchen to a homemaker to reveal profundities about centers and voids, self-love and guilt-free living, or love and peace, is close to zero. Yet, the will to believe is so strong in many people that even such an obvious absurdity seems reasonable.

of a 35,000-year-old Cro-Magnon ghost suddenly appearing in a Tacoma kitchen to a homemaker to reveal profundities about centers and voids, self-love and guilt-free living, or love and peace, is close to zero. Yet, the will to believe is so strong in many people that even such an obvious absurdity seems reasonable.

"Plus, for many followers, believing in Ramtha 'works'. As one follower put it, 'I watched great changes come over people around me—people who lacked hope came alive again.' The fact is that many people's lives are so void of meaning and significance that even the ridiculous—if it offers meaning and direction—appears reasonable, if not profound. Their lives are made better, at least for a while, by their newfound beliefs.

"One might say, then, that it would be good to leave the Ramthas of the world alone. After all, they're helping people, even if they are frauds. As long as they're not hurting anyone, let them be. Even if they are hurting people, the victims are adults who freely choose to be exploited and abused. Don't we have the right to be victims if we so choose?

"Sometimes. But sometimes those adults bring their children. Sometimes those adults are not as free as the rest of us. Sometimes a Ramtha takes more than your money. No one should ever forget the reverend Jim Jones and the mass suicide in 1978 of more than 900 cultists in Jonestown, Guyana. Not that Ms. Knight is a threat to her followers' lives, only to their dignity."

With that said, the subject of mind control begs at least some kind of an introductory mention as we outlay the pieces of this puzzle.

MIND CONTROL

In the classic book titled Operation Mind

Control, Walter H. Bowart, an expert on the subject, writes:

"The largest of these Mind Control programs under the auspices of the CIA, ONI and National Security Agency are as follows: M.K.Ultra, M.K.Draco, Hatter, Reach, Bluebird, Artichoke, M.K.Zeno, Dancer, and Watchtower. One source reports that M.K.Draco is the code name for one of the 'alien abduction' scenarios.

"Jonestown is not unique as a controlled environment which was created under the need for discretion in carrying out the covert operations of the ULTRA program. The fact that the community moved to a foreign country from the U.S. was even more of an incentive for the intelligence groups concerned. The interest in cults spawned many additional programs with other cults and certain religious sects.

"The document [the author was quoting in a preceding paragraph] then goes on to name several so-called cults and even cites Christian Evangelical and Far-Right "Born-Again" groups as being the pawns of the cryptocracy. Instead of risking offense to everyone, let's just say that the cryptocrats know that if a person holds strong and intractable beliefs, those beliefs can be used to manipulate them."

Of course this is just the tip of that iceberg, as far as the subject of mind control goes. We will be returning to other aspects of it as we progress with this material. For now, let's return to Ramtha.

WINDWARDS NEWSLETTER

Back in 1988, there was a Ramtha-related newsletter called WINDWARDS. This particular newsletter is no longer in print. In the Vol. 3, No. 2 edition of WINDWARDS, dated August, 1988, there appears a story written by Judi Drummond based on notes taken by Beverly Dittrich at a one-day Ramtha event in Yelm on Sunday, July 24, 1988.

[Quoting:]

To begin with, there are interstellar entities coming from the seven sisters (the Pleiadian system) and a greater force from Andromeda. And then there is a group that lives here, stationed in the interior of the Earth, which your government is aware of.

One group in particular we will talk about—the ones from Andromeda. They are Ramtha's people and they are very beautiful. They are very thin, lithely built, and very tall—eight and ten feet in height. They look like giants. In mythology, they are called the winged gods.

They do not live on foodstuffs. Their biological system is made up of magnetism; they live off of prana. They have very large heads and are exquisitely beautiful. Their appearances in the past were known as angels—Gabriel, Michael. These are the entities who are working with Ramtha. They are white light. Their craft is illuminated greater than 10,000 suns. They can reach you in thought in a moment. They're able to look down through vibrations and watch you. No matter where they are, they watch you.

They reseeded this planet when it was poisoned once from atomic levels. They also reseeded it when it collapsed in consciousness due to decadence. They are the ones who reseeded to bring about the current race—you. So your genes possess the seeds of Gabriel, Michael, and Ramtha.

[Still quoting, further in the article:]

This great ship is called "Miriah Ah Moon"; it means "the silver life". Some of you are going to see it. The ship is here partly because of the disease on this planet, because of the collapse of consciousness, because of the changes that are going to occur, and also because of another force that is here on this planet. It was the great ship that appeared at Fatima. It was the vision that gave truth about the wars that would come and about the fall of the great whore, the Catholic Church. The ship is back, for truth, and Ramtha is its prophet. [End quoting]

On the bookflap for the Ramtha White Book we read:

"This teaching is not a religious understanding. It is simply knowledge. It is love. I will love you into knowing God and becoming the unlimited love and joy of the God that lives within you."

This is intriguing information and certainly not questionable for one's good health as is Ramtha's advice more recently, which we will examine later. Right now it is helpful to add another, much more subtle aspect to the mind-control equation.

HYPNOSIS

Let's take a moment to consider some very important information from the classic Hypnotism & Meditation: The Operational Manual For Hypnomeditation by the great master of this subject, Ormond McGill:

"The law of unconscious behavior demands that every idea, once it is subconsciously accepted, must automatically go into effect. Whether the idea originates within the mind of the individual or from an outside source is irrelevant."

[Quoting further from this same source:]

"The subconscious is the storehouse of memories. In it, every experience we have had from earliest infancy to the last hour of life is filed.... These memories, however, are not passive; they are vitally active, each one forming a thread in the texture of our personality. The sum total of these impressions

"One of the disciplines we do involves loud music for a vibrational frequency to occur that supports the work of going inward—and we play everything from Beethoven to Yanni" said Mikoloski, a former actor. "When you hear Handel's Messiah blasted over a state-of-the-art sound system as you work on your own spiritual inspiration, there is nothing like it.

"This might sound like screaming to an observer" Mikoloski added. "But this is a very personal and sensitive moment of release of energy that occurs in some people. It's a beautiful thing to be released, spiritually. It is primal, but primal from the soul."

is the total person.

"The subconscious is also a dynamo. It is dominated by emotion, and emotion is the driving force of life. It is the energy source for conscious thought and action, and for the performance of the vital functions of the body.

"The subconscious controls all of our body's physical processes. Digestion, assimilation, the circulation of the blood, and the action of every gland and every organ are controlled by its agency.

"The subconscious never sleeps; indeed, during sleep it seems to be more alert and active than it is during our waking hours.

"The two facets of mind, conscious and subconscious, are in continual interaction. If we consciously think a thought (idea), and cause it to be accepted by the subconscious, the idea will automatically go into action in producing its effect. If it is a healthful thought, we are so much the better; if it is a harmful one, we are so much the worse. For, unlike consciousness, the subconscious has no power to discriminate; whatever is presented to it under certain conditions is automatically accepted and acted upon. It is in the process of this transformation of a thought into an element of our life that we make use of the power of suggestion."

For now, let's just file away this potent yet subtle possible avenue of mind control, and return to it later after some comments from ones who have examined the Ramtha phenomena from more of an objective viewpoint than is perhaps possible from those who are too closely affiliated with that group.

JOE SZIMHART

Among the critics of Ramtha is Joe Szimhart, an anti-cult specialist in Philadelphia who counsels disaffected former members of New Age groups.

"Encouraging people to think they can gain psychic powers is fanciful—something out of science fiction rather than human experience. There's nothing illegal about it, but it certainly has social consequences if people get too deeply involved. People will spend all sorts of money to hang out there, close to Ramtha's energy" says Szimhart.

In an article written by Joan Connell in 1997, we read that "Szimhart served as an expert witness in the messy, 1992 divorce settlement trial in which Knight's ex-husband, Jeffrey Knight, accused her of promoting a cult-like atmosphere at the ranch and of using her spiritual powers to force him to accept an unfair settlement.

"Jeffrey Knight won an $800,000 settlement from his ex-wife, which was l a t e r reversed on appeal. He died of an AIDS-related illness in 1994.

"But criticism of JZ Knight also comes from within the New Age movement itself. Joe Crutcher, editor of Common Ground, a feisty alternative monthly magazine in Seattle that takes a consumer-oriented approach to New Age religions, wrote critically of Knight's tactics in 1995, after he attended part of a seminar for new students. He was not among the media invited to observe the scholarly conference.

"I was deeply disturbed by an exercise they conducted to help students 'manifest' material reality' he said, recalling a session in which students were told to scream as the music of the New Age musician Yanni was played at ear-splitting levels.

"There were maybe 1,000 people there, perhaps two-thirds of whom were regular students. You were encouraged to hold a picture in your mind, scream, and do breathing exercises as you listened to this loud, loud music' Crutcher recalled. 'We were surrounded by this mass of wailing, screaming craziness. I was sitting next to this very vulnerable young woman who was new and it really disturbed me to think she may have felt, freaky as it was, that we had been through something meaningful."

STANISLAV GROF, M.D.

It's no secret that the use of extremely loud music has been an evocative technique employed by Stan Grof, psychiatrist and famous LSD psychotherapist, Esalen Institute faculty member, and current associate of the California Institute of Integral Studies. In the past, Dr. Grof has also utilized a process he refers to as "holotropic breathing", an intensive breathing exercise. At the Ramtha School they also practice a very rapid, intense form of breathing exercises.

Returning to Joan Connell's article: "Longtime student Pavel Mikoloski, 40, affirmed that such exercises do take place, but that Crutcher, who only attended a portion of the weeklong retreat, completely missed the point.

"One of the disciplines we do involves loud music for a vibrational frequency to occur that supports the work of going inward—and we play everything from Beethoven to Yanni" said Mikoloski, a former actor. "When you hear Handel's Messiah blasted over a state-of-the-art sound system as you work on your own spiritual inspiration, there is nothing like it.

"This might sound like screaming to an observer" Mikoloski added. "But this is a very personal and sensitive moment of release of energy that occurs in some people. It's a beautiful thing to be released, spiritually. It is primal, but primal from the soul."

—BOOK REVIEW—

FINDING ENLIGHTENMENT: RAMTHA'S SCHOOL OF ANCIENT WISDOM

In reviewing the available literature on the topic of Ramtha, I came across this book review by Joe Szimhart, written in July, 1998. The book he is reviewing is J. Gordon Melton's 1998 title Finding Enlightenment: Ramtha's School Of Ancient Wisdom. (Beyond Words Publishing Inc. 20827 N.W. Cornell Road, Suite 500 Hillsboro, OR 97124-9808 1-800-284-9673 ISBN 1-885223-61-7 216 pages. Hardback. $17.95)

This review by Szimhart contains so much relevant background information about Ramtha's school that, rather than quote small portions which may not flow well as quotes out of context, I have elected to include it here in its entirety. I believe you will understand the reasons for this as we proceed throughout this article.

[Quoting:]

Finding Enlightenment will not impress many people outside of the Ramtha school of thought. From his romantic, apologetic perspective, J. Gordon Melton defines and describes the Ramtha School Of Enlightenment (RSE) as a new manifestation of Gnosticism, but he dismisses critical voices that call it a deceptive or manipulative "cult". Melton's book about the RSE is primarily Ramtha friendly. No wonder, as he was hired by Ramtha's medium, JZ Knight, to testify in her behalf in a lawsuit in 1992.

Knight funded Melton's research project into her Ramtha school for the court case, and subsequently, for the book. The volume serves as welcome propaganda for the group and interesting fodder for reviewers like me.

In case you are not aware, Ramtha is an alleged spiritual entity that lived 35,000 years ago. JZ Knight, 51, "becomes" Ramtha during sessions with clients since 1977 when he first "appeared" to her. JZ is Ramtha's legally exclusive medium—no one else can become Ramtha or speak for him.

Established around 1989, the RSE has between 900 and 1500+ students who attend sessions at the "mystery school" regularly in Yelm, Washington. The sessions generally run from a few days up to a month. (See <http://www.ramtha.com/index.shtml> for schedules, etc.)

As I read Finding Enlightenment, I found I could not put it down for long until I finished it. I have been studying the Ramtha movement since 1984. I came away from my reading with mixed reactions.

This book, in my view, fits a pattern of scholars-for-hire who will write favorably about controversial groups but habitually devalue critical information. The author has developed a reputation among religious scholars as somewhat of a maverick who concentrates on new religions, cults, and hundreds of relatively small sects that pepper American spirituality. His Institute For The Study Of American Religion, located in Santa Barbara, CA, small as it is, has an impressive archive. Sociologists, students of religion, and journalists have often turned to the ISAR for information and comment about controversial sects and cults.

Melton has positioned himself among a clique of academics who actively oppose what they label as the "anti-cult network". The ACN has basically been a loose network of religious and secular groups, ex-cult members, and concerned families who seek to end the harm that some cults do by providing information and research. The ACN may also assist ex-members to recover from harmful experiences. Some elements of this network have supported interventions like deprogramming and exit counseling. The antagonism stretches into the courtroom where many heated disputes over failed deprogrammings, undue influence lawsuits, and child custody cases end up. Ramtha has been a target of the ACN, therefore Melton defends it—not that this makes academic sense.

In the Knight vs. Knight case (1992-95 in Tacoma, WA), I was the initial witness on behalf of Jeff Knight, who sued ex-wife JZ over the divorce settlement. Jeff alleged that JZ kept significant assets hidden from him, and that he was yet under the undue influence of Ramtha when he settled initially. For several years Jeff avoided treatment for his HIV infection because he yet believed that the "Ram" and the C&E breathing technique taught by JZ could protect and possibly cure him.

Apparently, JZ was not infected, but the delay in treatment for Jeff may have cost him years of a productive life. We will never know. By 1991 he was broke and too weak to work steadily. After the evidentiary hearing, the judge awarded Jeff and his team expenses only. He died at peace with himself, according to his mate, Geoff, and family, in 1994 before he could carry an appeal further.

Melton includes little information from Jeff Knight regarding the development of the Ramtha myth and school. What information he offers is filtered through JZ's autobiography and perspective.

This is one example why Finding Enlightenment is primarily an extension of Melton's court testimony, not a serious venture into research. In 1980, Master Jeffrey (all students were "masters" in Ramtha's school), qualified as JZ's "soul mate" in Ramtha's eyes. Jeff shared the stage with JZ/Ramtha during most of Ramtha's appearances in the early years until 1987. Jeff also had direct access to Ramtha, day and night, whenever he was around JZ, over five years, until she found a new companion. Jeff heard what others never heard from the Ram. This is one important "backstage" reality that Melton's book ignores.

The book includes 8 chapters, an epilogue, appendix, extensive endnotes and references, but it lacks an index.

The author begins with his personal experiences with the RSE in the early 1990s. He then gives us a short biography on JZ Knight, and how she came to meet and later channel a "35,000-year-old spirit" that first appeared to her in her kitchen. Before describing how the "Ramtha myth" developed, Melton digresses into a summary of Gnosticism and why the RSE is a form of "modern Gnosticism". In his chapter "Ramtha's Philosophy" Melton summarizes JZ/Ramtha's penchant for oblique references to quantum physics, appropriations from New Age occultism, and for a reinvention of the Indian chakra system—Ramtha called them "seals".

In Gnostic style, the Ramtha school teaches that we have, through countless rebirths, forgotten that we are "gods" or sparks from the Divine essence. RSE offers taped lectures, techniques, and "fieldwork" at JZ's ranch in Yelm, Washington. The central technique, Melton informs us, is the C&E (consciousness and energy) breath ritual introduced by JZ to the school in the late 1980s. C&E is not unlike the earlier New Age "holotropic breathing" psychotherapy developed by Stanislov Grof. C&E is also a derivative of pranayama or yogic breathing techniques from ancient India. Melton has nothing to say about these connections, save that JZ Knight was aware of many earlier occult traditions and writings.

RSE students utilize blindfolds often at events. In one event, hundreds of students wander blindfolded around a large, fenced field in search of their posted symbols on cards pinned to the fence. The "tank" also requires blindfolds when students meander through a makeshift maze of colored, eight-foot panels for hours at a time. Students may find holes that lead underground into “worms” or tubes where they crawl until they find their way out.

Melton does not record an event around 1990 when JZ/Ramtha directed around 1,000 students to split up some distance across from each other in the field. Although they were blindfolded, at Ramtha’s command, most of them ran across the field with the hands in C&E position in front of the chest, whooping and yelling. Quite a few crashed into one another and some of them were injured. Timid older ladies stood frozen along the fences. One of my clients, who was a participant in this singular mayhem, said it was supposed to help them get over fear. He ended up with a deeply bruised shoulder and an egg-sized lump protruding from his forehead. He believed that a few people had to be treated at the hospital.

Fear motivated this man with the bruised head to bond with the Ramtha teachings. Melton hardly reports on the dramatic survivalist activity that dominated the group between 1988 and the early 1990s. The Last Waltz Of The Tyrants (Koteen, ed., 1989) was the teaching by Ramtha about the “endtimes” and coming catastrophes. Specific instructions from Ramtha included leaving your mates if they resisted or disagreed with you.

Ramtha also taught that “your government is an illusion” which supported tax evasion among the students. The world is to be like Ramtha “knew it” by 2042, a prediction of massive Earth changes, and a return to a primitive life. Ramtha devotees at the time heard an ominous directive from JZ/Ramtha: “When the dragon marches, be prepared to hibernate.” Translated into real-speak, this meant that the students should have their “hovels” (secret, individual underground shelters with provisions) ready in case the immense contingent of Communist Chinese soldiers in Mexico decide to raid Seattle and the area.

Melton does not report on these many underground shelters (he reports “several” did it only on page 199 in his notes), nor does he give details about this important, survivalist, anti-government aspect of the RSE. (No, there are not, nor have there been, hundreds of thousands of Chinese soldiers in Mexico, but this has been a favorite conspiracy theory of some fanatic, right-wing survivalists.)

Melton avoids accurately reporting how deeply affected Ramtha students were by these survivalist dictations. He wants to avoid “sensationalism” in an attempt to reflect his perceptions of the group’s current image. He also wishes to respect the “secrets” of the closed society that is the RSE. On page 165, Melton states: “...the scholar must be careful to respect the group and not violate the group’s sense of the sacred.” In the endnote on page 203 he hints at his philosophy for studying these groups: “Every time a violation of trust occurs, it becomes that much harder for the next person who seeks access to a group. Such a violation can occur when a scholar gains the group’s confidence and trust, merely to use the information gained to attack or expose the group in a polemic manner.”

By smoking, chanting and breathing C&E style, the students hope to become as “enlightened” as any legendary shaman or “real magician” who can shape-shift the world at will. Ramtha allegedly teaches that alcohol and nicotine can help in this endeavor. Melton calls this “real magic” (p. 100). They might part the Red Sea, raise the dead, freeze a rocket’s flight in mid-air, make gold appear, predict the future. Psychic progress eventually leads to bodily “ascension” into the “Void” or ultimate spiritual state. The actual results, however, are far humbler and unconvincing to even the mildest skeptic.

This last statement is at the core of the apologetic clique that Melton represents. They are afraid that a group will not let them study or report research if the truth about abuses and lies is revealed. Melton is more interested in access than truth or accuracy. If an ex-member or critical scholar reports on a group, he calls it an “attack” or a “polemic” but he does not encourage investigation to determine the accuracy or truth of the “attacks”. He does not wish to offend the group. No wonder some scholars have voiced concerns (Zablocki, 1996; Balch in Wolves In The Fold by Shupe, 1998).

Melton does state, in an endnote, that the RSE is “not a nice place”, is difficult, and “very different from New Age workshops” (202). It may be different than most, but Melton ignores how abusive, or “demanding” as he calls the RSE, many New Age, mass therapy workshops have been. He must certainly know about the early EST that derived from Mind Dynamics Institute (folded under lawsuit in early 1970s)—a brutal experience in “self-development” (many called it brainwashing) that combined intense encounter groups, hypnosis, and military bootcamp activity into weekend sessions. He could have also compared RSE to Scientology’s “RPF” programs, or to some controversial Outward Bound-style programs. He could have pointed out that most thought reform (brainwashing) programs derive much from old military training techniques. But Melton is on record as stating that the “social science community” has stated that “brainwashing” does not exist. RSE’s rigorous, physically demanding approach to thought reform is nothing new nor unique, as Melton implies.

All of the RSE exercises, including C&E and “paradise beach” (sitting for days alone in a field with few provisions), purport to open psychic awareness and powers like remote viewing. The dreaded “death hormone” discussed by Ramtha can also be eliminated through C&E.

Lately, a recent ex-member reported to me that Ramtha at some level of the program influences students to smoke tobacco from pipes and drink alcohol. Last year’s month-long Boktau event ended with much drinking at a late-night party. When Ramtha/JZ took to smoking a pipe in front of the highly suggestible students, pipe smoking became a group fad and ritual. JZ has had a smoking habit. Wine guzzling was a major ritual in the early days of Ramtha meetings—perhaps those days have returned.

Melton reports nothing of this tobacco and wine side of the Ramtha group ritual.

By smoking, chanting and breathing C&E style, the students hope to become as “enlightened” as any legendary shaman or “real magician” who can shape-shift the world at will. Ramtha allegedly teaches that alcohol and nicotine can help in this endeavor. Melton calls this “real magic” (p. 100). They might part the Red Sea, raise the dead, freeze a rocket’s flight in mid-air, make gold appear, predict the future. Psychic progress eventually leads to bodily “ascension” into the “Void” or ultimate spiritual state. The actual results, however, are far humbler and unconvincing to even the mildest skeptic.

In my view, any small-town, charismatic church makes the same claims to “miracles” and positive life enhancement as Ramtha students. The RSE may be far more expensive to attend than a Pentecostal church, but the results are no better. (Read Melton’s report about the “life at Ramtha’s school today” in chapter 7. One lady he met showed him new, adult teeth as a result of C&E).

A naïve reader might find Finding Enlightenment impressive, filled with scholarly facts about Gnosticism and a rich description and history of the Ramtha “school”. Melton’s knowledge about Gnosticism is edifying, to be sure, but his history and impression of the Ramtha phenomenon leaves me with many criticisms.

Comparing Ramtha/JZ to a “Willie Nelson or Madonna”, Melton introduces us to the school by describing the scene of JZ Knight as Ramtha when “he” appears before “whoops and hollers” from one thousand people in an auditorium. But JZ “was more important than a mere Mick Jagger” says Melton, who may have been caught up in the enthusiasm. Melton says that a “student”, J. O. Ault, assists him for the day, but he neglects to mention that Ault has been JZ’s youngish companion and, according to Jeff Knight, her “lover” after she broke away from Jeff. Melton did not offer in-depth information from Ault, whose intimate experience of JZ/Ramtha must be noteworthy, if not compelling. Melton does define “New Age” and “occult” as these words have relevance when categorizing the Ramtha group.

In chapter one, “JZ and Meeting The One”, Melton recounts JZ’s early life, her broken marriages and her uncanny “psychic” abilities which she seemed to inherit from her mother. Early in her life, JZ rebelled against orthodox Christianity, rejecting any notion of “Satan” and adopting reincarnation as a “truth”.

JZ was born Judith Hampton in 1946. According to her autobiography, her young life was difficult and marked by abusive, alcoholic men. Melton recounts a visionary incident JZ says she and other girls at a slumber party experienced, but then “forgot” or “refused to discuss”. But JZ did remember it.

Melton neglects to mention reports from JZ’s childhood friends at that time who remember her falling to the ground, seemingly possessed by a male spirit that called itself “Demias” who spoke in a “male voice”. “I have possessed this body for a long time” Demias reportedly said. The eyewitness stated this on two television programs, including the 20/20 piece in 1987, but JZ says it “never happened”.

He may neglect to mention this because he wants to avoid “hearsay” or to put anyone’s beliefs “on trial”. He cites an important 1940 California case, Ballard vs US Government (ran for several years with appeals, etc.) in which the judge stated just that—we cannot question beliefs in court no matter how bizarre we think they are. Melton seems to conveniently confuse scholarship with courtroom ethics and case law.

In our open society, we have a right to freedom of speech, and we have a right to disagree with a belief or a procedure. I can almost imagine what an academic session might be like at the annual meeting (many thousands of religious scholars) of the American Academy Of Religion, for instance, if they ran it like a courtroom. At times, in our litigious society, some scholars must consult with lawyers before they present a paper, but academic papers are peer reviewed for corrections and accuracy. Ironically, ex-members are eyewitnesses to facts and experiences—that is admissible in courts of law, but apparently not in Melton’s “academy”.

In a later chapter, Melton takes issue with 20/20’s journalism, hinting that the report was biased because host Barbara Walters’ husband had once been a believer in Ramtha. In preparing the show, 20/20’s producer, Dave Doss, questioned me at length for leads and information, and I was able to direct them to some Ramtha students I knew in Santa Fe. They agreed to appear on camera. Judd Rose interviewed me for that show, but it was not used. The 20/20 team did use Professor Carl Raschke of the University of Denver as their “expert” to criticize Ramtha and the channeling fad that swept the New Age arena at the time. Melton attacks Raschke’s statements on 20/20 by pointing out that Raschke had little direct experience of the group.

In chapter one, “the One” a psychic told JZ about was, of course, Ramtha. When the couple lived near Seattle, JZ and her then husband “Jeremy” played with pyramid power, another New Age fad that attributed psychic powers to pyramids. Melton uses the fictional name “Jeremy Wilder” for JZ’s husband, the name that JZ gave him in her autobiography. In Soul Mates, the man is identified as Mark Burnett, a dentist with occult leanings (Stearn, 119). This is one example in which Melton seems to bend to JZ’s version of her story without corroborating or comparing the evidence for the reader. In another, a psychic woman who assisted JZ immensely to understand and develop her Ramtha channeling, is called “Mary Redhead”. But Melton never mentions Anne-Marie Bennstrom who, along with Jeff Knight, was a key influence and a constant presence on stage with the Ramtha show during the early to mid 1980s. Melton would have done well to interview Bennstrom.

Melton mentions that many movie stars were attracted to Ramtha, but neglects to mention that JZ began to gain fame in 1980 when she channeled Ramtha for audiences in actor Richard Chamberlain’s home. This is where Jeff Knight first met “Ramtha” after JZ invited him to the seance. While she was yet married to Burnett, JZ allegedly targeted Jeff as her “soul mate” when she saw his photo in an advertisement for a horse.

Jeff had no experience with metaphysical spiritualism when he met JZ, and he told me he was awed, if somewhat confused, by this encounter with the “Ram”. He and JZ were soon living together. Melton does report that Jeff was a “bisexual” who had an affair with a man during his marriage to JZ, and that he contracted HIV sometime before 1987. Jeff’s homosexual life was no secret by the time he contacted me.

By 1991 Jeff dropped out of the RSE, with the help of his dear friend, Geoff, who was his close companion until Jeff died in 1994. Geoff encouraged and helped Jeff to read (Knight, a brilliant equestrian, was dyslexic) a critical paper I wrote about Ramtha for a lecture I gave in 1986. Ironically, the paper got to Jeff through a Ramtha student whose husband gave it to her in an attempt to save their marriage. She saw the paper as a threat to the group, so she wanted Jeff to pass it on to JZ. Jeff told me that the paper was the “icing on the cake” that confirmed his misgivings after ten years of experience with JZ/Ramtha.

According to Jeff, JZ often, but privately, channeled another spirit “Charles”, a 19th century equestrian who advised them which horses to buy and sell. Jeff noted that rarely did the “channeled” horses meet expectations, but many were sold at inflated prices to wealthy Ramtha students anyway. Melton never mentions the Charles spirit.

He also does not mention that JZ channeled “Jesus” (Yeshua) at least once—JZ/Jesus is on an audio tape I listened to many times around 1985. Apparently, JZ/Jesus did not go over very well with students. “Yeshua” was a harsh, accusatory person who ranted at times.

The Arabian horse industry folks knew their horses and were not fooled by Ramtha’s confidence in certain “steeds” from JZ’s Messiah stables. I took a Messiah Arabian brochure from an Arabian horse show I attended in Albuquerque around 1984. The Messiah stud fees were modest to low compared to the best stables. Melton does not note that this is the primary reason so many investors were angry with JZ; they trusted the Ram’s (or Charles’) godlike wisdom about horses. 20/20 explicitly documented the manipulative advertising, but Melton does not. He reports only that JZ said “sorry” and eventually refunded money. He places blame on the general collapse of the Arabian industry, but not on JZ’s fanatical leap into the horse business through channeling.

In chapter 8, Melton takes on Ramtha’s critics and controversies including the 20/20 expose. He lists six controversies, dismissing them merely as “predictable [and] simplistic” but leaves out relevant issues, some of which I mentioned above. Curiously, Melton spends more time “answering” channeling apologist John Klimo’s criticisms of JZ:

“Yes, one can count on predictable, simplistic responses from the media, anti-cultists, and psychic cops; but with a serious researcher (“psychologist” Klimo, 1987) one expects something more.... And in discussing the channels he seemed, at times, to be acting as their public-relations agent.” (141, 142)

Melton finds errors in Klimo’s book Channeling, and he calls him a “rumormonger” for mentioning that many Ramtha students dropped JZ’s cult after catching her “acting” like Ramtha. Melton does not mention what some of the students saw, including Jeff Knight.

JZ has had a habit of smoking cigarettes, and sometimes would take breaks during hikes with students who believed that “Ramtha” was leading them. One of her business managers testified that he saw her go in and out of the Ramtha personality without the “trance” exercise she used on stage. This shocked him, and it dawned on him that it was all an incredible act. He left the movement.

At that time hundreds of defectors from the Ramtha group opted for other channels; some went to Penny Torres-Rubin who channeled a Ramtha clone called Mafu. Others checked out the hugely successful Lazaris entity channeled by Jack Pursel. Klimo stated: "Lazaris adds a much needed credibility to this entire field" (Lazaris, NPN Publishing, 1987, back cover notes). Klimo may not be a rumormonger, but he loses my respect when he promotes thinly veiled spooks like Lazaris.

Klimo's entire, effusive apology for channeling lacks clarity, though he recites most of the skeptical objections to channeling. Melton takes him entirely too seriously. In 1988 there were reportedly 1,200 channels in the Los Angeles area alone. Among the New Age milieu of channels, JZ Knight attracts a relatively large crowd of critics.

Klimo's effect on her credibility was probably insignificant, certainly less than that of Penny Torres/Mafu who called JZ a fake on a 1988 Oprah Winfrey Show. Mafu claimed that the real entity had "left JZ". Melton does not report the significant Mafu conflict, nor that Anne-Marie Bennstrom supported the rival Lazaris enterprise by 1985.

These are a few matters that are missing or understated in Finding Enlightenment. My last point has to do with the nature of the tests that certain "experts" performed on JZ while she was in her Ramtha mode. Melton tells us that the tests show that JZ is not a fraud, and that something extraordinary was physiologically taking place.

The researchers, Stanley Krippner of the Saybrook Institute, parapsychologists Ian and Judy Wickramasekera, engineer Ganapati Roa of the University of Virginia, and others conducted the tests, that amounted to monitoring eight bodily functions. Melton tells us that Krippner and Wickramasekera ruled out fraud at a "scholarly" conference held at Yelm, WA in February 1997. According to a reporter who attended, this conference was hardly "scholarly" as it was not open to critics who could ask the hard questions.

In my view, Krippner and his colleagues who tested JZ were enchanted saps and nothing less. Krippner should know better, but he has long been a psi believer (Gardner, 18; Gilovich, 160). The tests they administered were not cross-referenced, to my knowledge, with rigorous findings about other channels or mediums.

For example, the Medjugorje visionaries in the former Yugoslavia have been tested repeatedly in similar but more rigorous ways (see: Laurentin & Joyeux, 1987). The Medjugorje visionaries submitted to many sets of tests by unrelated scholars and scientists. The key questions for Krippner and colleagues included whether Ramtha had an independent existence from JZ, or was she merely dissociating in an extraordinary way. JZ did rank high (to be expected, they reported) on the Absorption Subscale and the Dissociative Experience Scale, but they felt, properly so, that that did not establish fraud.

Religious studies scholars, Robert Balch and Stephan Langdon, recently published a paper criticizing the J. Gordon Melton collaboration for a 1994 book about another theosophical sect, one that also has a middle-aged woman as its only channel. "How The Problem Of Malfeasance Gets Overlooked In The Study Of New Religions: An Examination Of The AWARE Study Of The Church Universal And Triumphant" is a chapter in Wolves Within The Fold (Shupe, 1998). Balch and Langdon point out how Melton, et al, avoided and ignored what Irving Goffman (The Presentation Of Self In Everyday Life, 1959) called "back-stage realities" when studying the CUT. What concerned Goffman was how readily researchers engage in "teamwork" while studying the theater or "stage reality" of groups to potentially discredit "back-stage" information and to prevent "leakage" about the same. Melton used some of this same AWARE team for the Ramtha study, and they all continued to not take ex-member statements or skeptical views seriously.

Two excellent studies of fringe groups that did not ignore Goffman's warning were When Prophecy Fails (Leon Festinger, et al, 1956) and chapter 5 of The Communal Experience (Laurence Veysey, 1973). Festinger and his colleagues infiltrated a small channeling group near Chicago that predicted great Earth changes, including floods that could end the world. Festinger was testing his theory of cognitive dissonance. The group got its directions from a Ramtha-like spirit called Sananda. The channel, named "Marian Keech" in the book, was probably Dorothy Martin, who eventually settled in Arizona where she dabbled in Scientology. She continued to channel "space brothers" and Sananda until her death in 1992.

The Festinger research team used a disguised participant/observer technique to study the group members, who were unaware of the study. Veysey, on the other hand, used an undisguised participant/observer approach to study a "New Age" New Mexico commune, the Synergia Ranch south of Santa Fe. Veysey communicated his intentions openly to the group for many months before his five-week, full participation in communal life under the direction of "Ezra" (actually, Johnny Dolphin Allen, who became infamous as the cult leader behind the embattled Biosphere 2 project, 1991-93, in Oracle, Arizona).

Veysey, like the Festinger team, was keenly aware of back-stage information. His critical analysis of the leader and the commune stood up to time in light of the continuing history of Allen's cult two decades later in the bogus

Biosphere 2 project. (The project is a giant geodesic "greenhouse" that was supposed to be hermetically sealed for 2 years with eight humans inside. "Biosphere 1" is planet Earth; "2" was to be a miniature model to prepare for Mars. Outside air was secretly pumped into the flawed structure months after the first test began. For example, see "Profits Of Doom" by Marc Cooper, Voice, July, 30, 1991; "Earth In A Bottle" by Jon Anderson, Chicago Tribune, November 20, 1994.) I doubt very much that Melton's happy study about Ramtha will remain as credible.

HOW TO TEST A CHANNEL

In chapter eight, Melton concludes: "However, because the questions of pathology and fraud were answered, nonbelievers will have to come up with more creative alternatives" (156). Creative? Try simpler. Typical of parapsychologists who want to believe in the paranormal, Krippner and his colleagues missed an important opportunity to test the obvious. They needed wits, not instruments and psychological tests to see whether Ramtha was a separate, intelligent being.

Ramtha/JZ has produced many audio tapes, books, and videos to draw upon, along with interviews with members and ex-members. Ramtha/JZ has given private consultations to paying customers (Shirley MacLaine reports on these sessions in Dancing In The Light), so he is capable of private conversation. But Ramtha is trademarked like Mickey Mouse, meaning that no one can legally channel or use "Ramtha" without getting sued by JZ, so we cannot cross-check through another medium. But we do not need the opportunity. JZ/Ramtha walks and talks relatively freely among devotees, and s/he has appeared on television talk shows, publicly stating "outrageous" things and stroking his "beard". This is not a timid spook.

But he is oddly inconsistent. According to JZ (A State of Mind, 1987) in the beginning years (1977-80) Ramtha would follow her around asking odd questions like "What be a Safeway," as if he just reappeared on Earth after 35,000 years with no knowledge of our food market life. Yet he seemed to know the most secret details of our government, how the "Graymen" were running it, and why we should avoid "debit cards". He demonstrates no capacity for another language, but speaks in an odd, British accent. Ramtha's accent and postures often resembled actor Yul Brenner in his The King And I role. It is easy to note that Ramtha is suspiciously familiar with our culture and religions despite "his" clumsy affect in language.

We also know that Ramtha claims to be part of the Great White Brotherhood of ascended masters introduced to us mainly through Madame Helena P. Blavatsky and her Theosophical Society during the late 19th century. This is significant because these alleged ascended masters “do” operate spiritually outside of time and space. Through their mediums or channels, they claim access to instantaneous, “unlimited” knowledge and psychic power. Ramtha must know who his friends and enemies are. Ascended masters like Ramtha can communicate with one another according to the mythology. If an ascended master, or Ramtha, can describe complex philosophies, the airships of “Inner Earth” and extraterrestrial civilizations (see Ramtha dialogues on Inner Earth and Jehovah), they can certainly describe, through their medium, much simpler things.

This is my primary rule for this test: If the channel/spirit or either aspect refuses to comply with such a simple test, we automatically conclude that there is no spirit (or “autonomous complex” as Carl Jung called it) present. Normally, I have had to set up the channeled “spirit” to trap them into such a test. Most channels or mediums are a clever lot and will squirm out of the obvious traps, like “how is my dead sister” when you do not have one.

When asking a question it is important to know what the channel would not know about your question, but it must include something the channeled spirit claims to know. This is not unlike the tests Catholic exorcists have used to determine if a “demon” were present: Can the spirit speak in a language totally unknown to the possessed? Can the spirit move physical objects? Does the room suddenly turn cold for no apparent reason? Can the exorcist team rule out psychopathology? And so on.

But our test is not to determine the need for exorcism. We will merely try to determine the existence or quality of a spirit, not to judge or eliminate it. We already know that Ramtha knows another master called Jesus (“Yeshua ben Joseph” in JZ’s jargon). Yeshua is an ascended master who JZ recognizes and has channeled, as indicated above.

Ramtha may recognize another master, Blavatsky’s KH (aka Koot Hoomi or Kuthumi), as the Ram should know that master well. After all, they are part of the same occult lodge, the Great White Brotherhood. In any case, the important factor is to get Ramtha to admit that he knows another ascended master, then ask a series of “yes” questions: Have you known Jesus (KH) for long? Are you aware of esoteric groups or persons that Jesus (KH) has worked with? Would you or Jesus (KH) be aware of people who are merely faking to be your channels or messengers? (JZ sued a European woman successfully to stop her from channeling Ramtha. Remember that Ramtha carries a trademark.) All of these are “yes” answers because they are rhetorically sound; Ramtha has no choice but to answer yes, unless he wants to lie like an idiot. Do not put that past him, however. He may be “unlimited” but he can be “outrageous”.

For this next step you will have had to encounter many serious students and channels of these same masters, facts about actual people who JZ would not know. There are literally thousands to choose from. Then ask: “Ramtha, I know of someone in (Indianapolis) who has studied your teachings and channels Yeshua. Her name is (Mary Doe). Describe that person to me? Please tell me what she is working on now.” Use real people and guarantee that the person and project is real. That is the kind of question that does not take a physicist or an occultist to answer.

If, by chance, Ramtha gives the right answers, then JZ is either psychic, lucky, or a spirit is really there. Or your questions were poorly designed. The “hits” could also be due to a number of weird explanations. I doubt this will happen, but you have to be prepared to probe further, set up new tests, and not be shocked by the results.

During the early 1980s, when the Medjugorje visionaries were tested, they submitted to several doctors, scientists, and theologians over a period of years. The tests were more thorough and the visionaries more accessible to scrutiny than JZ. Krippner and his colleagues have not eliminated fraud, as Melton claims. They have only opened the possibility to longitudinal studies by less credulous, more thorough scientists, but I doubt seriously that this will ever happen.

One gaping difference between the Medjugorje seers and JZ is that the seers were not “possessed” by the subject of a vision in the shamanic sense, whereas JZ is. Their vital signs and brain waves remained the same during the group ecstasy, whereas Ramtha/JZ showed a difference during the possession.

Any research team should include tests for the integrity of a channel or visionary. If the “self” is intact and honestly presented as indicated in various tests of the Medjugorje visionaries, there may be a strong possibility that they are speaking truth. Still, this does not prove that the Virgin Mary in their vision is “real”. The Medjugorje visionaries maintain integrity during ecstasy; JZ is disintegrated. With JZ/Ramtha we have a corrupted JZ who is “confused” with Ramtha when she is apparently possessed. This still does not disprove that some spirit is present in JZ, but it shows that she is an essential part of the message—no JZ, no Ramtha. And Ramtha has yet to prove that “he” knows anything that JZ does not, or cannot know, in my view.

No, Krippner and his team have not ruled out fraud in the case of JZ/Ramtha, if what Melton and the press release (Connell) have reported thus far is any indication.

AN INTERVIEW WITH JOE SZIMHART, JULY 11, 2000

When talking with Joe about JZ wine drinking in the latest video—the “wine ceremony” in which everyone participates—he responded that he had not seen the latest videos. However, he did provide the following insights.

[Quoting:]

It goes back to some of JZ's habits. She was prone to drink a lot of wine, as Ramtha, back in the late '70s, early '80s. They used to toast every meeting. At that time, she'd have a roomfull of people at some celebrity's house, or a few hundred at the most back then, and they would lift up the glass and say "To life!". Then they would all down the thing. And so, she was prone to drink. I think she was an alcoholic, and certainly she's a nicotine-aholic.

In print, in the book by Shirley MacLaine, I think it was her third, something like Dancing In The Light, there's a section in there where she talks about her interactions with Ramtha in the early '80s. She distinctly says in there that at that time you could get a half-hour private session with Ramtha for, like, a thousand dollars, more or less. I guess depending how special the moment was. But Shirley said that she and Ramtha drank a lot of wine during the session and that JZ woke up with a hangover—and that's a quote, at least a halfway quote.

Then they went on the wagon for a while and only drank pure water at all these meetings. But before that it was red wine, absolutely. And Shirley MacLaine documents this very clearly.

The people I've met who were really deeply involved in the group for any length of time were, pretty much, what I call "New Age junkies". They love that kind of magical thinking. They read everything from A Course In Miracles to Theosophy books; go to psychics; or young people who were into witchcraft when they were dabbling with the Goth movement, or whatever; there's some of them who gravitate toward Ramtha.

But "magical thinkers" are very common types who get into a Ramtha group. The operative word here is that they think they're involved in some kind of gnosis, which is a direct link to a divine self. That's what Milton's statement is in his book about the Ramtha School of Enlightenment.

It's obviously not working. The whole thing just stinks from top to bottom. You know, the set-up to support this woman in her crazy drive for power and wealth, that's really what's been going on there. She may have a few altruistic motives in this, but it's based on a sick foundation. She should be in treatment, not leading a cult. That's what I see going on.

Martin: Did Shirley MacLaine and JZ fall out?

Szimhart: Yes, they did eventually. I think they fell out over a number of things. What I heard was, at the time when the Arabian horse thing was going on, Shirley bought a couple of those, and these investments didn't pan out.

I had long conversations with Jeff Knight, JZ's spouse for years, and he was the horseman. JZ was naïve, at best, about horses; she'd ride them, but not much more than that. Jeff was a real sensitive trainer. The problem that he had with the whole thing is that the only horses that were worth anything were the ones that he and the accountant—I forget his name—went out and just sort-of bought on horse-sense, not the ones that Ramtha recommended. Almost all of the horses that Ramtha recommended, that were sold for a-quarter-of-a-million dollars, or whatever, to these wealthy devotees, didn't work out.

I remember, back in 1984, I went to an Arabian horse show in Albuquerque. I used to live down in New Mexico back then, and I went around and I picked up brochures from a lot of places. Messiah Arabian, JZ's stable, was there showing their studs and whatever, but what interested me was the stud fee. Messiah Arabians were commanding relatively low stud fees, which kind of lets you know that you can't get away with that crap in the horse business, but you can get away with it among vulnerable devotees. And then, of course, the government gave her a cease-and-desist order in the way she was selling these horses; it was undue influence, using religion, religious pressure from her god to sell them.

And there WAS a cease-and-desist order; 20/20 brought that out. And she gave back, to some of the complaining people, their money. But what happened, really, the tax laws changed. You couldn't write-off the horse as an investment. It was taxable. And so the Arabian horse market kind-of flattened out. And Messiah Arabians just wasn't big enough to handle that, so they kind-of got out of the business—not on Ramtha's brilliant advice, but because of the market.

[The question does come to mind: did this change in the tax laws create enough of a pressure/money problem for JZ that she became susceptible to influence, such as a deal, from some secret experimental government program of some kind? Just a thought. — R.M.]

I interviewed Jeff Knight on tape, videotape. At that point he had come to peace with himself about the whole thing. He realized that the Ramtha-thing was a real scam, and he wanted to warn people about it. [Jeff Knight died of AIDS as the result of homosexual activity. He was first diagnosed in late 1986.] That's why JZ just went into this hiatus down in Australia, and everything sort-of changed in the group, and she started hanging out with this young 19-year-old, Joey something-or-other, one of the sons of one of the devotees. For a long time, up until a few years back, Joey Ault, that's his name, was her boy, lover.

But Jeff was sort-of left confused because he still believed in Ramtha, at the time, but he wasn't allowed to be on stage anymore, like he was; he didn't have any free access to Ramtha anymore, like he used to. I mean, everything changed and he couldn't get it.

And then, finally, he met this guy who he began to confide in, named Jeffrey Corban, who was also gay, and they got a platonic relationship together of some kind. And Jeff Corban began to research the thing and began to help Jeff Knight to look at it in a different way. Jeff Corban was the one who got a hold of me and got me to send him my initial paper that I wrote back in the late '80s, to expose the group. And he gave it to Jeff, and that, Jeff told me, was the icing on the cake. He began to see that the thing was really a cult. He had been suspecting. I got to know Jeff (Knight) after that, quite a bit, and we talked about a lot of things.

A lot of people were trying to channel Ramtha back then, and JZ would sue them because Ramtha was trademarked, like the name Mickey Mouse, so you can't use it. That was a pretty good move on her part.

[Still quoting, later in the interview:]

Martin: I'm looking at your review here, and the one thing that jumped off the page at me, one of several things, was JZ channeling an energy called Demias. Is that true?

Szimhart: What happened was, and I got this from two different sources. 20/20 got it, and they came to my house to interview me for their piece on Ramtha in 1987. I gave them a lot of leads. I didn't appear on the show. What I had to say was redundant.

But, I got to talking to them about it, and they told me all about the information they got from where JZ's from, down in Artesia, New Mexico. This incident took place when she was a teenager where, in a kind-of born-again Christian church, she allegedly fell on the floor and this male voice took her over, called Demias, and said: "I possess this body; it's been mine for ages", something like that. She claims it didn't happen, but there were several eye-witnesses who have spoken-out about that. It makes sense.

Martin: It's remarkably similar to the word Damien.

Szimhart: Yeah. Demias, Damien, Demon—you know, Deman in the Greek is really a kind of spirit-familiar type of thing; it's not necessarily evil. We have, in our Christian tradition, turned the word into evil, by demon. But the Deman word is not evil in the ancient Greek; it was just like having a familiar spirit, like a muse or something.

[Still quoting, later on:]

She was driven. You know, you look at her background and this lady had a lot to prove because she came from a very abusive background with the male figures in her life. And, by her own admission, her father was an alcoholic and very abusive.... It makes sense to me that she's got personality issues.

Martin: Did Jeff know, by the end of his life, that things were phony?

Szimhart: Oh, yeah. He knew by 1990 or so, 1991, when he moved in with his friend. I went and met him personally several times, and he knew. He was very clear about it. He had made peace with his family again; he had been somewhat alienated. I think he grew up Catholic. But he really was at peace with that, that the whole thing was phony and he had been conned, and he took responsibility for his own problem.

Martin: On the tape I'm watching, she almost goes in and out. It seems like, in moments, she slips into being JZ Szimhart: She's always done that. If you look at the early tapes, especially, you'll see a Ramtha-thick, you know, like it's really thick in the first minutes or so, and then you see Ramtha-lite, you know, more JZ. I mean, it's really obvious, if you're not a "believer", that the personality is hers. It's just that she's like an actress, a bad actress.

Being a bad actress is really a plus in this kind of thing of channeling because the awkwardness makes it appear like the person's not really in control, there's something in control of them. It's a reverse psychology kind of thing. A lot of the channelers out there have very awkward language, especially when they start out, and the very awkwardness gives the illusion that the spirit is struggling to get through the dense brain of the person.

[Still quoting, later in the interview:]

She hasn't cultivated anyone else to do this shtick, and I doubt if she ever will. She's always hinted that Ramtha would disappear, you know, while JZ's alive. And that's almost like a manipulative tool because these people fear that—it's kind of like the Deadheads following Gerry Garcia the last 4 years. They knew he was going to die; he was in bad shape. And they all wanted to be there as long as they could take a drink of his mythical high or whatever. I knew quite a few of these kids back then. I tried to exit-counsel some of them, whether their parents were still alive or not. There's a Gerry Garcia cult within the Deadheads. That was what they believed. You know, he's gonna go and we gotta drink up as much as we can while he's here, and they sold everything for it.

And I think that part of the manipulation is just that, hinting that Ramtha is not going to be

Martin: (Reading from the newspaper article:) "...Ramtha's retreat coincides with a need for Knight to have more time for herself, but is not a result of it."

Szimhart: She might be in rehab. (laughter)

Martin: (laughter)

Szimhart: I mean, I wouldn't be surprised.

Martin: She's going on an international tour.

Szimhart: Oh, she's doing that? Maybe she wants to travel. Australia is really big pickings for this group, so I'm sure she'll be what he said. Like Buddha said: "You have to work out your own salvation."

Martin: Good advice.

Szimhart: He was a quazi-Buddhist, in a way, toward the later part of his life. She's never going to do that. She couldn't pull that off. It's not her style. This lady is very addicted, likes her expensive stuff, likes the adulation and all of that. I don't know where it's going to go.

There is a tragedy going on here. There's a percentage, probably a small percentage, who are really people who, with a little education, some time with an exit-counselor, would pull out of this in a couple days, and reorient their lives toward something more useful and real.

But probably the majority of the hard-core people in this group won't respond much to intervention, from what I can tell. I think they're just "magical thinkers", and they're going to die that way. This is what they want. This is what they did before Ramtha, and they're going to continue to do it.

Martin: I think that's very good insight.

Szimhart: I mean, there's all kinds of people out there, and there's room for them too. (laughter)

Martin: Well, yes, this is America.

Szimhart: But there is harm being done. I mean, overall, it's a harmful group, in my view. [End quote.]

AFTER 35,000 YEARS, RAMTHA OPTS FOR A BREAK

In the December 20, 1999 edition of Seattle P-I.com Northwest, appears an Associated Press release from Yelm:

"For 35,000 years, the mystic warrior Ramtha has spread enlightenment.

"Now he's cutting back.

"Ramtha's purported 'channeler' JZ Knight, has told students that Ramtha won't be making as many appearances this year, said Pavel Mikoloski, spokesman for Ramtha's School of Enlightenment.

"Mikoloski said Ramtha's retreat coincides with a need for Knight to have more time for herself, but is not a result of it." down there. Sweden is good for this kind of thing. England is good. South America, the Brazilians, the educated Brazilians tend to go for this stuff in big numbers. So, yeah, maybe she has some harvesting to do out there.

I don't know, I can't figure. It's interesting to watch because she's kind-of created her own trap. She can't get out of this.

Martin: There's nowhere to run.

Szimhart: She's stuck, so I think she's capitulated to the whole thing because there's nowhere to go. I mean, she's not going to do what Krishnamurti did and say "The whole thing's a fraud. There are no masters" which is

RAMTHA SPEAKS ABOUT DRUG ADDICTION (EARLY 1980s)

In the early 1980s, Ramtha spoke about drug addiction, and specifically included "strong drink" in his discourse. The following is a partial transcript of that talk. Compare the language used in this discourse (as well as content) versus the one later in this article.

"...And it is referred to, by that which be I, as the living necromancer. [Necromancy: a method of divination through invocation of the dead; magic in general, especially that practiced by a witch or sorcerer; conjuration.]

It is called “possession”, indeed. It is, of itself, a cloud that covers the light. And the possession, as it were, indeed, is not of that which is called another entity-self; that cannot occur. Possession is a dependency, as it were, on any one thing. So grand does the possession come, that it is in self-rulership of that which is possessed, and not only does it take over what is called “the spirit”, it removes the light and controls the body; that is a necromancer, for all that is received from the possession is fed into the soul and 'tis not wisdom that is fed into the soul, but possession that is fed into the soul, and that which is possessed lives in chains for eons to come because it does not have dominion over itself any longer, and becomes that which is called the winds and the devastation of the necromancer. That which is called the necromancer is the necromancer called possession. There are many of you who are gathered here who have been possessed, and still are possessed. It is a cloud within your soul.

Possessions: we will talk in order. And that which I am speaking of, entities, be the necromancer, as it were indeed, the weed, the necromancer strong drink, the necromancer cocaine, the necromancer heroin, the necromancer acid. You KNOW they are!

Beloved entities, that which ensnares you is the promise of gayety, of vision, of expanded mind. It will cause you to die, illiterate, without joy, without the embrace. That which you have taken, as it were, indeed, for the sake of finding joy, have found only in the moment that the liftiness to which you are feeling was the death of the cells in your wondrous receiver called your brain. The more that it is destroyed, the less capacity, as it were, indeed, for the grander frequencies of thought that come forth in unlimited profusion that ignite joy in the system, in the body-whole, and you are a no-thing. You are a necromancer, one who walks from the dead.

Possession is one who begins to have a dependency. To be possessed is to be enslaved to that one thing to which you have allowed to come into your life.

And it is not that one is so possessed they are outside of themselves. I am talking about the need to “get high”. Heard you the term? In man’s creation of social consciousness, times are very oppressing to those who are caught-up in it, and the struggle to survive and to be beautiful. A great travesty.

For those of you who, in order to have a good time, must partake of any of these things, who in order to face the day must have them, who in order to copulate to feel the real thing must partake of them, who just want to take them because it is the thing to do, you are possessed.

You say, “Nay!” You ARE. You see, because you are forcing within yourself a life-experience that is the greatest illusion of all, because you are running away from life, not living it. You are not allowing your greatest joy to issue forth. You are forcing it, superficially. You will never know who you are. And even if it is what is called occasionally, you are still possessed. To that which is called possession, you are possessed.

There was a prophecy created about this, your contemporary style of destruction, and it said: “Young men shall see visions, and old men shall drink to dreams in the days that are the last”—and so it is. But it was not that it was of natural accord, it was of the strong drink that they prophesied of. And so, you are, alas, the prophecy fulfilled. You are a joyless generation.

Now, who brought this upon you? Was it your neighbor? Your family? Your friend? It was YOU who allowed it to occur, for the experience of it.

But for many reasons, you who are gathered in this circle, did so. And the greatest reason of all is for you to escape yourself and to be accepted by others. To escape what your life is, that you have created for yourself, you are possessed. And that means that you are NOT the lord god of your being, because you have allowed, through the lord god of your being, to surrender it to another power that it would have dominion over you.

The experience was worth the embrace to understand it, but the necromancer, it is very powerful, for there are many reasons to stay, because you are weak. In loving yourself, one denies all things to have dominion over you. For it is only YOU who should have that right.

Let me tell you what you have done to yourself, for the experience of it: You have destroyed that which is called cellular mass within your receiver called the brain, and in particular, that which is called the right hemisphere. That is the part to which thought, once embraced in the body by the soul, gives back to that portion of the brain for vision, emotion, as it is termed.

You are destroying cellular mass there, and the cellular structure within the receiver does not copulate and interact and expand; when it dies, it is gone. So, it has done a terrible thing. It cannot be happy unless you take it.

And know you what you are receiving? The joy, the high? The high that you are receiving is the dying of your cells, for when same dies and passes this plane, it lifts itself up from the body and becomes unconcerned of the body. You are experiencing death of yourself. And the more that you do it, the greater loss of that which is called cellular mass.

There was a prophecy created about this, your contemporary style of destruction, and it said: “Young men shall see visions, and old men shall drink to dreams in the days that are the last”—and so it is. But it was not that it was of natural accord, it was of the strong drink that they prophesied of. And so, you are, alas, the prophecy fulfilled. You are a joyless generation.

I love you. If you knew how beautiful you were, if you KNEW how grand you were, if you knew how much of a difference you make in the mind of God—if you knew that, you should stand up and take dominion over your own life. But you don’t know.

There are some pretty good insights and advice here. Keep the tone of this message in mind to compare with what will follow from the same “mouth” later on. Right now I will return again to two topics I introduced earlier for the obvious role they both could play in understanding the more recent Ramtha School activities.

HYPNOSIS & MIND-CONTROL

Many people have a misunderstanding about the subject of hypnosis and mind control, generally. To clarify, somewhat, the subjects of hypnosis and mind control, which have been universally discounted by traditional cult experts, let’s hear what the experts on these subjects have to say.

The first description is from Transforming Therapy—A New Approach To Hypnotherapy, by master Gil Boyne:

“Hypnosis is a natural state of mind with special identifying characteristics: an extraordinary quality of relaxation; an emotionalized desire to satisfy the suggested behavior. The person feels like doing what the hypnotist suggests, provided that what is suggested does not generate conflict with his belief system; the organism becomes self-regulating and produces normalization of the central nervous system; heightened and selective sensitivity to stimuli perceived by the five senses and four basic perceptions; and immediate softening of psychic defenses.”

Expert Charles Tebbetts, author of Self-Hypnosis And Other Mind-Expanding Techniques offers that: “By its very nature, the subconscious mind must obey suggestions as though they were orders. During hypnosis, while the conscious mind is inhibited to such a great extent, it is possible to reach the subconscious with these suggestions, or orders, without their being influenced by conscious interpretations of related memories and fixed ideas.”

And then we have the more hard-hitting and certainly revealing 1977 comments by Richard Condon in Walter H. Bowart’s Operation Mind Control epic volume:

“The prostitution of the mind by our secret police preceded the murder of the mind. To attain the advanced techniques now available to “magnetic and attractive” political personalities, it was necessary to turn out the laboratories of science as a pimp turns out his heartless whores upon the winter streets; our hallowed educators, army and navy and air force commanders and personnel, the beloved medical profession, august and inspiring temples of the law, our esteemed statesmen, and all Americans living and dead. Each one of those groups is involved in this dismembering of the mind.”

And then Walter Bowart himself adds this ominous perspective:

“The testing of drugs by the CIA was just a part of the United States government’s top-secret mind-control project, a project which had spanned thirty-five years and had involved tens of thousands of individuals. It involved techniques of hypnosis, narco-hypnosis, electronic brain stimulation, behavioral effects of ultrasonic, microwave, and low-frequency sound, aversive and other behavioral modification therapies. In fact, there was virtually no aspect of human behavioral control that was not explored in their search for the means to control the memory and will of both individuals and whole masses of people.

“The CIA (and the Pentagon) succeeded in developing a whole range of psycho-weapons to expand its already ominous psychological warfare arsenal. With these capabilities, it was now possible to wage a new kind of war—a war which would take place invisibly, upon the battlefield of the human mind.”

FURTHER MATTERS OF HYPNOSIS

“I can hypnotize a man—without his knowledge or consent—into committing treason against the United States” boasted Dr. George Estabrooks in the early 1940s. [Operation Mind Control, Walter H. Bowart]

“If you think of hypnosis as altering someone’s state of consciousness, then any effective communication is hypnosis.” [TRANCE-formations: Neuro-Linguistic Programming And The Structure Of Hypnosis, John Grinder and Richard Bandler]

“The induction and maintenance of a trance serves to provide a special psychological state in which the patient can reassociate and reorganize his inner psychological complexities and utilize his own capacities in a manner in accord with his own experiential life. [Innovative Hypnotherapy: The Collected Papers Of Milton H. Erickson On Hypnosis, Vol. IV, Milton H. Erickson]

There is much food for thought in what we have just read. Next we turn to someone who the public is more familiar with as an astronomer and astrophysicist. The point of his cautionary advice should be self evident.

THE FINE ART OF BALONEY DETECTION By Carl Sagan

[Quoting portions of the article:]

More than a third of American adults believe that on some level they’ve made contact with the dead. A quarter of American’s believe in reincarnation.

J.Z. Knight of the State of Washington claims to be in touch with a 35,000-year-old somebody called “Ramtha”. He speaks English very well, using Knight’s tongue, lips, and vocal cords, producing what sounds to me to be an accent from the Indian Raj.

Since most people know how to talk, and many—from children to professional actors—have a repertoire of voices at their command, the simplest hypothesis is that Ms. Knight makes “Ramtha” speak all by herself, and that she has no contact with disembodied entities from the Pleistocene Ice Age. If there’s evidence to the contrary, I’d love to hear it. It would be considerably more impressive if Ramtha could speak by himself, without the assistance of Ms. Knight’s mouth. Failing that, how might we test the claim? (The actress Shirley MacLaine attests that Ramtha was her brother in Atlantis, but that’s another story.)

T.H. Huxley’s formulation was:...the foundation of morality is to give up pretending to believe that for which there is no evidence, and repeating unintelligible propositions about things beyond the possibilities of knowledge.

Credulous acceptance of baloney can cost you money; that is what P.T. Barnum meant when he said: “There’s a sucker born every minute.” But it can be much more dangerous than that, and when governments and societies lose the capacity for critical thinking, the results can be catastrophic—however sympathetic we may be to those who have bought the baloney.

What’s in the kit? Tools for skeptical thinking. Among the tools: [a partial list]

- Wherever possible there must be independent confirmation of the “facts”.

- Encourage substantive debate on the evidence by knowledgeable proponents of all points of view.

- Arguments from authority carry little weight—“authorities” have made mistakes in the past. They will do so again in the future. Perhaps a better way to say it is that in science there are no authorities; at most, there are experts.

- Spin more than one hypothesis. If there’s something to be explained, think of all the different ways in which it could be explained. Then think of tests by which you might systematically disprove each of the alternatives. What survives, the hypothesis that resists disproof in this Darwinian selection among “multiple working hypotheses”, has a much better chance of being the right answer than if you had simply run with the first idea that caught your fancy.

- Try not to get overly attached to a hypothesis just because it’s yours. It’s only a waystation in the pursuit of knowledge. Ask yourself why you like the idea. Compare it fairly with the alternatives. See if you can find reasons for rejecting it. If you don’t, others will.

- If there’s a chain of argument, every link in the chain must work (including the premise)—not just most of them.

- Occam’s Razor. This convenient rule-of-thumb urges us, when faced with two hypotheses that explain the data equally well, to choose the simpler.

- Always ask whether the hypothesis can be, at least in principle, falsified. Propositions that are untestable, unfalsifiable are not worth much. Consider the grand idea that our Universe and everything in it is just an elementary particle—an electron, say—in a much bigger Cosmos. But if we can never acquire information from outside our Universe, is not the idea incapable of disproof? You must be able to follow your reasoning, to duplicate your experiments, and see if they get the same result.

[End quoting]

These are good points to keep in mind as you weigh the data presented herein—especially the next couple of sections to follow.

THE GOLDEN THREAD

Let us now turn to The Golden Thread Enterprises newsletter—that’s the Ramtha newsletter—dated April 2000. One can’t help but note that the contents are merely reproductions of old teachings, from December 9, 1993, with nothing of recent material. And one is reminded of other “declining” channels who simply rerun past works in an attempt to somehow hold onto their paying audience.

Further, within The Golden Thread newsletter, in addition to preparedness advertising, there are three ads for wine shops, and two ads for pipe/tobacco shops. This is a sharp contrast from the earlier WINDWORDS publication. Let's examine the new publication more closely.

THE TWO PATHS Ramtha, October 1999

"The teachings of today will manifest in the lives of everyone who hears them, whosoever shall watch this video, that their lives will be changed, forever. So be it." Loud cheers from the audience. "My name, my authority, and my permission is on this tape."

"Focus on my eyes—when you are sick and you have forgotten to believe, all you have to do is focus on this face [JZ Knight]. This face is burned into your training because my consciousness is greater than any weakness you could possibly possess. And anyone who watches this are going to get those close-ups of me, and I am going to work wonders in the world." Loud cheers from the audience.

During 1999, in addition to the events held at the school located at JZ Knight's ranch, Ramtha's School of Enlightenment presented events in Australia, South Africa, Mexico, Scotland, Italy, Germany, and Japan. There are over 3,000 students that travel from 25 foreign countries to attend Ramtha's school.

One of the disciplines used at the school is an ancient ritual—the wine ceremony. It is a sacred initiation used by Ramtha to teach his students.

Two instructors from Ramtha's School of Enlightenment will explain the significance of the ceremony from an historical and scientific basis. Dr. Micael Ledwith, with doctorate degrees in Law and Theology. He has been a Catholic priest for over 30 years. He is the former President of Minute College in Ireland, and was a member of the International Theological Commission as an advisor to the Pope. He has been a student in Ramtha's School for over 10 years.

Dr. Ledwith: "...But one thing that does stick out, when we look back across the panoply of history, of conventional history at least, is the place that wine has had down through the whole story of the human race. We find that each of the prominent societies and civilizations revered wine, and used it, to our way of thinking today, in enormous quantities, and it is equally obvious that there was more to the wine use than simply merry-making and partying. It had a much more significant purpose than appears on the surface....

"So there was more to the presence of the wine in that tomb [Egyptian tomb] than some replication of the life of the Pharaoh in another realm—a much, much greater significance. But we begin to get a clue as to what that significance might have been, in some of the earlier, chronologically earlier, parts of the Hebrew Bible, the Old Testament. In the Book of Deuteronomy, for instance, we're told that God—even though the Hebrew word is plural, the Gods—that God gave the gift of wine to the human race, and that he used the wine supply to keep them in-check. If they were getting a little ahead of themselves, not behaving themselves properly, not being as reverential toward God as they should be, he threatened to cut-off the supply of wine, and did. So, people obviously were very, very strongly influenced by the supply of wine, and really concerned that it should not be removed from them."

Dr. Joe Dispenza, an avid medical researcher (and chiropractor), will explain the neurophysiology and health benefits of red wine and pipe tobacco. He has been a student in RSE for over 10 years:

"In the last 10 years, the research done on red wine has been pretty remarkable. We now know, from a scientific standpoint, that red wine has anti-cancer effects; that it has anti-aging effects; that it helps with neurodegenerative diseases, like Alzheimer's and senility; it helps with cardiovascular disease, and cerebral vascular diseases, like strokes; it helps with impotence and it helps with memory; because of its antibacterial and antimicrobial properties, it's also known to strengthen the immune system."

Joe Dispenza continues at great length about the beneficial chemical compounds found in wine—the phenols, their anti-oxidant effects, etc. Excerpting more from his discourse we learn:

"Now, these are just some of the health benefits that we find in red wine, but it's not the reason why we drink red wine in the school. These health benefits are almost like a side-effect of why we drink red wine. We drink red wine in our school because of its effect on the brain.

"There is another chemical in red wine called nitric oxide. Now, it's a lot like nitrous oxide. Nitrous oxide is the anesthetic that they use in dental practices, but nitric oxide is like a sister to that molecule....

"The first thing about nitric oxide when it enters the body, when you drink red wine, is that it causes a tremendous amount of vasodilation. It causes the blood vessels to actually relax and enlarge. And now we know that the area where this increased blood supply takes place is right up in the brain and in the lungs. And so now, we have more oxygen making its way to the brain; we have more blood supply going to the brain, we have more nutrients going to the brain....

"The second reason why nitric oxide works so well in the body is because it actually acts as a neurotransmitter, and what a neurotransmitter does, there are areas on a cell that are selectively permeable for molecules to move in and out of. Nitric oxide, basically, causes those receptors to become much more permeable....

"In the presence of nitric oxide, when the nitric oxide makes its way into the cell, it does something really special. It causes the nerve cell to actually relax. It causes the nerve cell to actually become elastic and plastic. And the word in science that they use for this is called neuroplasticity. So the nerve cell, in the presence of nitric oxide, basically, it unhooks from our present associations of being a human being. Now, being a human being, I'm talking about the connections that have to do with our own personal suffering, our personal emotional identity that has to do with limited emotions, experiences in our past that have been shocking or traumatic. Those are all synaptic connections, and in the presence of red wine and the nitric oxide, those nerve cells relax and we, basically, unhook from that façade of our human identity that really has everything to do with the past.

"And the moment we unhook from that is the main reason for the state of what we call stasis, it moves into the moment. We learn at the School of Enlightenment that in the moment is when we create reality. So, now we have this brain that's become very neuroplastic, very elastic, and its disengaged from the hard-wiring that we live by for our survival; our survival centers are actually relaxed. We are more present in the moment....

"We have an increased blood supply to the brain now, more oxygen getting to the brain, which means more nutrients getting to the brain. We have neuroplasticity; we have the elasticity, the relaxation of the neuron, much like a child. A child learns at an alarming rate because their brain is so plastic, so elastic. And we have a neuron now that's sprouting new connections.

"And if we sat in the presence of a master teacher, if we sat in the presence of a heirophant, if we sat in the presence of a great mind, and we allowed ourselves to follow a train of thought that had nothing to do with our survival but everything to do with something unlimited, something extraordinary, something outside the box, we notice that our acceptance increases. And when our acceptance increases, we're actually making connections to other parts of the brain. We're actually changing the mechanics, we're changing the physiology of the brain. So, that's part of the wine ceremony, and the reason we drink red wine at a wine ceremony is a very sacred experience for us, because we're interested in the consumption of knowledge to build bigger models of thought. Bigger models of thought mean bigger reality. Small model of thought, small reality....

“So, the pipe tobacco, then, is a facilitator in bringing nitric oxide to the brain in a different way. So, now that creates more plasticity in the brain as well, it creates more potential connections for the elasticity in the brain for more gathering of data, more gathering of knowledge.”

We'll return in a bit to further quoting from The Two Paths. Note the passages of the discourse which I have emphasized. There seems to be no attention paid to the “down” side of the effects only being praised. And if that were not enough of a formula for disaster, how about the following—remembering last month's shocking Front Page feature article/interview in this newspaper.

THE RAMTHA SCHOOL AND PROZAC: IS THIS TRUE?

In an article appearing in David Icke's E-magazine, by Per Sewen and David Icke, dated 1/21/00, we learn something that really causes pause for thought and hints at the possible “crumbling” of an “empire”.

[Quoting:]

The Ramtha School near Yelm in Washington State is one of the best known New Age centers in the United States. “Ramtha” is supposed to be an entity channeled by a lady called JZ Knight and these channelings are the foundation for this “school”. This is a posting from a conspiracy investigator, Per Sewen, Illuminati News.

I have a friend who receives a newsletter from the Ramtha school—she's not a member anymore, but still gets the paper. Sir Laurence Gardner is a most welcomed visitor and lecturer at the school and his briefings are part of the belief of the Ramtha members. He is also a good friend of “Ramtha” and JZ Knight. I got this note from my friend this morning:

“Got some Ramtha news today. Ramtha has left. He says for good, but one never knows. JZ Knight has taken off for 6 months travelling around the world with her boyfriend.

Before Ramtha left he announced that JZ has been on Prozac for 2 years and it has healed her!!!”

JZ and Ramtha know that whatever they say or comment on, the mass of followers pick up on it immediately. So now everyone in the “Master's Community” are looking to get on Prozac.

The word has spread all over the world and the person I talked to said he even got a call from Australia asking how to get this Prozac and could he send some over. So he was asking me about it. He didn't have a lot more details because the announcements are made during “wine ceremonies” when everyone is drunk.

[End quoting]

PROZAC & INCREASED PREGNANCIES AT RAMTHA'S SCHOOL

It is a safe statement, journalistically, to say that it is common knowledge among the residents of Yelm, that Prozac use among the students at Ramtha's School of Enlightenment is significant. It is also common knowledge that there has been a significant increase in pregnancies among those women attending Ramtha's School.

Is this increase in pregnancies the result of Prozac use? Is it the result of the drunken binge sessions at the School? No one knows for sure. But it certainly is worth mentioning because many lives are affected.

There has, in addition, been a sudden change in the drinking volume at the School. In the Spring of this year, when 500 people did NOT show up for one of the major “required” events, Ramtha “suddenly” announced that his followers were to only drink 3 glasses of wine per day and no more. (This after months of sessions with virtually unlimited drinking.)

What about the Prozac connection to all this? Are the alarm bells going off yet for you?

PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA?

By Ann Blake Tracy

In the marvelous book Prozac: Panacea Or Pandora? featured in last month's Front Page story in this newspaper, by Dr. Ann Blake Tracy, we read the following relevant excerpts, taken from throughout her important work. Remember what was said earlier by Walter H. Bowart in his classic Operation Mind Control volume about the advanced and diverse nature of secret mind-control projects. I will simply present some portions of Dr. Tracy's research as “bullets” of information.

[Quoting:]

• In 1947, the same year that Switzerland's Sandoz introduced LSD, the United States organized the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). They too had a great interest in drugs for chemical warfare and mind-control in particular. After several years of using scopolamine and liquid marijuana, they began searching for additional, even stronger mind-altering drugs, and turned to LSD. Their goal was to find a chemical which would: (1) cause a disruption in memory; (2) discredit individuals by producing aberrant behavior; (3) alter sexual patterns; (4) elicit information from the person; (5) open one's mind to suggestion for mind control; and (6) create addiction and dependence (Storming Heaven: LSD And The American Dream). If the reader will read the chapter titled “Patient Reports”, they will find those on Prozac reporting all six of these results as reactions to the drug.

• The commonly used legal stimulants would be caffeine (found in tea, coffee, aspirin, No-Doz, soda, Vivarin, etc.) and nicotine. (If it was shocking to you to learn that nicotine was considered by the CIA for mind-control experimentation, you need to know that although we generally think of nicotine as a “mild” stimulant, it is known to be a highly addictive, poisonous chemical which causes addiction after only a few weeks of use. Additionally, in 1985 there were 300,000 tobacco-related deaths in U.S. as compared to 643 reported cocaine-related deaths.)

• THE PROZAC TOXICITY SYNDROME:

Reports by Prozac survivors present a consistent pattern of compulsively driven thoughts and activities, especially suicidal and violent behavior. Typically the behavior is “out of character” for these individuals who become hostile, paranoid, euphoric, energized, hyperactive, undisciplined, unable to sleep, subjectively grandiose and omnipotent, and insensitive to the effects of their behavior on themselves or others.

Racing thoughts of “a mind that won't stop going” are typical. Periods of “crashing” and depression are common. Short-term memory and attention span are almost always impaired. Much more rarely patients become frankly confused and disoriented. Cognitive and emotional difficulties often persist after stopping the drug. Addiction and withdrawal symptoms are common, including severe depression and a worsening of suicidal or violent impulses.

• During the drug reaction, individuals do not realize that they are behaving abnormally, but later they may be appalled by their actions. Afterward, they frequently cannot clearly recall their actions.

• Dr. Bruce Janiak wants patients to understand that caffeine and nicotine are drugs which will interact with medications and increase one's chances of drug interaction, and over-the-counter medications will do the same.

• Alcohol is the worst culprit. When alcohol and drugs are combined, one can compound the effects of the other so the resulting impairment is far worse than if the two were taken separately.... Even small amounts, mixed with some medicines, will deaden your senses or change your perceptions. This changing of perceptions is exactly what patients report when mixing Prozac with alcohol or one of the benzodiazepines such as Xanax, Halcion, etc.

Alcohol depresses the central nervous system, and if you use it along with other depressants, such as narcotics, tranquilizers, or barbiturates, the effect is multiplied.... Caffeine and nicotine are drugs, too, and can cause an adverse drug reaction in your body. It is very rare to see an individual on Prozac without a large diet Coke or Pepsi in their hand every second of the day, or drinking 10 to 15 cups of coffee to start their day—another indication of the obsession for caffeine, sweets, alcohol, nicotine, or other drugs reported by ex-Prozac patients.

- Then there are the reports of sexual compulsions—young people firmly committed to reserve sex for marriage find themselves expecting a child after starting on Prozac, previously faithful wives and husbands committing adultery, heterosexuals having homosexual sex, etc. There are many other reports of people with a background of high morals and values and strong marriages suffering the same reactions.

- Increased libido or decreased libido? Although some patients report increased libido, a side effect listed in the Prozac package insert, a recent study (Journal Of Clinical Psychiatry, April, 1993) shows the opposite. It reports that 34% of patients said that their sexual desire or response had diminished after taking Prozac. Overall, 43% of women taking antidepressants report less sexual desire.

- As the brain fights to maintain normal levels of each neurotransmitter, various foreign chemicals (caffeine, nicotine, sugar, artificial sweeteners, food additives, environmental pollutants, drug residues in meat and dairy products, and all the various mind-altering drugs) constantly interrupt the balance and causes a constant revving up of the adrenal system. This repetitious stimulus conditions an overreaction of the adrenals over time. While one foreign chemical affects one or several transmitters, other neurotransmitters react by raising or lowering their own specific levels, which in turn affects additional neurotransmitters until there is massive disruption in brain function and level of consciousness.

- The patient begins to act completely “out of character”. We have Prozac patients who are considered to be stalwart citizens of the community gradually feeling less and less guilt. They begin shoplifting, robbing, or embezzling, or becoming obsessed with sex, alcohol, or money. They push those they care about the most out of their lives, their family and friends, and have little or nothing to do with them. They feel they can no longer trust themselves and often form co-dependent relationships by turning that trust over to a strong authority figure, i.e., business acquaintance, doctor, therapist, etc. They become so impulsive that they are unsure of what they might do next. They feel totally out of control. They leave their religions because they can no longer feel the spiritual feelings they had previously. They feel a rage unlike anything they have ever felt before and assume it must be brought on by the person closest to them as they begin to turn against those they care about the most. They become very arrogant and critical of those around them. They either become oversexed or do not want to be touched at all and report no longer being able to actually feel love. They often begin drinking alcohol, whether they ever have in the past or not. They begin experiencing homicidal and suicidal compulsions, even to the point of stalking those they loved the most before using Prozac. All of this “out of character” behavior called for a very large degree of understanding and forgiveness, not only by the family and friends, but by the patient as well on his or her own behalf. The task of rebuilding one’s life and self-esteem after this type of reaction is overwhelming.

- Dr. Abram Hoffer, a Canadian psychiatrist and author of Orothomolecular Medicine For Physicians states: “Alcohol per se is almost a liquid replacement for the simple sugars. Like the refined sugars it is devoid of all the elements of any food.... It causes generalized malnutrition by forcing a dependence on other foods, for nutrients are required to metabolize and neutralize the effects of alcohol.... No one doubts alcoholics are more prone to anti-social and criminal behavior than are non-alcoholics.... The addiction to alcohol is very like the addiction to sugar.”

- The medical terminology for this inability to control blood sugar is “hypoglycemia”. It means that the pancreas becomes so accustomed to a constant barrage of stimuli that it just keeps right on working, even when there is no need to produce insulin. This extra insulin in the blood lowers the blood sugar level and the body cries out for something to raise that level back to normal. A rush of adrenaline will raise the sugar, so most people react by reaching for something that causes that rush and raises the blood sugar quickly (i.e., alcohol, coffee, nicotine, sugary snacks, etc.). This only further complicates the problem by causing the pancreas to become overstimulated once again. The combination of all these factors becomes a vicious cycle as the patient grows worse from his natural instinct to bring the blood sugar level back to normal. If the progress of the disease is not halted by the patient making strict changes in their dietary code, the pancreas does burn out and drastically slows down or quits and the patient has, at that point, developed hyperglycemia—diabetes.

[End quoting]

So, with all of the above effects of Prozac, especially in conjunction with alcohol and nicotine, what might be the outcome of the Ramtha “ceremonies” wherein these are all prime ingredients?

Let’s return now to the Ramtha School.

RAMTHA: THE TWO PATHS

October, 1999

[Quoting:]

Prayer: (aloud with audience repeating)

My greatest work is within myself. And the fact of my past and my emotional addictions, to permanently insist on living forever, and not the curse that will lead me to death of my own personality. I crucified my personality to the point of pain I could tolerate, that I wish to die to my spiritual created personality, and awaken to my spiritual life of incredible genius, marvelous mind, and forever youth, and to this end, the great work I have been, never shall I regret the work I have done, and let us continue on. From the lord god of my being, so be it.

Miracles happen when we die to our personality....

JZ/Ramtha: You may be seated, and let’s light up those pipes.

- The last speaker spoke on mind control, and it’s much more pervasive than you know. And the mind control is indeed a secret weapon. It is the greatest secret weapon. Yes, there are astute psychic people working for the governments of the world, but then there are those dangerous individuals who have been controlled and manipulated.

- If you cannot focus yourself out of your sickness, focus on me and let my consciousness be in your body, and you watch how quickly it changes. Turn to your neighbor and tell them what I just said.

- Now, I want you to stay with me. I smoke the pipe, you smoke the pipe. I drink wine, you drink wine. This isn’t mind control as you’ve learned, it is actually freedom from it. How many of you understand?

- Am I inducing mind control on you? No. I know that when I was with you last I said yes, but only because you were fresh from the audience. Now that you’re starting to read, I want you to see how we’re outlining that. Because you are a god, and you do have a soul, and you do have a holy spirit.

And listen, make no mistake about it, the Philadelphia experience (experiment) did happen, and it did rip time, and all these things that NASA does—NASA requests billions and billions and billions of taxpayers’ dollars to promote these programs that do not cost billions and billions. They are a cover, because they already know now to inter-dimensionalize.

How many of you understand? They have gone to the past and they have gone to the future. How many of you understand that? Now, if they've gone to the future and they're coming back here and they're underway with mind control, then obviously they've seen something in the future that has not included them. (loud cheers from the audience) Turn to your partner and tell them that.

I see the future every time that I am with you. I see all of your futures.

- A sip of wine, only a sip...stay with me. We are on a greater mission than you have ever, ever understood. Only a sip...and let's make this sip to everlasting consciousness, the god within us, that this school is about becoming the consciousness of god and not the vulnerability to lies about humanity. So be it.

When you read the material (mind control), and I charge you to do that, and when I ask you and I tell you that I charge you to do it, I expect you to do it. How many of you understand?

- Anyone, any people, place, thing, time, or event that uses a product, uses that which is termed a modality, uses a concept to emotionally get you to respond, is mind control. How many understand?

- All of you who have just come in, my master builders, greetings. (shouts from audience) Before your people come in I want [you to drink] 3 glasses of wine, and after the third glass of wine, I want you to light your pipe. And after you've lit your pipe, then you have another fourth of a glass, and you do it now.

And please move a little closer, all of you, my master builders. All master builders bring your ladies and come closer. How many understand what I just taught you? Now, quiet. Shhh. There's a consistency in every one of my teachings, and all you have to look for is the golden thread in it. I got your attention. What is the golden thread? It is a consistency that leads us, step by step, to awakening, so listen to me.

Depression is to depress energy. And if it's making its way to the brain, a person that looks and appears depressed is actually a person without the volatility of emotions. And you want to "cure" that by making him energetic and emotional, which means, you want to make their energy drop back down. How many of you understand that?

Now, depression is dangerous in the world, it's dangerous. It has created more suicide than anything, because it is the root of failure—meaning that it is the root that has failed to be as active as the contingent of reality in which it lives. And what that actually means is, that any person endeavoring to be depressed is only going to be ostracized by the villainous attitude of emotion that they have once created, and if they try to change, they're not feeding the emotion or the agreement of that one path. How many of you understand? Everyone who's depressed should walk away from every emotional aspect of their life and find a place where that depression can be understood and fully explained, without psychotherapy, psychiatry, or without medicine. Turn to your neighbor and tell them that.

- Depression is a natural movement of energy away from the atmosphere of human emotion. If we are consciousness and energy, which we are, then depression would be to "depress emotion", that's why everyone says that we're glum, and we're not all atmosphere, and we're introverted, how many of you understand? Do you know what that's a sign of? Energy moving....

- A little nitric oxide hitting your brain right away is going to make these teachings part of your neuro-net.

[After consuming 5 bottles of wine, and smoking many pipe-bowls full of tobacco, an obviously drunk JZ/Ramtha says:]

- Now, one day, you'll be able to drink 5 bottles of wine and stay conscious and you'll be more clear than you have ever been before because you have never gone so deep into your brain and all of the appendages in it to find a place of absolute knowingness."

[End quoting]

Does this recent Ramtha or his messages seem at all like the early Ramtha messages such as I presented early in this article? Might there be some "downward slippage" in terms of what has happened with the Ramtha teachings? Have we seen this same phenomenon happen with others who have claimed to be receivers for the Lighted Brotherhood? Let us consider the following information very carefully.

DARK ROBES, DARK BROTHERS

by Master Hilarion

(1981, Marcus Books, Toronto, Canada)

[Quoting:]

The last category we wish here to discuss relates to materialism. This is a very broad topic, but can be summed up under two headings: possessions and atheism. The lust for material possessions has been abetted by the rich life-style of twentieth century living, at least for countries in the West.

- In some cases, though not all, the soul who had previously been following a conventional series of lives might suddenly become inspired to strive harder, to climb out of the common mold, to gain a deeper understanding of the meaning of existence.

So the soul is born into the current life-pattern. Because of that previous contact with the spiritually advanced person, the soul is born with a goal. It watches, keeps looking. It feels that something is just around the corner—some clue which will give it the understanding it lacks, the grasp of meaning which is not there. Then it happens: a chance meeting (or so it seems) introduces the soul to a different way of living or thinking—some teacher takes the soul into his circle of influence, some book seems to contain the signposts that are sought.

But here is the test of discernment, of the inner recognition of truth. For there are many false teachers upon the Earth in the present day, many so-called gurus and sages who hold out a certain philosophy of living and acting. These may attract the new seeker for a time, but if the teachings are not fully in tune with the higher truths, or if the teacher himself (herself) does not behave in accordance with the philosophy he proclaims, then the seeker is expected to see the dichotomy and to become aware that perhaps this mode of thought is only a half-way house, a way-station on the path to a better and higher wisdom.

• We stress that the seeker is always given ample clues to the true nature of any individual or movement. He need merely open his eyes and read the signals directly. They never lie.

We have dealt with the groups and movements which are intended to trap the unwary seeker. Most of these things are abetted and encouraged by the energies of the Dark Brotherhood—which is not to say that the leaders or main instigators are themselves mere puppets of the dark ones. In some cases this is true, but in the majority of such movements, the Dark Brotherhood merely spurs on the innate negativity of the leader, prompting him to seek wealth through the movement, or control over others, or fame.

As to the souls who become entrapped by the movement, they too are influenced wherever possible by the Dark Brothers, who are attempting to KEEP them locked-up in a movement where they will not be able to use their enthusiasm and energy in reaching directly out to their brothers living normal lives. The idea is to trap the unwary seekers in a “backwater”, to take them out of the mainstream, between the seeker and members of his own family, so that the energies of the seeker will be tied up in the emotional struggle and thus be unavailable to help his brothers.

[End quoting]

How many times do the Master Teachers and Guides who write, through receivers, for this publication—including Master Hilarion—urge us to call for Higher Help and keep the Light of Creator Source around us at all times? The Master Trickster and his Dark Brothers know all too well how to carry out their often subtle testings here on schoolroom Earth!

CLOSING REMARKS

I remember sitting in one of the front rows of an old movie theater in Weed, California, just outside of Mt. Shasta. The year was, I believe, 1986. My mother and I were guests of Sister Thedra, of A.S.S.K., the Association of Sananda and Sanat Kumara. We were there to

There are always clues, signs along the way. Watch for those signs—in this case alcohol, tobacco and Prozac—and they will tell you what you need to know.

hear Penny Torres and the entity she channeled, Mafu. The topic of his talk was “Coming Home to God”. There seemed to be quite an up-roar among those attending that there had been a $10 cover-charge to get in. I will never forget Mafu speaking through Penny Torres and apologizing profusely for such a cost. He told everyone that anybody who would like a refund, simply ask upon leaving. He seemed very embarrassed by the whole incident. What a contrast to what is taking place at Ramtha’s School of Enlightenment, at JZ’s three-million-dollar estate.

There are always clues, signs along the way. Watch for those signs—in this case alcohol, tobacco and Prozac—and they will tell you what you need to know.

For example, how is it that an “enlightened” being would present such an impassioned talk about the necromancer and strong drink, and then a decade or two later, ADVOCATE strong drink, particularly with statements like: “Now, I want you to stay with me. I smoke the pipe, you smoke the pipe. I drink wine, you drink wine.”

Does this add up? Have you ever heard of or read an “enlightened teacher” advocating any substance to facilitate an awakening of self? What did Ramtha say in the early ’80s? “Possession is a dependency, as it were, on any one thing.... It removes the light and controls the body; that is a necromancer....”

But don’t people have a right, in a free country such as America, to do what they want? Well, within the law, yes; within the Constitutional freedoms we live under, yes. If people want to throw their money away, don’t they have that right? Yes. If people want to hurt themselves, don’t they have that right, as it is a “victimless” event?

Is it? What about the children dragged into such an atmosphere? What about the emotional costs to family and friends? Do not be fooled by talk of phenols and vasodilation and enlightenment through such as excessive wine consumption. Discernment starts with YOU.

The greatest Teacher who spent time on Earth said it simply and said it best: “The Kingdom of God is within you.” That does not mean giving your power to another. That does not mean that you must be told by someone else. Christ said what he meant: “The Kingdom of God is within you.”

Part of the glorious freedom that we all enjoy so much entails the responsibility to discern for self and act in response to our Inner Knowing—not blindly follow some guru, no matter how dazzling or appealing.

Always keep in mind, the choices you make today will create your reality tomorrow. Let those choices be filled with joy and no regrets.

Let me conclude this exploration by simply restating some comments I made back at the beginning:

My only intent with this story is to put forth some observations based upon many hours of research on this subject. This is a story about people giving their power away into the hands of a guru. Many in the Ramtha School would take exception to such a statement. They would probably say something like: “No, no. The Ramtha School of Enlightenment is about personal empowerment.”

But is it really?

Compassion Along The Lighted Path Of Creation

7/24/00 HATONN

Good afternoon, my scribe. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Light of Holy Creator—The One Light. Be still and be at peace.

Thank you for sitting this day and allowing an opportunity for this communication. As always, the choice to do so is yours and We are grateful for the opportunity to express in this manner.

There are many concerns you ones have, related to what seems to be a non-stop attack by ones claiming to be Godly people. Our message to you is: pay no attention to these ones who mouth empty accusations and veiled threats. They seek to hide from the Light of exposure you have shown upon them, and they therefore feel a great need to try and discredit you at every turn.

Notice also that they are quick to attack the messengers, rather than the messages you ones offer. This is the only clue you need in order to know who really authors such negativity.

Let these ones stand as testimony to what can happen to good-hearted people who let their guard down, and thus the adversarial forces gain their foothold. The anger that permeates from these ones craves a battle—and yet we caution you ones that there is no balance in throwing gasoline on such a fire. The only thing you will accomplish is a great distraction of time and energy.

We warned these ones in the past that we would no longer protect them if they persisted along their chosen path, and though they may have laughed at our cautionary warnings, they have witnessed—and will continue to witness—a crumbling of their once great dream. Such is THEIR choice.

I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, find no joy in watching ones fly off course. I would gladly offer to these ones my guidance again, and yet when it is offered, there is not acceptance, for the ego's grip on these ones is great, and they will not allow for the suggestions of action that will allow them to return to a more balanced state.

Rather, there is a great desire to gain large sums of money so that they can OUTWARDLY prove their worth to the world. These ones need the lessons they are quickly creating for themselves.

The resources they seek would only be allowed to flow when a truly balanced Heart energy flow has been achieved. This has not been the case, for the hearts of these ones grow hardened with anger and grief as they are met with one failure after another, and the promises of weeks turn into months and years.

They cannot stand the idea of returning empty-handed, and thus there is a great inner struggle raging within them. If they were allowed any significant resource, the first thing these ones intend to do is attack The SPECTRUM and all ones associated with it. This is simply not acceptable.

Creation is always born of the One Idea (Thought) and Desire. You begin from there and, as your desire increases in intensity and the idea (thought) is held without waver or distraction, the manifestation will occur. The entire physical universe, and beyond, was created and continues to be created in this very manner.

Allow these ones to their choices, for they have created these circumstances for themselves. Beyond what you need to know in order to find balance and compassion in YOUR heart, it should be no concern to you what these ones think about you.

These ones would do well for themselves to go back and re-read the earlier messages we have penned in this publication, and see that they are as much for them as they are for any others.

Dear ones, find compassion for your brother or sister when they slip or stumble, for they most often will not allow themselves to accept that they have been tricked, once again, by the Master Trickster.

I cannot state enough times the importance of keeping the Light about you at all times. When you endeavor toward the Light, you become a beacon which re-radiates that same Light. You also become a threat to, and a target for, the dark ones who do not wish for you to help awaken others.

Much like in the game of chess, your opponent pays very little attention to your pawns on the board. He'll take them, given the chance, but will not usually make them a high priority.

But, as a pawn progresses across the board and gets close to the point of transformation into a much more powerful piece, usually a queen, that pawn becomes the center of attention, and all sorts of obstacles and direct attacks become focused upon stopping the pawn from reaching the point of transformation (opposite side of the board). It almost always takes a great deal of protection from other pieces on the board for this to take place.

Many a wayshower has been stopped just short of reaching this final, transitional point in their awakening process, as a result of what we term "adversarial intervention". We of the Lighted Realms wish to protect and guard you ones, but we also, above all else, honor your free-will choice. Many times our wayshowers simply fail to remember the basics: keep the Light of Creator God around you CONSTANTLY.

In any event, these wayward ones should be looked upon as courageous individuals who carried forth the torch of Lighted Truth for as long as they could, and when they stumbled, others are ALWAYS there to offer assistance to help them back up. If this assistance is rejected, it is always due to the fear mechanism of the ego, which does not want ones to see that they had a moment of weakness.

When such a situation crosses your path, please keep such ones in your prayers, for they truly see not what it is they are doing to themselves. You ones truly create your own worst hells. In some such cases, you will witness these ones withdrawing from the physical experience. Some will even become suicidal with apathy (as in "What's the use in continuing on?") rather than simply admit that they had slipped and fallen.

Send Light and Love to these ones. Cast not judgment upon them, for God monitors the heart of the entity, not the words or the transient thoughts which seem to preoccupy their minds, most of which may not necessarily be their own (and if these thoughts—and the projecting entities of these thoughts—weren't invited, they were not of the Light).

No one there in the physical at this time is beyond the reach of the dark manipulation of the Master Trickster—Devil, Satan, Lucifer—call it what you like, these references are synonymous to most ones, though there are distinctions in the energies for the more astute observer. You each, as you progress along your spiritual pathway toward a greater understanding, will undoubtedly be faced with the challenges and obstacles from these dark ones. How will you fare?

Ideally, the successful Lightworkers will learn, early-on, to make the affirmation of Light such an integral part of their daily life that they will be in a near constant state of prayer—a constant affirmation of Light. Anger, apathy, and grief will be rare in the life of ones who achieve such a state. These ones will exude charm, charisma, fortitude, grace, and certainty as a natural byproduct of the Light they shine forth through them.

Your world is full of ones who can destroy the creation of others, yet your world is in great need of inspired builders who keep the whole of humanity in mind as their inspiration is shared with the world. Such great ones are few and far between, but they are there now on your planet, and they will continue to come forth, time and time again, for their compassion to help others knows no limit.

Your world will be brought into balance, and there will be greatness beyond anything you can now conceive. It is done one step at a time, with like-minded individuals working toward a common Idea that has, at its center, a focus on Creator Source and the spiritual freedom of expression of the Inspiration offered.

Creation is always born of the One Idea (Thought) and Desire. You begin from there and, as your desire increases in intensity and the idea (thought) is held without waver or distraction, the manifestation will occur. The entire physical universe, and beyond, was created and continues to be created in this very manner.

Let not the illusion dictate your perceptions of what is. Look beyond the illusion (the physical) and see Source. Creator Source IS all there IS!

We are ALL a part of this One Source, despite the illusion of individuality. To hate or despise another is truly a character "flaw" of the one doing the despising or hating—borne of ignorance. In essence you are hating yourself, and thus failing to recognize the very fundamental BASICS of who you are and your relation to the rest of what IS.

Learn to love others as you would love yourself. If you do not love yourself, then please realize that you dishonor Creator Source—the One who Created you. He created you in perfection, balance, and with purpose. You are product of this Perfect Desire. You each are loved dearly, compassionately, and completely, regardless of your beliefs, opinions, actions, or past deeds. There is nothing that Creator does not understand about you, for Creator IS YOU!

As you continue along your spiritual journey within the illusion of the physical, these mere words will gather greater meaning and dimensional depth. There is no greater joy than the conscious grasp and true heartfelt understanding of KNOWING Oneness with Creator while still incarnate in the physical. Such is the ultimate destination and final "graduation" of the physical journey.

You each were created to walk a unique path that leads to this ultimate destination. Judge not the "rightness" or "wrongness" of another's chosen path, for it is truly without merit to do so.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Light of OUR Father—Creator Source—The One Light!

Blessings and Peace to you all, my brothers and sisters of Light.

FDA-Postal Raid On "The Phoenix Group"

Editor's note: In the June issue of The SPECTRUM we presented on page 16 an article titled "The Curious Case Of Dave Overton's Gold And The Phoenix Institute" which required us to revisit a most pathetic and unpleasant subject we would just as soon leave in the past. We thought that ended our responsibility to share with some of you some very important and revealing information.

Then we came across more incredible information on another facet of this same convoluted subject, which we then shared last month in the July issue of The SPECTRUM, on page 33, in a report titled "Revealing Article About Phoenix Institute Directors: Paying Back What Debt?" Again we thought we were done reporting on this distasteful topic. But that was not to be.

In a surprise move, starting bright and early the morning of Thursday, July 13, special agents of the Food and Drug Administration, the U.S. Postal Inspector's Office, and the Kern County (California) Sheriff's Office descended upon a business office complex for New Gaia Products and the CONTACT newspaper, various "storage" facilities, and residences in the small California town of Tehachapi. They simultaneously struck related offices and facilities in Las Vegas, Nevada.

As was stated in editorials preceding both of those previous articles, the following information is not important to many of our newer readers. However, it may be VERY, VERY important and revealing additional news for our longtime readers and supporters who have walked along with us in the creation of The SPECTRUM—which resulted from an inately vengeful attack on The Truth by the managing agents of this same "Phoenix Group".

(See the www.contactnews10.com website, which is operated by a private archiving consortium that has been under almost constant attack by those who do not wish The Truth to remain available for scrutiny, for details of the clash which birthed this newspaper—in the final three issues of "our" CONTACT, for the dates of 3/15/99, 3/22/99, and 3/26/99. note the recent writing by Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, directly preceding this article, wherein this matter is addressed with great insight and compassion.)

Bakersfield, California (the nearest large city) television news programs carried several days of reports and film footage on what went on during the 7/13/00 raid, by whom, and why. As was described in those reports, one reason for the raid was an array of serious questions and concerns about both the quality and purity of various items offered by New Gaia Products, as well as the accuracy of claims made about the products which are regularly featured in the CONTACT newspaper and elsewhere.

Sources closely associated with this "ongoing investigation" further relate that:

- While searching for and confiscating evidence at the Park Way home of Doris Ekker's daughter, Diane Kunick, who presides over New Gaia Products, a large safe was found containing half-a-million dollars ($500,000) in gold coins, some of which are very old and quite valuable from a numismatic perspective. This was counted (to ascertain the total numerical value) in the presence of several of the raid agents as well as Diane Kunick. Diane claimed to the agents present that the safe and contents were from the now empty (and no longer in their possession) home of E.J. Ekker and her mother, Doris Ekker, and that she was simply "keeping" the safe for E.J. and Doris—who have been "away" in the Philippines for almost two years now on a "business trip" that was originally supposed to last three weeks.*

- Weapons were also found at the Park Way residence and, while not illegal, were confiscated "for the safety of the agents present" until later in the day, when the entire search of all targeted facilities was completed.*

Taken as a whole—that is, the information such as we have shared in our June, July, and now August issues of The SPECTRUM—the case only seems to get "more curiouser and curiouser" as sometimes astonishing new details reveal themselves in a most tangled and interconnected web of intrigues and implications—some of which are subtle enough to require that you read carefully between the lines to discern. As the FDA and Postal Authority agents have stated, over and over again, in response to probing inquiries of the major media, "this is still an ongoing investigation" and thus comprehensive information—such as that alluding to possible substantial evidence of ongoing criminal activities and fraud—cannot be openly disclosed at this time but must await the recommendations of a Grand Jury analysis. However, it has been emphasized that much serious evidence was collected during the unexpected raid.

Meanwhile, the following story is from the Front Page of the Tehachapi, California area's local weekly newspaper, called the Tehachapi News, for the date of Wednesday 7/19/00. While not exactly an in-depth or complete dissertation by any means, the following report does at least give you some flavor for what went on.

7/19/00 TIM HALBERG

Tehachapi News Editor

Evidence Seized In FDA Raid

As part of an ongoing investigation, a search conducted by the Food and Drug Administration [and including U. S. Postal Inspectors] in Tehachapi last week [all day Thursday, 7/13/00] resulted in the seizure of many boxes of evidence but no arrests [pending the results of a Grand Jury decision on that collected evidence]. The entity being investigated and searched by the FDA is the Phoenix Group.

No official comment is being made by the FDA as to what was being searched for, though reports from Bakersfield television news stations on Thursday night [on the evening news for 7/13/00 and continued on those news programs for several following evenings] said the FDA was involved because of the Phoenix Group's selling of New Gaia Products. Of these many products, many include herbal drugs and remedies of all sorts by names most people could not pronounce.

The Phoenix Group is known for their belief in a Crystal of extraordinary proportion, one mile in diameter, laying beneath the soil of Tehachapi.

Tehachapi Valley, according to information on a website regarding this group, is known to the Phoenix Group as the "Valley of Radiance" and a part of the "four corners", which appears to have to do with a crystal grid across the entire Earth.

No comment was available from anyone with the group.

According to FDA Special Agent Jed Bore, this search was part of an ongoing investigation into the Phoenix Group.

The FDA searched three locations in Tehachapi: one was the Phoenix Group's office, located on the corner of Woodford-Tehachapi Road and Brian Way in the Apple Plaza, a residence on Park Way in Golden Hills [the residence of Doris Ekker's daughter, Diane, who presides over New Gaia Products], and an apartment in the Orchard Apartments on North Mill Street. [A "farm" location outside the Tehachapi city limits was also raided.]

At the same time these searches were taking place in Tehachapi, searches were being conducted at a location in Las Vegas, the Phoenix group's main headquarters and also the official location of New Gaia Products.

Bore said that no arrests were made in the searches in Tehachapi, and the FDA had no problems in serving their warrants on the locations locally.

The Kern County Sheriff's Department Tehachapi Substation assisted with backup for the FDA as they made their initial entries to search local properties.

[The story concluded with a photograph of two FDA agents entering Diane Kunick's residence and has the photo caption: "Food and Drug Administration agents served a search warrant on this home on Park Way in Golden Hills last Thursday as part of an ongoing investigation."]

WORST CASE SCENARIO OF MAPPING THE HUMAN GENOME...

Who Needs A Microwave Oven!

Or, HAARP's Covert Agendas:

The Big Picture

Editor's note: Back in 1998, investigative journalist John Quinn assembled a superbly comprehensive dissertation on the mysterious HAARP (High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program) which began its career up in Alaska (Did they think no one would notice?) and has since been rumored to be connected with many other facilities of similar function around the world.

At that time (1998) Quinn's investigation did not receive the wide dispersion it should have. It recently crossed our path, thanks to the watchful eye of our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, and we are delighted to share it with you here for many reasons.

If anything, the issues raised in this discussion are of more immediate concern today than in 1998. For example, weird weather patterns are only becoming ever more widespread and astonishing.

For those of you who are really interested in this multi-faceted subject, there is the now classic book written by Dr. Nick Begich called Angels Don't Play This HAARP, and another by Jerry Smith called HAARP: The Ultimate Weapon Of The Conspiracy. Both of them go into great depth about HAARP and provide data that is likely to greatly rattle the nerves of the thinking reader.

We have all been watching on television news the severe drought that has been frying the southeastern United States (punctuated by a devastating stormfront around 7/20/00). Did you notice how "they" started interjecting "expert" opinion about how it will become necessary to embrace genetically modified food crops to overcome such "unpredictable" and severe weather. Does anyone smell a rat here? How about artificially creating a severe drought so that the many, many farmers who are currently resisting genetically modified crops will be begging for same, to survive?!

And again, this is happening in the southeastern United States, where John Quinn noted a "bumper crop" of suspected HAARP-related activities are occurring. Just coincidence or should we all study the following presentation VERY carefully?!

PART 1

HAARP: High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program.

HAARP: the kind angels will never strum.

HAARP: The futuristic nightmare project which is currently in operation, researching a wide variety of effects and phenomena, as well as possible uses and applications for such, resulting from beaming massively powerful radio signals into targeted regions of the ionosphere; a project which has given environmental activists, constitutionalists, airline pilots, along with ionospheric physicists and other groups—such as normal, ordinary people—definite cause for some serious concern.

Contrary to information made public by the operators of HAARP, it is no longer a relatively small, preliminary venture limited to one (nevertheless extremely powerful) transmitter site in the remote Alaskan back country.

Contrary to much of the official noise being generated regarding the supposed "benign" uses for this multi-agenda operation, the internal intelligence/military documentation and a growing amount of supporting material shows that HAARP is, in fact, at this point fulfilling some highly secret and highly advanced functions—in fact, some very negative and completely objectionable functions.

The acknowledged, publicized applications for potential applications of HAARP technology are primarily:

- Enhancement of or interference with communications, as well as development of new types of radio transmissions;
- "Investigation" of effects on weather patterns;
- Earth-penetrating tomography: an X-ray-like function which can reveal, for example, the existence of underground installations as well as oil or mineral deposits.

Some of the other principal yet unpublicized goals are:

- Weapons-related (physical/psychological disablement) and mind-control uses;
- Large-scale tampering/modification of global weather patterns via ionospheric disturbances. This includes "pushing the envelope" in terms of pumping electromagnetic energy into the ionosphere, just to see what happens.

It bears emphasizing here that any such references to HAARP being used for electromagnetic mind-control come directly from numerous internal documents and repeated references therein to HAARP's capabilities as electromagnetic mind modification/manipulation technology and intentions to so implement HAARP.

There are yet further agendas for HAARP even more covert than these, as this report will discuss.

HAARP ON LONG ISLAND!

Some very interesting information about HAARP has recently come to light. To provide a background for some of this information, we go back to early last summer when Brookhaven National Laboratories on Long Island underwent a significant and far reaching change of directorship, and subsequently a change of direction and focus. The changes at Brookhaven, one of the first National Laboratories established, received coverage even in the national news media.

(Brookhaven has been getting considerable heat on Long Island as of late due to their having dumped radioactive waste into Long Island's groundwater aquifer for the past 30+ years, resulting in severe, widespread, and life threatening contamination of the water supply of a great number of people, farmland, waterways, and even Long Island Sound/Peconic Bay.)

Brookhaven Labs has been repeatedly named as a major player in other clandestine and generally malignant and malevolent operations on Long Island—such as the Montauk Project and many related activities; among other well-known secrets are the particle accelerators underlying much of the area used in so many covert projects, which undoubtedly also have negative environmental and health consequences.

Subsequent to these well-publicized but never adequately explained changes at Brookhaven Labs last year, several of the Navy's key HAARP personnel are now stationed at BNL. No public mention has been made of this by Brookhaven, the Navy, or anyone else.

Latest reports show that the Navy has more or less completely taken over administration and operation of HAARP and that the Air Force is no longer involved in any significant capacity.

OFFICIAL LIES

Certain of the photos on the Navy's "official" HAARP website betray the fact that the photos were doctored. A structure visible in the photos proves that at least one of HAARP's transmitter sites is no longer in Alaska—if it ever was—but is, in fact, on Long Island, in the Westhampton pine barrens, quite close to Brookhaven Labs. (The nearby structure seen in the webpage photo is part of Brookhaven!) The photos were altered by adding mountains in the background to keep going the lie that HAARP is being operated in Alaska. Unconfirmed accounts state that HAARP has as many as 36 sites in operation at this time.

Preston Nichols, author and well-known investigator of covert operations, reported that he knows where this antenna site in the pine barrens is. There is totally independent confirmation from another source that there is an antenna farm in the Westhampton pine barrens which is protected 24 hours a day, 7 days a week by Delta Force-type personnel with automatic weapons. This fellow was hiking in the area and came upon the heavily fenced and posted site without having encountered any warning signs, etc. An armed guard wearing a featureless black uniform warned him off with threats of deadly force! Needless to say, my contact was shocked.

As mentioned in a earlier update, Nichols confirmed that he had been working with an Air Force contingent at Camp Hero's subterranean complex; this was the group which was implementing "Star Wars" particle beam technology apparently in "planetary defense" operations, directed in this operation specifically against the Hale-Bopp comet and an object said to be traveling in it's wake. As then noted, this contingent by all available accounts and evidence did NOT appear to be at all connected to previous mind-control and time-space operations at this location. Nichols affirmed that he had not been at the underground in Montauk for nearly a year, since the comet departed our skies, and that the current tenants at Camp Hero/Montauk Air Force Station are no longer Air Force personnel, but rather Navy operatives connected to the HAARP project.

If the HAARP crew wanted in at Montauk due at least in part to the extraordinary characteristics of this major Earth-grid power spot and it's ability to "amplify" EM/RF waves, I would have to venture a guess that a linking of the Montauk Project with the global capabilities of HAARP is high up on the agenda right now, as well as using the Montauk power spot to boost other acknowledged aspects of HAARP technology operations and experimentation.

References here and elsewhere to the whole field of planetary grid power-points and such, as in relation to the tetrahedral physics concepts of Richard Hoagland, Carl Munck, and Bruce Cathie, are considered to be solid science. It is in fact within the internal military intelligence documentation on the HAARP project, for example, that certain spots on Earth are KNOWN to be electromagnetic "hot spots", where various electromagnetic, radio frequency, and gravitational processes and phenomena are drastically amplified, enhanced, interfered with, or otherwise affected.

CHANGES AT CAMP HERO

Certain other evidence helps to make the emerging picture of what is probably going on more clear: in February of this year, in the immediate vicinity of Camp Hero State Park/Montauk Air Force Station, the following conditions were observed.

There is an old bunker southeast of the base proper, outside the "restricted area", which is relatively close to the lighthouse and right on the Atlantic cliffs, with a paved circular area directly south of and in front of it, which was at one time an artillery emplacement. (This was the location where Siemens subsidiary Cardion Corporation tested a very high-tech particle-beam radar system for at least five months in 1994—all clearly visible from the lighthouse.)

The bunker entrance adjacent to this circular concrete area was recently demolished, in an "unauthorized" and "unofficial" fashion, in an obviously substantial endeavor, according to certain witnesses from the Montauk area. A section was completely broken through the thick concrete, exposing an underground area. This hole was then subsequently cemented over again by certain authorities.

A contingent of people from Montauk were at this location, checking out the current situation there after having witnessed the previous conditions just described.

Continuing along the remnants of Old

Montauk Highway, west through the locked "fisherman's gate" towards the "fisherman's (parking) lot", the first paved road on the right (heading roughly north) leads to the southeast entrance to Camp Hero/Montauk AFS. About halfway to that entrance, along this road on the left (west side), is a large boulder which had somehow been moved a bit, and clearly visible underneath was a well-maintained concrete well or entrance with a metal ladder bolted to the side—all in good repair. Despite extensive drenching rains around this time, when a rock was dropped, there was NO SOUND of it hitting any water. The boulder hiding this entrance was quite large and would require at least a few people to move it.

Further on this road, at the base entrance, the extremely sturdy locked gate at this entrance was severely impacted, smashed, and basically wrecked—although entry with other than a Humvee or even a tank would not really be possible. The same thing also happened to the main entrance to Montauk Air Force Station off Highway 27 (Montauk Highway) about 6 months ago.

Camp Hero/Montauk Air Force Station and the underground facilities have recently been forcibly entered in some kind of (para)military operation. Apparently the Navy wanted in at Camp Hero in a big way, after getting in at Brookhaven, and wasn't going to take NO for an answer. It seems they ran into some opposition in response to the their intention to move into Montauk, and so Navy operatives, probably SEALS, got rough. It seems abundantly clear at this point that these spooks want to hook HAARP up at the Montauk planetary-grid power-point.

A source who often receives reliable information from individuals in certain ultra-top-secret intelligence and military agencies recently informed me that HAARP, at this point totally under the control of the Navy, definitely has extensive weather control and mind manipulation operations currently on line. It is now positively confirmed by this source as well that the Navy/HAARP contingent has, without doubt, taken control of the Montauk underground installations, in a decidedly heavy-handed fashion; i.e., they were definitely not given the keys. This source informed me, in a rather substantial understatement, that one can "safely assume they are up to no good".

MONTAUK—THE PROJECT THAT WOULDN'T DIE

Significantly, there have also been some changes regarding who is in control of the current Montauk Project operations. As with HAARP, it is now clear that the Montauk Project operation as a whole is currently under the control of the Navy!

After having been reactivated—more like exhumed from the grave—in 1988, the operation shifted from Camp Hero around 1992. There are some indications that security had become excessively problematical, as the Montauk Project book had been published and curiosity seekers and others were becoming far too prevalent and nosey. There are other rumors of conflicts among different groups over the use of the facility, and in 1993 the Air Force's "Sky Pebbles" contingent moved in to Camp Hero's subterranean complex to begin operations, the concerns of which were the Hale-Bopp comet, among others, and the Montauk Project moved out.

After the Project was eventually reorganized at Robins Air Force Base near Atlanta, it seems Project directors realized that certain aspects of the Project just couldn't be implemented adequately other than at Camp Hero, due apparently to the geomagnetic characteristics of that area. Additionally, as noted, at this time directorship of the Montauk Project had now shifted to the Navy. A linking of the Montauk Project and HAARP, previously often suspected and which may have already existed, now appears definite. The two projects are converging on the Camp Hero location at this time.

Now, here's where things get even more interesting. It has been known for at least a few years now and was commented on in Montauk Air Force Station—Active Or Not? that particle accelerators are definitely in use in a number of locations on Long Island, such as at Brookhaven Labs, Montauk Air Force Station, and a number of underground locations in between these two sites. Despite endless denials and blank stares from Brookhaven flak-catchers and their cohorts, there is positive proof of the existence of such accelerator units at Brookhaven, at Camp Hero and elsewhere underground on eastern Long Island, including in the Westhampton pine barrens.

No one, not even Preston Nichols, has been able to say with absolute certainty what these accelerators are used for. Well founded rumors from contacts involved in covert projects and/or in the area give strong indication that accelerators and accompanying particle-beam weapons devices have been both tested and deployed. Investigators have suspected but have been unable to prove indisputably that particle accelerators and particle beams were somehow being utilized in HAARP operations as well, despite absolutely no reference to this whatsoever in any public or internal documents which have ever seen the light of day regarding HAARP.

In an absolutely astonishing event, some of the suspicions of these investigators regarding HAARP have apparently been unequivocally and massively confirmed.

THE FAX

The contact of Nichols, who had made the observation regarding the fact that the photo on the HAARP website actually showed a Long Island antenna farm adjacent to Brookhaven Labs, received the following fax recently. His fax machine is set up with certain security systems which provide, among other things, the originating point of any fax communications received. All such security systems were disabled and/or overridden when this particular fax was received. On April 18 the fax transmission was traced to Southampton L.I., via phone company records. Whether it was a relay transmission of some kind is not known.

The body of the fax itself is full of completely classified and highly technical information, as well as completely classified internal routing codes. The document makes reference to top-secret internal directives and procedures; it also makes reference to totally classified technology, such as the Proteus particle accelerator. And to top it all off, it specifically identifies this technology as being utilized in current HAARP operations.

What is even more astounding is that, by inference, this document reveals that HAARP has yet another agenda, VASTLY more secret than even the mind- and weather-manipulation agendas for the project.

This document basically indicates that particle accelerators and beams are apparently being used in the HAARP operations to effect interdimensional and time manipulations!

Perhaps since the portal apparatus at the Montauk underground has reportedly been rendered useless, another way of generating interdimensional and time portals is being pursued aggressively and massively.

And guess what? According to the text of this fax, it screwed up—big time.

Supporting evidence on the involvement of the U.S. Navy in some very advanced scientific research project and bizarre "extracurricular" covert activities was received in response to my posting of the "leaked" document, which purportedly reports on a massive malfunction of the HAARP-related particle accelerator on Ascension Island being used in interdimensional experimentation:

"Hi John Quinn. I am Joyce Murphy of Beyond Boundaries. We are a company investigating, by expedition, UFO-related phenomena all over the world. Have been following evidence that the Navy Seals are involved in all parts of the world with dimensional portal activity. I have some stuff on the Macrihanish Chinook that went down from a Navy wave-beam; and then, of course, I could talk for hours about the dimensional portals involving the Seals in Puerto Rico. I saw a video of a dimensional portal recently which had been filmed in Brazil."

Ms. Murphy went on to describe a major Seal base at the supposedly closed Roosevelt Road Naval Base on Puerto Rico, which has underground levels beneath El Yunque mountain operated by the U.S. government and grey aliens, and a tunnel which connects the underground to the ocean. Submarines are actually brought in through this tunnel to the underground facility beneath El Yunque.

According to Beyond Boundaries there are definite signs of dimensional portals in the rainforest on the surface there. Their group has observed, among other odd goings on, an incident where a grey was retrieved from the forest by Navy Seals while numerous plainclothes agents patrolled up and down the road with monitoring equipment; the road was lined with vehicles bearing Virginia license plates.

Puerto Rico and Brazil have also been the locations for a tremendous number of sightings of the so-called "chupacabra" creature, which fits the general description of a "predatory reptilian animal" named in the HAARP document.

Before the skeptics out there begin rolling their eyes and muttering about science fiction and questionable tales of aliens, there is, in fact, solid scientific support for the manifestation of some very unusual effects, conditions, and phenomena through the application of HAARP technology, from scientists like Dr. Sasha Kouskov of the University of Saskatchewan, for example, who maintains that by focusing multiple HAARP (accelerator) transmitters on the same location, extremely esoteric, relativistic effects, such as gravity waves and the like, can be generated. Opening portals to other dimensions would also be in this category.

Overall the evidence appears solid indicating how deeply involved the Navy is with some very advanced sciences and technologies.

At this time we can add one more item to the list of HAARP's covert applications:

Generation of gravitic waves, interdimensional/time "portals", and other highly esoteric, relativistic phenomena.

OFFICIAL INFO OR OFFICIAL DISINFO?

Nichols indicated, right off the bat, that he does suspect the fax could be disinformation, because in some ways it just seems too good to be true. The document confirmed so many suspicions and theories which Nichols has, such as multiple HAARP sites online worldwide, the existence and use of the "Proteus" accelerator, and the x-dimension project reported on by Al Bielek, to name but a few.

The overriding question still remains, however: is the document the genuine article, making reference to real events and technologies, or is it in fact some very clever disinformation, originating nonetheless from intelligence or military sources? This is the question that neither Nichols nor anyone else can really answer with certainty, and none of them, including myself, will try.

It is important to realize that this document, and much of the information within it, could most likely ONLY have originated from deep within the intelligence arm of the U.S. Navy, due to the tremendous amount of classified information in the document, as well as the inexplicable way it was received. Additionally, according to the recipient, the document was produced using a version of Adobe PageMaker which is only available to government. It was NOT produced using the commercially available version of this software.

Granted a skilled and knowledgeable hacker could conceivably have enough knowledge of internal military security codes, routing information, internal directives, and classified projects to fake the main body of this document. However, there are some significant points which argue rather strongly AGAINST it being an outright hoax.

When the fax was received, the recipient was out of town. His digital cellphone, which can access up to 12 different networks, locked into one particular network at the very time the fax was received, and for days he couldn't get off this network. Also, his beeper can either be on a nationwide or worldwide network; it had been on the nationwide network and, at the time the fax came in, it somehow switched to the worldwide network, and remained locked onto that network for a number of days.

Nichols' cellphone can also utilize different networks. Starting at the time the fax was received, he was only able access the only Milcell (military) network, and couldn't access any other for ten days! These kinds of things are much harder for some hoaxer or hacker to implement than the document itself. Interestingly as well, it is NOT commonly known that the recipient of the fax is in any way connected to Preston Nichols.

In other words, this document almost definitely comes from the military/intelligence arm of the government. One thing which is sure to be commented on, and which some will say more than suggests this is disinformation, is the fact that the document is dated April 1. That is an easy out, though perhaps worth considering. Nevertheless no one can say that intelligence or military agencies issue no documents and/or that nothing genuine or significant happens on April 1.

If it's not disinformation, then an extremely significant and rather earthshaking bit of evidence has been leaked, by someone, which in one fell swoop validates a tremendous amount of circumstantial evidence and informed assumptions regarding certain ultra-top-secret government projects.

If it's not disinformation, then I could say we're in deeper shit than even I thought possible.

There is one other oddity about the document itself which possibly diminishes its overall credibility. While retyping the document, I realized that the zip code in the heading is not a Washington D.C. zip code. In fact, it is a zip code for Fort Myers, Florida. What's very interesting about this is that Fort Myers is a major spook town, known to have covert Navy projects in operation there, and also has known strong ties to the Montauk Project.

There is a huge government complex at 1455 Overlook Avenue in Fort Myers which correlated with the zip code on the received HAARP fax; yet at 4555 Overlook Avenue in D.C. is—guess what—the Naval Research Lab!

I think the document is actually genuine, but that whoever kindly leaked it tried to save their own ass by making it seem like a hoax, with the disjointed address aspect (and maybe the April 1 date also). In other words, I think the gist of the document speaks the truth.

One final point: the document makes reference to the fact that the dimensional rift accidentally caused by the Proteus particle accelerator malfunction has duplicated a situation which also occurred in 1995, which allowed predatory reptilian beings to "invade" our time-space continuum. This is an obvious reference to the extremely severe and never adequately explained wildfires in the Westhampton pine barrens during August 1995.

As I relayed in my report on the Montauk Project, Preston Nichols was informed point-blank by Air Force officers at the time that the wildfires were being caused by serious malfunctions of the particle accelerator/beam operations on eastern Long Island. (What remains unknown about that event is whether or not a hostile action caused the particle accelerator malfunction or whether such a malfunction created certain problematical conditions for hostile groups.)

As I am somewhat over my head here—and not just regarding the technology—I am at Nichols' request disseminating (the text of) this document as far and wide as I can, in the hopes that knowledgeable individuals, who could help to either validate or invalidate the information contained within, will make public their knowledge regarding this incredible item.

I ask all recipients of this document to please assist us in such dissemination by resending or forwarding the document, to the greatest extent possible, to the public at large and to any individual organization from which some input might be forthcoming.

There is without any doubt some kind of major evidence here—either evidence of deliberate, massive, and malicious official disinformation, or somewhat muddled evidence of yet another mind boggling and truly unconscionable covert program being operated under cover of the officially acknowledged

HAARP project.

It has been confirmed, as of this date, that a failure of the H.A.A.R.P. 15-3 Proteus Unit at Ascension Island U.K. had lost its targeting control during its first operational trial. The accelerator was damaged at shutdown, and will not be operational until 12 June at the earliest.

This failure went undetected for approximately 17 minutes, and appears to have caused another series of dimensional rifts along the East coast of the U.S. and Southwest Africa. These dimensional rifts are x-dimensional and have a time frame of -100 million B.C. plus or minus about 20 million years.

As was the case in 1995, several predatory reptilian animals have entered our y-dimension and are, as this is written, freely roaming in the Southern New York region, Northern Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and a possible sighting occurred this morning at 0234 hours at Norfolk N.A.S. 150 meters off the beach.

All operatives are officially at level 4 alert, and are to be ready to go on 60-minute notice. (DOOTP) article 15-1 through 17-4 with all addendums are to apply.

Weapons are to be available at all times, .40 and .50 caliber minimum, with FMJ and EHP rounds only, minimum handgun to be carried .357 MAG/EHP.

PART 2

"EL HAARPO"

Suspensions abound at this point about HAARP's relationship to the tremendous amount of severe weather disturbances over North America this year. Obviously there are oceanic and atmospheric conditions which lead to the development of the fabled "El Niño" which very much impacts our experienced weather. My point is that this provides the perfect cover for HAARP operators to activate their new toy, and of course to amplify or boost the effects of El Niño as well, with the usual malevolent intent. Call it “El HAARPO”.

The deadly “tornados” which have left scores of people dead and absolutely obliterated many areas of the U.S. were, as far as can be determined, completely unprecedented—literally unheard of in recorded human experience.

What is so inexplicable and unilaterally astonishing about these “storms”, aside from their mind-boggling ferocity, is the fact that in many cases few if any of the typical atmospheric precursor conditions—like CLOUDS—conducive to the development of such storms, were present, as indicated by virtually all relevant weather monitoring and forecasting technologies and systems. Photographs from weather satellites, weather radar readouts, and vast amounts of other data from a wide variety of sensing, monitoring, and tracking technologies failed to provide ANY INDICATION WHATSOEVER that such horrendous atmospheric turbulence was building preceding many of these extraordinarily vicious storms.

Does this seem perhaps just the slightest bit peculiar to ANYBODY except me?

I think it's safe to say, at this point, that much of what has been claimed to be a result of the fabled (scapegoat) “El Niño”, is in fact the result of weather control/manipulation and tampering to an extent never attempted before, due to HAARP technologies now on line.

Personally I believe that manipulations of the upper-level atmospheric conditions which give birth to our experienced weather conditions are occurring on a massive, even global scale. This is, in fact, among the stated goals and intended uses for HAARP and is plainly stated as such within internal federal documentation for the project. [See Angels Don't Play This HAARP, by Begich and Manning.]

WHOSE THOUGHT WAS THAT?

Another major agenda of HAARP is of course mind control. I have had strong suspicions that the Jonesboro, Arkansas massacre and a number of very similar incidents over the past months have been the result of mind control operations.

The recent news on the nearly inconceivable horror out of Jonesboro has finally pushed me over the brink—into confronting head-on the likelihood that this and a veritable blood orgy of similar mass murders by youngsters in the past couple of years are the result of some sort of mind-control program.

Despite a fairly rigorous childhood and teenagehood in New York City and Long Island, and many years since spent in other major urban areas like L.A. and the Bay Area, I must say I really cannot recall any precedent for these types of mass slayings perpetrated by

Mind/mood/consciousness are affected by some of the same electromagnetic energies as is the weather. This information was the main result of much of Wilhelm Reich's research into what he termed “orgone” energy, and Reich developed technology which could impact and alter the state of this orgone energy.

Reich's entire body of work into this field was forcibly taken from him by the federal government. Much of the materials which were not stolen outright were destroyed, along with Reich's laboratories, and of course he was then incarcerated.

young teens and preteens against their peers or elders, often carried out at (usually public) schools.

What in the name of God or any standard/concept of a more evolved, civilized, and positive existence and being, what in the name of any decency, reason, compassion, or awareness could be motivating or compelling these young people to manifest such remorseless, shameless, and vicious violence in acts of mass murder?

And notice also that this is not happening in New York, L.A., Chicago, or other large cities, where gang violence has been so prevalent. It is happening in quiet, totally “typical”, rural/suburban Middle American communities, among mainly White, middle class people.

I think programing is on the scene here in a most major way.

There has been some solid information which supports this hypothesis lately. Author Alex Constantine (Psychic Dictatorship In America and many other fine works investigating mind control operations) has reported the following to online “e-zine” The Konformist concerning a particular EM mind-control operation which he says was a major factor in the bloodcurdling massacre in Jonesboro, Arkansas.

I have been suspecting just such a thing for some time now, after a veritable spate of similar horrifying incidents over the past several months, most of which occurred in the southeastern U.S. In fact I e-mailed The Konformist voicing exactly these suspicions right after the Jonesboro nightmare. I'm reprinting below Mr. Constantine's note about this particular EM mind-control operation:

“The technology for EM mind control in Jonesboro came from Silent Sound, Inc., I've heard. Ultrasound machine that stimulates rage. Check into Senate Bill 10, an attempt to imprison children as adults, and you have the motive. The machine was developed at SRI, with help from a front in Berkeley.” — 1998, Alex Constantine.

Interestingly, SRI [Stanford Research Institute in Menlo Park, California] was one of the five original partners which brought HAARP technology into operational status before the whole shebang was subsumed into the military's domain in the early '90s. Angels Don't Play This HAARP, by Begich and Manning, provides extensive detail on the particulars of the development of HAARP.

Of particular interest in this regard are certain frequencies monitored during HAARP transmissions which are completely absent from the official, general HAARP specifications and documentation—frequencies in the 435 MHz range, which are exactly in the range of the frequencies of human thought (as opposed to mood or state of mind); these are the predominantly utilized frequencies in the mind-control aspects of the Montauk Project.

Worth considering here also is that, from roughly 1993 through 1996, The Montauk Project mind-control operations were being run out of Robins AFB near Atlanta—in the southeastern U.S. Perhaps the spate of seemingly mindless and inhuman violence carried out by very young boys in this region is an indication of some results of the Project's recent visit to the southeast.

Maybe HAARP transmissions are being utilized to beam pulsed microwave, psychotronic, or other types of EM/RF mind-manipulation signals to trigger targeted, preprogramed, possibly even implanted agents.

Adding to the growing list of such nearly incomprehensible incidents of violence from those so young (at least the postal workers and other “disgruntled employees” have some excuse—daily exposure to infinite levels of bureaucracy), comes the latest news from Edinboro, PA. Another Montauk boy?

The Montauk Project, as well as Monarch and other MK-ULTRA offshoots and sub-projects, have created untold numbers (some suggest upwards of 5 million) of programmed, “sleeper” agents with often totally invisible alternate personalities or identities; these people are suffering from intentionally induced dissociative, multiple-personality disorders as a result of “scientifically” applied psychosexual abuse and psychotronic programming.

HAARP, and the Montauk and Phoenix Projects before HAARP, have had, among many others, two agendas running—mind manipulation AND weather modification.

Mind/mood/consciousness are affected by some of the same electromagnetic energies as is the weather. This information was the main result of much of Wilhelm Reich's research into what he termed "orgone" energy, and Reich developed technology which could impact and alter the state of this orgone energy.

Reich's entire body of work into this field was forcibly taken from him by the federal government. Much of the materials which were not stolen outright were destroyed, along with Reich's laboratories, and of course he was then incarcerated.

The main elements of Reich's years of research and experimentation were incorporated into the Phoenix Project, being operated then mainly at Brookhaven Labs on Long Island. Guess they wanted this stuff all to themselves, and I guess they got it.

THE REAL STORY

What the hell is going on?

- HAARP being operated on Long Island and other locations;
- the Navy, operators of HAARP, taking control of the Montauk/Camp Hero facilities;
- continual massive weather disturbances not just in North America but in other parts of the world too—notably Australia and New Zealand;
- indications via a "leaked" document that HAARP, in addition to weather and mind-control agendas, has a serious interdimensional agenda going too;
- indications via the same document that HAARP is being operated from NUMEROUS sites worldwide (confirming the suspicions of MANY researchers such as Nick Begich);
- horrendous incidents of literally inconceivable (at least to me) and inexplicable violence on the part of extremely young kids happening on a regular basis in the U.S.;
- and even indications that HAARP transmissions may be utilized for triggering earthquakes, as described below.

I don't believe I'm straining to connect any dots here. In fact, I think the dots are already quite connected and the picture is very clear. There has been substantial concern ever since information first started getting out about HAARP that it is going to be implemented as a means of global mind (and weather) control. The fact that the Navy has forcibly taken over Camp Hero at Montauk, which has a history of being "mind-control central", just about ices the cake. These covert agendas are all over the place in the official internal documentation on HAARP.

Folks, we are in it NOW!

Of course, another major means of social control, i.e. precipitating massive social upheaval, is by destroying life and property through extraordinarily severe manipulated artificial weather disturbances. Then FEMA, an agency with some very serious and potentially abusive covert agendas of it's own, conveniently comes into devastated areas and assumes substantial control.

WHEN IS THE POPULATION OF THIS COUNTRY GOING TO WAKE UP TO WHAT'S GOING ON HERE?

The top leaders of literally ALL European countries have had several meetings with Dr. Nick Begich, premiere researcher/investigator and author on the HAARP operations, as well as with other independent scientists and researchers. Subsequent top-level pan-European conferences have been held, in which extremely strong concerns, reservations, and outright oppositions to HAARP and most, if not all, of the program's agendas have been voiced, in addition to serious reservations about the long-term global environmental effects of HAARP activities.

How (complacently?) ignorant and uninformed (having been deliberately misinformed is, of course, taken for granted) are the people of the US at this point, like sheep led to slaughter!

RADAR EVIDENCE

Researcher Kent Steadman of the CyberSpace ORBIT website noted the following, concerning weather radar systems that have been picking up phenomena which appear to be electromagnetic/radio frequency in nature, which have preceded the development of unusually severe weather, which also definitely correlate with earthquakes, and possibly correlate to highly troubling events indicative of mind-control operations such as the mass murder in Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Signs in the sky: Thor's Hammer, The Reaper's Sythe, sky-circles over Jonesboro?

We are seeing things on radar that even jolts the jaded artist.

No more explanations—look for yourself

<<http://www.eagle-net.org/phikent/orbit/mar/radar.html>>

<<http://www.eagle-net.org/phikent/orbit/mar/radar2.html>>

The weather radar systems referred to (and displayed on the above website) may have been picking up HAARP transmissions, the "Silent Sound" transmissions noted by Alex Constantine, or perhaps both. Perhaps Silent Sound is being used in conjunction with HAARP. Whichever, I find it just about impossible to believe that it was some coincidence that these totally unnatural concentric circular energy patterns, and other unnatural formations such as perfectly straight lines, showed up on radar exactly where unbelievably severe weather conditions occurred, and also where the terrible violence of the Jonesboro massacre occurred, knowing what we know about EM/RF weather modification and mind-control operations. These radar systems have been registering electromagnetic disturbances which are directly connected to seismic activity as well, which may indicate even more malevolent operations using HAARP technology.

QUAKE CITY

One of the more covert of HAARP's seemingly countless agendas is that HAARP transmissions can be used for detecting and monitoring electromagnetic or "plasma" phenomena which are precursors of seismic activity and tectonic movement. Indications are that HAARP transmissions can be (and conceivably ARE BEING) used to activate or TRIGGER exactly these same electromagnetic conditions which can cause tectonic movement. In other words, HAARP potentially has the ability to cause EARTHQUAKES!

Certainly such a capability is equally as disturbing as nearly everything else about HAARP. And judging by how other of the technology's capabilities have been applied, it will also likely be applied in a similarly malevolent manner. I don't really even want to follow that line of thinking too far, but the implications are clear—and very frightening. Think we have "a problem" here? Well, I sure do.

It seems that HAARP signals are being picked up by weather radar systems as referred to above. This has been noted in conjunction with some unusual earthquake activity as well, notably at the China Lake Naval Air Warfare Center in Southern California, where the quakes have been numbering around 100 per day for weeks now and radar images have often shown what seem to be major weather disturbances—yet concurrently the weather satellite shots of the area and local weather conditions reports prove that the skies at these times have been generally calm and clear!

Something similar occurred on Easter Sunday in the Carolinas. It looked from the radar shots as though the area was being pounded by massive tornadic activity, yet the skies were clear and the atmospheric conditions generally calm. The next day, however, guess what—a sizable and unarguably rare earthquake hit this exact region!

Yet one more item on the list of HAARP's covert agendas and applications:

- detection of electromagnetic seismic activity which may precede earthquakes—and triggering of such activity.

It is becoming very apparent that the radar systems are picking up electromagnetic perturbances which not only don't correlate to observed actual weather conditions, but display totally unnatural formations like perfect circles (often concentric), perfectly straight lines, etc. This same phenomenon, often in conjunction with tremendous and historically unheard-of rainstorms, has also been observed in Western Australia, where the concentric electromagnetic energy pulses accompanying the fronts have been so severe as to totally knock out the power grids in the region—exactly what happened in Auckland, New Zealand earlier this year, when the entire heart of the city was without power FOR MONTHS after their electrical grid was literally fried by these EM pulse waves.

It bears repeating here that some scientists believe that HAARP, especially at its current extraordinary levels of power, is quite capable of generating such highly advanced, esoteric phenomena as gravity waves. The ability to implement interdimensional/time bending, distortion, shifting, rifting and the like would be along the same lines.

More and more, the emerging picture of HAARP is that of an extremely severe and very disturbing threat to our well-being here on planet Earth—currently perhaps one of the very biggest threats technologically. This really seems to be their Big Gun, capable of being applied in nearly every imaginable and exceptionally undesirable way.

HAARP technology appears well suited in general to enforcing a host of the more oppressive and malicious goals and agendas of the evolving “New World Order”.

The more complete list of primary intended uses of HAARP now reads:

- Enhancement of or interference with communications, as well as development of new types of radio transmissions;
- Manipulation of weather patterns;
- Weapons-related (physical/psychological disablement) and mind control uses;
- Earth-penetrating tomography—an X-ray-like function which can reveal, for example, the existence of underground installations as well as oil or mineral deposits;
- Detection of electromagnetic seismic activity which may precede earthquakes—and triggering of such activity;
- Generation of gravitic waves, interdimensional/time “portals”, and other highly esoteric, relativistic phenomena.
- “Pushing the envelope” in terms of pumping electromagnetic energy into the ionosphere, just to see what happens.

HAARP FUNDAMENTALS

I am reprinting here some general background material on the HAARP project written by Dr. Richard Williams.

“HAARP’s space-generated ELF (extremely low frequency) waves, coming back down to the Earth, can be utilized in many different ways, such as communicating with submarines or creating harmful biological and mental effects upon a specifically targeted population. HAARP can also be utilized in a system of Earth-penetrating tomography, for locating hidden underground bunkers in enemy territory or the buried arms, survival supplies, and valuable coins buried by U.S. patriots and militias.

“The 1/96 Progressive Magazine reported that a 1995 article ‘Non-Lethal Technology And Air Power’ in the Air Command And Staff College’s Air Power Journal describes how so-called non-lethal psychotropic and electromagnetic weapons will be used against civilians: ‘In the very near future, it will become clear that non-lethal methods have applicability across the entire spectrum of conflict, including crime and terrorism...’.

“‘In this research paper, the authors reveal for the first time the U.S. military is developing high-powered microwave weapons for use against human beings’ (which is one of the hidden goals of the HAARP transmitters). Such ‘microwave weapons are almost uniquely intrusive’ (especially when they are pulsed at ELF frequencies). ‘They do not simply attack a person’s body; they reach all the way into a person’s mind.... They are meant to disorient or upset mental stability.’ It is thus shocking to see the U.S. military now preparing, with the help of the Justice Department, to use such electromagnetic totalitarian zapping devices against American civilians.

“Years before he became House Speaker, Newt Gingrich wrote the Foreword to an official U.S. Air Force book that described how electromagnetic weapons can be used to subjugate U.S. citizens who oppose the policies of the Federal government. The publication, titled Low-Intensity Conflict And Modern Technology (Lt. Col. David J. Dean, USAF, Editor), contained a chapter written by Capt. Paul Tyler that deals with electromagnetic, (so-called) non-lethal, and psychotropic weapons. Because of the strong support for using the U.S. military against civilians (as clearly demonstrated by recent anti-terrorist legislation), this Air Force publication (and its relationship to HAARP) is very significant.

“Capt. Tyler stated: ‘The potential applications of artificial electromagnetic fields are wide-ranging and can be used in many military or quasi-military situations.... Some of these potential uses include dealing with terrorist groups’ (as currently defined by the Clinton administration), ‘crowd control, and...antipersonnel techniques in tactical warfare. In all cases, the electromagnetic systems would be used to produce mild to severe physiological disruption or perceptual distortion or disorientation’ (psychotropic weapons application). ‘In addition, the ability of individuals to function could be degraded to such a point that they would be combat ineffective. Another advantage of electromagnetic systems is that they provide coverage over large areas with a single system’ (disguised reference to projects like HAARP).

“‘...One last area where electromagnetic radiation may prove of some value is enhancing abilities of individuals for anomalous phenomena’, which appears to be a veiled reference to the Federal government’s use of electromagnetic and psychotropic devices to create artificial UFO abductions amongst unwitting civilians. Such government-staged UFO encounters (not to be confused with the many real UFO events, such as the Roswell crash) are now being used as cover for widespread physical and psychological experimentation upon U.S. civilians.

“One internal HAARP document boasts of ‘exciting and challenging...potential to control ionospheric processes’. HAARP’s goal is to ‘perturb’ the ionosphere with powerful blasts of energy to see ‘how it responds to the disturbance’. Scientists envision using it to burn ‘holes’ in the ionosphere and ‘create an artificial lens’ in the sky that could focus large bursts of electromagnetic energy. The Pentagon also wants to know if HAARP could be used to disrupt communications, destroy enemy missiles, or control global weather. Sci-fi freak Newt Gingrich was one of its early supporters.

“Building the HAARP transmitter requires cutting spruce forest and filling wetlands. Its six 3,600-horsepower diesel generators would burn 95 tons of diesel fuel per day, producing over seven tons of air pollution. The project’s environmental-impact statement notes that the site ‘lies within the Copper River Basin, which is one of Alaska’s more important migration corridors’ for birds, which could be fried by flying through HAARP’s 10 MHz beams. Swans, owls, and ducks could also crash into its maze of antennas.

“The HAARP fact sheet states that ‘most of the energy of the high-power beam would be emitted upward, rather than toward the horizon’. But other government documents reveal that ‘80-90% of the experiments would...refract fundamental radio frequency energy Earthward from the ionosphere’.

“Over the past three decades, human electromagnetic exposure has been linked to fatigue, irritability, memory loss, cataracts, leukemia, birth defects, cancer, and changes in brain chemistry. While a government study on the ‘bioeffects’ of HAARP radiation concluded that ‘chronic exposure may not necessarily be harmful’, other government documents warn that such radiation is powerful enough to explode highway flares in passing vehicles a quarter-mile away and disrupt cardiac pacemakers in jet passengers flying overhead.

The Pentagon has already decided that HAARP's radio interference is too intense to allow it to be located near any military facilities!" (—Dr. Richard Williams)

EM WARFARE

It's important to keep in mind, particularly in regard to HAARP's power output ratings, that Dr. Williams wrote this during the very early phases of HAARP and that the power output levels of HAARP transmissions are currently astronomically and exponentially more powerful than the figures cited by Williams.

Residents of the United States, and to some extent residents of other regions of the world, in particular areas of the southern Pacific, Australia, and New Zealand, are at this point being subjected to a literal, all-out war being waged against them by clandestine, unconstitutional, fascistic, terroristic, and literally demonic elements of a vicious and psychotic covert or secret government, as implemented by certain branches of intelligence and military agencies.

One of the more sour ironies in this is that, to a greater extent that many covert projects, HAARP is in fact being funded largely with OUR money. Congress was given a full-on dog-and-pony show by HAARP lobbyists and directors, who implied that it would be mainly used for researching and developing enhanced communications systems, and for Earth penetrating tomography, to see who else might be putting in underground bases—someone like George Bush's old buddy Saddam Hussein, for example. Congress lapped up the BS and forked over the money—our money, that is—and now HAARP operatives are thumbing their noses at Congress and the people, using HAARP transmitters to cause severe weather damage, to implement mind modification/control, as a means of inducing physical/psychological distress and incapacitation, to open interdimensional portals, and to carry out other covert agendas.

Again, it has become clear that HAARP is evolving into an all-purpose, kill-many-birds-with-one-stone (and lots of real birds, too!) command, control, and communication systems technology, for use by the controllers of what's been termed the New World Order, to ensure maximum compliance from the population and maximum technological superiority for the rulers in the reign of the New World Order—beginning NOW.

Hopefully, enough people will wake up and DEMAND that whatever legitimate remnants still exist of our so-called representative government immediately begin to address HAARP's overwhelmingly serious threats to our freedom, physical and mental health, privacy, well-being—threats to the human race as a whole and to the planet we call home!

HIV & AIDS Date Back To 1930s? A Slick Deception

Editor's note: The following is a timely update from a highly respected and courageous, frequent contributor to this newspaper. Once again Dr. Horowitz penetrates beyond the surface to illustrate a lesson in the slick tactics of disinformation. His books are available from Wisdom Books & Press; please see catalog insert for details.

6/30/00 DR. LEN HOROWITZ

A number of individuals have relayed articles to me, or my staff, regarding recent stories in the media concerning a Los Alamos National Laboratory investigation that is said to have disproved the thesis that HIV/AIDS owes its existence largely to monkey virus-contaminated polio vaccines administered during the 1950s.

Not only does this study by Korba et al., NOT disprove this possibility, but typical of counter-intelligence propaganda campaigns sponsored by the British and American governments, these pronouncements are deceptive and distractive to the greatest and gravest issues at hand.

Uneducated people, for example including detractors to the man-made theory of HIV/AIDS, such as Gary Krasner, president of a New York AIDS group, circulated pseudo-scientific reports, like that of "Science Editor" Nigel Hawkes, entitled "Scientists Trace Origin Of HIV Back To 1930s". This article began:

"THE AIDS virus had reached the human population by 1931, and possibly much earlier, according to a team of British and American scientists.

"They worked out that today's strains of HIV had a common ancestor about 70 years ago. If true, this means that the virus cannot have originated in a polio vaccination programme in Africa in the late 1950s, as a controversial theory claims. By then it was already established in Africa.

"A 'family tree' of HIV was created using the variation between today's strains as a clock to calculate the time it has had to evolve.

"Since genes change at a constant rate, it is possible to work back and estimate when the main strains split off from a common origin.

"Writing in Science, researchers led by Bette Korba, from Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, worked out that this probably happened between 1915 and 1941. The most likely year was 1931.

"The possibilities are that it was transmitted from apes to human beings near the turn of the century and remained isolated in a small population until that time, or that the virus jumped to humans in about 1930 and started spreading immediately, or some years later.

"In either case, the conclusions argue against the idea championed by Ed Hooper in his book The River that polio vaccine grown on cells from chimpanzees was the prime cause of the epidemic. This theory is now being tested by examining samples of the vaccine to see if they contain HIV...."

Analysis:

Notice the first sentence is completely misleading. It states that British and American scientists have determined that "The AIDS virus had reached the human population by 1931." In fact, they found no virus dating back to that period. What they found, at best, was intimated in the second paragraph: "a common ancestor".

This is not news. Many "common ancestors" link HIV to a variety of retroviruses, according to scientific reports. In all of these studies, GENE SEQUENCES, and not entire viral genomes (i.e., not whole viruses) were analyzed and/or compared. HIV ancestors include gene sequences from bovine, mouse, and human leukemia viruses, sheep visna, chicken sarcoma, and many, many other viruses that have been evolving for thousands of years.

So how did Korba et. al., pinpoint 1931 as the year HIV allegedly jumped species? Working backwards in time, they ASSUMED a standard rate of genetic mutation occurred among the strains of HIV.

Herein lies a principal problem directing the implied conclusion that HIV must have jumped species long before polio vaccine administration in the 1950s or 1960s. The natural rate of genetic viral mutation is much slower than under iatrogenic (i.e., man-made) recombination conditions. In other words, in cell cultures, or in multi-virus infected humans, such viruses can and often do recombine and/or mutate extensively, possibly overnight. That means, working backwards in time as Korba et al. did, ASSUMING a standard rate of genetic mutation, a far earlier date would be falsely projected for the HIV species jump than might have actually occurred due to iatrogenic causes such as contaminated vaccines and/or biological weapons tests.

“Our analyses suggest” but not prove, Korba et al. wrote, “that the HIV-1 M group ancestral sequence occurred decades before the vaccination programmes and that the diverse subtypes were well established by 1957.” This led spin doctors to speculate that the virus went undetected in Africa for 25 to 60 years. Further, the investigators theorized, given this earlier date of HIV sequence evolution, by the time the polio vaccine was administered, at least nine subtypes of HIV had already been established. If the vaccine campaign had induced the pandemic, they theorized, all nine strains would have to have been transferred to humans. Since the virus in chimpanzees is rare, and only a few primate kidneys were used to grow the vaccine, they concluded the polio/AIDS theory “seems implausible”.

The above is a great example of the “Hegelian dialectic” used in standard medical/scientific propaganda. In this counter-intelligence mass mind-control scheme, a false thesis (i.e., HIV was spread by the polio vaccine) is followed by an anti-thesis (i.e., the Korba et al. report) to produce “synthesis”—that is, mass confusion and disorientation.

Simply overlooked is the unique epidemiology of HIV/AIDS. The fact is, this bizarre, complex, immune-suppressive cancer virus and illness struck two unique populations, virtually simultaneously: New York’s gay men and Central African Blacks, during the mid to late 1970s. What best explains the triggering of this unique outbreak, in those populations, at that precise time, is not, by intent, part of the spin doctors’ debate. It was not the polio vaccine, but the hepatitis B vaccine, produced in contaminated chimpanzees and polio vaccine recipients, then administered to these unique populations in 1974 to 1975, that best explains the unique epidemiology and origin of the AIDS pandemic.

Therefore, where is the debate regarding hepatitis B and AIDS? How did Hooper miss this important hepatitis B vaccine link to his principal thesis? How could he have overlooked this author’s definitive text Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident Or Intentional? (Tetrahedron Publishing Group, 1998). In this “Hegelian dialectic” the complete truth is omitted by deceptive, distractive, propagandist intent.

Later this year, 2000, the scientific peer-reviewed journal Medical Hypothesis will publish a paper entitled “Polio, Hepatitis B, And AIDS: An Integrative Theory On A Possible Vaccine-Induced Pandemic”. This report, by this author, is based largely on the documentation advanced in my text. The report examines what has been grossly omitted from public and scientific debate concerning theories on the man-made origin of AIDS. Critical readers are encouraged to table final judgment until that time.

Breaking The Grip Of Often Subtle Mind-Control

7/24/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be still for there is much work needed to be accomplished. Allow for the messages to come forth in a natural unfolding.

All is as it should be and ones will recognize Balance and Truth when they see it. Let not the many distractions of “life” detour you from your chosen participation in the mission at hand, for the temptations are indeed great, and many a gifted wayshower has stumbled and fallen for the subtle traps that find quick justification in the mind while the heart cries out to be heard and considered.

Learn to listen to the heart, for it operates outside the range of the ego’s influence. The heart will lead you to true satisfaction, while the head will often lead you toward what the ego perceives as satisfaction.

True, lasting satisfaction is ALWAYS found within; never do you need to go anywhere to find it. Those who seek the external for lasting satisfaction will only find a series of distractions that will eventually lead them around in a circle, not unlike a dog chasing its own tail.

Many are seeking to have prophetic insight through these messages. To you ones I must say, We of the Lighted Realms of Creation are far more interested in helping you to help yourselves. We wish strongly for you to begin to consciously seek and find your own inner connection to Creator Source. You need NOT go anywhere special to do this, nor do you need any special trinkets or devices to do this.

As a result of such seeking, a diligent student will find the personal prophecy they need. Make not another your “guru” or master. Learn to recognize and understand that the world you live in, and the current conditions on your planet, have come about in large part due to the very fact that the majority of the experiencing beings FOLLOW someone else’s dream rather than their own.

Stop being a follower of another, and learn to create your own self-determined reality of experience. Does this mean you will be going against the “norm”? Yes, for the most part. If you begin to break the grip of the subtle mind-control influence that each is programmed to reinforce one another with, you will find, in most cases, great challenge. People around you, especially close friends and relatives, will likely accuse you of having “lost your mind”. In a very loose translation of the phrase, they will be right. You will be breaking away from the preprogrammed general mind-set and, in essence, you will be losing the mind-set which promotes mediocrity.

Mediocrity is acceptable for the majority who follow the ego’s impulse to find and maintain a comfort zone of social acceptance and status. This “comfort zone” is what you each are programmed to achieve from birth—from your parents, from your public school systems, and from peer pressure to conform to the “American Dream” or the “Ideal Dream”

For those of you who continually ask for Guidance and are expecting to find your personal answers in this quite external source, I say to you: read carefully these words, for they are the KEYS which will enable you to see that the answers to your questions are within you. Seek them out. Meditate upon what is offered herein. Call upon Creator Source for your Guidance. YOU WILL FIND YOUR WAY!

To continue in the blissful “dream” state of the status quo will surely keep you in a relatively mellow state of sedated awareness. If you choose to seek greater perceptual understanding and a greater level of conscious connection to Source, your quest will almost unavoidably precipitate a great deal of external pressure, distraction, and even turmoil, AT FIRST. Most of this will come from ones trying to attack you where you are most vulnerable—THE EGO-SELF. The ego does not like to be challenged; it prefers to maintain dominance in determining major life decisions. It is also the most easily manipulated part of your mind, for it is the part of you which gives “life” to your FEARS.

One who is truly without fear is one who has completely tamed the ego part of the mind. Many claim to be without fear, and yet if you would say to them: “Would you go out in public without combing your hair or when wearing a wrinkled or torn shirt?” they would almost always say “No!”

Why not?

Because they fear the social repercussions reinforced by what the ego mind-set of the masses determines as acceptable. In other words, it would embarrass them to do so, and they fear embarrassment.

The next time you see someone dressed in an odd combination that you would not be “caught dead” wearing, look at them as ones who refuse to accept the general programming of the masses. These ones are often trying to make a bold statement that there are no set rules as to how someone MUST dress, act, or be.

Some of these more original ones are teachers trying to teach their message that you don’t have to conform. Many of these ones are simply following the stronger influence of the more creative teacher, and like the attention they get—even if it is somewhat negative.

Please note that I am NOT saying you should go out and dress in an uncomfortable manner or anything of the sort. I am just illustrating, by way of an example that many of you can relate to, a situation wherein you will likely find yourselves wanting, or even trying, to enforce YOUR ideas upon another when you are confronted with someone you may consider “plainly stands out as a freak”. When you see someone like this, operating outside the norm, do you whisper behind their back to a friend something like: “Oh my God, look at that!”?

Are you not, at least to your friend, reinforcing the status-quo of what is or is not acceptable?

What is the driving force behind such behavior?

Who decides what is or is not acceptable?

Can you see where this sort of mind-set can easily be applied to other parts of your life besides the external clothing choice?

Do you see that this sort of mental conditioning always starts with something

YOU ARE WHAT YOU BELIEVE YOU ARE!

You can make a difference in your own life and in your world. Look within and realize you have been programmed to believe that you are “ONLY” anything.

You possess the Creative Potential to completely remake the universes and beyond! You are infinite creative beings! YOU ARE CREATOR GOD MANIFEST—AND NO LESS!

completely reasonable—such as health, safety, and well-being—and then is quickly expanded out and adapted to things such as spiritual philosophy?

When one is in agreement with another as to what is a comfortable choice in clothing styles, living arrangements, public behavior and so forth, it is easy to apply a little more pressure and agree upon political issues—which will inevitably lead to a religious discussion (the “religion” of politics if nothing else). Do you see the subtle nature of this “group-think” mentality, which states something to the effect: “As long as everyone else is doing/thinking it, then it must be OK.”?

When do YOU decide FOR YOURSELF what is acceptable for YOU? Your world is full of passionate beings who wish to make a change, but many of these ones feel that they are alone, and therefore they do nothing more than complain and say: “I am only one; what difference can I make?”

YOU ARE WHAT YOU BELIEVE YOU ARE!

You can make a difference in your own life and in your world. Look within and realize you have been programmed to believe that you are “ONLY” anything.

You possess the Creative Potential to completely remake the universes and beyond! You are infinite creative beings! YOU ARE CREATOR GOD MANIFEST—AND NO LESS!

There are many ones (physical and non-physical) within the sphere of influence of your planet who do not wish you to EVER realize this basic truth. These ones usurp your energy by getting you to focus on those things that THEY want you to think upon. These things are ALWAYS of a physical/material nature. Materialism is what keeps these ones in power. They get you ones into a frenzy over wanting THINGS, so that you can outwardly establish a higher status in society, and thus you make these ones quite wealthy and powerful as you dutifully help them to achieve THEIR dreams and goals.

A simple lifestyle centered upon spiritual growth and true knowledge is not very glamorous from the external viewpoint of an observer. However, it is by far the most rewarding endeavor you ones can focus your time and energy upon. There is no particular monetary cost associated with it. However, the challenges you will face will be quite real, and the rewards for meeting them will garner you great spiritual wealth.

Know that the majority will try, sometimes mightily, to make you conform to the status quo. You will likely be treated, by those who cannot see the value in what you do, as if you were wearing a fluorescent green Mohawk haircut, spiked collar, and studded earring in your nose to a fancy dinner party.

Such are the challenges of the world you chose to come into and experience in! Please know that you are NEVER alone, regardless of your current situation. Any situation can be changed—turned into a great opportunity for growth.

Be persistent in your inner search for spiritual knowledge and you WILL find it. We of the Lighted Realms of Creation are always waiting for the call. We will not enter where we are not welcome, nor will we ever give forth any information that would interfere with your free-will choices. Those games are left to the dark ones who wish to manipulate and control your Creative Potential.

Call upon the Lighted Brotherhood of Creation (We who come in service to Creator God—The One Light) for Guidance and Protection. Protection, as referred to here, is generally to neutralize the unseen and quite skilled non-physical energies who wish to gain control or influence over your thinking. Fear not these (usually) unseen ones; however, a healthy respect for them would be wise, else they would surely succeed in their quest to dominate and control you—in a most subtle manner at first, but eventually they will literally walk you around like a puppet. As a result you would find you have allowed a great deal of unnecessary mental and emotional torment to become part of your life.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in the Light of, and in Service to, The One Light—Creator God. May your endeavor for TRUE greatness be recognized by you as an inner journey, rather than an external one.

Blessings and Peace to you ALL. Salu.

How The Sheep Are Led: A “Pretend” Speech On Population Reduction

Editor's note: The following item recently came across the desk of our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt. In an excerpted format, we share the following partly because of its content but moreso because of the wonderful “hypothetical lecture” style through which the author is able to demonstrate some very important lessons concerning how a small group of powerful and aware people are controlling a much larger mass of unaware, sleeping people. (Mark Twain made good use of such a device in several of his most renowned literary classics.) While the following is by no means complete as far as an analysis of the situations touched upon, what you are about to read is nonetheless a good reminder to always look for “the truth beyond the shadows” when considering so many of the seemingly unrelated events unfolding all around us.

7/5/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

(illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com)

HYPOTHETICAL SPEECH GIVEN BEFORE ATTENDEES OF A HYPOTHETICAL GATHERING OF THE ELITE

INTRODUCTION

Today, I'm going to address a topic that many of you are already familiar with—that being population reduction. I'd like to bring everyone up-to-speed on what exactly has transpired over the past century with regard to our population programs and, to some extent, what is in-store for the future. Certainly, I won't go into any detail, as we have only a limited amount of time, but I will attempt here to convey the general ideas.

As members of the elite, we are all well aware of the lessons history has taught us. One event in particular has left its indelible mark upon us, and that event was the French Revolution. As most of you are quite aware, as a result of the French Revolution, many of the elite lost their heads—literally. From that event we learned just how deadly the masses could be to the ruling class. Afterwards, it was vowed that what took place then would never take place again.

In order to keep such an event as the French Revolution from occurring again in the future, what was called for was population reduction on a grand scale. In many parts of the world, population reduction has been carried out in the form of famines, plagues, and even wars, but these approaches are generally feasible only so long as they can be carried out beyond the purview of Western society.

This consideration of exposure is always uppermost in our minds as we plan population reduction programs. Even the character of a war—be it a civil war, in which we are disposing of people on both sides of a skirmish—or a “police action”, such as that which took place in Iraq or Kosovo—determines the risks of exposure that are involved.

In “police actions” everything must be done to ensure that the policing force never comes into direct contact with the “enemy”, lest they be given a lesson in the politics of depopulation as I am now in the midst of giving here today.

As our ultimate goals require that population reduction take place uniformly around the globe, it was necessary not only to devise a population reduction strategy for third-world nations, but for Western industrialized nations as well. Whereas we could easily get away with famine or a civil war in a country like Ethiopia, population reduction in Europe or America has required a much different sort of strategy. What was called for was a way for us to depopulate the masses in these industrialized nations while they weren't aware of what was going on. That way, we could operate at a leisurely pace without fear of exposure. This would be achieved by significantly decreasing the birthrate of the masses and by significantly increasing their mortality rate.

REDUCING THE UNBORN

How exactly did we effect a decrease in the birthrate of the masses? This has been accomplished through various means.

First of all, we provided funding for birth-control clinics and we developed new birth-control measures. Much work in this area was pioneered by such notables as Margaret Sanger and Clarence Gamble of Procter and Gamble fame. [applause] Aside from the mainstream birth-control approaches, we have also heavily funded surgical sterilization.

Much funding has gone into abortion clinics and into maintaining the status quo regarding the legality of abortions—the latter requiring much of our effort in limiting advances made on the part of the pro-life movement which has strengthened in recent years.

Funding has also gone into the development of “iatrogenic” procedures applied during abortions which “accidentally” result in permanent sterilization. As all of these approaches require action on an individual basis, and are thus too time intensive, much research has been funded in the development of programs that provide a rise in infertility rates on a more global-wide basis.

The most promising programs to date have been those designed to control the diet and nutrition of the masses—many of which have been in place for decades. We'll talk more about those later.

In addition to these approaches, the masses today don't have time to multiply—they're too busy working to pay their tiny little mortgages on their tiny little houses to have any time left over for new additions to their litters. [laughter] Likewise, their incomes are also limited by various means so that they never quite feel at luxury to multiply.

Credit is wielded effectively as a weapon in order to help keep incomes limited as well. Anything we can do has been done. So much for the unborn undesirables. [applause]

REDUCING THE LIVING

Now about those undesirables who are already living. Their removal from our backyards entailed a bit more work. For starters, we made life almost impossible for various uncared-for segments of the population by promoting unhealthful practices wherever possible.

We introduced new genetically-engineered diseases that target certain segments of the population and limited any social programs that threatened to bring them relief. We've fought hard against any attempts to improve the nation's healthcare system, as any such improvements have typically threatened to benefit the poor.

We've promoted pharmaceutical drugs with numerous unadvertised side-effects. We've promoted the use of alcohol and “hard drugs”.

We've seized control of medical research institutions through use of non-profit foundations in order to maintain—rather than eliminate—diseases such as cancer and heart disease.

We've suppressed all alternative medicines and the history of their use. We de-emphasized the significance of good nutrition in disease prevention.

We've ensured that new mothers are motivated to feed their newborn infants bottled milk formulas which are depleted of important essential nutrients.

We've effectively removed many important vitamins and other nutrients from staple foods, such as grains, by refining them and then selling the extracted vitamins to health food stores at wildly-inflated prices—effectively placing them beyond the reach of those who need them most—the poor. Foods are often vitamin fortified, but at ridiculously low levels and not with the vitamins that are most desperately needed.

We were actually behind the creation of the vitamin Recommended Daily Allowances, or RDAs, which have resulted in an overall reduction in vitamin levels. Via this reduction in vitamin levels, an overabundance of refined carbohydrates such as sugar, the hydrogenation process, genetic-engineering, and eradication of valuable oil-seed crops such as hemp, we've greatly reduced the effectiveness—if not the availability—of good fats, also known as essential fatty acids.

We've done everything possible to insure that those who are health-conscious are unable to distinguish these good fats from the bad ones, thus causing them to inadvertently eliminate the good fats from their diets. You'll note that there is no portion of the USDA "food pyramid" devoted just to good fats. Consequently, the food pyramid has served as a highly-effective means of encouraging people to minimize good fats in their diets.

Unfortunately, in recent years there has been a resurgence in the use of supplements containing essential fatty acids by the more informed segments of the population, though market pricing and lack of advertising help to keep such supplements out of the hands of the poor, once again. Thus far, the masses overall have not connected the six-fold increase in cancer death rates since the turn of the century to the increased consumption of hydrogenated oils and trans-fatty acids and the decrease in the consumption of essential fatty acids and their necessary pre-cursor vitamins.

One significant reason for this is because pollution is readily seen as a viable cause of cancer. Of course, pollution plays a part in cancer formation, but not in the levels typically present in air, water, or foods. Most persons who acquire cancer have never come into contact with significant levels of carcinogenic or cancer-causing pollution. Usually, only those persons with suppressed immune systems—not helped by poor nutrition—ever develop cancer. Concealing this is but one reason why we need pollution, or at least the appearance thereof. It is one reason why we hype pollution. I'll address another reason why pollution is necessary to our cause in just a moment.

We did various minor things like promote the frying of foods rather than baking—again, to increase consumption of hydrogenated oils. We reduced nutritional choices in the supermarket based on a person's income so that the poor—a high-priority targeted segment of the population, as you've no doubt noticed—had little choice but to purchase hydrogenated margarine and vegetable oil instead of the much more healthful choices of butter and olive oil, for example.

As a result of our de-emphasizing and reducing access to nutrition in this country, the healthcare industry today is dependent on a host of ailments that would hardly exist otherwise. This dependency of the healthcare industry on the aftermath of our programs effectively allies them to our cause—whether they like it or not. Literally hundreds of ailments are now being treated symptomatically with drugs, that not only don't treat the underlying nutritional deficiency, but whose side-effects in many cases are much worse than the symptoms they were intended to treat! What a terrible shame. [laughter] And those are just the people who can afford medical insurance! [applause]

Steps to control the food supply were taken in other areas as well. Small-time, independent farmers continue to be devastated, and the larger farming concerns have taken increasingly larger market share. We managed to take control of seed banks worldwide so that heirloom seeds, which have served independent farmers for generations, are slowly being phased out of existence. In their place we promote seeds which have been genetically modified to reduce their nutritional value. Ultimately, we hope to force farmers away from the practice of saving seeds for the next year's planting altogether. This will give us ultimate control of food crops.

Likewise, we've devastated each and every small fishing community as well by controlling national fishery resources. Since 75% of the U.S. population lives along the coastlines of either the ocean itself or the Great Lakes, this was seen early-on as a crucial step to attaining our goals.

As no one ever questioned that maintenance of the national fisheries would require an enormous amount of genetics research, we graciously took advantage of this taxpayer-provided opportunity to pursue a long-term decline in the nation's near-shore fisheries. The added benefit here was that much knowledge concerning genetics was acquired over time from studying aquatic species. In addition, much of that knowledge translated to human genetics—as fish, being vertebrates, share much in common with the human species, perhaps moreso with those of the masses. [laughter]

We've even gone so far as to attempt genetic alteration of some species of fish. As species such as menhaden are usually quite prolific, genetic alterations can be accomplished in a relatively short span of time; however, just as genetically-abnormal organisms often die before reaching maturity, our mistakes—which have appeared to the public in the form of large fish kills along coastal areas—had to be explained away somehow.

To this end we simply employed pollution—our most beloved environmental scapegoat. Our environmentalist friends, as always, have continued to lend us a helping hand in concealing our covert activities by promoting pollution as the culprit behind such activities. Many thanks to them for their full involuntary cooperation. [applause] We have come to rely more and more on such involuntary assistance from the public sector where applicable.

As with genetic alteration of coastal species such as fish, to date we continue to promote the production of red tides to further kill sea grass beds which are used by food fish as nurseries, again aiding the destruction of near-shore fisheries.

In other instances, using similar tactics, we have destroyed shell beds relied on by local fishermen for their livelihood. Fortunately, operatives in the fisheries can merely fain incompetence and the masses are fooled once again. Little do they realize that the elite were instrumental in the founding of the national fisheries service, not to mention the entire conservation movement during the latter half of the nineteenth century. The fools!

To think that we gave them the Darwin Awards so that they could laugh at each other! Pardon me—the irony is just a bit too much.

I have to say that each of them deserves their own copy of this year's award, all framed and official. But, of course, that would cut heavily into our profits! [laughter]

One other thing I'd like to say about our attack on personal independence is that, to a large extent, it has contributed greatly to the movement of populations to the cities over the past century. By making the masses less independent, we have been successful, to a large extent, at corralling them into large metropolitan areas. In more recent years we have taken this a step further by shutting down hospitals and other public services in rural areas, thereby making it more difficult for populations to spread further into these depopulated areas.

One reason this approach has been at all achievable is due to the fact that the masses live in constant fear of cancer and other such diseases which we have successfully made commonplace. The masses are simply in fear of living too far from medical centers, and so they stay put in the cities. Now, if we could only stop cities from constantly expanding outward!

It's worth noting that, in the old country, many of today's diseases were simply unheard of because those persons who lived in the countryside ate their foods fresh and unprocessed—what is known today as whole foods. Food eaten in this way contains all the vitamins necessary for their proper digestion. I mention this because what our ancestors learned was that such populations could not be significantly reduced so long as they remained independent to this extent.

Anyway, as one might suspect, this need to corral populations into metropolitan areas has been a motivating factor behind the elimination of independent farming as well as other independent livelihoods which promote rural living. Keeping populations concentrated in small, urban areas ultimately makes our goals much easier to attain.

I mentioned earlier the eradication of valuable oil-seed crops, such as hemp. I should point out here the overwhelming significance of hemp in regards to our goals. Though few people in the States realize it, hemp seed is, in many ways, unmatched for its nutritional value. As it turns out, hemp had been used historically as a food source by various populations around the world for centuries, and the plant had attained quite a reputation for enabling populations to actually survive famines—including, unfortunately, those caused by us.

Our drug-crop eradication programs were developed specifically to meet this one particular challenge. One such program that we have undertaken in recent years is the development of fungal agents that can be sprayed on hemp crops to not just destroy them, but to keep such crops from being planted in the same soil in the near future.

As always, efforts in one area have payoffs in many other areas as well. Much of what we've learned from our drug-crop eradication programs applies, in many ways, to traditional food crops as well. If a fungal agent can be engineered to attack a specific drug-crop such as marijuana, it stands to reason that one can also be engineered to target traditional food crops also.

As resulting crop losses over the long term could be blamed on global weather patterns resulting from El Niño, the infamous ozone hole, and other such atmospheric abnormalities, it is rather convenient that we created the National Weather Service, as it is obviously recognized as the authority on the nation's weather. This was accomplished by our creation, in 1969, of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, or NOAA as it is often referred to.

NOAA was created by recommendation of President Johnson's Stratton Commission, appointed by the President to study the nation's marine problems. What a coincidence! The Bureau of Fisheries—which I mentioned earlier we created prior to the turn of the century—conveniently came under the direction of NOAA, and thus we were able to effectively consolidate our control.

The history of the National Marine Fisheries Service, as it is known today, is particularly abundant with such instances in which control was effectively consolidated. Indeed, the isolation of our efforts from other, insignificant agencies has necessitated many reorganizations, not just in the marine fisheries, but elsewhere as well. It goes without saying that our creation of the National Weather Service resulted also in the acquisition of much additional technology and support for our worldwide satellite reconnaissance programs.

All this, thanks to the efforts of our people at the Smithsonian, most notably Spencer F. Baird who, in 1871, brought to the attention of Congress the desperate condition of the nation's fisheries! [applause]

Through their dedicated efforts was born the conservation movement, upon which, as I eluded to earlier, we've had quite a tremendous ride. Let me just say that the Bureau of Fisheries was created in response to the perceived threat that marine resources—that is, the nation's fisheries—were in drastic decline. In reality, the men who studied the problem had no way of knowing whether the nation's fisheries, as a whole, were in decline or not, nor did they care. All they did was to make it appear that the fisheries were in decline and Congress took the bait, resulting in passage of the legislation that created the Bureau of Fisheries.

By playing both sides of an issue such as this one, we are able to assume absolute control, and are thus able to bring about a desired result or synthesis in the process. In the end, near-shore fisheries have indeed declined, but not because they were in need of our intervention—but rather, because they received it. [applause]

Now, moving on. The criminal justice system is obviously an integral part of our population reduction strategy. By imprisoning those who commit nonviolent acts, we are able to increase their mortality rate significantly in a number of ways.

We encourage prison overcrowding, which leads to a high rate of deaths—both from infighting and from diseases such as tuberculosis. As mentioned earlier, diet and nutrition play an extremely important role in our population reduction strategy as well. This is convenient because in prisons, as in the armed forces, mental institutions, etc., we are able to enforce dietary standards according to our goals—mostly through economic means.

By imprisoning those who have committed drug-related acts, in addition to effecting an increase in their mortality rate, we are also able to greatly affect the mortality rate of remaining family members. This is so because it is often the breadwinner of the household who is incarcerated. This results in great economic hardship for the spouse and children, and it often leads to imprisonment and health deterioration of other family members later on.

Another advantage of criminalizing non-violent behavior such as drug use is that we are able to increase prison capacity significantly without removing too many truly dangerous criminals from society, thus enabling those criminals to aid us in further reducing “outside” populations. Mandatory minimum sentencing has helped a great deal to accomplish this.

THE SINK DRAIN MODEL

Though we continue to simultaneously weaken all of the masses at once, we most aggressively target those segments of the population that lie outside of the mainstream. Why? Simply because they are weaker. They've already been abandoned by the mainstream, so there is no one who will come forward to help them—even if their plight were to become known by others.

Fortunately, that rarely happens because we manage to keep the classes pretty much separated. On rare occasions when the classes do mix, their class and cultural differences are usually enough to keep them from transferring highly critical information. That's one reason why we need racism and crime—to keep society segregated into small, weak, isolated pockets.

Other, similar techniques are used to further isolate targeted segments of the population. Church congregations, for example, are often encouraged not to associate with members of society outside their church and, in addition, they are often encouraged to read from only one book—the Bible. Many thanks to Bishop Charles Henry Brent and others for helping us to create the ecumenical movement. [applause]

In the end, the targeted segments are effectively isolated, cornered like wild animals by hunters. This approach makes sense for numerous reasons. We have to target someone—it may as well be those segments of the population who cannot currently defend themselves. Secondly, the weaker segments of the population are the ones who don't “contribute”—many of them are no longer employed in our corporations. Most importantly, it takes time to reduce a population's numbers and, therefore, as the populations within the weaker segments are reduced over time, some members of the stronger mainstream will have been weakened enough to replace those who have been “depopulated” in the weaker segments. This effectively makes the poorer areas on a map like the drain at the bottom of a sink. Such areas are where the poverty-stricken masses are consumed.

A large part of what makes this work is that those in the mainstream middle-class—who may suspect in the back of their minds that something is going on—are apathetic, partly because they are too involved in class struggles of their own, not to mention other problems, but also because they simply believe that they aren't the ones being targeted.

Technically, they're correct in that they aren't currently being targeted—but little do the fools realize that a mere shake of the financial “tree” or a diagnosis of cancer in one-third of their families, for example, is more than adequate for continued depopulation!

In a kind of poetic justice, just as those of the middle class aren’t there to help the poor as they slide ever closer to the drain, neither will anyone be there to help those of the middle class when they themselves later become the poor. That, ladies and gentlemen, is what economics is all about. [applause]

EXPOSÉ INSURANCE

Need we worry that the masses will become wise to our little “game”?

Should we concern ourselves that they might somehow become enlightened and that our hard-won advances will be laid-out to spoil?

Sure we should. What we have undertaken here is far beyond treason by any stretch of the imagination and we should never forget that, no matter from what angle we view reality, one thing is absolutely clear: we of the elite are far outnumbered by the masses—and those in this country unfortunately continue to be armed, albeit with popguns, especially in the state of Texas. [laughter]

Any enlightenment of the masses surely won’t be as a result of their education. Some of you may not realize just how long we’ve been playing our little “game”.

It’s roots can be traced back even before Thomas Malthus wrote his essay on population in 1798, but his writings provided a major impetus to our goals. With the help of many of our “friends in high places” we managed to stake-out our claims to power, everywhere possible, and major accomplishments really began to take place with the advent of a very important tool in 1865.

No, not the Gatling Gun. Rather, the emergence of the tax-exempt charitable foundation, the first being the Peabody Education Fund, formed by George Peabody, founder of the J.P. Morgan banking firm. I know we likely have some Peabody descendents here who ought to feel rather proud. [applause] Anyway, as many here already know, the Peabody Fund later became the Rockefeller Foundation—a tour de force behind our efforts. [applause] Many thanks also to the Rockefeller family!

To continue: various such foundations have been utilized along the way to achieve major goals. For instance, foundations are often used to fund medical research or, more accurately stated, redirect medical research. In one of our most prized sleight-of-hand tricks ever conceived, we learned over time that there exists no better way to enact control over an organization’s “steering wheel” than to simply fund the organization, and that’s exactly what we’ve done, time and time again—and with great success I might add.

Not to further belittle members of the masses, but they somehow still believe that funding a good cause necessarily means that it’s the good cause that gets funded. [laughter]

I see you get my point; now back to my original one—which is that we’ve taken every conceivable precaution that we could, over time, to help guarantee that we not get caught red-handed, so to speak.

Population reduction is a rather serious business. One cannot set out to do what we have done without immense care and planning. Of utmost concern, early on, was that control be taken of the education process so that, ultimately, members of the masses would be incapable of acquiring the tools needed to piece together history, in particular.

Only the most prestigious private schools and universities would be allowed to teach their students to think for themselves. All others would only be allowed to hand out the officially accepted truth for purposes of rote memorization. A denial here, an accidental fire destroying public records there, a whole lot of propaganda—and before long, history, as it actually occurred, was soon to be replaced by what we like to refer to in our inner circles as history as we SAY it occurred.

So, how was history so effectively rewritten? By organizing! The American Historical Association, for example, was founded in 1884 by members from our group, such as Andrew Dickson White and Moses Coit Tyler.

Historical associations and societies were created for no other reason than to centralize control. Such control was easily exerted over member organizations through the use of certification procedures and the like. In most cases, such societies didn’t already exist, and therefore, no effort at all was necessary in taking control. An association was simply created from scratch, and control over it was assumed from the very start. Being the first on the scene does have it’s advantages.

It’s important to understand that general history wasn’t all that we were interested in rewriting. To effectively increase the mortality rate of the masses, we had to control pretty much all aspects of healthcare and medical research as well, and therefore it became necessary also to rewrite medical history to some extent. The same can be said for other particular kinds of history, but I won’t delve into those areas at this time. I will say that, for reasons which in some cases will be obvious, this same approach taken to commandeer history was also taken to do the same with regard to various disciplines and services—such as legal, psychology, agriculture, religion, education, medical, public health, to name but a few.

I don’t have to tell you how effective and amazing the transformation has been in helping to keep things under wraps. As a result of our efforts at rewriting history, acceptance of anything other than the version of history as we say it occurred is virtually impossible today as we now have a monopoly on “the truth”.

Whereas the truth used to be the truth, and nothing but the truth, today the truth is what we say it is because those who make up the masses have an innate need to belong and an accompanying fear of being different. To each of them, truth is no longer defined solely according to what is reality, but also by what is considered acceptable to their peers. Anyone attempting to paint history as it actually occurred will pay dearly in peer rejection.

We make use of other techniques as well to keep things under wraps. By our promoting absurd theories in the media that have absolutely no basis in fact, the overall result is that all theories—including those that are viable and actually based on fact—tend to be rejected by society as well. In effect, we group the good or valid theory with the bad or invalid theory, and society conveniently disposes of both for us, never quite realizing that they’ve just thrown the baby out with the bath water! [laughter]

Clearly the tools of psychology have served us quite well.

THAT DREADFUL NEW MEDIA

Let’s hope that the tools of psychology continue to serve us well because, as many of you know, we are now in the midst of one of our greatest challenges ever—controlling the flow of information on that dreadful new media, the Internet. As I just mentioned, one way we have sought to address this challenge is by stigmatizing anyone who even so much as whispers the word “conspiracy” in earshot of others. In addition, we’ve promoted the view that information on the Internet is unregulated and, therefore, not at all believable—which of course is true—but only for some of the information, not all of it.

We’ve promoted the Internet as unwholesome to children. We’ve even played our trump card—terrorism—claiming that terrorists learn the tricks of their trade by what they read on the Internet. To effect real change, however, we need to do more than merely change mindsets; we must change laws.

We hope to set a precedent soon by passage of a bill in Congress that will make it a felony for website owners to link to other websites that contain illicit material. A bill was considered that would simply make it illegal to provide such material on one’s website, but we concluded that the effect would not be the same as our making it illegal also to merely link to such a site, as the latter approach accomplishes what the former cannot. It results in a level of nervousness—ok, call it terror—that prevents a lot of website owners from even considering such a link to a site that may, at some point in the future, contain this sort of material.

U.S. POLITICS ONE-PARTY SHORT OF A DEMOCRACY

Next, I’d like to talk about politics. I surely won’t touch on much here that most of you aren’t already aware of, but some points here ought to be made nonetheless. Politics continues to be an effectively utilized tool by us as the masses continue to believe that voting can actually make a difference. [laughter]

Today, politics effectively serves no other purpose than to give the perception that the masses maintain some control. Any actual control had by the masses exists only at the state and local levels, and then only in rare instances. What we have here in this country, at least at the federal level, is effectively a one-party system. As we already have our goals mapped-out a decade in advance, the entire façade of politics is really no more than a big chess game in which we control both sides of the board, and in the process of maintaining the appearance that the masses have control, we have our goals superimposed on those that are of interest to the public.

Though our moves have been planned well in advance, like the Weather Service, we sometimes don’t know for sure where the “storm” will hit until it actually does. [laughter] No offense to our folks in the Weather Service; they haven’t yet made good on their promises with all their new toys yet, but I’m sure that they will eventually. [laughter]

TYING INTO THE NEW WORLD ORDER

What I’ve addressed thus far is population reduction and, to a limited degree, how it was brought about, but I’ve only touched on population reduction programs from the viewpoint of a western industrialized country such as the United States. As most of you know, similar measures are being carried out worldwide, as they need to be in order for our ultimate goals to be achieved. These measures, to a large extent, have only been made possible as a result of the initial formation of what is known—even by members of the masses—as the New World Order, the phrase coined by ex-President, George Bush. [applause]

What exactly is this New World Order? What did President Bush mean by this phrase?

To keep within our agenda, I will adopt a somewhat simplistic definition of what is meant by New World Order. The New World Order could best be described as simply being the collusion between the world’s governing elite against the masses—period. Why is this called a New World Order? It is called this because such collusion, in effect, means the dissolution of national boundaries and their replacement by logical boundaries of power that effectively separate we, the elite, from them, the masses.

In reality, sovereign nation-states are defined by their national borders—everyone within the boundaries of a state sharing common goals and ideologies and, I might add, loyalty to the state. Traditionally, such nation-states have gone to war either over territorial disputes or when their nationalistic goals or ideologies clashed.

Ultimately, under an openly-established New World Order, wars will be fought only for the control and containment of the masses. Until the transformation into this New World Order is complete, existing national boundaries—though meaningless in terms of sovereignty in many cases—will continue to exist on maps, in textbooks, and historical accounts, only to help maintain the illusion for the masses that nothing has changed—so as not to wake the sleeping giant.

Indeed, lending credence to their mistaken beliefs, wars will still be fought and brave members of the masses will continue to die in great Malthusian battles over these very national borders that, in a very real sense, exist only in their minds. [applause]

Such wars, fought over national boundaries, not only help us to maintain our façade while reducing populations, but like so many other tricks we’ve employed, they allow us to fund our global war-machine as well.

Another example of this is the war on “drugs” which has also been moderately successful at helping us to achieve this particular goal. As should be obvious, a two-state world, controlled by the less populous of the two states, is in need of a great deal of military might.

Honestly, I continue to be amazed that the masses of the industrialized nations of the world could be fooled to the vast extent that they have been. [applause]

To their credit, we have made things rather confusing for them. Imagine the look on the faces of Americans were they to realize that we, the elite, built up Nazi Germany prior to World War II! Priceless, absolutely priceless!

Thank you all! [Applause]

Wisdom Of The Rays: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

Volume I & Volume II

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

Classic Research Works by Eustace Mullins

THE CURSE OF CANAAN A Demonology of History

“After forty years of patient study of the crises which face humanity, I arrived at a very simple conclusion—all conspiracies are Satanic!”

The “Will of Canaan” which has been the guiding rule of The Conspiracy for three thousand years is explained in explicit detail. Some topics covered are: The War Against Shem; The Transgression of Cain; Secular Humanism; American Revolution; The World Wars; French Revolution.

242 pages $15.00

MURDER BY INJECTION The Story of the Medical Conspiracy Against America

Eustace Mullins unveils the Conspiracy to deny you low-cost alternative health-care and how federal agents commit acts of “Criminal Syndicalism” to protect the profits of the “Drug Trust”. The world’s 18 largest drug firms are listed. Some of the topics covered are: Profits of Cancer, AIDS, Contamination of the Food Supply, Death and Vaccination, The Rockefeller Syndicate.

361 pages $15.00

THE WORLD ORDER Our Secret Rulers

Eustace Mullins shares his discovery of the hidden manipulators of the World Order who have maintained their power by a very simple technique—a disguise which enables them to carry on their Satanic work without being identified and prosecuted. The topics covered are: The “New” World Order; The Rothschilds; Soviet Russia; Franklin Delano Roosevelt; The Business of America; The CIA; The Bechtel Complex; The Foundations; The Rule of the Order.

297 pages $15.00

THE SECRETS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE

After years of research, Eustace Mullins discovered that the men whom he exposed and named in 1952 as the shadowy figures behind the Federal Reserve System were themselves shadows, the American fronts for the unknown figures who became known as the “London Connection”. The original stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banks have been located and their parent companies traced to the London Connection. His research is substantiated by citations and documentation from many sources.

WHY THE END?

Two Millennia Of Prophecy And It's Fruitless Attempt To Awaken Humanity

J.T. REVELATOR

The book that dares to ask the ultimate question. Many prophets over the last two millennia, each with their own perspective, have tried to warn humanity about the "future" catastrophic "end-time events" in the hopes of altering them. That time is now upon us.

WHY THE END? is a distillation of prophecies and messages spanning the last 2,000 years, sorted by topic for you, the awakening human. Unlike other books that dwell on past history or vague fragments of events, WHY THE END? gets to the point, chronicling the diverse range of prophecies and offering the facts and clues from scientific disciplines.

You may have pondered on some of these questions:

Why is time "speeding up"?

Why are animals exhibiting strange behaviors, some dying inexplicably?

Why is the weather fluctuating and getting more severe?

Are you feeling "on edge" as if something profound is about to happen soon?

Is there a limit to humanity's abuse of the planet?

When does the "New Age" begin?

WHY THE END? intends to answer these questions and more in a no-frills, uncompromising manner. Some of these projections are quite harsh and could be interpreted as "doom and gloom", depending on your perspective. But if you have an appetite for what is really on the horizon, then WHY THE END? is the book for you.

The bottom line is that the Purification of the Earth is underway, and will continue to escalate. WHY THE END? will prepare you mentally for the events, while those less informed will become incapacitated by fear as they witness the end of life as we know it. In reality, it is the cleansing of the old to make way for the new "Golden Age". It then becomes your choice as to how you will view and interpret and experience these events.

The Untold History Of America

by Ray Bilger

This book shatters the image that has traditionally been portrayed as American History, by exposing the high-level corruption that passes for business-as-usual in the Halls of Congress, the White House, and throughout our entire Judicial System.

Special emphasis is placed throughout the book on the original inhabitants of America, the Native Americans. They lived for thousands of years on this continent in complete harmony and balance with the Earth. With their help we may yet be able to turn things around so that our tomorrows will be something we will all be honored to pass on to the children who are our future generations.

The first 16 parts of Ray Bilger's ongoing research are compiled into the book: The Untold History Of America, Vol. I.

The Indigo Children

The New Kids Have Arrived

by Lee Carroll & Jan Tober

(Featured interview in the March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

The “Indigo Child” is a boy or girl who displays a new and unusual set of psychological attributes, revealing a pattern of behavior generally undocumented before. This pattern has singularly unique factors that call for parents and teachers to change their treatment and upbringing of these kids to assist them in achieving balance and harmony in their lives, and to help them avoid frustration.

In this groundbreaking book, international authors and lecturers Lee Carroll and Jan Tober answer many of the often-puzzling questions surrounding Indigo Children, such as:

- Can we really be seeing human evolution in kids today?
- Are these kids smarter than we were at their age?
- How come a lot of our children today seem to be “system busters”?
- Why are so many of our brightest kids being diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD)?
- Are there proven, working alternatives to Ritalin?

Throughout this work, Carroll and Tober bring together some very fine minds (doctors, educators, psychologists, and more) who shed light on the Indigo Child phenomenon. These children are truly special, representing a great percentage of all the kids being born today on a worldwide basis. They come in “knowing” who they are—so they must be recognized, celebrated for their exceptional qualities, and guided with love and care.

This book is a must for the parents of unusually bright and active children!

PROZAC: PANACEA OR PANDORA?

Ann Blake Tracy, Ph.D.

(Featured interview in the July 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

This text contains critical life-saving information to educate patients, their physicians, families, and friends. Read about medical studies which demonstrate that:

- depression is determined biologically by elevated cortisol hormone in the blood, yet one single 30mg dose of Prozac clearly doubles cortisol levels (one of the fight or flight hormones). This should prove to be a perfect formula for producing rage, panic, and severe rebound depression.
- when the SSRIs (Prozac, Paxil, Zoloft, Lovan, Luvox) raise 5HT serotonin, they lower 5HIAA serotonin—the serotonin researchers originally hoped to increase.
- Prozac multiplies many other medications by “10-fold or greater” which greatly increases the danger of life-threatening toxic drug reactions and toxic drug interactions.
- SSRIs may initially increase concentration and energy through increased production of adrenalin hormones, but according to patients this method results in the same long-term effects associated with steroid or amphetamine use—memory impairment, poor concentration, mental disability, etc.
- disruption of serotonin alters perceptions; reality and dreams seem one in the same, and a hypersuggestible state is created—logical reasons for large numbers of Prozac patients consistently reporting false memories of abuse.
- when the SSRIs lower the critical 5HIAA serotonin, compulsions can be induced for sex, spending, shoplifting, sweets, diet soda, alcohol, tobacco, and other substances.
- patients often report after-effects of withdrawal, severe rebound depression, memory loss, impaired concentration, sleep disorders, panic attacks, and chronic fatigue.

TURNING THE '90s UPSIDE DOWN

In 1956 Eli Lilly patented LSD, and in 1987 they gave us Prozac. Has Lilly turned the '90s upside down for us to relive the '60s with their latest miracle drug, Prozac? LSD, the most notorious of the psychedelic drugs, was first marketed by Sandoz in Europe with the suggestion that it be used to chemically induce insanity in “normal subjects” with the hope of discovering how mental illness is produced. Yet in December 1955, two months before Lilly obtained their patent on LSD here in America, TIME magazine featured the drug, declaring that LSD “may actually help psychiatrists clear-up mental illness”. It was also promoted as a cure for alcoholism and as an “aid in facilitating psychoanalysis”. Now, a generation later, many of these same marketing claims are being made for Prozac that were once made for LSD. Just how similar in action are these two drugs? How much evidence is there that those who feel they cannot live without Prozac are addicted or dependent upon it? As our latest panacea, it is being prescribed for everything from headaches and flu, to acne and home sickness. Yet, according to FDA spokespersons, there have been more adverse reaction reports on Prozac than any other medical product. We are being media blitzed to believe these new mind-altering chemicals have a large margin of safety, but will time prove otherwise or has it already? Considering the widespread use of these products, we have no time to lose in learning the answer.

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

ISBN: 0-9526147-66

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, he reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world". No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

—VIDEO—

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

The Reptilian Agenda

Parts I & II

(Featured interview in the October 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM.)

David Icke has produced two amazing videos with the Zulu "sanusi" or shaman, Credo Mutwa, who reveals astonishing information which, until now, was only available to the highest initiates of the African shaman tradition.

He has had attempts on his life and endless threats in an effort to silence him right up to the recording, but, as Credo says, "The world must know this—and know it now."

He reveals how a shapeshifting reptilian race (the "Chitauli" to Africans) has controlled humanity for thousands of years and how their bloodlines are in the positions of royal, political, and economic power today.

Credo Mutwa supports all the themes outlined in The Biggest Secret and adds his own unique knowledge and experience of traveling Africa for nearly 80 years.

These videos will re-write the UFO/extraterrestrial story in a way that will blow your mind. UFO researchers have ignored Africa and therefore ignored one of the greatest sources of knowledge on the planet.

While people still argue over Roswell and the extraterrestrial beings apparently found there, African tribes-people have been interacting with these ET "gods" for thousands of years, sometimes eating them, as Credo Mutwa did on one occasion with unforgettable consequences.

Credo has not only seen dead "greys" many times, he has seen them examined behind their "grey" exterior and he knows exactly what they really look like—and it is nothing like we think!

"This is the most amazing man it has ever been my honor to meet—a genius—and the importance of these videos is simply beyond words". —David Icke

After making these videos, Credo was visited by two people from Cape Town who offered him 50,000 rand, and a house anywhere in South Africa he would like to name, if he would agree to never speak to David Icke again and never have anything to do with him. Credo's reply can be imagined!

Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse

One half of the world's current population should soon be dead according to authoritative projections. Will you, your family, and friends be among the survivors or the deceased?

Dr. Len Horowitz and Dr. Joseph S. Puleo investigate 2000 years of religious and political persecution and the latest technologies being used to enslave, coerce, and even kill billions of unsuspecting people.

This work returns the most precious spiritual knowledge, power, and "healing codes" to humanity. It offers new hope for the loving masses to survive the worldwide plagues, famines, and weather changes that are now at hand. In perfect time for these cataclysmic events, Healing Codes presents an urgent, monumental, and inspired work that will be hailed for generations to come.

Emerging Viruses - AIDS & Ebola

This is the first in-depth exploration into the origins of HIV and Ebola. Claims that these "emerging viruses" naturally evolved and then jumped species from ape to man seem grossly unfounded in light of the compelling evidence assembled in this extraordinary text. Alternatively, the possibility that these bizarre germs were laboratory creations, accidentally or intentionally transmitted via tainted hepatitis and smallpox vaccines in the U.S. and Africa—as numerous authorities have alleged—is investigated herein. This book reviews the numerous viral vaccine studies conducted simultaneously in New York City and Central West Africa by a narrow network of virologists working for major military-medical contractors under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and the World Health Organization (WHO). Included is Dr. Robert Gallo, the notorious discoverer of the AIDS virus. The text presents bizarre and horrifying facts about the biological weapons race of the 1960s and early 1970s when these researchers developed countless immune-system-ravaging viruses, and experimented with an assortment of antidote vaccines allegedly for "defense" and cancer prevention.

You start to pull on a thread and you never really know just where it might lead. This started out to be a simple, straightforward research investigation. Then some closets were examined and a whole lot of skeletons fell out. And that was only for starters! But let me start at the beginning and not get ahead of my story.

The journey you are about to take will lead you to many unforeseen and unforgettable places. You will probably ask yourself—more than once—if this is even real. This story will lay forth a woven tapestry of such intricate design that you will marvel at the clever constructs of the “Shadow Government”. There's an old saying that applies to what they've accomplished: “Do it right under their noses.”

The Federal Emergency Management Agency, FEMA, has been tarred and feathered by many conspiracy theorists—and rightly so. Its highly questionable financial origins are outside the control of Congress, and there is a vast sea of bizarre history behind the scenes of this seemingly service-oriented, quasi-government agency.

Before delving into an astonishing examination of the current events concerning the devastating wildfires raging in many of our western states (yes, they are connected), which will be presented much later in this necessarily lengthy presentation, let's first begin a strange journey through the history of an agency which has evolved through many aliases on the way to finally being known as FEMA.

The SPECTRUM "University"

Whenever someone asks me to explain the purpose of this newspaper, I usually say: "Think of it as a series of 'course notes' for a college-level curriculum that our universities do not dare teach." Once that idea has sunk-in, I then add the point I've made here before, that we are an equal opportunity offender.

The subject of TRUE Education is near and dear to me—and, of course, to all associated with The SPECTRUM, both on the producing side of the equation as well as on the reading side. Our "family" holds a deep appreciation for the fundamental role that Education plays, which is central to so many other avenues of human creative expression and interaction.

One particular article we are sharing with you in this month's newspaper seems to have stirred-up a kind of renewed reflection on, or mental revisiting of, this subject of Education. Maybe that's because the article touches upon just how far what we call Education today—at all levels—has deteriorated from what we imagine it SHOULD be. Today, moreso than ever before, Mark Twain's caution on this subject bears repeating: "Never let your schooling interfere with your education."

In early 1988, an explosive article I wrote on the then-current problems in Higher Education was published (by a courageous magazine editor) and started to make the rounds and ruffle quite a few guilty feathers in the pompous academic stratospheres wherein I was incarcerated at the time. Indignant sputterings cackled from the so-accused. Such nervous guilt was partly the result of exactly what I had "spilled the beans" about, and partly the result of the strong background and "pedigree" upon which I was drawing as PERSONAL experience—close familiarity with the most prestigious and so-called premier academic institutions on the planet.

Never mind that the predictions I made at the time have all come true, and Education—at ALL levels—is in an even more disgusting state of decline now than it was, over a dozen years ago, when the writing on the walls seemed all too clear to me on the inside. From the prevailing (if unspoken) point of view, I had failed my lengthy elitist mind-control conditioning; I had not "caught on" to the "value" of going along with the program.

From the point of view of many, many others, what I wrote was "right on" and needed to be said. Of course, only a few of the praisers who had to live and work in academia would state so publicly because, you know, their circumstances, some of them feebly argued, required they maintain a "professional detachment" from such controversial matters. (In other words, money and position are powerful silencers, even if the conscience still stirs in the quiet of the night.)

Within a few years of the circulation of my article on the subject, longer and more involved studies began to see the light of day, bearing similar bad news. One of the most memorable books had the great title THE CLOSING OF THE AMERICAN MIND: How Higher Education Has Failed Democracy And Impoverished The Souls Of Today's Students by longtime social thought Professor Allan Bloom of the University of Chicago.

While none of these well-meaning dissertations really address the secret core of the problem (including the article in this issue of The SPECTRUM), they DO paint rather vivid pictures of the many lamentable EFFECTS of "whatever" is fundamentally the cause of this mess.

Longtime students of the Larger Picture know that the New World Order's purposeful dumbing-down of society is the missing "whatever" driving this Education collapse from deep behind the scenes. But the general public's mind-control programming to scoff at anything even smelling of "conspiracy" keeps most curious researchers from digging deep enough and opening their eyes wide enough to embrace that Larger Picture.

We try to always keep that Larger Picture in mind with each monthly issue of these "course notes" called The SPECTRUM. We feel, through so doing, that we are contributing something to TRUE Education—as it should be, not what it has largely become.

Could you just imagine a university that simply told The Truth? What a novel idea.

How about a course on the REAL history of America? Or a physics program which dealt with the underlying concepts of free energy? And while we're on a roll with that one, maybe we could even have an electrical engineering department which didn't look the other way or say "Who?!" when the great Nikola Tesla's name was mentioned, while falling all over Edison as if he invented the world.

Picture a course on honest banking and finance—including an historical examination of how the banksters (banking gangsters) had once hoodwinked the world's populations. (Notice I use past tense, meaning we've finally awakened and nullified the Fed and IMF stranglehold.) That course would also do much toward helping students see how money, honestly and intelligently utilized, is simply another form of energy exchange.

Oops. Does that mean the finance course ought to be in the physics department, under thermodynamics? What about music used for levitating objects? Does that belong under physics, too? But when the music is used for healing, does that belong in the medical school or the biology department or where?

Looks like our Native American brothers and sisters were right, after all, when they said, so long ago, mostly to deaf ears at that time, that "all is connected to all" in the Sacred Circle of Infinity.

Anyway, until such an awesome dream can become an educational reality, read (and please Support) The SPECTRUM "university"!

CHINA PUTS 700,000 TROOPS ON ALERT IN SUDAN

From the <www.newsmax.com>
INTERNET website for 8/27/00: [quoting]

In a stunning revelation, London's Sunday Telegraph is reporting in today's editions that China has as many as 700,000 troops in the Sudan and is preparing to enter that country's civil war.

According to the British paper, for the past three years China has been bringing Chinese nationals into the Sudan by cargo jets and boats.

Ostensibly, the Chinese were to serve as guards at oil fields and facilities controlled by the China National Petroleum Corporation.

The introduction of Chinese troops comes in the wake of the military success of the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) headed by Col. Johnny Garang.

Garang's forces, largely Christian, have been battling Sudan's Islamic regime which controls the country's oil region in the Upper Nile.

SPLA troops are reported to be just 10 miles from these oil fields.

The Islamic regime has made an emergency request that China crush the SPLA forces and end the country's 17-year-old civil war.

Oil production began in Sudan just last year, and since then arms have been flowing in from Libya, Qatar, and China.

The Telegraph cites an internal document from the Sudanese military indicating that "as many as 700,000 Chinese security personnel were available for action".

Baroness Caroline Cox, the leading human rights activist for Christians in Sudan, criticized Western governments for their complacency and complicity.

She said: "If, with foreign help, the NIF regime crushes all opposition, we will have entrenched in the heart of Africa a militant Islamist regime aimed at spreading terrorism throughout the continent. It's unbelievably serious for the future of democracy in Africa and could happen in the next few weeks."

British companies, and Canada's Talisman Energy, have joined the Chinese to help develop its oil production facilities and pipelines.

Human rights activists have criticized Western governments for backing the militant Islamic regime in Khartoum, one that has killed civilians to clear areas for oil production.

Christian groups have also publicized the regime's use of slavery.

China's involvement in the ongoing civil war may prove to be the most unusual twist, and may represent the largest movement of one army into another country that went completely undetected by other nations.

A Western aid worker in southern Sudan told the Telegraph: "Everyone knows what is going on. We've all seen the Chinese being brought in and can only pray about what's going to happen next."

The use of Chinese "workers" as a military force may raise serious concerns about the growing number of Chinese illegals detected in Central America and the Caribbean.

Chinese influence in Panama, which controls the Panama Canal, has already raised serious warning from military experts, including Adm. Thomas Moorer, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Read Christopher Ruddy's special report (at the www.newsmax.com Internet website) on China's new air and sea base just 60 miles from Florida in the Bahamas.

There is no doubt about the power that China has to influence the world scene. For a comprehensive look at the current Chinese "chess pieces" moving into key positions on the world playing board, go back and re-read the article Red Tide: The Chinese Communist Targeting Of America in the December 1999 issue of this newspaper. That the Chinese are actually now in position to control the Panama Canal ought to be enough of an alert to the thinking person that China has BIG plans.

Meanwhile, to get a flavor for other pieces moving around on this very dangerous and high-stakes chess board, consider the following, titled:

THREAT OF WAR ?

The following is a timely and thoughtful communication from longtime supporter, gifted writer and researcher, and diligent news contributor to this newspaper, Calvin Burgin (wrldline@texas.net), dated 8/29/00: [quoting]

Al, as we have seen in several recent reports from overseas media, there is evidence that the sinking of the Russian sub Kursk was an act of war, not an accident. The Russian media reported another sub near the Kursk, which then fled the area. That would account for the fact that Russia did not immediately launch an intensive rescue effort—probably because they already knew there was no use and they had other factors to worry about. We probably came very close to all-out war with Russia.

I have sent you other articles and I am sure you have been seeing that there is a concentrated effort to get a war going in the Middle East or with Russia. The Russians, along with China and India, have been trying to prevent the war. India is now under a devastating weather phenomenon (weather warfare?). And the news is telling of 700,000 Chinese troops moving into Sudan.

Why would 700,000 Chinese troops move into Sudan, of all places? Some are reporting that the Chinese are interested in the Sudanese oil fields. All the media I have seen so far have missed the point—or are suppressing it—that Sudan is next door to Saudi Arabia and within striking distance of Israel.

Several reports have stated that President Clinton has stated that he intends to have a war if necessary in order to stay in office. An acquaintance of mine, who is in FEMA, stated that they have been training for what to do during riots that would occur if the presidential elections were called off.

There is just so much going on. I am trying to get three computers working that keep going down (I wonder why?) with very strange problems such as files just disappearing or changing, etc. My brother brought his computer to me, to help fix it, and while I was working on it, the window in his car blew out.

I wish I could write more and document the material I come across, but I simply do not have time at the moment. I just wanted to confirm to you—as I am sure you and The SPECTRUM staff already know—that we are in very dangerous times.

May the Light surround you always!

SHERIFF HAS RIGHT TO KEEP FEDS OUT

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 8/7/00: [quoting]

TRUE SOVEREIGNTY

A U.S. District Court has found that “Wyoming is a sovereign state and the duly elected sheriff of a county is the highest law enforcement official within a county and has law enforcement powers exceeding that of any other state or federal official.” (case No. 2:96-cv-099-J) Big horn County Sheriff Dave Mattis, at a press conference, added: “If a sheriff doesn’t want the feds in his county, he has the constitutional power and right to keep them out or ask them to leave or retain them in custody.” He made further remarks about federal agents of IRS, EPA, BATF, and FBI unlawfully depriving citizens of their privacy, liberty and property. Say “good-bye” to outlaw Executive Orders from the White House the instant you elect a sheriff who knows his and your rights. [End quoting]

“KNOW YOUR CUSTOMER” PRYING EYES, ROUND TWO

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 8/19/00, by Dr. James Hirsén, <http://www.newsmax.com/commentmax/articles/Dr._James_Hirsén.shtml>: [quoting]

A little more than one year ago, there was an attempt in Congress to turn bank executives into dutiful informants.

It seems that government officials want precious information about our individual, personal patterns of finance. In fact, they want it so badly that despite an initially resounding defeat of some incredibly meddlesome regulations, they are trying for a second time.

The original proposal was heralded as the “Know Your Customer” rules. But Americans who cherish liberty weren’t about to be hoodwinked, particularly when it came to the invasion of their financial profiles. A coalition of 300,000 ordinary people from all parts of the political spectrum banded together to preserve a vital component of the Constitution, and they succeeded in stopping the measure cold.

Challengers celebrated its failure to pass, not only because an illicit and intrusive mechanism had been halted, but moreso because a sinister effort was terminated through bold expression of citizen action.

The victory celebration, though, may have been premature. Know Your Customer is paying a visit once again, but this time it is sporting a new look.

H.R. 3886, an anti-money-laundering bill entitled International Counter-Money Laundering and Foreign Anticorruption Act of 2000, is its most recent attempt at disguise. Although the champion of liberty, Rep. Ron Paul of Texas, tried valiantly to attach some pro-privacy amendments to the bill, he has of yet been unsuccessful.

The bill’s title and content are designed to convince the public that the presumed target is the international banking community. But, if passed, discretion and power to expand regulations so that they encompass all banking transactions will be granted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and no further approval from Congress will be needed.

It appears as though this legislative maneuver will be portrayed, at least initially, as a basic method of dealing with international transactions. That way the average person on the street will remain unconcerned and, most likely, uninvolved.

Supporters of the initiative could get the legislation passed first and save the task of expanding it for a later date. Essentially, the Know Your Customer regulations that irate citizens had previously opposed could silently slip into law through a cleverly designed trap door.

One would ordinarily be surprised that our representatives would try to pass the same kind of legislation after the chilly reception they received from their constituents the first time around. Perhaps they believe that it would be more difficult for advocates of individual liberty to rally the same degree of support, since attachment of an international label provides such a tidy distraction.

But Americans must prove these misguided legislators wrong if the notion of privacy is to be sustained. Limited government is based upon unalienable rights that emanate from a Divine source. Government is charged with securing those rights. The rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as stated in the Declaration Of Independence, and the rights of life, liberty, and property, as enumerated in the Constitution, can only flourish when government is restrained.

Underlying our foundational structure is a simple yet exquisite maxim born of a hands-off philosophy: Whenever possible, leave the citizen alone.

Traditionally, our body of law has viewed personal financial information as an area of privacy requiring even greater protection. Those who believe that government should have more depth and scope of authority have demonstrated an intense persistence in pursuit of their goals. The public would be well served to reassemble the coalition that defeated the original Know Your Customer operation. Our representatives need to know, whether hidden by dark brush or shrouded away in a high-rise office building, America hates a snoop.

For Dr. Hirsén's biography, see: <www.newsmax.com/bios>. [End quoting]

I'm sure most of our readers suspected that the crooks in high places would figure a way to go after this financial snooping goal again. As the author suggested above, it would be wise and efficient to resurrect the same grassroots machinery that defeated the original measure to stomp-out this version too. Let your representatives know how you feel about such shenanigans.

URGENT HEALTH ARTICLES

Below are several important health articles. The information given—if applied—will take comparatively little effort to help protect your life and could pay very big financial dividends, also. Some of the news has been offered before in this newspaper, but new information is being constantly found to add to what was previously shared.

SOYA ALERT OVER CANCER AND BRAIN-DAMAGE LINK

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 8/13/00, by Antony Barnett, public affairs editor, The Observer, <<http://www.observer.co.uk/international/story/0,6903,353660,00.html>>: [quoting]

A health warning was sounded last night over the dangers of eating soya after two senior American government scientists revealed that chemicals in the product could increase the risk of breast cancer in women, brain damage in men, and abnormalities in infants.

The disclosure, which sent shockwaves through the multi-billion-dollar food industry, came after the scientists decided to break ranks with colleagues in the US Food and Drug Administration and oppose its decision last year to approve a health claim that soya reduced the risk of heart disease. They wrote an internal protest letter warning of 28 studies revealing toxic effects of soya.

In an interview with The Observer, one of the scientists, Daniel Doerge, an expert on soya, said: "We have very real worries that this health claim will be used by the industry as an endorsement of much wider health benefits of soya beyond the heart. Research has shown a clear link between soya and the potential for adverse effects in humans."

BSE and other health scares related to meat have led to rocketing sales of soya-related products in Britain. But it is not just vegetarian foods such as tofu that use soya. It is a key ingredient in products from meat sausages and fish fingers to salad creams and breakfast cereals.

The concerns of Doerge and fellow FDA researcher Daniel Sheehan focus on chemicals in soya known as isoflavones which have effects similar to the female hormone estrogen.

While these chemicals may help to prevent a range of conditions including high cholesterol, they also lead to health problems in animals including altering sexual development of fetuses and causing thyroid disorders. Although soya is thought to protect against breast cancer, some studies show that chemicals in soya may increase the chances of breast cancer which uses estrogen-type hormones for growth.

Their letter to the FDA, seen by The Observer, states: "There is abundant evidence that some of the isoflavones found in soy demonstrate toxicity in estrogen-sensitive tissues and in the thyroid. Additionally, the adverse effects in humans occur in several tissues.

"During pregnancy in humans, isoflavones per se could be a risk factor for abnormal brain and reproductive tract development."

This will frighten mothers who increasingly use soya milk for babies. Doerge said: "They are exposing their children to chemicals which we know have adverse effects in animals. It's like doing a large uncontrolled and unmonitored experiment on infants."

The soya industry insists that most research shows the health benefits of soya outweigh risks and that adverse effects seen in animals do not apply to humans.

Richard Barnes, European director of the US Soy Bean Association, said: "Millions of people around the world have been eating soya for years and have shown no signs of abnormalities or disorders." [End quoting]

And what else might you expect Mr. Barnes to say?

CAN SOY MAKE YOU SICK?

From THE HONOLULU ADVERTISER, 11/26/99: [quoting]

Q: I have read recently that studies have found a link between soy products and dementia. I thought tofu and other soy products were good for me. What's going on?

A: JM, you're right to be concerned. Many vegetarians rely on soy products, and a finding like the one you've described is cause for more research.

The study you're referring to was reported in the Honolulu Advertiser on Nov. 26, 1999. Dr. Lon White of the Pacific Health Research Institute studied 3,734 Japanese-American men in the Honolulu Heart Study. He found that Asian-American men were more likely to suffer cognitive loss or Alzheimer's disease during middle age (45 and older) if they ate tofu more than twice a week. The more tofu consumed, the lower the score on a standard cognitive test for determining dementia. In addition, in 300 autopsies, brain weight was conversely linked to tofu consumption. An independent association reached a similar finding when dementia was observed among the wives of these men.

Understand that this is only one study, and the work has yet to be published in a scientific journal. Much more research needs to be done before we can come to any definitive conclusions.

White theorizes that the phyto (plant) estrogens in tofu may be interfering with the brain's ability to use human estrogen.

Typically, human estrogen attaches and binds to brain cells. Estrogen has long been thought to improve brain function, a finding that has been supported in studies of women on hormone-replacement therapy. White's theory suggests that the phytoestrogens are clogging the brain's receptor sites, blocking human estrogen from attaching.

However, another possible reason for this association is the high content of aluminum found in soybeans. Aluminum is the only known controllable cause of Alzheimer's disease. Soybeans acquire aluminum and other metals from the soils they are grown in. In the soybean, these metals are attached to other substances, such as phytate, to make unabsorbable complexes. However, the heating and processing of soybeans to make tofu may free up the aluminum so that it can be readily absorbed.

My advice is to go easy on the soy products and use them only as condiments—for many reasons, not just because of this study. For one thing, tofu is 54% fat and low in dietary fiber. In the process of making tofu, the fiber is removed. Also, the high phytoestrogen content of soy products interferes with the actions of hormones in the body, including thyroid hormones, estrogen, and testosterone. There is also some concern that such products may be involved in disorders like infertility, goiter, and hypothyroidism. Again, there's a lot of cause here for more research.

In the meantime, there are many soy alternatives. For example, try rice milk instead of soy milk; there are even milks made out of cashews and almonds. You could also skip using milk altogether and substitute fruit juices on many occasions (even on your cereal). When you're shopping, look for vegetarian products (like veggie burgers) that are high in grains, not soy. And there's a product on the market called Seitan (wheat gluten), which is a soy substitute you could try in small doses.

Keep your eye out for more research on this topic. I'll be sure to report any findings in future issues.

Soy milk substitutes:

Nut milk and rice milk are a couple of good milk substitutes, especially since you can save some money by making them yourself. Following are the recipes we use at our house. Keep in mind that they will spoil just as milk does, so be sure to keep them refrigerated.

(servings: 1 quart; preparation time: 5 minutes; cooking time: none.)

Nut Milk

Ingredients:

4 cups water

3/4 cup raw cashews or blanched almonds

Place water in blender jar, add nuts, and blend at high speed (about 60 seconds).

Hint: For a smoother milk, this may be strained before pouring into the jar for refrigeration.

Rice Milk

Ingredients:

4 cups water

1 cup brown rice

1 tsp. vanilla (optional)

Place all ingredients in blender jar and process until smooth. Shake before using.

Hints: This is a sweet-tasting milk, especially when the vanilla is used. May be used in almost any recipe calling for milk. For a smoother milk, let set for 30 minutes; then, without shaking, pour the milk into another container, leaving the sediment behind. This sediment may be added to soups or stews as a thickener, if desired. [End quoting]

A few months ago I put in this newspaper a long article about the severe health problems caused by ALL SOY PRODUCTS. And also remember that they are using soya as filler in a lot of other processed foods, and it may not always be in the labeling. The promoters of possibly dangerous products very often change the name of a product when too many people find out the dangers and sales are hurt.

Moreover, these milk substitutes may help you avoid milk itself—if even a small part of the shocking information coming out about cow's milk is correct, especially concerning what nasty things are being found in “good old” cow's milk! We will have more to report on that subject at a later time.

ASPARTAME CRISIS POSED TO WORLD ENVIRONMENTAL CONFERENCE

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, by Betty Martini, 8/17/00: [quoting]

I have spent several days lecturing at the World Environmental Conference on Aspartame—marketed as “NutraSweet”, “Equal”, and “Spoonful”.

In the keynote address by the EPA, they announced that there was an epidemic of multiple sclerosis and systemic lupus, and they did not understand what toxin was causing this to be rampant across the United States. I explained I was there to lecture on exactly that subject. [I bet that was a very embarrassing moment for the EPA speaker.]

When the temperature of Aspartame exceeds 86 degrees F, the wood alcohol in Aspartame converts to formaldehyde and then to formic acid, which in turn causes metabolic acidosis. (Formic acid is the poison found in the sting of fire ants.) The methanol toxicity mimics multiple sclerosis; thus, people were being diagnosed with having multiple sclerosis in error. The multiple sclerosis is not a death sentence, where methanol toxicity is.

In the case of systemic lupus, we are finding it has become almost as rampant as multiple sclerosis, especially for Diet Coke and Diet Pepsi drinkers. Also, with methanol toxicity, the victims usually drink three to four 12-ounce cans of them per day, some even more. In the cases of systemic lupus, which is triggered by Aspartame, the victim usually does not know that the Aspartame is the culprit. The victim continues its use, aggravating the lupus to such a degree that sometimes it becomes life threatening.

When we get people off the Aspartame, those with systemic lupus usually become asymptomatic. Unfortunately, we cannot reverse this disease. On the other hand, in the case of those diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis, (when, in reality, the disease is methanol toxicity), most of the symptoms disappear. We have seen cases where their vision has returned and even their hearing has returned.

This also applies to cases of tinnitus. During a lecture, I said: “If you are using Aspartame (NutraSweet, Equal, Spoonful, etc.) and you suffer from fibromyalgia symptoms, spasms, shooting pains, numbness in your legs, cramps, vertigo, dizziness, headaches, tinnitus, joint pain, depression, anxiety attacks, slurred speech, blurred vision, or memory loss, you probably have Aspartame Disease!”

People were jumping up during the lecture saying: “I’ve got this. Is it reversible?” It is rampant. Some of the speakers at my lecture even were suffering from these symptoms. In one lecture, attended by the Ambassador of Uganda, he told us that their sugar industry is adding Aspartame! He continued by saying that the son of one of the industry leaders could no longer walk, due in part to product usage! We have a very serious problem. Even a stranger came up to Dr. Espisto (one of my speakers) and myself and said: “Could you tell me why so many people seem to be coming down with MS?”

During a visit to a hospice, a nurse said that

The Idaho Observer

If you and all of your friends knew what was really going on we could do something about it six of her friends, who were heavy Diet Coke drinkers, had all been diagnosed with MS. This is beyond coincidence.

Here is the problem:

There were Congressional Hearings when Aspartame was originally included as a sweetener in 100 different products. Since this initial hearing, there have been two subsequent hearings, but to no avail. Nothing has been done.

The drug and chemical lobbies have very deep pockets. Now there are over 5,000 products containing this chemical, and the PATENT HAS EXPIRED!

At the time of this first hearing, people were going blind. The methanol in the Aspartame converts to formaldehyde in the retina of the eye. Formaldehyde is grouped in the same class of drugs as cyanide and arsenic—DEADLY POISONS! Unfortunately, it just takes longer to quietly kill, but it is killing people and causing all kinds of neurological problems.

Aspartame changes the brain's chemistry. It is the reason for severe seizures. This drug changes the dopamine level in the brain. Imagine what this drug does to patients suffering from Parkinson's Disease. This drug also causes birth defects. There is absolutely no reason to take this product. It is NOT A DIET PRODUCT! The Congressional Record said: "It makes you crave carbohydrates and will make you FAT." Dr. Roberts stated that, when he got patients off Aspartame, their average weight loss was 19 pounds per person.

The formaldehyde stores in the fat cells, particularly in the hips and thighs. Aspartame is especially deadly for diabetics. All physicians know what wood alcohol will do to a diabetic. We find that physicians believe that they have patients with retinopathy, when in fact, it is caused by the Aspartame. The Aspartame keeps the blood-sugar level out of control, causing many patients to go into a coma. Unfortunately, many have died.

People were telling us, at the Conference of the American College of Physicians, that they had relatives who switched from Saccharin to an Aspartame product and how that relative had eventually gone into a coma.

Their physicians could not get the blood-sugar levels under control.

Thus, the patients suffered acute memory loss, and eventually coma and death. Memory loss is due to the fact that aspartic acid and phenylalanine are neurotoxic without the other amino acids found in protein. Thus it goes past the blood-brain barrier and deteriorates the neurons of the brain. Dr. Russell Blaylock, neurosurgeon, said: "The ingredients stimulate the neurons of the brain to death, causing brain damage of varying degrees. Dr. Blaylock has written a book entitled EXCITOTOXINS: The Taste That Kills (Health Press 1-800-643-2665). Dr. H. J. Roberts, diabetic specialist and world expert on Aspartame poisoning, has also written a book entitled Defense Against Alzheimer's Disease (1-800-814-9800). Dr. Roberts tells how Aspartame poisoning is escalating Alzheimer's Disease, and indeed it is. As the hospice nurse told me, women are being admitted at 30 years of age with Alzheimer's Disease. Dr. Blaylock and Dr. Roberts will be writing a position paper with some case histories and will post it on the Internet.

According to the Conference of the American College of Physicians: "We are talking about a plague of neurological diseases caused by this deadly poison." Dr. Roberts realized what was happening when Aspartame was first marketed. He said: "My diabetic patients presented memory loss, confusion, and severe vision loss." At the Conference of the American College of Physicians, doctors admitted that they did not know all this.

They had wondered why seizures were rampant. (The phenylalanine in Aspartame breaks down the seizure threshold and depletes serotonin, which causes manic depression, panic attacks, rage, and violence.) Just before the Conference, I received a fax from Norway, asking for a possible antidote for this poison because they are experiencing so many problems in their country. This "poison" is now available in 90+ countries worldwide!

Fortunately, we had speakers and ambassadors at the Conference from different nations who have pledged their help. We ask that you help too. Print this article out and warn everyone you know. Take anything that contains Aspartame back to the store. Take the "NO ASPARTAME TEST" and send us your case history. I assure you that Monsanto, the creator of Aspartame, knows how deadly it is.

They fund the American Medical Association, American Dietetic Association Congress, and the Conference of the American College of Physicians. The New York Times, November 15, 1996, ran an article on how the American Dietetic Association takes money from the food industry to endorse their products. Therefore, they cannot criticize any additives or tell about their link to Monsanto.

How bad is this? We told a mother who had a child on NutraSweet to get off the product. The child was having Grand Mal seizures every day. The mother called her physician, who called the ADA, who told the doctor not to take the child off the NutraSweet. We are still trying to convince the mother that the Aspartame is causing the seizures. Every time we get someone off of Aspartame, the seizures stop. If the baby dies, you know whose fault it is, and what we are up against.

There are 92 documented symptoms of Aspartame, from coma to death. The majority of them are all neurological, because the Aspartame destroys the nervous system. Aspartame Disease is partially the cause to what is behind some of the mystery of the Desert Storm health problems. The burning tongue and other problems discussed in over 60 cases can be directly related to the consumption of Aspartame products.

Several thousand pallets of diet drinks were shipped to the Desert Storm troops. (Remember heat can liberate the methanol from the Aspartame at 86 degrees F.) Diet drinks sat in the 120-degree F Arabian Sun for weeks at a time on pallets. The servicemen and women drank them all day long. All of their symptoms are identical to Aspartame poisoning. Dr. Roberts says consuming Aspartame at the time of conception can cause birth defects."

According to Dr. Louis Elsas, Pediatrician and Professor of Genetics at Emory University, in his testimony before Congress, the phenylalanine concentrates in the placenta, causing mental retardation. (In the original lab tests, animals developed brain tumors; phenylalanine breaks down into DXP, a brain tumor agent.) When Dr. Espisto was lecturing on Aspartame, one physician in the audience, a neurosurgeon, said: "When they remove brain tumors, they have found high levels of Aspartame in them."

Stevia, a sweet food, NOT AN ADDITIVE, which helps in the metabolism of sugar, which would be ideal for diabetics, has now been approved as a dietary supplement by the FDA. For years, the FDA had outlawed this sweet food because of their loyalty to Monsanto. If it says "SUGAR FREE" on the label—DO NOT EVEN THINK ABOUT IT.

Senator Howard Metzenbaum wrote a bill that would have warned all infants, pregnant mothers, and children of the dangers of Aspartame. The bill would have also instituted independent studies on the problems existing in the population (seizures, changes in brain chemistry, changes in neurological and behavioral symptoms). It was killed by the powerful drug and chemical lobbies, letting loose the hounds of disease and death on an unsuspecting public.

Since the Conference of the American College of Physicians, we hope to have the help of several world leaders.

Again, please help us, too. There are a lot of people out there who must be warned; please let them know this information. — Betty Martini, 770-242-2599. [End quoting]

A POISON IN COMMON PLASTICS: p-NONYLPHENOL (p-NP)

From UNKNOWN source, 8/00: [quoting]
Can you remember when wax paper was a luxury? Probably most can only remember using plastic wrap. If you are like me, the era of plastic “zip-lock” bags was an answer to storing left-overs and for putting food in the freezer.

In a South African publication, Impact, June-July 1998, we are told that the chemical substance known as p-Nonylphenol (p-NP) “is an environmental toxicant with estrogenic effects on fertility. PVC piping, by which we get our drinking water, soaps, shampoos, and cosmetics, petrochemical produce, jellies, insecticide aerosols, and certain household and industrial detergents” also contain the substance.

“Nine different types of cling-wrap plastic were tested by the South African team at the University of Pretoria. Within 26 hours, 100% of the p-NP had ‘oozed’ from the plastic into the food.”

When such food is consumed, the p-NP in it ends up in the bloodstream, and research has shown that the bodies of fish, birds, animals, and humans confuse it with estrogen, with alarming results.

Dr. Tian de Jager, Department of Urology, University of Pretoria, conducted the research under the direction of Professor Riana Bornman, Head of the Andrology Unit at the University’s Medical School and the Pretoria Academic Hospital.

Working to international standards, Dr. de Jager’s further research revealed the dramatic effects of p-NP. Two groups of rats were exposed to the substance over a period of ten weeks. In the first—adult male rats—he said:

“The results were quite extraordinary. The sexual organs and sperm had shrunk and the quality of sperm was reduced. Their testes and epididymis were poisoned by the p-NP. With the second group, where unborn rats were indirectly exposed, over the same period, to a much lower concentrate, the negative results were more severe.”

In Britain, the research has proven that the body assumes that p-NP is the female hormone estrogen, with dire effects on wildlife. This response to the supposed estrogen is so severe that: “Male trout, released near a water refinery and exposed to p-NP, started generating protein required to produce eggs within three weeks and they all appeared to change into females.”

Dr. de Jager emphasized that over 20,000 tons of p-NP is produced annually in Great Britain.

“Exact figures for South Africa are not available but p-NP is widely used in their plastic and food packaging industries. Unfortunately chemical substances are hardly ever tested for their effect on the reproductive system; therefore, we all could be exposed to estrogenic substances.

Professor Bornman stated: “It is clear that the effect of environmental estrogen is not only at the reproductive level, but could affect the general health of the population.” Dr. de Jager and Professor Bornman are also involved at the Infertility Clinic at the Pretoria Academic Hospital. The big question to be answered is: “How do we avoid it? [End quoting]

The moral of this story seems to be that if we can’t be poisoned enough with the product itself, maybe we can be through its packaging!

NEW ORGANIC STANDARDS TO PERMIT FLUORIDE!

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 5/26/00: [quoting]

International Fluoride Information Network
I.F.I.N. BULLETIN #125

From Betty Martini <Mission-Possible-USA@altavista.net>

From <LONDAF1@aol.com>

Despite the fact that Sodium Fluoride “is a persistent, non-degradable poison that moves through the environment and accumulates in the soil and organisms” (Waste Not #461), the USDA is allowing for its use in the new National Organic Standards which are nearing completion. We need to act NOW to ensure that organic food production does not contribute to our already excessive exposure to fluoride. To submit comments, visit <<http://www.fluoridealert.org/organic-standards.htm>> where we have set up one-click access to the USDA’s e-mail comment form. The USDA is accepting comments up until June 12 [I didn’t get this item before that date; it is never too late to voice your concerns]. So please add your voice to this matter and remind the USDA that:

- Section 6508 (c)1 of the New Organic Standards says that producers shall not use “poisons such as arsenic and lead salts that have long-term effects and persist in the environment.” Fluoride is in this category.

- Chronic ingestion of fluoride has been associated with damage to kidneys, teeth, and bone (5); increased hip fractures in the elderly (6-13); bone spurs (14); stress fractures (15); and osteosarcoma (bone cancer) in young males (16-18). Fluoride collects in the aorta, skin, skeleton, and cataracts. It causes calcifications in joints, soft tissues, and in and around teeth (19), and disturbs the formation of collagen (20).

- Fluoride concentrates in the pineal gland with a decrease in production of melatonin, accompanied by early puberty in gerbils (21, 22) and perhaps in young girls (23).

- Fluoride passes through the placenta from the mother’s blood to the developing fetus (24-26) and can interfere with calcification of bones and formation of teeth (27, 28).

- Two recent animal studies reported that fluoride accumulates in the brain (29, 30). Fluoride enables aluminum to enter the brain; aluminum appears to associate with the protein tangles seen in Alzheimer’s Disease (29). Other studies suggest fluoride exposure may have adverse impacts on the developing brain (31).

Can we begin to see that the so-called “elite” controllers are not out to save us from anything and that they are committed to depopulation. If we would only open our eyes, the signs are all around us! Pay close attention to the following article, please.

Make us sick and weak and kill us “useless eaters” by the millions, but get our money through exorbitant medical bills first is part of the elite’s goals. Also, by providing us with a slow—and thus maybe even unsuspected—death, it makes it harder for us to detect it as planned genocide.

Remember also from past lessons presented in this newspaper on the subject of mind control how sodium fluoride is well known to be quite effective as an agent to keep “animals” DOBILE. Which leads into this next item:

HOW TO CONTROL PEOPLE

From AMERICAN PATRIOT FRIENDS NETWORK, <apfn@apfn.org>, 8/19/00: [quoting]

<<http://www.apfn.org/apfn/apfncont.htm>>

By Charley Reese

The difference between true education and vocational training has been cleverly blurred. Here are a few tips on how smart people can control other people. If any of this rings a bell—well, then wake up!

The first principle of people control is not to let them know you are controlling them. If people knew, this knowledge will breed resentment and possibly rebellion, which would then require brute force and terror, and old fashioned, expensive, and not 100% certain methods of control.

It is easier than you think to control people indirectly, to manipulate them into thinking what you want them to think, and doing what you want them to do.

One basic technique is to keep them ignorant. Educated people are not as easy to manipulate. Abolishing public education or restricting access to education would be the direct approach. That would spill the beans. The indirect approach is to control the education they receive.

It’s possible to be a Ph.D., doctor, lawyer, businessman, journalist, or an accountant, just to name a few examples, and at the same time be an uneducated person. The difference between true education and vocational training has been cleverly blurred in our time so that we have people successfully practicing their vocations while at the same time being totally ignorant of the larger issues of the world in which they live.

The most obvious symptom is their absence of original thought. Ask them a question and they will end up reciting what someone else thinks or thought the answer was. (What do they think? Well, they never thought about it.) Their education consisted of learning how to use the library and cite sources.

That greatly simplifies things for the controller because, with lots of money, university endowments, foundations, grants, and ownership of media, it is relatively easy to control who they will think of as authorities to cite in lieu of doing their own thinking.

Another technique is to keep them entertained. Roman emperors did not stage circuses and gladiator contests because they didn’t have television. We have television because we don’t have circuses and gladiator events. Either way, the purpose is to keep the people’s minds focused on entertainment, sports, and peripheral political issues. This way you won’t have to worry that they will ever figure out the real issues that allow you to control them.

Just as a truly educated person is difficult to control, so too is an economically independent person. Therefore, you want to create conditions that will produce people who work for wages, since wage earners have little control over their economic destiny. You’ll also want to control the monetary, credit, and banking systems. This will allow you to inflate the currency and make it next to impossible for wage earners to accumulate capital. You can also cause periodic deflation to collapse the family businesses, family farms, and entrepreneurs, including independent community banks.

To keep trade unions under control, you just promote a scheme that allows you to shift production jobs out of the country and bring back the products as imports (it is called Free Trade). This way you will end up with no unions or docile unions.

Another technique is to buy both political parties so that, after a while, people will feel that no matter whether they vote for Candidate

A or Candidate B, they will get the same policies. This will create great apathy and a belief that the political process is useless for effecting real change.

Pretty soon you will have a population that feels completely helpless, and thinks the bad things happening to them are nobody in particular’s fault, just a result of global forces or evolution or some other disembodied abstract concept. If necessary, you can offer scapegoats.

Then you can bleed them dry without having to worry overly much that one of them will sneak into your house one night and cut your throat. If you do it right, they won’t even know whose throat they are cutting. [End quoting]

Keep the above scenario in mind as you read the article on our modern educational system elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.

A WARNING FROM THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT!

From the SPOTLIGHT E-MAIL NEWSLETTER #51, 8/16/00: [quoting]

“75 to 90 percent of American trial lawyers are incompetent, dishonest, or both.” — Chief Justice Warren Burger, U.S. Supreme Court

If this statement is true, shouldn’t you consider learning a little about law yourself, even if only to keep your lawyers in line?

When legal problems are in front of you, if you don’t know your rights, you might as well not have any. Lawyers are advantaged in that they know how to find the law in the library. This knowledge is not an occult mystery.

The laws are supposed to be made by the people and for the people. They are not supposed to make lawyers and bureaucrats a privileged ruling elite. That’s why Citizen’s Law Digest was created solely to put knowledge into the hands of the general public, and to teach you how to find the law.

Lawyers are often not only overpriced, but also are frequently tough to deal with.

Too many do not listen to clients, do not do enough research, and do not pay enough attention to details—and that can cost you.

You have the right under the Constitution to act as your own attorney. And if you don’t know the Constitution, both of this country and your state, then you are at great disadvantage. Many politicians, police, and bureaucrats don’t want you to know what is in these documents.

— Citizen’s Law Digest

<www.citizensjustice.com> [End quoting]

I think most of our readers have at least suspected this was true. If you ever consider seeing a lawyer, it would be wise to keep this uppermost in your mind and to weigh your odds before you commit your time and money.

AMERICAN HEART ASSOCIATION ISSUES NEW CPR GUIDELINES

From the INTERNET, <http://sightings.com>, 8/16/00: [quoting]

Hoping to save more lives by making CPR performance as straightforward as possible, the American Heart Association today announced it has revised its guidelines for cardiopulmonary resuscitation and the treatment of cardiovascular emergencies.

One of the most significant alterations to the policy, which hasn't been changed in eight years, is that untrained bystanders and CPR-certified lay people will no longer have to check an unconscious person's pulse before administering chest compressions. Instead, the person can "check for lifelessness using breath, movement, and response to stimulation as indicators" says Dr. Roger D. White, professor of anesthesiology at Mayo Medical School in Rochester, Minnesota.

Research indicates that at least 35% of trained and untrained rescuers are wrong about whether or not a victim has a pulse, Dr. Vinay Nadkarni, chairman-elect of the heart association's Emergency Cardiovascular Care committee says. According to Nadkarni, the United Kingdom and European Resuscitation Councils have already successfully deleted pulse checks by lay people from CPR training.

Pulse Check Not Effective

"Pulse check is not effective. Even healthcare workers have difficulties. And when bystanders look for a pulse, it's even less effective. Almost 99% of them can't do it in the first 10-15 seconds, explains Dr. Paul Pepe, AHA spokesperson and professor and chair of Emergency Medicine at the University of Texas, Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas. Texas Healthcare providers will, however, still be expected to check a victim's pulse before doing chest compressions, he said.

The guideline changes mean that people who have previously been trained in CPR will need to be retrained when their current certification expires, and new CPR training materials used in CPR classes will be available for widespread use by next summer, the AHA said. U.S. guidelines for emergency CPR were last revised in 1992.

The heart association also released new, simplified guidelines for managing an unconscious choking victim, saying there is evidence that chest compression in CPR creates enough pressure in an unconscious patient to eject a foreign body from an airway without also using mouth-to-mouth resuscitation or abdominal thrusts.

"Rescue breathing instructions can be too complicated for untrained people to follow," explains White, adding that there is also "a definite aesthetic concern for some people doing mouth-to-mouth."

A Seattle study, published in the New England Journal Of Medicine in May, found that bystanders at the scene of a collapse, advised by emergency services over the telephone to perform chest compressions alone, were more effective than those instructed to do chest compressions combined with mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Trend For The Future

Mouth-to-mouth resuscitation guidelines will change in Britain as well, the Independent reported yesterday. "I think this may well be the trend for the future" Dr. Lotte Newman, medical adviser to St. John Ambulance, Britain's leading first-aid organization, told the British newspaper.

Other changes recommended by the AHA include using two thumbs rather than two fingers to perform CPR on infants and the standardization of the ratios of chest compressions to rescue breaths that had been recommended in adults.

AHA president Dr. Rose Marie Robertson says the association is also pressing a campaign to get automatic heart defibrillators installed in places like sports stadiums, airports, and other public buildings. Defibrillators can automatically assess whether a cardiac arrest victim's heart is fibrillating, or beating randomly, and provides an electric shock to regulate the heartbeat.

Automated external defibrillators are now considered "standard CPR" says the AHA, and their availability significantly decreases the number of needless deaths each year. Today, 80% to 90% of patients collapsing at O'Hare Airport are resuscitated by bystanders using defibrillators, with most of these patients awake and talking by the time professional rescuers arrive, according to the association.

Heart attack survival chances fall by 7% to 10% for every minute between collapse and defibrillation, Mary Fran Hazinski of Vanderbilt University Medical Center says. Currently, in the U.S., only 5% of the victims of sudden cardiac arrest survive, but rates vary widely from place to place, according to Hazinski.

Edward Stapleton of the State University of New York at Stony Brook said the new guidelines will cut the time needed for CPR refresher courses from 3½ - 4 hours down to 2 hours. The new guidelines will be published in the association's August 22 issue of Circulation magazine. CPR instructors will be trained in the new policy next month, and in January are expected to be teaching it. People who currently are CPR-certified will be retrained in the new methods when they get recertified. [End quoting]

These simplifications of the CPR procedure may lower the intimidation threshold and attract more people to become CPR certified. In any emergency, there is never a complaint that too many people have emergency training!

AUSTRALIAN MILITARY GIVEN RIGHT TO SHOOT ON SIGHT AT OLYMPICS THIS MONTH!

Excerpted from THE TIMES OF LONDON, Sydney, Australia, Aug. 2000: [quoting]

The Australian Government is under mounting pressure to water down draconian new security laws that would give the military the right to shoot civilians on sight during the Olympic Games next month [September].

Civil rights campaigners fear that the government is using the threat of terrorism at the Games to introduce laws that could be used during strikes and legitimate protests.

Under the new measures, soldiers could be used to perform duties normally undertaken by the police, such as the erection of barricades, the detention of suspects, and the search and recapture of buildings, but it is the shoot-to-kill powers that have enraged Australian civil rights groups. [End quoting]

Sounds like there are some people who are WIDE AWAKE down under. Once those laws are on the books, they very rarely get taken off—just in case they want to use them, and of course they will find the excuse to do so.

TEXAS SCHOOL TEACHERS' PAY RANKS LOWEST IN THE U.S.

This headline is taken from an article I saw in the news. This is the state where Governor Bush, in his flowing presidential rhetoric, says great strides have been made in improving education to a "first rate" level. Just what might those "improvements" be which he wants to apply nationally?

CONSCIENTIOUS COP

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 7/24/00: [quoting] Patrol Officer William Oertwig, Jr. of the Miami-Dade Police Department has refused, on principle, to issue traffic tickets the past two years, because he feels his police powers shouldn't be used to collect cash for the county and the state, reported the Miami New Times. "When I took this job 25 years ago, I took it as a deputy sheriff, to protect and defend not just the Constitution Of The United States, but the rights of the people" explained 47-year-old Oertwig, who earns $50,000 a year. "I did not take the job of a revenue-producing agent. That's a detestable quota system" Oertwig charges. [End quoting]

Though the Police Department probably does not dare fire him, if he ever loses his job over this crisis of conscience, hopefully something more rewarding will come his way.

LOSING RESPECT

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 7/24/00: [quoting]
Speaking before the American Law Institute, Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist whined that a new drive to disclose judges' finances on the Internet "could endanger the individual judge".

Observed Richard Shepard, candidate for attorney general in Washington State: "So, let me get this straight. Judges should be able to force disclosure of a litigant's most private information, from medications taken to Social Security numbers, but should not be required to disclose the most basic financial information that might reflect personal biases regarding the cases on that judge's calendar. Hmmm. And some people wonder why the judiciary is losing the respect of the people." [End quoting]

If such financial disclosure were to actually happen and the people were to actually know to what extent crooks sat in the seats of judges, it would be a lot worse than "the judiciary is losing the respect of the people"—the people would probably bring back the "hanging tree" to deal with these imposters!

SEATBELTS INFLATE IN CRASHES

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, September 2000: [quoting]

Airbags work best when you sit crash-dummy straight. Trouble is, people slouch. Behold the BF Goodrich inflatable seatbelt.

"During a significant crash, the system rapidly inflates a bladder that runs the length of the belt" says a company spokesman.

Working with the existing airbag system, the belt inflates in the first 10 milliseconds of a crash. Airbags deploy after 25 to 30 milliseconds.

In the fraction of a second before airbag deployment, the belt pushes the occupant into the proper seating position. Thus, the force of the airbag is better tolerated and the bag itself offers more protection, especially for kids. The belt's cushioning also distributes the force of this restraint across the body.

SmartBelts will be available in 2002. [End quoting]

Sounds like an excellent way of helping to prevent deaths and injuries, especially as air bags can cause injury from their rapid inflation process.

STEPPING UP TO 42-VOLT POWER

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, August 2000: [quoting]

Your next car could have a 42-volt electrical system—triple today's 14-volt charging required for a 12-volt battery.

Higher voltage enables carmakers to power electric steering, shifting, suspension, and braking, more sophisticated communications, and entertainment and safety systems. Car keys will disappear and be supplanted by keyless entry, even fingerprint ID. Electromagnetic valve actuators will replace the engine camshaft. Belt drives will disappear. The water pump, power steering, and a/c compressor will be electrically operated on demand only, saving power and fuel otherwise lost to belt drives. All carmakers have agreed to 42 volts, and the first systems will appear next year in Europe. The changeover will be gradual. [End quoting]

This change was probably hastened along by the new "hybrid" vehicles introduced this year by Honda and Toyota. Their cars use a small gasoline engine to mostly run an electrical generator, and then the electricity is used to run most everything else and power the car.

ELECTRICITY REBATE FOR SAN DIEGO

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 8/4/00: [quoting]

With California's power grid strained to the breaking point and customers outraged over soaring bills, angry politicians Thursday urged a "ratepayer rebellion" to challenge the industry, in the nation's first deregulated electric market.

California's top utility regulators, after hearing the complaints of consumers whose bills HAVE DOUBLED AND EVEN TRIPLED this year, approved a $100 million rebate for electricity consumers in San Diego, the city worst hit by the state's power crisis.

The commission's unanimous vote followed a two-hour hearing before more than 300 people in a jammed auditorium, in which deregulation was denounced as a human and fiscal disaster. Nobody spoke in support of deregulation.

Moments after the vote, officials who had come to the meeting from San Diego said the action by the Public Utilities Commission was too little, too late, and urged customers to refuse to pay more than what they paid a year ago.

"It is starting here; it is starting now. It is a ratepayer rebellion" said San Diego Supervisor Dianne Jacob.

"We're telling people to go back to paying what they did in July 1999. What can they do? There are 3 million of us."

She added: "We are on the brink of disaster."

Patrick Dorinson, spokesman for California's Independent System Operator, which coordinates power sharing between utilities, said California's energy deregulation hasn't worked smoothly in conjunction with other traditionally regulated states. [End quoting]

As the so-called PUBLIC utilities become ever more greedy and daring in their pursuit of profits without any checks and balances, the one method we-the-people have to fight back is simply our strength in numbers. As San Diego Supervisor Dianne Jacob points out, the utilities are powerless against large-scale revolt!

SPACE DRILL BORES SQUARE HOLES

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, August 2000: [quoting]

You can't put a square peg in a round hole but now you can drill a square hole. And, you can do it in materials ranging from solid rock to fragile ribs. Making this possible is the new Ultrasonic/Sonic Drill developed by Cybersonics of Erie, Pennsylvania, and NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, in Pasadena, California.

The drill has neither a motor, gears, nor any other rotating parts. Instead, it uses piezoelectric actuators that vibrate an electrical field. This motion can wear away at the hardest materials without the need to place significant weight on the drill bit.

In one test, the 1½-pound drill bored a ½-inch hole in granite, using 10 watts of power and minimal push.

"There is no drill chatter and no drill walk on startup" says a NASA spokesman. Cybersonics will initially sell its drill to doctors who will use it to drill holes when attaching surgical plates to bones. [End quoting]

This shows us that, after hundreds of years of thinking that drilling a square hole was impossible—the impossible was waiting for someone who knew nothing is impossible.

HEALTHY DEEP-FAT COOKING

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, August 2000: [quoting]

If your favorite foods come out of a deep-fat cooker, your arteries will sing the praises of the Spin Fryer. Developed by Synergy Worldwide of Alpharetta, Ga., it makes fried foods less fatty by limiting their contact with cooking oil. Upon starting, the main chamber tilts 25 degrees, rotating the food in and out of the oil. At the end of the cooking cycle the chamber returns to its horizontal position, drains the oil and begins to spin at 800 rpm while vibrating at ultrasonic frequencies. In 4 seconds the food is virtually oil-free. The oil itself goes through a carbon filter so it will be fresh for your next meal. The Spin Fryer will be manufactured by Salton Maxim and goes on sale early next year. [End quoting]

This should help all deep-fried food aficionados keep the fat off their waistlines.

POSSIBLE LARGE EARTHQUAKE(S)
COMING SOON???

From the INTERNET, <drboylan@jps.net>,

8/15/00, from Richard J. Boylan, Ph.D., DrRichBoylanReports: [quoting]

Subject: FYI—PREDICTION PASSED ON.

Dear associates: While I usually do not pass on the various psychic predictions I receive, I am making an exception, in view of the seriousness of this prediction.

Mary, an experiencer, and Native seer of Ojibway tribal descent, has for many years had the gift of being able to predict earthquakes by suddenly hearing the grinding sound of tectonic plates on the move. She can also tell magnitude of the quake by sound intensity, as well as location by the centering of the signal in a certain region of her body, which corresponds, she has learned, with a certain region of the Earth.

Last night (August 14, 2000) she was awakened by the largest, strongest sound signal by far. Mary's interpretation of this unprecedented signal is that a colossal mega-earthquake will occur in Southern California, so enormous that it will be felt in Central America! The event "window" for this megaquake is between today (August 15) and August 29.

Those whose reality frame does not include psychic information can console themselves that they only have until August 30 to wait to declare a "miss" and sound the all-clear. But precaution is seldom a completely wasted exercise.

I am not vouching that this prediction is an absolute. I am stating that I find Mary to be a humble, unassuming person who has exercised her gift for many years, and who collaborates with one of the foremost geologists in California, and thus I felt her message merited to be aired for those who want and need to hear it.

Mary also added that she has gotten indications that the Hayward Fault, on the east side of San Francisco Bay, may be next to go. Her impressions were corroborated by a carpenter in the area who is noting cracks on many building foundations. It is not clear whether The Big One in Southern California might cause a domino effect on the Hayward Fault.

Mary also opined that this Big One may be part of the Earth Changes which have been predicted by Native American shamans for this period of time.

August 17, 2000:

UPDATE FROM EARTHQUAKE MARY

The Native American seer and experiencer, Mary, who recently shared the signal she received about an impending mega-earthquake in Southern California, provided an update to me yesterday.

After consulting with Charlotte King, a noted earthquake seer, she agreed with Charlotte that some of the extraordinarily strong signal she had received was picking up on the unusual cluster of three strong earthquakes yesterday above magnitude 6 in the Southern Hemisphere (in the Kermadecs M6.7, Papua New Guinea M6.0 and New Zealand M7.3).

But Mary still feels that there is additional signal pointing still to a Southern California event. She consulted with several "sensitives" in Southern California, who feel that the event is more likely three weeks from now (early September), rather than within two weeks (before the end of August), but agree with Mary that they detect something big building.

Always remember that such information as is shared above is based upon sensed probabilities—the accumulation or piling-up of potential energy—and these may shift, as do piles of sand at the beach, depending upon whatever "winds of change" may be blowing. The better part of wisdom is simply to be on alert and be prepared if you are in the mentioned areas. Meanwhile, note the M5.2 (so they said) earthquake at about 1:36 a.m. Pacific Time on Sunday 9/3/00 which did much damage in the Napa Valley area north of San Francisco; that quake occurred along the northern extension of the problematic Hayward Fault. Stay tuned.

SOMETHING TO LIGHTEN YOUR SPIRITS

From E-MAIL, 8/21/00: [quoting]

One Sunday morning, the pastor noticed little Alex was staring up at the large plaque that hung in the foyer of the church. The plaque was covered with names, and small American flags were mounted on either side of it.

The seven-year-old had been staring at the plaque for some time, so the pastor walked up, stood beside the boy, and said quietly "Good morning, Alex."

"Good morning, Pastor," replied the young man, still focused on the plaque. "Pastor, what is this?" Alex asked. "Well, son, it's a memorial to all the young men and women who died in the service."

Soberly, they stood together, staring at the large plaque. Little Alex's voice was barely audible when he asked: "Which service, the 8:30 or the 11:00?" — Thanks, M.S.

I just received my latest issue of SPECTRUM and saw you printed the story of "The Man Without a Face—aka Mel Gibson" that I previously read on Jim Berkland's <www.szygyjob.com> website message board. The gal who originally shared this article then came back and apologized to the "readers" of the board that this article turned out to be erroneous and was not a true story about Mel Gibson. I believe a retraction also may have appeared on the Jeff Rense <www.sightings.com> website.

I know I believed it when I first read it, and even shared the story with my husband. Needless to say all the believers of the article, myself included, felt a bit foolish when it was later proven to be false. It seems to have appeared around the time of the opening of The Patriot movie. Hmmmm—a public relations ploy? Another ongoing lesson in discernment, no doubt! And yes, the lessons get more and more subtle! — M. E. [End quoting]

We apologize if we were hoodwinked by this story. Most of the inspirational events that find their way into this column are true miracles as great or greater than this one, and by changing the name, this could very likely have been true for someone, somewhere. We are not sure of the extent of the "proof" of the "deception"—even to the possibility of reverse publicity to squash an actual truth—but we felt we should share the above message due to its sincere nature, and to be respectful to those who DO persevere through adversity, and create miracles, every day! Which leads to:

WHEN YOU THOUGHT I WASN'T LOOKING

From the INTERNET, 8/16/00: [quoting]

A message every parent should read, because your children are watching you and doing as you do, not as you say:

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw you hang my first painting on the refrigerator, and I immediately wanted to paint another one.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw you feed a stray cat, and I learned that it was good to be kind to animals.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw you make my favorite cake for me and I learned that little things can be the special things in life.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I heard you say a prayer, and I knew there is a God I could always talk to and I learned to trust in God.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw you make a meal and take it to a friend who was sick, and I learned that we all have to help take care of each other.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw you give of your time and money to help people who had nothing and I learned that those who have something should give to those who don't.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I felt you kiss me good night and I felt loved and safe.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw you take care of our house and everyone in it and I learned we have to take care of what we are given.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw how you handled your responsibilities, even when you didn't feel good and I learned that I would have to be responsible when I grow up.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw tears come from your eyes and I learned that sometimes things hurt, but it's all right to cry.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I saw that you cared and I wanted to be everything that I could be.

When you thought I wasn't looking, I looked at you and wanted to say: "Thanks for all the things I saw when you thought I wasn't looking." [End quoting]

ANGELS IN THE CLASSROOM

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 8/8/00: [quoting]

Thought For Day, a nice uplifting story:

A pastor read a letter from an elementary school teacher who attended East Hill Church. The gist of the letter was as follows:

Last school year, her classroom was made up of little third graders, every one of which came from either a single parent family, or a dysfunctional family, was undernourished and/or uncared for, lived in an abusive home and was either beaten, bruised, or raped by other family members; one little girl's dad died of AIDS, and the list goes on.

Her heart bled for these kids. Before the 1999-2000 school year started, she and her husband went to her classroom and prayed over each desk in the room. They prayed that God would place an angel behind each and every child throughout the coming year to watch over them and protect them.

A month or so after the year had started, she gave the kids an assignment to write about what they would like to be when they grew up.

Everybody was busy with his or her assignment, when "Andrew" raised his hand. When she asked him what he needed, he asked how to spell "mighty".

After telling him how to spell mighty, she asked him why he needed to know. Andrew said it was because, when he grew up, he wanted to be a "mighty man of God". When he said this, little "Mark" sitting next to him asked: "So, what's a mighty man of God?" The teacher, swallowing back her tears, and knowing she could not say anything in the classroom, told Andrew to go ahead and tell Mark what it was. So Andrew says: "It's a man who puts on the armor of God and is a soldier for God."

After observing some conversation between Andrew and Mark, the teacher, with a lump in her throat, started to walk away, when Andrew motioned with his little forefinger for her to come closer. He whispered to her, asking if she believed in angels. She told him yes, she did. Then he asked her if she thought people could see angels, and she said she thought some people probably could. Andrew said that he did, and he could see an angel standing behind each kid in the room.

I don't think there was a dry eye in the church that night! We need to remember to pray for all of the teachers, that although there is no prayer in school, that they are dedicated enough to pray for the protection of God's angels over the lives of their students. Maybe it wouldn't hurt, even at work. — Ross Millard.

As the article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM points out, our educational system needs ALL the help it can get! There is also a good general lesson here for all of us to remember: that Lighted Helpers from the Higher Realms always stand ready to assist us IF WE BUT ASK for that help with a sincere heart.

Editor's note: It's bound to happen at some time, considering the usual size of this newspaper, the lack of size of the staff, and the complexities of modern, computer-driven desktop publishing—but did it have to happen right at the punchline of a cool story? Moral: we have to keep A LOT of Light around this newspaper at ALL times!

The following story is the last article in last month's News Desk. This time, however, we have hopefully included the important text (in bold type) that somehow disappeared in a "Bermuda Triangle" of computer bits and bytes between the editing stage and the layout stage of production.

My (E.Y.) 85-year-old mother, who still is part of the small staff who feed over 700 children every school day at my old grade school in Western Pennsylvania, was the "eagle eye" who first alerted me to this problem. (Thanks, mom; guess I still can't get away with anything.)

We apologize for any inconvenience the omission may have caused. With the missing text reinstated, this wonderful story ought to now make a whole lot more sense than it did last month! Get those Kleenex ready.

JAMA'S ARK

From GUIDEPOSTS, September 1999, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

I watched 10-year-old Sarah sitting by herself under an oak tree, far from the other kids playing kickball in the Georgia sun. Staring at the ground, she picked at a tuft of grass. Since she'd arrived at our foster home a week earlier, she hadn't said a word to me or my husband, Charlie, or to the other kids. Nor had she wanted to play with any of the displaced animals on our farm, Noah's Ark Rehabilitation Center.

"She's been abused from a young age, the social worker had warned us. No one's been able to help her." "I'll be able to" I thought. But whenever I went to hug Sarah, she stood as stiff as a pole, arms clamped to her sides. Never in eight years of caring for foster kids had I met a child who couldn't hug back. Now I wondered if, once again, I'd taken on too much.

Ever since I was a little girl I'd been rushing to catch up with my dreams. My dad was an itinerant preacher, so my family was always on the road. One morning I found a scraggly stray puppy outside the motel we'd stayed in. I smuggled him into the backseat of our beat-up station wagon, but the puppy yelped and gave us away. "Now, Jama" Dad said gently, "you know we can't have pets with us on the road."

"When I grow up, I'm going to have lots of animals, just like Noah did on his ark" I declared. "I'm going to have run-down horses and three-legged goats and runty pigs and toothless tigers. I'll take in all the stray, hurt animals nobody else wants." That was the first dream.

The second came on a trip to Mexico, when we were giving money we'd collected to an orphanage. My stomach tightened when I saw the kids slept on metal beds without sheets. I told my parents I was going to build a home for kids without families. "And we'll have bedspreads on the bunk beds and books and toys all over the place" I said breathlessly.

"Honey, calm down" Mama said. "In time. Pray about it and wait."

I could pray, but how could I wait? Those children needed help, and I needed to help them.

With every stray animal or lonely kid we had to leave behind, I told my parents all about my dreams again. By the time I was a teenager, I was good and tired of the word wait.

One night Dad was leading a revival in Crossville, Tennessee. I noticed a handsome fellow with dark curly hair at the service. I could not take my eyes off him! I asked a gal who he was. "That's Charlie Hedgecoth."

My pulse started to race. I felt certain God had put Charlie in my path. "I'm going to marry him” I decided. And two months later that’s exactly what I did, despite my parents’ urgings, as always, to wait. Eventually, my family had to move on. Charlie and I stayed put. As I watched a dust cloud kick up behind the old station wagon, I wiped away my tears and squared my shoulders.

Now I was on my own. It was time to make all my dreams come true. Eager to get started, I headed to the grocery store. That evening I showed Charlie what I’d bought.

“We’ve got some crackers and chips and look—cupcakes” I said, setting the goodies on the counter.

Charlie peered into the empty bags. “But, Jama, did you get any real food, like chicken or potatoes?”

“Why would I get that?” I asked. “We can go out to eat that sort of stuff.”

Charlie stared at me. I had grown up in motels. I barely understood how eggs got from their shells into omelettes. All at once I felt overwhelmed: “Lord, I know I’ll have to work hard. But you put these dreams in my heart. Help me follow them.”

Charlie and I moved to Indiana, then to Georgia, where we rented a small farm. We had three sons and two daughters, and I’d soon gathered more than 200 unwanted and disabled animals—everything from monkeys to raccoons to cows. A local couple even donated the money to build an eagle-care facility. It was a never-ending battle to keep the house clean. Cages filled with rabbits and possums crowded the living room. Charlie worked hard for a trucking company. When he got home, he plowed and planted. After school, I took the kids with me on a film delivery route. But even working as hard as we did, we were way beyond broke.

Time and again our electricity was cut off. I resorted to rifling through dumpsters behind grocery stores to find food for the animals. Some sympathetic store managers set aside a few things. Then one day I found a teenager sleeping by a dumpster. We barely had enough for our own kids, but this boy had nothing. “Yes, help him” a voice inside me urged. I took him home, and a procession of displaced kids soon followed.

There was always another mouth to feed. One spring morning I was too tired to get out of bed. The children and Charlie were playing catch outside with an old football we’d found at a yard sale. Suddenly I wondered: “What’s wrong with me, God? I wanted to make a cozy home with toys for orphaned children, but I don’t have enough money to take care of my own family, not to mention the animals.” The trash was filled with empty cans of dog food, the hamper crammed with unwashed clothes. Hadn’t there been a time when a toothless poodle wouldn’t let Charlie get into bed? “More room” I thought, “that’s what we need.”

I pulled myself up and went outside to my family. “Pack up, because we’re moving to a bigger place where Noah’s Ark can grow.” We piled into our van and just started driving, looking for a farm. After six months Charlie finally said, “Jama, I’m really worried. This is crazy even for you. We’re using nickels and dimes to put gas in the car. How much longer can we do this?”

“Charlie” I said, “we have to keep looking. God will help us and show us the right place.”

Finally, one day as we were driving through Locust Grove, Georgia, we passed a For Sale sign nailed to a tree. “Stop, Charlie!” I yelled.

He slammed on the brakes.

“What’s wrong?”

“This is our farm!” I jumped out of the car and ran through the tall grass to a knoll where a small two-bedroom house with a porch stood in a pecan grove. I sank to my knees. “Thank you, Lord. This is it!”

I had no earthly idea how we were going to pay the $497,000 asking price, but I borrowed the $12,000 deposit from my father’s friend and we signed a contract promising to pay the total amount the following June of 1991. Meanwhile we’d pay rent. Deep down I knew I was being impractical, but I couldn’t help myself. I had to keep my dreams alive.

May 1991 came, and not only did we not have the $485,000, but we were $6000 behind on our rent. I called an attorney to ask about our options. “Jama, you’ve got thirty days to vacate” he told me. “There’s really nothing else we can do. I’m sorry I can’t help you more.”

After I hung up, I started bawling. “God, I’m in a mess again” I said. “I have more than three hundred animals, and all of these children, with no place to go.” Again, my dreams were getting away from me.

Then God seemed to answer: “It’s in My hands.”

“All right” I said, “but you haven’t got much time.” I looked at the calendar on the wall. Where would we be in the next couple of days? How would I tell my family we would have to move again?

The phone rang. It was the attorney. “My client who donated the eagle facility to you last year just called. I happened to mention your plight to him. You’re not going to believe this, but he and his wife would like to pay off your property!”

I nearly dropped the phone.

Soon after the property was purchased, our benefactor came by to visit. His wife’s eyebrows rose when she saw a colt in a sleeping bag on our bedroom floor. She pulled me aside. “Jama, you and your family deserve a bigger place. Find an architect and build a house with ten bedrooms and ten bathrooms.”

I wrapped my arms around her, speechless. Finally, my kids and animals would have a place to call their own.

We converted our original two-bedroom home into a wildlife rehabilitation center and moved into our spacious new quarters—enough to house up to 12 foster kids at a time. At last all of the pieces were in place. Our farm had more animals than a zoo, the foster home more books and toys than we could count.

Yet here I was, watching 10-year-old Sarah, unreachable despite all my efforts. I was so used to seeing results just so long as I kept plugging away. Now I felt as helpless as I had as a little girl who couldn’t keep a stray puppy.

The night Sarah came to us, she barely ate a bite of her dinner. I asked her, over and over: “Honey, what can I do for you?” Sarah just gave me a blank stare. A couple of nights later Charlie and I passed by her room and heard sobbing. I knocked and went in. Sarah hushed, but I could see her body trembling.

Back in the hallway I’d whispered to Charlie: “How do we reach Sarah?”

“We can give her food and clothes and love, but we can’t force her to respond to us. Maybe we just need to wait, Jama.”

There was that word again. “She’s hurting NOW” I insisted. “We’ve got to do something right away!”

That afternoon as I watched Sarah pick listlessly at that tuft of grass, I was about to ask for the thousandth time, “Honey, why are you hurting?” when I spied one of our fawns. It wobbled close to Sarah, who looked up for a second, then dropped her head. I drew in my breath as the fawn climbed into Sarah’s lap. Then the fawn licked Sarah’s face with its velvety tongue. I started to rush over to tell her that it was okay.

“Wait, Jama.” The words I’d heard so often came loud and clear in my mind. This time I knew they came from God. “But she’s scared” I thought. “Just wait” He told me again.

The fawn kept licking Sarah’s cheeks, dodging her efforts to push it away. At last Sarah stopped struggling. She slowly moved her hands across the fawn’s speckled back. And then Sarah was hugging the fawn as it licked her tears away.

That night Sarah spoke to us for the first time. Soon she was playing kickball with the other kids and helping feed the animals, including the little fawn.

We’d gotten through to Sarah, and God had gotten through to me. I work hard and dream hard and pray hard, but the results are up to God—in His way, in His time. I lose sight of that occasionally, when I want so badly for things to work out as I’d hoped and planned. Yet sometimes the most important thing to do is wait. After all, the least I can do is be as patient with God as He is with me.

—Jama Hedgecoth, Locust Grove, Georgia [End quoting]

“Dr. Jekyll” Or “Mr. Hyde” Which Is FEMA?

The following revealing article was obtained from the Internet at the www.inforamp.net/~jwhitley/fema.htm website:

FEMA — THE U.S. “SHADOW GOVERNMENT”

Few Americans—indeed, few Congressional reps—are aware of the existence of Mount Weather, a mysterious underground military base carved deep inside a mountain near the sleepy rural town of Bluemont, Virginia, just 46 miles from Washington DC. Mount Weather—also known as the Western Virginia Office of Controlled Conflict Operations—is buried not just in hard granite, but in secrecy as well.

In March, 1976, The Progressive Magazine published an astonishing article entitled “The Mysterious Mountain.” The author, Richard Pollock, based his investigative report on Senate subcommittee hearings and upon “several off-the-record interviews with officials formerly associated with Mount Weather”. His report, and a 1991 article in TIME magazine entitled “Doomsday Hideaway”, supply a few compelling hints about what is going on underground.

Ted Gup, writing for TIME, describes the base as follows:

“Mount Weather is a virtually self-contained facility. Aboveground, scattered across manicured lawns, are about a dozen buildings bristling with antennas and microwave relay systems. An on-site sewage-treatment plant, with a 90,000 gallon-a-day capacity, and two tanks holding 250,000 gallons of water, could last some 200 people more than a month; underground ponds hold additional water supplies. Not far from the installation’s entry gate are a control tower and a helicopter pad. The mountain’s real secrets are not visible at ground level.”

The mountain’s “real secrets” are protected by warning signs, 10-foot-high chain-link fences, razor wire, and armed guards. Curious motorists and hikers on the Appalachian trail are relieved of their sketching pads and cameras and sent on their way. Security is tight.

The government has owned the site since 1903; it has seen service as an artillery range, a hobo farm during the Depression, and a National Weather Bureau Facility. In 1936, the U.S. Bureau of Mines took control and started digging.

Mount Weather is virtually an underground city, according to former personnel interviewed by Pollock. Buried deep inside the Earth, Mount Weather was equipped with such amenities as:

- private apartments and dormitories,
- streets and sidewalks,
- cafeterias and hospitals,
- a water purification system, power plant, and general office buildings,
- a small lake fed by fresh water from underground springs,
- its own mass transit system,
- a TV communication system.

Mount Weather is the self-sustaining underground command center for the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). The facility is the operational center—the hub—of approximately 100 other Federal Relocation Centers, most of which are concentrated in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, and North Carolina. Together this network of underground facilities constitutes the backbone of America’s “Continuity of Government” program. In the event of nuclear war, declaration of martial law, or other national emergency, the President, his cabinet, and the rest of the Executive Branch would be “relocated” to Mount Weather.

What Does Congress Know About Mount Weather?

According to the Senate Subcommittee On Constitutional Rights hearings in 1975, Congress has almost no knowledge and no oversight—budgetary or otherwise—on Mount Weather. Retired Air Force General Leslie W. Bray, in his testimony to the subcommittee said: “I am not at liberty to describe precisely what is the role and the mission and the capability that we have at Mount Weather, or at any other precise location.”

Apparently, this underground capital of the United States is a secret only to Congress and the US taxpayers who paid for it. The Russians know about it, as reported in TIME:

“Few in the U.S. government will speak of it, though it is assumed that all along the Soviets have known both its precise location and its mission (unlike the Congress, since Bray wouldn’t tell); defense experts take it as a given that the site is on the Kremlin’s targeting maps.”

The Russians attempted to buy real estate right next door, as a “country estate” for their embassy folks, but that deal was dead-ended by the State Department.

The eagle and shield, adapted from the Great Seal of the United States, represent vigilance and preparedness. The light blue color of the background has a historical association with the Agency and its components. The white triangle represents civil defense. The banner motto “PACE AC BELLO MERITA” means “Service in Peace and War” indicating the Agency’s responsibility in all types of emergencies: natural or man-made. The dark blue of the designation band refers to the federal authority and the responsibility of the agency.

Mount Weather's "Government-In-Waiting"

Pollock's report, based on his interviews with former officials at Mount Weather, contains astounding information on the base's personnel. The underground city contains a parallel government-in-waiting:

"High-level governmental sources, speaking on the promise of strictest anonymity, told me [Pollock] that each of the federal departments represented at Mount Weather is headed by a single person on whom is conferred the rank of a cabinet-level official. Protocol even demands that subordinates address them as "Mr. Secretary". Each of the Mount Weather "cabinet members" is apparently appointed by the White House and serves an indefinite term...many through several Administrations.... The facility attempts to duplicate the vital functions of the Executive branch of the Administration."

Nine federal departments are replicated within Mount Weather (Agriculture; Commerce; Health, Education & Welfare; Housing & Urban Development; Interior; Labor; State; Transportation; and Treasury) as well as at least five federal agencies (Federal Communications Commission, Selective Service, Federal Power Commission, Civil Service Commission, and the Veterans Administration). The Federal Reserve and the U.S. Post Office, both private corporations, also have offices in Mount Weather.

Pollock writes that the "cabinet members" are "apparently" appointed by the White House and serve an indefinite term, but that information cannot be confirmed, raising the further question of who holds the reins on this "back-up government". Furthermore, appointed Mount Weather officials hold their positions through several elected administrations, transcending the time their appointers spend in office. Unlike other presidential nominees, these appointments are made without the public advice or consent of the Senate.

Is there an alternative President and Vice President as well? If so, who appoints them? Pollock says only this:

"As might be expected, there is also an Office of the Presidency at Mount Weather. The Federal Preparedness Agency (precursor to FEMA) apparently appoints a special staff to the Presidential section, which regularly receives top secret national security estimates and raw data from each of the Federal departments and agencies."

What Do They Do At Mount Weather?

• Collect Data On American Citizens

The Senate Subcommittee in 1975 learned that the "facility held dossiers on at least 100,000 Americans. [Senator] John Tunney later alleged that the Mount Weather computers can obtain millions of pieces of additional information on the personal lives of American citizens simply by tapping the data stored at any of the other ninety-six Federal Relocation Centers."

JAMES LEE WITT, DIRECTOR—FEMA

The subcommittee concluded that Mount Weather's databases "operate with few, if any, safeguards or guidelines."

• Store Necessary Information

The Progressive article detailed that "General Bray gave Tunney's subcommittee a list of the categories of files maintained at Mount Weather: military installations, government facilities, communications, transportation, energy and power, agriculture, manufacturing, wholesale and retail services, manpower, financial, medical and educational institutions, sanitary facilities, population, housing shelter, and stockpiles." This massive database fits cleanly into Mount Weather's ultimate purpose as the command center in the event of a national emergency.

• Play War Games

This is the main daily activity of the approximately 240 people who work at Mount Weather. The games are intended to train the Mount Weather bureaucracy to managing a wide range of problems associated with both war and domestic political crises.

Decisions are made in the "Situation Room", the base's nerve center, located in the core of Mount Weather. The Situation Room is the archetypal war room, with "charts, maps, and whatever visuals may be needed" and "batteries of communications equipment connecting Mount Weather with the White House and 'Raven Rock'—the underground Pentagon sixty miles north of Washington—as well as with almost every US military unit stationed around the globe" according to The Progressive article. "All internal communications are conducted by closed-circuit color television.... Senior officers and 'Cabinet members' have two consoles recessed in the walls of their office."

Descriptions of the war games read a bit like an Ian Fleming novel. Every year there is a system-wide alert that "includes all military and civilian-run underground installations". The real, aboveground President and his Cabinet members are "relocated" to Mount Weather to observe the simulation. Post-mortems are conducted and the margins for error are calculated after the games. All the data is studied and documented.

• Civil Crisis Management

Mount Weather personnel study more than war scenarios. Domestic "crises" are also tracked and watched, and there have been times when Mount Weather almost swung into action, as Pollock reported:

"Officials who were at Mount Weather during the 1960s say the complex was actually prepared to assume certain governmental powers at the time of the 1961 Cuban missile crisis and the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963. The installation used the tools of its 'Civil Crisis Management' program on a standby basis during the 1967 and 1968 urban riots and during a number of national antiwar demonstrations, the sources said.”

In its 1974 Annual Report, the Federal Preparedness Agency [now FEMA] stated that “Studies conducted at Mount Weather involve the control and management of domestic political unrest where there are material shortages (such as food riots) or in strike situations where the FPA determines that there are industrial disruptions and other domestic resource crises.”

The Mount Weather facility uses a vast array of resources to continually monitor the American people. According to Daniel J. Cronin, former assistant director for the FPA, reconnaissance satellites, local and state police intelligence reports, and federal law enforcement agencies are just a few of the resources available to the FPA for information gathering. “We try to monitor situations and get to them before they become emergencies” Cronin said. “No expense is spared in the monitoring program.”

• Maintain And Update The “Survivors’ List”

Using all the data generated by the war games and domestic crisis scenarios, the facility continually maintains and updates a list of names and addresses of people deemed to be “vital” to the survival of the nation, or who can “assist essential and non-interruptible services”. In the 1976 article, the “survivors’ list” contained 6,500 names, but even that was deemed to be low.

Who Pays For All This, And How Much?

At the same time tens of millions of dollars were being spent on maintaining and upgrading the complex to protect several hundred designated officials in the event of nuclear attack, the US government drastically reduced its emphasis on war preparedness for US citizens. A 1989 FEMA brochure entitled “Are You Prepared?” suggests that citizens construct makeshift fallout shelters using used furniture, books, and other common household items.

Officially, Mount Weather (and its budget) does not exist. FEMA refuses to answer inquiries about the facility; as FEMA spokesman Bob Blair told TIME magazine: “I’ll be glad to tell you all about it, but I’d have to kill you afterward.”

We don’t know how much Mount Weather has cost over the years, but of course, American taxpayers bear this burden as well. A Christian Science Monitor article entitled, “Study Reveals US Has Spent $4 Trillion On Nukes Since ’45” reports that: “The government devoted at least $12 billion to civil defense projects to protect the population from nuclear attack. But billions of dollars more were secretly spent on vast underground complexes from which civilian and military officials would run the government during a nuclear war.”

What is Mount Weather’s Ultimate Purpose?

We have seen that Mount Weather contains an unelected, parallel “government-in-waiting” ready to take control of the United States upon word from the President or his successor. The facility contains a massive database of information on U.S. citizens which is operated with no safeguards or accountability. Ostensibly, this expensive hub of America’s network of subterranean bases was designed to preserve our form of government during a nuclear holocaust.

But Mount Weather is not simply a Cold War holdover. Information on command and control strategies during national emergencies have largely been withheld from the American public. Executive Order 11051, signed by President Kennedy on October 2, 1962, states that “national preparedness must be achieved...as may be required to deal with increases in international tension with limited war, or with general war including attack upon the United States.”

However, Executive Order 11490, drafted by Gen. George A. Lincoln (former director for the Office of Emergency Preparedness, the FPA’s predecessor) and signed by President Nixon in October 1969, tells a different story. EO 11490, which superceded Kennedy’s EO 11051, begins: “Whereas our national security is dependent upon our ability to assure continuity of government, at every level, in any national emergency-type situation that might conceivably confront the nation...”

As researcher William Cooper points out, Nixon’s order makes no reference to “war”, “imminent attack”, or “general war”. These quantifiers are replaced by an extremely vague “national emergency-type situation” that “might conceivably” interfere with the workings of the national power structure. Furthermore, there is no publicly known Executive Order outlining the restoration of the Constitution after a national emergency has ended. Unless the parallel government at Mount Weather decides, out of the goodness of its heart, to return power to Constitutional authority, the United States could experience an honest-to-God coup d’etat posing as a national emergency.

Like the enigmatic Area 51 in Nevada, the federal government wants to keep the Mount Weather facility buried in secrecy. Public awareness of this place and its purpose would raise serious questions about who holds the reins of power in this country. The Constitution states that those reins lie in the hands of the people, but the very existence of Mount Weather indicates an entirely different reality. As long as Mount Weather exists, these questions will remain. [End quoting]

With that said, let’s turn to a classic gem of good research which continues this theme of documenting the machinery in place that skirts our Constitution. See if you don’t begin to sense that “entirely different reality” than what we are led to believe is the case. Mount Weather is only one part of this vast equation.

FEMA — THE SECRET GOVERNMENT

By Harry V. Martin, with research assistance from David Caul; reprinted with permission. (Copyright FreeAmerica and Harry V. Martin, 1995.)

Some people have referred to it as the “secret government” of the United States. It is not an elected body; it does not involve itself in public disclosures; and it even has a quasi-secret budget in the billions of dollars. This government organization has more power than the President of the United States or the Congress; it has the power to suspend laws, move entire populations, arrest and detain citizens without a warrant, and hold them without trial; it can seize property, food supplies, transportation systems, and can suspend the Constitution.

Not only is it the most powerful entity in the United States, but it was not even created under constitutional law by the Congress. It was a product of a Presidential Executive Order. No, it is not the U.S. military, nor the Central Intelligence Agency; they are subject to Congress. The organization is called FEMA, which stands for the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Originally conceived in the Richard Nixon Administration, it was refined by President Jimmy Carter and given teeth in the Ronald Reagan and George Bush Administrations.

FEMA had one original concept when it was created: to assure the survivability of the United States government in the event of a nuclear attack on this nation. It was also provided with the task of being a federal coordinating body during times of domestic disasters, such as earthquakes, floods, and hurricanes. Its awesome powers grow under the tutelage of people like Lt. Col. Oliver North and General Richard Secord, the architects on the Iran-Contra scandal and the looting of America’s savings and loan institutions. FEMA has even been given control of the State Defense Forces, a rag-tag, often considered neo-Nazi, civilian army that will substitute for the National Guard if the Guard is called to duty overseas.

THE MOST POWERFUL ORGANIZATION IN THE UNITED STATES

Though it may be the most powerful organization in the United States, few people know it even exists. But it has crept into our private lives. Even mortgage papers contain FEMA's name in small print if the property in question is near a flood plain. FEMA was deeply involved in the Los Angeles riots and the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake in the San Francisco Bay Area. Some of the black helicopter traffic reported throughout the United States, but mainly in the West—California, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, and Colorado—are flown by FEMA personnel. FEMA has been given responsibility for many new disasters, including urban forest fires, home heating emergencies, refugee situations, urban riots, and emergency planning for nuclear and toxic incidents. In the West, it works in conjunction with the Sixth Army.

FEMA was created in a series of Executive Orders. A Presidential Executive Order, whether constitutional or not, becomes law simply by its publication in the Federal Registry. Congress is by-passed. Executive Order Number 12148 created the Federal Emergency Management Agency that is to interface with the Department of Defense for civil defense planning and funding. An “emergency czar” was appointed. FEMA has only spent about 6% of its budget on national emergencies, the bulk of their funding has been used for the construction of secret underground facilities to assure continuity of government in case of a major emergency, foreign or domestic. Executive Order Number 12656 appointed the National Security Council as the principal body that should consider emergency powers. This allows the government to increase domestic intelligence and surveillance of U.S. citizens and would restrict the freedom of movement within the United States and grant the government the right to isolate large groups of civilians. The National Guard could be federalized to seal all borders and take control of U.S. air space and all ports of entry.

Here are just a few Executive Orders associated with FEMA that would suspend the Constitution and the Bill Of Rights. These Executive Orders have been on record for nearly 30 years and could be enacted by the stroke of a Presidential pen:

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10990: allows the government to take over all modes of transportation and control of highways and seaports.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10995: allows the government to seize and control the communication media.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10997: allows the government to take over all electrical power, gas, petroleum, fuels, and minerals.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 10998: allows the government to take over all food resources and farms.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11000: allows the government to mobilize civilians into work brigades under government supervision.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11001: allows the government to take over all health, education, and welfare functions.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11002: designates the Postmaster General to operate a national registration of all persons.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11003: allows the government to take over all airports and aircraft, including commercial aircraft.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11004: allows the Housing and Finance Authority to relocate communities, build new housing with public funds, designate areas to be abandoned, and establish new locations for populations.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11005: allows the government to take over railroads, inland waterways, and public storage facilities.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11051: specifies the responsibility of the Office of Emergency Planning and gives authorization to put all Executive Orders into effect in times of increased international tensions and economic or financial crisis.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11310: grants authority to the Department of Justice to enforce the plans set out in Executive Orders, to institute industrial support, to establish judicial and legislative liaison, to control all aliens, to operate penal and correctional institutions, and to advise and assist the President.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11049: assigns emergency preparedness function to federal departments and agencies, consolidating 21 operative Executive Orders issued over a fifteen year period.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11921: allows the Federal Emergency Preparedness Agency to develop plans to establish control over the mechanisms of production and distribution, of energy sources, wages, salaries, credit, and the flow of money in U.S. financial institution in any undefined national emergency. It also provides that when a state of emergency is declared by the President, Congress cannot review the action for six months.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency has broad powers in every aspect of the nation. General Frank Salzedo, chief of FEMA's Civil Security Division, stated in a 1983 conference that he saw FEMA's role as a “new frontier in the protection of individual and governmental leaders from assassination, and of civil and military installations from sabotage and/or attack, as well as prevention of dissident groups from gaining access to U.S. opinion, or a global audience in times of crisis.” FEMA's powers were consolidated by President Carter to incorporate:

- the National Security Act Of 1947, which allows for the strategic relocation of industries, services, government, and other essential economic activities, and to rationalize the requirements for manpower, resources, and production facilities; the 1950 Defense Production Act, which gives the President sweeping powers over all aspects of the economy;

- the Act Of August 29, 1916, which authorizes the Secretary of the Army, in time of war, to take possession of any transportation system for transporting troops, material, or any other purpose related to the emergency; and

- the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, which enables the President to seize the property of a foreign country or national.

These powers were transferred to FEMA in a sweeping consolidation in 1979.

HURRICANE ANDREW FOCUSED ATTENTION ON FEMA

FEMA's deceptive role really did not come to light with much of the public until hurricane Andrew smashed into the U.S. mainland. As Russell R. Dynes, director of the Disaster Research Center of the University of Delaware, wrote in The World and I: “The eye of the political storm hovered over the Federal Emergency Management Agency. FEMA became a convenient target for criticism.”

Because FEMA was accused of dropping the ball in Florida, the media and Congress commenced to study this agency. What came out of the critical look was that FEMA was spending 12 times more for “black operations” than for disaster relief. It spent $1.3 billion building secret bunkers throughout the United States in anticipation of government disruption by foreign or domestic upheaval. Yet fewer than 20 members of Congress—only members with top security clearance—know of the $1.3 billion expenditure by FEMA for non-natural disaster situations.

These few Congressional leaders state that FEMA has a “black curtain” around its operations. FEMA has worked on National Security programs since 1979, and its predecessor, the Federal Emergency Preparedness Agency, has secretly spent millions of dollars before being merged into FEMA by President Carter in 1979.

FEMA has developed 300 sophisticated mobile units that are capable of sustaining themselves for a month. The vehicles are located in five areas of the United States. They have tremendous communication systems and each contains a generator that would provide power to 120 homes each, but have never been used for disaster relief.

FEMA's enormous powers can be triggered easily. In any form of domestic or foreign problem, perceived and not always actual, emergency powers can be enacted. The President of the United States now has broader powers to declare martial law, which activates FEMA's extraordinary powers. Martial law can be declared during times of increased tension overseas, economic problems within the United States, such as a depression, civil unrest, such as demonstrations or scenes like the Los Angeles riots, and in a drug crisis.

These Presidential powers have increased with successive crime bills, particularly the 1991 and 1993 Crime Bill, which increase the power to suspend the rights guaranteed under the Constitution and to seize property of those suspected of being drug dealers, to individuals who participate in a public protest or demonstration. Under emergency plans already in existence, the power exists to suspend the Constitution and turn over the reigns of government to FEMA and appointing military commanders to run state and local governments. FEMA then would have the right to order the detention of anyone whom there is reasonable ground to believe will engage in, or probably conspire with others to engage in, acts of espionage or sabotage. The plan also authorized the establishment of concentration camps for detaining the accused, but no trial.

Three times since 1984, FEMA stood on the threshold of taking control of the nation. Once under President Reagan in 1984, and twice under resident Bush in 1990 and 1992. But under those three scenarios, there was not a sufficient crisis to warrant risking martial law.

Most experts on the subject of FEMA and martial law insisted that a crisis has to appear dangerous enough for the people of the United States before they would tolerate or accept complete government takeover. The typical crisis needed would be threat of imminent nuclear war, rioting in several U.S. cities simultaneously, a series of national disasters that cause widespread danger to the populous, massive terrorist attacks, a depression in which tens of millions are unemployed and without financial resources, or a major environmental disaster.

THREE TIMES FEMA STOOD BY, READY FOR EMERGENCY

In April 1984, President Reagan signed Presidential Directive Number 54 that allowed FEMA to engage in a secret national "readiness exercise" under the code name of REX 84. The exercise was to test FEMA's readiness to assume military authority in the event of a "State of Domestic National Emergency" concurrent with the launching of a direct United States military operation in Central America. The plan called for the deputation of U.S. military and National Guard units so that they could legally be used for domestic law enforcement. These units would be assigned to conduct sweeps and take into custody an estimated 400,000 undocumented Central American immigrants in the United States. The immigrants would be interned at 10 detention centers to be set up at military bases throughout the country.

REX 84 was so highly guarded that special metal security doors were placed on the fifth floor of the FEMA building in Washington, D.C. Even long-standing employees of the Civil Defense of the Federal Executive Department possessing the highest possible security clearances were not being allowed through the newly installed metal security doors. Only personnel wearing a special red Christian cross or crucifix lapel pin were allowed into the premises.

Lt. Col. North was responsible for drawing up the emergency plan, which U.S. Attorney General William French Smith opposed vehemently. The plan called for the suspension of the Constitution, turning control of the government over to FEMA, appointment of military commanders to run state and local governments, and the declaration of martial law.

The Presidential Executive Orders to support such a plan were already in place. The plan also advocated the rounding up and transfer to "assembly centers or relocation camps" of a least 21 million American Negroes in the event of massive rioting or disorder, not unlike the rounding up of the Jews in Nazi Germany in the 1930s.

The second known time that FEMA stood by was in 1990 when Desert Storm was enacted. Prior to President Bush's invasion of Iraq, FEMA began to draft new legislation to increase its already formidable powers. One of the elements incorporated into the plan was to set up operations within any state or locality without the prior permission of local or state authorities. Such prior permission has always been required in the past. Much of the mechanism being set into place was in anticipation of the economic collapse of the Western World. The war with Iraq may have been conceived as a ploy to boost the bankrupt economy, but it only pushed the West into deeper recession.

The third scenario for FEMA came with the Los Angeles riots after the Rodney King brutality verdict. Had the rioting spread to other cities, FEMA would have been empowered to step in. As it was, major rioting only occurred in the Los Angeles area, thus preventing a pretext for a FEMA response.

On July 5, 1987, the Miami Herald published reports on FEMA's new goals. The goal was to suspend the Constitution in the event of a national crisis, such as nuclear war, violent and widespread internal dissent, or national opposition to a U.S. military invasion abroad. Lt. Col. North was the architect. National Security Directive Number 52, issued in August 1982, pertains to the "Use Of National Guard Troops To Quell Disturbances."

The crux of the problem is that FEMA has the power to turn the United States into a police state in time of a real crisis or a manufactured crisis. Lt. Col. North virtually established the apparatus for dictatorship. Only the criticism of the Attorney General prevented the plans from being adopted. But intelligence reports indicate that FEMA has a folder with 22 Executive Orders for the President to sign in case of an emergency. It is believed those Executive Orders contain the framework of North's concepts, delayed by criticism but never truly abandoned.

The crisis, as the government now sees it, is civil unrest. For generations, the government was concerned with nuclear war, but the violent and disruptive demonstrations that surrounded the Vietnam War era prompted President Nixon to change the direction of emergency powers from war time to times of domestic unrest.

Diana Reynolds, program director of the Edward R. Murrow Center, summed up the dangers of FEMA today and the public reaction to martial law in a drug crisis:

"It was James Madison's worst nightmare that a righteous faction would someday be strong enough to sweep away the constitutional restraints designed by the framers to prevent the tyranny of centralized power, excessive privilege, an arbitrary governmental authority over the individual. These restraints, the balancing and checking of powers among branches and layers of government, and the civil guarantees, would be the first casualties in a drug-induced national security state, with Reagan's Civil Emergency Preparedness unleashed.

"Nevertheless, there would be those who would welcome NSC (National Security Council) into the drug fray, believing that increasing state police powers to emergency levels is the only way left to fight America's enemy within. In the short run, a national security state would probably be a relief to those whose personal security and quality of life has been diminished by drugs or drug-related crime. And, as the general public watches the progression of institutional chaos and social decay, they too may be willing to pay the ultimate price—one drug-free America for 200 years of democracy."

The first targets in any FEMA emergency would be Hispanics and Blacks; the FEMA orders call for them to be rounded up and detained. Tax protesters, demonstrators against government military intervention outside U.S. borders, and people who maintain weapons in their homes are also targets. Operation Trojan Horse is a program designed to learn the identity of potential opponents to martial law. The program lures potential protesters into public forums, conducted by a "hero" of the people who advocates survival training. The list of names gathered at such meetings and rallies are computerized and then targeted in case of an emergency.

The most shining example of America to the world has been its peaceful transition of government from one administration to another. Despite crises of great magnitude, the United States has maintained its freedom and liberty. This nation now stands on the threshold of rule by non-elected people asserting non-constitutional powers. Even Congress cannot review a martial law action until six months after it has been declared. For the first time in American history, the reigns of government would not be transferred from one elected element to another, but the Constitution, itself, can be suspended.

The scenarios established to trigger FEMA into action are generally found in society today—economic collapse, civil unrest, drug problems, terrorist attacks, and protests against American intervention in a foreign country. All these premises exist; it could only be a matter of time before one of these triggers the entire emergency necessary to bring FEMA into action. And then it may be too late, because under the FEMA plan, there is no contingency by which constitutional power is restored.

These Executive Orders are serious business as far as they effectively override the constitutional base of the American way of life. It is important to examine these a bit further since they are what give FEMA its formidable authority to act above our usual legislative scrutiny.

The following two documents, parts I and II, were obtained from the www.thewinds.org Internet website and are reprinted here with permission. (Copyright 1997, The WINDS. All rights reserved.)

EXECUTIVE ORDERS: BONFIRE OF THE CONSTITUTION (PART I)

On June 3, 1994, President Clinton signed Executive Order #12919 gathering together into a single document all the power and authority of a multitude of Executive Orders issued by preceding presidents from John Kennedy on. Recent examination of this Executive Order has brought to light that the consolidation of previous presidential orders delivers unprecedented authority into the hands of the Chief Executive that exceed those powers granted him under the U.S. Constitution.

Incorporated under the aegis of President Clinton's EO #12919 are powers originally claimed by President Kennedy in a series of Executive Orders signed into "law" in February of 1962 which, if invoked, would virtually suspend the greater portion of liberties guaranteed by the United States Constitution.

In Section 3 of Kennedy's original EO #10995 entitled "ASSIGNING TELECOMMUNICATIONS MANAGEMENT FUNCTIONS" there is the vague statement: "Such authority shall include the power to amend, modify, or revoke frequency assignments." Innocuous as this sounds, it embodies the power of the Chief Executive in time of "national emergency" to seize control of all radio and other telecommunications.

On the same day that President Kennedy signed EO #10995, he also gave birth to four successive Orders that Clinton included in his EO containing provisions to disable constitutional rights. Executive Order #10997 empowers the Secretary of the Interior to seize all energy production facilities—specifically, "electrical power", "petroleum", "gas", "solid fuels", and "minerals". Section 3, subsection (d) of that order, entitled "Claimancy" states:

"Prepare plans to claim materials, manpower, equipment, supplies and services needed in support of assigned responsibilities and other essential functions of the Department...to insure availability of such resources in an emergency."

Note the word "claim" in reference to "materials, manpower, equipment, supplies, and services". The legal definition, as supplied by Black's Law Dictionary is: "To demand as one's own or as one's right; means by or through which claimant obtains possession or enjoyment of a privilege or thing. Demand for money or property as of a right...." This means that the government may, upon declaration of a state of local or national emergency, seize any of the above, private or otherwise, including "manpower".

As to what constitutes a national emergency, again Black's definition is quite revealing:

"A state of national crisis; a situation demanding immediate and extraordinary national or federal action. Congress has made little or no distinction between a "state of national emergency" and a "state of war". Brown v. Bernstein, D.C.Pa., 49 F.Supp. 728, 732.

EO #10998: places all food resources under authority of the Secretary of Agriculture.

EO #10999: invests the Secretary of Commerce with control over all means of transportation, public and private.

EO #11000: provides for the establishment of manpower resources at the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, with the authority to "claim" services (labor) and involuntary relocation of workers. Collateral authority for this conscription of labor is given in Title 50 app. United States Code, Section 2153 "WAR AND NATIONAL DEFENSE" under the section addressing civilian disposition entitled, "DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950" in which is set forth that civilian personnel may be assigned work without regard to payment or reimbursement.

It is important to note that, according to the War And Emergency Powers Act, the United States has legally been under a state of national emergency since its enactment in 1933. It has never been repealed, thus leaving the president with instant powers to suspend the Constitution.

Most legal scholars and legislators who have studied the matter concur that the War And Emergency Powers Act has, in reality, already suspended the Constitution since the moment the act was signed into law by President Roosevelt. The actual suspension of those constitutional rights awaits only the impetus of a national emergency requiring it.

In 1933 a U.S. Congressman entered the following statement into the Congressional Record:

"I think of all the damnable heresies that have ever been suggested in connection with the Constitution, the doctrine of emergency is the worst. It means that when Congress declares an emergency, there is no Constitution. This means its death. It is the very doctrine that the German chancellor is invoking today in the dying hours of the parliamentary body of the German republic, namely, that because of an emergency, it should grant to the German chancellor absolute power to pass any law, even though the law contradicts the Constitution of the German republic. Chancellor Hitler is at least frank about it. We pay the Constitution lipservice, but the result is the same—the Constitution Of The United States, as a restraining influence in keeping the federal government within the carefully prescribed channels of power, is moribund, if not dead."

The introduction to Senate Report 93-549, entered into the Congressional Record forty years later, in 1973, states:

"A majority of the people of the United States have lived all their lives under emergency rule.... For 40 years, freedoms and governmental procedures guaranteed by the Constitution have, in varying degrees, been abridged by laws brought into force by states of national emergency.... And, in the United States, actions taken by the government in times of great crisis have from, at least, the Civil War, in important ways shaped the present phenomenon of a permanent state of national emergency."

Following the Introduction, the report's opening statement goes on to say:

"Since March the 9th, 1933, the United States has been in a state of declared national emergency.... This vast range of powers, taken together, confer enough authority to rule the country without reference to normal constitutional processes. Under the powers delegated by these statutes, the President may: seize property; organize and control the means of production; seize commodities; assign military forces abroad; institute martial law; seize and control all transportation and communication; regulate the operation of private enterprise; restrict travel; and, in a plethora of particular ways, control the lives of all American citizens.”

Not overlooked by those drafting the Constitution was the possible need to address national emergencies. The document contains certain provisions indicating that its signatories conceived of the possibility that some guarantees of personal liberties may, in the national interest, require suspension.

Article 1, Section 9 states:

“The privileges of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion [an internal occurrence] or invasion [external] the public safety require it.” This grants the citizen the freedom from imprisonment or detention without due process. The proviso “unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety require it” indicates the necessity to provide for some contingencies that may also carry with them the possibility for abuse. No document of liberty, however, could possibly proscribe all potential for misuse of those liberties without actually eliminating them in the process. It has been said that Communism is nothing more than democracy with all potential for abuse legislated out.

As a result of the Executive Orders listed above, in concert with the War And Emergency Powers Act, there exists within the United States a government within a government. It is hidden, semi-covert in nature, and does not recognize the U.S. Constitution or its constraints. It functions autonomously as a form of totalitarian regime in suspended animation, awaiting its time of activation. It is a government driven by presidential Executive Orders to be executed by federal agencies run by non-elected officials.

Executive Orders amount to ready-wired buttons by which the president can suspend constitutional rights at any moment he determines that a “national emergency” exists. The great problem inherent is that no binding legal definition exists as to what constitutes a “national emergency”. That definition lies entirely with the Chief Executive. When he declares a state of emergency, the aforementioned documents can be used to activate whatever federal agency is most suited to address the emergency. Those agencies include, but are not limited to, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms (BATF), the FBI, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

Because this nation is under a continual state of emergency due to the War And Emergency Powers Act, and the Constitution granting somewhat elastic powers of emergency in “cases of rebellion or invasion”, the president can circumvent such fundamental protections as the Posse Comatatus Act which forbids the use of the military against U.S. citizens.

This slow-motion decay of constitutional rights was not unforeseen by the Founding Fathers. In a letter to Thomas Jefferson, James Madison once wrote: “I believe there are more instances of abridgment of freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations....”

The Constitution Of The United States Of America, once the hub of American law and freedoms, has been moved to the position of the hub cap. It has become merely an ornamental relic that serves no real function other than that of making the American people feel as if the document still matters to those who govern.

It appears that the modern electorate chooses their leaders for the same purpose that they attend a magic show. Their actual desire seems to be that the performer deceive them.

“The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their money; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?”

EXECUTIVE ORDERS: BONFIRE FOR THE CONSTITUTION (Part II: The Velvet Hammer)

In the event of a national emergency declared by the President of the United States, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), would be invested with the power to suspend the U.S. Constitution and is positioned to take control of the United States government and its citizens. As discussed in Part I of this report, the authority of eleven preceding Presidential Executive Orders (1939 through 1991) has been consolidated into Order #12919. This concentration of executive authority invests FEMA with absolute power over:

- all United States communications facilities (EO 10995);
- electrical power, petroleum, gas, fuels, and minerals, public and private (10997);
- food supplies, agricultural lands, and facilities (10998);
- transportation of any kind, including private, and control of seaports, waterways, and highways (10999);
- civilian labor forces without regard to financial remuneration as authorized under the Defense Production Act Of 1950 (11000);
- health, education, and welfare institutions (11001);
- all airport and air transportation, public, private and commercial (11003);
- railroads, inland waterways, and public storage facilities (11005).

Additionally, FEMA, under Executive Order #11002, can order the Postmaster General to begin a national registration of all residents of the United States for purposes of control of population movement and relocation.

All of the aforementioned powers can be invoked with the stroke of a presidential pen and are free of congressional restrictions or intervention for a period of six months. The practical expression of these powers can be the equivalent of a sentence without trial or jury with no recourse to appeal for at least a half a year. Many legal and paralegal analysts have seen, in the powers delegated to FEMA during any declared national emergency, the authority to forcibly relocate entire families into federal work camps, even as to the dividing of families and of children from parents.

FEMA was created by President Carter under Executive Order #12148. Its legal authorization is Title 2, United States Code 5121 called the Stafford Act. Within the text of that piece of “legislation” in Subchapter IV, section (B) is contained the wording:

“Measures to be undertaken during a hazard, including the enforcement of passive defense regulations prescribed by duly established military or civil authorities, the evacuation of personnel to shelter areas, the control of traffic and panic, and the control and use of lighting and civil communications.”

In a telephone interview with FEMA attorneys, The Winds asked the legal definition of “passive defense regulations” as “prescribed by duly established military or civil authorities”. Even FEMA’s Counsel General, Michael Hirsh, was unable to give us any definition of those terms. The ambiguity of that wording veiled its meaning from even the highest ranking lawyer in the agency.

KEEPING THE LAWS UNCLEAR

In the principal document by which the New World Order is implemented, the ambiguity of legal terms is set forth as a necessary quality by which any interpretation desired may be secured. In the nebulous breadth of those ambiguities lies the latitude of interpretation to make laws and regulations say whatever those in authority want them to say.

Concerning those laws, they claim that they: “...have twisted their interpretations so as to make them contradict each other. We have succeeded in erecting great and magnificent results by perverting the laws. The first result was that the interpretations of the laws actually masked their true intent. Afterwards, those laws were entirely hid from eyes of the governments because it became impossible to make anything out of the tangled web of legislation.”

The Winds also asked FEMA’s public relations office the primary reasons for the forced evacuation of residents during the recent flooding in North Dakota and the orders (not requests) for some residents to remain in their homes following the recent hurricanes in the southeast. FEMA’s response, strangely, did not indicate concern for the safety and well-being of the citizens involved, as one might expect of an agency tasked with the oversight of America's domestic security in time of disaster. Rather, their reasons for violating the constitutional rights of those citizens was a hedge against being sued by them or their survivors if they were injured or killed as a result of not being evacuated. Money, not lives, was their expressed justification for removing owners from their homes, in one instance, and commanding them not to leave them, in another.

Executive Order #11051 assigns responsibility of the Office of Emergency Planning (later to become FEMA) and authorizes all Executive Orders into effect in times of increased international tensions and economic or financial crisis or national emergency.

Again, the vagueness of the wording leaves wide the door of interpretation. As to what constitutes an "emergency" the Stafford Act defines it as thus:

"Emergency—means any occasion or instance for which, in the determination of the President, federal assistance is needed to supplement state and local efforts and capabilities to save lives and to protect property and public health and safety, or to lessen or avert the threat of a catastrophe in any part of the United States."

KEEPING DISSIDENT GROUPS QUIET

Former Chief of FEMA's Civil Security Division, General Frank Salzedo, once stated that his interpretation of FEMA's role is, among other things: "prevention of dissident groups from gaining access to U.S. opinion, or a global audience in times of crisis." The Constitution, on the other hand, states:

"Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

The question arises as to how General Salzedo's statement could survive being filtered through the First Amendment. What he said amounts to "government-speak" for the potential of creating an American Tiananmen Square. One of the Executive Orders gathered into Clinton's EO #12919 was an Order signed by President Nixon known as the Omnibus Emergency Preparedness Decree. Howard J. Ruff, economist and publisher of The Ruff Times, says: "Since the enactment of [that] Order, the only thing standing between us and dictatorship is the good character of the President, and the lack of a crisis severe enough that the public would stand still for it." The former slave and Civil War activist, Fredrick Douglass, once said that the limits of a tyrant's power are set by the willingness of the people to tolerate him.

During activation of these Executive

Orders, FEMA answers only to the National Security Council, which answers only to the President, and, as mentioned previously, once these powers are invoked, even Congress cannot intervene or countermand them for six months.

GUN MOUNTED OVER THE MANTLE

The command and control structure for the oversight and administration of these extra-constitutional powers (the teeth to execute and enforce the above orders) is already in place. FEMA is the administrating agency for several top-secret facilities. The most notable is burrowed deep into the bedrock beneath Mount Weather near Berryville, Virginia. Also known as the Western Virginia office of Controlled Conflict Operations, this underground command post was originally constructed for the purpose of housing top officials of the U.S. government during a national emergency such as imminent nuclear war. It is still contained within the "black" budget that does not appear in FEMA's published budgetary documents. Mt. Weather, along with other such secret installations as the one beneath a luxury resort in West Virginia called Greenbrier, officially does not exist.

Wallace Stickney, former FEMA director under George Bush, recalled that even the members of Congress approaching his agency to question some budget expenditures were not allowed access to the knowledge of where the money was directed—and they were the ones responsible for budgetary oversight. Even more astonishing is the fact that Stickney himself was denied such access. He said: "I was aware funding was being passed through but didn't know where it was going—nor did Congress, which demanded to know. Normally, as I understood it, nobody questioned the arithmetic."

If a nuclear attack occurred during Stickney's tenure in office, he was not to be included among those privileged to partake in the safety of the underground complex. He would have been required to remain at his post and, in the parlance of the nuclear disaster planners, be cindered. That insecurity for FEMA's current director, James Lee Witt, ended when President Clinton conferred cabinet status on him in February of 1996.

There is within government a quasi-legal concept called the "Rule of Necessity". Simply put, this doctrine says that whatever is necessary to preserve the nation against its foes, whether external or internal, will be done—apparently without regard to any violence done to the Constitution. It is to address the Rule of Necessity that Executive Orders are created. EOs did not have their beginnings in the desires of American presidents to transform the executive office into a de facto dictatorship. The first Presidential Executive Order was issued by George Washington in 1789, but no numbering system or uniformity was applied until 1907 when the Department of State retroactively designated an EO issued by Abraham Lincoln in 1862 as Executive Order 1.

What has become of this executive privilege since the Civil War has been rather like an insidiously introduced, systemic infection aimed at the total debilitation of the U.S. Constitution. As to whether these extreme powers of the Executive Branch will actually be implemented—there is an old saying in the theatre that if there is a gun mounted over the fireplace mantle in the first act, it will be used before the end of the final act. It ain't hangin' up there for nothin'.

That is the end of quoting of Part II of the provocative document Executive Orders: Bonfire Of The Constitution. It was noted as being written 7/4/97 and makes a strong case for the "secret government" as implimented through FEMA. We next examine these covert powers over we-the-people more closely.

HIDDEN THREATS

In part II, called "Hidden Threats", of an article titled Government Internment Camps—Recent Info U.S. Concentration Camps, appearing on WorldNet Daily on Monday, May 11, 1998, and written by Geoff Metcalf, we read, in part: [quoting]

In 1982, President Ronald Reagan issued National Security Directive 58 which empowered Robert McFarlane and Oliver North to use the National Security Council to secretly retrofit the Federal Emergency Management Agency to manage the country during a national crisis. In 1984 "REX exercises" simulated civil unrest culminating in a national emergency with a contingency plan for the imprisonment of 400,000 people. REX '84 was so secretive that special metal security doors were installed on the FEMA building's fifth floor, and even long-term officials of the Civil Defense Office were prohibited entry. The alleged purpose of this exercise was to handle an influx of refugees created by a war in Central America, but a more realistic scenario was the detention of American citizens.

STATE OF EMERGENCY

Under REX, the president could declare a state of emergency, empowering the head of FEMA to take control of the internal infrastructure of the United States and suspend the Constitution. The president could invoke Executive Orders 11000 through 11004 which would:

- 1) Draft all citizens into work forces under government supervision;
- 2) Empower the Postmaster to register all men, women, and children;

- 3) Seize all airports and aircraft;
- 4) Seize all housing and establish forced relocation of citizens.

FEMA, with a black budget allegedly provided by the Department of Defense, has worked closely with the Pentagon in an effort to avoid the legal restrictions of Posse Comitatus. While FEMA may not have been directly responsible for these precedent-setting cases, the principle of federal control was seen during the Los Angeles riots in 1992 with the federalization of the National Guard and during the siege at Waco, where Army tanks were involved in the final conflagration.

GOVERNMENT VIOLENCE IS “LEGITIMATE”?

The deputy attorney general of California commented at a conference that anyone who attacks the state, even verbally, becomes a revolutionary and an enemy by definition. Louis Guiffreda, who was head of FEMA, stated that “legitimate violence is integral to our form of government, for it is from this source that we can continue to purge our weaknesses.”

It is significant to note that the dictionary definition of terrorism—“the calculated use of violence”—corresponds precisely to the government’s stated policy of “the use of legitimate violence”. Hold on, a reasonable person who can read might ask: Who are the real terrorists? Guiffreda’s remark provides a revealing insight into the thinking of those who have been charged with oversight of the welfare of the citizens in this country. Apparently, if one’s convictions or philosophy do not correspond with the government’s agenda, that individual may find himself on a government enemy list, thereby making him/her a “target” to be “purged” by the use of “legitimate violence”.

So now we see more clearly the agenda behind the government’s double-speak language and its flexibility to trap we-the-people should we become too uppity about their taking away of our basic constitutional rights. But things only get more bizarre as we probe deeper into the FEMA machinery.

The following article was obtained from the www.parascope.com Internet website and is written by Jon Elliston, Dossier Editor:

FEMA’S X-FILE: Emergency Public Affairs Are “Not For The Outside World”

“Are you familiar with FEMA? What the Federal Emergency Management Agency’s real power is?” So asked scientist Dr. Al Kurtzweil, a character in the blockbuster film The X-Files: Fight The Future, who issued an impassioned plea to FBI Special Agent Fox

Mulder to wake up and smell the conspiracy coffee.

The 1998 movie projected the paranoia and intrigue of the smash TV show onto the big screen and stirred tremors of concern in Washington, D.C. FEMA, which plays a role in various conspiracy theories about secret plans for martial law in the United States, went so far as to disseminate a public affairs guidance on how to respond to allegations voiced in the movie.

The fact that FEMA was compelled to craft a response raises some curious questions for both fans and political researchers. The X-Files is famous for venturing into shadowy realms, but when all is said and done, this is just a fun flick, right? So why did FEMA take the unusual public relations measure? As Dossier tracked down the details, we learned that while FEMA probably won’t be initiating a federal crackdown any time soon, the agency can be mighty touchy—and staunchly secretive—about its plans for what to do when a “man-made” disaster occurs.

Most of FEMA’s attention is devoted to the tedious task of providing relief and renewal to communities struck by storms, floods, and other natural calamities. When hurricanes ravage or wildfires consume, FEMA arrives to help pick up the pieces, distribute aid, and construct emergency dwelling. Sounds safe so far—but then there’s the hidden chapter in the FEMA story.

It was in the early 1980s, during the first years of the Reagan administration, when FEMA delved into controversial pursuits that tainted the agency with suspicions that linger to this day. President Reagan had selected an old crony, Louis Giuffrida, to serve as FEMA director. Reagan and Giuffrida had originally hooked up during the protest movements of the Vietnam War era. While serving as governor of California, Reagan searched for methods to contain the rising tide of dissent. He turned to Giuffrida, a former National Guard officer with a penchant for population control. Under their leadership, the state government concocted and sometimes implemented draconian anti-subversive plans.

With this team in power in Washington, it wasn’t long before federal policy began to feel the tug of totalitarianism. Giuffrida established strict order at FEMA and then set about establishing a predominant role for the agency in worst-cast disaster planning.

In October 1984, just as Reagan was about to run for re-election, journalist Jack Anderson dropped a bombshell in one of his columns. He had discovered that FEMA officials drafted “standby legislation” to present to Congress if the United States was faced with domestic chaos or a state of total war (presumably against the Soviet Union). The proposal, according to Anderson, would have stripped away the essentials of U.S. democracy; it would “suspend the Constitution and the Bill Of Rights, effectively eliminate private property, abolish free enterprise, and generally clamp Americans in a totalitarian vise.”

Suddenly FEMA wasn’t Mr. Nice Guy any more. Additional press reports heightened the concerns of the growing number of FEMA-watchers. It became public knowledge that FEMA administered “continuity of government” facilities such as the one beneath Virginia’s Mount Weather, a massive underground complex that would shelter leaders in the event life above ground should become too hazardous.

Fears about FEMA’s functions flared up again in 1987, when the Miami Herald reported that Lt. Col. Oliver North, the Reagan White House aide who stood at center stage of the Iran-Contra scandal, had worked with FEMA on top-secret projects such as military exercises designed to test the government’s capacity to round up refugees and rabble-rousers.

Giuffrida, the apparent mastermind of the plan, stepped down from the position of “emergency czar” in 1985. However, concerns about the potential use of FEMA as a vehicle for martial law are today more widespread than ever, due in part to the portrayal of the agency in The X-Files.

The TV show and the movie have often alluded to the skeleton in FEMA’s closet. In Fight The Future, Dr. Kurtzweil spells it out: “FEMA allows the White House to suspend constitutional government upon declaration of a national emergency. It allows creation of a non-elected national government. Think about that, Agent Mulder!”

FEMA, for one, is thinking about that. On June 24, 1998, Al Kamen of the Washington Post reported that FEMA officials issued a “public affairs guidance” to help the agency deal with “the potential for an increase in queries from the general public and the news media regarding FEMA’s national security programs, due to recent Hollywood film releases.” The guidance did not identify the movies by name, but Fight The Future was apparently the primary concern.

“While entertaining and somewhat humorous to the employees of FEMA, some moviegoers may not understand that they are watching a fictional portrayal of the agency” the document said. Some Americans have come to “believe we have a somewhat sinister role” it noted, suggesting that “it is not realistic to think that we can convince them otherwise and it is advisable not to enter into debate on the subject.”

The guidance advised against a war of words with suspicious citizens, but urged FEMA officers to make one thing clear: “You may emphatically state that FEMA does not have, never had had, nor will ever seek, the authority to suspend the Constitution.”

[Also contained with the March 24, 1998 internal FEMA memorandum from Thomas L. Forman, Director, Office of Emergency Security Coordination, and Valice Bunting, Director, Office of Emergency Information and Media Affairs, are the following statements:

* First, there is no intent to stifle expression; simply to ensure that when discussing national security, you are aware of what has been approved for release. For additional information, refer the inquirer to the Office of Emergency Information and Media Affairs. National Security requires our most careful, considered articulation.

* FEMA will continue to maintain a passive public affairs approach regarding national security emergency preparedness activities.

* FEMA's mission is to respond to the consequences of a disaster regardless of the cause. With regard to continuity of government, FEMA's responsibilities are succinctly stated in Executive Order 12656. Precisely how FEMA meets those responsibilities must be afforded a level of protection to ensure that certain contingencies will be available if needed.]

Kamen's brief report in the Washington Post quoted key parts of the document, but the full text was unavailable to the public. Morrie Goodman, FEMA's Director of Communications and a co-author of the guidance, denied our initial request for the document, saying it was an internal communication and "not for the outside world". However, we then obtained it and a prior FEMA guidance on national security matters with Freedom of Information Act requests.

The papers open a window into the exclusive realm of government emergency public affairs planning and demonstrates the dilemmas of officials in a democracy who insist, on the one hand, that they have nothing to hide, and on the other, that they cannot discuss certain sensitive matters.

Is FEMA's concern much ado about nothing? The X-Files is a work of fiction, and certainly most Americans understand this. Besides, most citizens know it would take much more than a subversive piece of legislation to overturn constitutional government in the United States. It is difficult to imagine the type of crisis that would cause Americans to forfeit their system of government to FEMA-rule.

Yet, as these internal documents confirm, the full story of FEMA's involvement with contingency plans for martial law is still not available to the public. And until it is, speculation fed by popular TV shows and movies (and a few good investigative news reports) will fill the void. By keeping tight-lipped about "continuity of government", FEMA is saddling itself with a continual public relations problem that even the agency's best spin doctors can't resolve.

[End quoting]

This is about enough concerning the Executive Orders which pertain to FEMA. The only one that I want to specifically call to your attention briefly, but in detail, is Executive Order No. 12333 which became effective on December 4, 1981:

[quoting a small portion:]

2.7 CONTRACTING

Agencies within the Intelligence Community are authorized to enter into contracts or arrangements for the provision of goods or services with private companies or institutions in the United States and need not reveal the sponsorship of such contracts or arrangements for authorized intelligence purposes. Contracts or arrangements with academic institutions may be undertaken only with the consent of appropriate officials of the institution.

[End quoting]

Through this open-ended and purposely clandestine mechanism, agencies such as the CIA can subcontract in some very large and "creative" ways. They thereby maintain an illusion of being a lot cleaner and "smaller" than they actually are.

You'll see astonishing references to this particular Executive Order in the next section of my investigation, and thus there is usefulness in singling out this particular EO at this time.

Let's continue our strange journey through the world of shadowy intrigue that seems to be known as FEMA. Now comes the smoking gun.

THE SMOKING GUN

In September 1998, a $63 million lawsuit was filed by Massachusetts attorney Ray Kohlman, on behalf of his client, former Green Beret William M. Tyree. Filed in the U. S. District Court, District of Massachusetts (Case No. 98-CV-11829-JLT) against defendants: CIA, L. Scott Harshbarger, A. Paul Cellucci, George Bush, and Dois Gene Tatum—alleging drug-trafficking and money-laundering operations. What is of particular interest are the statements concerning the origin of FEMA and the source of its operating capital, namely, from Operation Watchtower—a very touchy subject with the intelligence community.

In Tyree's 101-page complaint (obtained by The SPECTRUM, and which, combined with the affidavits and supporting documentation, constitute approximately 5 inches of hardcopy), he very clearly spells out dealings and top-secret operations which the CIA and the shadow government would prefer never see the light of day. Fortunately these documents on file with the federal court are now a matter of public record and not cloaked under the all-too-frequently employed veil for "national security". These particular documents are also secured in other places, and some are posted or may be purchased from the www.copyvia.com Internet website, which is run by former LAPD officer Mike Suppert, who puts out a monthly newsletter "for those committed to the fight against CIA drug dealing", called From The Wilderness. (P. O. Box 6061-350, Sherman Oaks, CA 91413. The cost is $35 a year.)

Tyree, who is now serving a life sentence for the murder of his wife (a case so similar to the famous Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald case that it is frightening) has also filed suit against the U.S. Army in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., civil action no. 99—CV—2709. This case also contains some very interesting and revealing information.

What is the current status of this federal complaint in Boston? On September 30, 1999, Federal Judge Joseph Tauro issued an Order. The CIA's Motion to Dismiss the case was granted, without prejudice. On November 1, 1999, Tyree's attorney, Ray Kohlman, filed a Motion to Amend, which predicably has been opposed by the Defendants, but thus far there has been no ruling on that motion. The case is still open.

In his May 17, 1998 edition of From The Wilderness, Mike Suppert has this to say about Tyree: "In a moment you will read about former Special Forces trooper Bill Tyree, who is the nail in the CIA's coffin. I am in possession of documents about Tyree and the CIA Watchtower missions, which are the hammer to drive that nail. As Bill Tyree fights for his life and puts the evidence necessary to hand the CIA on a platter for us, he has been food poisoned three times, and as a possible pardon or a new trial for him becomes a possibility, his life is increasingly in danger."

Just a word of explanation for you, the reader. In this intricate selection of quotations from several sources, you will be introduced to a great number of "players". Do not be disturbed if you are unfamiliar with some of the names mentioned. The purpose for including these portions will be clear as you continue reading. Remember, Tyree is the one who has charged in his Federal lawsuit that FEMA's funding came illicitly through "Black Operations" sources, specifically cocaine money laundered by various operatives through a wide range of banks in various countries. So, again, just read through this portion of the story as if you know the people involved. Some names will be familiar to you, as you recall the Iran-Contra scandal and the widely publicized hearings before Congress. Oliver North was a key figure in this entire scenario, as you will see.

Author Rodney Stich has a lot to say about Bill Tyree's case, the CIA, and Operation Watchtower, in his monumental and well documented book Defrauding America: Encyclopedia Of Secret Operations By The CIA, DEA, And Other Covert Agencies. Among other things, here is what Stich has to say about Tyree:

[quoting]

I made initial contact in 1994 with Tyree, who then furnished me with considerable details and documents on Operation Watchtower and Operation Orwell, and other covert operations in which the military was involved. I am convinced that Tyree was framed, by military officers and prosecutors in Massachusetts, for the murder of his wife.

Tyree prepared several highly detailed affidavits describing what he himself had observed of the drug-related Watchtower operation. He elaborated on Operation Watchtower as a U.S. Army Special Forces secret operation.

[Now moving forward, Stich explains:]

The Cutolo Affidavit described another unlawful mission, Operation Orwell, which consisted of spying on politicians, judicial figures, state law enforcement agencies, and religious figures. Compromising information was distributed to certain members of the military-industrial complex. Colonel Cutolo stated in his affidavit that the compromising information was needed to silence these people if information on the criminal activities leaked out.

The Cutolo Affidavit described the killing of an Army servicewoman, Elaine Tyree, who had knowledge of Operation Watchtower, which she described in her diary. To shift attention from the actual killer and his connection to the ongoing drug operation, the military charged Tyree's husband with the killing.

It was too risky to allow a military court to review the charges against Pvt. Tyree, with Operation Orwell still ongoing and Senator Garn's office requesting a full investigation. Pvt. Tyree therefore had to stand before a civilian court of law on the criminal charges.

At the first military hearing, the presiding judge found no reason to bind Pvt. Tyree's husband over for trial for the murder of his wife. This decision risked further investigation and possible exposure of the corrupt operation. Army pressure caused the county prosecutor to indict the husband for murdering his wife, even though the army knew the actual killer was someone else. The Cutolo Affidavit stated:

On 29 February 1980, Pvt. Tyree was convicted of murder and will spend the duration of his life incarcerated. I could not disseminate intelligence gathered under Operation Orwell to notify civilian authorities who actually killed Elaine Tyree.

[Moving to another section of Stich's book, Defrauding America, we read:]

Operation Watchtower was one of many drug trafficking operations from Central America consisting of the placement and operation of low-frequency radio beacons to guide low-flying pilots from Columbia to Panama. It also consisted of making available to the pilots the radio frequencies and schedule of drug interdiction aircraft so as to avoid detection. Because of the extremely low altitude that these drug-laden aircraft flew, often at only five hundred feet, they could not receive the line-of-sight radio signals ordinarily used. Radio signals from an aircraft on a particular frequency actuated a relay at the radio beacon site that started up the gasoline-engine-powered generators and the radio transmitters.

[Again quoting from the Cutolo Affidavit in Defrauding America:]

I have seen other men involved in Operation Watchtower meet accidental deaths after they were also threatened.

It then identified the people who died in strange fashion and who had posed a danger of exposing the drug trafficking.

Sgt. John Newby received threatening phone calls and then died in a parachuting accident when his chute failed to open. Colonel Robert Bayard was murdered in Atlanta, Georgia in 1977, as he went to meet Mossad agent Michael Harari. Colonel Cutolo died in a one-car accident near Skullthorpe, England, in 1980, while on a military exercise near the Royal Air Force base at Skullthorpe. Cutolo's death was under strange circumstances, and occurred shortly before he was to meet Harari.

Colonel Baker died while trying to determine if Harari had killed Colonel Cutolo. Colonel James Rowe was assassinated on April 21, 1989, in the Philippines, within three days after Mossad agent Harari arrived in that country. Rowe had been investigating Harari's links to Cutolo's murder and to CIA operatives Edwin Wilson and Thomas Clines. Pearce was killed in a helicopter accident in June 1989 under mysterious circumstances. Congressman Larkin Smith died in an airplane accident on August 13, 1989.

The affidavit stated that Mossad agents associated with Operation Watchtower were being protected by CIA Director Stansfield Turner and George Bush, and that Washington military authorities had approved the drug trafficking operation:

Harari was a known middleman for matters involving the United States in Latin America [and] acted with the support of a network of Mossad personnel throughout Latin America and worked mainly in the import and export of arms and drug trafficking.

[CIA operative] Edwin Wilson explained that Operation Watchtower had to remain secret.... There are similar operations being implemented elsewhere in the world. Wilson named the "Golden Triangle" of Southeast Asia and Pakistan.... Wilson named several recognized officials of Pakistan, Afghanistan, Burma, Korea, Thailand, and Cambodia as being aware and consenting to these arrangements, similar to the ones in Panama.

Referring to the huge profits received by the CIA from the drug trafficking, the Affidavit continued:

Edwin Wilson explained that the profit from the sale of narcotics was laundered through a series of banks. Wilson stated that over 70% of the profits were laundered through the banks in Panama. The remaining percentage was funneled through Swiss banks, with a small remainder being handled by banks within the United States. I understood that some of the profits in Panamanian banks arrived through Israeli couriers. I became aware of that fact from normal conversations with some of the embassy personnel assigned to the Embassy in Panama. Wilson also stated that an associate whom I don't know also aided in overseeing the laundering of funds.... Wilson indicated that most of Operation Watchtower was implemented on the authority of [Thomas] Clines.

Referring to Operation Orwell, which spied upon politicians for subsequent blackmail:

I was notified by Edwin Wilson that the information forwarded to Washington, D.C. was disseminated to private corporations who were developing weapons systems for the Dept. Of Defense. Those private corporations were encouraged to use the sensitive information gathered from surveillance of U.S. senators and representatives as leverage [blackmail] to manipulate those Congressmen into approving whatever costs the weapon systems incurred.

As of the date of this affidavit, 8,400 police departments, 1,370 churches, and approximately 17,900 citizens have been monitored under Operation Orwell. The major churches targeted have been Catholic and Latter Day Saints. I have stored certain information gathered in Operation Orwell on Fort Devens, and pursuant to instructions from Edwin Wilson have forwarded additional information gathered to Washington, D.C.... Certain information was collected on suspected members of the Trilateral Commission and the Bilderberg group. Among those that information was collected on were Gerald Ford and President Jimmy Carter. Edwin Wilson indicated that additional surveillance was implemented against former CIA Director George Bush, whom Wilson named as a member of the Trilateral Commission.

It is easy to understand why members of Congress can be blackmailed into covering up for criminal activities involving personnel of intelligence agencies or the Justice Department when information on their personal lives is secretly collected by the FBI and U.S. intelligence agencies for blackmail purposes.

The affidavit described some of the weapon manufacturers who received this CIA information:

Edwin Wilson named three weapons systems when he spoke of private corporations receiving information from Operation Orwell.

(1) An armored vehicle. (2) An aircraft that is invisible to radar. (3) A weapons system that utilizes kinetic energy. Edwin Wilson indicated to me during our conversation, which entailed the dissemination of Operation Orwell information and the identification of the three weapons systems, that Operation Orwell would be implemented nationwide by 4 July 1980.

The affidavit made reference to classified information and "the activities of the CIA in the United States and in Latin America". Referring to people working with Edwin Wilson, the affidavit continued:

Each operation had basically the same characters involved . . . with Edwin Wilson . . . Robert Gates and William J. Casey...

As Colonel Cutolo suspected, Neri was killed, apparently to silence him. Paul Neri [an NSA employee] was one of the people who Cutolo entrusted with the affidavit and who had been requested to make the affidavit public upon his death. In distributing the affidavit to members of Congress and the media, Neri wrote:

Both Col. Rowe and Mr. Pearce agreed to go public, after the meeting with Larkin Smith, to call for a full investigation into the events described in Col. Cutolo's affidavit. But both men died prior to the meeting with Smith.

Referring to the Mossad, Neri's cover letter stated:

With the deaths of Col. Cutolo, Col. Baker, Col. Rowe (and Col. Robert Bayard named in Col. Cutolo's affidavit), it is hard to believe the deaths of these men are not the work of the Israeli Mossad. It is equally easy to attribute the death of Col. Cutolo directly to Operation Watchtower inquiries.

Meeting the same cover-up response that I received for the past thirty years from the establishment media, Neri's letter stated:

For your information, a copy of the affidavit will be sent to the New York Times, the Washington Post and the Boston Globe.... The men who died so far...were good men. They attempted to let the public know what really occurred in Latin America, and in the never ending drug flow.

In 1980, Col. Cutolo died in an accident while on a military exercise. Just prior to his death he notified me that he was to meet with Michael Harari, an Israeli Mossad agent. It is my belief, though unsubstantiated, that Harari murdered Col. Cutolo because of the information Col. Cutolo possessed. I believe that Col. Cutolo died in his attempt to [expose] Operation Watchtower....

Colonel Baker enlisted the aid of Colonel James N. Rowe, and between Col. Baker, Col. Rowe, and myself, we set out to prove that Harari murdered Col. Cutolo, and that Operation Watchtower...netted Edwin Wilson and Frank Terpil of the CIA a large sum of tax-free dollars.

Prior to getting very far into the investigation, Col. Baker died.... We had no doubt as to the guilt of Thomas Clines, whom we suspect was the mastermind behind Operation Watchtower.

Neri went on to describe how Harari and Col. James Rowe were in the Philippines when Rowe was assassinated and that "It is my unsubstantiated belief that Harari murdered Col. Rowe or arranged it." Neri's letter continued: "I believe Harari's motive for murdering Col. Rowe was due to Col. Rowe's inquiries about Harari's movements and relationships to Edwin Wilson, Thomas Clines and Manuel Noriega."

Referring to another death in the small group seeking to expose Operation Watchtower and the associated deaths, Neri wrote:

In June 1989, Mr. Pearce was killed in a helicopter accident. The accident has a story of its own I am told. Both Col. Rowe and Mr. Pearce agreed to go public, after the meeting with Larkin Smith, to call for a full investigation into the events described in Col. Cutolo's affidavit. But both men died prior to the meeting with Smith.

Since the Israeli Mossad openly trafficks in arms and drugs in Latin America, a theory that Clines, Wilson, Terpil, Harari, and Noriega engaged in Operation Watchtower is very easy to believe at this time, especially following the Libyan situation and the Iran-Contra affair. It all fits, this entire scenario carried over from Operation Watchtower directly into the Iran-Contra affair with the same characters.

[End quoting from Rodney Stich's masterpiece Defrauding America.]

In the May 17, 1998 (Vol. 1, No. 3) edition of From The Wilderness, Mike Suppert has this to say on the subject:

[quoting]

In 1995 I also made contact with unnamed sources at the National Security Agency who confirmed key elements of Cutolo's affidavit and led me to believe that a doomsday file, which he secreted there before his murder, was the source of the affidavit. It was written by Cutolo's colleagues, after his murder, as a result of his murder. It remains, to this day, the single most frightening document I have ever read.

Adding further weight is the fact that the daughter of Cutolo, a resident of New Mexico, has confirmed elements of the story to Dee Ferdinand, daughter of Albert Carone, a CIA-Mafia connected money launderer who also held the rank of full Colonel in Army Intelligence. Carone was murdered in 1990. Tyree knew Carone from the Watchtower missions and confirmed his role as a "money man".

I have held Carone's personal phone book in my hands, and in it I found the home addresses and telephone numbers of both William Casey and Gambino crime boss Paul Castellano. My investigation of Carone has already been given to intelligence committees from both Houses.

In spite of overwhelming evidence of Tyree's innocence, it is questionable whether he will be granted a new trial. The case sounds hauntingly like that of Geronimo Pratt, the former Black Panther who served 27 years for a murder he did not commit. Rather than grant Pratt a new trial, which would have proved the existence of a conspiracy, the government released him last year. Like Geronimo Pratt, there are witnesses willing to place Tyree in another town at the time of the murder. Recently Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts wrote to the FBI asking them to reopen the case. The FBI declined, stating that there was insufficient evidence. Bill Tyree has been food poisoned three times recently. He was then punished when he was unable to report for work. He has appealed his case as a political prisoner to the Organization of American States. They, according to Kohlman, have received the appeal and will be looking at Tyree as a political prisoner.

[End quoting]

For those of you who may want to contribute your support and encouragement, letters may be written to William M. Tyree at P. O. Box 100, S. Walpole, MA 02071. It is never an easy path to follow when efforting to awaken we-the-people to The Truth. And in the Big League, the game can get very rough and discouraging.

Let's now turn to words from one of the key senior players in this Big League game, as prelude to an examination of some gems of information in Tyree's lawsuit itself.

WILLIAM J. CASEY

An exhibit within William Tyree's lawsuit against the U.S. Army, filed in Washington, D.C. (case 99-CV-2709), is an affidavit from former CIA Director William Casey. Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly entered a Sealing Order for the Casey document, marked "Top Secret". In this affidavit, Jesuit-trained, Knight of Malta, William Casey reveals in very clear language his philosophy. (Readers, harken back to our May 2000 Front-Page story on the "Black" Pope and the Jesuits and their front-and-center role in the "shadow government" on a WORLD scale.) Since this document is in the "public domain" from several sources, it is included here.

[Quoting from the affidavit of William Casey:]

I, William J. Casey, declare: I have found that freedom is a priceless commodity that demands constant vigilance to guarantee its longevity.

I was assigned to the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) in London, England, during World War II. During that time I befriended a young German soldier named Gunther [Russbacher]. I used Gunther and several other anti-Nazi German prisoners of war in OSS operations within Nazi Germany.

I knew this violated Geneva Convention. I did not care. The Geneva Convention was but a set of rules governing man's atrocities committed in the name of political ideology. To wage war with rules is to prolong human suffering. Open warfare is the last resort of a civilized nation and must be used sparingly. Wars must be fought savagely, utilizing all tools and tricks at hand. Gunther was a tool. Ignoring the Geneva Convention was the trick.

After I became Director of Central Intelligence (DCI) on January 28, 1981, I was approached and briefed by William Colby, former DCI. My history with Bill Colby is known. Colby notified me, off the record, of two operations he was still running in Latin America. Both operations were without the knowledge and consent of the United States Congress, President Ronald Reagan, or even the United States intelligence apparatus. Colby identified the operations as "A-6" (RED MIST) AND "A-7" (PROJECT SANDMAN). A-7 entailed smaller operations.

I was told that A-6 identified individuals and the build-up of the communist threat in Latin America. Some intelligence collected in A-6 was used in TASK FORCE-157.

I was told that A-7 was "the Phoenix Program" of Latin America. It involved the assassination of the communist infrastructure throughout Latin America.

I was told that Colby authorized assets involved in A-6 and A-7 to engage in narcotics trafficking to finance both operations. Colby engaged in similar operations that I know of in Vietnam for the same reason.

Colby candidly informed me that he had pre-positioned more than one million pounds of cocaine in Panama between December 1, 1975 and April 1, 1976. This was done with the aid of our gallant ally, General Manuel Noriega. The cocaine was transported into El Salvador, Costa Rica, and Honduras between 1976 and 1981. Colby now sat in front of me, with hat in hand, and requested my help in the delivery of the cocaine to the American market.

I was told that Colby was using a mutual friend of ours, Colonel Albert Vincent Carone, United States Army, Military Intelligence, to field A-6 and A-7. Al Carone is a charismatic patriot that General Joseph W. Stilwell introduced us to in late 1945. Beside the usual qualifications, Al Carone brought to the anti-communist effort a direct connection to his longtime friend, Vito Genovese. Genovese was the head of the gambling and narcotics for the controlling mafia family in New York to which Al Carone was made a member. Carone is a friend of international fugitive Robert Vesco. Carone has several anti-communist intelligence sources that include Maurita Lorenz, a friend of Fidel Castro. Al Carone is the younger brother of Dr. Pasquale Carone. Dr. Carone worked for Central Intelligence on other matters.

Colby told me that profits from the pre-positioned cocaine would be laundered through Al Carone, the New York mafia, and Robert Vesco, then redirected to the anticommunist effort through Colby.

After discussion with Al Carone, I made the decision to bring the pre-positioned cocaine into Mena airport, Mena, Arkansas. Central Intelligence has used Mena Airport on prior occasions. This time the cocaine is the tool. The trick was to ignore the law and avoid public scrutiny. We were helped in our efforts by William J. Clinton and William F. Weld.

By 1984 all pre-positioned cocaine had arrived at Mena airport, and additional cocaine sources were secured. Cocaine was being trans-shipped through Hangars Four and Five at Ilopango Airbase, El Salvador. My point man at Mena was Alder Berriman Seal (Berry Seal).

Bill Clinton has proved invaluable so far by containing the local law enforcement investigations into the intelligence activity in Mena. Bill Weld, as Assistant United States Attorney, was placed in charge of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice. This was done so that Bill Weld could control investigations into Mena by federal law enforcement agencies. The placement of Weld has proved invaluable.

I ordered John Poindexter, Robert McFarlane and Oliver North to go outside normal channels and use available assets, including the mafia, to ensure the arrival of the cocaine into Mena Airport. The arrivals occurred in no small part through the effort of personnel assigned to the National Security Agency (NSA) and Army Security Agency (ASA). The men and women of the NSA and ASA blinded early warning defense satellites and radar grid to enable the aircraft to land undetected at Mena Airport. The NSA and ASA operations were SEA SPRAY and JADE BRIDGE.

I have learned that the course of the democratic struggle for Nicaragua and Latin America is beginning to swing in our direction. I attribute this success to A-6 and A-7 which Bill Colby had the insight, precision, and spine to carry out.

I take notice of the heroic efforts of Al Caron, Bill Clinton, Bill Weld, John Poindexter, Bud McFarlane, and Ollie North. Without these men, A-6 and A-7 would not have appeared.

Freedom is a priceless commodity. The amount of freedom you enjoy is the result of the amount of vigilance you invest.

My actions may be recorded as criminal, condemning countless Americans to drug dependency. I don't care. All wars produce casualties. Generally the more violent the war, the shorter the length. My choice was either to stare down a protracted cold war guerilla insurgency in Latin America or use the means available to finance and wage a violent war of short duration for democracy. I stand by my decisions. The tool is cocaine. The trick is to understand that the drug user had the freedom to make a choice. They chose the drug. I chose to use their habit to finance the democracy that all Americans enjoy. To keep those Americans safe from the communist threat knocking on our back door in Latin America. For a change, the drug user will contribute to society.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the above facts are true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Executive this 9th day of December 1986 in McLean, Virginia. William J. Casey
[End quoting]

Here is a classic case of the ages-old question: "Do the ends justify the means?" When that moral issue enters the decision-making machinery of the intelligence community, things can quickly get quite bizarre.

WILLIAM M. TYREE'S LAWSUIT

Returning to Bill Tyree's lawsuit against the CIA and George Bush, filed in Boston in the U.S. District Court (case 98-CV-11829-JLT), let's take a look at some of the allegations in the suit, quoting portions:

- The CIA/Military of the United States had engaged in a drug trafficking Operation identified as WATCHTOWER, that did preposition cocaine in Panama, at the U.S. Air Force Base known as Albrook Air Station, which was brought into Panama in December 1975, and February-March 1976, and moved north into Costa Rica, Honduras, and El Salvador, in the time period of post-Watchtower;

- The CIA/Military of the United States had engaged in illegal surveillance of citizens in the United States, and in the New England/Massachusetts area to determine if Operation Watchtower had been discovered;

- Did conceal and cover-up that the CIA, through George Bush, (DCI, Vice-President, and President), Dois Gene Tatum, and Albert V. Carone, between 1976 and 1996, did engage in a pattern of criminal activity, and did violate, and commit at least two or more of the following federal crimes:

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1976-1996, engage in illegal and unsanctioned drug trafficking operations to bring drugs into the United States in violation of 21 USC, 952-955, 959-961, and 963, using civilian and U.S. Military Personnel and equipment;

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1976-1996, engage in illegal and unsanctioned audio-visual surveillance of citizens of the United States, and Massachusetts, using civilian and U.S. Military Personnel and equipment in violation of 18 USC, 2510-2520; Massachusetts General Law c. 272, 99;

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1976-1996, engage in illegal and unsanctioned money laundering of illegally attained drug profits using civilian and U.S. Military Personnel and equipment in violation of 18 USC, Chapter 53, 5313-5316, and 5326;

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1976-1996, engage in illegal and unsanctioned commerce not approved by the U.S. Congress of drugs into the United States and Massachusetts, in violation of the so-called "Cooley Doctrine";

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1976-1996, engage in illegal and unsanctioned "domestic operations" within the United States and Massachusetts, in violation of 50 USC, 403(d)(3)(1947);

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1982-1987, engage in illegal and unsanctioned covert action against Nicaragua using funds from the United States Government, and the Department of Defense, (i.e., salaries paid to U.S. troops sent to Latin America to train "Contra" freedom fighters), in violation of the so-called Boland Amendment, Public Law 97-377, and the second so-called Boland Amendment, Public Law 98-473, (Boland-I took effect in December 1982; Boland-II took effect on October 12, 1984, and remained in effect until at least the end of fiscal year 1987);

- Conceal and cover-up that the CIA did, between 1980-1989, engage in illegal and unsanctioned act of drafting up a so-called Federal Emergency Management Agency, (FEMA), that did exceed the parameters of its initial authority, and was originated using funding of questionable origins (i.e., drug profits), in violation of the U.S. Constitution, see paragraph(s) 60(a)-60(e), below;

- Traffick drugs into Mena, Arkansas, Massachusetts, and the United States between 1976-1996;

- Did pay gang members as assets under E.O. #12333, to actually traffick and distribute the drugs once the drugs were in the United States;

- Did bribe various U.S. Government officials, or influence same to not:

- investigate the subject matter of this complaint; etc.

[Later on:]

That the implementation of E.O. #12333 violated:

- 50 USC, 403(d)(1)(2)(3)(1947);

- "The Necessary and Proper Clause of Article 1, Section 8" of the United States Constitution, the right of the Legislature to enact laws to achieve its delegated powers (i.e., Congress brought 50 USC, 403 Et seq. into effect to achieve its delegated powers of legislating the intelligence community in the United States and E.O. #12333 un-did what Congress brought into effect);

- Separation of Powers;

- Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution, as this Clause protects, (i.e., 50 USC, 403 Et seq., was wiped away by the stroke of the President's pen, and by doing so, would later be used to undercut yet another piece of legislation, the Boland Amendment);

- That E.O. #12333 failed to take into consideration that the private assets/entities hired by E.O. #12333 would engage in the commerce of trafficking drugs into the United States, Mena, Arkansas, and Boston, Massachusetts, and only Congress has authority to regulate commerce under the "Cooley Doctrine", (Cooley v. Board of Wardens, (1851);

- That E.O. #12333 gave private assets/entities hired by E.O. #12333 authority using profits from the illegal drug trafficking into the United States, Mena, Arkansas, and Boston, Massachusetts, to wage a covert war on Nicaragua, in violation of Article 1 of the United States Constitution, which outlines only the U.S. Congress has the power to declare war. The President usurped that Congressional authority at Article 1, by signing into effect E.O. #12333.

- That, pursuant to a separate theory of TORT under Thornwell, supra., the Plaintiff alleges the CIA and other Defendants were negligent, and failed at the conclusion of Operation Watchtower to monitor the drugs brought into Panama, from Columbia, through Operation Watchtower and engage in a pattern of criminal activity between 1976-1996.

- (a) Seek congressional approval under the so-called Cooley Doctrine, to engage in the commerce of trafficking drugs into the United States, Mena, Arkansas, and Boston, Massachusetts, among the many locations that the cocaine from Operation Watchtower was sold;

- (b) Seek congressional approval under Article 1 of the United States Constitution, to wage war on Nicaragua, using profits from the cocaine brought into the United States, Mena, Arkansas, and Boston, Massachusetts, through Operation Watchtower, and the several Operations listed herein at paragraph 183(j).

- That, pursuant to a separate theory of TORT under Thornwell, supra., the Plaintiff alleges the CIA and other defendants were negligent, and failed at the conclusion of the illegal search of the Tyree apartment, to notify the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that the missing diaries of Elaine Tyree contained data related to the National Security of the United States, and as such, would not be available for the Plaintiff to use in his criminal trial as a defense to show that someone other than the Plaintiff had an ample reason to kill Elaine Tyree.

- That, pursuant to a separate theory of TORT under Thornwell, supra., the Plaintiff alleges the CIA and other Defendants were negligent, and failed at the conclusion of Operation Watchtower to monitor the post-Watchtower events, and keep U.S. Military Personnel out of the CIA drug trafficking Operations, which led to the involvement of the Defendant Tatum and the pattern of criminal activity between 1976-1996.

- That, pursuant to a separate theory of TORT under Thornwell, supra., the Plaintiff alleges the CIA and other Defendants were negligent, and failed at the conclusion of Operation Watchtower to monitor the post-Watchtower events, and keep U.S. Military Personnel out of the CIA implemented covert war on Nicaragua as required by The Boland Amendment and the pattern of criminal activity between 1976-1996.

- That, see paragraphs 300-301 below for facts, pursuant to a separate theory of TORT under Thornwell, supra., the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants CIA, and George Bush were negligent, and failed at the conclusion of Operation Watchtower to monitor the post-Watchtower events and seek legal Congressional funding for the origination of FEMA, (Federal Emergency Management Agency), and this failure led to the concealment and cover-up of Operation Watchtower, written about in the diaries of Elaine Tyree, seized illegally and turned over to Colonel Carone, and then to the CIA, which ensured that the Operation Watchtower drug trafficking Operation would remain covert, allowing the drug profits from this Operation to be used to circumvent Congress and fund FEMA and continue the pattern of criminal activity.

- That, see paragraphs 301(f)(g)(h) and 301(e) in specific, and generally paragraph 300-301, pursuant to a separate theory of TORT under Thornwell, supra., the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants CIA, and George Bush were negligent, and failed at the conclusion of Operation Watchtower to monitor the post-Watchtower events and:

- Seek congressional approval for FEMA, and the line of succession to the President in the event of an emergency;

- Seek judicial review from the U.S. Supreme Court of the FEMA established line of succession to the President in the event of an emergency (see paragraphs 301(f)(g)(h), and 301(e) in specific, to determine if the FEMA line of succession is constitutional);

- Seek judicial review from the U.S. Supreme Court of the ill-defined and vague term of "National Emergency" used as a cornerstone of FEMA, and determine it's definition and parameters;

- Seek judicial review from the U.S. Supreme Court on whether or not E.O. #12333 (2.6(a)(b)(c)(d), authorizing the CIA to assist the local police put the CIA in the domestic intelligence business;

- Seek judicial review from the U.S. Supreme Court on whether or not, as declared by the U.S. Attorney General at paragraph 301(e), FEMA has exceeded its proper function as a coordinating agency for preparedness as allowed by the revised Executive Order;

- Seek congressional review to determine what roles the judicial and legislative branches of the U.S. Government would have if FEMA was activated, and the U.S. Constitution was suspended;

- By failing to seek congressional and judicial review, the Defendants CIA, and George Bush violated the following; and that did require the continued concealment and cover-up of the diaries of Elaine Tyree, which were seized during the illegal search of the Tyree apartment, which were turned over to Colonel Carone, and then given to the CIA by Colonel Carone, to cover-up Operation Watchtower, which was one of several illegal drug operations that produced a profit which was used in turn to help originate and implement FEMA, violating:

(a) Separation of powers: the Executive Branch brought about an agency, (i.e., FEMA), which has the authority to suspend the U.S. Constitution, (e.g., further suspending legislative and judicial branches), but is vague in its verbiage as to what does constitute an emergency, and fails to list what, if any, duties the legislative and judiciary will have or perform if the U.S. Constitution is suspended;

(b) the necessary and proper clause of Article 1, Sec. 8: Congress had to approve FEMA for two specific reasons:

(1) FEMA is a vaguely written Executive Branch-created agency that has the power to suspend the U.S. Constitution, and put the legislative and judicial branches of government out of work;

(2) FEMA is an Executive Branch creation that clearly affects all three branches of Government, capable of silencing the voice of the people, (i.e., legislature), and the legal redress of the people, (i.e., judiciary).

- That, in considering how far the Reagan/Bush Administration went to train the Contras, allegedly in violation of The Boland Amendment (i.e., trafficking drugs, laundering money, engaging in surveillance of American citizens in New England/Massachusetts), specific congressional guidelines for FEMA, and the specific finding of where the funds came from to originate FEMA is reasonable.

[Later on:]

- That, pursuant to a Civil Rights claim, 42 USC, 1983, the Plaintiff alleges the Defendants CIA and George Bush did intentionally engage in the complained of conduct herein to conceal:

(1) the origins of FEMA, and that profits from drug trafficking by the CIA were used in some part to originally fund FEMA, and the drafting of the FEMA infrastructure;

(2) the FEMA instituted and projected illegal line of succession to the Office of the President in the event of a National emergency;

(3) the lack of action to seek the congressional or judicial review of FEMA (see paragraph 60(b)(1)(2)(3)(4)(5)(6)(7);

(4) from the American public the role of FEMA as originally designed;

(5) that Defendant Bush never notified President William J. Clinton of the origins of FEMA; and their intentional conduct, which they concealed and covered-up from the Plaintiff until 1996, did cause the Plaintiff the injuries alleged herein.

[Later on:]

- That the Operation Watchtower cocaine continued to be brought into Mena, Arkansas, until 1989.

- That in 1990, the Plaintiff is put in touch with U.S. Army Retired Chief Warrant Officer Grade 4, (CW4), William H. McCoy, ex-CID, who immediately tells the Plaintiff the following:

(a) Retired U.S. Army Special Forces Colonel James "Bo" Gritz, overall Commander for all Special Forces Troops in Panama during the time period that Operation Watchtower took place, can and does confirm that Watchtower did take place, and has made a video to get the word out to the public;

(b) Investigative Reporter/Movie Producer/Director Barbara Wegler is investigating, and has confirmed through several high-placed contacts at The Pentagon off the record, that Operation Watchtower did take place, see the affidavit of Wegler at Exhibit 30-31;

[Returning, for a moment, to Rodney Stich's book Defrauding America: "Barbara Wegler died from unknown causes on March 5, 1995. Several weeks earlier I was in touch with her concerning her investigation of covert activities based upon information given to her by Bill Tyree. She was to provide me with information about what she found, but died before she could do this. Her interests included Operation Watchtower, CIA involvement in Jim Jones' Jonestown, and other activities.]

(c) McCoy can confirm that Operation Watchtower cocaine was being brought into Mena, Arkansas between 1982 and 1989;

(d) McCoy wants permission to speak to John Cummings on behalf of the Plaintiff, and the Plaintiff consents.

- That, the Plaintiff frequently called McCoy and, in 1993, McCoy tells the Plaintiff that a friend who was investigating the Mena, Arkansas CIA cocaine operation that originated through Operation Watchtower was killed on June 22, 1993, and the name of the friend was attorney Paul Wilsher, and the Coroner didn't make a ruling on the cause of death.

[Later on:]

- That, in the aftermath of the death of

Barbara Wegler, William McCoy told the Plaintiff the following:

(a) the following died after they learned first-hand of the CIA cocaine operation at Mena, Arkansas: Stanley Huggins, Kevin Ives, Donald Henry, Keith McCaskell, Greg Collins, Jeff Rhodes, and Richard Winters;

(b) "No matter what happens, if I die and you're not sure what I died from, have my family get an independent medical examiner to check me out. Be sure. Give me your word."

- That in 1995, Colonel Wilson notified the Plaintiff that Colonel Beckwith had died of natural causes.

[Later on:]

- That in 1997, CW4 William H. McCoy is found dead in his home in Fairfax, Virginia, and is immediately cremated before the medical examiner can determine the cause of his death.

[Later on, quoting what Colonel Carone told the Plaintiff:]

- Anyone who wants to can look at the language of E.O. #12333 and tell it violates the intent of 50 USC, 403(d)(1)(2)(3)(1947), not to mention the Boland Amendment, as the records from CIA, NSC, and the U.S. Military will show that E.O. #12333 created the profits from the drug flow, and the Army from the drug profits to field the covert operations that is being used to overthrow the Nicaraguan communist government;

- You had NSC staffers that were tied right into the drug trafficking themselves, like Ollie North. Hell, his diary has everything in it. Between his diary and your wife's diary, the whole thing is blown. Totally compromised;

- I remember seeing him write over 200 entries in his diary that related to major drug profits being used to buy weapons for the Contras;

- The diary of Ollie North alone would prove what I've told you and show the violation of 50 USC, 403, and everything.

[Later on, still quoting what Colonel Carone told Plaintiff:]

- He told the Plaintiff that the CIA directly or indirectly controlled BCCI, BCP, BNL, and Intermeritime Bank, through Casey to Rappaport, then from Rappaport to Aldred Hartman;

- He told the Plaintiff that the CIA used BCCI, BNL, BCP, and Intermeritime Bank to launder money for Black Operations worldwide, and for the Mafia in New York City, New York.

[Later on, still quoting what Colonel Carone told Plaintiff:]

- Among the variety of illegal Operations spoken of by Colonel Carone, the Plaintiff remembers the following Operations that brought illegal drugs into the United States at Mena, Arkansas: Operation Watchtower; Operation Sea Spray; Operation Yellow Fruit; Operation Tipped Kettle I, and Tipped Kettle II; The Omni Project; Operation Pegasus I through 28; Operation Short Flight; Operation Burma Road; Operation Morning Gold; Operation Triangle; Operation Snow Cone.

[Later on:]

That Colonel Carone told the Plaintiff:

- and further: Berry Seal and Eugene Hasenfus are among the examples of the third party cut-outs used by the CIA under Executive Order #12333 to traffick drugs into the United States.

[Colonel Carone statements, later on:]

- The blame of the fall of the American culture began with the creation of National Security Memorandum 200, which stated, among other things, the concern of over-population in the United States which many at the CIA attributed to the birth rate among people of color;

- Colonel Carone said that there were some at CIA that felt physical slavery could be replaced by pharmaceutical slavery and that's why African-American gangs (i.e., "Bloods" and "Crips") were singled out for distributing the drugs brought into the United States by the CIA.

[Later on:]

- That Colonel Carone said that he had worked with Green Berets assigned to Covert-Black Operations Teams (Operational Detachment Alphas—ODAs), ODA-182, and ODA-184 assigned to the 20th SFG(A), within the United States.

- That Colonel Carone further told the Plaintiff Colonel Ollie North worked on developing a plan known as FEMA, which would, in an ill-defined national emergency, allow the U.S. Military to take control of the United States to ensure National Security;

- Colonel Carone said "FEMA" originally stood for "Federal Emergency Military Action" (i.e., Martial Law), but was retitled Federal Emergency Management Agency because it would be better received by the people of the United States;

- Colonel Carone said that if you checked all the assets retained by FEMA, since it's origination, that you would find two things:

- (1) a non-government influence literally has the final word regarding what FEMA does;

- (2) unusual funding for its origination in the early 1980s;

- Colonel Carone said he took drug profits that were clean and laundered in 1982-1984, to the following:

- (1) NSC-Colonel Oliver North who used the funds to create and develop FEMA;

- (2) the U.S. Military entities at paragraph 189(h)(i)(j), which are tied into FEMA;

- Colonel Carone said the FEMA chain of command rules and regulations, that he had seen, violated the U.S. Constitution, and actually established a succession to the Office of the President in the event of an emergency that circumvented the Vice-President and

Speaker of the House of Representatives;

- The New York Times, dated November 18, 1991, published a story that did support what Colonel Carone had told the Plaintiff about FEMA;

- The New York Times, 11/18/91, said in part: "acting outside the Constitution in the early 1980s, a secret federal agency established a line of succession to the president to assure continued government in the event of a devastating nuclear attack, current and former United States officials said today."

- The secret federal agency referred to by the New York Times article of 11/18/91 was, in fact, FEMA in it's original state.

That, Colonel Carone told the Plaintiff:

- FEMA was one of those off the shelf creations that was funded through the giant black operations fund which came about from drug trafficking operations instituted by the CIA, which Congress has no idea of, and no control over;

- FEMA was instituted while the Reagan Administration was in The White House;

- The FEMA established line of succession to the President of the United States in a national emergency is not the succession line supported by the United States Constitution, and is in violation of the Constitution;

- In 1982, FEMA Director Louis Giuffrida issued a Classified Memo and made one hell of a statement in it, and I'll tell you exactly what it said: "Over the long term, the peacetime action programs and agencies have the effect of making the conceivable need for military takeover less and less as time goes by. A fully implemented civil defense program may not now be regarded as a substitute for martial law, nor could it be so marketed, but if successful in its execution, it could have that effect."

- Colonel Carone said that, in 1984, Attorney General William French Smith wrote the NSC Chairman Robert McFarland, and said:

"I believe the role assigned to the Federal Emergency Management Agency in the revised Executive Order exceeds its proper function as a coordinating agency for emergency preparedness.... This department and others have repeatedly raised serious policy and legal objections to the creation of an 'emergency czar' role for FEMA."

- Colonel Carone said that FEMA was based in large part on the 1968 and 1972 California National Guard Operation Cable Splice, which did use elements of the U.S. Sixth Army and did relate totally to martial law.

- Colonel Carone said Operation Cable Splice involved Louis Giuffrida, head of Reagan's California National Guard Specialized Training Institute, and Edwin Meese, who would be Reagan's Executive Secretary.

- Colonel Carone said the NSC used drug trafficking profits to start FEMA without congressional approval, which he said was very terrifying when you stopped to think about the language in a 1981 NSC Directive written by Frank Carlucci; hold on, here it is, word for word, judge for yourself:

"Normally a state of martial law will be proclaimed by the President. However, in the absence of such action by the President, a senior military commander may impose martial law in an area of his command where there had been a complete breakdown in the exercise of government functions by local authorities."

- Colonel Carone said a literal interpretation of the 1981 NSC Directive was that a local-yokal national guard commander could institute martial law, and the actions of FEMA, without local citizens ever knowing how FEMA came to be, or what FEMA was originally intended to be about, would automatically be triggered without any type of presidential order. All of this without Congress ever having any say, and the American people are prisoners in their own country. Hell, Congress doesn't even have the purse strings on this one. It's all from the Black Operations Fund which Congress will never force the U.S. Intelligence Community to admit even exists.

- Colonel Carone said that the Presidential Decision Directives on FEMA is what you have to look out for.

- That Presidential Decision Directive, PDD-36 [This must be a mis-type—PDD-39 appears to be the one he's referring to. More on this later in the article.] is an outline for critical infrastructure protection which specifically assigned FEMA the task of continuity of government services, the precise term, and language used in previous plans for what Colonel Carone termed the anti-constitutional take-over of the U.S. Government in a time of national emergency.

[End quoting from Tyree's lawsuit.]

Now let's contrast what was said above about the all-intrusive, covert agenda, completely subversive nature of FEMA with FEMA's own public relations verbiage. Needless to say, there is somewhat of a contrast to be reckoned with, especially with respect to FEMA's history and reason for being! Remember that Clinton raised Mr. Witt's position to that of his Cabinet several years ago. Now there is an Executive Director under Mr. Witt, a Black woman who, considering what disrespectful things have been said in the earlier "secret" FEMA commentaries about Blacks and Hispanics, causes one to wonder just how much of token, figurehead position was this creation.

FEMA ON FEMA

[Quoting directly from FEMA's Internet

website material:]

DISASTER. It strikes anytime, anywhere. It takes many forms—a hurricane, an earthquake, a tornado, a flood, a fire, or a hazardous spill, an act of Nature or an act of terrorism. It builds over days or weeks, or hits suddenly, without warning. Every year, millions of Americans face disaster, and its terrifying consequences.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency—FEMA—is an independent agency of the federal government, reporting to the President. Since its founding in 1979, FEMA's mission has been clear:

To reduce loss of life and property and protect our nation's critical infrastructure from all types of hazards through a comprehensive, risk-based, emergency management program of mitigation, preparedness, response, and recovery.

FEMA'S HISTORY

The Federal Emergency Management Agency—an independent agency reporting to the President and tasked with responding to, planning for, recovering from, and mitigating against disaster—can trace its beginnings to the Congressional Act of 1803. This act, generally considered the first piece of disaster legislation, provided assistance to a New Hampshire town following an extensive fire. In the century that followed, ad hoc legislation was passed more than 100 times in response to hurricanes, earthquakes, floods, and other natural disasters.

By the 1930s, when the federal approach to problems became popular, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was given authority to make disaster loans for repair and reconstruction of certain public facilities following an earthquake, and later, other types of disasters. In 1934, the Bureau of Public Roads was given authority to provide funding for highways and bridges damaged by natural disasters. The Flood Control Act, which gave the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers greater authority to implement flood control projects, was also passed. This piecemeal approach to disaster assistance was problematic and it prompted legislation that required greater cooperation between federal agencies and authorized the President to coordinate these activities.

The 1960s and early 1970s brought massive disasters requiring major federal response and recovery operations by the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration, established within the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). Hurricane Carla struck in 1962, Hurricane Betsy in 1965, Hurricane Camille in 1969, and Hurricane Agnes in 1972. The Alaskan Earthquake hit in 1964, and the San Fernando Earthquake rocked Southern California in 1971. These events served to focus attention on the issue of natural disasters and brought about increased legislation. In 1968, the National Flood Insurance Act offered new flood protection to homeowners, and in 1974 the Disaster Relief Act firmly established the process of Presidential disaster declarations.

However, emergency and disaster activities were still fragmented. When hazards associated with nuclear power plants and the transportation of hazardous substances were added to natural disasters, more than 100 federal agencies were involved in some aspect of disasters, hazards, and emergencies. Many parallel programs and policies existed at the state and local level, compounding the complexity of federal disaster relief efforts. The National Governor's Association sought to decrease the many agencies with whom state and local governments were forced work. They asked President Jimmy Carter to centralize federal emergency functions.

President Carter's 1979 executive order merged many of the separate disaster-related responsibilities into a new Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). Among other agencies, FEMA absorbed: the Federal Insurance Administration, the National Fire Prevention and Control Administration, the National Weather Service Community Preparedness Program, the Federal Preparedness Agency of the General Services Administration, and the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration activities from HUD. Civil defense responsibilities were also transferred to the new agency from the Defense Department's Defense Civil Preparedness Agency.

John Macy was named as FEMA's first director. Macy emphasized the similarities between natural hazards preparedness and the civil defense activities. FEMA began development of an Integrated Emergency Management System with an all-hazards approach that included "direction, control, and warning systems which are common to the full range of emergencies, from small isolated events to the ultimate emergency—war."

The new agency was faced with many unusual challenges in its first few years that emphasized how complex emergency management can be. Early disasters and emergencies included the contamination of Love Canal, the Cuban refugee crisis, and the accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant. Later, the Loma Prieta Earthquake in 1989 and Hurricane Andrew in 1992 focused major national attention on FEMA. In 1993, President Clinton nominated James L. Witt as the new FEMA director. Witt became the first agency director with experience as a state emergency manager. He initiated sweeping reforms that streamlined disaster relief and recovery operations, insisted on a new emphasis regarding preparedness and mitigation, and focused agency employees on customer service. The end of the Cold War also allowed Witt to redirect more of FEMA's limited resources from civil defense into disaster relief, recovery, and mitigation programs.

Witt's plans were put to the test by the Great Midwest Flood of 1993 and California's massive Northridge Earthquake in January, 1994. The agency's transformation was recognized as an integral part of the Clinton Administration's efforts to reinvent government, and in 1995 President Clinton recognized the agency's accomplishments in his State of the Union address.

Today, FEMA—a 2,500-person agency supplemented by over 5,000 stand-by disaster reservists—has a mission to provide leadership and support, reduce the loss of life and property, and protect the nation from all types of hazards. FEMA provides preparedness and response and recovery support to the nation and, through Project Impact, provides leadership in preventing and reducing risk before disaster strikes. Initiated in October 1997, Project Impact focuses on creating disaster-resistant communities in all 50 states, Washington, D.C., and Puerto Rico. By taking action before disaster strikes, FEMA hopes to reduce the amount of federal money spent on picking up the pieces after a disaster—and hopes to reduce the risks for property loss and loss of life that every state faces. FEMA'S DIRECTORS

Gordon Vickery (April 1979 - July 1979); Thomas Casey (July 1979); John Macy (August 1979 - January 1981); Bernard Gallagher (January 1981 - April 1981); John W. McConnell (April 1981 - May 1981); Louis O. Giuffrida (May 1981 - September 1985); Robert H. Morris (September 1985 - November 1985); Julius W. Becton, Jr. (November 1985 - June 1989); Robert H. Morris (June 1989 - May 1990); Jerry D. Jennings (May 1990 - August 1990); Wallace E. Stickney (August 1990 - January 1993); William C. Tidball (January 1993 - April 1993); James L. Witt (April 1993 - Present).

JAMES LEE WITT, DIRECTOR—FEMA

James Lee Witt was appointed by President Clinton and confirmed by the U.S. Senate as Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency in April 1993. He was the first agency head who came to the position with experience in emergency management, having previously served as the Director of the Arkansas Office of Emergency Services for four years.

As FEMA Director, Mr. Witt coordinates federal disaster relief on behalf of President Clinton, including the response and recovery activities of 28 federal agencies and departments, the American Red Cross and other voluntary agencies. He also oversees the National Flood Insurance Program, the U.S. Fire Administration and other pro-active mitigation activities that reduce loss of life and property from all types of hazards. Mr. Witt oversees 2,500 employees located in Washington, D.C. and 10 regional offices. In 1997, Mr. Witt started Project Impact, a national initiative to help build disaster resistant communities through education, mitigation, and public and private partnerships.

Since taking office, Mr. Witt has led FEMA through more than 348 Presidentially declared disasters in some 6,521 counties in all 50 states and territories, including the most costly flood disaster in the nation's history, the most costly earthquake, and a dozen damaging hurricanes. He reorganized FEMA into a pro-active customer-focused agency recognized by President Clinton and Vice President Gore as a model for successful government. The agency has received increasing public accolades and specific honors in recent years, including, in 1996, the Innovations in American Government award from the John F. Kennedy School of Government, at Harvard University.

In February 1996, President Clinton elevated Mr. Witt to Cabinet status—a first for a FEMA Director.

Mr. Witt's professional career includes the formation of Witt Construction, a commercial and residential building company. After 12 years as a successful businessman and community leader, he was elected County Judge for Yell County, serving as the chief elected official for the county, with judicial responsibilities for county and juvenile court. At age 34, he was the youngest elected official in Arkansas, and was later honored for his accomplishments by the National Association of Counties. After being re-elected six times to the position, Mr. Witt was tapped by then-Governor Bill Clinton to assume leadership of the Arkansas Office of Emergency Services.

A native of Arkansas, Mr. Witt has been nationally recognized for his work in emergency management, environmental health, earthquake mitigation, and veterans affairs. He was charter Board Chairman of Child Development Incorporated, an organization dedicated to advancing Head Start programs for children. (Updated: May 28, 1998)

LYNN GILMORE CANTON, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR—FEMA

Lynn Gilmore Canton was appointed Executive Director for FEMA in June 2000. In this new position, she is responsible for overseeing the agency's personnel and management issues, employee development diversity, labor partnership and strategic planning. Prior to this appointment, Ms. Canton was Regional Director of FEMA's Region 2. In that position, she coordinated mitigation, preparedness, and disaster response and recovery activities in: New Jersey, New York, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Prior to joining FEMA, Ms. Canton served as Executive Director of the Division of Minority and Women's Business Development for the Department of Economic Development of New York State. While in that post, Ms. Canton also served as chair of the New York State Affirmative Action Advisory Council and of the Task Force on the Status of Women in the New York State Department of Economic Development. Earlier in her career, Ms. Canton served as a member of the New York State Board of Parole and worked for the State Division for Youth, the Executive Chamber, and the Division of Budget.

Ms. Canton has taught college and graduate level courses at the State University of New York at Albany in the Women's Studies Department and the Center for Women in Government. She is a member of the National Emergency Management Association and the State Association of Public Administrators.

A native of Buffalo, New York, she holds a B.A. in African American studies and an M.S. in Education from the State University of New York at Albany. (Updated: July 28, 2000)

FEMA'S BUDGET

- In fiscal year 1998, FEMA asked Congress for $3.2 billion dollars.
- In fiscal year 1999, FEMA asked Congress for $3.1 billion dollars.
- In fiscal year 2000, FEMA asked Congress for $3.4 billion dollars.
- In fiscal year 2001, FEMA asked Congress for $3.6 billion dollars.

So there you have it—the “Jekyll” and “Hyde” sides of FEMA.

If you believe the public relations version of FEMA, then we have a customer-oriented service organization, something like a multi-faceted, high-powered Red Cross. If you suspect something not so nice is going on with FEMA beneath the altruistic façade—something all ready and just waiting for the right “national emergency” to be declared to suspend our Constitution and bring martial law down upon us—then you're ready for the next part of this investigation.

SHIFTING ATTENTION TO THE PRESENT

With all of the contrasting information presented to this point on FEMA as background, let's now turn our attention to the present moment in time and some revealing legislative preparations going on right now to “welcome” FEMA in many towns across the country. The following article is by Don Harkins and appeared in the August, 2000 edition of The Idaho Observer; it is reprinted here with permission:

[quoting]

MARTIAL LAW IS COMING TO THE FOLLOWING COMMUNITIES

If it was coming to yours, how would you know unless you looked?

I am going to be frank. I was disappointed in the response we received in our call to readers of the SPOTLIGHT and The Idaho Observer to determine the status of “emergency powers” among public officials at the city and county level. It is outrageous that conspiracy “theorists” would gripe about the coming New World Order and await some overt and inevitable sign that it has arrived, and not spend an hour in county or municipal code to find out if their elected leaders had passed ordinances locally which provide the infrastructure for our national occupation, one town and one county at a time.

If we, as informed Americans, do not draw our countrymen a map of our pending occupation by despotic forces, we are going to lose what was once the greatest nation the world has ever seen. What is worse, if we do not take responsibility for the freedom of our children and the freedom of our countrymen by spending an hour at city hall or the county courthouse, then we, as a people, deserve to have our freedom taken away.

The passage of emergency powers ordinances in most cases places an unelected bureaucrat in control of all municipal functions in the event of a declared state of emergency. They are being passed all over the country at city, county, and state levels. They are being passed in conjunction and in cooperation with federal emergency provisions that will be administrated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

In a declared state of emergency, your unelected city manager (or the police chief, the sheriff, the fire chief) assume the power to ration food and water, ration power and utilities, create roadblocks, and enforce curfews. This emergency “czar” will be the point-man for communications with FEMA which, under a variety of laws and executive orders, will have the authority to control everything from commerce and trade to the food and other provisions you have stored for your family in case of an emergency.

While we stupidly await a stock market crash or a world war or a disease pandemic to justify a federal declaration of martial law in response to a national emergency, we are paying “our” duplicitous local leaders to pass laws and ordinances that will make it easy for the kleptocrats to take control of the activities and resources of our nation.

Believe me, I know how dark it is out there. There is nearly no hope left that we can see in our lifetimes a peaceful return to our birthright of freedom and self responsibility. But what are we going to do—give up? Are we going to complain until such utterances mean a rope or a firing squad? Are we going to sit back as passive activists and hope that an active activist is able to turn the tide all by himself? Are we going to hope that our detractors were right and that we are really just a bunch of silly conspiracy “theorists” and that this is all a bad dream and that everything is just fine?

Or are we going to do our small part to make a big noise?

I am trading the productive years of my life to work with principled men and women who believe that all men are equal in their rights to pursue life, liberty, and happiness. I refuse to give up.

These emergency powers ordinances are easy to find in county or municipal code. They are usually found in a chapter for public health and safety. If you are nice, county and city clerks are usually very accommodating and will help you find the city or county emergency powers ordinance. The process will take less than an hour. If you have access to the Internet, you may find your city or county code to be on-line. Get a copy of the ordinance and send it to The Idaho Observer, P.O. Box 457, Spirit Lake, Idaho 83869.

There are over 3,000 counties in the U.S. We have about 3,000 counties to go. Help me to draw your countrymen a map.

Is FEMA usurping state constitutional authority through the use of legislation at a city or county level? The story you just read should answer that question.

In speaking with a well-informed source in Indiana, I’ve been told that the “Federal Regional Agency” LEAA, which stands for Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, was the precursor to FEMA.

FEMA & COUNTY GOVERNMENTS

Is FEMA slowly and methodically making in-roads throughout the nation, quietly, in the hopes that no one will notice the gradual “take-over”? How does FEMA go about their work with the counties? I’m told there is an excellent book which clearly outlined this take-over plan. The name of the book is Rockefeller Regionalism—The Shadow Behind Oregon’s LC/DC, by Joe Spenner. While I have not received a copy of this book yet, I am merely passing that bit of information along for those of you wanting to explore this issue in greater depth.

In the meantime, turning now to an article obtained from the FEMA website, we can see one way they make inroads with local government officials:

[quoting]

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COUNTIES AND FEMA ANNOUNCE LOCAL COUNTY OFFICIALS AWARDS

Washington, D.C., July 27, 2000 — The National Association of Counties (NACo) and the Federal Emergency Management Agency have introduced a new awards program for elected county officials. At NACo’s 65th Annual Conference, which was held in Mecklenburg County (Charlotte), N.C., July 14-18. FEMA Director James Lee Witt addressed conference attendees, speaking on the importance of proactive disaster prevention and the key role of elected county officials in building disaster-resistant communities.

“Leaders are assessing their community’s risks from disasters and developing ways to address them. These solutions directly contribute to the growth and sustainability of their community as a whole” said Director Witt. “I believe it is important to recognize the achievements and commitment of local elected officials who have taken steps to make their communities disaster resistant.”

The Building Disaster Resistant Communities Leadership Awards are presented to elected county officials who have demonstrated outstanding leadership in the area of disaster prevention and mitigation. Award winners are recognized for implementing effective programs that have resulted in a more sustainable, long-term quality of life for their county’s citizens. State Associations of Counties play an important role in identifying elected county officials to commend.

- There are five award categories:
- Building Code Enforcement
 - Innovative Floodplain Management
 - Innovation in Disaster Resistant Growth
 - Community Outreach and Risk Education
 - Comprehensive Mitigation Planning.

One local elected county official per state will be recognized at the NACo Legislative Conference in February 2001. National awards in each of the five categories listed above will be presented during NACo’s 2001 Annual Conference in Philadelphia.

“This award is for individuals who take a stand in the name of saving lives” said C. Vernon Gray, NACo Immediate Past President. “That’s what proactive prevention is all about—saving lives and livelihoods.”

During Director Witt’s address to the NACo conference, he kicked off the awards program by presenting the first Building Disaster Resistant Communities Leadership Award to Gray.

Over the past several years, NACo and FEMA have worked as partners to help America’s communities become more disaster resistant. The new Building Disaster Resistant Communities Leadership Awards program is the latest in a series of joint efforts to highlight the importance of disaster prevention.

To find out more about The Building Disaster Resistant Communities Leadership Awards you can call FEMA’s Office of Intergovernmental Affairs at 202-646-4515 or send an email to IGA@fema.gov. (Updated: August 17, 2000)

Another announcement (holding out a carrot?) on the FEMA website promotes something mysteriously referred to as Project Impact Summit 2000—whatever that is. Notice, again, exactly who is targeted for this particular “pep rally” to promote the FEMA team:

[Quoting]

PROJECT IMPACT SUMMIT 2000

Celebrate what Project Impact has accomplished and share wisdom for what’s yet to be done to ensure that your community is disaster resistant.

When: Week of November 12, 2000 at the Marriott Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D.C.

Who should attend? Chambers of Commerce; Elected Officials; City Managers and County Administrators; Community Risk Managers; Infrastructure Officials; Building Code Officials; Fire Service Personnel; Economic Development Officials; Environmental Officials; Small and Large Business Representatives; Community-Based and Volunteer Organizations; Teachers and Educators, grades K through College; Media Partners; Project Impact Community Coordinators; Local Emergency Managers; State Emergency Managers.

More specific details available soon.
[End quoting]

So, at this point, with an array of incentives in place to entice local government bureaucrats to welcome FEMA with open arms, all that’s left to do is to create some kind of big emergency (or series of emergencies) to begin the quiet takeover operation of this country—right before our eyes.

Now, just what might such an emergency (or series of emergencies) be? Let’s turn our attention now to a matter of great concern to many people at the present time—namely, the large array of wildfires which seem to be at a mysteriously high level this year.

Let’s see what the FEMA website has to offer:

DISASTER DECLARATIONS
IN THE YEAR 2000

Taking a close look at the FEMA Disaster Activity for the year 2000, there have been “Major Disaster Declarations” in the following states: Kentucky, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Alaska, Alabama, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Texas, Maryland, Washington, D.C., Maine, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, South Dakota, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, New York, Vermont, and most recently, Montana.

EMERGENCY DECLARATIONS
IN THE YEAR 2000

New Mexico declared an emergency based on fire this year.

FIRE SUPPRESSION
AUTHORIZATIONS IN THE YEAR 2000

The following states have had “Fire Suppression Authorizations” issued this year: Texas, Missouri, Hawaii, Florida, New Mexico, Colorado, Washington, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, and South Dakota.

WILDFIRES

The wildfire statistics charts, on pages 37 and 38, were obtained at the www.nifc.gov/fireinfo/nfnmap.html Internet website. They show the cumulative damage picture, both over years and over geographic areas.

Curiously, when reviewing the wildfire statistics at the www.nifc.gov/stats/wildlandforeststats.html Internet website, one can’t help but notice that the total fire acreage for 1999 is listed as 5,661,976 (as opposed to the 3,945,636 listed above in the line for 1999). Only supposition will suffice as to an explanation for such a wide discrepancy.

Nonetheless, it is pretty obvious that Idaho has been the hardest hit by fire this year, with 1,043,934 acres burned. There will be more to report about Idaho and Montana later in this article—where the story gets really bizarre and suspicious.

FEMA’s involvement with wildfires includes, in their own words:

U.S. FIRE
ADMINISTRATION

“The U.S. Fire Administration is an entity of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The mission of the USFA is to reduce life and economic losses due to fire and related emergencies, through leadership, advocacy, coordination, and support.”

Their slogan is: “Working for a fire-safe America.”

MULTI-AGENCY CO-OPERATION

The National Interagency Fire Center is a clearinghouse for wildfire news and agency coordination. They produce something referred to as National Interagency Coordination Center (NICC) Reports. The agencies involved constitute a literal alphabet soup:

BLM (Bureau of Land Management), BIA (Bureau of Indian Affairs), FWS (National Park Service), USFS (United States Forest Service), NOAA (National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, OAS (Office of Aircraft Services), and NASF (National Association of State Forestry).

On page 35 is a graphic from the www.nifc.gov/ Internet website showing the eight agency logos (arm patches) and suggesting the high degree of “cooperation” which has been quietly put into place should such become necessary in a designated “emergency” situation.

GEMS

And then, of course, there’s GEMS, the Global Emergency Management System. Never heard of them? You’re not alone. GEMS also coordinates with all fire-fighting agencies. It is an international entity. GEMS is documented on the FEMA website—and that comes as no surprise at this point.

WILDFIRE CHART

The best source I’ve found for current statistics on wildfires throughout the country is the www.nifc.gov/information.html Internet website. Below is a recent map from that resource to help show the extent of the destruction raging mostly in the Western United States. To set the tone for what we are about to investigate, we’ll also look at some recent headlines and news briefs.

DANGER ZONES

On the Backgrounder: Wildland Fires section of FEMA’s Internet website, there is a section called “Danger Zones”. Here’s what is says:

“Danger zones include all wooded, brush, and grassy areas—especially those in Kansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, the Carolinas, Tennessee, California, Massachusetts, and the national forests of the western United States.”

CURRENT FIRE HEADLINES

Let’s take a look at some recent fire-related headlines:

KEY STATEMENTS IN RECENT WILDFIRE STORIES

There have been many stories on the news lately concerning the wildfires in the western United States. Here are a few “key” statements contained within some of those wildfire stories which actually aired or were printed.

• From CNN World Today, aired August 14, 2000:

“Right now, 82 fires are burning across 13 states, with about two-thirds of those in Montana and Idaho. One of the most dangerous fires is in central Idaho. The 33,000-acre blaze, now burning into its second month, is only 40% contained and heading directly towards the town of Salmon....

“Count Gary and Jackie England among those voices. They own a small saw mill in this region, but it’s closed while they help construct the Salmon fire line. They say federal forest-use policies have shut down most of the logging around here, allowing the forest to thicken and become a tinderbox....

“When you get this kind of a fuel and you get this growth, it’s mature to burn. And if we don’t manage the forest, it’s going to manage us.”

• From CNN World Today, August 15, 2000:

“Houses belonging to 600 people evacuated are still threatened. To the north, 200 evacuees got the green light to return home.”

• From CNN World Today, August 16, 2000:

“Hamilton, Montana — As 25 large, smoky wildfires burned in Montana, the governor Wednesday declared the entire state a disaster area and authorities issued a new evacuation order in southwest Montana’s Bitterroot Valley.

“Neighboring Idaho had nearly as many wildfires—23—and throughout the West the number hit 86, a new single-day record....

“More than 1 million acres (1,562 square miles) of forest, brush, and grass have been blackened by the 86 large wildland fires burning in 12 western states, according to the federal government’s National Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho....

“The 67,088 wildfires in the United States this year have consumed 4,970,445 acres (7,766 square miles), an area larger than the state of New Jersey....

“Montana Gov. Marc Racicot issued an Executive Order effective at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday declaring a disaster for the entire state, where over 400,000 acres (625 square miles) have burned so far this year.

“The order allows use of the National Guard anywhere in the state. Previous orders by Racicot allowed use of guard units only in specified areas.

“The latest Bitterroot Valley evacuations were in a large area some 50 miles south of Hamilton, almost in Idaho, and covered about 100 homes, said Jim Chinn of the Ravalli County Sheriff’s Department.

“While residents of some 900 houses have been allowed to return home, hundreds of others remained out of their homes for a second week as fires burned on....

“In Idaho, helicopters continued pounding the southern bank of the main Salmon River with water Tuesday as officials decided the danger was too great to keep open the popular rafting river and the 2.4 million-acre (3,750 square mile) Frank Church/River Of No Return Wilderness.

“Water drops and sparse fuel for the fire on the river’s southern bank have kept one major wildfire from jumping north into the wilderness. But Forest Service supervisors said other fires were burning unchecked over 182,000 acres (284 square miles) in the protected area.

“In the past six weeks, fires have blackened over 55,000 acres (859 square miles) of Idaho forest and range....

“Elsewhere, 55 people had been evacuated from the southern Black Hills, south of Hot Springs, South Dakota, where a 7,000-acre (11 square-mile) blaze was 60 percent contained....

“In Alaska, the National Weather Service on Tuesday issued a “red flag warning”, its most severe fire warning, for the Kenai Peninsula and Kodiak Island.”

• From CNN World Today, August 18, 2000:

“An update now on the wildfires burning in the West: the million-acre disaster dominates Idaho and Montana. In Montana’s Bitterroot Valley, the spreading blazes have left behind 242,000 blackened acres.”

• From CNN World Today, August 21, 2000:

“The wildfires are concentrated now mostly heat and smoke as high as six miles into the sky. The heat encounters cooler air, producing a cloud. The cloud generates only a little localized rain, but lots of what is commonly called ‘dry lightning’.

“[Bay Johnson, U.S. Forest Service:] In other words, it may be raining here, and the bolt would shoot out five miles from where the rain is to the ground where there is no rain. And we see a lot of that this year in the West.

“[George:] A bolt of lightning is about as wide as a human finger. Negatively charged lightning, the most common kind in thunderstorms, lasts about 41 microseconds—41 millionths of a second. But almost every positively-charged bolt, the kind most often associated with dry lightning, last longer, up to a full half a second, zapping the ground with a 30,000-degree burst of what scientists call ‘continuing current’.”

• From CNN World Today, August 22, 2000:

“So far this year, flames have consumed more than 5½ million acres. That is an area larger than Massachusetts....

“Some experts say this summer’s firestorms are a result of conflicting policies....

“[Charles Zewe, CNN Correspondent:] Wildfires, the people who fight them say, are bigger, hotter, and more devastating than ever....

“[Dave Campbell, District Ranger, U.S. Forest Service:] We’re seeing fire intensities that we haven’t seen before....

“[Zewe:] For nearly a century, government policy has been to put out all fires. Critics contend that’s allowed flammable brush, dead trees, and other fuels to pile up waist-deep in some forests. The Clinton administration is now drafting a new, $12 billion fire policy to thin high-risk national forests by mechanical means, or by using fire itself.

“Dave Campbell is the district ranger in the remote Selway/Bitterroot Wilderness straddling the Montana-Idaho border. For 28 years, wildfires here have been allowed to burn themselves out, provided they don’t threaten people or property.

“[Campbell:] There have been a number of fires that now have mitigated the effects of the fires this year because the current year’s fires are running into these old burns.”

• From CNN World Today, August 25, 2000:

“Firefighters brace for worst wildfires yet in Montana. Other states braced Friday for one of their toughest days yet, smelling fresh smoke in the air as dawn broke above Montana’s fire-ravaged Bitterroot Valley.

in Montana and Idaho, where more than 50 large fires burn....

“Thirty major fires have consumed more than 600,000 acres of wilderness in Montana alone....

“Many of the biggest fires in the West are in the Bitterroot Valley....

“Fire officials say there are too many fires and too few fire crews, forcing firefighters to choose between which fires they try to stop and which ones they have no choice but to let burn....

“Dry lightning is a common cause of wildfires, but did you know that the reverse is also true? David George tonight shows us how the fires themselves spark electrical storms.

“[David George:] In an exceptionally dry year like this one, Nature conspires to create a vicious cycle. Fires sparked by lightning generate their own weather, spawning more lightning, starting more fires.

“Here’s what happens: A big fire sends “Gusty winds, scorching temperatures, and lightning—which may have caused a new fire overnight in Montana—underscored the probability that blazes ravaging nearly 600,000 acres could grow worse.

“In parts of Montana, where some of the 25 major fires are burning, temperatures into the 90s and 40 mph winds were expected.

“And in Washington, a lightning-sparked brush fire grew to 35,000 acres Thursday and threatened 50 rural homes outside the town of Mabton. About 150 Yakima County residents were evacuated, as 200 firefighters battled the flames and looked forward to reinforcements to arrive Friday....

“Across the Northwest, morning temperatures have dropped, and there are other signs that Fall is drawing near. But the National Interagency Fire Center said the end of Summer does not signal an end to the fires.

“‘We just don’t see a real end in sight’ said E. Lynn Burkett, spokeswoman for the NIFC in Idaho.

“‘This time of year, what usually happens is we get monsoon weather in the Southern states, and it moves north, bringing rain’ she said. But that isn’t happening. Given Montana’s extraordinary dryness and the high risk that more fires will ignite, Gov. Marc Racicot this week doubled the amount of public land closed to recreation and other uses. An area roughly the size of Maine now has been declared off-limits, effective Friday.

“Fires this year have burned 5.7 million acres across the country, and the NIFC said 78 major fires are burning on 1.4 million acres. The fire season already is the worst in at least a half-century.”

ARMY TROOPS ENTER THE EQUATION

The following information bulletin is quoted directly from the National Fire Information Center. Pay particular attention to the news that is slipped quietly into the third paragraph below. After all, we have no reason to suspect anything other than the obvious help being supplied to overworked fire-fighting personnel—or do we?

“August 23, 2000 — Fewer new fires allowed firefighters to make steady progress on the active large fires burning in nine western states and Florida. There were, however, numerous lightning-caused fires reported in Arkansas, Texas, and Florida yesterday. Continued wildland fire activity in the southern states is requiring resources that would normally be available to the western states.

“Dry lightning, low relative humidity, and strong wind gusts are expected for southwest Wyoming and southwest Montana today. Warmer and drier temperatures will continue throughout the Northwest, with scattered wet and dry thunderstorms forecast for Idaho, eastern Nevada, Colorado, Utah,

H.A.A.R.P. AND THE IDAHO/MONTANA FIRES

Now we enter into the “Twilight Zone” and the more bizarre aspects of this investigative report. Remember that an emergency (or series of emergencies) of serious enough nature must precede any call for troop presence and martial law—if the public is going to accept such an action without question and even welcome FEMA’s methods with open arms.

The next logical question would be: “Well, might such a large-scale emergency be created artificially?” Of course the answer is in the affirmative.

But how do you make an artificial emergency look natural? The answer to that question generally lies in top-secret technologies—ones the public would not likely suspect even exist, and all the better if they could masquerade as Mother Nature.

Enter, stage left, H.A.A.R.P., the High-frequency Active Auroral Research Program. (For a review of the multi-faceted subject of HAARP, readers can refer back to last month’s edition of The SPECTRUM for an excellent summary that was titled Who Needs A Microwave Oven! Or, HAARP’s Covert Agendas: The Big Picture, by John A. Quinn.)

For some very good reasons, the question begging to be asked at this point is: “Might HAARP somehow be associated with the cause of the relentless rash of fires, especially in the Idaho and Montana regions?”

To begin to answer that question, consider the following for starters. Here’s what one “contact” had to report:

“We met some folks who live on this piece of property east of Sandpoint, Idaho that is adjacent to some REALLY weird fed activity. The stuff going in this particular area is all HAARP-related and the place is crawling with feds.

“All the roads are blocked off, and just in the past year, the area has no birds, and their chickens stay huddled-up in their pen as though they are afraid to venture outside their ‘secure’ space. The strange lights and electrical energy they are constantly exposed to has got these folks freaked out and justifiably paranoid.

“We decided to cruise up their road and check it all out. Everything they said was validated....”

Another contact in the northern Idaho area said:

“That’s what we’re dealing with up here, very likely, a major HAARP center. But all we have is speculation. There’s nothing to link the fires to HAARP. Some open questions come to mind, such as: Does HAARP maintain a capacity to set fires, with this type of technology, and/or create lightning storms? Now, there are people who I’ve met with here, and others have also, who testify that they have seen lightning bolts emanating from a facility up there.”

In another statement, this contact said:

“As a matter of fact, the security around this facility is intense. I mean, they’re got black helicopters and everything flying over there.”

When asked about the location of the facility, the response was that it is about 20 minutes from Sandpoint, Idaho.

In yet another statement, this same contact said:

“The animals around there are like they’re almost in a state of shock. The deer come walking right up to you, expect you to feed them. They don’t feed on their own. Very, very bizarre!”

Just the other day, I received a letter from a subscriber. In this letter he says he has spoken with a friend about HAARP, and this person lives in Puerto Rico. The contact in Puerto Rico made the statement that the reason for all the fires in Montana and Idaho is to get out all of the militia groups—“to squash them and their operations”.

That possibility certainly does come to mind as we watch the sometimes frantic, large-scale evacuations going on in that region.

EM/RF WEATHER CONTROL AND WESTERN FIRES

In another email I received titled: EM/RF Weather Control And Western Fires, written by John Quinn/NewsHawk, Inc., we read:

[quoting]

Joe describes a phenomena he observed in Montana, in which phone lines with no direct contact to the Earth or other materials like metal (structures), and not connected to any source of electrical power, were being powerfully charged-up with electrical energy. A number of others have noted this precise effect, and we have, as well, in Northern California and in Oregon.

There is, in fact, only one way this can happen—through electromagnetic induction via EM/RF transmissions. According to a HAARP consultant who has divulged other information to us, this phenomenon noted by Joe is a direct result of extremely high-powered HAARP transmissions targeting the western U.S.

To be sure, federal land management policies are to some degree a factor in what is happening to western forest lands right now: as Joe noted, the “let-it-burn” methods and recent reductions in firefighting crews, combining with excessive buildup of dead wood, along with the usual summer heat and dryness.

The main “reason” however is the massive, relentless and constant weather control manipulation being implemented by covert (and overt) factions of the federal government.

Readings taken over the past couple of days show that weather-modification EM/RF transmissions are being driven at previously-unrecorded high levels of power. These transmissions are being pumped at such high gain levels at this time that a clearly audible tone or “audio artifact” can actually be heard across much of the northwest coast of North America—somewhat similar, it seems, to the well-known “Taos [New Mexico] hum”.

Confidential sources have told NewsHawk that HAARP and other related technologies are being used to manifest a “virtual Venturi device” on a gigantic scale in the upper atmosphere. Science students will remember that a Venturi device can separate warmer air from cooler air and re-direct the different streams with great force. The whole deal is being further intensified by chemtrail spraying of weather modification substances.

This is one of the primary tactics currently being used in the tremendously extensive and severe “weather war” being waged by federal forces which is causing the Western wildfires to become so extremely destructive. Again, “more trees”, due to minor reductions in logging in some few areas, are a very minor element of this entire mix.

Other sources have suggested to NewsHawk that, contrary to a supposition we noted in an earlier article on this ever-more-crucial subject, one of the probable hidden agendas behind burning up vast tracts of forest lands is, in fact, to make these regions EASIER to develop for mass human habitation in the future.

The supposed reasoning behind this is that rising sea levels from the now-irrefutable and steadily-intensifying global warming will, within several years, destroy the habitat of a huge percentage of humanity—by submerging the coastal plains of North America and the rest of the world, whereupon such large percentages of the human race now reside.

These western forest lands are at an elevation and inland location which make them relatively safe from the rising sea levels engendered by global warming and, once “cleared” of forests, will be vastly easier to develop for mass human habitation.

Could this possible explanation of the agenda behind massive weather control operations be correct, and true? Unfortunately we cannot answer that question at this point.

[End quoting]

In a subsequent message and response to John Quinn, written by scientist Joe Bowling on August 16, we read the following interesting first-hand news:

[Quoting]

Subject: Electromagnetic energy and fires. Possible observation of an artificially produced electromagnetic phenomenon.

You mention electromagnetic energy being used in weather manipulation. I (and others) did note a phenomenon which can only be explained by electromagnetic energy, while working in Eastern Montana (Roosevelt County, to be specific).

A little background: I am a scientist (Geologist) with some background in physics and chemistry. I also have four years experience as a firefighter. I make my living by evaluating rock samples on an oil rig, while the well is being drilled. Small (domestic) oil companies help our national security. There have been no environmental disasters in the Williston Basin (the region I work in), or I'd be doing something different to earn my pay.

Be that as it may, I remember enough physics to know that the only way to get a shielded, four-conductor, outdoor phone line about 150 ft. long to charge up, like a capacitor, when it is disconnected from all potential power sources, is through electromagnetic induction. The phenomenon was noted when there was an arc from the shielding (while the phone line was connected) to a conductor terminal in a standard four-wire-to-modular connector junction box, such as those used in most houses.

Please note that the arcing produced a loud "snap"—loud enough to awaken me from a nap in a bunk at the other end of the mobile lab (noisy place), some 20 ft. away, while my partner was watching the gas detectors.

The wires were then disconnected from the phone line coming in from the pedestal; there was some concern about damaging the phone, which was hooked up. All four conductors, and the shielding, each subsequently obtained a sufficient charge to deliver an uncomfortable shock or arc about three centimeters to a ground.

This happened repeatedly: the conductors were discharged, could be handled without shock, and recharged within a minute or two to their previous charge level. The only voltmeter available was not functioning correctly, so no readings were obtained.

We (I was not alone in noting the phenomenon) even checked to make sure the jacket of the line was not worn through and in contact with any metal which may have been a source of power through bad grounding. That can happen on an oil rig, but was not the case.

The jacket's and conductors' individual insulations were intact. The center 75 feet remained suspended about 15 feet above ground, tied in place with dry, nonconductive material. The only possible, reasonable (?) explanation is that a thunderstorm some 5 to 10 miles south may have had some effect, but if other data show that there may be another cause, I would like to know about it. Call it scientific curiosity, if you will.

While I cannot wholly agree that the absence of limited clear-cutting is not a factor in the severity of the fires in the American west, I firmly believe that the stage has been carefully set by federal policy for the fires out West to be of the magnitude they are.

Decisions made at Cabinet level and above have caused fuel loads to be at record highs, firefighting infrastructure at a low, and some fires (like Los Alamos) have been the direct result of federal action. (They set that one.)

Unemployment will cause someone to leave a line of work, as those of us in the domestic oil industry know, and "let it burn" policies have reduced the job opportunities for career forest firefighters, and thus the number of experienced firefighters trained sufficiently to act in a supervisory capacity.

Rumor has it that dwellings have been burned after people have been evacuated on short notice, with none of their possessions or documents, as part of "backfire" areas. The list goes on, all in lockstep with an administration which deeply desires to remove people from the land as much as possible.

Please understand that this is not harassment, nor intended to be an aggravation. As a scientist, I just want to see the data for the last week of July, for eastern Montana, to try and find a correlation between the phenomenon which I and others observed and artificially produced electromagnetic energy.

[End quoting]

Clearly some strange phenomena are being observed in the same area as these wildfires are being generated. Let's next see what kind of mischief may be associated with HAARP.

HAARP & IONOSPHERIC HEATING

Turning, for a moment, to the monumental book which should be quite familiar (along with one of its authors) to readers of The SPECTRUM, called Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse, written by Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz and Dr. Joseph S. Puleo, we read:

[Quoting]

According to the descriptive abstract accompanying U.S. Patent number 4,686,605, HAARP's patent provides for:

"A method and apparatus for altering at least one selected region which normally exists above the Earth's surface. The region is excited by electron cyclotron resonance heating to thereby increase its charged particle density. In one embodiment, circularly-polarized electromagnetic radiation is transmitted upward in a direction substantially parallel to and along a field line which extends through the region of plasma to be altered. The radiation is transmitted at a frequency which excites electron cyclotron resonance to heat and accelerate the charged particles. This increase in energy can cause ionization of neutral particles, which are then absorbed as part of the region, thereby increasing the charged particle density of the region."

The HAARP patent, assigned to ARCO Power Technologies, Inc., a division of the Atlantic Richfield Oil Company, entitled "Method and Apparatus for Altering a Region in the Earth's Atmospheric, Ionosphere, and/or Magnetosphere" was claimed by inventor Bernard J. Eastlund to have several uses. According to Alaskan author Eric Nashlund, who broke the HAARP story in the Australian magazine Nexus, these uses include:

"...total disruption of communications over a large portion of the Earth..., disrupting not only land-based communications, but also airborne communications and sea communications (both surface and subsurface)..., missile or aircraft destruction, deflection, or confusion.... Weather modification...by altering solar absorption..., ozone, nitrogen, etc., concentrations could be artificially increased."

The patent's "prior art" section acknowledged the previous related inventions of inventor Nikola Tesla. His referenced articles had appeared during the late nineteenth and early twentieth century.

In the book Angels Don't Play This HAARP by authors Nick Begich and Jeane Manning, Tesla described the earliest applications of this technology in a feature story that appeared in the New York Times on December 8, 1915. It read:

"Nikola Tesla, the inventor, has filed patent applications on the essential parts of a machine, possibilities [of which] test a layman's imagination and promise a parallel of Thor's shooting thunderbolts from the sky to punish those who had angered the gods.... Suffice it to say that the invention will go through space with a speed of 300 miles a second, a manless ship without propelling engine or wings sent by electricity to any desired point on the globe on its errand of destruction, if destruction is what its manipulator wishes to effect.

"'It is not a time' said Dr. Tesla yesterday, 'to go into the details of this thing. It is founded upon a principle that means great things in peace; it can be used for great things in war. But I repeat, this is no time to talk of such things.'

“‘It is perfectly practicable to transmit electrical energy without wires and produce destructive effects at a distance. I have already constructed a wireless transmitter which makes this possible, and have described it in my technical publications, among which I refer to my patent number 1,119,732 recently granted. With transmitters of this kind we are enabled to project electrical energy in any amount to any distance and apply it for innumerable purposes, both in war and peace. Through the universal adoption of this system, ideal conditions for the maintenance of law and order will be realized, for then the energy necessary to the enforcement of right and justice will be normally productive, yet potential, and in any moment available, for attack and defense. The power transmitted need not be necessarily destructive, for if [people are] made to depend upon it, its withdrawal or supply will bring about the same results as those now accomplished by force of arms.’”

Though “heating” the atmosphere in the wake of a “global warming crisis” might seem inappropriate to everyone except Satan, the discrepancy might be reconciled with a background check on HAARP’s patent assignee. Few realize that the Atlantic Richfield Oil Company is closely linked to the British Royal Family, MI-6, the Committee of 300, NATO, and the Illuminati’s Club of Rome.

[Still quoting, further into the chapter:]

Specifically, the atmospheric electromagnetic technologies applied by HAARP and EISCAT could acutely, or over the long term, create massive population reduction—death and destruction from natural and man-made disasters—all justifying a “flexible” military presence....

[End quoting]

MONTANA FIRES ESCALATE

This just came in, from the August 28, 2000 installment of U.S. News from CNN:

“More than 2,000 military personnel are assisting in the fire fighting effort, with hundreds more due to be rotated into service within the next few weeks as other units are withdrawn.

“Among the new arrivals are 500 Army troops from Fort Campbell, Kentucky, who are scheduled to go on duty Monday, following a weekend of training in southwestern Montana.”

With the coming of these very-well-trained troops to the area, are we welcoming more fire fighters with open arms—or are we welcoming, in disguise, the presence of FEMA and the means for instant martial law?

Let’s move on to gaining some more first-person information.

INTERVIEW WITH DAVID

On August 17, 2000, I had a conversation with a man whom I will only refer to as David. The actual source must remain confidential and is quite credible. He lives in the area of Northern Idaho, and has some insightful things to say about HAARP, the fires, and some—well—let’s just call them theories, in general.

Martin: I’m doing a story on FEMA. It’s on the history of FEMA. The story I started to write was on the history of FEMA, but the story that I’m actually writing, as it turns out, is not only on the history of FEMA, but the wildfires out West. And, what is causing those. Is it HAARP? Is it a man-made, created emergency? Is it just Mother Nature? What’s going on?

David: Ok. Now, on FEMA—the only thing I get on FEMA is what I read and what I pick up. I was called by Trochman, and they have that treaty—the Heritage Treaty. If the fire or damage or flood moves through, then they can evacuate you, and through that treaty they can take your property. I got that from him.

Last week, on Thursday, I went to the concert in Sandpoint, Idaho, and I noticed that the lightning started, and it kept hitting in the same spot. And I said: “Now, when did you ever see lightning start, or generate, or hit twice in the same spot?”

And it was over and over. How it radiated out—and I had plotted it. The funny part about it is, it ended up somewhere around between Trestle Creek Road and Trout Creek Road, in the mountains on the way to Clark Fork. And that was the general area. I’m familiar with the area, and I had a vantage point from the field, watching the concert.

I said to my wife: “We better go. It’s in our area. It’s in our neighborhood.” That’s what I saw on our way home, following the highway, it points in that direction, toward East. And it kept emanating or striking from that area. And I said: “You know, that’s the oddest thing.” And then, of course, it would expand. It was the weirdest looking lightning I’ve ever seen.

Martin: Can you explain the lightning?

David: It kind of looked like a web effect, like an old cobweb, going out, where pieces are missing.

Martin: Like going out sideways, or?

David: Yeah, going sideways. It looked like it originated from one point over and over again, and then it would light up, and it looked like cross-tie. And everybody commented on how weird the lightning was.

A mutual friend of ours knows that I have some friends who were on the Montauk project. He’s been to my home, and he was talking to me about Montauk, and some of the connections to HAARP. I became friends with another fellow who was on the project, out of Washington, and he calls me once in awhile.

And what we noticed, and I told our mutual friend, that what I got from this Montauk source was—he was talking to Preston Nichols and Al Bielek, and they were talking about the use of limestone, and they were making tetrahedrons (which is two pyramids, inverted), and they were generating the electricity.

I have been working on a project, and I was able to decipher what Boval and Hancock had found about Orion’s belt in the pyramid. The pyramid is made out of limestone, sitting on the largest limestone block or deposit in the Earth.

I was working, then, with the Lakota Sioux, on the Black Hills. I got some of their star maps, which were delivered by a few natives because they knew I was doing work, and they were pictures from animal skins which showed the exact ratio and proportion in layout of that of the Giza Plateau.

So, I’m saying: “What is the correlation here?” And I noticed there was a satellite picture taken, infrared, and there’s a river under there, and the river is also in proportion and layout to that of the Nile River. So, I started checking other ancient sites.

How I got onto it, I was studying photoluminescence and ultraviolet rays for killing pathogens, or amplifying certain frequencies, so that’s how I stumbled upon it. I wasn’t originally intending to go into archaeology. But I found astral-archaeology in the Bible.

Then I noticed that there were places called “Devil’s Slide”, and there were 60 some around the country, and they were all pretty much oriented to the longitude and latitude, and similar to Giza, and they were natural limestone deposits, and the federal government was making national monuments out of them. And on Hwy. 1 in California they want to reroute the whole road away from that. So something is going on with the use and harmonics of limestone.

Getting back to our mutual friend, when he calls me in town, he doesn’t want to talk on the phone because he was aware of my other research. Get this: he says that up that road, where the lightning was emanating from, there’s a gate up there, and the Forest Service, and you can’t get in. But, he says, they were trucking tons of limestone block from Portugal up on top there, which is why he called me. So I called my friend [with the Montauk project] and he said: “Well, the only purpose would be to make a ‘Delta-T’ [antenna?], which would work with HAARP, which could alter the grid-lightning” and so forth.

Other anomalous things were happening from several years ago. For instance, a man who runs a barge said the Navy contacted him in the middle of the night to drop these big coils into Lake Pondo’reille (Idaho). I understand that they have an underwater skyscraper.

And then I was checking the forest map, I was finding they were planting these pyramids—36 per square mile—and he said [his Montauk contact] that “they were creating standing columnar waves”. It just happens to be that it triangulates. I have not seen that station [outside Sandpoint].

Dr. Chippaloni in Australia, he’s an M.D., and he’s involved in UFO phenomena and other things extraterrestrial—you see, in the Black Hills, it wasn’t the gold they were after. Besides Giza, the only place that I’m finding these anomalies and enigma sites, they’re all based around huge limestone deposits. You know, where the Presidents’ faces are cut into stone, is all limestone. There’s a connection.

So, a while back I was doing some work on catalyst cells and water, and there was a doctor by the name of Giancola from Tuscany, Italy, the university, and she was doing all the miracle waters, like Lourdes, and so forth, and they all had one thing in common. They all had calcium carbonate, or limestone, properties, which are collectors of UV.

I read some books about how, in the ’50s, they were using irradiated blood, irradiated with certain frequencies of UV and putting it back in the body, and pathogens were totally annihilated. It brought back a complete homeostasis condition in the patient. This was by William Campbell Douglass, M.D.

My trail intertwines, in and out, with all this “mysticism” and with the pyramids in limestone. I started plotting it. The strange thing is that limestone, under certain pressure, can turn into granite. Then that led me to obelisks. They put one in Central Park in New York by the mesa, in the late ’30s or early ’40s. And then the Washington monument is an obelisk. And then we go to the Vatican, and the Vatican has an obelisk.

You see, this is all tying in. These are more than mere pointers; somehow or another they have to do with geomancy of the Earth, and the formations—all of the catacombs and caves are calcium carbonate, around there in Italy. Rome: during World War II, Musolini had taken an obelisk from Ethiopia and put it in the center of Rome in the square. So, after the war—and I got this off a site by the Vatican—and they were supposed to return the obelisk back to Ethiopia as part of the U.N. agreement after World War II, and they refused to do it.

So then, if you look at the layout of Rome and Washington, D.C., and the obelisks, and the layout of the Vatican and the Capital, there is a similarity there of streets and everything in an overlay. Again, this had to do with geomancy.

If I’m getting too far off the subject for you, correct me or bring me back.

Martin: You lead the way; you’re doing just fine.

David: I think, somehow or another, the elitists, going back to perhaps Constantine’s time and coming forward, and all of this esoteric knowledge, is all starting to tie-in. But it has to do with the biological effects that it has on a human, on our biological being—you know, frequencies and so forth. Tying more and more sites together.

If you take the Channel Islands, now, off of Santa Monica, and you have the Chumash Indians—they annihilated the Chumash. I was studying the petroglyphs. So, the Channel Islands, where the main Chumash live, they federalized the islands. You need a permit to get on. You cannot land there. And what’s in common is, a large calcium carbonate deposit, or limestone. So, there is some communication that goes on. You cannot land on those islands without a permit.

Then I was tracing some more petroglyphs on the Chumash Indians—and Rockwell built an aeronautical rocket-base around it in California, and all the other places where there are petroglyphs—so I had some old books showing it in the late ’50s and early ’60s; at one time you could go there and look at them.

But the next anomaly, in the factors, is that they also are surrounded by calcium carbonate caves and limestone, so something is going on of that nature. If you travel around the rest of the country, you’ll probably find that they are around these sites, and these anomalies happen—strange lightning, etc.

When I talked to my friend, when I called him up, the one in Washington, I said: “Hey, this is what I found.”

And he said: “Well, sounds to me, from the description, that they’re using a ‘Delta-T’ in connection with HAARP, and they’re probably manufacturing it.”

It’s just a strange array the way these fires hit, almost like they’re pin-pointed. Know what I mean? And there were 22 pin-points of it. The Forest Service came down, and they wanted to talk to us last week about evacuation. And so, we all went down to find out what’s going on and they were showing the sites, and these places were in-between these markers that I accidentally found about 4 years ago, because of the petroglyphs over here, off of the peninsula and Lake Pondo’rille, and this area.

It has a “power point” there. Now, this is speculation because I can’t prove it, but from all the data that I have from Boval and Hancock and astral-archeology, and calcium carbonate, and quartz crystal, and limestone, and the way that they put these pyramid devices to the ground—and it’s on the Forest Service map, but it tells you that what these are, you know, a “control station”.

I had a friend I called from the Forest Service; he was a surveyor. He said they were planting these pyramidal items, and then they go around and put special magnets in, with the black side up, in a certain plastic case. And they were taking a square mile, and dividing it into quarters and quarters and quarters, you know, halves and halves and halves, at 36 per mile.

He says he found the old markers from the 1800s; he doesn’t really understand why they want to plant all these magnets. And then it came about that, when he went out into the field to survey, they would create a standing columnar wave array effect. To what degree I don’t know, but it would make sense if you read everything on HAARP and you look at these maps.

So, they were knocking on civilians’ doors saying: “Hey, do you mind if we survey your property? It’s not national forest, but do you mind if we survey and put these survey things? It would be easier to identify your property.” Well, it seems kind of odd that they would, and I’ve seen the magnets. He showed them to me. They were putting them in actual pyramidal-cone devices, and they were being put in precisely. And they’re on the Forest Service map. I asked him what that meant, and he went back and asked his supervisor, who said they had to do with some kind of control with satellites. So, this has been long-standing information.

It could be a hypothesis; but if it is, it’s very strange that all of these certain degrees longitude and latitude, and places that they’re using it, would be formulating grids. Actually, the lightning looked like a grid-type of lightning, now that I recall it. It was just strange.

We’ve lived up here now going on 12 years, and I have never seen this type of weather, nor lightning of that nature. We’ve never, ever, seen such a thing before. It’s just happened recently, within the last couple of years. In the last of couple years, since they’ve been firing-up this HAARP system, we have weird weather.

Martin: So you think what is happening is a direct result of HAARP?

David: I think so, in my opinion—HAARP and other secret projects. Now, you have to understand that, also, there is Farragut Naval Base, which adjoins Farragut Park, but also there are some personnel there who are secret. I met one. I understand they have a building with an elevator underwater, like the skyscraper underwater. There are some restricted areas there that you can’t go into.

Martin: Where is this?

David: Farragut Park, between Coeur d’Alene (Idaho) and Sandpoint, on Lake Pondo’rille. It used to be a Naval base during World War II for submarine training, because it’s a very deep lake. And so, they still have a base there, and strange things happening. The rumor mill—but, you know, these are local people. You hear about the quarrels. The guy who was contracted for the barge, actually; I heard him talking to the other guy. They actually dropped these big coils into the lake; who knows for what?

There is a correlation between HAARP, and disease-ments, and the weather, and the modification. As long as you're a biological, breathing, living thing, it is going to effect you—from the small microcosm, the molecular scale, to the macrocosm.

Sometimes I get beyond myself. I don't know if that will help you.

Martin: (Laughter) Yes, this has been very confirming.

David: I can only tell you—because, see, what you want to tell the readers, why I'm going the long route around, is because under the references or points of reference that you and I, as normal subjects of the planet, were taught, and so forth, in science—this doesn't fit. It's like a square peg in a round hole.

So, what does this have to do with limestone, and obelisks, and pyramids? Well, it has EVERYTHING to do with it. That's how they founded HAARP, based on those points of reference. You have to understand the geomancy of the Earth, the electromagnetic fields, and the radionics of the movement of the planet to astral-archeology.

I got a program from NASA where I plotted all these ancient sites and things that they can't find today because of magnetic declination. I was able to go back and dig it out from my references. I found the limestone deposits—well, of course, I have a little help from the “other side”, ethereally.

You see, we're the body-electric. These things all tie-in to HAARP. It's all one scenario. You see?

Martin: I'm going to digress here. Obviously you're in a place where there are a lot of fires happening. What is FEMA telling the people? You went to a meeting, didn't you? What are they actually saying?

David: One of the representatives, the fire service was there, and a congressman, and somebody from FEMA who didn't speak at all. They were going to talk about evacuation procedures. The Heritage Treaty—we've been alerted up here in the area. This is a highly patriotic area in the county. It would be easier to burn us out then it would be to start a war, I guess. That's how you get paranoid.

I mean, these fires are absolutely strange. All the old-timers who live here for eons and eons have never seen this type of weather, nor the type of lightning, nor these types of fires. And then none of them want to move out. But they're [the government is] anxious to say, “Well, we'll evacuate you.” You know?

They just evacuated, two days ago, Troy, Montana, which is 50 miles away. And that's up near, on the way toward Yakt, and as I understand it, there's some strange troop-type movement there in Bonner's Ferry. And if I look at these fires, it's almost like a designated pattern. It's almost like you could draw a trail. But I can't prove that; I can only relate to you that it's awfully strange.

We've never had, in the middle of Summer, where it was 90 degrees during the day, and 46 degrees at night. And we've never seen these types of fires.

Martin: What's the vibe like? Does it feel strange in that area?

David: Oh, everybody, absolutely. It's a weirdness—our animals. Everybody is calling me: “Are your animals acting strange?” My dog follows me EVERYWHERE, down into the river, the creek, you know. She lays by my bed at night. Then she wouldn't even go to the river with me. She's been hiding under the porch, and I have to call her out. And on certain days she acts real weird when this crazy weather is happening. She'll feel this type of vibration. And my neighbors' dogs, too, and the cats. All the animals are acting weird around here, and they all act weird on the same day.

Martin: Sounds bad.

David: I would say so.

Martin: What, exactly, is a “Delta-T”?

David: A Delta-T, I'll read it to you, ok? It's all affecting the polarity of the body. I have so many manuscripts here, Rick.

Martin: Can you just verbally tell me what the Delta-T is?

David: If you see two pyramids and they're back to back, base to base, and then coming out of the sides is an array of antennas at 90-degree angles. They're coils, and they pulse these coils up, and a Delta-T antenna, even when it's not fully energized, just sitting—oh, by the way, the largest limestone deposit is at Montauk, where the project is, and a Delta-T, in connection with HAARP; it's on the largest limestone deposit on the East Coast. It is limestone caves that are there, ok? And so, it has a subtle effect on the inter-dimensional, of time and warp and space. That's how Al Bielek ended up at Montauk from Philadelphia when they sent him back.

Now, here's what happens. Once they fire this up, this Delta-T, it creates what they call a “bottle effect”, a magnetic bottle, or bubble as you could put it. But they call it a “magnetic bottle”, and everything within that bottle is controlled by whatever magnetic fields that are within it. But like anything else, it would collapse, unless you had standing columnar waves, ok? But if you had these—this is a hypothesis on this part; that last was actual—if you've got these magnets being planted every square so many feet, and you have standing columnar waves, it keeps the magnetic field from collapsing. So, everything within that “bottle effect” would be controlled by that magnetic field. I got that out of the Montauk book.

My conversation with “David” continued for some time beyond this point, but it moved into areas unrelated to this particular story. Let it suffice to say that what you read is very credible testimony from a well-connected eyewitness to some very strange events going on in that area of the country.

Early in the previous interview, “David” mentioned John Trochman, and so he was my next eyewitness to contact for this investigation—which was only growing stranger by the day! The following is a verbatim transcription of a telephone conversation which took place on August 18, 2000:

JOHN TROCHMAN AND THE MILITIA OF MONTANA (MOM)

MOM Spokesman: Some of the fires they're allowing to continue to burn, since they don't affect residents; others they have finally curtailed, not that it affected residents but because it burned out there repeater. Otherwise they would have let it go. We have some behind us that they're letting go. The ones that are out and are controlled, mainly, are because of locals, not the Forest Service. The locals here have organized and gone out and they have curtailed a number of fires that were started at the same time as the major ones, and only burned about an acre. They got them under control so there was no damage done. The Forest Service has allowed them to burn.

Martin: What is FEMA saying? What is FEMA's involvement, so far?

MOM Spokesman: FEMA, at this stage, hasn't made much of a statement here, other than what the Forest Service has, that if it's not affecting any residents, “let it burn”. Their intent is to burn 10% of the national forest over 20 years.

Martin: Oh, really?

MOM Spokesman: Yeah, let her go. And the problem is, they let it go to the point down at Darby/Hamilton where they couldn't control it, and it took out homes and displaced a lot of people.

Trochman: The fire's been getting pretty close. We've been building fire-fighting equipment. We've had some. We've got the neighbors ready, with their cats and pull-tanks and crews ready to go, if we have to. So, we're taking it seriously.

Martin: Well, it IS serious!

Trochman: You bet it's serious, especially when the Forest Service has a policy of “let it burn”.

Martin: That's why I'm calling. I'm calling to ask you about what exactly is going on with the Forest Service, and what is going on with FEMA?

Trochman: The take-over of America!

Martin: The story I'm writing is about FEMA, and I've found out some things about what is happening in Idaho, and some things about HAARP.

Trochman: We watched, about three weeks ago, where they brought a low-pressure system into the Seattle area, and then back out about 300 miles; they left it there as they brought the hot-dry air up from the desert. We've never had it like this here since 1910.

Right here, where the fires have been striking the hardest, is where we've been trying to stop planning and zoning. And this is the area of Montana where they want to relocate people out of the country, into the cities. In addition to that, they are teaching, starting this Fall, a program—I don't have the exact nomenclature in front of me here—they're teaching a program on how to bring rural residents into the city, voluntarily or mandatory.

So, with this planning and zoning program that they're putting together here, what we're anticipating happening, Rick, is that they would—if your home is burned out, like South of us—they would not give them building permits because you live in a "high risk" area. So they continue to allow the fires to drive people out, to burn their homes, and when you come back, you collect your insurance and move on, but you can't come back there and build. That's how they're going to get us out, one of the many ways.

You know, they're trying to starve us out. We're at least 50% unemployment here. They've shut down the forest from logging, mining, grazing. I mean, all wealth comes from the land, and if we can't connect with the land, we're outta here. That's what they're trying to do.

Here they're worried about the "endangered species", they're worried about the timber. They won't let us go harvest it. They won't let us pick up the dry timber for protecting the forest because of all the fuel build-up there; they won't let us use it for our home heating.

They're concerned about the environment, the air quality, water quality, yet they let the fires burn? Now, come on. How hypocritical can you get?

Martin: A lot of people would say that it's paranoid thinking to think this way. But it would be so easy for me to think, well, obviously it's easier to burn-out the patriots than it is to fight them.

Trochman: It would be the easiest way of all.

Martin: So, in part, I can't help but think that this is exactly what's going on. But there's got to be more to it than that, too; it's got to be a several-layered thing, don't you think?

Trochman: It always is. It always is.

Martin: Do you have any theories?

Trochman: We've attended a lot of meetings that were sponsored by the Forest Service in Western Montana.

Martin: And how is the relationship between you and the Forest Service, by the way?

Trochman: With the lower-level employees, good, but with the top ones, as bad as you can get, next to blows.

When they make the statement that Western Montana, where you live, is going to be like it was in 1850, and we research what it was in 1850—there were NO people here. And when they make the statement: "We're going to burn 10% of the forest every 20 years"—we can see it happening right now.

Martin: What can their rationale possibly be for that?

Trochman: Well, why do they allow this lightning, this crazy, crazy lightning, in the middle of no rain, in the middle of the strangest whirling wind I've ever seen? When it strikes, they come up the next morning; they could put it out. One little crew with no equipment could put it out in a matter of hours, but they let it build for days and days until it gains its strength and heat, and they bring the winds in to fan it, and it becomes a giant, giant forest fire. It is absolutely hideous what they're trying to do—unless they have a motive behind it, of trying to drive the people out.

Martin: Well, obviously, Western Montana, and Northern Idaho, and Northeastern Washington is a stronghold for that kind of free-thinking citizen.

Trochman: That's right, and that's where the problems are happening now.

Martin: I have a chart in front of me of all the fires that are happening now, and it's enough to curdle your blood. Of course, you're up there with it, so you know what I'm talking about.

Trochman: We sure do. And we're anticipating today that they're going to "Level 5" for the fire danger, which means they're closing all of the back roads. And they have blamed the civilian population here for starting some of these fires.

But, if you follow the money trail, Rick, you'll find that anyone who has a vested interest in fighting fires, would want a fire. Anyone who has an interest in picking huckleberries and harvesting timber, would NOT want to do this.

We've taken quite a ration about our press releases from the local papers. Thursday, I believe, a week ago, we put out how the local town of Pinedale, Montana was about to burn to the ground when the fire chief and the fire crew came to the rescue. They were about to start putting it out, the fires were enclosing, engulfing the town, when the Forest Service chief came and said: "No, you're going to let it burn."

And they said "screw you" and saved the town, all but one home.

Now, in a town nearby, the crew listened to the Forest Service, and 51 homes, 20 out-buildings, and 2 saw-mills were lost.

Martin: Unbelievable.

Trochman: That's right, unbelievable. There was a crew that was going to cross the creek with a cat, and the Forest Service ordered them not to because "you may disturb the habitat for the Bull Trout". Well, the Bull Trout is what Fish & Game would make us throw on the side and not let go back in the water, because they're the muddy-uppers, the scavengers, the ones who eat all the fish, etc.

Now, they're an endangered species, apparently, so you can't cross the stream to save your home. You have to allow the trees to burn, and plug-up the creeks, muddy it up, let the mud run in because there's no vegetation to hold it anymore. I'm not sure what kind of sense this makes.

Martin: In a situation like the one you just stated with the town, I'm surprised tempers haven't flared.

Trochman: Well, they have. There was a man who was gone on vacation. When he came back, the fire was on his property, coming near his buildings. He went to the Forest Service and raised particular hell about it. And when he left there, he left with a crew and a Forest Service cat. He just happened to have been a retired Forest Service Fire Chief. When he got back and they were starting to fight the fire with the cat and the crew, he noticed there were already three more crews, two more cats, and a road grader back there, civilians, already doing it. And they were very successful.

Now, here in our neck of the woods, there's a man who has kind-of taken the bull by the horns. He and his fire-fighting crew have done more on all these little fires—one crew, one cat—that out-do hundreds of forest service people put together.

And we overheard the Forest Service making a comment to someone else, saying, about this man who's been quickly putting out all these fires: "Doesn't he know how to milk them?" How sick can you get?

Martin: That's as sick as it comes.

Trochman: It is! You bet it is! This is a statement that you ought to use:

We are taking this into our own hands. We are taking this very seriously, and we are fighting these fires with our own hands. If we can't lick this fire enemy that they've created against us, how can we lick troops, foreign and domestic, that would come against us? We'd better learn to fight, folks!

CLOSING THOUGHTS:
"BIG BROTHER" IS NOT ONLY WATCHING, BUT BLACKMAILING AND KILLING

We live in a time when moral responsibility or even common sense have reached an all-time low. And the insanity driving hidden agendas has reached the level of a frenzy, making it hard for decent citizens to know which way to turn—like trying to fight several fires racing toward your door from several directions all at once.

We live in a time when there are still political prisoners, like Bill Tyree, who have been framed as scapegoats to protect the truly guilty. Our Founding Fathers are probably turning in their graves as they witness the CIA and military elite silence person after person after person, through such violence as murder, to cover their dirty little secrets—while drugs continue to be dealt on the streets of America, supplied by our own government, in a effort to finance such places as Mount Weather, where an alternative government lies in waiting to be kicked into place through some artificially generated act of so-called “emergency”.

And what is the thinking person to surmise when no guarantees are even put into place to assure a return to “constitutional” government once an “emergency” is past? Is this not leaving the door wide-open for abuse on a grand scale?

We live in a time when church leaders, law enforcement officials, judges, local, county, state, and federally elected officials are surveiled by the likes of the CIA, clandestinely, and blackmailed to insure their “silence” and “cooperation”, so that The Truth will never see the light of day—especially The Truth that so many of our leaders are corrupt and using illegal means to justify their ill-gotten ends. Both the means and the ends are not only dangerous to the common good, but are as corrupt and morally bankrupt as are the two-bit criminals employed to make them happen.

When domestic “wet operations” on our own citizenry become commonplace, we have entered an era of grand tyranny and matter-of-fact fascism. Only the faces of the puppet-rulers change, but their actions give away their common intent every time.

“Big Brother” is not only watching, but blackmailing and killing. Yet, one thing that Washington, D.C. has learned in the past few years is that we-the-people are ALSO watching—and we’re starting to watch ever more closely.

The key, however, to keeping the crooks honest is not just observation, but ACTION. Action such as that taken by men like Bill Tyree, through an admittedly corrupt legal system. Will Bill Tyree, a manufactured “political prisoner”, experience any kind of justice? Well, given Operation Orwell, it’s unlikely. But wheels have been put into motion that the public may observe, and documents are on record that the public may access. And there is now surely a spotlight on this shameful injustice.

Always there is the hope by those so-called “elite” controllers in the back, smoke-filled rooms that no one will wake-up and notice.

Yet there IS an awakening taking place among the people, and it is because of this awakening that the powers-that-be must resort to such “super-natural” influences upon us as those employed through such as HAARP.

And yet—even something as seemingly powerful and full of secret technology as HAARP cannot override God’s Thought and Protection. The crooks will learn this lesson, probably the hard way.

The problem is, with the stroke of the President’s pen we can lose our freedoms in a very big way. Many say that this has been the case since 1933, when Emergency War Powers were put into place; some even take it back as far as Lincoln’s time. But the fact remains that there’s a strong and cleverly disguised effort afoot to thwart freedom and independence.

A friend recently asked me: “Why do you think the New World Order elitists have created such redundancy in the laws?” I believe the reason is that people ARE paying attention, and redundancy is what will be required to successfully implement the take-over plans for the United States of America.

Remember, Buckminster Fuller said it very well: “Think globally, act locally.” Well, the One Worlders most certainly DO think globally, and act with a greater attention to local details than most who live in the towns where federal-level agencies such as FEMA have already “adjusted” local laws to their liking. And they get brain-dead locals to do their dirty work FOR them!

Remember regionalism. What’s happening in the town or county where you live? Are you checking on the likes of FEMA laws inserted into your local legal codes to override local government?

Always they hope that no one can follow the bouncing ball, because, after all, there are so many bouncing balls that one set of eyes cannot possibly follow them all. That’s where teamwork becomes effective to keep that annoying bright spotlight on their shenanigans

And when there is a “leak” in their plans, immediately comes the spin control, the damage control, and the holes in the dike are plugged—until the next leak. Our government lawyers—especially all those lawyers who occupy our Congress—are masters of doublespeak. You can read one “reasonable” paragraph in an Executive Order, but the very next one will either negate it, or create such a wide level of “interpretation” that anything goes. Yes, indeed, they are cunning in their application of deception and relentless in the pursuit of the goal.

When the parallel government of Mount Weather becomes the primary government, when the scales of justice are so far askew that justice is lost, when blind justice means no justice—we have fallen far, far below the level ever dreamed of by our Founding Fathers.

When hiding under the cloak of “national security” becomes such a standard response that straight, honest answers are a thing of the long-ago past, we have entered and are living in their Brave New World. Is that the world YOU want?

When HAARP is used to generate targeted fires to burn-out, silence, and thus suppress independent thought and free-thinking strongholds, such as those in the areas of Idaho and Montana, it is shameful that our once great nation is reduced to such petty tyranny by men of little minds and greedy hearts, all to further their own cause of control and domination.

It’s an old story, and I suppose a typical one at that, but when it comes to common sense and seeing what’s happening in this country with agencies like FEMA, “you don’t need a weatherman to know which way the wind blows”.

Remaining Flexible In These Times Of Great Change

8/19/00 VIOLINIO ST. GERMAIN

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Violinio Saint Germain, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace.

I come as the representative of the Seventh Primary Aspect of Creator's Infinite Spectral Expressions. I am known by many as the keeper of the Violet Ray of Transmutation. My duties and challenges are indeed great at this time, due to the nature of the birthing process that is now unfolding into the conscious reality of physical manifestation and realization.

Allow for the cycles of change to unfold as they will, and learn to appreciate such change as a good thing, rather than something that causes discomfort. Discomfort, herein, is a by-product of inflexibility of thought—in essence, an unwillingness to grow. When you hold to rigid beliefs and ideas regarding how YOU think an event should unfold, then you will, in almost every instance, have to come face-to-face with the eventual realization that you have limited yourself, and then tried to impose this limitation of self-perception upon God or His many Angelic Lightworkers who have come to assist you at this time.

Learn to recognize that SPONTANEITY of experience is a key ingredient for winning the game with the Adversary. The Adversary places relatively high “wagers” on the fact that most ones are rigid in their thinking and will resist change, for the change often represents discomfort in the form of uncertainty to the ego-self which prefers a well-defined “comfort zone”. Spontaneity often will require that one makes a decision in a very short period of time and with perhaps little more to go on than a hunch or a “gut” feeling. Ah, but such is the wondrous nature of truly following an Inspired path.

Remember, especially in addressing these spontaneous situations of decision-making and path-choosing, to always keep the Light and Love of Creator God around you at all times. Many have fallen for subtle whisperings of the Adversary who is quite adept in the mental skills of thought projection into the physical brain. In short: NEVER LET YOUR GUARD DOWN! And learn to recognize the differences between input from the Lighted ones and the “dark” ones trying to emulate the Light; there will always be clues if you take the time to honestly look.

You, in essence, become a very potent catalyst for others' growth due to your capacity to shine forth Creator's Love, Compassion, and Light into the physical domain; you radiate an absolutely infectious Positive Energy wherever you go, and inject that Energy into all endeavors you choose to undertake.

Spontaneity is what often will result in one turning “right” when all expectations will be a “left” turn. Let us say one with whom you regularly interact comes under a psychic attack and begins acting very erratic or irrational, and the attack is quite carefully planned to push YOUR buttons and thus cause major confrontation, grief, anger and such. Because it was specifically designed to push YOUR buttons, it is fully planned that you will respond in a very specific and predictable manner. If you can maintain a semblance of balance and step back for a moment, you may recognize what is taking place, and thus, in what will be a very spontaneous moment, you may find that instead of REACTING in anger, you RESPOND with compassion. Hence the calculated attack is diffused and the Adversary's plans are exposed (at least to you).

Do you see how spontaneity of thought can have a great impact on the outcome of relatively small events, let alone larger ones?

Can you see how your ego may resist the idea of you electing to NOT “defend” yourself in the event of such an attack?

We of the Lighted Realms, who come to serve you who seek our assistance, often witness you ones failing to recognize the ego's hold on you—let alone the way the Adversary uses the ego to quite literally dance you around like a puppet, with almost complete mathematical precision. It is only when you can maintain the presence of mind (balance) to step outside a reaction of the ego that you can then glimpse the great opportunity such a challenge affords both you and any other(s) who may be involved.

Rarely, if ever, is it productive to get into a head-butting contest with another over highly charged emotional issues. The result will be a very volatile situation which will result in great confusion, distortion, and distraction for both sides. It is far better to allow for the volatile energy to dissipate to a point wherein true communication can occur.

Almost all ones reading this message will have had experiences in their life wherein they can remember great emotional conviction (often anger) where the result was “things said” that they “didn't really mean”. Often, later, you wonder what might have come over you that would allow you to be so “irrational”. NEVER underestimate the subtle nature of the Adversary's games. We see NONE who have been completely successful at avoiding all of the traps set for you to fall into.

We do recognize that there are those of you who have become quite aware of this dark presence that seems to show up from time to time, especially when you least expect or need such distraction. Do not worry about the past times when you may have fallen for the subtle tricks. Recognize the lesson contained in such events and learn to spot the compulsive reactions you may have had as being connected to the ego's inner grip and control. Know that part of everyone's lessons is to learn to operate from balanced REASON rather than thoughtless REACTION.

Reactionary responses are what plants and animals use, for the most part, as survival instincts. This sort of behavior is what you ones are trying to grow out of, into a sense of balanced reasoning—and then move into an awareness of interconnectedness of ALL things (plant, animal, people, etc.) that will allow for compassion in ANY situation, regardless of the mental and emotional states of the ones involved.

The Adversary wishes to keep you from reaching this latter, quite powerful level of realization because, when such awareness is achieved, his influence is nearly impossible to impose, and you become quite effective in helping others to achieve the same level of awareness. You, in essence, become a very potent catalyst for others' growth due to your capacity to shine forth Creator's Love, Compassion, and Light into the physical domain; you radiate an absolutely infectious Positive Energy wherever you go, and inject that Energy into all endeavors you choose to undertake.

During this time of transformation from the old REACTIONARY modes of operation—wherein wars seem to be the only way to communicate the “rightness” of ideologies—until the time wherein a more balanced approach of REASONING becomes the norm, you will find ones struggling more and more to convince the masses that fighting is the “only” solution that will make the point. The ones who perpetuate such “reasoning” will begin to look more and more foolish as the general understanding and awareness of the masses continues to rise.

There will always be the few who refuse to let go of the OLD ways of doing things. These ones will struggle greatly as their perceptions of reality continue to fracture and disintegrate. These ones are becoming more and more dangerous as they lose touch with the evolving reality of the planet. Their instability will not be apparent to themselves, yet the majority will see right through them, for they will look, metaphorically, like a large, protruding boulder in a fast-moving stream trying to hold firm while the rest of the world passes them by.

It is unfortunate, but this is happening at ALL levels of society. Many are observing (and often having to contend with) ones whose inflexibility has become so “hardened” that they no longer feel the ever-present tugging of the heart which begs for newness and growth. This is often much more noticeable in the elder generations, who have years of emotional scars to contend with. Rarely will you see this in the youth of society, who are innately curious and want to explore the uniqueness of their ever-evolving environment (unless there has been great physical, mental, or emotional abuse to these ones).

Such a time of transition—especially a major transition such as you and your planet are experiencing at this time—is quite challenging for each of you, and we know that you each desire to partake of the opportunities these experiences have to offer. We know that, from time to time, you may feel overwhelmed with your current situation. Fear not and have faith that ALL events which impact your life are for a reason.

This is the Cleansing Period wherein the emotional “garbage” will need to be dealt with. Those of you who have become quite comfortable with your emotional “garbage” are having more difficulty than are those who can simply see that the past suppressed feelings which “clutter” the emotional energy pathways serve no purpose once the lessons are recognized. This “clutter” of emotional “garbage” is only held in place as a result of the ego's reluctance to relinquish its control; it uses reactionary fear as its power source to keep the reasoning mind at bay.

There is no practical way to address each one's personal challenges in such a general dissertation as this. However, it is intended that this message spark within each of you the thoughts that will help you to see a bit clearer the general phenomenon that is affecting all ones at this time. Meanwhile, your personal Guides stand always ready to assist each of you with your own personal challenges. Call upon them and then be attentive to their response.

The Cleansing can easily be likened to fire in the following way. The energy pathways of the various levels of the non-physical body—the etheric counterparts to the physical apparatus—must compensate for the steadily upward-shifting frequencies of the Cleansing Energies now bathing your planetary orb. The physical apparatus, being a reflection of that underlying non-physical counterpart, will naturally begin to change properties and begin to vibrate at a higher frequency as well.

When there are emotional blockages (often caused by past severe emotional trauma) these more intense and higher-frequency Energies do not flow in a proper manner, and thus there is the corresponding physical manifestation of all sorts of dis-ease (cancers, tumors, heart weaknesses, skin problems, kidney malfunctions, and so forth). These Energy blockages, assuming the physical apparatus can maintain functioning long enough, will become very much unstable as the Energy they divert continually impacts the anchor points in the mind that hold them in place. This will, in most cases, cause an inner anxiety within the one who refuses to let go of the emotional “garbage”. The anxiety is a by-product of the competing for control that goes on between the higher reasoning mind and the basic ego mind. In this situation, if the ego wins, the physical body will not be able to sustain proper functioning and the entity (inhabiting the body) will not be able to maintain a functioning physical body.

The resulting chronic imbalance of Energy flows will, in most cases, cause a burning sensation, not unlike a fire, as the thwarted Energies seek to find their proper densities and pathways. The resulting surging oscillations can be quite uncomfortable. Such is the nature of the Cleansing Cycle now well underway.

Those who remain in the physical will have quite literally gone through a transformation process wherein the physical body will come to be viewed and utilized in a more deliberate manner. The physical structure will be much more responsive to the conscious mind's deliberate desires. There will be a greater recognition and utilization of the physical vehicle as a focusing conduit of Higher-dimensional Energies seeking to help facilitate individual growth. In essence, the emotionally cleansed physical vehicle serves as an exquisitely equipped focal point of individual creative expression. The greatest difference will be in the increased ability to flow Creative Energy in a more complete, uninhibited manner.

This transformation process is a natural evolutionary process, and eventually all ones will complete this as a natural progression (graduation step) along the many journeys of the soul. Some ones experiencing in the physical at this time are using this special Energy opportunity to effect a healing of sorts wherein, by going through this experience, great opportunities afforded from this Cleansing Cycle will allow them to more fully integrate a part of their Higher consciousness with the more basic elements or aspects of their being. Though these ones are not the “norm”, they are ones who will have a particularly challenging experience, for the fear and pain are great. And yet, there is an Inner Knowing that makes them aware of their connection to Source, and it is from this unbreakable connection that they maintain the perspective that enables them to adjust and survive.

We only mention this here for the few so involved, and to remind ones that, for each general dissertation, there will always be exceptions, anomalies, and even experiments which take place within the natural unfolding of any particular group of souls as they progress forever forward, expanding potential into the infinite newness of The Creation.

Remember, always, that you are on an infinitely open-ended journey, and that any “final” destination you may perceive is an illusion. There will be markers along the way to help you determine your individual progress, but there is no end, for Creation (All That Is) is constantly expanding, and with each moment that passes, Creation evolves into something NEW. Within each of you is an awareness of this vast unfolding, and with each moment that passes you are contributing your experience to this collective expansion which we are all part of and exist within.

I am Violinio Saint Germain—Teacher, Guide, and kindred soul to those of you who are experiencing at this time and on this place. I come within The One Light of Creator Source. I come as the planetary representative of the Seventh Primary Aspect of Creator's Spectral Expressions, the Ray of Transmutation—the physical harmonic counterpart of which is often recognized as the vibrational frequency of the color violet.

May the spontaneity of change fluently resonate within you, as it does within the uninhibited child who constantly seeks to experience the wonder and uniqueness that each moment offers as it unfolds.

Blessings and peace. Salu.△

Fishy CIA Link To Malathion Spraying For West Nile Virus (Among Other Shenanigans)

Editor's note: The courageous Dr. Len Horowitz is no stranger to the pages of this newspaper. The West Nile Virus sprayings of malathion in the Northeast United States has caused quite a few thinking people to question what is REALLY going on.

Malathion has a number of serious effects on people—birth defects, immune-system weakening, and genetic damage (never mind what it does to the animal and insect populations)—which prompt the suspicion of a much more sinister covert agenda afoot—requiring the need for an excuse to aerial-spray a large area with this very poisonous agent.

Leave it up to Dr. Horowitz to dig-out the kinds of seemingly unrelated nuggets of information and “connect the dots” in such a way that brings greater clarity to this outwardly puzzling event in the Northeast. Will your town be next?

8/16/00 DR. LEN HOROWITZ

— PRESS RELEASE —

Public Health Expert Charges West Nile Virus Sprayings Are Bogus And Potentially Deadly

Sandpoint, ID — Urban sprayings of malathion, a suspected human chemical carcinogen and known immune system blocker, as a means to control mosquito populations—efforts aimed at stemming outbreaks of the West Nile Virus (WNV)—has not been scientifically proven to be either safe or effective.

According to a group of concerned physicians and scientists, led by Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz, a Harvard graduate and internationally known authority in public health, the sprayings of Northeast U.S. populations violates a basic tenant of public health practice requiring known risk and proven benefits of the policy, in this case aerosolizing a chemical compound linked to cancer development and genetic damage in various species throughout the food chain.

Even the alleged origin of the “West Nile Virus” should be questioned, according to Dr. Horowitz. Prior to calling it WNV, it was known as Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE). However, U.S. Government documents reprinted in his national best-seller Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident Or Intentional? [Available from Wisdom Books & Press, Inc. (877)280-2866; see last page of paper for ordering information.], cite the name “Dawson’s encephalitis” among a group of viral agents being studied in the West Nile district of Northwest Uganda by the Army’s sixth leading biological weapons contracting firm called Bionetics—a medical subsidiary of the global military weapons developer, Litton Industries.

“I can think of lots of examples [where] wiping [out] one problem caused a worse one to pop up” complained Henry A. Wallace of the Institute for Alternative Agriculture regarding malathion sprayings. “I would think people, by now, would know that heavy applications of pesticides have not been the right way to go. Spraying people with pesticides, who do not want to be sprayed, must be morally wrong.”

As the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) currently oversees public health agencies including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), for threats to national security posed by viral agents such as HIV/AIDS, Dr. Horowitz said: “An investigation into the intelligence of spraying American civilians with a documented chemical carcinogen that, at minimum, wreaks havoc with our children’s immune systems, is urgently indicated.”

NOTE TO JOURNALISTS: For an interview or article on the area of Dr. Horowitz’s research, or a list of authorities who support the position(s) stated above, please call Elaine Zacky at 208-265-2575 or 1-800-336-9266.

The CIA And The West Nile Virus: What New Viruses, Vaccines, And Lethal Sprayings Have In Common

by Leonard G. Horowitz,
D.M.D., M.A, M.P.H.

There is a three-letter common denominator underlying: the West Nile Virus (WNV) outbreak in New England, the controversial spraying of malathion—a chemical carcinogen related to agent orange—over American cities, the growing threat of anthrax or other biological weapons attacks, vaccination policies that are risky and questionable, if not downright deadly, the mysterious “chemtrails” overcasting previously blue skies across North America, and an avalanche of sophisticated counterintelligence propaganda concerning vaccinations and bioterrorist threats emanating from our nation’s primary news sources.

The CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) is implicated in every regard. As a principal perpetrator of all these threats, and a primary purveyor of propaganda in these domains, America’s leading military intelligence and “corporate espionage” agency is suspect in what amounts to global genocide being carried out in the name of “public health” and “national security”.

As an investigative journalist who routinely travels across the Western Hemisphere, I get my “homework” assignments from airport newstands. Since 1990, I’ve been tracking U.S. government cover-ups in the health science domain. My special interests lie in “emerging viruses”, bioterrorism, and “media propaganda”. As a graduate of the Harvard School of Public Health, and post-doctoral researcher in media persuasion technologies, I have, for the past five years, conducted highly controversial investigations, published stunningly incriminating documents, and exposed the purveyors of propaganda surrounding today’s deadliest microbes—along with the agents and agencies directly responsible for bioengineering and transmitting designer viruses and bacteria to grossly unwitting populations. My job has been to raise public awareness regarding these “covert operations” to help a tiny, intelligent minority survive the current and coming plagues.

Having spent most of my adult life residing in Boston, the news of massive malathion spraying for “disease and mosquito control” in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, as was done months earlier in Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey, grabbed my attention. [1] Sketchy reports, issued by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, alleged the discovery of the WNV “in an adult dead crow found July 22 in a wooded area near Willow Pond in Jamaica Plain (adjacent Roxbury), Massachusetts”—a predominantly African-American Boston suburb and home to one of America’s largest Nation of Islam communities.

“Odd” I thought. “Of all the places in Massachusetts, or New England, it could have landed, the dead crow dropped on a Black community in South Boston.”

The official Press Notice cited the alleged need to deliver “ground or aerial larvacide and ground adulticide treatments around positive WNV findings”. Thus, the extensive lethal spraying of immune-system-ravaging malathion began.

That same week, with heightened fear of a biological apocalypse at hand, on Friday, July 28, 2000, the Reuters news agency in Washington announced that the U.S. military’s use of anthrax vaccine had come under intense scrutiny and additional fire. [2] Dr. David A. Ashford, of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), was quoted as stating: “we do not have any specific information on the efficacy of the existing vaccine for the prevention of inhalational anthrax and we probably never will.” The article suspiciously recalled the largely ignored report of findings by Dan Burton’s congressional investigating committee issued six months earlier. The February 2000 report by the House of Representatives’ Committee on Government Reforms called for the suspension of the anthrax vaccine program.

Not only was the vaccine’s inefficacy determined by the committee, but the risk of side effects was found to be 175 times greater than defense department officials initially assured the FDA and military personnel receiving the vaccine.

Suddenly, this Reuters report previewed the likelihood that the FDA would approve an obscure antibiotic, ciprofloxacin, over better known penicillins and doxycyclines to prevent deaths from anthrax inhalations. These standard antimicrobials, the article speculated, might be less effective than ciprofloxacin, due to the development of antibiotic-resistant strains of anthrax. According to the Physician’s Desk Reference, the risks of ciprofloxacin administration are numerous and severe.

The very next day, Saturday, July 29, 2000, the nation’s principal news agency, the Associated Press (AP), announced the unprecedented move by the FDA to legislate ciprofloxacin as the drug of choice against anthrax. This synchronous announcement was said to help the Bayer Corporation of West Haven Connecticut market its product.

Conveniently for the corporation, the FDA’s action was said to be “part of an organized effort by federal agencies to prepare the nation to respond to biological attack”. FDA committee chairman, Dr. L. Barth Reller of Duke University, said “the unanimous vote of the committee ‘is clearly linked’ to the unusual circumstances of preparing for a possible terrorist attack.... The CDC also is poised to stockpile the drug” the AP reported. [3]

Background On The CIA And “Industrial Espionage”

Hints of CIA involvement, and a darker side to this virus’s evolution, came less than a year earlier with the publication of Richard Preston’s New Yorker feature on the “West Nile [Virus] Mystery: How Did It Get Here? The CIA Would Like To Know.” [4] Then, the alleged outbreak of WNV, more commonly termed Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) virus, provided an excuse to spray millions of mostly Jewish, Black, and Hispanic “mosquitos” in the tri-state region with malathion. Preston, whose propagandist nature and associations I exposed in my national best-seller Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident Or Intentional? [5] is the author of the New York Times best-seller The Hot Zone. [6] This work catapulted him to national acclaim and his current status as the chief voice in mainstream media bent on broadcasting “imminent” biological attacks by “terrorists”, primarily depicted as Arabs, Blacks, and/or Muslims.

It should be realized, however, that the word “bioterrorism” reflects a broader sense of the word, including the frightening of Americans into accepting virtually any official bioactive prescription, including experimental and risky vaccinations. In the case of malathion spraying, this carcinogenic and lethal intoxication is deemed appropriate to allegedly protect citizens against hypothetical biological attacks, man-made or natural. For the propagandist purpose of fear induction, Preston’s prose is best suited.

I first linked Richard Preston to CIA counterintelligence activities through my independent investigation into the origin of the Ebola virus. Ebola, the ideal biological weapon that kills nine-out-of-ten humans within three weeks of infection, emerged first in three European vaccine production laboratories virtually simultaneously in 1967.

Then named the “Marburg virus” (after one of the vaccine maker’s Marburg, Germany, address), consensus held that this virus arrived in Europe in a shipment of nearly 500 African monkeys. The scientific literature, mainstream media, and Richard Preston never once disclosed the name of the infamous monkey supplier—Litton Bionetics.

Bionetics is cited in the U.S. Congressional Record as a leading biological weapons contractor and nonhuman primate supplier for the U.S. military. Rather than reporting the obvious association between the ideal biological weapon and a top biological weapons contractor, Preston instead advanced a theory on Ebola’s origin totally void of scientific evidence, support, or merit. Ebola, he claimed, came from the deep dark Kitum Cave near the West Nile region of Central Africa. Kitum Cave, according to repressed National Cancer Institute (NCI) documents, is Preston’s metaphor for Litton Bionetics’s research lab. Here, in the West Nile region of Central Africa, currently the heart of the African AIDS belt, Bionetics collaborated, during the early 1960s through mid 1970s, with the International Association for Research in Cancer (IARC). (Suspiciously, given the history of the cancer industry, the IARC was funded by the U.S. National Institutes of Health, but centered in France!) Near the actual Kitum Cave, and the West Nile Valley of Northwest Uganda, Litton Bionetics and NCI scientists experimented on non-human primates and apparently African villagers too, according to eyewitness testimony. [7]

Relatedly, Bionetics was a medical subsidiary of the mega-military weapons contractor, Litton Industries. Their president, Roy Ash, oversaw all of American industry during the first Nixon administration, beginning in 1969. That year, Henry Kissinger received the post Nixon also considered for Roy Ash—National Security Advisor overseeing CIA, FBI, and foreign policy.

George Bush, at that time, was a Texas congressman. He, alongside his father’s friend, William Draper III, warned legislators about the imminent national security threat of burgeoning Third World populations particularly in Africa.

This and other warnings prompted Henry Kissinger to begin writing the infamous National Security Memorandum 200: Implications Of Worldwide Population Growth For U.S. Security And Overseas Interests submitted before he left his NSA advisor post in 1974. The document, declassified December 31, 1980, called for massive Third World depopulation and related activities.

While NSM 200 was being prepared, George Bush was appointed to serve as CIA director. According to two other CIA directors—Richard Helms and William Colby—as published in U.S. Congressional Records, Dr. Kissinger oversaw the development of biological weapons for covert operations and depopulation programs.

Additionally incriminating is past CIA director James Woolsey’s testimony before a congressional investigating committee in 1993 concerning the agency’s French operations. He stated: “With the end of the Cold War, the CIA must enter the era of economic espionage.” In the language of espionage, a French columnist explained, this meant that “the CIA will henceforth do many services for American enterprises which take the trouble to ask it for 'help' in both counterespionage and espionage itself."

Obviously, then, considering these powerful people and their positions, it is not unreasonable to suspect a conspiracy to direct, at minimum, propaganda, if not global genocide in the name of "population control".

This later consideration might seem unconscionable were it not for the definitive links between Litton, the CIA, and the Nazi-linked I.G. Farben Company—the global chemical and pharmaceutical cartel that came to prominence in the early 1900s. [5] The building that housed Germany's leading industrial organization prior to World War II, and for all practical purposes the Third Reich during the war, became CIA European headquarters immediately following the war. The marble-decorated I.G. Farben building was intentionally spared from allied bombing runs.

It was largely built by the Bayer Pharmaceutical consortium that included the distributors of aspirin and heroin to U.S. markets by the "Farbenfabriken of Elberfeld Co., 40 Stone Street, New York" according to a 1906 Medical Observer advertisement. [5,8] It is no secret that the CIA, with involvement by the Bush family in America, has been very active in illicit drug-running operations for the last several decades. [9]

Origin Of The West Nile Virus?

In his pre-Halloween "DISPATCH" in the New Yorker magazine, Richard Preston treated us to another trick. Concerning at least five people who died in the New York City vicinity from WNV, Preston reported the CIA's concern was that the outbreak might have been a bioterrorist attack. "How else did it get to America?" he asked. Then he explained: "The West Nile virus was first identified by virologists in 1937 in the West Nile district of Uganda."

Reading between the lines, Preston neglected to explain where these pioneering virologists came from and who funded them. The answer is very easily found in a review of the scientific and historical literature.

Beginning in the 1920s, the fields cancer, virology, and "public health" were virtually entirely funded by the Rockefeller family in cooperation with Alfred P. Sloan, chief benefactors and directors of the later developed Sloan-Kettering Memorial Cancer Research Center.

By 1930, John D. Rockefeller's Standard Oil Company, had "married" the German chemical/pharmaceutical cartel known as I.G. Farben. Farben, Germany's leading industrial organization, managed Hitler's rise from ruin to riches as leader of the Nazi party. Farben's directors—the cream of the SS and Third Reich—decided that Jewish people would best serve as slave labor in their corporate "concentration camps". Hitler's "racial hygiene program", historic documents proved, evolved from the "scientific eugenics" efforts of the Rockefeller family, the British Royal Family, and other powerful political notables, including Prescott Bush, George Bush's father!

At that time, primarily Rockefeller money built the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Eugenics, Anthropology, and Human Heredity in pre-Nazi Germany. Then, Rockefellers and friends installed Ernst Rudin as the institute's director. He later became Hitler's chief racial hygienist. Margaret Sanger, the grand matriarch of "family planning" and "world population control", worked vigorously at that time to herald the necessary elimination of "dysgenic" people—mainly Blacks.

Erich Traub, a world-class virologist who became Hitler's biological weapons chief, and following World War II came to work for the U.S. Navy under the top secret CIA "Project Paperclip", likely received Rockefeller support before, as well as after, the war. A covert operation, "Paperclip" was largely administered by Henry Kissinger with full knowledge and support from the Rockefellers and their business managers, John Foster and Allen Dulles of the OSS/CIA. Thus, Erich Traub's early work was likely being funded by the Rockefeller-Sloan cancer directorship by 1937.

Subsequent efforts in the West Nile district of Uganda by "virologists" working for this cancer consortium also included the testing of the first cancer chemotherapeutic.

A derivative of mustard gas used during World War I, the chemical toxin, Sloan investigators claimed, was highly effective in stopping the growth of cancer (as well as dysgenic people).

Furthermore, a Litton Bionetics report to the NCI in 1971 listed virtually every virus, viral recombinant, and infectious agent under study by the world's leading cancer researchers, vaccine developers, and biological weapons contractors.

It lacked mention of WNV. Instead, the only encephalitis virus cited was called "Dawson's encephalitis" virus, likely deriving its name not from the West Nile district of Uganda, but from a Rockefeller-linked cancer investigator by the name of Dawson who was clearly affiliated, by NCI contract, with Litton, the IARC laboratory, and by association to the CIA.

Unfortunately, Preston did not relay this politically incorrect background in the New Yorker—Rockefeller home turf.

Buried Intelligence Between Propaganda Lines

Throughout his article, Preston weaved a web of paranoia-inciting intrigue regarding the mysterious New York outbreak. "People are bystanders" he claimed, "caught in the crossfire—bitten by chance by an infected mosquito."

Ironically, in 1975, according to the Congressional Record, during Frank Church's investigation of the CIA for illegally storing and testing biological weapons, CIA officials testified that they had developed a weapon to administer toxins, including infectious biologicals, that fired a micro-dart. It felt like a mosquito bite when it hit.

Later in the article, Preston advanced an alternative bioterrorist hypothesis by articulating the suspicions of Ken Alibek, a Russian biological weapons ace.

Alibek had conveniently defected to America just in time to join Preston and a cadre of CIA bioterror propagandists currently at the forefront of what amounts to a full-fledged attack on the public's mind, as well as U.S. National Security.

After all, Preston quoted Secretary of the Navy, Richard Danzig (a good German name), as saying bioterrorists could easily get away with an outbreak that appears natural.

He then relayed what a "top scientist who advises the FBI" had told him.

This "person who has been deeply involved with bioterror planning" explained: "If I was planning a bioterror event, I'd do things with subtle finesse, to make it look like a natural outbreak. That would delay the response and lock-up the decision-making process." Interesting that Preston's prose is unique in American journalism and U.S. military history, if not treasonous—delivering attack strategies to potential enemies.

Preston, in a previous New Yorker article (March 9, 1999), bragged about getting insider information regarding biological warfare and bioterrorism even before CIA chiefs. He said CIA officials have relied on him for information! Regarding the West Nile story, however, Preston risked losing even lay reader credibility by providing an inane argument amid more of the steady stream of anti-Iraqi propaganda familiar to intelligence observers.

An alleged Iraqi dissident author, in hiding, Mikhael Ramadan, a Saddam Hussein look-alike, Preston wrote, had predicted "that Saddam would unleash a virus just months before the same one broke out unexpectedly in New York.... It was enough to make any bioweapons analyst at the CIA feel uneasy."

Citing Saddam's alleged interest in a West Nile virus strain, and conveniently omitting American contractors' more voluminous contribution to Iraqi biological weapons arsenals, after a lengthy and frightening discussion, he admitted that this prospect of using the West Nile encephalitis virus in New York for bioterrorism was absolutely stupid.

The fact is, it only killed five people and a lot of crows. He did not rule out, however, the great likelihood that this was a CIA-brokered event, orchestrated for propaganda purposes to prepare the public's mind to willingly accept malathion sprayings.

Veteran observers will recall such propaganda tactics successfully used in recent years concerning such threats of bioterrorism aimed at Muslims or Iraqi nationals. Two years ago, a man claiming to be a CIA microbiologist set the Internet abuzz with claims that Muslim women were bringing vials full of anthrax into the United States in their crotches.

Weeks later, the man, Larry Wayne Harris, was observed at a national "Preparedness Expo" demonstrating microbial incubators and spraying devices that, he said, could be used for bioterrorism. Further investigation by this author, including interviews with some of Harris's intimates, revealed that he had most likely been mind-manipulated by CIA controllers for counterintelligence purposes.

Even without this knowledge, I was able to predict, six months in advance, Mr. Harris's use in bioterroristic counterintelligence at a critical time—on the eve of the Clinton administration's announcement threatening renewed war with Iraq. As United Nations Secretary Kofi Anan was making a final bid with Hussein to avert further conflict, Harris was being set up for arrest in Las Vegas on possession of what was thought to be anthrax.

His arrest made front-page news, as did the CIA's message that bioterrorists are everywhere, particularly in the Arab world. (For more information, see "Larry Wayne Harris" articles posted at www.tetrahedron.org on the Internet in the "FTP" archives.)

Dr. Alibek later stated that he had informed people on Capitol Hill that the West Nile outbreak was suspicious. "I told them, 'It will not be possible to say whether or not it is terrorism unless we have a thorough study.' We need to take these situations with a high degree of seriousness" he cautioned.

Congressional Dysfunction

Indeed, further study by congressional investigators is indicated. In fact, when Congressman Dan Burton's (R-Indiana) Government Reforms Committee met later that month to examine suspicious ties between biological weapons contractors, defense department contracts, and vaccine industry practices, they decided not to examine the documents I was officially requested to send Beth Clay, the hearings coordinator.

The reprinted contracts in Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola linking Litton Bionetics to the first Ebola virus, and the Merck pharmaceutical company contract in which hepatitis-B vaccines were administered to gay men in New York City and Blacks in Central Africa, apparently tainted with HIV, were too controversial for their focus. Burton's committee was apparently unwilling to air the facts in light of the fiction regarding ongoing biological assaults on American taxpayers, Third World populations, and global genocide.

As Secretary of the Navy, Richard Danzig, admitted in Preston's spoof: "Even if you suspect biological terrorism, it's hard to prove. It's equally hard to disprove. This is more illuminating of my prediction that we won't necessarily know when bioterror has occurred than it is illuminating of..." potential bioterrorists.

Thus, congressional investigators need not risk their careers unearthing fundamentally objectionable truths about covert U.S. military biological warriors like Secretary Danzig. Forget that his department has been at the forefront of biological weapons research and development since Erich Traub, Hitler's top biological weapons developer was drafted into the Navy by Henry Kissinger during the late 1940s. Since then, the Navy has been at the helm of research and development in ways to disseminate lethal biologicals for the CIA and British MI-6 "black ops".

Foreshadowing "Chemtrail" Technology And The Rise Of The "Fourth Reich"

Revolting as it may seem, the CIA and U.S. Navy, working in tandem with the Army, haven't spared military, or civilian populations, from germ warfare "experiments" or outright biological attacks. Frank Church's investigating committee learned, for instance, that the "USS Coral Sea anchored in Kampton Roads, and the USS F.D. Bailey at sea off [the] entrance to Kampton..." had been sprayed at least seventeen times with biological agents ranging from strains of bacillus (physically similar to anthrax) to E. coli. (Mutant strains of E. coli had been prepared possibly leading to the development of severely lethal varieties of bioweapons, including strain 157 responsible for dozens of deaths and the suspicious takeover of the Hudson Beef Company by Clinton family friend, Don Tyson, and his Springdale, Arkansas-based Tyson Foods Company.) [10] Civilians in the New York subway system, under the skies of San Francisco, and in the tunnels of the Pennsylvania Turnpike, had been sprayed likewise with biological inhalants. Similarly, U.S. legislators learned in 1999 the little reported fact that Gulf War troops, as many as 200,000, were unwittingly used in AIDS vaccine experiments wherein portions of the AIDS virus, HIV, were recombined with a "pathogenic mycoplasma", isolated, tested, and then patented by Dr. Shyh-Ching Lo of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology for the American Registry of Pathology in Washington, D.C. The patent is reprinted and discussed in this author's book Healing Codes For The Biological Apocalypse. [Available from Wisdom Books & Press, Inc. (877)280-2866; see last page of paper for ordering information.]

Therefore, it is no wonder, regarding the 1999 West Nile virus outbreak, Richard Preston concluded: "This valley in New Jersey reminded me in a strange way of Kitum Cave, ...a haunting place I'd seen some years ago." Much like the "chemtrails" containing ethylene dibromide—another human chemical carcinogen and immune system destroyer—being sprayed by high-flying military aircraft in recent months, such "outbreaks" are hauntingly reminiscent of a litany of crimes against humanity, violations of the Nuremberg Code, by secret agents effecting depopulation for global colonialists (often called the "oligarchy" or "Illuminati") that many fear is the rising "Fourth Reich".

Summary And Conclusions

It is known in military circles as the "Russian biological cocktail". I suppose it's so named by the Americans who invented it. This method of choice of incapacitating and eliminating excess or targeted populations calls for the delivery of combinations of biological and chemical agents—so called "co-factors". This makes diagnosis and treatment of these multiple simultaneous exposures/intoxications/infections difficult, if not impossible.

Thus waged, biochemical warfare cannot be traced to its source, and affords the ability to deliver economic and "non-lethal" substitutes for traditional warfare, while creating a dependance among those attacked on the stealth aggressors for their ameliorative products and services. The full benefits of this military option are discussed at length elsewhere. [9, 10]

Given this background, it is absurd to believe, as many foolish Internet surfers apparently do, that "chemtrail" sprayings represent an earnest effort to immunize mass populations against anthrax attack. Such deceptive reasoning and communications merely serve a Hegelian dialectic—to confuse the issues and shield the perpetrators of ongoing atrocities.

In short, what is being conducted in the name of "public health" and "national security" are biological and chemical weapons applications reminiscent of Nazi atrocities, and the propaganda mechanisms used to disguise them. These are apparently ongoing to fulfill economic, political, and ideological objectives.

Who, in essence, makes more money by waging war and delivering disease and death to Americans than the Rockefeller family? Who, in the U.S. has recognized the urgent need to reduce native and world populations, and has put their money to this task, more than the Rockefellers? Finally, who believes more firmly that “useless eaters”, including “dysgenic” races of humans, should be shepherded to extinction more than those who initiated the eugenics movement—the world’s first “racial hygiene program”—on American soil? Indeed, no one embraces these concerns more vigorously than the Rockefeller family, the Royal Family of England, and America’s royalty—the Bush family.

As media outlets herald the completion of the “Human Genome Project”—the contemporary name substitute for “eugenics”—those who initiated global efforts to control populations and human evolution, almost a century ago, are on the verge of achieving, in past president George Bush’s words: “a kinder and friendlier...New World Order”.

Editor’s note: The following short articles are related information about malathion. Probably the most worrisome revelation comes at the very last segment, from research in Turkey, wherein it was found that some of the breakdown products after malathion has “gone away” (which doesn’t happen anywhere near as fast as the propagandists claim) are more toxic even than the malathion!

MALATHION RESEARCH UPDATE

[By Dr. Wayne Sinclair, M.D., Asthma, Allergy & Immunology, Vero Beach, FL; and Richard W. Pressinger, M.Ed., Tampa, FL.]

Excellent research shows how malathion causes birth defects in turtles and frogs, gill damage in fish, bizarre swimming behaviors in fish, and damage to shrimps’ ability to locate food. (There goes the food chain.)

Other studies show birth defects and increased infections to the second generation of animals, even when no defects were seen in the first generation of offspring, implying subtle genetic damage that would otherwise be missed in most birth defect studies.

Another study from Rutgers University showed malathion caused heart defects in one fish species, while other species showed no problems. All in all, I was overwhelmed with the amount of research showing how malathion can cause serious damage to wildlife in so many ways. God help our marine life in the lakes, rivers and Tampa Bay when it rains, since that is where much of the malathion goes—right down the storm drain and into the river and bay.

Remember this point: Research in the 1989 Bulletin Of Environmental Contamination Toxicology stated 25% of the malathion is still present in the water after two weeks and 10% is still present after 30 days. At the town meeting the other night in Lakeland, I caught a University of Florida Professor stating that malathion was degraded after several hours! Nonsense! Fortunately I was next in line to speak and was able to set the record straight as I had the journal article in my hand at the time. Some research shows malathion did not cause harm to some forms of wildlife under certain conditions. Which studies do you think would be reported to the public?

The studies mentioned above have to do with wildlife. Quite a few studies showing that mammals and humans can also be affected, including research showing weakening to our body’s ability to fight viruses, germs, etc., thereby increasing our risk for colds or infections of any kind. There are also several studies showing how malathion can cause mutations to our human genetic structure, as well as one study from the journal Mutation Research showing malathion was more powerful than 5 other pesticides in causing a problem known as “cell cycle delay”—which means that cells do not grow as quickly and is “characteristic for many mutagens” according to the scientists. The bottom line is that although it takes more malathion than other pesticides to cause death, it takes less malathion than many other pesticides to cause birth defects, immune weakening and genetic damage. Nice trade off, huh?

The available evidence indicates that technical grade or other than pure malathion has the potential to produce genotoxic effects in mammalian systems. The results of the available studies on the genotoxicity of malathion can be summarized as follows:

In test animals, technical grade malathion appears to have the potential to produce chromosomal changes including chromosomal aberrations and micronuclei.

In humans, the genotoxic effects of malathion have not been adequately studied. In human and animal cells in culture, both technical grade and purified malathion appear to produce cytogenetic damage, including chromosomal aberrations and sister chromatid exchanges.

MALATHION AND CANCER

A few days ago Dr. Robert K. Simon received a letter from the USDA in Beltsville, MD from Harold T. Smith, Senior Project Leader with the APHIS Division (Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service). Dr. Simon's letter to him was an inquiry about the status of a Draft EIS published last summer on fruit fly control procedures. Comments had been received until October 12, 1999 and a revision based upon comments was due. Paragraph 2 states as follows:

"Preliminary information received from the EPA indicates that the EPA is considering changing the registration status of malathion because of studies that suggest that it could be a low-level human carcinogen. Such a change would result in a change in the risk analysis, would require review of protection and mitigation measures, would result in the need to inform and involve the public about the change, and could require the preparation of a supplemental draft EIS".

IMPURITIES IN MALATHION FOUND TO DISABLE THE BODY'S NATURAL ABILITY TO DETOXYFY MALATHION

[Source: Toxicology And Applied Pharmacology, Vol. 49, 107-112 (1979)]

Once malathion enters the body, it needs to be removed so harm is minimized. This is the job performed in part by enzymes in the liver of all organisms. However, this research showed that the malathion impurities, to quote the scientists: "diminish the activities of the enzymes involved in the malathion detoxification." In other words, the impurities damage the body's natural way of detoxifying the poison, with the end result being the chemical stays in the body for longer periods of time when exposure is to the technical-grade malathion, and especially if subjected to heat and long duration storage. [Division of Toxicology and Physiology, University of California, Riverside]

MALATHION UNDERGOES DANGEROUS REACTION IN SUNLIGHT

Malathion undergoes a chemical reaction in sunlight called "photolysis" which results in increasing the formation of the highly toxic trimethyl impurities. [Journal Of Agricultural Food & Chemistry, Vol. 27(6); p.1423]

REPORT LINKS PESTICIDES WITH IMMUNE SYSTEM PROBLEMS

[Source: Science News, March 9, 1996]

According to a report by the Washington, D.C. based group, World Resources Institute (WRI), many pesticides appear to be increasing the incidence of infections, pneumonia, ear infections, and tuberculosis.

The three pesticides listed as causing this problem were DDT, malathion, and the pesticide aldicarb. A summary of the report, appearing in the March 9, 1996 issue of Science News, outlined many of the studies linking pesticides with weakening of the immune system. One of the group's commissioned researchers, Dr. Lyudmila Kovtyukh, of the Academy of Sciences in Kishinev, Moldova (a republic between Romania and Ukraine), found that children living in areas where pesticides had been most heavily applied experienced elevated rates of acute respiratory diseases (including pneumonia), as well as many other signs of immune system weakness. If you would like to read the entire March 9, 1996, Science News article, it has been placed on the Internet by Science News.

IMMUNE SYSTEM WEAKENS AFTER MALATHION EXPOSURE

[Source: Journal of Immunology, Vol.140(2); pgs. 564-570]

Technical grade malathion contains chemical impurities which have been found to weaken immune system function, including a weakening of a type of white blood cell called "cytotoxic lymphocytes" (which attack cancer cells and virus-infected cells). These lymphocytes can also attack viruses in the body.

Malathion has now been shown to significantly weaken the CTLs' ability to perform their job effectively.

Chem-Tox Comments: Obviously, the consequences of not having lymphocytes remove viruses or cancer efficiently could result in mild-to-serious health disorders.

MALATHION USE ON BOLL WEEVILS CAUSES CONTROVERSY IN TEXAS

Federal and Texas state agriculture officials are disputing the report of two USDA scientists who say that an infestation of the beet armyworm on cotton crops in the Rio Grande Valley is the result of heavy applications of the pesticide malathion, used to eradicate the boll weevil. While the boll weevil populations were practically eliminated in the Rio Grande Valley and the San Angelo area, the region became infested with the beet armyworm, according to the New York Times (October 9, 1995). A report by two USDA scientists, K.R. Summy and J.R. Raulston: "concluded that the heavy use of pesticide, including the application of malathion for boll weevil eradication, was 'the primary causal factor for the beet armyworm outbreak' in the Rio Grande Valley." They said the malathion caused "a disruption of the beneficial insect complex that normally suppresses the beet armyworm." Their report was disputed by officials at the USDA and the Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation, who have ordered a new study.

>

I find this all very interesting, particularly considering the lengthy debate which occurred a few months ago over the Boll Weevil Eradication Program. Well, at least they don't have weevils! I predicted this problem with Spodoptera Exigua early this summer. I'm not surprised by the fact that the Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation wants a new study to be done. They'll never learn. — Tracy

You were right about that spraying killing off the beneficials. We knew it would have a bad effect on organic farming, but I never thought it would manifest so soon and so clear. I hope that the people responsible for heavy applications of the pesticide malathion will take note. I never did like the fact that they can just spray everyone and everything in sight for miles and miles. If one feels they are dead wrong, you are helpless to stop them. Even in organic farming, one has to remember the long-term action of what you're doing. I can think of lots of examples that happen to me of wiping one problem just to cause a worst one to pop up. I would think people by now would know heavy applications of pesticide has not been the right way to go. Spraying people with pesticide, who do not want to be sprayed, must be morally wrong.

MALATHION BREAKS DOWN INTO TOXIC MALAOXON

[Source: Bulletin Of Environmental Contamination Toxicology, Vol.57; pgs.705-712, 1996]

In trying to calm the fears of Tampa residents, representatives for the Florida Department of Agriculture have made public statements that, after application, malathion "breaks-down" in a matter of hours. What they don't tell you is that malathion can actually break-down into compounds which are more poisonous than the malathion itself.

This is, in fact, the conclusion of research from a graduate project by researcher N. E. Barlas at the Department of Biology, Hacettepe University, Turkey. Barlas went on to say: "The disappearance of pesticide residues at a given location does not mean the end of the problem. Pesticides can be translocated, bioconcentrated, or converted into more dangerous chemicals."

The breakdown fate of malathion was studied by adding malathion to soil samples containing 6 species of soil bacteria known to break down the pesticide. After 10 days, the samples were analyzed. Malathion content had reduced from 100 down to 25 micrograms, so therefore, the Florida Department of Agriculture spokespeople are correct when they say it "breaks down" relatively quickly (although in this case, not in a matter of hours).

However, even more important, Barlas found that new chemicals were formed in this breakdown process, including 14 micrograms of monocarboxylic acid and about 8 micrograms of the highly toxic malaoxon. Barlas then exposed mice to the technical grade malathion and another group to the breakdown products just mentioned. Results showed even the mice exposed to the breakdown products of malathion showed significant decreases in spleen weights and significant changes in liver blood tests which were suggestive of liver damage. Barlas summarized by stating: "It may be concluded that commercial malathion and its degradation products together have detrimental effects on mice over a period of 15 weeks of treatment."

Killer Music: Mind Control's Subtle Drug

Editor's note: The following article was spotted as a News Desk Special Report by our news guru, Dr. Al Overholt. It comes from the August 2000 issue of The Prophetic Observer, which is published by Southwest Radio Church Ministries. (See the contacting information at the end of the article.)

The Prophetic Observer introduces this topic with the following lead: "This article is taken from a chapter called 'Rock: Fight-Or-Flight' in Dr. Jack Wheaton's book Crisis In Christian Music. Dr. Wheaton, an Emmy award-winning composer, is a noted authority on music history and presentation. He is a music professor and has conducted orchestras."

Among other visitations to this subject, regular readers of this newspaper will remember our April, 2000 Front Page story on Sound Healing wherein was discussed the absolutely profound effects of sound and music on all living things. We received many wonderful notes from readers about that presentation and, taken together, such praise clearly showed how much of a role music plays in the lives of so many of us. Thus we feel this subject is important enough (and overlooked enough) to revisit on a regular basis whenever we find good information to present.

You could say that this particular article deals with the absolute antithesis of Sound Healing! Focus upon the important general underlying message about the power of sound and music, and look beyond the "fundamentalist Christian" overtones of the author's viewpoint. But while our readers are well aware that there has been much distortion and purposeful tampering with the Bible, Dr. Wheaton could not have picked a more pertinent quote than his 2 Timothy 3:1-5 message to share with us herein!

It is not hard to understand why the so-called "elite" controllers would like to keep the public as unaware of the power of sound and music as of the HAARP system or Prozac or a whole array of other potent mind-control tools. Should we come to TRULY SEE what is being done—often right before our eyes and ears—to accomplish the agenda of the downfall of civilization through these covert avenues of manipulation, then they would lose much of their effectiveness as programming tools.

Moreover, should enough of the public awaken to the point of anger about such shenanigans, then the perpe-traitors would find themselves facing the same "hanging tree" future as the tobacco companies are currently contending with.

Think carefully about the very revealing experiments in sound which Dr. Wheaton mentions. Those of you who are musicians or who have a strong affinity for music will readily identify with the scientific message he shares. (Remember the loud music being blasted by the government agents at that "captive audience" during the Waco, Texas seige?)

There are many, many more anecdotal experiments floating around the scientific literature than Dr. Wheaton can relate in a short chapter on this subject. Some of them are quite astonishing. And invariably, all across this nation, at grade-school and high-school science fairs, there are presented more examples of the general theme. In the past I (E.Y.) have been part of judging teams which listened to some very serious and confident little nine-year-old budding scientists who proudly displayed how their bean plants (or whatever) grew so much better experiencing the music of Brahms rather than some Twisted Vixens heavy-metal rock group.

Yes, music is a powerful tool. But like anything else on this planet at this time, you are likely to find it being exploited for both good and evil purposes. Recognizing the difference is a skill worth cultivating.

AUGUST, 2000 DR. JACK WHEATON

MUSIC THAT MURDERS

ROCK MUSIC AND THE "FIGHT-OR-FLIGHT" SYNDROME

The human body is extremely sensitive to music. Music not only affects our emotional state, but it can affect the major organs and systems within our bodies. The vibrations produced when playing music pass through the body and impact every internal organ and system in some way. We not only hear music, but we feel it as well. Many contemporary rock fans no longer listen to the music; they let their bodies feel it instead.

Music is vibration. Vibration penetrates matter. When the jet airplane was first introduced to commercial travel, ground crews often suffered extreme forms of internal disorders, particularly those who flagged the planes into parking areas and were exposed to the high-pitched whine of the jet engines. After much research, it was discovered that the combination of the volume and the particular pitch frequencies of the engines were having negative effects on the internal organs of the bodies of the exposed ground crews. Today, those crews wear ear protectors, as well as specially woven jumpsuits that contain a crossweave pattern and decibel absorption material to both break up the waves before they penetrate the body as well as to muffle them.

Low frequency vibrations (bass and drums) are particularly hard to screen out and can cause extensive damage to the human body and mind if they are not monitored and kept below a ninety-decibel level. Several years ago, a scientist doing research on the effects of low-frequency soundwaves on the human body built a replica of the standard referee's whistle. When a referee in a sporting match blows his whistle, the air causes a cork ball to tumble around while the soundwaves pour over it, causing that penetrating, sharp sound. The scientist's replica was over six feet tall and the cork ball was almost twelve inches in diameter.

This particular scientist hooked up the whistle to a compressed air machine and decided to stay in the testing laboratory while his assistant turned on the air compressor, which caused the whistle to blow. The powerful low frequencies—intensified by the cork ball—and the decibel level of the sound, killed the scientist instantly. A follow-up autopsy revealed that the unfortunate scientist's internal organs had literally been "scrambled" by the power of the soundwaves.

Iowa State University has experimented with sound in relation to plants. For instance, they have discovered that playing soft, classical music over growing corn fields stimulates both yield and growth time. Similar positive results have occurred when playing pleasant, light classical music in the barns when cows are milked and in the hen house when chickens are laying eggs.

A recent experiment of playing different styles of music at different decibel levels over trays of pansy flowers also revealed startling results. The flowers responded positively to light classical and acoustic jazz. However, the trays over which hard rock music was played—that's another story. Those flowers withered and died within hours.

Recently the 7-11 convenience store chain was having increasing problems in major metropolitan areas with gangs hanging around their stores. They found that playing light classical music—Mozart, Bach, Beethoven, etc.—over loudspeakers, in and outside the store, caused the gangs to leave. Why? Some have postulated that these gangs use contemporary rap and hard rock music to stimulate their aggressive tendencies, while classical music weakens and dissipates them. It's just a theory, but the idea works.

Scientists have confirmed that we all possess an ancient protective device called the "fight-or-flight" syndrome. Sudden, sharp loud noises represent "danger" to our instinctual and protective subconscious mind. The brain responds immediately, sending signals to the endocrine gland system and other parts of the body that will give the body a sudden burst of aggressive energy that can be used to (a) fight gland are still somewhat mysterious in our total understanding of their purpose and effects on the body and the mind.

Surprisingly, Hindu yogis were well aware of the endocrine gland system and its effects on the body and mind before modern medicine. Many of their exercises are designed to stimulate or modify one or more of these mysterious glands. The Hindus were also the first culture to realize both the healing as well as the damaging potential of music. Today, the classical music of northern India carefully organizes itself around a specific vocabulary of scales and rhythms called "ragas". These ragas are specifically for: (a) morning, afternoon, or evening, (b) spring, summer, fall, or winter, or (c) romance, celebration, war preparation, etc. Indian musicians respect the power of music and will not abuse it by playing the wrong type of music at the wrong time, or for a function for which it is not suited.

Mankind soon learned how to artificially stimulate the adrenal glands by using primarily percussive and low-pitched instruments, playing aggressive-sounding and repetitive rhythms. The Native Americans dancing around the campfire doing a war dance before going into battle was an important part of their preparation for combat. The rhythms, the dancing, the aggressive shouting and singing all were designed to overcome personal fears of death and to activate their aggressive nature as well as give them "supernatural" strength.

As late as the American Civil War, infantry units went into battle with drummers—unknowingly stimulating their adrenal glands, giving them additional energy and aggressiveness. The youngest casualty in the American Civil War was a twelve-year-old drummer from the North, killed in the Battle of Vicksburg.

The development in our last century of sophisticated music amplification gear, and recording and playback systems, has allowed the creation of an aggressive style of modern music called "rock" that activates the aggressiveness and increased energy levels in the listener as a result of their subconscious reaction to loud, percussive sounds, booming basses, and shouted lyrics.

The frantic, almost uncontrollable energy level released at a typical rock concert is often mistaken by the audience and the performers alike as a demonstration of musical artistic ability. Actually, the level of artistic expression is secondary to their ability to stimulate audience reaction through triggering the fight-or-flight syndrome. The repetitive, constant, loud backbeat of the rock drummer, the pulsating (at an ear-splitting level), low-frequency vibrations, and the soaring, wailing, crying sounds of the amplified guitar trigger off a surprise attack or (b) escape by having enough additional energy to run or climb out of danger.

The development in our last century of sophisticated music amplification gear, and recording and playback systems, has allowed the creation of an aggressive style of modern music called "rock" that activates the aggressiveness and increased energy levels in the listener as a result of their subconscious reaction to loud, percussive sounds, booming basses, and shouted lyrics.

The glands that are most responsible for producing this emergency burst of aggressive energy are the adrenal glands, two small pear-shaped organs that sit one atop each kidney. They produce an enzyme called adrenaline, which gives the body more energy and strength, and the mind more power to overcome fear with aggression. They are part of a larger system called the endocrine gland system which includes our (a) testicles or ovaries, (b) the adrenal glands, (c) the thalamus gland, (d) the thyroid gland, (e) the pituitary gland, and (f) the pineal gland—all of which have powerful effects, positive and negative, on the human body.

The discovery and understanding of the endocrine gland system was one of the later discoveries of modern medicine. It wasn't until the late nineteenth century that this system and its effects on the human body were discovered. Even today, the gonads (testes, ovaries), adrenal glands, thalamus, thyroid, pituitary, and pineal major subconscious emotional responses in the body, primarily stimulating aggressiveness, as well as providing increasing, but difficult to control, energy.

Shortly after rock-and-roll became rock music, the Beatles, a British group out of Liverpool, England, handled brilliantly by their new manager, Brian Epstein, became the first “supergroup” of rock music and the first major British import of what had been primarily, until then, an Afro-American musical style. Although the songwriting partnership of Paul McCartney and John Lennon produced some lovely songs that have become standards, their primary effect on audiences was triggered by the more aggressive, loud rock tunes that they also performed.

Following close behind the Beatles were the Rolling Stones, another British group. The stones began as a copy of the more polite Beatles. However, they soon settled on a raunchy, loud, offensive, aggressive style of music that even to this day nets them over eighty million dollars whenever they decide to tour the United States.

Their manager told them, when they changed styles early on, that their primary purpose was to: (a) alienate parents with their music, (b) speak to the normal rebellious nature of the typical teenager, and (c) drive their audiences into a frenzy with the loudest and most aggressive music ever recorded and performed up to that point.

Ask any fan of the Rolling Stones, Michael Jackson, Kiss, or any other rock group, to sing eight measures of any hit song that these groups have recorded. They can't, not only because the “music” itself contains so little content, but also because they are fans for different reasons. Their favorite groups give them the biggest rush, the lyrics to their songs are the most provocative, and they are drawn to their theatrical presentations in concert. In most instances, the essential historical elements defining a musical composition are not present—form, melody, harmony, and a coherent, inoffensive, and logical lyric.

Hard rock is not music; it is amplified noise, with offensive lyrics that are shouted and screamed through a PA system at ear-splitting levels, over a repetitive bass line and simplistic chord structure. The essence of hard rock is in the presentation volume, emotional rage, offensive or obscene lyrics, and very visible and suggestive body movements by the “artists” while they are performing.

Whether they know it or not, the primary power and draw of this style of music is in their ability to “turn on” the listener by triggering their fight-or-flight syndrome. Once triggered, the body is actually getting “high” on its own internally produced drug, resulting in a heightened sense of awareness, an increase in body energy, and an increased tendency to aggressive and anti-social behavior.

Woodstock, the most remarkable rock concert of the sixties, set a new standard of borderline anarchy by an audience of thousands. At the recent thirtieth anniversary of this concert, the audience got totally out of control. The music had become more aggressive and louder, and as a result the promoters ended up with an out-of-control mob that eventually caused hundreds of thousands of dollars of damage to ears, tents, neighboring property, and other facilities, as well as many reported (and unreported) rapes, drug overdoses, and unprovoked assaults.

Rock music has moved indoors, into the privacy of a teenager's room, where he or she can watch random acts of violence, sex, anarchy, drug use, and social nihilism on the most popular youth channel on TV today: MTV. I challenge any reader who has not spent a few hours watching this channel to do so. You will be amazed at what you see and hear—all in the name of acceptable teenage entertainment. MTV, like CNN, is international. They are the two most popular and powerful television channels in the world.

There are very few large rock festivals today. The liability insurance to produce such an event is astronomical. The security costs are also severe. When they do occur, they are shorter, feature fewer groups, are more subdued, and very heavy security is involved. Even with these precautions, outbreaks of rage, rape, drug overdose, drunkenness, sexual exposure, and violence are common, but are quickly hushed up by the record companies and the promoters.

As a result, kids today seeking the real thrills of the past are often drawn to underground rock concerts—performed by unknown but aggressive heavy-metal rock groups in abandoned buildings and warehouses that can go on for hours. Many like to increase their aggressiveness by taking amphetamines and dancing in front of the stage in an area known as the “pit”. Those who dance in the pit are allowed maximum expressions of violence. Anything goes in the “pit”—from biting, kicking, slugging, self-flagellations, sexual exposure, gang-rape—you name it, it happens in the “pit”. Hundreds of young adults, male and female, often pummel each other joyously as their hearing is being destroyed by the extreme volume of the music blasting into their ears at close range. What's the trigger for this experience? Rock music.

Rap is primarily an urban form of Black poetry set to “music”. It actually grew out of an African tradition of a tribal “griot”, a poet who was allowed to make scatological remarks to anyone in the tribe, reveal embarrassing secrets, and make fun of anyone—including the chief. The “griot” in the African tribe was what the court jester was to the kings and queens of western Europe. Rap reveals once and for all that “rock” music is not music. There is nothing musical about rap. It is aggressive, offensive, women-hating, police-hating, anarchistic thugs shouting their obscenities to a tribal repetitive rhythm. There is no melody, no form—only shouted (not sung) offensive lyrics and syncopated tribal rhythms over a repetitive bass line. Yet, “rap” records today rake in more money in record sales than that of classical and jazz music combined.

Those caught up in these activities, along with some seriously misguided sociologists, psychologists, and youth apologists, claim that this kind of music and activity is a “healthy” outlet for normal pent-up teenage angst, and that it should be not only tolerated but encouraged. Some of this propaganda is coming from the record companies, who make billions of dollars from this junk.

Any police department of any city having to deal with the after-effects of a rock concert or “rage” gathering will tell you a different story. In having to deal with the anger, frustration, and rage when brought in to restore law and order, they see these gatherings as a deliberately provocative challenge of the rules of public safety. They see these events as deliberately promoting teenage anger, sexual frustration, rage, and rebellion against all forms of authority—which usually results in dangerous outbreaks of violence, suicide, drug overdose, alcoholism, rape, assault, and even murder. Law enforcement wants these events banned, with heavy penalties for those producing the events.

One of the most dangerous drugs on the market today is rock music. The overstimulation of the endocrine glands, as well as other deleterious changes in the body, and often the accompanying ingestion of illegal substances, has wreaked havoc in our culture. The increasing incidents of outbreaks of teenage violence—from Columbine High School in Englewood, Colorado, to the murder of a teenager at the Altamont Rock Festival in Oakland, California years ago—have one thing in common: rock music.

Rock music has moved indoors, into the privacy of a teenager's room, where he or she can watch random acts of violence, sex, anarchy, drug use, and social nihilism on the most popular youth channel on TV today: MTV. I challenge any reader who has not spent a few hours watching this channel to do so. You will be amazed at what you see and hear—all in the name of acceptable teenage entertainment. MTV, like CNN, is international. They are the two most popular and powerful television channels in the world.

The record companies have long delayed a necessary investigation into the uncontrolled use of some of their musical products, particularly for young adults. Why? Billions of dollars are at stake. The recording industry today is approximately a twenty-billion-dollar-a-year industry, of which more than seventy percent of the product is aimed at teenagers and pre-teens.

The recent popularity of “rap” and “grunge” music, with it’s angry “let’s get ’em” or “let’s all commit suicide” (as Kurt Cobain, a leading grunge artist, did), have added another dimension to the “molotov cocktail” of social anarchy that threatens our society—in a more serious and dangerous way than any outside force could ever accomplish.

The combination of illegal drugs, loud aggressive music, permissive parents, lyrics of rock songs that call for “destruction” and hate, along with access to handguns and other weapons of destruction, have produced some of the most horrific and difficult-to-understand crimes in modern history. We are moving toward controlling the drugs and the guns—but what about the music? The music lights the fuse that produces the explosion!

Without understanding how dangerous these forms of music are, and without moves to control their distribution, the problem will not only still be there, but will get worse.

Sadly, the Christian music recording industry has gone the way of the rock world. In their annual award show (the Dove Awards) there was not a category of pop music, from rock to rap, that wasn’t represented in Christian music categories. We not only have Christian “rap”, we have Christian “grunge”, “heavy-metal”, and “hip-hop”. As a result, Christian record sales are booming. Artists are posing for increasingly sexually provocative or socially anarchistic album covers. The socially rebellious look—everything from tattoos to nose- and ear-rings—now appear in the pictures of supposedly “Christian” artists.

Paul the apostle saw these times—through the power of the Holy Spirit—and warns us what to look for in such revealing passages as 2 Timothy 3:1-5:

THE DANGERS OF THE LAST DAYS

You may be quite sure that in the last days there are going to be some difficult times. People will be self-centered and grasping; boastful, arrogant and rude; disobedient to their parents, ungrateful, irreligious; heartless and unappeasable; they will be slanderers, profligates, savages and enemies of everything that is good; they will be treacherous and reckless and demented by pride, preferring their own pleasure to God. They will keep up the outward appearance of religion but will have rejected the inner power of it. Have nothing to do with people like that.

Sadly, we have let Satan into our sanctuaries in our desperate efforts to attract teenagers and worldly adults to our worship services. Rather than lifting the name of our Lord with dignity and honor, we are debasing everything He stands for. We rationalize all this with the statement: “Things are different today!” Are they? Take time to read I and 2 Corinthians. You will find that things are not that much different.

Loud repetitive music, with a heavy percussion beat, along with a pulsating low-frequency bass, accompanied by screaming guitars and lyrics shouting blasphemies and obscenities that call for acts of violence are a common thread connecting most recent outbreaks of teenage violence.

Legislators can move to take away our guns, crack down on dope, and increase the prison sentences for teenage offenders, but until society identifies and deals with the root cause of most of this—the music—we haven’t even begun to solve the problem. We are in a cultural civil war that may bring down our civilization, yet most adults today are either not aware of it or choose to ignore it.

Emotionally-disturbed children and adults, flooding their brains with musical anarchy and violence, are time bombs waiting to go off. The constant bombarding of these same damaged psyches with visions of violence presented as “entertainment” by greedy and unthoughtful recording, film, and television producers, has made many adults today fearful of their own teenage children.

This is NOT a problem about censorship. It

IS a problem about social and moral responsibility. We may have to mount large class-action suits against the entertainment industry, as we have done with the tobacco industry, for the damage they have caused. A few decades ago our society saw the uncontrolled promotion, glamorization, and use of alcohol and tobacco as an individual’s responsibility. Today we see the uncontrolled promotion and use of these substances as a serious threat to society itself. May we also begin to see the same sense of social responsibility directed at the uncontrolled use of music as a drug in our culture.

As shocking as these discoveries are, it is even more shocking to see this music being welcomed with open arms into the sanctuaries of our churches. Have we lost our minds?

Are we so divorced from understanding spiritual warfare that we cannot understand that Satan wants to undermine and compromise our worship? Have we so given-in to society and our teenagers that we look the other way while evil slithers into our churches—all because we want to attract more teenagers and worldly non-believers?

Why would they want to come and stay with us when we present them with the same things they are running away from in our morally decadent society?

Does this mean that all contemporary praise music is bad? Certainly not! However, it does challenge us to use biblical standards in selecting and deciding what is and is not appropriate in that most sacred part of our religious service—the fervent worship of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

With No Obligation To Educate, Schools Turn To Thought Control (It's Worse Than You Thought)

Editor's note: For those who pay any attention to such matters (which should be all of us), there is no question but that a purposeful "dumbing down" of society is well underway to help facilitate the mass mind-controlling of the public. Non-thinking "sheep" are ever so much easier to control than even your average independent housecat.

The calculated, overall, three-prong attack has, for a long time, been to: (1) dumb down, (2) make sick, and (3) keep poor we-the-people so that we're too busy just staying alive and getting along, and don't have time to get too uppity and check on what the crooks in high places are up to in advancing their relentless New World Order agenda.

Friends who are in the daily trenches of various levels of our educational systems complain to me (E.Y.) about the deplorable situations in which they try to function with some measure of integrity. And I'm not here talking about the need for bullet-proof vests in some classrooms, though that's sadly also a part of the scenery of the overall picture some of them must contend with.

This regular "crying on my shoulder" happens partly because a substantial aspect of my background was in the world of Education, specifically Higher Education, through affiliation in a number of capacities with several of the most prestigious of our so-called premier research universities.

The other reason friends in Education complain to me is because in 1988 I was "stupid" enough to write a seriously revealing article on the then-existing problems in Higher Education, especially concerning the baloney pouring out of our so-called prestige universities and how it was clogging the collective arteries of our society. Needless to say, that was a social no-no and had a lot to do with it being suggested I find other employment than where I was causing trouble at the time—M.I.T.

(My article generated an avalanche of mail for quite some time afterwards, the overwhelming majority of which was deeply complimentary about what I had to say. Many who read what I wrote—from the then teaching head of surgery at UCLA, to an Arizona Superior Court Justice, to high-ups in the academic and industrial worlds—all said the same thing: "Thank you for having the courage to write this; you really hit the nail on the head!" I can only commiserate with the even higher level of frustration and deeper state of degeneration in Education NOW, a dozen years later.)

Thus, I (and probably you, after you read the following) greatly appreciate and applaud the courage of ALL those who provided the "snapshots" of our current educational system that are shared below. These views cover a wide range of educational levels and circumstances, and uncomfortably illustrate how the New World Order agenda is being deftly implimented throughout our so-called "educational" machinery.

The view of "higher" education from the inside (by Professor Murray, one of the items we share below) strikes a particularly resonant chord with me—and ought to shock you parents who work so hard to scrape the money together to send junior off to college. The often outrageously expensive prestigious schools are in some ways actually worse than Professor Murray describes for the state schools, but the prestige schools do sell a fancier diploma which sometimes carries entry into certain "inside clubs". That is simply one of the variations on the "it's who you know, not what you know" concept.

As for the lofty realm of graduate and professional schools, especially the pressure-cookers associated with the most so-called prestigious research universities (wherein I served the majority of my prison time), the same sad situation still holds true—only the outflow of baloney is more sophisticated and the walking casualties infect society in more complicated ways.

(Don't you ever wonder about, say, all those conflicting medical reports you hear on the evening news where, for example, one day salt is found to be good for you, and the next it's absolute poison, and the third day you hear you should bathe in it, and then a week later you're supposed to stick it in your ears? And what about the MONEY trail behind such so-called "forefront research" which feeds these scientific prostitutes and colors their supposed objectivity? Never mind such socially inconvenient issues like common sense or basic integrity; how could scientists with any semblance of conscience ever have the "nerve" to carry out the kinds of research such as, say, Dr. Horowitz discusses in his well-researched books and he mentions, again, elsewhere in this issue of this newspaper? Maybe this is shocking news to some of you, but: the "best" universities are usually the ones which train the most "dangerous" of such professionals. I know all too well about which I speak!)

And by the way, to just about anybody who has asked me this question for the last 12-15 years, about where to go to school after high school, I answer: "to a good trade school"—for the kinds of reasons you'll see below. We have enough people running around in this world who don't KNOW anything of value and can't DO anything useful—yet their heads can't fit through most doorways.

With a special thanks to Mary S. for helping to guide this (and, on a regular basis, much other good information) to our attention, the following is, with great appreciation, reprinted from GOSPEL MINISTRY NEWS for August-September 2000.

The following article originally appeared in the Colorado Daily (Boulder), for which Linda Gorman is a regular columnist:

With No Obligation To Educate,
Schools Turn To Thought Control

by Linda Gorman

In case you were ever in doubt, the Colorado Court of Appeals has just made it official. Colorado public schools have no legally enforceable obligation to educate children. According to the court, parents and students cannot sue school districts because they are not private students enrolled in a private vocational school but, instead, consist of the general public. They have not individually bargained with the school district, nor individually paid for specific educational services. As a result, they cannot assert legal claims for the alleged failure to provide those unbargained-for services.

The Court found that the contention that the quality of education provided by the school district is inadequate is not a matter to be properly resolved by the courts. Had various courts not already found legal excuses for taking control of almost every other aspect of school operations, its restraint would be refreshing.

In other words, the state may require that children attend school and that everyone pay school taxes. In return, citizens get to vote for one of the slates of school board candidates offered by the teachers' union.

Though government entities are free to compel people to pay for lousy services over which they have little control, private entities are not. Private vocational schools failing to offer promised classes or hours of instruction can be sued.

Having mastered the art of pretending to educate those required to attend it, and having been freed of any responsibility to do otherwise, the Denver Public School System (DPS) is apparently planning to expand into pretending to provide mental, medical, and behavioral health services. To this end, the Center for Human Investment Policy at the University of Colorado, Denver, was asked to develop a health/behavioral health needs assessment survey to gather broader input to determine if principals, nurses, psychologists, social workers, teachers, and parents are in agreement about these issues.

Judging from the loaded questions, DPS officials want the power to pass judgment on the physical, mental, emotional, and social health of individual children, and to treat those problems as they see fit.

"What level of health and behavioral health care do you believe your school should provide?" asks question number 7. There is no space for telling DPS elites to stay out of health care delivery until they have mastered the art of delivering reading, writing, and arithmetic.

Note also that mental health and behavioral problems are lumped with medical ones, despite the fact that medicine has a scientific basis and most mental and behavioral health assessments consist of little more than someone's opinion. The potential for abuse, for drugging the rebels and brainwashing those who disagree, is huge and already beginning to be realized.

According to Jon E. Dougherty, writing in WorldNetDaily, Derek Loutzenheiser, a 12-year-old student with an exemplary record in Holland, Michigan, was labeled a potential violence risk when he suggested, in a Social Studies class discussion, that one way to prevent school shootings would be to arm instructors. School officials told his parents that they would not have to involve Social Services if Derek was separated from other students and forced to enter the school's Mentor program so that an adult supervisor could monitor his thought processes. Recall that Social Service bureaucrats have the power to declare parents guilty of child abuse until proven innocent, and to take their child from them until parents prove their innocence.

School officials noted that Derek had violated the school's policy of nonviolence by fighting back when attacked by three older students and had often spoken favorably about the First and Second Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. His parents noted that Derek had refused to sign a Red Letter vow of peace written by the principal that asked students to take an oath to turn in their friends for suspicious activity and to never defend themselves if attacked.

In short, Derek had refused to parrot the party line and was judged behaviorally unhealthy. The Soviets pioneered this model by declaring those who disagreed with the government mentally aberrant and imprisoning them in mental institutions until their thinking could be adjusted by psychological conditioning or drugs. At DPS one finds children, so it is the best place to offer health/behavioral health services; children need good health to learn, so health/behavioral health is a valid school concern, and children with health/behavioral health challenges need medical attention in schools to reach their potential.

DPS has a point. Judging from his behavior, Derek has already assimilated the independence and respect for truth characteristic of outstanding Americans. Without medical attention, he never will realize his full potential as a good little citizen in the New World Order.

REMINDING PARENTS WHO'S IN CHARGE

by Joseph Sobran
The Washington Times

"Make your blood boil? Well, I should say!" says Professor Henry Hill to the people of River City in The Music Man. He is, of course, warning of the dire effects of "a pool table in your community".

An item in The Washington Post made my own blood boil.

Worse even than a pool table in your community can be a government in your community.

The story concerns Donnamarie Coder of Woodbridge, VA, a suburb of Washington. She is divorced and has a mildly autistic 8-year-old son named Charles.

On his first day at school this year Charles had his lunch stolen. Since then he has been constantly teased, tripped, beaten up, and otherwise bullied. After two months of his crying, his mother couldn't stand it anymore. In November she pulled him out of the school, which she accuses of failing to protect him.

The school denies the charge, saying the boy has had all reasonable protection and hasn't suffered any more teasing than most kids.

But the school isn't in trouble. The mother is. She is charged with breaking school attendance laws. She could go to jail—and lose her son. “A real possibility is a jail term” says the Prince William County Commonwealth's Attorney Paul Ebert. “[State social services officials] would take custody of the child temporarily.”

Oh. Would Charles be safe then? Would he himself feel happier and more secure and better cared for in the custody of the state? Would he cry less? To ask these questions is to answer them.

There must be a low, hot place for people who would do that to a child in order to assert their own authority. And make no mistake, authority is the issue here. Even if Mrs. Coder has broken the law, you'd think humane rulers (to use the quaint word for those who have power over others) would make allowances for a woman who wasn't neglecting her child, but trying to protect him—after waiting two months for the school to do its job. Even if the government were completely in the right, a small fine would be penalty enough to make any reasonable point that needs making.

But the point is so obviously not Charles' welfare; nobody who cared about that would threaten to take him away from his mother. The point is the government's power. It must not be flouted. The woman was warned and she persisted in disobeying. Her child is not hers but the government's. She, and others, must be taught.

There have been numerous press reports in recent years of children being taken from their mothers on similar pretexts. Parents who are accused of failing as parents are often fatally easy to bully.

When the state, at any level, can break up families, what you have is tyranny, plain and simple. It usually happens because the population is abject enough to submit to it.

Any public official or employee who even threatens what Prince William County is threatening Mrs. Coder with belongs in jail. But under our form of government, even parental authority is enjoyed by the sufferance of the state and its officials. The judgment of whether a child is suffering unduly, and what should be done for him, belongs to them, not the child's parents.

So as I say, it's the mother, not her persecutors, who faces jail. “I'm protecting my son” she says. “I'm like a lion and her cub. I'm going to protect him no matter what. If protecting my son is a crime, I plead guilty.”

This is earthy talk. Notice that she doesn't talk political theory, she doesn't cite the Declaration Of Independence, the Constitution, or the U.N. Charter. She shouldn't have to. She only knows that what is being done to her and her son is wrong, and that's enough.

Mrs. Coder's story is far from the worst outrage perpetrated in this country by a government agency lately. But it does vividly illustrate how “public servants” can become the people's masters.

A VIEW FROM THE TRENCHES OF ACADEME

Excerpts of remarks by Professor Charles E. Murray to the American Institute For Economic Research Corporation. Mr. Murray is a member of the economics faculty at Truman State University, Kirksville, Missouri:

This evening I would like to comment on the errant state of American higher education and its social implications....

I will focus on four-year public colleges and universities for several reasons: namely, they are most heavily subsidized with taxpayer dollars; they attract the lion's share of students, or about two-thirds of the roughly six million now attending four-year colleges; and, after a score of years in the public trenches as a student and professor on such campuses, they are the institutions with which I am most familiar.

What is it like to spend a day in my shoes? I'll tell you. I once asked a senior finance major whether he thought the Federal Reserve had historically done a competent job in managing the nation's money supply. In response, I got an empty gaze. So I rephrased the question by adding a statement to nudge him in the right direction. I said, “Since the Fed's inception in 1913, the purchasing power of the dollar has fallen 90%.” Then I asked, “In your opinion, sir, has the Fed done a good job?” His forthright reply was, “Yes, I think so. The loss of purchasing power was probably due to inflation.”

If this story seems amusing, it is. If this story seems embellished or atypical, I assure you it is not.

I could easily fill my allotted time, and more, with such anecdotes. But I won't. What I have to say tonight about higher education isn't very comical.

How Much Does It Cost And Who Pays?

In 1994, expenditures at 4-year public schools totaled nearly $95 billion. Of this total, tuition accounted for 23%, while state appropriations contributed nearly double that, or 42%. The remaining third came from a variety of other sources, such as endowments, grants, gifts, and contracts. Today colleges rely much more heavily on grants, contracts, and voluntary giving for funding because state legislatures, as well as students and their parents, are less willing and/or able to “fork over” more.

How much of this almost $95 billion is allocated to instruction? Less than half. For every 100 students enrolled on campuses nationwide, there are approximately six faculty, both instructional and research, six professional staff, and eight nonprofessional staff.

From 1980 to 1994, per capita student costs rose from $6,500 to $14,500—an increase of 121%—while the Consumer Price Index (CPI) rose only 69%, so clearly the cost of college in real terms has increased sharply.

What Does $95 Billion Buy?

Are taxpayers, students, and parents getting their money's worth? A short discussion of courses and grades might help you decide the answer.

If anyone seriously doubts that college curriculums across the United States have not metamorphosed, all they need do is consult a current college catalogue. According to the National Association of Scholars, the average number of mandatory courses at the nation's top fifty undergraduate schools is two and one-half! Most of these colleges no longer require students to enroll in any history course. Two-thirds no longer require courses in either English composition or mathematics. None requires literature.

Given the abandonment of such traditional curricula, what, then, are students taking? (Note that I say “taking” as opposed to “studying”. A significant proportion of the classes offered these days don't require any studying.) 96% of all public 4-year schools now offer remedial instruction that in effect repeats instruction that should have been mastered in high school (or even grammar school). Reportedly students enroll in as many such courses as they can, and are awarded academic credit toward a college degree just as if they had been completing college-level studies.

What other nonsense qualifies for academic credit? At my university, which prides itself on academic integrity, the list includes the following: intercollegiate sports, freshman orientation, cheerleading, marching band, student senate, travel abroad, courses on writing resumes and cover letters, and so on. Internships can count for as much as a semester's worth of credits.

Don't get me wrong. These activities are worthwhile. But they are just that—activities. I don't consider drinking wine during a three-week bus tour of Italy worthy of six academic credits in history. If it is, I can understand why some schools dropped their history requirement from the curriculum. Why maintain the façade?

To be sure, then, curriculums have eroded. However, there is an even more insidious cancer sweeping college campuses—a decrease in academic standards that would likely prevail even in the absence of a decaying curriculum. It is not hard to see why.

In the last 20 years, the college-age population in the United States has dropped by 15%. In a scramble to maintain enrollments, colleges resort to admitting greater numbers of less-qualified students. Even if the college-age population did not drop, schools would still be drawing their prospective freshman class from a less-qualified pool of applicants.

The reason? In the last 25 years, the SAT scores have fallen by sixty points—even though the test itself has been “dumbed down” in response to complaints of bias allegedly revealed in the divergent scores of those tested.

Most professors in the public trenches probably would readily admit that a disturbing percentage of today’s incoming freshmen lack not only the base of factual knowledge possessed by previous generations of high school graduates, but also the ability to construct and express a simple logical argument. To a distressing extent, new college students today seem to have grown to expect reward for expressing their feelings instead of their thoughts.

It’s no secret that freshmen are less prepared than ever for college. But surely, once on campus they are hard pressed to get up to speed, aren’t they? Don’t bet on it.

Recent research found that over 75% of all students study fewer than 17 hours per week outside of class. That’s less than one hour per credit hour per week. Even if one assumed students attended each and every class—a very courageous assumption, I assure you—and they studied at least 17 hours per week—which most don’t—the total time spent doing course work each week would add up to about 30 hours, or about the equivalent of what one might work in a part-time job. The vacations aren’t bad either. During the past century, the academic year has been shortened from an average of 204 class days per year to just 156 days.

This state of affairs has fostered a revealing paradox. That is, in as much as the quality of incoming students has declined and those students are spending less time in class and less time studying, one might expect that their grades would be falling. But they aren’t. In fact, grade-point averages across university campuses are rising. The “gentlemanly C” has been replaced by the “lordly B”. At my university, the most frequently assigned grade is an “A”, and more than 80% of all grades are either “A” or “B”.

So what does $95 billion buy these days? It buys a degree, but not necessarily an education.

Broader Social Effects

The degradation of education injures society when those who either want or need higher-order thinking skills are short-changed by colleges that don’t deliver them. How can society benefit from institutions that tell students what to think instead of teaching them how to think?

It could be argued that the current crisis in higher education, for the most part, is inconsequential. Why? Because most jobs that now require a college degree do not require a college education. Most jobs could be performed successfully by graduates of trade schools or community colleges. For many employers, a degree merely certifies that the person had four years to mature, during which time he or she had to meet arbitrary standards, complete unappealing and boring assignments, submit to authority without complaint, and persevere. These are precisely the qualities that business and industry tend to value in employees. Most students enrolled in college today are there so they can get these types of jobs, not an education.

Still, there is reason to be concerned. As a taxpayer, I simply object to financing this nonsense. My other objection is based on my professional training as an economist. It is that the system is incredibly inefficient.

What Is The Problem?

The problem, as I see it, is largely rooted in the educational institutions themselves. Supposedly, public education was established and supported to serve the public interest. Today, however, colleges seem to exhibit the special-interest behavior: that is, academic bureaucracies seek mainly to maximize their own power and guarantee their own welfare with little respect to the best interests of the public. To maximize its welfare, a bureaucracy will typically defend its autonomy, avoid conflict with other groups that could curtail its power and prestige, and attempt to increase the size of its budget. Do most colleges behave in this fashion? Yes.

What Might Be Done?

Central to any learning process would seem to be development of a student’s powers of observation, conjecture, and decision making—the ability to apply reason to whatever environment or field of inquiry is encountered, be it ancient texts, numerical data, or whatever.

Raising standards is next. First, entrance requirements should be increased. This means that fewer people will be able to attend college. What will those people do who don’t earn a degree? The same things they do now with one.

Once enrolled the focus should be on “stretching” the students instead of worrying about “stressing” them. As the adage observes: “In education, nothing works if the students don’t.” Professors have an obligation to students, their parents, and other taxpayers to restore the “discipline” in the term “academic discipline”. The aim is not to kill the student, but rather, reestablish the behavior required in the pursuit of knowledge.

As a yardstick to the accomplishment of such discipline, a student’s grade should reflect his or her mastery of the subject matter. If a “C” describes average performance, how is it possible for the student body as a whole to maintain a “B” average? Outside of the mythical “Lake Wobegon”, how can everybody, on average, be above average? They can’t.

Finally, education might properly be viewed as a privilege, not a right. College ought not be an entitlement, and all direct funding of school operating budgets, as well as all direct aid to students, ought to be terminated. It would force schools to realign their priorities and cut programs, centers, offices, divisions, and the like not central to the main educational task.

How To Make This Cleansing Cycle Work For You

9/1/00 HATONN

Good afternoon, my scribe. I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source—The One Light. Be at peace and be still, for it is from within the stillness of mind that the quiet whisperings of Source can be recognized and translated.

There is a need to clarify mission objectives for those of you who are seeking Guidance as to what is what and who is who. I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, of the Inter-Galactic Federation of Sovereign Planets, come in volunteer service to your planet as a member of the Host of God (Creator Source—The One Light). We of the Host are here as Messengers and Guides, as your planet goes through a transformation process that we commonly refer to as a “graduation”. It is God’s promise to you and your planet that He would send His Messengers—Angels—so that each would have every possible opportunity to successfully complete the lessons that this transformation process has to offer.

The name Hatonn is a symbolic representation of my energy, and carries with it symbolic meaning to many of you who are of what we commonly refer to as Ground Crew. The name is simply to help you to associate and conceptualize an individuality which does not really exist, for we are ALL one. If my chosen label causes you confusion, then I will remind you—as I have many times prior, through many different scribes and translators—to discern the message offered and please do not get hung-up on the name, else you will surely miss the point.

You of Ground Crew will know me moreso by my ENERGY presence. From where I generally operate, we are more of an energy signature commonly referred to as a “group soul” or “group consciousness”. Feel for yourself the energy offered herein, and go within and consult with what your heart tells you. The mind is easily played with by the adversarial forces; however, the heart will always give you the answer, for within you there will be a resonance and a recognition of familiarity. If not, then I strongly suggest this information is not for you, and that you would be wise to seek guidance elsewhere.

As you each, on an individual basis, keep your frequency up, you are literally helping to facilitate the flow of Higher Inspirational Energies into the planetary consciousness. This is the single most beneficial endeavor that you, as Ground Crew, can do to assist the planetary consciousness as a whole.

At the present time, our focus is to help as many of you as we can to cope with the Cleansing Cycle that is now well underway. This we do through offering educational information that will help you to help yourselves. We are constantly offering to you reminders and techniques that will help you keep your frequency as high as possible.

“What do you mean by ‘my frequency’?” some may be asking.

All of Creation, regardless of dimension, time, or location—physical or non-physical (relative to your perspective)—has an “energy signature”. The energy is, in its most basic form, what you recognize as light. This energy signature is an electromagnetic pulse-wave which has a frequency associated with it (or ensemble of frequencies, like several instruments in an orchestra playing together).

The energy signature can be (and IS) modified through the consciousness of the soul.

(The soul-you is that which results when God “breathes the breath of Life” into one of His creations.) The consciousness of the soul-you has the ability to modify (modulate) the vibrations of the electromagnetic pulse-wave universe through the deliberate focus and projection of thought.

The physical body responds to the frequency of the emotional energy state of the entity who controls said body. When an individual is laboring under great fear, worry, or other stress (low frequency), the body tends to deteriorate. Conversely, when the individual operates in a state of joyful exuberance or other such expression (high frequency), there will be a revitalizing effect on the physical apparatus—not to mention the positive effect on those with whom you may interact.

These physiological changes are a physical result of the non-physical energy emanations we refer to as “your frequency” when we say something like “keep your frequency up”. In essence, we are reminding you to stay centered and balanced and find the joy that every day has to offer, despite the many challenges with which you may be faced.

As you each, on an individual basis, keep your frequency up, you are literally helping to facilitate the flow of Higher Inspirational Energies into the planetary consciousness. This is the single most beneficial endeavor that you, as Ground Crew, can do to assist the planetary consciousness as a whole.

This Cleansing Cycle that you are now in is brought about because you are immersed within the natural upward frequency shift of the planetary energies as a whole. The fundamental frequency of your planet (detected through what you call the Schumann Resonance), as measured by your scientists, was around 7 Hz for many, many years. Since the 1980s it has been observed to be rising, and today it is measured to be over 12 Hz—well on its way to doubling.

The most notable (and somewhat distracting or annoying) byproduct of this rising frequency is the perception of time speeding up. This is to say that there seems to be less hours in the day to get things done.

The Cleansing Cycle will be the mechanism by which MANY will be “weeded from the garden” so to speak. Many ones harbor great guilt, shame, lies, etc., that they wish to bury and suppress out of embarrassment of the truth. This results in inner emotional “pressures” that are being amplified within these ones as the difference in frequency continues to widen the gap between where they are operating and where they would be if they were matching (keeping up with) the natural background frequency of the planet.

This difference (gap) will be most felt in the heart area, for the heart will yearn for the higher-frequency state and the balance to be had by achieving same. The mind will resist, for the ego will try to hold fast because the fear of embarrassment is perceived as an insurmountable obstacle.

Learn to set aside the fears and allow the TRUTH of who and what you are to be shown. It has been stated before that “confession is good for the soul” and so it is. Confess to yourself that you were less than perfect; truly forgive yourself and thus dissolve the anchors of fear weighing you down unnecessarily.

These higher frequencies will result in a higher state of consciousness, wherein more and more people will begin to recognize and utilize their psychic abilities. In effect, there will be no lie left unexposed, for those who would naturally try to manipulate and deceive will be seen as ridiculous and immature. The planet-wide consciousness that is evolving will not be conducive to those who rely on manipulation and deceit. Thus the majority of the so-called “elite” game-players will find that their illusion of power and control will quickly slip away.

We address this Cleansing Cycle in some detail for we see that many of you do not make a conscious connection between your inner stresses of day-to-day living and the fact that your environment is changing. We witness many ones, who have been together for 30 or more years, separating and going their own ways. We see great tensions building between loved ones as each tries to deal with their own inner struggle to confront emotional unrest. Many of you are crying out for understanding of just what is this nagging anxiety that seems to keep growing. Some of you are blaming external things, such as your job, for your added level of stress. Please take time to truly consider the phenomenon and effects of the shifting environmental conditions of your planet.

Go easy on one another, for it is becoming more and more common for you ones to lash out at one another for what seem to be very trivial matters. These are clues, and you CAN become the bigger person and allow for another to blast you with their anger. Know that, with every “blasting” you endure, you are helping the other to get one step closer to finding and confronting that elusive and nagging “something” that keeps them so weighted down. The “something” here will be different for each, but it will have common traits; guilt, shame, anger, blame, fear, and embarrassment will be among the most common traits.

Such pressures as result from this sort of frequency mismatch need not be a part of your experience. For some, your planetary conditions are merely “part of the play” and make for an interesting — if sometimes lively — experience. These ones have learned long ago that there is no good reason to dwell upon the negativity of the past; these ones have learned to keep their “temple” clean and flexible as a natural way of living.

We see that many ones are struggling with these frequency upshifts. In some extreme cases there are those who hold-on tightly to elaborate illusions of deceit they have created. We see these ones approaching a state of psychotic breakdown as their illusion is pierced and large chunks become transparent, and their façade crumbles before the eyes of those who they wish to hide from the most.

This Cleansing Cycle need not be such a struggle. Within you each is the answer to any question you could possibly ask. You each have the Divine right to go directly to Creator Source and seek your own personal counsel. There is a balanced solution to every situation. It will involve creativity, ingenuity, perseverance, patience, determination—and of course it will be centered around your relationship with God.

If you feel these annoying sorts of inner tensions in your life, take a moment to find a point of balance and call upon The Light (symbolic representation of all that is positive and good—Creator Source, God) and see that Light filling you from within. See it centered in your heart and radiating outward until it completely engulfs your body and beyond. This alone WILL result in an upward frequency shift and is a good place to begin.

Now, ask for Guidance and Protection for self as well as others; envision this same Light around others whom you may perceive as possibly having a difficult time with the Cleansing Cycle. When a heartfelt effort is made to help another, there will always be an amplification and multiplication of your effort, and the return energy will do wonders for your own wellbeing. The more you practice putting Light around others, the more energy you will find you have to continue to do so.

Above all else, please learn and practice forgiveness and compassion for all ones, despite your perceived differences. You of Ground Crew are there to assist ALL ones, not just some select few. Become an example for others to follow. Practice openly that which you know to be RIGHT, HONORABLE and JUST. Learn to flow the Light of Creator Source to all ones you may encounter, whether they be the traffic cop who stops you for speeding, or the clerk who bags your groceries. There are no strangers in your experience, for WE ARE ALL ONE, and to help another is to truly help yourself.

In summary, the mission of we of the Host of God is to assist in this Great Planetary Transition (graduation for some) by offering our assistance, both in the physical and in the nonphysical, in any and every way we see, so as to maximize your own personal growth without usurping your free will. Our methods are to offer assistance, not to force or coerce any ones into doing or believing anything.

May you each be diligent in your search for Knowledge and Truth. Please discern for yourself the message offered herein, as to the intent, truthfulness, usefulness, and timeliness of same.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in service to The One Light, Creator Source, so that we ALL may maximize the benefits and growth potential afforded to us each (both collectively and individually) at this very grand time in the evolutionary cycle of a planetary transformation.

Blessings and peace to you ALL! Salu.

Become an example for others to follow. Practice openly that which you know to be RIGHT, HONORABLE and JUST. Learn to flow the Light of Creator Source to all ones you may encounter....

Ramtha Article Correction

Some of the Ramtha students have by now, no doubt, caught the two mis-speaks in last month’s edition of The SPECTRUM newspaper [Vol. 2, No. 3; August 2000]. For purposes of accuracy, we will correct those now.

On page 29 of that Front-Page story on the Ramtha school, please note that The Two Paths transcription is taken from the 3-video-tape set of the same name, produced in October 1999. It does not have anything to do with The Golden Thread newsletter.

Also, during the interview with Joe Szimhart, Rick Martin made the incorrect statement that JZ Knight was on an international tour. The fact is, she is, and has been, right there in Yelm. Her ongoing schedule is available at the Ramtha School of Enlightenment’s website.

Our apologies for these errors.

Beyond The Veil: Visions For A New World

Editor's note: Robert Ghost Wolf is no stranger to the readers of this publication. Rather, he is a friend and respected Native American spokesman who manages to keep one foot planted in this world and the other in the world of Spirit—despite the demands of being pulled in many directions.

Some of you may remember our Front Page story for the December 1999 issue of this newspaper titled Robert Ghost Wolf's Vision: Winds Of Change. Where Do We Go From Here? His comments, as part of an interview with Rick Martin, offered a provocative look into the new century and talked in down-to-Earth terms about the out-of-this-world New Reality that is manifesting all around us at an ever accelerating pace at this time.

The following Inspired message picks up where his earlier vision left off and places squarely in front of each of us both a challenge and a responsibility for what is rapidly coming to pass. Readers who savor the "received" spiritual messages regularly featured in this newspaper (and collected together in the WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach volumes) will find that familiar ring of confirmation when Truth is being shared.

Thank you, Robert, for sharing this message with us. And thank you, Robert's Higher Guides and Teachers, for your loving efforts through Robert to help us all awaken to our True Potential.

8/9/00 ROBERT GHOST WOLF

Look to your heavens, for the gathering is well underway. During this next year, and continuing into the next, you will see increasing displays of activities in your heavens. Already there are those amongst the galactic fleets who have made alliances with those upon the plane of terra to accommodate the new technologies and consciousness that need be administered to humanity to help it through this period of transition before the final shiftings of this present consciousness.

Presently Mother Earth is in bondage and conflict of dream outcome. She is struggling through the bondage of manipulated time/space realities. Also, her body is in much physical pain due to the extreme pollution that has occurred unchecked upon this plane. The leaders of our governments have been given an exact period of time in which they were directed to do something about this situation. This period is nearing an ending. Now renewed measures will intensify to clean up the planet—quickly—or Mother Earth herself will be in danger of collapsing and not being able to sustain human life. This has happened before, during the time of Atlantis.

The consciousness of humanity is also reflecting the experiences of its holy Mother and giver of life. In the next turning of the seasons, the presence of our brothers from beyond the Sun will become integrated openly within your societies. There will be the playing out of very old dramas and contests in your heavens. The nature of your reality will be changed forever more from the thickness it has become. The remembering of your true heritage, as well as your family ties to those beyond the stars, is already occurring within your physical bodies. Like a cosmic alarm clock, you are being awakened to the sounds of the heavens. Celestial resonance is activating your cellular memories now at a very rapid rate.

The primary intentions of this activity are to assist humanity into the halo-leap that is required for the next phase of our evolution. The rate of change is increasing again, and what is necessary to make the adjustments into the increased frequencies accessible to us will be implemented.

Remember that what is occurring at this time cannot yet be perceived by the allowed consciousness upon the plane of terra. A new plane is opening—or shall we say that the one we are experiencing is morphing into another realm of its own unique nature. It shall prove to be similar, but very different than what has been previously perceived as reality. Yes, much more God-Man, God-Woman realized. But know that the shifting can be exhausting physically, as well as emotionally trying, for the fluctuations of highs and lows will be commonplace.

This will cause much stress upon the body, so allow for the body to restore and reorganize to its new frequencies. Remember: this is change. You are finding new realities—both that are obvious, and many more that are in the greater yet more subtle energy fields that make up our reality experience.

If you look around and really read the news and watch what is occurring around you, you will notice that the extent of the changes over the last year have been enormous in your life. No doubt you are now looking at things from an entirely different perspective than you did last year at this time. Many things are materializing, and yet many things are no longer in your scope of reality. Relationships have taken compete turn-arounds, and you are being tested to a great degree on your standards of honor and impeccability.

The Christ energies are moving into their natural positions now, and the work that was done by so many in 1994 is now coming into alignment. It can be so difficult to grasp this reality when we are still trapped in the illusion of time and mortality. But we are to acknowledge ourselves now for our outstanding job in expressing our desire of peace and gradual transition; we have indeed altered the course of what was in the "headlines" just a few short years ago as an outcome for Mother Earth and her people.

But it is not yet time to rest on our laurels, for we are now at a new beginning point. We are ushering the actual physical qualities of the new reality. Look around you: even the flora is changing its cycles and its very nature.

Much too much emphasis is being placed on man's abilities to control and manipulate everything. We are forgetting the unbelievable powers of Source in the creation of this whole scenario—which is why Source so richly deserves the title of Great Mystery.

Ah, there are things afoot that man cannot explain despite all the efforts to control. Mankind has, in this time, the ability to change our consciousness through working with the changes with which we are now having to deal on an everyday basis. Many things that are reality today were just dreams a few years ago—in thought.

Expect some very interesting activities in our heavens this July and August. Expect new and remarkably undeniable evidence to surface regarding Mars and your Moon and the goings-on between there and here. As you watch your news and the night skies, this will be evident to you. No words will be necessary; everyone will know we are not alone. Nibiru, which has already been acknowledged by our scientists, is approaching at an ever-increasing speed. The prophecies of the Seventh Thunder are about open upon us.

Many ancient things which went by unheeded will now become everyday news items, so to speak.

It will become evident that Nibiru is not a planet at all, but rather an artificial structure. This will cause many reality bubbles, which are now restraining the advancement of our race, to access our total potential as beings. We are bursting at the seams, so to speak—much like children who so quickly outgrow their clothing. It amazes us, and we are made aware of the degree of change which has actually occurred.

The extreme adjustments occurring in our lives will be complete, meaning these changes and quick changing of frequencies will affect every level of our being. Allow yourself and those around you the grace of change. Much of what is occurring is beyond their ability to alter. Only how we go through the dance is left to us to handle or not handle.

Think of it as though you just fed your houseplants some growth hormones and they are just exploding with flora and new shoots. Expect many new technologies, which have been previously held back by archaic thinking and corrupt corporate procedures, to emerge in the next three years. It must be realized that much too much energy has been given over to the corporate structures, which are now running your very lives, even attempting to control your spiritual realities.

You have surrendered your wills on many levels and it is causing problems in your social order. However, much of this is growth pains and will cause a new way of dealing with things in your now-emerging future. Also, it should be considered that a lot of this has to do with the rate of abductions and interaction with those who we call the Grays. They have spawned many children amongst the urban populations, where their presence is less likely to draw attention, and there are many hybrids now walking around this plane. It is quite commonplace.

Many, many of us will seem almost overnight and without explanation to gain access to a knowingness we have only dreamed could occur. Yes, we have struggled for many decades now to bring this change about in the way of The Truth and The Light, but for some it has been an arduous and long journey, with many upsets and reversals.

We must pay a lot of attention to our bodies, more than we ever have.

These new awarenesses that are flooding the consciousness during this next 13-month cycle will give us an attitude of expecting miracles. But if we are not attuned to the newer and higher frequencies, we will miss out on much of the joy. Also, we could become physically ill, as there are forces at work in this plane correcting the maladies that have caused the dilemmas that exist in our consciousness. They are, if you will, part of the Christ consciousness, and act much like antibiotics work in the body to combat disease. Where consciousness remains fixed and ridged, it will be altered as it is deemed necessary by Source. We have only to combat our own resistance to the shifting of the universal consciousness at this time.

We need to allow the new consciousness to manifest within. The process has already begun.

I have long spoken of this approaching time as a time of graduation. That is exactly what is occurring. You could say that, for various levels, the graduation ceremonies have commenced.

Many things will result with these new gifts being released upon this plane. You have worked for them and now they will be accessible. However, if you have not properly worked at your disciplines, and do not walk in the impeccability of your being, and reconnect to Source, you will experience difficulties in adjusting. The emphasis is on becoming less rigid, and much, much more flexible. Sort of do nothing and accomplish it all, yet stand still and you will be run over by the force of what is occurring.

You will experience this new level of awareness on all five of your levels of the present perception. For those who can feel and remain conscious of the sixth and seventh, expect anything. The boundaries have been lifted. You might even ascend, so be clear and certain to pick your circumstance and time for all that occurs. It is time to walk in balance, and as the God Child you are. This is the age of responsibility.

You will also notice, if you hold on to your God-man, God-Woman Will, there really is nothing preventing you from making the changes in your life you so dictate; there never has been. The block has been only in your ability to accept or deny the responsibility for effecting the change and taking the action. In other words, we are a very lazy lot until provoked, and that is about to occur on every level conceivable. Expect whatever you are creating to intensify; literally everything will intensify in flavor.

So, for some of you who have been lagging around and thinking that you could attend to the required attitude changes, well, expect a wild ride! And best to judge nothing and no one—else you might become it.

Whatever your actions, so shall you experience. And in many instances it will be almost instantaneously felt. So, walk softly, and know ye are God.

Many things that might have seemed to so many of you, who held on to hope and the dream, to just be out of reach, will begin to occur in this new energy cycle. Yes, there is a New Season being born, and like Spring, it comes to different areas at different times.

A lot of the new physical energy is coming from our Sun, and being guided by, shall we say, Celestial Assistants—special Angels, you might say. There is Darkness afoot, but Light reigns supreme in this next 13-month cycle. Remember that, in the old calendar, July was the first month of the new cycle, and none of that has ever really changed in the heavens. Expect yourself to find yourself saying often to yourself: “Well, I’ll be! Is this really happening to me?”

You are going to have to unload all your past-life baggage. All of it.

If you don’t do this voluntarily, then you can expect there to be a shaking. The key issues here are your judgments and fears: judgments of yourself, as well as others. If you saw yourself in a new light, then what you see in others would follow course. This will, as well, bring around a very necessary change in attitude, and your learning to love yourselves, as you stop looking for your validation from others.

I have taught, for many years now, the necessity for developing our capabilities for Compassion and Forgiveness. Now you are going to find out why. No matter what comes toward you, turn not from the Light that the Father-Mother God in you knows that it is; turn not, for the path is open now for you to create the consequence of the future reality.

We are all artists painting a Divine Landscape; the canvas is clean and the palette is new. It is as if we have had, in many instances, the cataracts removed from our eyes. At first it will be slightly uncomfortable, this new display of the Light, almost blinding, because we are not accustomed to looking directly into the Light. It will be, to many of us, as though the journey has changed in nature. We will start to realize that we have already arrived. Only the circumstances of our unexpected arrival or awakening are to be adjusted. And to this, expect much drama, for we are thespians, all, upon this stage of dreams.

Now, reality is to be intensified as well. Many of us might wake up to find that we are, in fact, surrounded by those who do not really

Miracles do not happen in contradiction to Nature, but only in contradiction to that which is known to us of Nature.

—Saint Augustine (354-430)

wish to interact with us to our best desires. Also, we might expect to find that circumstances have shifted suddenly, and irreversibly. It is the circumstances of your chosen attitudes that are creating the magnet that has so long held you to old (and no longer useful) energies, patterns, habits.

Now suddenly you will find yourself in circumstances where these old patterns of reality no longer apply for you.

You will see the falsity and the hypocrisy of many people during this part of the change. Work on your compassion and forgiveness energy; allow and be willful of being a spiritual and peaceful person never meant to be wishy-washy.

No, quite the opposite. It is time for you to make changes, own up to them, and make it your obligation to own the new dream.

Just pick up your feet! “It’s time to go” as was said once long ago in a Pink Floyd song. You can change no one. It is not your right, nor your privilege. That is their own responsibility.

For many of us, we are going to become aware of a feeling as though we are on the other side of a veil. Things will appear as though they are the same, yet everything will be different. You will realize quickly that almost every detail of the picture has been worked out, so to speak. Much of this is due to the awakening to the subtle body, and the access to awareness that the merging, at least a certain degree of it, has been accomplished—that you have “arrived” and now must act in a different manner, like learning to walk all over again.

As you reach the moment of realization, and you no longer need the lesson, things will go from you; you will be released. This will, in some circumstances, happen quite suddenly, as if someone just turned on a switch. One minute you are sitting, waiting for your apple pie, and in the next you will be sitting there going: “Apple pie, I detest apple pie! Peach! I distinctly ordered peach!”

Understand that there is still polarity upon this plane. And that, on one hand, you will be experiencing and witnessing these seemingly miraculous changes, and the complete washing away of pain and conflict—while on the other side of the field of vision the conflict will actually be increasing.

Remember the key word here: EVERYTHING will intensify. You might be headed right toward an outcome, and wham, the rug will seemingly be pulled out from under you. That is because either you were headed in the wrong direction, or your efforts were so great that you changed the outcome entirely, so the circumstances altered. Wham! Just like that!

Hang in there, and remember that this is a dream. Don’t lose your sense of direction and you will come around and reestablish your new route to the already emotionally chosen destination point you made in your heart.

Develop fluid flexibility. Expect change! After all, it is natural.

Remember you are much more than human; you are a spiritual being having a human experience. It is not the other way around! Only monkeys see it that way. So fess up—which are you? There is no fooling Mother-Father God, and when God plays games with reality—heads up—master control has just been overridden!

You, me, everyone on this plane has a contract. We all came in with a chosen role to play out in the human drama. Now it is time to bring the beef to the table. Nothing can alter that; there is no avoidance, not this time.

Regarding past karma, you are released; but new karma, you must learn to be aware of what you are doing. This is either self-taught, through experience, or the intensity of the experience will be turned up a bit. So, for many of us, the game is about to shift into advanced “Dungeons and Dragons”.

What is occurring is your own God affecting the circumstance of your “dance” upon this plane, and it is imperative that you are fully aware of the circumstances you are creating which are resulting in the nature of your reality experienced. Thoughts, feelings, actions create the nature of reality.

Remember: YOU are the Divine Instrument which receives the Gifts of Life; and, as well, YOU are the transmitter who creates Life’s conditions. What you do—in terms of thoughts, feelings, actions—will affect everything around you, and everyone, as well. You are going to see the web of life. And that which has not been seen will be known, for all that is hidden shall be revealed.

In this new reality we will learn quickly that

WE are the Power of Love, the expression of the living God upon the Earth. It is time for us to receive and take on the responsibility of the wearing of the mantle of the new kingdom. We are powerful and incredible beings who are changing the outcome of reality every moment of our experience. All of us are the children of the living Mother-Father God—what we know as Source, which extends to every corner of the universe. Therefore, we are God-Man, God-Woman incarnate upon this plane.

As we begin to realize that attitude affects hormone flow that affects the aging process, we will simultaneously realize that we were never meant to die, that there is no death—only metamorphosis. That FEAR is the Angel of Darkness, the Bringer of Death and LOVE is the Bringer of the Dawn.

As we come to own this realization, personally and intimately, we will begin to understand the teaching of the Masters throughout the ages. This wisdom is alive within each and every one of us—IF we have the courage to grasp its essence and live its truth. It is no secret; it is right out in the open and always has been. Fear is that powerful an emotion.

Presently you understand this on certain levels of your reality, but with the changes at hand, you will have the opportunity to own this on every level of your being. All along the pathway you have perceived a strategy which allowed you to create the nature of your reality according to this unseen, yet Divine, timetable. You are right on schedule! Welcome to the Awakening.

This process will affect the collective as well as the individual, causing complete and utter transformation. You are surrounded in great abundance; it is a river without end. Just reach out and look at all that surrounds you. Look at all you have created. In many ways you have fallen asleep, and have forgotten the attributes and great power there is in Gratitude.

You are taking your miracles for granted; you are disenchanted even with your own potential. If you are losing energy, it is because you are letting go of the vision—your vision. You have compromised yourself and now it is time to bring it all back home. All that you have experimented with, searched for, bring it back home and take an accounting. It is all there before you. Your energy is no longer focused; you have lost your objective. Come back! It is OK. You are doing just fine. Live your truth and you will find the source of new energy.

You are reaching out for stimuli beyond the normal because you have forgotten to feel the gratitude of your own Divine Process. Look. It is all about you. See your own truth; see your own creations; everything in your life is a result of your thoughts—everything!

The power of gratitude is a part of the White Buffalo Medicine of the Native

Joke of the Day

One day an atheist was out hunting for deer when he heard something behind him. He turned around to see that it was a bear. The bear got closer, so the frightened atheist decided to give prayer a try. “God, I know I denied you so many times, that it would be foolish for me to ask you to help me, so I ask you to please make the bear a Christian.” When he finished his prayer, the bear got down on its knees. The atheist got closer, and heard the bear was saying: “God, bless this food I’m about to eat.”

American. Did you take notice that, when one means. was taken down, and the people went to prayer with gratitude for its having been here and the message of love and hope it had brought—another was born almost immediately. The power of renewal is in the gratitude for the miracle of life. Your life, the existence of the flora, the butterfly, all of it—this is the grandest dance you have ever experienced, ever! You are being showered in the give-away; the very breath you breathe is a gift!

Many events upon this plane are coming to closure. The unfoldment of the Anti -Christ is imminent. Realize that the drama will unfold as we have dreamt it. For so many lifetimes we have called it forth, and called it forth. Now it is manifesting. The Darkness along with the Light; the Fear along with the Miraculous—no one will not see the fulfillment of their thought. Now, stop for a moment and realize what that means—what that really Though all this will be witnessed in the panorama before you, YOU also will have your dream fulfilled. You who have held to The Light for so long will not be without your manifestations either. Stand up and be counted; learn to join together instead of wallowing in your greatness and creating separation, thinking you are greater than your brother or sister. Where did this corruption enter the dream and plug-up your venue for Divine Knowing?

How many thoughts did you have this morning? That is how many potential outcomes you have. Develop the ability to choose your reality. Develop a “4-D Reality” of Discernment, Discretion, Desire, and Detachment. You are in this world to master it, but you are not of it. No, you are made of other stuff, God Stuff, so Lighten up!

The moment of Miracle is upon you. What will you have? Yes, it is your choice now.

Do you have the courage to reach out and touch your truth?

Are you willing to jump over the fences of your prison? Do you believe in yourself enough to allow your Spirit to guide you? Then your freedom is at hand, and freedom is not lightly owned; it is experienced in the moment.

When you awake in the morrow of your days, I leave you to contemplate this thought:

Look deeply into the mirror as you wash your face, and brush your pearly whites, and fuss up. Take one moment, just one moment, and completely, with all the passion that is within you, look deeply into that person’s eyes—and behold God! Now, how is YOUR God going to live out the rest of the day with your image out of the way? Try it and you will see the change has already begun!

Praise From Our Readers

“You people are absolutely in-CREDIBLE!!! as in FULL SPECTRUM using full steam ahead, Amazing Grace in Lighted gratitude.” — M.L. of WA

“I want to thank you all for your work. Your work has helped me so very much in my own search as to what is. I will be 70 this September and the older I get...I realize how so very little of The Truth of what is I actually feel that I know.” — R.A. of MN

“Thank you for your continued dedication and efforts in putting out The Truth. I look forward to SPECTRUM each month with great excitement and expectation. The first of each month I start counting the days until it arrives.” — A.A. of BC

“Dear Light Workers, Thank you beyond words for your service to this planet and humankind as we learn and pass our lessons on how to really LOVE.” — M.L. of WA

“I am a body worker and healer. This morning a client of mine showed me the article on Sai Baba. I had heard about his fondness for young boys when in Germany visiting Mother Meeva. My client said she has a friend who has a son who was molested by him. I never spoke about this. It is good to find a source willing to print The Truth. I look forward to my subscription. God bless.” — P.W. of AZ

“In science fiction, space and time warps are commonplace. They are used for rapid journeys around the galaxy, or for travel through time. But today's science fiction is often tomorrow's science fact.”

“Rapid space-travel, or travel back in time, can't be ruled out, according to our present understanding.”

— Professor Stephen Hawking, author of A Brief History Of Time and Black Holes And Baby Universes, And Other Essays; quotes excerpted from the www.hawking.org website.

Time travel—the very words evoke exotic images. H.G. Wells found himself rocketed to fame soon after he wrote The Time Machine in 1895 because it struck nerves of curiosity and excitement with the public as well as largely introducing the new literary realm of scientific fantasy. But was it really fiction then? Is it still fiction now?

Just imagine being able to travel back and listen to Christ deliver the Sermon on the Mount. Imagine witnessing the signing of the Declaration Of Independence and sitting in on the debates surrounding the formation of the U.S. Constitution. Imagine slipping into a front-row seat for the Gettysburg address. Or sitting-in on the secret meetings which formed the privately-owned, money-laundering racket known as the Federal Reserve

What Shall Become Of The SPECTRUM?

In one way or another, all three of the spiritual messages (as well as other articles) in this whopper of an issue of The SPECTRUM suggest that we are rapidly approaching a critical decisional crossroads in our planetary evolution. Observing the pageantry of wars, rumors of wars, and other decadence being promoted in the various news broadcasts, it's difficult NOT to imagine the blow-up of a World War III just around the corner—as the moral fabric of the entire planet seems to be disintegrating right before our eyes.

Likewise, we here at The SPECTRUM find ourselves at a similar critical decisional crossroads as I write this. As some of you may realize, we operate at a tremendous financial loss every month. We are able to bring you this very over-sized yet under-priced unique publication ("university course notes", if you read what I wrote last month here) because of the gracious donations which keep us afloat.

While many generous souls help out the best they can within their means, sometimes faithfully every month, that total amounts to about 5% of our bare-bones monthly operating expenses. That means "someone" is helping to the tune of 95% of the total load.

What happens, then, if that "someone" is unable to help at that level for awhile? It means we have a problem and I (actually we, the staff) have to consider the question of whether we may have to suspend publication for awhile.

Let me explain how the same "disintegrating moral fabric" that I mentioned above for the world scene affects the equation here, too. How people conduct themselves—especially in terms of energy flows (which most certainly includes money)—is an interesting thing to watch from where we sit. Do you know about "the givers" and "the takers"? Let me example:

We used to have a policy of giving away a free sample copy of The SPECTRUM to anyone who asked. We reluctantly had to change that policy recently because of "the takers". (You'll see a notice about the new, more equitable policy on page 4 of this paper.) People call (at our telephone expense, of course) REGULARLY with one excuse or another for requesting their free issue. We even recognize some of the voices!

Then we received a bunch of calls—get this—from one particular area we won't mention in the State of Washington. This happened for awhile "coincidentally" after Rick's Front Page story on the Ramtha group up there. The requests weren't just general. Oh, no. They asked SPECIFICALLY for that particular issue of The SPECTRUM—for free, of course.

One cannot help but wonder if these are the same people who never thought twice about paying many thousands of dollars to attend Ramtha seminars. Do you think any of these "takers" offered to—perish the thought—purchase a back issue for $5 or—I'm about to faint—pay for an actual subscription to the paper?

You see why I linked the troubling crossroads of the world scene with SPECTRUM's personal observations? It seems that, in either arena—in ANY arena these days—"the takers" seem to be far outnumbering "the givers". That's just the way the world is right now; no wonder it's in such a mess, as St. Germain vividly recounts.

Now consider this: What would there be for "the takers" to take if it were not for what "the givers" give that makes this publication possible in the first place? Do you think "the takers" ever stop to consider that? Is it fair to "the givers" for us to constantly overlook the many kinds of taking that jeopardize the viability of this pathway for all those givers concerned about sharing Lighted Truth?

So, how are we supposed to remain afloat in such rough seas and keep on giving and giving? We don't know. And I guess it depends on what happens financially between now and a few weeks from now as to whether we will be able to publish next month—or not for awhile.

Yet there's so much to share. For each provocative item we include in such as this monster issue of The SPECTRUM, there are ten we have to exclude due to space (money) considerations. (Which reminds me: we had to go back down a notch in newsprint paper quality this month—not so much because the brighter, cleaner paper costs that much more, but because the weight difference would drive the postage costs through the roof.)

Rick's Front Page feature this month takes us into astonishing new territory resulting from our growing reputation of integrity in the circles that truly count. Other equally fantastic "lessons" are scheduled for future issues. But such "course notes of The SPECTRUM university" obviously depend upon our remaining financially afloat in order to present such long hidden Truth.

Will we make it? That's MY question and I put it to you. Let's just say that—on behalf of all ones associated with the miracle of this unique publication—I certainly hope so!

There are no adequate words with which we can thank those of you who have given of your hearts and souls AND wallets to help us this far. Just keep in mind that, no matter what happens next, you blessed givers have set into motion some mighty powerful Higher Energies for the good of all.

MYSTERY MAN-IN-BLACK HOW WOULD YOU RESPOND?

From The SPECTRUM office, 9/26/00:

We received a phone call today from one of our Arizona subscribers. She called to relay an unusual incident which happened to her at 12:45 p.m. today, Tuesday, the 26th of September.

She had been inside her house when she caught sight of someone in her backyard. As she looked closer, she saw that this person was dressed totally in black—black gloves, black clothing, black boots, a black helmet with a black visor down, covering his face (this was on a 100-degree day in Arizona). She noticed he was carrying a “rod”, approximately 2 feet long, that had a “bulb” at the end of it, and it looked like it may have been an electrical probe of some kind. There was no vehicle in sight.

Saying a prayer and asking God to go with her (this woman is 5’ tall and 61 years old!), she went outside and asked the man: “What the hell are you doing in my backyard?”

He replied that he was with the Salt River Water Department (a utility company).

At that, she replied: “If you were with the Salt River Water Department, you would have come to my door with your identification from the water company to tell me there was a problem, and that you might need access to my backyard.”

The man replied that, instead of doing that, he decided to simply jump the fence, instead of coming to the door. He then continued to move around her backyard with the rod. (As a side-note, the fence is solid cinderblock and 6 feet high.)

The woman finally said: “Look, I know who you are and you’d better just get the hell out of here!”

The man then backed-up to the cinderblock fence, grabbed the top of the fence, and with great agility, jumped over, and was gone.

Who was this guy and what was he doing in her backyard? Who sent him and why such conspicuous and seemingly inappropriate “work clothes” in hot Arizona?

She immediately went back in her house and called the Salt River Project and told them about the incident. The company told her that there were no problems and they had no crews working in her area. They also confirmed to her that employees of the utility company would definitely come to her door and identify themselves with the proper I.D. before entering her yard.

Regardless, it is always wise to be aware of your surroundings, and not respond out of fear, but rather, strength (GOD).

UNCONFIRMED REPORT

She called in tears tonight. What they have heard is beyond belief:

(1) Clinton has signed over the sovereignty of our country to the U.N.

(2) China will take over Taiwan by mid-October.

(3) Russia will make a full-scale attack on the “lost” regions, to gain full strength.

(4) Martial Law will be declared by mid-October. The shift of the jurisdiction will go to the “Judicial” side, thus in the hands of the Janet.

(5) Martial Law will suspend the political elections.

(6) Israel has already stepped out, and signed a Declaration of War, against Iraq.

(7) Clinton is positioning himself as the next leader of the U.N. [End quoting]

A recent news report (9/18/00) said that China was moving troops—that were used for the Tiananmen Square riots—south to prepare for the Taiwan invasion.

Also, I recall reading a while back that Reno was the one who was put in charge of any declared emergency or martial law takeover of the US.

Clinton was reported to have said, when asked about how he was going to accomplish his aim to stay in office since he can't run for a 3rd term—"WORLD WAR III".

The fact that the news media have, out of the blue, started to focus again on Saddam Hussein (while having to bring out old file footage to supply the graphics), and major US striking forces are again gathering in the Persian Gulf area, coupled with this oil "crisis" that doesn't add up any more than does the recent "rush" meeting of world leaders at the UN—certainly suggests that something(s) major could be brewing behind the scenes. It would be helpful to go back and re-read the first two items in last month's News Desk for more background to the possibilities here.

QUIETLY PLACING TRACKING CHIPS IN NEWBORNS

Via the INTERNET, <para-discuss@egroups.com>; from "Maurice DesJardins" <raumjard@mindspring.com>, for 9/25/00: [quoting]

Hello from Maurice,

This post just reached me from a communicant from England, and it floored me because I was so surprised it could be done without the consent of the parents. Does anyone know if this is (or has been) done to infants here in this country with or without parental consent?

[Here is the message:]

Last week I had to go to Manchester Royal Infirmary to pick up my brother-in-law who has recently had a serious heart operation.

While waiting, I decided to explore the massive hospital. I found myself in the Maternity area, where two nurses were having a break from their duties. I got talking with them.

The conversation was general chit-chat, but I then "jokingly" asked them: "What happens to the babies when they are taken away from their mothers after first being born?"

The nurses looked at each other, smiled a sort of wry smile, and one replied: "We wash them!"

I said "Oh, I know that; anything else?" She replied, in a matter of fact way as if it was common knowledge, "Oh, yea, we 'chip' them."

I said "What do you mean, 'chip' them?" She replied "You know—'chip' them, tag them."

I said "Oh, yea—the wrist band with their name on and perhaps an ID 'chip'."

She then said "No, not a wrist band. We 'chip' them, inject them with a silicon ID 'chip'—you know, like they do to cattle and such."

I was flabbergasted! But didn't let them know it.

I then casually said "Oh, I see; so the babies won't get mixed up?"

They both looked at each other and laughed in a sort of sarcastic manner. One of them then said "Well, yes; we don't want to lose any of OUR babies or get them mixed up, do we?"

I asked if the "chip" was removed when the baby went home. She said "Why should it? No, it's in them forever!"

They then said that they had to go back to work, and I got on with my task. After taking my brother-in-law home and making sure he was ok, I decided to find out more.

I later found out more from another very reliable source (the person in question is a doctor). When questioned, he said "Yes, babies are 'chipped' shortly after birth; there's nothing sinister in it. Don't you think it's a good idea? It avoids mixups. It's only a small device, microscopic, and causes no ill effects. We use a very special hypo."

I was surprised that he freely volunteered the information.

I tried to get him to see the "Big Brother" aspect. He wouldn't go into that, and walked away.

The mind boggles! It looks like it isn't only ET who is keeping track of us!

I would like to know: How sophisticated is the "chip"? Is it just an ID device, or more a tagging, tracing device? Where in the child's body is the "chip" injected, the BRAIN perhaps?!

[End quoting]

It doesn't necessarily matter where the small silicon "chip" is injected, so much as where it might finally come to rest, if it doesn't simply circulate around with the blood.

Regardless, it would be useful to have more information on this procedure and just how long (and where all) it has quietly been performed. Who is manufacturing the "chips" for maternity use? Who has mandated that the "chips" be used? How was the procedure "sold" to the hospitals? Stay tuned.

Free Sample Copies—New Policy Statement

September 20, 2000

Originally, our intent in providing free sample copies of The SPECTRUM newspaper was to introduce our publication to those who had never seen it. We have noticed lately, however, that many people have already seen the newspaper, like it, and are merely calling for a free copy of a specific issue to avoid the cost of a subscription.

As a non-profit newspaper, we are under our own unique set of financial strains, and since this free-copy policy is being abused, out of necessity we have had to change it.

The new policy concerning sample papers is:

All sample copies of The SPECTRUM cost $5.00 each (the same as the cost of a recent back issue). If the person requesting the copy subscribes to The SPECTRUM within 30 days of the initial request, the $5.00 is credited toward their subscription price. (Canada & Mexico $6.50 — Foreign $8.00)

For those who cannot afford the $5.00, back issues of our newspaper are freely available on the Internet at our www.TheSpectrumNews.org Internet website.

Thank you in advance for your understanding.

THE SPECTRUM STAFF

easy to imagine a cohesive evil force behind the scenes. It would seem that some sinister collective is manipulating the very core of society in an awesome display of control, shepherding the hapless sheep to the fold of servitude.

Surely none of us would allow ourselves to be manipulated in such a fashion unless something big was behind it all—would we?

Dare I say it—a conspiracy for final mass control, power beyond comprehension, force of unimaginable magnitude! Ninety percent of the population here to serve the needs of a fortunate few. Slavery in its grandest form. Is this possible? Could it be pulled off?

Years ago, I wondered at how total control of the world population could be wrought and administered. It seemed easy to see the prerequisites for such a move.

What are the absolute requirements for an individual to remain alive? Take control of these and a sinister power would have absolute control of everything.

Unfortunately, there are only three things to gain control of that meet the absolute survival criteria: good air to breathe, potable water to drink, and healthy food to eat. Controlling any one of these, or combination thereof, represents an opportunity to leash us all.

Fortunately, two of these are free and mostly abundant commodities which all individuals usually have easy, ready access too. Gaining control of good air, good water, and good food would be impossible, would it not?

No danger here, then, for world mass control!

How bizarre I would ever live to see the day when potable water, oxygen-rich air, and unsullied food products were purchasable, but only to the economically fortunate. Naw, never—what a silly thought. Still, these things have remained my personal test for pending mass control.

The process would involve making almost all water on Earth unpotable, almost all air unbreathable, and mess with the food chain bad enough that a person could keel over from every bite—or be paranoid to eat, period.

Impossible to do, right?

But how would THEY quietly and foxily go about pulling off such a feat? We would be up in arms, resisting such a dastardly ploy; we would never allow such travesty, would we?

Of course not, unless, of course, our attention was redirected away to other, more apparent and all-consuming matters—like Real TV shows, Who Wants To Be A Millionaire?, academy awards, sporting events, and a never-ending stream of religious and political joustings, sprinkled with a plethora of junk science announcements.

A never-ending stream of red herrings like this might do the trick and keep our minds dim and occupied!

Oops! I have to go now and buy some water to drink. (I wish it did not cost almost as much as gasoline to buy!) In Japan, my friend bought oxygen from a vending machine to ease his respiratory problems. I hope my cousin managed to buy some more organic food at the black market.

In favor of a world the way a world should be, Doug. <http://bigwave.ca/~doug_lewis> [End quoting]

Short, and to the point—and who could say it better in fewer words? Of course we could add many other items to his list but possibly this is enough to notice the writing on the walls. And speaking of our suspicious oil “crisis”, how about this:

AL GORE'S SNAKE OIL AND THE RELEASE OF OIL FROM THE ELK HILL RESERVE

From the INTERNET,
<CTRL@listserv.aol.com>, 9/23/00:

[quoting]

Regarding the release of oil from the Elk Hill Reserve:

This was a politically rigged scam from the beginning.

First, all the hype about the oil shortage.

Then Al Gore goes around the country calling for Clinton to release the oil from the reserve.

Now Clinton announces that he will.

So Al looks like a real leader and a hero to those who were going to freeze to death this winter without heating oil.

HORSE HOCKEY!

The Elk Hill Oil “Reserve” doesn’t even belong to the Federal Government anymore.

They sold it to Al Gore’s buddies at Occidental Petroleum.

In addition to campaign contributions, Occidental has been a benefactor of Al Gore and his father for many years.

The U.S. Energy Department sold Elk Hill Naval Petroleum Reserve to Occidental Petroleum on February 5.

The 47,000-acre sale for $3.65 billion is the largest privatization in U.S. history. According to Reuters, Energy Secretary Federico Pena stated: “We are getting the government out of the oil business.”

However, did they do so legally?

A coalition of environmental groups and First Nations challenged the sale in federal court, to no avail. The coalition, including the Sierra Club, the Southwest Center for Biological Diversity, and the Kitanemuk and Yowlumne Nations, sought a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order. A federal judge rejected the claims February 3. The government wasted no time selling the land, originally valued at $1.5 billion.

As of this writing, the judicial opinion is unavailable and the reasons for denying the injunction unknown. All that is clear is that Elk Hill Naval Petroleum Reserve is now the property of Occidental Petroleum. The land is regulated and Occidental still subject to restrictions.

The Chevron Corporation previously acquired a 22% interest in the land, and is entitled to 22% of the oil extracted. In addition, the Endangered Species Act still prohibits the “taking” of endangered species by private landowners. They can obtain an “incidental take” permit provided they take necessary steps to minimize and mitigate the harm to the species. Harm includes habitat modification. Likewise, the National Historic Preservation Act provides some restrictions.

Whether the government will enforce these restrictions is unknown. At least for now, it appears the government is out of the oil business. The question to ask now is whether the government is out of the business of protecting our natural and cultural resources all together! [End quoting]

And then a few additional bits of very interesting information by the staff of Just Facts for 9-22-00:

Lincoln Bedroom Sleepover For Gore Benefactor Surrounded By Questionable Coincidences

In March of 1996, the chairman of Occidental Petroleum, an $18 billion oil company, was an overnight guest in the Lincoln bedroom of the White House.

(Remember: Elk Hill Naval Petroleum Reserve is now the property of Occidental Petroleum.)

Two days after the sleepover, Occidental’s Political Action Committee (PAC) gave $100,000 to the Democratic National Committee. In 1997, the Washington Post revealed that the Clinton administration created an exception to a law that stood in the way of a business venture that Occidental wanted to pursue in the country of Sudan. Further investigation has uncovered additional information on this matter.

The Anti-Terrorism Law, Lincoln Bedroom, And $100,000

In 1996, Congress passed and Bill Clinton signed what became Public Law 104-132. This law prohibits anyone in the United States from doing business with countries who are classified as state sponsors of terrorism. At the time, Occidental was pursuing an oil exploration deal with the country of Sudan, which is classified as a state sponsor of terrorism.

There was a 6-week period between when Congress passed this legislation and when Bill Clinton signed it into law. It was during this window of time that the chairman of Occidental stayed at the White House and Occidental’s PAC gave $100,000 to the Democratic National Committee. In addition to the timing of the sleepover and the donation, a 9-year review of Occidental's political contributions found the amount of this particular donation is unprecedented, doubling the size of any other donation they have made during this period.

Bill Clinton And The Exception

The Anti-Terrorism Law would have put an end to Occidental's plans in Sudan, but it contained a provision allowing the executive branch to make exceptions. The law went into effect during August of 1996. On the same day that the law became operative, the Clinton administration established an exception that allowed U.S. corporations and individuals to do business with Sudan.

Three months after the exception was instituted, the government of Sudan barred Occidental from participating in the oil deal. Sudan did this as a result of a newspaper article that appeared in the Washington Post, which revealed that the Clinton administration was giving military support to three nations who were enemies of the government in Sudan.

After Occidental could no longer profit from the exception, Bill Clinton closed it. Less than a year after Sudan barred Occidental from the oil deal, Bill Clinton issued an executive order containing language that mirrors the provision in the Anti-Terrorism Law that his administration had excepted. In the executive order, Clinton stated that the policies of the government of Sudan were an "extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States" and declared "a national emergency to deal with that threat". Less than a year earlier, the Clinton administration stated that there was "nothing improper" in allowing the oil deal between Occidental and Sudan.

Al Gore And Occidental

In June of 2000, Al Gore said: "It takes somebody who is independent from big oil to take on big oil, and I'm independent from them." At the time when the story about the exception was published, some of Al Gore's extensive financial dealings with Occidental were not widely reported.

In addition to campaign contributions, Occidental has been a benefactor of Al Gore and his father for many years. After Gore's father was defeated for reelection in 1970, Occidental hired him at a salary of $500,000 a year. In 1972, Occidental purchased a farm in Tennessee and promptly sold it to Gore's father, who turned around and resold the farm to Al Gore.

Over the next decade, Occidental paid Al Gore $20,000 a year for the rights to mine minerals on this land. The payments added up to more than what Gore bought the land for, and during this entire period, Occidental never did any mining there. Presently, Al Gore is the executor of his father's estate, which contains more than $500,000 worth of stock in Occidental.

WAVE FLUX AN EARLY WARNING SIGNAL FOR EARTHQUAKES?

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 9/20/00: [quoting]

RADIO STARGAZER'S KEY TO QUAKES

By Reiji Yoshida, staff writer

Astronomer Yoshio Kushida believes he will receive forewarning should a major earthquake hit.

"I am absolutely confident" he said when asked about predicting a major quake in the Tokyo metropolitan area.

"(The signs of) all major earthquakes that have occurred could have been observed" Kushida said in a recent interview at his private observatory in Yamanashi Prefecture.

On the night of January 14, 1995, an FM radio receiver began recording an extraordinary baseline fluctuation at Kushida's Yatsugatake South Base Observatory.

Kushida didn't realize it was the day that would totally change his life.

He was recording radio echoes in the very-high-frequency band to observe the passage of meteors through the atmosphere.

Kushida was at a loss that night, believing the machine was malfunctioning.

The thickness of the baseline, usually about 1 mm, was more than 2 mm on the nights of January 15, 16, and 17, leaving Kushida puzzled. But in the early morning of January 17, he realized the hidden message in the signal.

He turned pale when he switched on the TV. Breaking news told him that a major earthquake, measuring a magnitude of 7.2, struck Kobe and southern Hyogo Prefecture at 5:46 a.m. The earthquake led to the loss of more than 6,400 lives, destroyed 248,410 structures, and left 446,485 households homeless.

"I was overwhelmed by a sense of self-reproach. If only if I had studied more closely when I found [the baseline phenomenon] two years earlier" Kushida wrote in the book Jishin Yochini Idomu (The Challenges Of Earthquake Prediction), published September 1.

In 1993, after roughly examining the correlation between abnormal electric waves and earthquakes, Kushida was convinced that some fluctuating patterns in the VHF band appear several days before an earthquake.

But Kushida, who had no expertise on earthquakes at the time, didn't pay much attention to the data. He thought seismologists probably already knew about the phenomenon, but in the end, that was not the case.

Most seismologists think that accurate prediction of earthquakes is almost impossible, let alone early warning. But Kushida, through carefully observing the phenomena over the past five years, has continued his studies to challenge the common notion about earthquake prediction.

Analyzing radio echoes from a number of FM stations across the country, Kushida believes he has found five basic wave patterns that appear several days before a major earthquake.

From January 1997 to September 1999, using these patterns, Kushida predicted specific dates, strengths, and locations of the focus of 36 major earthquakes measuring a magnitude of 5 or stronger.

The average margin of error in the dates predicted was 1.97 days.

As for location, Kushida now claims he can specify the focus of most earthquakes within a radius of 50 km.

"I think [the accuracy] is practical enough" he said.

Some seismologists have argued that the results could be a coincidence because earthquakes occur very often in the Japanese archipelago.

But the Institute of Physical and Chemical Research, a major quasi-governmental think tank, independently examined the correlation between earthquakes and Kushida's predictions and concluded the results were not random.

"[The correlation] has much significance" said Toshiyasu Nagao, director at the institute's Earthquake Prediction Research Center, which now supports Kushida's project.

But what is the mechanism that causes this presaging of an earthquake in VHF radio echoes?

Kushida's system was originally designed to observe meteors by catching radio echoes from a commercial FM radio station.

According to Kushida's hypothesis, before an earthquake, electric charges accumulate on the Earth's surface due to the generation of numerous microcracks in magma.

The charge and discharge process of a capacitor formed with the Earth's surface and the ionosphere changes density of electric plasma in the ionosphere, and the phenomenon is observed by the FM receiver.

Indeed, it has been long known to scientists that some electromagnetic phenomena appear before an earthquake on the Earth's surface.

In Greece, scientists have conducted studies on the prediction of earthquakes for more than 10 years based on the theory that solid matter emits an electric current just before it breaks down.

The reliability of the method, however, is still a focus of debate by seismologists, although the scientists conducting the test claim the success rate is about 60 percent.

Kushida recalled that seismologists' response to his method was not good when he first held a press conference and contributed to an article in a spring 1995 physics magazine.

After five years of studies, many seismologists—many of whom have little knowledge of the ionosphere or electromagnetism—remain skeptical, or simply ignore Kushida's achievements.

Kushida now only publicizes his analysis and predictions to people who have subscribed to his fax service, believing open publication of his predictions would only cause confusion or panic.

"What would you do about nuclear power plants, or railway service, if a major earthquake is forecast to hit? You may want to stop them, but there is no legal basis [to support such actions]. There is nothing I can do" Kushida said.

Kushida said he cannot take responsibility for possible results of his predictions, as they still contain a margin of error.

Much more public understanding, legislation for early warning systems, and more efforts to improve accuracy will be necessary before advance publication of earthquake information will be possible, he said.

But interested parties can subscribe to Kushida's fax service if they sign an oath not to leak the information to other people or use it for secondary purposes.

For further information, access <www.yatsugatake-eorc.org/> or send a fax to the observatory at (0551) 38-4254.

The Japan Times, September 19, 2000 [End quoting]

You will notice that nowhere in this discussion is there entertained even the remotest possibility of PURPOSELY engineered earthquakes. Along with weather control, a large aspect of the technology utilized to accomplish earthquake detonations is electromagnetic in nature. So, the first question is whether what is being detected here is natural or artificial. Other researchers who have correlated earthquake activity with observed electromagnetic anomalies automatically assume the relationship is natural—since the other possibility is preposterous.

Regardless of which is the source of the detected electromagnetic anomalies—natural or manmade—one can but hope there is a genuine, reliable correlation here, as this could save many, many lives. Moreover, the crooks in high places who consider earthquake detonations as just another tool (in their bag of tricks for world political control games) will have to work a little harder if this method both exposes their game and forewarns the public.

THE HOLOCAUST INDUSTRY: REFLECTIONS ON THE EXPLOITATION OF JEWISH SUFFERING

From THE BOB LIVINGSTON NEWSLETTER, August 2000: [quoting]

A Jewish academic is afraid that rampant exploitation of the Holocaust is summoning up a new anti-semitism. It is hard not to agree, says Bryan Appleyard.

Stop, in the name of the Holocaust.

"I sometimes think", writes the American academic Dr. Norman Finkelstein, "the worst thing that ever happened to the Nazi Holocaust was that American Jewry discovered it." The quotation comes from Finkelstein's explosive and bitterly angry book The Holocaust Industry. It accuses those who exploit the Holocaust of telling lies, conniving in Israeli atrocities, and of naked greed. The pursuit of reparations from Swiss bankers and others is damned as "an outright extortion racket". The ruthless industrialization of the Holocaust has encouraged the rebirth of anti-semitism in Europe and the United States. And, in conversation, he said the fascination with Holocaust memorials and museums—the latest being the permanent exhibition at London's Imperial War Museum, opened by the Queen last week—was "a kind of circus".

If any of this had been written or said by a non-Jew with no direct experience of the Holocaust, it would have been savaged as anti-semitism or worse: Holocaust denial. But Finkelstein is a Jew—though non observant—both of whose parents were survivors of the Warsaw ghetto and concentration camps. All the members of their families were wiped out by the Nazis. Even so, his views make him an outcast among the American Jewish establishment and define him, for many, as an enemy of Israel. So why has he done it?

"I will not have", he shouts down the phone from New York, "the suffering of my parents used for any ulterior purpose, whether it be the prevention of the assimilation of Jews or the defense of Israel."

Finkelstein's father never spoke of his experience, but his mother spoke of little else. Yet, he recalls, even she was disgusted at the rise of the Holocaust industry in America. There were, he says, only 60,000 Jewish survivors of the camps, and 20,000 of those died in the first week after liberation. Yet in the 1960s and 1970s many of his parents' friends started claiming to be survivors. Soon everybody was a victim of the great martyrdom.

"I'm not exaggerating when I say that one-out-of-three Jews you stop on the street in New York will claim to be a survivor. And, since 1993, the industry has been claiming that 10,000 survivors have been dying every month. That is completely impossible. It would mean that there were 8 million survivors in 1945, but there were only 7 million Jews in Germany and occupied Europe before the war."

Finkelstein says the Holocaust industry was born at the time of the Six-Day War in June 1967—before that both the Holocaust and Israel were scarcely mentioned in American public life. But it was not born, as many have said, out of fear for the survival of Israel; rather, it sprung from American strategic interests.

Israel became the American surrogate in the Middle East and the Holocaust was evoked morally to justify the alliance. Israel became the defender of US values and, since America at that time was losing the Vietnam War, it was a more effective defender than America herself." [End quoting]

It is refreshing to hear such factual information coming from a source that cannot be so easily discounted in order to advance the hidden agenda—an agenda which is becoming more glaringly obvious with each new, bolder, preposterous assertion.

Longtime honest students of this subject (no matter of what ethnic background) are well aware that the entire matter is enormously more complicated, full of historical deceptions and subterfuge, and thus emotionally charged, than has even crossed the path of the above author—who is justifiably indignant about “only” what he is aware of! The testing of this time on schoolhouse Earth is for each of us to have the courage to stand up and do our part, like this man did in an area he is familiar with, to see that Truth prevails.

AUSTRALIA STANDS FIRM AGAINST UN RIGHTS BODIES

From the INTERNET, WORLD NEWS, for 9/2/00: [quoting]

CANBERRA — Australia said on Wednesday it was capable of monitoring its own human rights record and fended off criticism of its decision to scale back dealings with United Nations watchdog committees.

Prime Minister John Howard said a reassessment of Australia's participation in the UN treaty committee system was designed to reassert Australian authority over domestic affairs.

“It does not represent, as some have suggested, a turning away by Australia from the principles of the United Nations” Howard told parliament.

“But it does represent a determination by this government that matters affecting Australia are resolved by Australians within Australia” he said.

Australia is unhappy with past UN criticism of its treatment of Aborigines and asylum seekers. Howard described the overhaul of Australia's dealings with UN treaty committees as measured and reasonable.

Some backbenchers in Howard's conservative Liberal Party stepped up criticism of the UN treaty system, saying the world body's human rights commission was in need of an overhaul.

“Really, they struck me as just a theme park for indulging the fantasies of the global NGO [non-government organization] guilt movement” backbencher Andrew Thomson told Australian Broadcasting Corporation radio.

Canberra announced on Tuesday that UN watchdog committees would need compelling reasons to examine Australia's human rights record before permission for visits would be granted.

It also said it would reject unwarranted requests from UN committees seeking to delay the removal of unsuccessful asylum seekers from Australia, which has thousands of illegal immigrants in remote detention centers.

Newspaper editorials, foreign observers, and rights groups condemned Australia's new position, some seeing it as a churlish response sure to give comfort to the world's despots.

“The Howard government has delivered a diplomatic windfall to odious regimes everywhere and undermined Australia's reputation as a civilised nation with yesterday's irresponsible attack on the United Nations treaty committee system” the Sydney Morning Herald newspaper said in an editorial.

UN officials said they regretted Australia's decision, which came before a report from the UN Committee on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights on Australia's international rights obligations is delivered in Geneva on Friday.

Australia has been criticised by several UN committees for the treatment of its 430,000 Aborigines, the country's most disadvantaged group, who make up 2.3 percent of the population.

Howard argued that Australia had been repeatedly and unfairly singled out by the United Nations for its Aboriginal and refugee policies while significant rights abuses were overlooked elsewhere.

“We are concerned, for example, that in its most recent report on Australia, the CERD (Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination)...singled Australia out with 13 of the 15 recommendations labelled as concerns” Howard said.

This was higher than the number of concerns listed for China, Pakistan, and Cuba, Howard said. [End quoting]

This isn't much, but it is a start. Let's hope that many other countries acquire the fortitude to stand-up to the would-be world dictators also. Don't miss the powerful article about the United Nations (by a forty-year international veteran of the news media) elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM for some food for thought about why Australia may have taken such a stand for control of their own country.

AMAZON CAN'T BE TRUSTED TO KEEP YOUR INFO PRIVATE!!

From the INTERNET, “On The Net” <net@ls6.sendoutmail.com>, 9/15/00: [quoting]

Two U.S. privacy groups have decided to end their relationship with Amazon.com, criticizing the online retailer for giving up one of its key customer privacy policies. The Washington-based Electronic Privacy Information Center announced Wednesday that it would no longer sell its books through Amazon's affiliate program. EPIC said it was irked because Amazon recently announced it could no longer guarantee that it would not disclose customer information to third parties. “Because of this decision, and in the absence of legal or technical means to assure privacy for Amazon customers, we have decided that we can no longer continue our relationship with Amazon” said EPIC director Mark Rotenberg in a statement. Privacy advocate Jason Catlett of Junkbusters, a privacy software company, also said his group would be leaving the Amazon affiliate program. More information is available at <www.junkbusters.com> and <www.epic.org>.[End quoting]

Very few companies can be trusted to keep your privacy on the net. Your personal profiles are cash in their pockets and few can resist the smell of easy cash.

You may have also caught the item on some news outlets on 9/27/00 saying that Amazon was caught “adjusting” prices (up or down) somewhat on, say, a book you might be contemplating ordering online. The price would be quoted higher or lower based on data to which they had access (from where?!) on your financial situation! How's that for “customized” pricing?!

FCC INVESTIGATES TIME-WARNER AND AOL POLICIES FOR INTERNET HOOKUPS

From the INTERNET, “On The Net” <net@ls6.sendoutmail.com>, 9/15/00: [quoting]

The Federal Communications Commission was prepared Thursday to fully enter the debate over who controls the Internet's on-ramps, according to the Washington Post. The FCC has largely stayed away from the complex issue of whether the controllers of cable TV lines should allow other companies to use them for commercial Internet services. The newspaper said the FCC was ready to launch an inquiry on whether there should be federal rules that guarantee Internet providers can have access to all cable networks, in the same way that they now have access to local phone systems. The pending merger of America Online and Time-Warner apparently added pressure on the FCC. The Post said competitors have complained that the new company could shut them out from large portions of the cable Internet-access market. Time-Warner has a large cable system, and America Online has millions of subscribers. [End quoting]

Here is another “war of the worlds” that is about to erupt with all of the Internet customers/users caught in the crossfire. You can be sure that the telephone companies will jump into this matter, even if only behind the scenes, because should this route to the Internet become big and not costly, all of the present demand for more telephone lines for computer use (and the cash flow the phone companies are raking in from basic service access charges) will evaporate rapidly.

NEW MEDICAL INVENTION CAN SMELL OUT ILLNESSES

From the INTERNET, <http:// sightings.com>, 8/27/00: [quoting]

By Louella Houldcroft, London

An electronic “nose” which can detect the scent of human disease is the latest pioneering development from a team of North-East scientists.

The ingenious device has been designed by Dr. Zulfiquor Ali and colleagues at the University of Teesside and can diagnose illness by “smelling” the different chemicals produced in the body.

Dr. Ali said the new device could one day revolutionize the way in which disease is diagnosed.

“There is an increasing demand for painless and accurate methods of diagnosis that will produce a quick result” Dr. Ali said.

“Every disease and illness produces its own specific chemical responses in the body which, in turn, produce their own unique vapors.

“It is by harnessing these and programming the nose to recognise them that we can build up a picture of disease simply through smell.

“We still have a long way to go but this is a non-invasive method and has already proven very effective in identifying certain types of infection.”

The “nose” is made up of a number of tiny crystals which detect the odors associated with a variety of illnesses.

Each crystal vibrates at a certain frequency, which changes according to the chemicals with which it comes in contact.

The nose was designed to detect contamination in foods, but its potential in other fields has also been recognized.

It is being used in place of sniffer dogs to detect drugs and explosives, and Dr. Ali said it has the potential to pick up the scent of a particular individual.

Dr. Ali, who is working with staff in the University’s new Chemical and Bio-Sensors Research Unit, said: “We are effectively fingerprinting odors.”

Professor Fred Rowells, an expert in environmental monitoring and hazardous compounds at Sunderland University, is also working with the Teesside team to investigate the potential of the nose to detect chemicals in the environment. [End quoting]

This research calls to mind the research being conducted by noted English scientist Rupert Sheldrake on some of the amazing abilities of animals. One of the skills he has noted is the way some dogs can alert their owners to illnesses, like cancers, apparently from smell.

GREEN TEA AND FLUORIDES

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <http://bruha.com/fluoride/html/green_tea__f.htm>, for 8/24/99; the following is excerpted from a 44-page document: [quoting]

GREEN TEA, FLUORIDE, AND THE THYROID

OPEN LETTER TO: Susan Cameron-Block

Host: Current Health Issues

August 24, 1999

Dear Susan,

I am writing this letter with the intent to inform on various issues associated with the use of fluorides, especially as it relates to green and black teas, and to voice our concern about the continued promotion of green tea as a drink “beneficial to one’s health” on your radio show Current Health Issues.

Tea is very high in fluoride content. Fluoride in tea is much higher than the Maximum Contaminant Level (MCL) set for fluoride in drinking water.

Tea leaves accumulate more fluoride (from pollution of soil and air) than any other edible plant (1,2,3). Fluoride content in tea has risen dramatically over the last 20 years, as has tea consumption (4).

While in 1976 a Belgian analysis showed content of between 50 and 125 ppm fluoride in 15 varieties of tea (3), a Polish study in 1995 found fluoride content of up to 340 ppm in 16 varieties of black tea (5). A major Canadian study published in 1995 reports average fluoride content in tea to be 4.57 mg/l in the 1980s (6).

A website by a pro-fluoridation infant medical group lists a cup of black tea to contain 7.8 mg of fluoride (7), which is roughly the same amount as if one were to drink 7.8 litres of water in an area fluoridated at 1ppm. It is well known that fluoride in tea gets absorbed by the body similarly as the fluoride in drinking water (1,8).

Some British and African studies from the 1990s showed a daily fluoride intake of between 5.8 mg and 9 mg a day from tea alone (9,10,11).

In order to understand a dose/concentration relationship properly, one needs to realize that the level of fluoride at 1 part-per-million (ppm) = 1 mg/l was set in the '40s when TOTAL intake was considered to be only about 1 mg/day in areas with fluoridated water. It was thought that the fluoridation of water supplies at 1 ppm (1 mg/l) would duplicate this intake, assuming that people would drink 4 glasses of water a day. However, average current total intake of fluorides is approaching the 8mg/day range, according to the last official data available from the US PHS (1991) and other publications (12).

TOTAL intake from ALL sources is the amount to be considered for any adverse health effect evaluation (13,14,15).

The fact that fluorides accumulate in the body is the reason why a MCL for fluoride content in water needs to be set by the US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)—by law under the US Surgeon General. This is to be done specifically to avoid a condition known as Crippling Skeletal Fluorosis (CSF). The MCL is set so as to only avoid the third and crippling stage of this disease. It is set at 4ppm => 4mg/liter, assuming that people will retain half of this amount (2mg), and therefore be at a “safe” level. The EPA scientists, whose job and legal duty it is to set the MCL, declared that this level was set fraudulently by outside forces, and that 90% of the data showing the mutagenic properties of fluoride were omitted (16).

Virtually every company selling green tea advertises its high fluoride content as “beneficial” in preventing cavities, promulgating the misleading and false data supplied for the last 50 years by the ADA/CDA and other dental health trade organizations, as well as various public health agencies. There are NO double-blind studies anywhere proving the efficacy of fluoride as a caries preventative (17). There ARE double-blind studies proving adverse health effects, at the level of 1ppm (1mg/l) in water (18). There are no studies documenting safety at any intake level.

THYROID MEDICATION

Drinking a cup of tea with fluoride content as mentioned above (7.8mg) would mean a fluoride intake much higher(!) than amounts which were actually given as medication to treat hyperthyroidism (over-functioning thyroid) for numerous decades, in several countries, specifically to reduce thyroid activity (2-10 mg NaF/day => 0.9mg - 4.5mg F) (19,20,21,22).

In the 1930s, May reported having successfully treated 1,158 hyperthyroid patients within 6 years with either sodium fluoride or fluorothyrosine, given per mouth. Among products later released on the market were Pardinon and Tyrosin (23, 24). Checking an older Merck Index will verify this information (25). Gorlizer von Mundy treated patients for more than 30 years in baths containing HF (30cc HF in 200 l water). Later fluorides were deemed not “reliable enough” to be recommended as an antithyroid (26).

CANCER AND GREEN TEA

While there can be no doubt as to the beneficial effects of individual anti-oxidants found in green tea, the same cannot be said about green tea as a beverage. Existing studies tend to concentrate on active ingredients of green tea, such as epigallocatechin gallate (EGCG), a compound that belongs to a family of anti-oxidants known as polyphenols. EGCG and other polyphenols are constituents of tea, especially of green tea. However, no studies exist investigating the effects of fluorides on these anti-oxidants. Existing studies involving other anti-oxidants and fluoride compounds give evidence that fluorides can adversely affect the action of anti-oxidants (27). Thus, while isolated anti-oxidants may slow down the development of some forms of cancer in experimental studies, their effect may be annihilated in their complex natural environment (as a sum of the action of all the substances present). [End quoting]

Many think tea is much better for their body than is coffee, but when you consider research such as this, you may have to be very careful of what kind and brands of tea you are using.

It is always a problem to study the effects of complex chemical combinations on the body through focusing upon just one constituent, since Nature is a much better and more subtle chemist than we can achieve through present means. However, if a chemical which has known adverse properties for the body becomes an ingredient at a high level in a natural product, such as tea, then there is certainly cause for concern. Another good question would be why tea apparently has a much higher fluoride level NOW than it used to, just twenty years ago.

GUN MESSAGE FROM DOWN UNDER

From AMERICAN PATRIOT FRIENDS NETWORK, <<http://www.apfn.org/apfn/apfncont.htm>>, 9/13/00: [quoting]

Hi Yanks,

I thought you all would like to see the real figures from Down Under. It has now been 12 months since gun owners in Australia were forced by new law to surrender 640,381 personal firearms to be destroyed by our own government, a program costing Australia taxpayers more than $500 million dollars. The first year results are now in:

Australia-wide, homicides are up 3.2%, assaults are up 8.6%, armed robberies are up 44%!

In the state of Victoria alone, homicides with firearms are now up 300%. (Note that while the law-abiding citizens turned them in, the criminals did not, and criminals still possess their guns!) While figures over the previous 25 years showed a steady decrease in armed robbery with firearms, this has changed drastically upward in the past 12 months, since the criminals now are guaranteed that their prey is unarmed.

There has also been a dramatic increase in break-ins and assaults of the elderly. Australian politicians are "at a loss to explain" how public safety has decreased, after such monumental effort and expense was expended in "successfully ridding Australian society of guns".

You won't see this data on the American evening news or hear your governor or members of the State Assembly disseminating this information. The Australian experience proves it.

Guns in the hands of honest citizens save lives and property and, yes, gun control laws affect only the law-abiding citizens.

Take note Americans, before it's too late!

[End quoting]

And then consider this one, too. [quoting]

I've been a Judge for 14 years and a City Prosecutor for 18 years; I hope my background will help to persuade people to listen to me as I present logical, valid reasons to support 'concealed carry' laws and defend our 2nd Amendment. — Bill Velek, Pro-Gun Judge & Prosecutor, Defending The Second Amendment! [End quoting]

You can be quite certain that the above "inconvenient" statistics will not make the evening news programs anytime soon. A major agenda item for the New World Order is getting the guns OUT OF the hands of the citizenry for the very reasons that the Founding Fathers of the United States put the Second Amendment in place! Meanwhile, though many have, through pure common sense, suspected that removing guns would only harm the honest citizenry, it takes statistics such as are reported here to powerfully confirm that hypothesis.

ELECTRONIC DATA SHOEHORN

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, October 2000: [quoting]

OPTICAL DISC technologies, especially recordable DVDs, have hogged the limelight lately when it comes to data capacity. But if the Grenoble, France-based think tank known as Alditech realizes its dream, the humble Mini Digital Videocassette (Mini-DV), currently used to record an hour's worth of home movies in today's consumer digital camcorders, will rival and even surpass optical technologies at a fraction of the cost.

Alditech claims it can shoehorn 100GB of uncompressed digital video onto a 1-hour Mini-DV tape, which currently holds 11.2GB and costs $12 to $15. That kind of capacity makes it possible to record 10 hours of high-definition TV images, or more than a dozen DVD-quality movies. Optical disc recorders won't be able to do that until blue lasers and their required blank media are available and affordable, which could take five years.

Alditech's sleight-of-hand doesn't involve modifying the media. The breakthrough comes from the use of silicon wafer technology to create tape heads, called Helican Scan Silicon heads, with more and finer tracks than is possible by conventional, mechanical methods.

Theoretically, Alditech's claims for its Helican Scan Silicon heads make sense, and the company says it is shipping samples to PC and electronics manufacturers. But at our deadline, Alditech hadn't responded regarding what types of PC or home entertainment products it or its clients envision. — Stephen A. Booth [End

quoting]

Each of these new technologies makes wonderful promises which only seem to be saddened by the fact that we end up throwing away one perfectly good item in favor of the "new and improved" replacement. This holds for so much of modern technology, which seems to become obsolete almost overnight. And if you try to hold onto your "old" version, because it is good enough, then good luck with replacement parts or service. This is the "high-tech" aspect of our modern, throw-away society.

SALMONELLA RULES MAY BE EASED FOR SCHOOLS

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 9/14/00: [quoting]

Agriculture Department officials say they are discussing the possibility of loosening their new standards for preventing salmonella contamination in ground beef used for the nation's school lunch program.

The reconsideration, which was provoked by criticism from the food industry, angered consumer advocates.

Since June, the department, which, provides 70 percent of the ground beef used in schools, has required that every batch it buys be free of salmonella. Before that there were no standards for any pathogens, including salmonella, bacteria responsible for about 600 deaths and 1.4 million illnesses last year.

Meat processors complained that the standards were unnecessary, because proper cooking kills the bacteria, and were too difficult to meet. At first many declined to even bid on government contracts for the school lunch program. But the industry ended up with a glut of beef and over the last few weeks more companies have offered their meat for sale. Still, the department has been able to buy only half the ground beef it needs for the schools, and at about 55 cents a pound more.

School officials in Wisconsin and Illinois said they would buy ground beef on the open market to ensure a steady supply, and New York City officials said they would do the same but reduce the amount they used.

Faced with the industry criticism, department officials began to reconsider the salmonella rules.

When asked last week whether the department was scaling back the standards, Kathleen Merrigan, administrator of the department's Agricultural Marketing Service, said: "I would prefer to say we are fine-tuning them."

Neither Merrigan nor anyone else at the department would say what the new standards might be.

Consumer groups accused the department of caving-in to industry.

Carol Tucker Foreman, a former Agriculture

Department official and now director of the Food Policy Institute of the Consumer Federation of America, said the department was falling back on its more traditional role of promoting the interests of the food industry and neglecting its duty to protect consumers.

Officials of the American School Food Service Association said its members, who are in charge of school feeding programs, are caught in the middle.

“We are fully committed to all steps appropriate to ensuring safety of food for kids” Barry Sackin, the association’s director of government affairs, said of the salmonella rules. “Our only concern is the precipitous way it has been implemented.” [End quoting]

Heaven forbid anyone in the food processing industry should take any extra (cost-adding) steps to insure the manufacturing of a quality product, especially where children are concerned. Let’s just hope the meat is properly cooked and no other surprises are lurking within! And while we’re on the subject:

TACO BELL CORN SHELLS PULLED FROM SHELVES

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 9/23/00: [quoting]

Kraft Foods on Friday recalled all taco shells sold nationwide in supermarkets under the Taco Bell brand after tests confirmed they were made with genetically engineered corn that isn’t approved for human consumption.

The corn, one of the least grown of several biotech varieties, is approved for use only in animal feed because of questions about whether it could cause allergic reactions in people. [End quoting]

If this problem hadn’t been detected and publicized by several watchdog groups, do you think Kraft would have actually recalled the product on their own—or would we-the-people simply be guinea pigs in yet another covert experiment? A lot of money has gone down the pipe to develop the area of genetically modified foods and it is not hard to imagine some rather sneaky tactics being used to get those products into our stomachs—one way or another.

THE NEXT BALKAN WAR

Notice how Macedonia seems a very likely spot for the next European war. The Macedonian national flag is identical to the rising Sun flag the Japanese had during the last war, only the colors are different; the Macedonian flag has a golden Sun and rays on a red background. This will be of interest to those knowing the Hopi prophecy saying the Third World War would involve the symbol of the Sun again (everyone’s thinking Japan, of course), which next time will be assisted by Germany because of pressure from China. I can see no reason why Germany would want to help Japan in any circumstances; but Macedonia, yes. [End quoting]

Another intriguing possibility for your consideration on the larger chess-game playing field.

THE OLD “NEW WORLD ORDER”

From THE AMERICAN’S BULLETIN, May/June 2000: [quoting]

Capital must protect itself in every way.... Debts must be collected and loans and mortgages foreclosed as soon as possible.

When, through a process of law, the common people have lost their homes, they will be more tractable and more easily governed by the strong arm of the law applied by the central power of leading financiers. People without homes will not quarrel with their leaders. This is well known among our principal men now engaged in forming an imperialism of capitalism to govern the world. By dividing the people we can get them to expend their energies on fighting over questions of no importance to us except as teachers of the common herd.

— Taken from the Civil Servants’ Year Book: The Organizer, January 1934.

WHICH “ENVIRONMENT” IS BEING DESTROYED?

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, August 2000: [quoting]

The environmental movement (Clinton/Gore branch) is plowing ahead with its agenda to rid the United States of America of hydro-power generating dams. This movement is NOT being driven by good science, normal thinking, or common sense. It is, in fact, being driven by a presumption, a hypothesis: That truth is what the speaker wants it to be. The present administration and its collaborative gang are (with straight faces, I might add!) telling the people a lie. The lie is that we-the-people are the most notorious bandits on the face of the Earth. The lie is that the American people have conspired to destroy the Earth and all it’s resources. The lie is that the third world countries are friends of Nature, and that Americans are the enemy.

NONSENSE!

The really scary part of this sick equation is that many Americans are buying into this stupid idea! How have so many intelligent people been so duped by those few radical, power hungry individuals? Complacency, I think. With a good economy, most people just don’t want to rock the “gravy” boat of prosperity. That’s the main emphasis of this sick, perverted administration. All the talk of extinction of the various species, water depletion, killer dams, no-dust farming. These are all great ploys.

The real issue? Rights and Freedom. The founders of this great nation warned us to beware of “wolves in sheep’s clothing”. Where is this warning? The Constitution Of The United States and the Declaration Of Independence have the answers to our dilemma. “He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.” Is this happening in America, today? It appears that King William of Arkansas is ruling just like the King of England did over 200 years ago.

How do we stop this nonsense? Speak out and stand up for your rights. Only you can preserve your freedom.

— Bob Lonn, Consultant/Planner, NW Council of Governments & Associates, Soap Lake, Washington. [End quoting]

Like so many other avenues of control over the citizenry, the environmental movement is heavily manipulated to carry out the agendas of the so-called “elite” controllers through the puppet politicians. If the usurpers of our freedoms and rights can appeal to our emotions, which is easy to do through environmental issues, then we’ll “hand over the keys” without even thinking about what we have just done. No wonder they use this mechanism over and over.

QUOTE FROM AL GORE!

“Refusing to accept the Earth as our sacred mother, these Christians have become a dangerous threat to the survival of humanity. They are blight on the environment and to believe in Bible prophecy is unforgivable.”

— Vice President Al Gore, in his book Earth In Balance, page 342.

HIGH OIL COSTS MAY RAISE FUEL PRICES

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 9/18/00: [quoting] Inflation Warning:

For some mysterious reason, all of the financial columnists in this country are trying to ignore the uncomfortable fact that the great rise in oil prices is going to certainly result in the awakening of the Inflation Monster. Nothing is more basic in our economy than energy, and most of that comes from oil. So when oil flies, so does everything else.

Since the price of oil has gone up about 70 percent in the past few months, the inflation corollary that will result is going to be gigantic. This means interest rates will also rise, including the coat to the taxpayers of the so-called national debt that backs Federal Reserve currency.

Remember, we told you first. Can it be that the press does not wish to embarrass Bush, Cheney, and Gore who are all closely tied to the oil industry? [End quoting]

The last thing the mind-control experts want to do—especially through their mouths in the media—is to wake up the citizenry (slaves) to the trap that awaits them in the economic arena.

SCOUTS ROUT FEDS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 9/18/00: [quoting]

Federal bureaucrats were quick to raise the white flag in their vendetta against the Boy Scouts. The Interior Department had undertaken a “review” of whether Scouts’ use of federal parks or military bases for a “Jamboree” violated President Clinton’s executive order that everybody embrace homosexuals. Within two days, the public outrage caused Washington to cringe and Janet Reno, attorney general, opined that Scouts can have the same access to federal lands as other citizens and groups. [End quoting]

There’s an important lesson here in the power of the people to MAKE changes happen. If only it would be applied on a wider scale.

CULTURE KILLERS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 9/18/00: [quoting]

Speaking recently at a gathering of internationalist power brokers at the illustrious Aspen Institute, Queen Noor of Jordan, the widow of King Hussein, scolded the attendees, telling them to be careful of the potential of globalization to “homogenize culture into extinction”. [End quoting]

You know it’s bad when someone in her position has the guts to talk.

ENGLISH TRIUMPHS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 9/18/00: [quoting]

Two years after Californians voted to dump bilingual education in favor of English immersion for a million Spanish-speaking students, those students are improving in reading dramatically, according to standardized test scores, the New York Times reports. “Many educators had predicted catastrophe” the Times said. “But the prophecies have not materialized.” [End quoting]

Any smart high schooler could have told the “bosses” that it would have positive effects. After all, do they expect to dodge the English language throughout their entire adult life in the United States and still be successful in their professional pursuits?

CARDBOARD HOUSING

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, October 2000 [quoting]

You won’t be ashamed to live in this cardboard box.

Set on a concrete slab. The Instant House is built from triple-corrugated cardboard that has been treated to resist fire, water, and termites.

Walls are made of two layers of cardboard supported by 3-inch paperboard box-posts. Inside, walls are coated with a flame-retardant waterproof polymer. The exterior is coated with an elastomeric cement. The roof is sealed with an asphaltic membrane with ceramic granules.

and several of the models meet most North American building codes. [End quoting]

These cardboard shelters may be in great demand if the crooks in high places pull-off some of the “engineered” catastrophes they seem to be getting into position to unleash.

FUTURE LOOKS SOLID FOR HYDROGEN

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, October 2000 [quoting]

Fuel cells, like the ones that provided electricity for the Apollo moon mission, would have a more promising future on Earth if it weren’t so difficult to store hydrogen fuel for automotive applications.

Compressed hydrogen doesn’t provide enough range. Liquid hydrogen is tricky to handle. On-board reformers—essentially mini oil refineries—are costly and complex.

Energy Conversion Devices (ECD) of Troy, Michigan, has a solid alternative: Store the hydrogen gas as a solid in its Ovonic Solid Hydrogen Storage System. A finely ground mix of nickel, chromium, and vanadium form a metal hydride that ECD chairman Bob Stempel describes as a hydrogen sponge.

Extracting the gas is easy: Just apply heat. ECD says that a unit the size of a conventional gas tank holds enough fuel to power an automobile for 250 to 500 miles.

Fueling cars isn’t the only application. Smaller hydride systems could power laptop computers. [End quoting] Whenever another of these clever solutions to our so-called energy problems is publicized, it brings to mind all the “free-energy” devices over the years that the crooks in high places have suppressed from the technology arena—while they laugh all the way to the bank.

I had a box of Nutrasweet left over from a couple of years ago, when I found out how toxic it is. Anyway, I was asking what the stuff was good for and was told it makes an excellent ant poison. I took two packets of the “sweetener” and dumped one in the corner of each of my bathrooms.

The big black carpenter ants that have been plaguing me for the last 10 years disappeared in less than 24 hours, and I have not seen any more for almost a month now. I had paid Orkin a lot of money in the past to try and get

RAISED PRINT FOR THE BLIND

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, October 2000 [quoting]

A new type of printer produces raised text and images that can be felt by the blind. Images to be printed can be scanned or sent from a personal computer. In either case, a heat-activation process developed by Zychem of Cheshire, England, causes printed areas to rise just enough to be detected by the fingertip. The Confederation of British Industry named the printer its Invention Of The Year. [End quoting]

This should be a big help to the blind who are skilled at interpreting such raised information besides Braille dots.

THE MINISTRY OF (TAX) INFORMATION—FOR KIDS!

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 9/1/00: [quoting]

These outlaw kids could easily have avoided getting into trouble, if only they had visited some of the fun and friendly websites the government has set up just for kids. One of these, <www.tax.gov/kids>, has exciting step-by-step guides for starting your own business, including lawn mowing services and lemonade stands.

I visited this site and I'm truly floored. Now the government wants to steal from kids who start their own lemonade stands. I would think the government would be happy that they're earning the money and not out stealing it. Yet it's okay for the government to steal from everybody. — Ty [End quoting]

Reminds me of a bumper sticker I saw several months ago that said: "Don't steal! The government doesn't like competition."

DEATH OF COMMON SENSE

From E-MAIL, "Mary" <msnell@txk.net>, 9/3/00: [quoting]

Boo Rody wrote:

Today I am mourning the passing of an old friend by the name of Common Sense.

Common Sense, AKA C.S., lived a long life but died from heart failure at the brink of the millennium. No one really knows how old he was since his birth records were long ago lost in bureaucratic red tape. He selflessly devoted his life to service in schools, hospitals, homes, factories, and offices, helping folks get jobs done without fanfare and foolishness.

For decades petty rules, silly laws, and frivolous lawsuits held no power over C.S. He was credited with cultivating such valued lessons as when to come in out of the rain, the early bird gets the worm, and life isn't always fair. C.S. lived by simple, sound financial policies (don't spend more than you earn) and reliable parenting strategies (the adults are in charge, not the kids).

A veteran of the Industrial Revolution, the Great Depression, and the Technological Revolution, C.S. survived cultural and educational trends including feminism, body piercing, and "new math".

But his health declined when he became infected with the "If-It-Only-Helps-One-Person-It's-Worth-It" virus. In recent decades his waning strength proved no match for the ravages of overbearing federal regulation. He watched in pain as good people became ruled by self-seeking lawyers and ambitious auditors. His health rapidly deteriorated when schools endlessly implemented zero tolerance policies, reports of 6-year-old boys charged with sexual harassment for kissing classmates, a teen suspended for taking a swig of mouthwash after lunch, and a teacher fired for reprimanding an unruly student.

Finally, C.S. lost his will to live as the Ten Commandments became contraband, churches became businesses, criminals received better treatment than victims, and federal judges stuck their noses in everything from Boy Scouts to professional sports. As the end neared, C.S. drifted in and out of logic but was kept informed of developments regarding questionable regulations for asbestos, low flow toilets, "smart" guns, the nurturing of Prohibition Laws, and mandatory air bags. Finally when told that some homeowners' associations restricted exterior furniture only to that which enhanced property values, he breathed his last breath.

C.S. was preceded in death by his parents, Truth and Trust; his wife, Discretion; his daughter, Responsibility; and his son, Reason.

He is survived by three stepbrothers: Rights, Tolerance, and Whiner. Not many attended his funeral because so few realized he was gone.

THE AWAKENING

From the INTERNET, e-mail, 8/00: [quoting]

A time comes in your life when you finally get it. When, in the midst of all your fears and insanity, you stop dead in your tracks and, somewhere, the voice inside your head cries out—ENOUGH! Enough fighting and crying, or struggling to hold on. And, like a child quieting down after a blind tantrum, your sobs begin to subside, you shudder once or twice, you blink back your tears, and through a mantle of wet lashes, you begin to look at the world through new eyes.

This is your awakening!

You realize that it's time to stop hoping and waiting for something to change, or for happiness, safety, and security to come galloping over the next horizon. You come to terms with the fact that he is not Prince Charming and you are not Cinderella, and that in the real world there aren't always fairy-tale endings (or beginnings for that matter), and that any guarantee of "happily ever after" must begin with YOU. And in the process, a sense of serenity is born of acceptance.

You awaken to the fact that you are not perfect and that not everyone will always love, appreciate, or approve of who or what you are. And that's OK. (They are entitled to their own views and opinions.) And you learn the importance of loving and championing yourself. And in the process, a sense of newfound confidence is born of self-approval.

You stop bitching and blaming other people for the things they did to you (or didn't do for you), and you learn that the only thing you can really count on is the unexpected. You learn that people don't always say what they mean or mean what they say, and that not everyone will always be there for you, and that it's not always about you. So, you learn to stand on your own and to take care of yourself—and in the process, a sense of safety and security is born of self-reliance.

You stop judging and pointing fingers, and you begin to accept people as they are and to overlook their shortcomings and human frailties, and in the process, a sense of peace and contentment is born of forgiveness.

You realize that much of the way you view yourself and the world around you, is as a result of all the messages and opinions that have been ingrained into your psyche. You begin to sift through all the crap you've been fed about how you should behave, how you should look and how much you should weigh, what you should wear and where you should shop and what you should drive, how and where you should live and what you should do for a living, who you should marry and what you should expect of a marriage, the importance of having and raising children, or what you owe your parents.

You learn to open up to new worlds and different points of view. You begin reassessing and redefining who you are and what you really stand for. You learn the difference between wanting and needing, and you begin to discard the doctrines and values you've outgrown—or should never have bought into to begin with—and in the process, you learn to go with your instincts.

You learn that it is truly in giving that we receive, and that there is power and glory in creating and contributing, and you stop maneuvering through life merely as a “consumer” looking for your next fix.

You learn that principles such as honesty and integrity are not the outdated ideals of a bygone era, but the mortar that holds together the foundation upon which you must build a life.

You learn that you don't know everything; it's not your job to save the world, and that you can't teach a pig to sing. You learn to distinguish between guilt and responsibility, and the importance of setting boundaries and learning to say “No”. You learn that the only cross to bear is the one you choose to carry—and that martyrs get burned at the stake.

Then you learn about love. Romantic love and familial love. How to love, how much to give in love, when to stop giving, and when to walk away. You learn not to project your needs or your feelings onto a relationship. You learn that you will not be more beautiful, more intelligent, more lovable or important because of the man on your arm or the child who bears your name. You learn to look at relationships as they really are, and not as you would have them be. You stop trying to control people, situations, and outcomes. You learn that just as people grow and change, so it is with love; and you learn that you don't have the right to demand love on your terms, just to make you happy.

You learn that alone does not mean lonely. You look in the mirror and come to terms with the fact that you will never be a size 5 or a perfect 10, and you stop trying to compete with the image inside your head and agonizing over how you “stack up”.

You also stop working so hard at putting your feelings aside, smoothing things over, and ignoring your needs. You learn that feelings of entitlement are perfectly OK, and that it is your right to want things and to ask for the things that you want, and that sometimes it is necessary to make demands.

You come to the realization that you deserve to be treated with love, kindness, sensitivity, and respect, and you won't settle for less. You allow only the hands of a lover who cherishes you to glorify you with his touch, and in the process, you internalize the meaning of self-respect.

And you learn that your body really is your temple. And you begin to care for it and treat it with respect. You begin eating a balanced diet, drinking more water, and taking more time to exercise. You learn that fatigue diminishes the spirit and can create doubt and fear. So you take more time to rest. Just as food fuels the body, laughter fuels our soul; so you take more time to laugh and to play.

You learn that, for the most part in life, you get what you believe you deserve and that much of life truly is a self-fulfilling prophecy. You learn that anything worth achieving is worth working for, and that wishing for something to happen is different from working toward making it happen. More importantly, you learn that, in order to achieve success, you need direction, discipline, and perseverance. You also learn that no one can do it all alone, and that it's OK to risk asking for help.

You learn that the only thing you must truly fear is the great robber baron of all time—FEAR itself. You learn to step right into and through your fears, because you know that whatever happens you can handle it, and to give in to fear is to give away the right to live life on your terms.

You learn to fight for your life and not to squander it living under a cloud of impending doom. You learn that life isn't always fair, you don't always get what you think you deserve, and that sometimes bad things happen to unsuspecting, good people. On these occasions, you learn not to personalize things. You learn that God isn't punishing you or failing to answer your prayers; it's just life happening.

You learn to deal with evil in its most primal state—the ego. You learn that negative feelings, such as anger, envy, and resentment, must be understood and redirected or they will suffocate the life out of you and poison the universe that surrounds you. You learn to admit when you are wrong and to build bridges instead of walls.

You learn to be thankful and to take comfort in many of the simple things we take for granted—things that millions of people upon the Earth can only dream about: a full refrigerator, clean running water, a soft warm bed, a long hot shower. Slowly, you begin to take responsibility for yourself, by yourself, and you make yourself a promise to never betray yourself and to never ever settle for less than your heart's desire. You hang a wind chime outside your window so you can listen to the wind, and you make it a point to keep smiling, to keep trusting, and to stay open to every wonderful possibility.

Finally, with courage in your heart and with God by your side, you take stand, you take a deep breath, and you begin to design the life you want to live as best as you can.

Electricity ... First Aid Kit for the Future

Check the research of Robert C. Beck, D.Sc. based on US Patent # 5,188,738.

The Beck protocol includes 4 steps with 3 units. Endorsed by Bob Beck.

1. The Silver Pulser $175

Bio-stimulator based on micro-currents. Also makes ionic/colloidal silver with .9999 pure silver wires. Operates from one 9-volt battery. AC option. 3 year warranty.

2. The Magnetic Pulser $250

Target specific areas. Outputs an intense pulsed magnetic field of >43,133 Gauss. Penetrates 9 inches. Automatic pulsing. Bio-North marked. 12 Volts DC. 2 year warranty.

3. The Water Ozonator $350

Freshly ozonate drinking water. Tesla-based technology, operates from 12 Volts DC, high efficiency fused quartz crystal, high frequency cold plasma/cold corona ozone generator, 108 mg/Hr output, compact, light-weight, 2 year warranty.

CAFRs: The $60 Trillion Secret

(We Need Not Be Paying High Taxes!)

Editor's note: As the Master Teachers from the Higher Realms have been instructing for many years now (in writings such as we regularly present in this newspaper and have collected together in the volumes WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach), this is the time of The Great Awakening.

Mostly we think of this in a spiritual sense. And that is fine, as far as it goes. However, they actually mean in ALL areas—that The Truth shall be revealed and The Lies exposed.

Well now, what more down-to-Earth subject for exposing shenanigans could there be than the subject of money—especially monies derived from our taxes and controlled by our politicians? The creative bookkeeping outlined herein should speak volumes to we-the-people about the longstanding arrogance of so many public officials entrusted with the common welfare of the citizenry.

Our News Desk guru, Dr. Al Overholt, has assembled the following astonishing information from two sources. The first item is mostly an interview with courageous public investment expert Walter Burien by WorldNetDaily columnist Geoff Metcalf, extracted from the WorldNetDaily.com Internet website.

That information is followed by an article extracted from the sightings.com Internet website which provides further details about Walter Burien's daring crusade to awaken the public to this chronic and longterm fleecing of our wallets. The numbers here are absolutely staggering, on the one hand, in terms of outright robbery—yet please study carefully the item about Mesa, Arizona for an example of how it SHOULD be, all across this truly bountiful nation!

Those of you who remember all the doom and gloom stirred-up by the Orange County, California, derivatives investments scandal of a few years ago—and its later evaporation—will find the answer below. Wonder why we were never told about that answer through the regular print and broadcast media outlets?

Understand that, while this is the time when The Truth shall be revealed, that does not mean anyone is going to fix a mess FOR us. The testing of this time on planet Earth is what WE will DO, once we know The Truth.

9/12/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

The Governments' Secret Trillions Of Hidden Public Money

Are local and state governments strapped with severe budgetary constraints? Far from it, according to public investment expert Walter Burien.

Credited with discovering the existence of an elusive government document called the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report (CAFR), Burien provides a fascinating peek inside the TRUE financial worth of governments today. Thousands of these reports nationwide document the trillions of dollars of assets held by everything from the local water district to large state governments.

WorldNetDaily columnist Geoff Metcalf recently interviewed Burien about his work in educating the taxpaying public.

Metcalf's daily radio show can be heard on TalkNetDaily weekdays from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. Eastern time.

Question: For those who do not already know the story, how did you ever find out about these Comprehensive Annual Financial Reports?

Answer: About 10 years ago, I had been a commodities broker on Wall Street for 15 years. I was one of the first tenants in the World Trade Center. I did an international newswire coast-to-coast on commodities. I thought I knew what was going on; I thought I was one of those sharp little crackers. I always thought government was maybe hiding 5 to 10 percent maximum of the revenue and not reporting it to the public.

There was a governor who got elected named Jim Florio in New Jersey back in 1990 on a new tax platform. As soon as he got into office, there was a $2.8 billion tax increase—the largest in the state's history. The public was not too happy, and a couple of DJs, John and Ken out in Los Angeles, they started doing some rabble-rousing and taking calls from listeners on examples of waste and misspending in government. I heard small figures—$15,000, $25,000. The highest figure I heard was $85,000.

Q: Chump change.

A: Right. Being a commodity-trading adviser, I pulled out the Budget Report, which was the only thing I was aware of at the time. They had $11 billion on-budget, $6 billion off-budget, so the total service budget was $17 billion for the year. Net available: $25.6 billion.

So I called into the radio show and said: "Come on, guys; you're missing the whole point. The state is dealing with billions of dollars. The highest figure I heard was $85,000." I said if there is fraud, waste, and misspending taking place, it's taking place on the order of tens of billions, if not hundreds of billions. The DJs challenged us to start an organization.

So, the next day, I got together with nine other people and incorporated a group called "Hands Across New Jersey". John and Ken rabble-roused and, when we had our first rally, 115,000 people converged on Trenton and shut the Capitol down. I decided to start looking at the budget revenue and finance, so if I were approached with questions, I'd know what I was talking about.

Q: So where did you look?

A: When I looked at the budget, which was all I knew about, I noticed large, cash-cow investment agencies of state government were not on the report: the New Jersey Turnpike, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey—no large returns from investment funds. Now they gave mention of the different agencies on the report, but not the revenue.

Q: Don't state treasurers have to report this stuff when they are investing on Wall Street?

A: Here's where it broke down. I knew the director of the budget was on vacation until the following Tuesday of the next week. I called his office and found out who his two lower assistants were.

I said: "Hi. This is Walter Burien. I'm working on a report for Richard and I have to have it done by Tuesday when he gets back from vacation. I need all the figures on all the autonomous agency accounts and trust accounts and investment accounts."

And he said "Oh, you want the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report".

I said "Could I have a copy?" He said I'd better ask Mark (the next one down the line from the budget director).

Q: Notwithstanding your 15 years on Wall Street, you had never heard of this animal before?

A: First time. But I played the cards as they were dealt. I knew it was the most important thing I needed to get my hands on. So, I called Mark and said: "Hi, Mark, this is Walter Burien. I just got off the phone with Jim. I'm working on a report for Richard and I have to have it done by Tuesday. I need a copy of the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report."

He said "Oh, where do you want it sent to?"

I got it that Friday and started crunching numbers. Here's a state, with a declared service budget of $17 billion, showing a net available on their budget report of $24 billion. The year's totals on the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report: $188 billion!

Q: $188 billion!?

A: Correct. Investment funds, assets, and so forth. The income I started looking for was total cash gross receipts—the number one item the IRS asks you for in an audit.

Q: Would this be interest on investments?

A: Total income. Whether it be cash collected by state agencies, federal grants, the whole nine yards—total income. I found it on page 174 of the 1989 Comprehensive Annual Financial Report under cash additions.

Here's a state with a declared service budget of $17 billion that was bringing in, "in cash"—$86,799,000,000.

I learned the definition of syndicated organized crime on the spot and the principle of operation. Anything that was a cost and an expense, an outright cost on a budgetary basis, the public footed 100% of the bill for 100% of the services. Anything that was a substantial profit center was totally restricted by statute from inclusion whatsoever with the budgetary basis.

Q: This is above and beyond the off-budget stuff.

A: Whenever you hear the word "off-budget" that is something that is inclusive in the budget. When you look at the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report, you will see complete separate areas totally restricted by statute for inclusion with the budgetary basis.

A lot of people would refer to it as "two sets of books" although it's not exactly two sets of books. The budget report is in one book, and the Consolidated Annual Financial Report is THE book, the showing of the complete pizza pie.

Q: There are two things I want us to make real clear. You conducted your investigation in New Jersey. But this is not unique to New Jersey.

A: I'm going back 10 years. When I found out about New Jersey, especially when I found out they had approximately $80 billion in common-stock ownership, as a commodity trading adviser—

Q: You wanted them as a client.

A: That was actually true to a certain extent. But I was mad more than I was greedy. I said "How could I have not heard of this?" Here's New Jersey holding $80 billion in common stock. I was a commodity-trading adviser. I dealt with a lot of the CEOs of some of the major investment firms and I never heard it mentioned—in any circles. I found out when I called the mailroom of the Department of Treasury for New Jersey. It was sent out to every editor of every paper up and down the East Coast. It was sent to the directors and CEOs of ABC, CBS, NBC, and CNN. And now I'm getting mad. I was seeing a cooperative effort at non-disclosure—and it wasn't as if it was just created that year and the word hadn't gotten around.

Q: This Comprehensive Annual Financial Report, is it just a stack of numbers or is it something that has an executive summary and can actually be read and understood?

A: The CAFR is set up to be a simple, quick evaluation book to show: total income, total assets, total investments, total net worth. What's been going on in this country, for the last 65 years, is government will always focus the public's attention—intentionally so—on the budgetary basis of the budget report. And the only thing the budget report is, is their annual operating expenses.

Q: Give me an example.

A: Say it cost us $30,000 a year to maintain our house. Say our salary or income was $100,000 a year and we had a million dollars in investments, and say our total net worth was $3 million. What if we talked about our $30,000 budget as being our net worth? It would be ludicrous.

Q: So this is an intentional scam?

A: You've had a shell game played on the public where governments are constantly talking their budget, their budget, their budget. They just happen to leave out the decades and decades and decades of investment wealth that has been building up, the decades and decades of enterprise and venture projects they have created, separate from the budgetary basis.

Q: Just how ubiquitous are these Comprehensive Annual Financial Reports?

A: The Comprehensive Annual Financial Report was created by a group called Government Financial Officers Association in 1946. It was a program created to standardize accounting in all local governments so the federal government could easily see what the true picture was. In 1981, the federal government mandated that all local governments prepare a CAFR or, in the alternative, a combined financial statement. To qualify this, there are over 54,000 separate corporations within local government.

Q: What kind of corporations are you talking about?

A: A city is a corporation; a state is a corporation; a school district is a corporation. Each is filing their own separate report, each with their own investments. I've had a lot of people looking at their state reports. They see the tens of billions of dollars they never knew existed—and they are floored. Then I bring to their attention: "You're just looking at the state report."

Q: Give us an example.

A: I'll use the state of Washington as an example. It lists $64 billion in liquid investment funds. Now, the state of Washington has 2,300 separate local government corporations filing their own separate reports: cities, counties, school districts, authorities. You have 2,300 other reports.

Q: And still no one does anything about this?

A: Recently, a person was running for city council in Corona, California, with a population of about 10,000. He saw a video I put out called The Biggest Game In Town. This individual is an attorney. He'd been pressing the county on different issues concerning financial fraud. He saw the video and said "Naw. This can't be." But he saw it on the weekend and it motivated him to check. He discovered the city had a Comprehensive Annual Financial Report.

He got a copy of it. He didn't see any large numbers in the combined financial columns, but he observed, in the notes of the report, that it directed you to four other areas outside the report. The first area he looked into, he found $144 million in U.S. Treasury Bonds sitting there. Now divide that by a population of 10,000. That's $14,000 for every man, woman, and child.

Q: How do they report the income?

A: On the CAFR. That's why it's noted to refer to other reports for an accounting.

Q: So there is no way this money gets applied to the general fund for expenses?

A: When you look at the general-purpose funds, they have very stringent rules on managing taxpayer dollars. For example, you can only invest in treasury bills, triple-rated bonds, 4.5, 5 percent max.

The game has been, over the past 25 years, in whatever way, shape, or form, to shift revenue outside of the general-purpose operating fund.

Whether it be through a local-government investment pool, bond refinancing accounts, insurance company equity participation—anything that will be outside the general-purpose operating fund, which is very restrictive.

Q: Two questions I've always wanted to ask you and never gotten around to are: (1) Is there anyone providing oversight for all these things, and (2) if there is, do they get a piece of the action?

A: I get a lot of phone calls, and folks ask: "Where's all the money sitting? What account is it in? And who's managing it?" I would say this is the principle of operation. There are over 54,000 separate corporations. The public left the vault door open.

I give the example: If you had 12- and 13-year-old boys and you gave them carte blanche to let them write their own allowance check every week, and you make $1,200 a week, within no time, they would be cutting a check for $1,000 a week. If you told them you were going to cut them back to $800 a week, they would scream, holler, kick, and use any logic available to them to justify how 12- and 13-year-old boys could not survive on just $800 per week. There's no difference here—you just have bigger boys and sharper players.

People mention conspiracies and so forth. I say there is no conspiracy here. You just have the vault door wide open. The public allowed it. The bank left the doors open over the weekend, with cash lying on the counter and no one guarding it.

Q: So who is the primary beneficiary of this vast wealth?

A: The investment revenue. There is $60 trillion in investment revenue. You have tens of thousands of little empires being built all over the country, people controlling those monies that are invested.

You know, when you go to the bank and you get a mortgage on your house, you think you are borrowing private funds. When I look at the [government] revenue flows, I see hundreds of billions in different pension funds, investment funds, invested with the local banks under their mortgage division. The banks are acting as the "in-between" agent, getting a half a point or two-thirds of a point for cutting the loan.

Q: Walter, there is a mountain of information you have that we won't have time to get to. So, please let our readers know how they can find more information on this chilling topic.

A: The e-mail address is cafr1@aol.com. If anyone would like a copy of the video The Biggest Game In Town, just put in the subject line "requesting video" and I'll send it out. I also include various links for getting assorted information.

Geoff's note: I have interviewed Burien a few times over the past two or three years. His information is remarkable. The CAFR has been around for over half a century and, despite the vast money involved, this story has remained virtually ignored by the mainstream. Sarah Foster of WorldNetDaily wrote about this shortly after I first put Walter on the air in San Francisco. Read her stories: "The Government's Secret Slush Funds" and "Secret 'Slush Funds'—New Government Scams" at TalkNetDaily. Geoff Metcalf is a staff reporter for WorldNetDaily.

CAFRs: The BIGGEST Secret $60 Trillion Invested By Fed, State, And Local Governments!

The importance of this CAFR scandal is beyond imagining. The more people who are aware of this, then the more pressure we can bring to bear on the manipulators.

Reported—but for all purposes HIDDEN from American taxpayers—Local, State, and Federal governments currently hold about $60+ trillion of profitable investments in real estate, pension funds, insurance companies, liquid investment funds, bond financing accounts, and corporate stock portfolios ($32 trillion), over 53% of America's stock market, and a large percentage of the international stock market, etc. These are all revealed in their required filing of CAFRs (Comprehensive Annual Financial Reports) and noted reports therein.

Walter Burien, who has been blowing the whistle on this gargantuan scam, says: "Americans OWN the majority of America's WEALTH and don't know it." With the profits rolling in from international investments, you now know the true motive behind NAFTA and GATT.

- Calling it "risky" to allow taxpayers to invest a tiny 2% of their social security in the stock market is laughable when our governments ALREADY have $32 trillion invested in the same "risky" domestic and international stock markets!

- The $6+ trillion "estimated surplus" going into the year 2004 announced by Clinton is also laughable compared to the additional trillions of "surplus" earnings being added yearly to government composite CAFRs.

- If those hidden assets are revealed and used, the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds will never run out.

- When Orange County lost a little over $1 billion in derivatives investments, they were crying "poverty" and threatening to shut down schools, police would have to be laid off, etc. However, someone dug into the Orange County CAFR and found out that the county had about $16 billion in profitable investments! The county, from their profitable liquid investment funds/cash position, could have continued performing the same services, without collecting one dime in taxes, and could have done so for another 11.9 years from the existing funds prior to running out of money! The crying stopped.

- While he was a mayor, Jesse Ventura's city council wanted to raise $360,000 in taxes to cover a shortfall on their "city budget for schools". Ventura objected when he discovered the city owned $48,000,000 in idle investment funds from which the $360,000 could be drawn without raising taxes!

- Burien estimates that the yearly earnings on the composite CAFR investments and venture/enterprise projects are so enormous, ALL taxes in most communities in the United States could be phased out and eliminated in the foreseeable future.

For example, property taxes: Burien informed me that in Mesa, Arizona, the Mormons running the city government have structured to use their CAFR earnings. On a $230,000 home in Mesa, owners pay only $230 a year, and the city offers the best services to its residents by operating the majority of city functions from the return from the investment funds.

(The city's investment fund totals, 1998, were $1.7 billion, yielding about $225 million, which when applied, eliminates the need for forced taxation! This is BASIC 101 application, so why don't we hear about it? I don't think I have to answer that question; the answer is obvious: control, greed, power mongering, empire building for the inside players!)

Starting as of September 8, 1998, Walter Burien, a prior Commodities Trading Advisor, has been exposing the CAFR, the BIGGEST FINANCIAL SCANDAL in U.S. HISTORY, going on for over 55 years, starting in 1945.

Participating in the Comprehensive Annual Financial Report (CAFR) double-book accounting strategy, which reeks with scandal, are nearly all federal, state, and local governments, earning (yet unreported on the traditional budget reports) hundreds of billions each year, held in slush funds separated from the "budget". The CAFRs are mostly controlled by about 40 international investment management companies.

For example, in 1998, Burien found:

- Stock ownership composite totals equal to $32+ trillion;
- Insurance company equity participation equal to $8+ trillion;
- Bond surety investment accounts equal to $5.5+ trillion;
- Totals from all liquid investment funds equal to $60 trillion.

Awakening To The Miracle

9/20/00 SOLTEC

Good evening, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in service to The One Light—Creator of All That Is. Be at peace and be still.

You ones are continually striving to understand the non-seen world that precipitates the physical “reality” you perceive with your five basic senses. The perceptual nature needed to do so with accuracy takes time and persistence to develop, and yet for many of you, this time and persistence has already been accomplished in prior experiences and just awaits your recognition and awakening of the “latent” ability.

We encourage you ones to persist in finding your personal awareness of this INNATE perceptual ability, for it is through the use of same that the true fulfillment of purpose can and will be recognized. Be not the follower of another. Rather, learn to interpret your own Guidance and follow that which the heart tells you is right for you. To do so truly honors the Infinite Creator—The One Light—for you will be taking great strides toward fulfilling your ultimate purpose—the one Creator intended for you to fulfill from the instant of Creator’s conception of your very soul.

This one message is perhaps the greatest message we can give to you ones in such a general dissertation as this. Ultimately we can only help you ones to help yourselves; to do more would surely usurp your free will, and this would be an ethical violation of all for which the Lighted Brotherhood symbolizes and stands. We would no longer be serving you; we would, in essence, be controlling—and thus using—you.

We would hope that you feel a need for greater personal insight (Guidance) so as to spark within a desire to seek out and find same. We pray that you learn to look within and find the internal connection to Source through which all knowledge and understanding come.

YOU ARE THE MIRACLE OF CREATION!

Let not any self perception that contradicts this last statement be a part of you, for this is precisely the game the dark, would-be controllers play with your mind. Know that you are a PERFECT creation and that your current environment and challenges are PERFECTLY balanced so as to help you to achieve the next level of awareness (soul growth) you are innately striving to achieve.

All ones are explorers trying to recognize the answers that bring understanding to the heart’s many cries for balance and peace. The emotional perceptions that cause such searching are precisely what you need at any given moment so as to have the recognition that there is still more to learn, experience, and thus grow.

The journey is one of an infinite nature, for there will forever be newness to experience, and the combinations of possibilities is quite endless and expanding on a moment-by-moment basis. With each new level of awareness achieved will come greater personal responsibility and energy potentials for you to use and learn to balance. With each new level of awareness the new challenges become more comprehensive for the one who wishes to master same and continue on to the next, ever expanding level of awareness (consciousness).

Due to the transition underway, many ones are coming more fully into an awareness of what you ones would call the “higher” senses—ESP and other psychic abilities. As we have stated many times prior, there will thus naturally continue to unfold a Great Awakening, which shall also bring about a great resurgence of TRUE Spirituality.

True Spirituality, as referred to here, is of a nature wherein ones begin to recognize the Inner Connectedness of ALL things through their own personal connection to Creator Source. This is a rather liberating experience, especially for ones who have become embroiled in one or more of the many religious factions which use fear tactics to scare their followers into doing the “right” thing. There is no “Hell” of fire and brimstone—as many a Sunday sermon would have you believe—other than, of course, what you conjure in your own mind, and give “life” to, in reaction to hearing and believing such words.

Learn to recognize the MASSIVE MIND-CONTROL machinery all about you. Mind control is anything that is intended to sway your opinion or belief about something without giving all of the objective facts. A one-sided argument is designed to manipulate opinions and emotions of the targeted individual. Advertisement, simply stated, is QUITE an effective tool to accomplish this end result.

We witness how many of you fail to recognize that the majority of your NEWS broadcasts are engineered in quite the same manner as are the commercial advertisements in between. This is to say that almost all of the media is used to bring about a desired change in perception and emotional state. This is done in a very deliberate manner so as to systematically degrade the moral structure of your world.

As the moral structure of the individual becomes eroded, this degradation is then passed on to the subsequent generations, and the result is a world wherein the majority become very numb (uncaring) and lack a desire to even question the authoritative figures who wish to control and rule the masses as their whim may dictate.

The “numbness” can be reversed with relative ease once individuals truly realize they are being played as pawns in a much larger game—the domination and control of your soul. However, so long as the dark ones can keep you in a state of believing you are “worthless”, that you are not the Miracle we spoke of earlier, then they keep you from recognizing and utilizing your Infinite Potential to create.

This may at first sound a little like “fire and brimstone”, but it is not at all that. Simply stated, there are entities who have grown to high levels of spiritual awareness, and yet feel that they should be God and have the worship and control over others. Since they, too, are an aspect of the Infinite One Source (Creator God), they recognize their potential, and yet they wish to “have it all”—not realizing that, through God, they would “have it all”!

In short they wish to “have it all” but remain individually disconnected from The All That Is—The One Light, Creator Source. As you can appreciate, this simply cannot exist, and yet these so-called dark ones are “hell-bent” on trying to find a way.

They do their searching by using others and trying to turn them away from the Lighted pathway. Their assumption is that if they can somehow get enough individual aspects of Creator to convert to their way of thinking, then they have a chance of somehow changing the thinking of God.

The best these dark higher-dimensional entities can ever seem to accomplish is to “neutralize”—for a short period of time, while ones are incarnate in the physical—the forward soul progress of the masses, as they effort to repolarize the thinking of those ones (you call the “elite” controllers of your planet and their puppets) who can be easily overwhelmed with the ideologies of material power and control. These dark higher-dimensional entities tend to refuse to appreciate or accept that they will ALWAYS be a unique fragment (subset of The Whole) of God, rather than being God.

Knowing the nature of the Larger Game being played will help you to see when and where the “tricksters” try to pull you from your path. However, “neutralizing” you, by keeping you ignorant as to the Inner Potential of your being, does little more than buy them some time while they try to “harvest” the ones who you might generally refer to as being “satanic” in nature.

When the masses awaken beyond a threshold level, and realize that they have been played for the fool, there will come an abrupt end to these games as the dark ones literally flee in fear of their “mortal” life.

Social unrest is growing day by day as the “common” man continues to awaken from the fog of delusional inspirations of materialism and such, to find that there is still a great wanting that calls for satisfaction and for INNER peace. This wanting is for a greater understanding so as to make sense out of the circumstances and state of worldwide degradation. The answers are, at first, hard to swallow, but in time the TRUE answers will be all that are left that will bring the Understanding and Knowing that fulfills the searching within.

Remember, please, from earlier writings, that DESIRE summons forth the energy which brings forth the ANSWERS. The answers WILL come!

When enough of the so-called “common” people awaken to the state of recognizing and knowing what is taking place, there shall come a great “cry to the heavens” as has never been heard before. This focus of desire for liberation will be so great that even the Earth

Herself will respond, and many a location with high concentrations of “negative” energy will be cleansed through the movement of her crustal plates and the shifting of her waters.

Never underestimate the Potential of the “common” person. The so-called “elite” controllers of your world often do, but their controllers (the higher-dimensional, dark entities who really pull the strings) DO NOT—and this is the reason for the large-scale, mass mind-control efforts with which you ones are constantly being bombarded.

Such is the state of your world.

Please ALWAYS remember that you are a player in a massive game called “life”, and that no matter what the outcome of your personal experience in this particular sojourn, the game will inevitably continue and you will have endless opportunities to get the lessons you desire.

The potential for growth at this time of a major planetary transformation is QUITE high and unique. You have the Inner Potential to make great strides in your personal understanding and awareness at this time. You each came forth with great certainty and desire and knowing that the challenges and opportunities would be great. You made NO mistakes in judgment when deciding to come forth and experience these things at this time.

Quite the opposite, in fact! Almost all of you came forth with great exhilaration and anticipation of the very conditions that now exist. Be patient and persistent and hold to your own personal inner convictions, and you will see that all of these “hard” times will, in essence, bring to you great experiential growth and a unique and evolving understanding that will further contribute to the collective understanding and growth of ALL of Creation.

Persist and call upon The Light for assistance in your times of overwhelm. Often the only thing needed in a time of overwhelm is a shift in viewpoint wherein some level of understanding can be appreciated. Call upon the Light of Creator God frequently and often, for we of the Lighted Realms, in service to The One Light, are granted far more latitude when a conscious call is made. This is to say that we can offer a greater level of assistance to you ones when you ask for our help.

Remember, most of all, that you are NEVER alone along your journey. You each have Guides who watch over you constantly, and though they will almost never interfere with your free-will choice, they will offer those “gut feelings” which you may interpret as signs of their offering of assistance to you. Learn to interpret these signs, for they will be unique to you, and for you to recognize and learn how to use—if that be your choice.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, come in service to The One Light, Creator Source, so that you, my brothers and sisters, may have the insights you desire, and so that you might have some Light by which to navigate along your chosen path.

May you each learn to exploit the very unique opportunities available to you at this most exciting time of evolutionary change.

Blessings and Peace to you ALL! Salu.

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

Stop Ritalin!

2.5 Million Children Across The Nation Are Being Given “Cocaine” By Their Parents And Doctors To Make Them Behave Better

Editor's note: A friend of mine (E.Y.), a single mom of an 8-year-old son, recently took him out of the school system and is beginning to home-school him—on top of all the other demands of just living and making a living these days. There was really no choice in the matter for her because her son had recently become yet another of the horrendous Ritalin statistics (and casualties) if he were to remain in school.

She said “the school REALLY pressures you” to accept the Ritalin-need diagnosis. “And then, with a straight face, they tell you he will probably also need to take these high-blood-pressure pills” to help sedate him because “he probably won’t be able to sleep at night” due to certain side-effects of the Ritalin!

She also said that the Ritalin caused a number of debilitating body tics (involuntary jerking muscle spasms) to occur with her son and that these are rarely mentioned until AFTER your child exhibits the symptoms. Thankfully he stopped having the spasms once mom refused to give him any more Ritalin. But it’s not always the case that the spasms stop; sometimes the damage is permanent.

What did this precocious 8-year-old say about being on the Ritalin? He said: “It felt like I was having an out-of-body experience.” Now THERE’S something to think about!

Meanwhile, our SPECTRUM newspaper computer guru has made it possible for the restless mental energies of this “learning deficient” 8-year-old to focus on a computer and certain computer-run learning tools—teachers that can keep up with his formidable, fast mind and, in the process, help with the home schooling project.

With that said, we present the following collection of excerpts (with a special thanks to Mary S.) which may provide some unique insights about this subject of Ritalin because of the hard-to-argue-with personal perspectives of the authors. We could have gone on for many pages with an expansive coverage of this most serious subject. After all, look at the tragic school shootings of the past few years and keep in mind that ALL of the student-culprits (victims themselves) were on one or another of the Ritalin family of pharmaceuticals.

The fact that a school receives so much money for each child they identify as needing Ritalin tells a whole story in itself as far as ethics and morals are concerned. And the fact that so many doctors seem to have no problem dispensing prescriptions for this product gets back to the disparaging comments I made in the last issue of The SPECTRUM on the subject of the graduates of modern Higher Education—especially so many of those from advanced training such as medical schools.

In any event, what is going on here is truly scary and staggeringly widespread. Parents who want to do the right thing for their children have a tough road to follow as the New World Order’s “web of control” continues to expand and tighten. Maybe some additional knowledge on this subject will help parents, teachers, grandparents, etc. who really care to see their way to a better solution.

Remember our Front Page story on the “Indigo Children” back in the March 2000 issue of this newspaper. A large number of very, very special children are being born into this planet at this time of the Great Awakening. The so-called “elite” controllers—the crooks in high places who have engineered their precious New World Order—are very much aware of these children (and their gifts) and are doing everything they can to identify these children and prevent them from realizing their formidable potential.

In a related article on page 31 in that same March 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM was when we first presented some information and sounded the alarm about Ritalin. That article was titled: The Ritalin Generation: Drugging America’s Youth. What better way to do this than with the schools AND the doctors pushing the Ritalin. Maybe it’s time we-the-people redefined the so-called War On Drugs before an entire generation is lost!

Ken Anderson wrote:

Hi, I Pray You Share This With Others.

Drugs prescribed from state licensed medical doctors KILL approximately 137,000 people every year. And another 115,000 die from hospital mistakes. Therefore, 137,000 + 115,000 = 252,000 people die (are put in their grave) each year directly from the medical profession. Known suicides account for 30,535 deaths and AIDS kills 16,314.

(These above statistics are from the book Essential Health Issues by Charles A. Weisman, a 64-page new book that has the leading causes of death from 1 to 15 on page 62. The fourth cause of death in America is drug reactions, at 137,000; the fifth is medical errors, at 115,000; the 14th is AIDS, only 16,314 people a year. I ask you: why do we hear so much about AIDS and literally nothing about licensed doctors giving drugs killing people and mistakes that are made in the hospitals? You can order this book from Weisman Publications, P.O. Box 405, Eagon, MN 55122.)

Dr. Gemmer:

Americans would be horrified if they picked up today's newspaper and it said that 2,500,000 children across the nation were being given cocaine by their parents and doctors to make them behave better.

Unfortunately, this is so close to what is, in fact, happening that it takes a chemist to tell the difference. Millions of children—and most of them are boys—are being dosed with mind-altering, highly addictive stimulants that work on the brain much like cocaine does.

The drug is methyl-phenidate hydrochloride. Most of us know it by the trade name Ritalin. Its use has shot up 600% in less than ten years. We are now hearing reports of elementary schools where 40%, and even 50%, of the students are taking Ritalin daily, on a prescription basis. And, according to the Drug Enforcement Agency, it is quite common for over 20% of the students in a given school to be drugged with it—week after week.

The morning school bell rings, and long lines of students form at the nurse's station as the morning medicating begins. This is a phenomenon seen nowhere else on Earth. The United States consumes five times more of this drug than all the rest of the world combined.

What is worse is that more prescriptions for Ritalin are being written with every passing month. If the current rate of increase continues, there could be 8,000,000 American children taking this drug in less than two years from right now.

How can this be?

Simply put, a giant pharmaceutical company, a person of the psychiatric industry, and certain branches of the education establishment have teamed up and are pushing to convince people that Ritalin is good and is safe. Well-meaning parents, as well as school nurses and principals, often do not know that other solutions are readily available, so they finally bend under the pressure and begin supporting the practice of medicating the kids.

The drug is supposed to help kids sit still, listen, and perhaps focus better. But even if its use did consistently provide these benefits—which it doesn't—what are we teaching these students in the process?

These young students who are given the drug, and all the other students looking on, are getting a very clear message: Take drugs when faced with a challenge. Take drugs to perform better. Take drugs to fit in and be like everyone else.

And, even though there is a constant effort in most communities to tell kids to stay away from drugs, our actions are speaking so much louder than our words. For instance, every school day all over the country local law enforcement officers park their vehicles, maybe right next to the proudly displayed drug-free zone sign, and head into the elementary school. These dedicated professionals then teach drug awareness/resistance education classes to the children, and get pledges from the kids that they will keep their bodies free from drugs.

But the sad thing is, in order for the officers to get into the classes where they will be encouraging the kids to stay off the drugs, they have to work their way past dozens—or sometimes even hundreds—of children all lined up to get their morning doses of Ritalin!

Now, I know that these are challenging times for teachers and parents, and that there are several reasons why a greater number of kids may now be overactive, or having trouble paying attention. But I have also always believed that it is best to address the basic underlying causes of any problem. Thankfully there are real answers and, in the next few minutes, you will hear some of them.

Ritalin is not an innocent little pill like we have been led to believe. Studies cited by the Drug Enforcement Agency have shown that Ritalin and cocaine cause nearly identical reactions in the very same brain cells. Tests have also shown that cocaine addicts can hardly tell the difference between the two, and Ritalin abuse is now generating more Emergency Room visits among certain age groups than cocaine.

In several states, lawsuits have been filed against school officials and doctors, alleging malpractice and fraud specifically, because the parents involved had not been advised of Ritalin's severe side effects. You see, Ritalin often gives the appearance of helping, but there are consequences. Many kids become plagued with nervousness, insomnia, weight loss, stunted growth, depression, dizziness, nausea, headaches, drowsiness, chest pains, rapid or irregular heartbeat, and many other problems too numerous to list here.

[The talk goes on for 30 minutes more.]

More on this sad issue comes from the www.resultsproject.net Internet website. If you have ever wanted to understand why is it a crime to get children on Ritalin for just being "right brained", I urge you to read the following first-hand account:

Are You Empowered By ADD/ADHD
Or Multiple-Thought-Impaired?

by Steve V. Plog, ADHD

I get a kick out of people telling me that their child has a "problem" with Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD). I was 39 before I found out that I also had a "problem" with

ADD. Funny how I could go 39 years without a problem, and now, as if by magic, I have a problem. I was officially diagnosed with having Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder by a doctor in 1994.

Now there's a negative diagnosis if I have ever heard one. Half the words in the name of my so-called problem are identifying me as a loser. I now have a "deficit", I'm told!

For the record, I don't have a deficit—the federal government has that. I'm also told I have a "disorder". No, I'm not disorderly. I can stand on any street corner and not get arrested for being disorderly.

So what do I have? I have a right-brain thinking apparatus. People often refer to right-brained activity as being creative, and left-brained as being analytical.

Let's look at who says I have a problem. We'll start with the left-brain environment called school.

You don't think it's a left-brain environment? I remember being told to sit quietly with my hands folded, feet together, and eyes forward (brain out the window). Sound familiar?

Which part of this sounds like a creative environment? If you guessed none, you get an "A". Now we're going to be graded on our ability to "fit-in" and function in a world we don't belong in, nor will ever get a job in when we graduate.

Let me ask you some questions. Answer truthfully.

There are tall people and short people; which one is normal and fits in, and which one needs to be fixed?

There are left-handed people and right-handed people; which one is normal and fits in, and which one needs to be fixed?

One more: there are people with long attention spans and other people with short attention spans; which one is normal and fits in, and which one needs to be fixed?

I'm tall, I'm right-handed, and I have a short attention span. None of these traits need to be fixed!

Let's take a look at some people whose biography or life history indicate strong ADD or ADHD behaviors. Famous people who appear to have ADD or ADHD behaviors:

Albert Einstein, Babe Ruth, Kirk Douglas, Malcolm Forbes, Harry Belafonte, George Bernard Shaw, Issac Newton, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Andrew Carnegie, Sylvester Stallone, Louis Pasteur, Bruce Jenner, Cher, Henry Winkler, Edgar Allan Poe, Michael Jordan, Ernest Hemingway, Marilyn Monroe, Eleanor Roosevelt, Abraham Lincoln, Tom Cruise, Ann Bancroft, Charles Schwab, Steve McQueen, Leonardo da Vinci, Alexander Graham Bell, Tom Smothers, Napoleon Bonaparte, Walt Disney, Agatha Christie, Jackie Stewart, Nostradamus, Henry Ford, Stephen Hawking, Vincent van Gogh, Gen. George Patton, Galileo, Eddie Rickenbacker, Robin Williams, John D. Rockefeller, Whoopi Goldberg, Bill Cosby, Stevie Wonder, Pete Rose, Randolph Hearst, Thomas Edison, Beethoven, Anwar Sadat, “Magic” Johnson, F. Scott Fitzgerald, George Burns, George C. Scott, John F. Kennedy, Benjamin Franklin, Prince Charles, Steven Spielberg, John Lennon, Danny Glover, Winston Churchill, James Stewart, Mozart, Dustin Hoffman, The Wright Brothers, Lindsay Wagner, Pablo Picasso, Robert Kennedy, Dwight D. Eisenhower, Jim Carrey, Jerry Lewis, Charlie Chaplin, Ray Robbins, Steve Plog.

It sounds to me that, if someone says you have ADD, you should consider it a compliment. In fact, looking at this very small list of possibilities, it looks like, without people with ADD, nothing would get done.

Now let’s take some of these famous people and see what they would be like in today’s world, if they were in school or trying to “fit in” at a job.

Let’s take the first guy on the list, Albert Einstein. He didn’t even speak until he was 4 years old, so today they would have put him on Ritalin and locked him in a room with the “learning disabled” kids. Remember, he flunked 6th grade math. That’s right, he could do calculus in his head, but he flunked plain old math. So into the dummy class he goes, and he is given a lifetime of prescription drugs.

How about Bill Cosby? Instead of becoming a comedian, he gets a job sitting in a tollbooth all day by himself. Day in and day out he just gives change. The problem is, he can’t concentrate on the mundane and he keeps losing money. So they fire him and tell anyone who asks them for a recommendation: “He’s so slow he can’t count to 50!”

One more: Walt Disney. He gets a job working in an office cubicle and spends his time daydreaming on what I refer to as “mental HBO”. Until his boss comes by for the 10th time that day and says “Walt, pay attention, stop daydreaming, start concentrating, and get to work before I fire you!”

Wait. I know I said only one more, but I’m on a roll! Babe Ruth gets a job as a CPA and his boss comes by his desk and asks “Where’s Ruth?” To which his fellow employees say that Mr. Ruth is not back from lunch yet and it’s 1:15 p.m. “Tell Mister Ruth when he gets back to clean out his desk; we don’t want anyone working here who can’t tell time.”

You see, if you evaluate extreme right-brain people only in left-brain environments, you get the wrong picture. Let’s reverse it: Let’s take some left-brain people and see how they would fit into the ADD creative world. OK?

Hold on a minute. I just hit writer’s block because I’m trying to think of some very boring, timely, regimental, stick-in-the-mud, left-brain people with good memories who are famous. Can someone give me a hint just to get me started? There must be someone.

Ok, let’s take someone we know is smart, like a college professor—how about the professor from the Gilligan’s Island TV show. Do you remember his name? I don’t. He was a nice guy, but not very exciting.

Ok, so let’s say that Walt Disney lost his mind, and put old what’s-his-name (I still can’t remember his name) in charge of his creative department for new projects. What would the outcome be? Regular Duck, Mundane Mouse, Snow Beige And The Seven Height-Impaired People. Who wants to go see the movie? Come on, let’s see those hands. Anyone, anyone at all? Why is everyone staring out the windows? Are you all daydreaming? Hey, we have a hand up! No, wait; that person said his name is Bill Gates, and when I said “windows” he said it gave him an idea.

Yes we daydream, that’s how creative people come up with ideas like figuring out how to harness electricity after watching a thunderstorm. You will find we have a low threshold of boredom. We go into what I call “mental HBO”. Not only can I daydream while you talk to me, I can daydream while I talk to you. As a matter of fact, I’m doing it right now while I’m typing because I can think of more than one thing at a time.

My thoughts are multifaceted, while the left-brain people are what I would diagnose as “Multiple Thought Impaired”! I’m ADD and you’re “Multiple Thought Impaired”. Someone should start a charity for you. I can see the ads now: “Send in your donation for those who have never had an original thought in their life!” Someone get me Jerry Lewis’ phone number! Will he listen to me? Yes, of course, and I’ll give you three guesses why. Watch one of his old movies and picture him at the tollbooth.

So far, everyone keeps looking at ADD through the left-brain mentality. Let’s look at the POSITIVE traits that are the opposite of everything they say is wrong with us:

Multiple-Thought-Impaired View Of ADD (The Positive Side Of ADD)

- Easily distracted. (Constantly monitoring environment.)
- Attention span is short. (But can become intensely focused for long periods of time; able to throw themselves into the chase on a moment’s notice.)
- Poor planner, disorganized and impulsive; makes snap decisions. (Flexible; ready to change strategy quickly.)
- Distorted sense of time; unaware of how long it will take to do something. (Tireless; capable of sustained drives, but only when “hot on the trail” of some goal.)
- Impatient. (Results oriented—NOW!)
- Doesn’t convert words into concepts adeptly, and vice versa; slow reader. (Visual or concrete thinker, clearly seeing a tangible goal even if there are no words for it.)

- Has difficulty following instructions. (Independent, entrepreneurial, born leader.)

- Daydreamer. (Bored by mundane tasks; enjoys new ideas, excitement, “the hunt” or the journey.)

- Acts without considering consequences. (Willing and able to take risks and face danger.)

- Lacking in the social graces. (No time for niceties when there are decisions to be made.)

Now take a look at our list of famous ADD people and see if you can spot the traits in all of the people listed. Now who truly has the problem and who needs to be fixed?

Is being ADD ever a problem? Is being boring ever a problem? Nobody is right the way they are all the time.

Ok, I know what you’re thinking: “Being ADD does have some drawbacks, doesn’t it?” Yup, and being tall I sometimes bump my head. But, for the sake of argument, let’s tackle some of these so-called problems that kids have with ADD.

So-called problem #1: “He can’t sit still in school and pay attention.”

So what’s your point? Name one job that pays you to sit still, quietly, with your hands folded, feet together, and your eyes forward. Not one? So he can’t do something he’s never going to have to do in his life? Sounds like a zero problem to me.

Here’s my question: do you want him to pay attention and learn or do you want him to sit quietly, bound and gagged for hours on end? ADD people can learn while they’re moving around! Here are some success stories that might help illustrate what I’m talking about regarding learning to study “ADD style”. The first is from Carolyn, who is blessed with Michael, age 12, who is positively ADHD and proud of it.

Carolyn’s story: [quoting]

Michael came home one day and I brought him to a special table Mr. Plog had told me to prepare. In the middle of the room stood this table with extensions on the legs, making it chest high to Michael. When he stood next to the table, it was writing height and there was no chair to sit on because it was made to be used standing.

I told Michael “I’ve decided you never ‘have’ to do homework again. It’s your choice and it’s totally up to you.” Steve was right, at this time I had his total attention; you could have heard a pin drop! I went on: “I have decided that you will determine if you want to do your homework or not.” I can honestly say I’ve never seen a bigger smile in my life.

I told him to come over to the table and look at the 15-minute timer I had sitting on the table. There were also comic books, a big sheet of white paper covering the whole table, crayons, and his toys.

I told him that I was going to ask him if he had homework when he comes home tomorrow, and if he does, then he has to stand at the table for 15 minutes to the second.

After 15 minutes to the second, he can go play for 15 minutes to the second.

After playtime I would ask him if he had homework, and if he said yes, then he had to go back to the table for another 15 minutes.

Now the difference is, I'm not telling him to do his homework. I'm just telling him the consequences if he still has some. This takes me, the teacher, and everyone else out of the loop and puts the responsibility on Michael. I'm not saying he has to do his homework, I'm just telling him he'll have to go back and forth every 15 minutes until he turns 18 and moves out of the house.

So the next day Michael comes home and I ask him "Do you have homework?" He said "Yes" and I told him to stand at the table. For the first 3 minutes he started to do his homework, and then started reading his comic books.

Ding! The 15 minutes were up and I told him to go play. He walked right over to the TV and sat down. Exactly 15 minutes to the second I pulled the cord out of the wall.

When he started to object, I escorted him to the table and told him "We will not be waiting until there is a commercial or until the scene is over. We will not be negotiating anything, period. It will be 15 minutes to the second."

ADD people will not take no for an answer; they will stretch anything out until they wear you out. Mr. Plog was very adamant that there be no pushing the time back. No changing the rules, no adjustments, no exceptions, nothing, zero, nada, zip, zilch.

At the table again, Michael started doing his homework and made it about 5 minutes before he was back to the comic book. Ding. At exactly 15 minutes to the second I said "Go play." Michael took one look at the TV (all shows are at least 30 minutes) and figured that was not going to work. So he started playing Nintendo.

Ding. Exactly 15 minutes to the second I pulled the plug out of the wall and he screamed "Wait!" "No" I told him. "If you wanted to save the game, you should have done it before the bell. Back to the table we go. Michael then did an amazing thing: he started doing his homework and stayed concentrating on it for the full 15 minutes! He was still working when the bell went off again.

Ding. Exactly 15 minutes later I said "OK, go play." He smiled and said "Great; I'm almost done." I took the pen out of his hand and said "Go play." Michael said "Give me the pen back; I'm almost done." I told him "No, you can't be here now, because you can only be here for 15 minutes." He persisted "Mom, I'm almost done". I said "I know, but that's the way the game is played." He still persisted.

Do you catch this argument? Michael is saying "Let me do my homework" and mom is saying "No, you have to go play"! Isn't that happening all over America today? ADD kids are begging to do their homework and moms are forcing them to go play.

For 15 minutes Michael paced the floor, eating a peanut butter & jelly sandwich with milk, while waiting, waiting. (What's he waiting for? To do his homework! Isn't that the case all over America? ADD kids pacing the floor waiting for their moms to let them finish their homework?!)

Ding. Michael races back to his stand-up desk and finishes the work in 2 minutes flat, and says "See, I told you I was almost done." I smiled and said "I believe you, but that's the way the game is played. You can only be at the table for 15 minutes."

(You see, when an ADD child is told to sit there until they are done, they will start to daydream after a few minutes and could be there all day.)

The emphasis is that you can only be at the desk for 15 minutes, period. You now have a deadline. We have built in the procrastination factor for you. Michael came home the next day and walked straight to the stand-up desk and wham! He finished his homework in 15 minutes flat. Now, the amazing thing is that his teacher had given him 45 minutes worth of homework. Maybe for the "multiple thought impaired" children in his class, but not Michael!

Mr. Plog told him that if his brain were powering a racecar and the other kids in his class had their brains powering a racecar, his would be the fastest car on the track.

The game Michael now plays against himself is, if he can do his homework in one sitting, then he did it ADD-speed. If he does it in two sittings, then he did it slug-speed. Michael's grades have gone from Ds to Bs with this simple little game, plus those little chewable fruit and vegetable pills that we use from the Results Project. Now he's doing homework ADD-style! [end quoting]

Teacher's story: [quoting]

I told Mr. Plog that I couldn't even get my ADD class to sit down and take roll in the morning. Then he told me to take roll ADD-style. After he explained it, I tried it the very next day. I told the class that everyone who is sitting down in their chair and answers when their name is called, gets to have recess from 8:30am until 8:50am, right at the start of the day.

Well, would you believe that eight of those kids thought that standing over their chair, or touching the chair, or sitting in someone else's chair counted.

I told those eight kids to sit with their hands folded, feet together, against the wall, and be quiet while the other kids played right in front of them for 20 minutes! Then I have roll call again after lunch, and we do this again. Would you believe that, in just one day, everyone is sitting quietly in their own chair waiting to qualify for recess? I now have four breaks in the day, which means I have four hours of concentration and attention instead of five hours of space cadets. [end quoting]

Life in the ADD fast lane. Let me explain what it's like to listen to the multiple-thought-impaired all day long.

Have you ever visited your grandparents who are over 90 in the rest home and really listened to them for awhile? Kind of slow, huh? Well, now picture that you are visiting people who seem that slow and you talk to them 5 hours a day, 12 years in a row. (That's what school was like for me.) Have you ever listened to someone who stutters really badly? Have you ever listened to someone who had too much to drink tell a really long and boring story? If you have done at least one of these, you know what you sound like when you talk to us. Realllllll slowwwwww.

The reason we're not listening is because we can't concentrate on too much "dead air", as they say in radioland. Our minds think real fast, we listen fast, and we talk fast. Try staring at a wall and concentrating on the wall itself. That is what a conversation with you is like. Take an 8-year-old with ADD and try talking faster. Guess what? You got his attention. Use small words and just talk fast.

Let me explain something: Let's say two people of the same age and athletic ability decide to exercise. One walks 2 hours a day for a year and the other runs 2 hours a day for a year. Guess who has the strongest legs? The runner! Now think of your ADD brain as the runner, and the multiple-thought-impaired brain as the walker, and guess who has the most developed brain? Speed up the conversation and you have instant attention.

It's simple logic. ADD people have a short attention span and think real fast, so how should they do anything? Fast and in short spurts. How should you teach them? How should they do their jobs? Fast and in short spurts.

We're just fine, thank you. I happen to be blessed with a very creative mind with a short memory. So when someone calls and says let's get together for lunch day after tomorrow, I say great, call me back and remind me. If they say write it down, I tell them "No, I'll just lose the piece of paper, and besides, you're the multiple-thought-impaired rocket scientist with the great memory, so you remember to remind me."

I stopped apologizing for being creative a long time ago. Others call it a short attention span. I correct them and tell them "It keeps the creative juices flowing, thank you." Ten minutes after I meet someone at a party, right in front of 20 people, I'll ask them their name again. I say: "Sorry, I forgot your name."

Then, five minutes later, I'll ask again. When they say "You have a bad memory!" I say "I couldn't fit creativity and memory in the same head, so boring lost out." What about drugs, behavior modification, lists, organization charts? Sounds like some good topics for some opportunists to sell a lot of "how to" material. You take a duck and send him to eagle school to learn how to hunt.

First day out the new eagle-school graduate spots a squirrel and then you know what happens? The duck makes friends with the squirrel! Why? Because he's a duck!

Self esteem. When kids are in school, they are fighting for an identity. They are searching for self-esteem and trying to find out where they fit in. Little things, like a bad haircut, can set them back 6 months. Their ego is very fragile at that age. Right in the middle of trying to fit in, the people they trust the most, their parents, doctors, and teachers, point their finger at them and say "You have ADD!" and "There is something wrong with you; you're going to have to go to Special Class."

Now try to fit in. Yeah, right. I just get to the batter's box, only to find out I get to start with 2 strikes against me in the game of life. Forget that! By the way, what do kids call the Special Class? Dummy or retard class.

I tried to fit in and compete academically for eight years. All I could get was a D average. By the time I got to high school, I couldn't take it anymore. My self-esteem couldn't take it anymore. I tried to study but I just didn't get it. My ego was taking a beating every time they would pass the test back down the line with my grade stamped in a big red letter "D" and everyone got to see it. So I decided to compete in something else.

Class clown and troublemaker. If the teacher called on me, I made jokes or would argue. This way my self-esteem was intact because my identity wasn't student, it was school hood. In 1973, in my junior year at Wilson High School in Portland, Oregon, I rode my motorcycle right through the front door of the school and right down the main hall—and right into jail—all on the idea that finals were coming next week.

You see, if I could have competed academically, I would have. I just didn't have any idea how. Now, oddly enough, there is research dating back to 1962 showing that nutritional therapy works. There is research proving that nutrition can increase academics and lower violence. I'm now eating fruit and vegetable supplements and concentrating on living ADD-style, and life is great for me. I wouldn't give up my ADD for anything in the world.

Drugs. Ok, let's talk about some real silly logic. Everyone in the D.A.R.E. program is telling kids from one end of this planet to the other that smoking pot leads to cocaine. There is not one single molecule in pot that is in cocaine. Not one.

Now, Ritalin has 90% of the exact same compounds as cocaine, and no one is mentioning that Ritalin leads to cocaine.

Confused?

I am.

Now here's another little fun fact: According to the Physician's Desk Reference and the FDA, both Ritalin and cocaine are class-2 drugs.

Meaning they are both just about as toxic, addicting, and dangerous in the eyes of the medical community. So, your child goes to school, and on one side of the hall they are saying don't buy a class-2 drug from your best friend, and on the other side of the hall they are giving a class-2 drug to your sister.

You're confused, so you go to your high school library and hit the Internet and look them both up and discover they are almost identical. In your teenage thinking, either they are both OK or they are both not OK.

You look up Ritalin and discover that Sweden, the country that makes it, outlawed it in the 1980s! Wake up, parents! You have the information superhighway going straight into your kids' bedrooms and you, as a parent, can't justify telling your kids to stay off drugs when your doctor is prescribing the exact same level of drug.

All over the Internet they are telling your children that every single one of the children who shot other kids in school were on a prescription drug.

(You know, the same one you're giving your daughter.) Your children are more up on drugs than you ever were. They don't listen to you because you are uninformed. They are the authority, not you. Kids research things that they are interested in.

Having fun getting high. I'm an ex-drug and alcohol abuser. I now do seminars against drug abuse and drinking, and I will start the meeting by spending a full fifteen minutes telling what a great time I had getting high. When Nancy Reagan started that ad "just say no" all of us renamed it "just say now". What did she know about drugs? My parents said they were bad for me and I was escaping reality. I didn't listen to them because they didn't know what they were talking about. They were right, but they didn't know what they were talking about.

I didn't start taking drugs and drinking until my junior year in high school. Then I read everything I could get my hands on about drugs. I was curious and I wanted to know what I was doing. Even way back then we had underground drug information; heck, we even had a national magazine that is still around today called High Times. I became an informed party animal.

This is what nobody is addressing, the fact that kids are more informed than their parents and teachers about drugs. They are on the Internet getting well educated on something that interests them. I was the expert, not the adults.

When my dad told me that drug users were just escaping from reality, I laughed. At that time, for fun I rode a motorcycle, went skiing, hiking, fishing, and got high. I didn't ride my bike every day, or fish, ski, hike, or get high every day. They were all recreation. When I rode my bike, was I escaping from reality? Heck no, I was just having fun. When I got high, was I escaping from reality? Heck no, I thought I was just having fun.

Getting high was a great icebreaker for meeting new people or getting a girl to talk to you, especially if you're shy. After I was getting high for awhile, things didn't seem to be as much fun as I thought. One of my friends got a 15-year-old girl pregnant. Another one killed a girl walking across the street while he was driving drunk. One of my friends died riding his bike into a truck at 70 mph. My own brother-in-law almost killed himself and his brother on a bike driving way to fast.

The reason I talk first about having fun with drugs is because unless they think you know what you are talking about, they won't listen. In your job right now, have you ever had someone talk to you about your work, and they didn't know what they were talking about? How long did you listen? Right! Now, how are you going to tell your kid not to take a class-2 drug from his friends when you are giving a class-2 drug, made out of the same things, to his kid sister? If you don't make sense to your kids, they're not going to listen.

Your kids have also checked out the web to see who is paying the school districts to put kids on drugs. In 1985, Congress passed the Individual Development Education Assistance Act (I.D.E.A.), giving funds in the billions to subsidize schools with kids who have learning disabilities. Here's the way it works: the US government will give up to $450 and the state will give up to $160 to a school for each student who is labeled with a learning disability.

Let's do some math. At my old high school we had 2000 kids. The school figures about 10% have ADD, which is about 200 kids. You multiply 200 x $600 and that school gets over $120,000 per year for putting kids on drugs that are in the same FDA schedule classification as cocaine.

Now how are you going to tell them not to take drugs? I've been there and I can't figure out a way to justify both positions. You shouldn't be taking either one!

Nutrition deficit disorder. (N.D.D.)

The research and the school programs show that most kids suffer from N.D.D. and you can turn around kids who are failing and violent with nutrition therapy. With nutrition, your children can keep clear eyes instead of that drugged-out bland look you get when you're on drugs. They keep their personality, spirit, curiosity, enthusiasm, health, and mental capacity to achieve. The research and the school results prove that nutrition is safe and it works. The research and news headlines prove that drugs are dangerous. Seems like a no-brainer to me.

You can take nutrition at the same time you take the drugs. Then slowly cut back the drugs until you don't need them anymore. Can you think of any downside to doing this? So, if it's safe, natural, and has no side-effects, and you have nothing to lose and everything to gain, what are you waiting for?

Ritalin Ban Urged For UK Children Under Five,
Open Season On Them In US

by Liz Smith, in London

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE), an independent watchdog that rules on the appropriate use of drugs, is to recommend that Ritalin should not be given to children under five years of age. Whilst it may still be prescribed for older children, there will be clearer definitions of the conditions for its use.

Ritalin (methylphenidate), an amphetamine-like stimulant, was referred to NICE by Health Secretary Alan Milburn. It is prescribed for children who are diagnosed as having Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD).

ADHD is defined as "developmentally inappropriate inattention and impassivity, with or without hyperactivity. Symptoms attributed to the condition include distraction, impatience, and difficulty concentrating. It occurs in children of both sexes, but is diagnosed four times more frequently in boys. However, it is a condition whose clinical recognition is disputed by some in the medical profession.

In the last decade prescriptions for Ritalin virtually doubled every year. However, last year only 157,900 prescriptions were issued compared to 126,500 the year before, following growing fears over the increasing use of drugs to treat hyperactivity among children, some as young as two.

Steve Baldwin, professor of clinical psychology at Teeside University, has consistently opposed the prescription of Ritalin. He said: "There's definitely the start of a leveling off. Doctors are getting very worried about prescribing it."

In the BBC documentary entitled Kids On Pills, screened earlier this year, Baldwin described the effect of Ritalin on children: "Apparently the child is improving, but what's really happening is there is less behaviour and the emotion is cut off and the feeling is cut off, and what we're left with is children who behave like robots and zombies."

Parents concerned about the side-effects the drug is having on their children have taken out court proceedings against doctors and drug companies. In the North-West, a group of parents are trying to bring to account doctors they claim have ignored the manufacturer's recommendations that Ritalin only be prescribed for children over five, and then only for a month at a time. In Texas, parents are taking action against Novartis Pharmaceuticals, the manufacturer of Ritalin, for an alleged failure to warn of its impact on children's cardiovascular and nervous systems. Overload, a charity based in Scotland, is pursuing action against various National Health Service Trusts in connection with the side-effects suffered by children while on psychotropic drugs.

A new lobby group, Stimulants Are Not The Answer (SANTA), has also been set up to press for legislative changes that will tighten up the availability of Ritalin. Their website www.santa.inuk.com opposes the notion that ADHD is caused by a brain disorder for which stimulant medication is the only effective answer. They stress that, to find the right treatment, ADHD should not be regarded as a single specific disorder but an umbrella term for all kinds of possible problems that can lead to uncontrollable behaviour. The problem must generally be viewed as a social/psychological issue, rather than a biological one, they insist.

SANTA's coordinator, Eileen Tracy, recently told the Independent newspaper: "In France they have hardly any incidence of ADHD. If you want to put a child on a stimulant, you have to go to a hospital, you can't just go to a GP [General Practitioner]."

Richard DeGrandpre, an American pharma-psychologist, author of Ritalin Nation, says that ADHD is not a medical condition but a result of today's rushed society, which causes vulnerable children to crave stimuli. He says that while Ritalin is chemically different to cocaine, its effects are the same. It works by feeding the craving with a backdrop of stimulation, but gives the children the opposite of what they need, which is a calmer, quieter, more engaged routine to wean them away from their need for continual sensation.

Recently a study published in the Journal Of Sleep Research cited sleep deprivation among children as another factor that leads a number of them to be misdiagnosed as either having ADHD or suffering a mental illness. The study carried out in Holland found that large numbers of children are either not sleeping long enough, or their sleep is of poor quality. According to their findings, one in four children aged between nine and 14 years of age do not feel rested at school and 15% have sleep problems.

The main cause cited for this increase in sleep problems was the turning of bedrooms into entertainment centres with television and video games, more permissiveness about bedtimes, and working parents returning home late and keeping children awake longer in order to enjoy time with them. The report concluded: "Children who feel better rested display a more positive self-image, more achievement motivation, have more control over their aggressive behaviour, are less bored, and are more receptive to their teacher.

Professor Gregory Stores, head of research into child sleep disorders at Oxford University, said that children's sleep suffers as a result of them being wound-up before settling. He explained that the symptoms of many sleepless children were misleading because they are unlike those of adults. Such pupils deprived of sleep tend to display hyperactivity, as well as being irritable, depressed, inattentive, and disruptive. As a result, they can be wrongly diagnosed as having ADHD and be put on Ritalin, which only makes the problem worse.

Extreme neglect due to poverty and instability in the home is also a common contributory factor to sleeplessness and hunger, which leads to many of the behaviour patterns described by Stores. [End quoting]

Lawsuits Assert Drugmakers And Shrinks Invented "ADHD" To Sell Ritalin

by Edward Tobin, Reuters

Richard Scruggs, the lawyer who led the settlement between U.S. states and the tobacco industry in 1998, called the lawsuits against the makers of hyperactivity disorder drug Ritalin the country's "next class-action battleground".

The Mississippi attorney heads up a group of plaintiffs' lawyers alleging in two lawsuits that the makers of the drug had conspired with psychiatrists to "create" the disease known as Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD).

Scruggs, who got his first taste of national class-action suits with a successful run at the asbestos industry, before tackling big tobacco, contends that the health of more than 4 million children is at stake because they are taking a drug that they do not need.

The two cases, filed in state court in Hackensack, New Jersey, and in San Diego, California federal court, name Swiss healthcare group Novartis AG (NOVZn.S), the American Psychiatric Association (APA), and a nonprofit support group called Children and Adults with Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder (CHADD).

The suits seek class-action status and billions of dollars in damages. The allegations are denied by both the company and the APA.

"The main complaint is that they (the defendants) have inappropriately expanded the definition of ADHD to include 'normal' children so that they can promote and sell more drugs and treat more people" Scruggs told Reuters in a phone interview Thursday.

"These suits represent the latest class-action battleground in the U.S., but since it involves kids, this is that much more important. Ninety percent of all Ritalin is sold in the United States. We think it's a pretty tough case to say that ADHD is a disease that doesn't exist in Europe, but exists here" he said.

Government officials, pharmaceutical companies, and medical professionals have debated over the prescribing of Ritalin for Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) in children for some time. The drug has been on the market for over 40 years, but it came under intense pressure when the White House launched an initiative in the spring to cut down on the number of children using the treatment, known by the chemical name methylphenidate.

A Novartis spokesman in Zurich said he could not respond directly to the U.S. suits because he had not yet seen them. But he dismissed the allegation that Novartis conspired with the American Psychiatric Association to invent the disorder.

"We don't think there is any merit in such class actions" he said, referring to a similar suit filed in Texas in May. "We cannot see that we have any wrongdoing in this field."

Regina Moran, a Novartis spokeswoman at the U.S. pharmaceutical division in East Hanover, New Jersey, said the company still had not been served with papers pertaining to the suits as of late Thursday evening. She did point out, however, that Ritalin has been on the generic market for many years.

"Eighty percent of the market is generic right now, so it is a mature product for us" she said.

An official for the Washington DC-based American Psychiatric Association also cited similarities to the Texas suit, and had not seen the suit. But she said, as in the Texas suit, the APA will "defend itself vigorously by presenting a mountain of scientific evidence to refute these meritless allegations, and we are confident that we will prevail".

Scruggs, who tallied up $400 million in legal fees from the settlement with the tobacco industry, said public health was the main motivator in the Ritalin case, and the ultimate goal of the lawsuit is to change the way the drug is prescribed.

"Right now, virtually every child would fit the diagnostic criteria today for Ritalin. They are exploiting the fears of parents for the welfare of children, to gain inappropriately, and I think that is very reprehensible, and it can have a widespread effect on the health of American kids" he said.

The lawyers are seeking certification of a nationwide class, Scruggs said, and expect others will follow suit on the basis that "the criteria for disease are artificially broad so that they can include more kids and sell more drugs".

But one industry expert was skeptical that such a suit would get very far.

"My sense is that the symptoms of ADHD are pretty well defined and there are a number of clinical criteria required before a child is allowed to go on the drug" Merrill Lynch analyst James Culverwell said from London.

"When the child does take the drug, it is generally remarkably effective. So any suggestion that this disease is make-believe seems highly unlikely" he said. [End quoting]

Well, the tobacco companies were arrogant enough to think, until the final staggering verdict came crashing down, that they would never be convicted of wrongdoing. The outcome of this effort will depend in large measure upon just how many angry parents are willing to keep the heat upon the crooks in high places to prevent any derailing of the judicial process.

The Montauk Project's Wild Ride Through History

System. And the list goes on.

What if time travel really is possible?

What if one of our government's "black-ops" was a project involving not only time travel, but actually changing history?

What if this project has been operational for decades?

It gets, potentially, very sinister very quickly. And what of the "ripple-effects" created from changing the outcomes of history? The possibilities, probabilities, potential complications, and implications are all seemingly endless!

Many of you are, at least casually, familiar with what was called "The Philadelphia Experiment". This name refers to the top-secret project endeavoring to make a naval ship "invisible" to radar in 1943. Perhaps you've seen the movie by the same title, reportedly based as much on the actual facts of the matter as it is mixed with fictional dramatics.

And some of you will have also heard of "The Montauk Project" at a secret facility at Montauk, Long Island, New York. Most who have heard anything about the Montauk Project will associate it with mind control, as described in the books on the subject written by Preston Nichols and Peter Moon.

[Editor's note: The first two in the series of these books are called The Montauk Project: Experiments In Time (1992), and Montauk Revisited: Adventures In Synchronicity (1994), published by: Sky Books, P.O. Box 769 Westbury NY 11590; phone/fax: 516-681-0273. There are several more volumes in the Montauk series now, as well as other offerings. You can also check out their excellent www.time-travel.com/skybooks Internet website for an online catalog of offerings and other interesting information.]

You may remember hearing a very credible Al Bielek, who may be the sole survivor of the Philadelphia Experiment, on Art Bell's late-night talk-radio program on many occasions over the past ten years; or perhaps you've heard him on one of several lecture circuits.

Some of you will already be aware of the inexorable link between the Montauk Project and the Philadelphia Experiment, even though the two projects span 40 years and, on the surface, don't necessarily seem particularly connected.

I've just thrown out here quite a few threads of information—people and places and projects. Don't feel bad if they don't "make sense" yet. We're just getting started down a most astonishing path.

Before we begin my September 13 conversation with Delta-Commander Michael Ash, a man initially involved with the Montauk Project and who actually conducted time-travel missions, let's first gain some perspective on both of these important links—the Philadelphia Experiment and the Montauk Project. To accomplish this, I've elected to share some excerpts of articles written by Al Bielek, Peter Moon, and John Quinn. While there may be some level of redundancy in this information, it is very important to understand the scope of these two pivotal projects prior to entering into the interview with Michael Ash.

I've also included here, prior to the Ash interview, two prior interviews with Al Bielek in which he discusses time travel, specifically. As it is my intention to interview Al Bielek in the near future, the prerequisite background for that interview is, as well, largely contained in this story. This is why the story has grown like a well-watered bean-stalk.

[Editor's note: I (E.Y) am going to do a little bragging here since Rick publicly mentioned his upcoming intended interview with Al Bielek. In a preliminary, informal, and very cordial telephone conversation with me about two months ago, Al expressed a strong enthusiasm about conducting an interview for The SPECTRUM because of his high regard for the quality of this publication and Rick's "let it all hang out" interviewing skills.

Moreover, Rick's Front Page story about the "Black" Pope and the Jesuits and their longtime, behind-the-scenes world control, in our May 2000 issue, meshed well with deeply hidden information which Al had finally uncovered, independently, after many years of digging along his own path of inquiry. Unknown to us, friends of his had already sent Al copies of that issue of the paper which, as you can imagine, instantly caught his attention!

This is where things start to get VERY interesting, because The Truth should indeed mesh and interconnect in such a way as to reveal at least segments of The Larger Picture. Anyway, stay tuned—and hopefully, with your help, we'll manage to stay financially afloat to deliver further installments in this ongoing unfolding of long-hidden matters that are of great interest to all who search for The Truth.]

As the Philadelphia Experiment and the Montauk Project span many different projects, and many different missions and agendas, sometimes the story-telling takes on a rather incongruous, perhaps disjointed, non-linear unfolding. I must ask for your indulgence in understanding this when beginning to lay out this story. You are about to embark on a very unusual, compelling journey through some intellectually challenging yet fascinating concepts.

In the entertainment business there is a phrase which explains what people do, psychologically, when they see a movie; it's called "suspension of disbelief". With a subject such as this one, suspending disbelief is a very good idea indeed! With that said, let's begin at the beginning.

The following Philadelphia Experiment excerpt is from the <http://www.crystalinks.com/phila.html> Internet website and was presumably written (or spoken) by Al Bielek: [quoting]

PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT MONTAUK EXPERIMENT

The Philadelphia Experiment was a time travel experiment that took place in Philadelphia Harbor in August of 1943. It was also an invisibility experiment. The goal of the US government was to make Navy ships invisible to defeat the German navy. Allegedly, the Philadelphia experiment was our government's first attempt at stealth technology, making a ship invisible to radar.

The Navy ship, US Eldridge, purportedly became invisible for a period of time, but the personnel couldn't take the effects. When it materialized again, several hours later, the bodies of many of the crew members were actually part of the physical makeup of the ship. Many of them died. Body parts had to be amputated. Many of the men went insane.

Carlos Allende was a merchant marine in the Philadelphia harbor when the Philadelphia experiment was tried. In his notes he spoke of a terrible experiment he had witnessed on a ship named the USS Eldridge back in the days of World War II. The notes verify this story.

Purportedly the initial research that led up to the disastrous experiment in the Philadelphia naval ship yard in 1943 was conducted years earlier by the famed scientists Albert Einstein and Nikola Tesla. In the 1930s Nikola Tesla got involved with a group which was experimenting with moving through the time/space continuum.

Experiments started at Princeton University back in 1939, in which they made small objects invisible. They presented this technology to the government. The military, because we were at war, wanted to pursue it in their direction. Tesla had finally come to the same conclusion that Einstein did—that this technology, if developed, would not be used for the benefit of mankind.

In 1943 the government conducted a test using domestic animals on a ship. They were placed in metal cages on the USS Eldridge. The ship became invisible, but when it materialized, many of the animals were missing or had radiation and other burn marks on them.

Yet, on August 12, 1943, the USS Eldridge, with a full crew aboard, reportedly underwent the Philadelphia Experiment. The men did not know what was to happen.

The generators were fired up. The switches were thrown. The ship disappeared, and all seemed well. But the ship was gone from the harbor for about 4 hours, not just a few minutes.

Four hours later it returned to its original place. There was a greenish haze on deck. Some of the sailors were on fire. Some seemed insane. All were sick. Some had heart attacks. Some were dead. Some were part of the super-structure of the ship, buried in the deck or walls of the ship. Some reports said that men just seemed to disappear, and were never seen again.

But where had the ship gone for 4 hours? Some witnesses placed it in Norfolk Harbor. Others say it voyaged 40 years into the future and wound up at Montauk, New York.

The Navy denied everything and said the men were lost at sea. Perhaps one day the truth will be known.

The Montauk Experiment purportedly links several of these sailors to Montauk, New York with a time loop to 1983.

The Philadelphia Experiment originally began back in the 1930s, in Chicago, with three people: Dr. John Hutchinson Sr., who was the Dean of the University of Chicago, Nikola Tesla, and Dr. Kurtenhour, an Austrian physicist who was on staff at the University. They decided to do something with the speculation regarding the concept of things and people being invisible. This subject had been discussed for several years. They got together and did some research at the University of Chicago around 1931 or 1932.

From Montauk Revisited by Preston B. Nichols p.10

four years and transferred to the United States. He taught at the graduate level for three years and was invited to join the Institute.

Other people at the Institute included Albert Einstein, who left Germany in 1930. He went to the California Institute of Technology for three years and taught there, and then went to the Institute upon their invitation and acceptance. A lot of other people showed up there as time went on. The project expanded about 1936. In the meantime, Tesla was named director of the project. He was a friend of president Franklin Roosevelt, whom Tesla met in 1917 when FDR was Secretary of the Navy.

Tesla was asked at that time to do some work for the government for the war effort, which he did. He accepted and became director of the invisibility project until he resigned in 1942. In 1936, after intensive study, they decided to have an initial test of their work. They achieved some partial invisibility. The Navy and everyone else was encouraged to continue the work, and the Navy supplied money for research.

Scientists were coming to the United States from Germany until 1939, when the war with Germany was started.

In 1940, after research using Tesla's approach, they decided they were ready for a full test at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. They had a small ship and a tender ship at each side. One ship provided the power and the other supplied the drive for the coils. They were tethered to the test ship by cables. The idea was that, if anything went wrong, they could cut the cables or sink the test ship. Everything worked and the project was declared a success.

The important point about the 1940 test is that there was no one on board the test vehicle. It was strictly a dry run with no people. This is important because of what happened later.

Other people came on board. Thomas T. Brown joined the project because of his expertise in electrogravity effects. He had the task of solving the problem of the German magnetic mines that were affecting allied shipping and Naval efforts. This led into a parallel project which involved the use of de- v o n gaussing coils and cables to explode the mines at a distance from the ship. The Navy wanted several people to keep an eye on the tests. That is how I got involved, keeping technical commentaries.

Let's look at Nikola Tesla. He came to the United States in 1884. He had enormously intuitive insight and he had a perfect track record. Before coming to the US he had in 1925 and his Ph.D. in mathematics in 1926. He taught in Europe for about

These equations for multiple space became very important in the project. Dr. von Neumann met Hilbert in 1927 and retained a lot of what he had learned. With that, von Neumann developed other new systems of mathematics. Von Neumann was considered to be one of the most outstanding mathematicians in this century. Some think he was better than Einstein. Another mathematician involved was Dr. John Levinson, who was born in 1912. He died in 1976. He published three books on mathematics. Levinson developed the so-called Levinson Time Equations. With all this behind them, the group had all they needed to proceed with the project.

After the successful 1940 test, the Navy decided to give the project unlimited funds and to classify the project. In 1942, Tesla was given a battleship and a crew for a full-size test.

Tesla and von Neumann didn't agree on some things. Tesla insisted that they were going to have a very severe problem with personnel. He wanted more time, but the Navy wouldn't agree. Tesla made periodic announcements in the late 1930s and early 1940s about his contact with off-planet species. He was in contact with the “outside”, and they agreed that there was a problem with the people. He decided to sabotage the 1942 test in an attempt to stop the project. He de-tuned the equipment so nothing would work and the test failed. Tesla then turned the project over to von Neumann in March of 1942, and left the project.

Von Neumann went to the Navy and requested time to study the problem to determine what had gone wrong. Von Neumann decided to make changes in some of the equipment. He decided he would need a special ship that was designed from the ground up. The Eldridge was selected and the equipment was built into the ship. October 1942 arrived. They selected 33 volunteers for the crew, who arrived after graduation in December 1942.

After the ship was out of dry-dock, work began. In May of 1943 von Neumann installed a third generator, but it would never synchronize with the other two. It went out of control one day and zapped one of the men. Von Neumann pulled out the third generator (installed because Tesla had convinced von Neumann of the potential problem with people) and went back to the original design.

In mid-June, the ship had sea trials. On July 22, 1943, they had the test and the ship became optically and radar invisible. They discovered people very disoriented. The Navy pulled the crew off and consulted von Neumann, who requested more time again from the Navy. The Navy, after consultation with higher-ups, announced that the drop-dead date was on the 12th of August, 1943. Von Neumann voiced his concern that it wasn't enough time.

The Navy decided that it just wanted radar invisibility and not optical invisibility. The equipment was again modified by von Neumann.

August 12 arrived. We knew things were not right. The test began, and for about a minute everything was all right. The ship's outline could be seen in the water. There was suddenly a blue flash and the ship disappeared entirely. No radio communication was possible; it was gone. In about three hours it came back. One of the masts was broken.

Some personnel were partially embedded in the steel deck, others were fading in and out, and some disappeared entirely. Many were insane. The Navy extracted the crew and proceeded with four days of meetings to decide what to do about the problem. They decided there would be one more test with another dry run without personnel.

They conducted the dry run using about 1000 feet of cable attached to another ship. In late October 1943 the test occurred. The ship disappeared for about 20 minutes and, when it returned, they found equipment missing. Two transmitter cabinets and one generator were missing. The cabinet with the zero-time reference generator was intact. At that point, the Navy stripped the ship and stopped the project. The Eldridge served in the war and was turned over to Greece at the end of the war.

The important thing is that there were two tests that were exactly 40 years apart to the day. It was a 40-year separation in hyperspace. Now, the Earth itself has a biorhythm that peaks on a 20 year cycle on August 12. It “just happened” to peak and provided the connecting link through the fields of the Earth for the two experiments to lock-up in hyperspace.

The ship was pulled into hyperspace. We were inside the ship and knew something was drastically wrong with the test. We tried to shut it off but it wouldn't shut off. We ran out on deck and jumped over the side of the ship. We jumped overboard, but ended up in a “time tunnel” which ended at Montauk, Long Island on the evening of August 12, 1983.

We were found very quickly and taken downstairs, where von Neumann greeted us. He expected us. It was a bit of a shock. We had just been in 1943, and now we were in 1983, looking at von Neumann as an old man. He said that there was a hyperspace lockup and that we had to go back and shut-off the generators on the ship or the hyperspace rift would keep increasing and possibly engulf the planet. He had been waiting 40 years for us to arrive.

Montauk sent us back, and we smashed the equipment with axes. The ship returned to its original point in space, about three hours later in time. From 1943 on, von Neumann didn't know what happened. He had modified earlier equipment in 1943 to where he had a full-blown time machine. The Germans also were working on time travel, and had it working in 1945, just before the end of the war. This is all a matter of record.

After the Navy decided to shut down the project in 1943, von Neumann was sent to work on the atomic bomb project at Los Alamos until that was over. In 1947 there were major changes in the Department of Defense. Someone in the new structure decided to dig up the Philadelphia Project to see if they could find out what went wrong. They asked von Neumann to “take another look” at the project and he agreed.

There is another matter. Starting about August 6, 1943, UFOs appeared over the Eldridge for about six days. They were there during the test. One of the UFOs was sucked up into hyperspace with the Eldridge and it ended up in an underground facility in Montauk in 1983. It contained a charging device which the aliens made us go back and get for them, as they didn't want humans to have it. We don't know who they were. Pruett [metaphysical director for the project] was concerned about an alien invasion.

Also, von Neumann was called by the government to come and assist in the examination of a crashed UFO in 1947 at Aztec, New Mexico. Another crash occurred at Aztec about a year later. The first crash had greys on it and none survived. At least one occupant survived the second crash. The radar systems unintentionally brought down the craft. Radar was used intentionally after that until the aliens got wise to it.

The occupant of the second crash was not a grey, and von Neumann got to talk with it. Von Neumann asked it what the answer to the invisibility problems could be. He learned that he had to go back and do his homework in metaphysics. The nature of the problem was that the personnel on the ship were not locked to the zero-time reference of the ship. Humans are normally locked to the point of conception as a time reference, not a zero-time reference. The time-stream lock allows the person to flow in sync with the system so interaction is possible.

Time-locks are fragile. All the power of the project disrupted the time-locks of the people on the deck on the ship. When the ship came back in time, the people didn't come back to the same reference.

Von Neumann realized that he needed a computer, as well as some knowledge of metaphysics, in order to be able to lock the time reference of the people to the time reference of the ship. He built a computer in 1950 for the purpose. It was ready to be installed in 1952 and a test was performed in 1953 that was successful. They didn't go floating off into space when it was over. At this point, the Navy cancelled Project Rainbow and changed the name to Project Phoenix.

A lot came out of the negative effects of the Rainbow Project. Some of it led to mind-control research programs in the Phoenix Project. The invisibility research produced some Stealth technology, as well as other highly classified projects.

In 1983, they decided to apply mind-control to all participants in these projects in an effort to cover them up. They had also been working on another project: age regression.

Now, Tesla had sought, back in the 1940s, to develop equipment that could help the members of the crew after they lost time-lock. The government developed it into the age regression program. It was physical age regression. A person retained the memory they had from the older age.

Tesla's theory was that if you took the individual's time-lock, and moved it forward in time, then you would remove aging. That's what happened. It took between 30 and 60 days for the body to complete the change to the new time reference.

When our astronauts first landed on the Moon in 1969, they were greeted by a fleet of disks sitting on the rim of a crater. The astronauts asked their superiors if they knew about these disks. They were told “yes”, that they were American disks. The astronauts were angry at being used as public-relations men by the government and had not been told the truth.

[Editor’s note: The point Al is making here is that NASA’s 1969 Moon mission was simply a pageant to entertain the public with an event that was supposed to be demonstrating “advanced” technology of the day. This is a common technique which helps to subconsciously cement into the public awareness the idea of technology that is nowhere near as advanced as is the truth of the matter. In a sense, it is a form of mind control to keep the public thinking (and living) in terms of, so to speak, the horse-and-buggy, while the supersonic aircraft remains secret (and typically used for no good).]

Well, the [Stealth] aircraft combines two aspects for invisibility. One of the aspects relates to the construction and coating applied to the surface; the other aspect relates to an electronic-type of invisibility package which is a result of work done on the Philadelphia Experiment years ago. Also, the Stealth has a secondary drive system which is very advanced and allows it to fly in space. The assistant director of NASA admitted that this came straight out of alien technology. He admitted this to the public.

There are breaks in the government secrecy programs that are starting to show up. More and more people are getting totally disgusted with government activities and attitudes, and they are beginning to talk.

They had all sorts of problems with the Philadelphia Experiment, so they decided to shelve it. Around 1947 it was decided to reactivate the project and it was moved to Brookhaven National Laboratories with Dr. John von Neumann and his associates. Out of Phoenix-I came Stealth technology. It also produced all sorts of energetic little toys like the radiosonde.

The radiosonde was a little white box that they attached to a balloon and sent up into the atmosphere. The government told people that it involved gathering weather data. It used a very unusual type of pulse modulation. In most cases they used a CW (continuous wave) oscillator and pulsed the signal. This turned out to be a very efficient conversion of electrical energy to etheric energy. They were designed up at Brookhaven National Labs. I started to talk to people at Brookhaven and ran into a retired gentleman who used to work there. He told me that the design was originally done by Wilhelm Reich.

The story goes that, in about 1947, Wilhelm Reich handed the US government a weather control device, a device that would do DOR-busting. Reich thought that if he could decrease the amount of DOR, then storms would not be so violent. (DOR is the result of Orgone energy coming into contact with an enclosed radioactive source.) Deadly Orgone Energy is DOR. The government sent the device up into a storm, and it did reduce the intensity of the storm.

The Montauk Project was a combination of Wilhelm Reich’s work and the Philadelphia Experiment. There were two separate projects going on in Phoenix-I. You had the invisibility aspect and you had the development of Wilhelm Reich’s weather control. Toward the end of the Phoenix Project, by using some of Wilhelm Reich’s concepts and some of the transmission schemes used from the radiosonde project, they found that you could combine the two factors and use them for mind control.

The people who were running it went to the military and proposed that they could use it to “influence the minds of the enemy”. The military loved the idea, and let them use the old Montauk Air Force Base. Among the equipment requested was an old SAGE radar unit, which was on the base. The base was shut down and everything was auctioned-off. The group then moved in from the Brookhaven Labs. That began what we call Phoenix-II. They spent the first ten years, from about 1969 to about 1979, researching pure mind control.

The first part of the mind-control project was to take an individual and stand them about 250 feet away from the antenna. The SAGE radar had a peak pulse power of 0.5 Megawatts. The antenna had a gain of 30db. That means an effective radiated power of at least a gigawatt. It was nominally a gigawatt. Can you imagine what that would do to people? I think it’s amazing these people are still here! It does things like burn out brain functions, create neurological damage, scar lungs from heat, etc. They tried this with a number of people, and there were few survivors. The subjects were often indigent people they grabbed off the streets.

The project was controlled by Dr. John von Neumann and Jack Pruett. About 30 people worked there. It was a joint project—Air Force and Navy. Original funding came from the Nazi government funds.

In 1944 there was an American troop train that went through a French railroad tunnel carrying $10 billion in Nazi gold which they had found. It was $10 billion at the 1944 price of $20 per ounce. The train was blown up in the tunnel. It killed 51 American soldiers. The gold turned up ten years later at Montauk. This has been verified. That money was used to finance the project for many years as the value of gold went up.

They spent all of it and ran out of money. That’s when they tapped on ITT, who funded it. ITT was owned by Krupp in Germany. In terms of personnel, many of the civilians and scientists there were all ex-Nazis who came from Germany, both before and after the war ended.

The project was under US government surveillance. The intelligence community knew what was going on and the CIA monitored everything, as did other government intelligence agencies. The field of players who actually operated on the base was small, between 30 and 50, and the funding was entirely private.

After 1983, Senator Goldwater found out about the project and started an investigation. He couldn’t find any trace of government funding.

Pruett was with the Air Force. Eventually he left the project and was replaced by Dr. Herman C. Untermann. They had an electronics expert, Dr. Mathew E. Zerrett, who came over from Germany in 1946 with Wernher von Braun. Probably the reason that they ran out of money is that they had a total of 25 bases around the United States to support. The last of the bases shut down August 12, 1983. The base at Montauk, where all the stations got their zero-time reference from, shut down, and the other two remaining bases went down with it.

Other experiments included time travel. No one has picked up a tangible future beyond 2012 AD. There is a very abrupt wall there with nothing on the other side. A working time vortex was created to the future.

THE ELDRIDGE SINCE THE EXPERIMENT

Some people report it was dismantled. Others report that it was taken to Greece and renamed the “Leon”. George N. Pantoulas maintains that he was given it as military aid from the US to Greece, sometime between the late ’40s and early ’50s, where it served in the Greek navy until 1990 and is still seaworthy today. It is purportedly located in the Suda Bay Naval Station in Crete. George has visited the ship, and he has seen strange wires that go nowhere. He says that men who serve on the ship feel strange energies and have strange illusions. [End quoting]

That last item above is a bit out of date as Bielek’s more recent information asserts that the US Navy asked for the ship back several years ago. After some incredulous diplomatic words along the lines of “I thought you gave the ship to us!”, Greece returned the ship, not in very good shape, and the Navy “cleaned” (overhauled) it from stem to stern before putting it back into service—this time without any tell-tale vestiges (like mystery wiring) of its secret past.

Let’s shift-gears now, a bit, and read a brief introduction to the Montauk Project by Peter Moon, publicist, researcher, and associate of Preston Nichols.

THE MONTAUK PROJECT

An Introduction, by Peter Moon

[Quoting a small excerpt from the http://www.time-travel.com/skybooks/new_page_1.htm website:]

After the war, research continued under the tutelage of Dr. John von Neumann, who had directed the technical aspects of the Philadelphia Experiment. His new orders were to find out what made the mind of a man tick and why people could not be subjected to inter-dimensional phenomena without disaster. A massive human-factor study was begun at Brookhaven National Laboratories on Long Island, New York. Brookhaven Labs got its start after World War II as the first major atomic research facility in the world. Prior to the war, the immediate area had served as the headquarters for the largest contingent of Nazis in the United States. They were known as the Bund.

John von Neumann was a logical choice to head up this new project at Brookhaven. Not only was he the inventor of the modern computer and a mathematical genius in his own right, he was able to draw on the enormous resources of the military-industrial complex. These included the vast data base of Nazi psychological research acquired by the Allies after World War II. It was against this background that von Neumann attempted to couple computer technology with sophisticated radio equipment in an attempt to link people's minds with machines.

Over time, his efforts were quite successful. After years of empirical experimentation, human thoughts could eventually be received by esoteric crystal radio receivers and relayed into a computer that could store the thoughts in terms of information bits. This thought pattern could, in turn, be displayed on a computer screen and printed out on a piece of paper. These principles were developed and the techniques were enhanced until a virtual mind-reading machine was constructed.

At the same time, technology was developed so that a psychic could think a thought which could be transmitted out a computer and potentially affect the mind of another human being. Ultimately, the Montauk Project obtained a superior understanding of how the mind functions and achieved the sinister potential for mind control. A full report was made to Congress, who in turn ordered the project to be disbanded, at least in part, for fear of having their own minds controlled.

Private concerns that helped to develop the project did not follow the dictate of Congress and sought out to seduce the military with the idea that this technology could be used in warfare to control enemy minds. A secret group, with deep financial resources and some sort of military tie, decided they would establish a new research facility at Camp Hero, a derelict Air Force Station at Montauk Point, New York.

This locale was chosen because it housed a huge Sage radar antenna that emitted a frequency of approximately 400-425 Megahertz, coincidentally the same band used to enter the consciousness of the human mind. In the late '60s, the reactivation of Camp Hero began despite no funding from the military. By 1972, the Montauk Project was fully underway with massive mind-control experimentation being undertaken upon humans, animals, and other forms of consciousness that were deemed to exist.

we call "ordinary human experience", but the people who ran the Montauk Project were not about to stop. They would reach even further into the realm of the extraordinary. Once it was discovered that a psychic could manifest matter, it was observed that the manifestation could appear at different times, depending upon what the psychic was thinking.

Thus, what would happen if a psychic thought of a book, but thought of it appearing yesterday? It was this line of thinking and experimentation which led to the idea that one could bend time itself. After years of empirical research, time portals were opened with massive and outrageous experiments being conducted. The Montauk Project eventually came to a bizarre climax with a time vortex being opened back to 1943 and the original Philadelphia Experiment.

[End quoting]

Turning our attention now to independent researcher John Quinn, let's see what he's uncovered concerning the events and activities at Montauk. Many of you will remember the article which recently appeared in The SPECTRUM (August 2000—Vol. 2, No. 3) by John Quinn on the subject of HAARP, titled HAARP's Covert Agendas: The Big Picture. While Mr. Quinn has proven to be a difficult person to contact, we certainly extend our respect and appreciation for his research efforts and for stepping forward to vocalize what he has uncovered.

MONTAUK PROJECT REPORT

Montauk Air Force Station: Active or Not?

[by John A. Quinn, © 1997, quoting portions:]

To follow is my report on the "Montauk Project"—the covert government's clandestine electromagnetic/radio-frequency mind-control project carried out in a documented subterranean facility beneath the derelict Montauk Air Force Station. To the greatest extent possible, I'd like potential readers to understand my intent in getting this information to the public.

The last section of this report has some biographical information; it covers to some extent my personal history, and especially personal experiences in researching the project in the last 2-3 years, along with whatever I can piece together about my possible previous involvement when I resided in the area.

About three years ago, I came across the first Montauk Project book by Preston Nichols, and subsequently had my mind blown many times over—not just because of the information in the now 4 books, but because of some very strange and troubling inconsistencies in certain memories from childhood through early adulthood which I have involving Montauk Air Force Station/Camp Hero and other connected Montauk locations.

It's very important to realize that, according

RADAR REFLECTOR

Above is the huge radar reflector that sits atop the transmitter building at the Montauk Air Force Base. Nearly as long as a football field, it was used in the early experiment to beam mood control functions.

From The Montauk Project by Preston B. Nichols p.23

Over the years, the Montauk researchers perfected their mind-control techniques and continued to delve further into the far reaches of human potential. By developing the psychic abilities of different personnel, it eventually got to the point where a psychic's thoughts could be amplified with hardware, and illusions could be manifested both subjectively and objectively.

This included the virtual creation of matter. All of this was unparalleled in the history of what to Preston Nichols and other preeminent Montauk Project investigators, tens of thousands of youngsters were “abducted” for use in the Montauk Project alone over the span of the project; solid evidence proves that, across this country, many other mind-control and manipulation projects have been conducted using untold numbers of children in these totally horrifying, unimaginable abuses at the hands of clandestine government agencies.

Montauk Air Force Station has been “shuttered” since 1969, according to any and all available federal records. Yet it appears that the property has been in near-continuous service. The property, with thoroughly dilapidated structures (with some key exceptions), was “donated” to New York State expressly for use as public park land. Needless to say, some 14 years later, this place is NOT a park. No portions of the base proper are open to the public, because of and/or despite the fact that the surface facility is in complete and total disrepair. Of course, why this condition persists when the surface of the property belongs to the people of New York State, under the care of the New York State Parks System, is completely incongruous, and literally illegal according to the charter of the State Parks. And that’s just a small part of the genuinely astounding and tremendously important story relayed in my report on the Montauk Project.

The operation, a continuation of the Phoenix Project (psychotronics, EM/RF mind manipulation, and psychic phenomena) being conducted at Long Island’s Brookhaven National Laboratories, got into full swing at the just-closed Montauk Air Force Station in 1970 (though there are indications of earlier ties to the general lines of research) after the Brookhaven crew got their funding cut off. Project operators there wouldn’t take “No” for an answer and so went fully covert; teaming up with some military higher-ups, using untraceable funding at the de-commissioned Montauk Air Force Station.

I am dedicated to getting the truth about the Montauk Project, as well as similar and/or connected projects, out to the people by whatever means possible, for the sake of my child, all children, and for the sake of human freedom on this planet we call home. My strong feeling is that we are about to enter a chapter of history in which the human race will be subjected to nonstop, invasive, pervasive, worldwide mind, mood, consciousness, and even biological control, by means of electromagnetic/radio frequency transmissions, coupled, in many cases, with physical implants.

We are already witnessing the near-total collapse of even a pretense of a free press and a democratic government here in the United States. We are already witnessing massive deployment of experimental (and perfected!) biological weapons against the American people, and even more so against third-world countries (such as AIDS and Ebola; see Dr. Leonard Horowitz’s book which proves that these and other deadly diseases were genetically engineered, by secret government associates, mainly at Cold Spring Harbor Labs on—you guessed it—Long Island).

There are many more indications of the implementation of the New World Order, and the list grows by the hour. Of prime importance, in these malignant plans for our future, is the literal control of—or at least substantial interference with and manipulation of—our minds by Montauk-type technologies. Clandestine agencies have been covertly researching various means of mind control for quite a long time. Based upon what I have discovered, the Montauk Project represents the pinnacle of achievement in this entire field. The technology perfected in the Montauk Project is, unfortunately, extremely powerful, and this power is at the disposal of what, in actual fact, are literally Nazis and their cohorts/accomplices/collaborators/proteges and descendents. My goal is to shut them down.

I’ve conducted a two-year investigation into allegations regarding ultra-top-secret experiments carried out by clandestine units of both U.S. and “world” government intelligence and military agencies, corporations such as Airborne Instrument Laboratories, Siemens/ITT, as well as certain divisions of Brookhaven National Laboratories and other groups—from the 1950s up to present times—at a fully verified and documented subterranean facility beneath the purportedly abandoned and derelict Montauk Air Force Station. Certain of these activities are, by all indications, currently ongoing. The radar station is at the extreme eastern tip of Long Island, N.Y.’s south fork.

The remnants of the surface military installation are indeed in severe disrepair, but the underground continues to be active. Ludicrously enough, the surface of the land is now a N.Y. State Park—on paper at least. However, by terms of the deed, the federal government still retains all rights to any and all property beneath the surface! Investigations reveal that several new, deeper levels were added in the early 1990s. Fields of research conducted there are said to include principally electromagnetic mind-control, also psychotronics (interfacing mind & machine), particle-beam technology, and inter-dimensional/“time travel” experiments (black-hole simulations and warping time-space).

Very strong evidence indicates particle accelerators are in use there and at nearby facilities—such as Brookhaven Labs—for powering the particle-beam weapons, HAARP transmissions, and exotic particle-beam radar systems.

The continuing lack of any credible explanation for what caused the crash of TWA Flight 800, nearly a year and a half ago, offshore from Westhampton, has focused considerable attention on eastern Long Island as a place where unusual things happen unusually often. In fact, there are substantial indications that particle-beam operations at Brookhaven Labs the night of July 17, 1996 were in fact (at least partially) responsible for the disaster, and this is delved into in more depth within the report. I’ve put together the report based on personal interviews with project participants, on-site investigations at Montauk Air Force Station (Camp Hero), and extensive historical and background research. This report verifies without doubt current clandestine activities at the underground installation, as well as other locations mentioned; it includes corroborative testimony from area residents and visitors who have very recently had frightening encounters at this location with mysterious, threatening, unidentified security personnel toting automatic weapons.

In the past year, mainstream newspapers at Montauk and East Hampton, such as the Montauk Pioneer and the East Hampton Independent have carried several articles about various aspects of the “Montauk Project”. For many in the area it is (unfortunately) becoming an accepted part of life there, as it has for others who have found the preponderance of solid evidence supporting allegations of highly irregular, horrific activities at Montauk Air Force Station impossible to dismiss. This is an incredible state of affairs taking place 100 miles from N.Y.C. “underneath” eastern Long Island’s Sun-and-surf playground.

MONTAUK PROJECT REPORT PART 1

Within the past two years, several incidents of a deeply disturbing and highly irregular nature have occurred at or near Camp Hero/Montauk Air Force Station, an ostensibly derelict facility at the extreme eastern end of Long Island’s south fork and adjacent to Montauk Point’s historic lighthouse. Two of these incidents involved women, one of whom was accompanied by her children, being accosted, harassed, and threatened at gunpoint by unidentified government/military personnel while in the vicinity. They were told that they had violated top-secret and restricted areas, and were subject to arrest; however no arrests were made.

Another such incident involving weapons happened within the past year, when a young man was walking in the so-called state park.

A similar event, without automatic weapons, took place in mid-April of 1995 when a family walking there encountered a security agent, also unidentified, who abusively harassed the family and threatened to have them arrested for the same alleged violation; again no arrests were made.

In April 1996, in an effort to bring themselves up-to-date on the status of the area, this family again entered the restricted portion of Camp Hero State Park, and they were once more approached by a non-uniformed guard who “advised” them that they were intruding into an area designated off-limits to the public, and were to leave immediately. This follows upon an inexplicably large number of similar events within recent years.

There is much well-substantiated testimony, extending back at least twenty-five years, of bizarre, unconstitutional, and horrific activities secretly conducted by shadowy government and military agencies at this location. In addition to the known military bases, (U.S. Army) Camp Hero and Montauk Air Force Station, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers plans and records establish conclusive proof of the existence of at least four levels of subterranean facilities beneath Camp Hero, and according to informed sources, up to three additional levels have been added as recently as the early 1990s.

Montauk is actually geologically distinct from the rest of Long Island, and is the top of an undersea mountain, so there is plenty of bedrock to go down into. Camp Hero was a U.S. Army installation established prior to WW2, and Montauk Air Force Station was established within its perimeter as the Army phased out of the location in the 1950s.

The Air Force Station was officially active only until 1969, and federal records do show that no legitimate source of funding existed past that time to keep the base in operation, as its SAGE radar system had by then become obsolete. Yet recovered Air Force documents and numerous witnesses verify indisputably that the Air Force Station was still active long after then.

Recently, much evidence has surfaced indicating that the base and the subterranean facilities were and still are used for a tremendous amount of top-secret, ultra-classified research and experimentation (much of which falls under the umbrella of the code-named Phoenix Project) in quantum and particle physics (black hole simulation), super-powerful electrical fields, weather control, psychotronics (interfacing mind and machine), genetics, particle-beam technology, and electronic and drug-based mind control.

The preponderance of this evidence strongly suggests that a great many of these activities have been thoroughly malevolent as to both their desired ends and the means used to achieve those ends, and have utilized unwitting and even helpless subjects—including, at times, youngsters abducted from surrounding communities. Certain of these experiments in controlled warping of our time-space continuum had such devastating results and almost inconceivably awesome potential consequences that several project insiders conspired to sabotage the proceedings in August 1983, forcing the base’s total, but as it turns out only temporary, abandonment.

NO PICNICS AT CAMP HERO STATE PARK

It is a matter of public record that the federal government turned the Camp Hero/Montauk A.F. Station property over to New York State for use as public park land in 1984, yet according to the terms of the deed on record at the Suffolk County offices in Riverhead, N.Y., the federal government retains all rights to all property beneath the surface of the land. Only the surface of this area was actually donated to N.Y. State. The deed also holds that the federal government can reclaim the surface of the land, as well, for reasons of national security, if necessary.

Thirteen years after this transfer, at least 2/3 of this so-called park remain completely off-limits to the public! This, itself, is in fact a violation of the N.Y. State Parks’ charter, and the restriction is enforced severely by a host of various authorities—sometimes at gunpoint.

Electronics technicians have monitored and recorded extremely unusual and unorthodox radio frequencies and other electromagnetic transmissions emanating directly from this supposedly restricted and/or derelict property at the present time, which indicate activities very much like those alleged to have occurred there, and I have personally seen and heard, with my own eyes and ears, these bizarre and complex EM/RF signal transmissions monitored and traced by direction-finding receivers and other equipment.

New telephone lines and new high-capacity power lines with a gigawatt meter have been installed in this off-limits area fairly recently, and witnesses observed a highly advanced Cardion Corporation particle-beam radar unit being operated on the bluffs at Camp Hero for a period of at least five months in 1994. Investigators were given several different explanations as to the reason for this from various Cardion (Siemens) officials, and one witness was told point-blank by a security guard there that the unit had been malfunctioning in the underground and was thus brought to the surface for testing!

The electrical meter with gigawatt capability is on a structure claimed as an equipment maintenance building by State Parks officials: one of the few functional buildings within the restricted area. A Gigawatt of electrical power is a tremendous amount of power—enough to run a large city; but where is the city at Montauk Point? Underground, apparently.

Investigators of clandestine activities there assert that if gigawatts of electricity were discharged (utilized) within that single building, it would be completely demolished by fire in record time. They point to the existence of the power line and gigawatt meter as clear evidence of secret, and by extrapolation, unconstitutional, illicit operations at the Air Force Station.

In June 1996 this assertion was confirmed as fact by a serviceman (who wishes to retain confidentiality) for LILCO, the electric utility company for the Montauk area (and virtually all Long Island). A linesman and meter reader for the Camp Hero vicinity, he has stated for the record that he and his supervisors are indeed aware that a tremendous amount of electricity is utilized by this power line and recorded by the meter. He also noted that it is absolutely not possible for the one maintenance building to use that much power for equipment maintenance operations or any other conceivable and legitimate State Parks activities.

STRANGE SCIENCE FACT

There are a number of claims being made about this location by people like Preston Nichols, a radio-electronics engineer and technician who’s worked for Bookhaven National Laboratories and top-secret defense contractor A.I.L. on Long Island. Nichols has co-authored three books on the subject of the activities at Montauk Air Force Station popularly known as the Montauk Project. The research and experimentation alleged to have occurred in the subterranean facility beneath Camp Hero, which include psychotronic and electromagnetic mind-control operations of a very extreme nature, and also interdimensional and time manipulations and travel, may no doubt strike some readers as bordering on science fiction.

However, a careful perusal of numerous investigative reports and news stories, Congressional hearings, scientific papers, and relevant federal documents, will show that in fact many different types of electromagnetic mind-manipulation technologies have been thoroughly tested and developed by intelligence agencies and other groups; the trail goes back a good fifty years or more and these technologies are well understood, quite effective, and in widespread use. As well, a complete study of the more recent concepts and developments in quantum physics shows very widespread support for theories which provide for the possibility, even likelihood, of the development of methods to accomplish “travel” both in time and in other dimensions.

For example, in March 1994, Scientific American published a paper by David Deutsch and Michael Lockwood which concluded flatly that nothing in the currently known laws of physics prohibits such excursions. In fact, the burden of proof is now far and away upon the doubters of time and dimensional travel to make their case that such are impossible.

A number of the great minds in contemporary physics—including but not limited to Nick Herbert, Kip Thorne, Frank Tipler, Fred Allen Wolf, Michio Kaku, Steven Hawking (a recent and enthusiastic convert) and Paul Halpern—postulate that time travel can in fact be achieved. It can be said conclusively, proven beyond any doubt within the framework of contemporary science, that parallel dimensions exist—“probable” realities to us, apparently infinite in number; our familiar 3D time/space continuum is but one manifestation.

Fundamentally, it is our consciousness which in some way literally brings into being the dimension or reality we experience, manifesting it from, what are to us, realms of infinite potentials. This was demonstrated in a mathematical form known as von Neumann’s Proof, developed by Hungarian-born physicist Janus Eric von Neumann and published in the 1930s in his book The Mathematical Foundations Of Quantum Physics, known even today as “the bible” among quantum physicists. (More about von Neumann later.)

Other developments have demonstrated that time, as it is commonly conceived of, a linear progression from past to present to future, does not ultimately exist. Experiments conducted at Columbia University in the early 1970s proved that a decision made by an observer/researcher which determines whether or not a photon has traveled as a wave or a particle (by either causing or not causing wave interference), and which is made after the photon is emitted into a multi-mirrored device (which considerably delays its journey), will also determine the state of that photon at the time it is emitted—showing that the present does affect the past, and thus the future can affect the present. Therefore, all time is in actuality simultaneous; what we call past and future exist “now”. The past isn’t gone and the future isn’t yet to come. Then where are they? In another dimension. Similar alterations to traditional concepts about space, in particular vast distances, must ensue from such scientifically accepted facts.

Another body of research used extensively in top-secret projects involving ultra-advanced technologies is that of Nikola Tesla, a towering scientific genius and the true father of our present-day AC electrical system who, as far back as the turn of the century, had reportedly developed such technologies as particle-beam and anti-gravity devices, wireless power transmission, psychotronics, and “free” energy, to name a few. Much of his work remains only dimly comprehended by many scientists even today.

Tesla and his inventions figured prominently in the legendary “Philadelphia Experiment” which was, in fact, part of the Phoenix Project research.

It must be pointed out to those revisionists who discount the reality of the Philadelphia Experiment, and also to those whose minds boggle at the contemplation of such subjects, that there is ample evidence in the public record alone (newspapers, magazines, periodicals, etc.), showing that in the later 1930s and early 1940s Naval Intelligence and other agencies were indeed wholeheartedly researching radar cloaking technology with the top minds in physics, including John Hutchinson, Emil Kurtenhour, Albert Einstein, Von Neumann and Tesla.

Although not often discussed then or now, literal sight invisibility was also a subject of considerable interest in this work. Sites for this research were, first, the University of Chicago, and then, later, The Institute for Advanced Studies, a front-organization for groups connected to the one-world government conclave—the Council of Rhodes. It’s perhaps noteworthy that Tesla maintained research facilities at Shoreham, Long Island, not far from Montauk. Shoreham is reputed to be a geomagnetic “hot spot” or power point, although not of the same magnitude as Montauk.

At Montauk, to simplify considerably, the basic “research” agenda was as follows. Extremely gifted and rigorously trained psychics were hooked up, via psychotronic equipment, to computers which converted the waveforms of their thoughts to (digital) computer code, and also relayed the waveforms to exceptionally high-powered EM/RF transmitters, which broadcast thought, mind, and consciousness-altering signals. According to accounts, certain experiments achieved materialization, at varying levels of stability and solidity, of objects visualized by the psychics whose thoughts were then broadcast, as well as teleportation effects. (IBM’s Internet website is currently [5/97] displaying a blurb about their research and intended development of teleportation technology.)

By the late 1970s at Montauk, furthermore, very advanced experimentation was undertaken in the controlled “warping” of space and time, utilizing some of Tesla’s, Von Neumann’s, and others’ ideas and inventions. Tremendously powerful electrical currents flowing in specific configurations generated electromagnetic fields which created, in effect, a working “Tipler cylinder”.

To simplify once more, psychics were again utilized to visualize and stabilize a target “destination” in a different time/space dimension in which the “vortex” would then be focused upon. The Tipler cylinder, a concept formulated by the aforementioned physicist, Frank Tipler, is presently one of the most widely accepted theoretical models in quantum physics of how to create an artificial, controllable “black hole”, thereby achieving time-space and dimensional shifting, and even the ability to affect alterations and manipulations of our time-space continuum.

Some of this sounds quite exciting, amazing, even wonderful—and certainly, in some ways, it probably is. However, to a great extent, such activities were and are done with absolutely no regard for the effects on the people experimented upon; furthermore, this work is done with the full intention of using the knowledge and capabilities gained to more thoroughly and completely subjugate humanity with ever-more-powerful and pervasive control of our consciousness: in fact, and literally if we remember von Neumann’s Proof, carrying out “reality engineering”.

According to Preston Nichols—and also according to other first-hand participants in certain of these experiments—some of the youngsters abducted and so viciously abused in these activities died as a result and were buried en-masse on site! The human tragedy attested to here begins to rival such indelible atrocities as the Pol-Pot massacres or Auschwitz and Bergen-Belsen in its horror and brutality. The fact that this was done to American children on American soil by agencies connected, however tenuously, to our government, is virtually unimaginable; yet, as we have discovered, many of the assertions made by Phoenix/Montauk investigators have been checked out and verified.

As mentioned, the Montauk Project crashed and burned in August 1983, sabotaged from within by certain key participants who could no longer tolerate what was going on. A time tunnel-type linkup with the Philadelphia Experiment exactly forty years previously (August 12, 1943), was allegedly achieved then—apparently an attempt by project operators to repair or undo damage they felt had been done to the time-space continuum during the 1943 experiment; thereafter, the project ended temporarily, as described, with the surface of the property being then donated to N.Y. State.

TURTLE COVE

Investigators of the Montauk Project state that the Montauk Point location was chosen not by chance, but because it is a very important “power spot” on the Earth, due to geomagnetic factors of great scientific significance. It is common knowledge and accepted fact in geophysics and related sciences that certain areas of the Earth’s surface are geomagnetic “hot spots” where gravitational, magnetic, and electromagnetic anomalies occur, including effects on certain EM/RF activities, and this is in fact one of the primary reasons cited by HAARP proponents for situating the main (as far as we know!) HAARP facility in Gakona, Alaska.

Richard Hoagland, an ex-NASA scientist who assembled a team which did a great deal of intensive research into what appear to be a Sphinx-like “face”, pyramids, and other structures on the Martian surface, has deciphered a mathematical formula encoded in the angles and relationships of the structures making up the Martian complex (known as Cydonia) which he calls tetrahedral geometry or tetrahedral physics.

The basic elements of the formula are (and I simplify considerably), as a sphere such as a planet is rotated on an axis, specific points on the surface of the sphere become the focus or portal for upwellings of energy originating in other dimensions. The most notable of these coincide with where the points of a tetrahedron inscribed within the sphere would intersect the surface of the sphere. Other than at the poles, these points would be at 19.5 degrees north and south latitude.

On Earth it's the Hawaiian Islands, on Jupiter it's the Great Red Spot, and so on. According to the tetrahedral formula, other locations are also "power" spots, including that of Cydonia itself. On Earth, some additional points are said to include Giza (and the famous pyramids) in Egypt, Machu Piccu (on the same longitude as Montauk), and Stonehenge.

When English and other European settlers reached eastern Long Island's shores in the early 1600s, the Montauk Indians and other closely connected tribes lived in the region. The Montauks are an Algonquin tribe, recognized, in fact, by many Algonquins to be the primary or leading tribe. A great many Native American Indians, including Montauks and most Algonquins, believe that Turtle Cove, immediately adjacent to and between both Montauk Point and Camp Hero, is indeed a major power point—a "stargate" or interdimensional vortex and the source of our reality or creation. The Montauk Indians are considered the guardians of this spot. (The created world, which as far as many tribes knew was just North America, was called Turtle Island.)

THE PHAROAHS OF MONTAUK

A noteworthy point is that the chiefs or sachems of the Montauks have held the name of Pharaoh throughout their history, long before any White people had arrived to impart such a name to them, and the name Pharaoh appears nowhere else on Earth except for Egypt.

Archaeological evidence indicates that the Montauk Indians inhabited this region continuously for at least 8,000 years. As Montauk is geologically distinct from Long Island and North America, it could theoretically be a remnant of the Atlantean continent, and the name Pharaoh could have been derived from Atlantis, both in Egypt and Montauk.

Historical accounts from previous centuries attest that pyramidal structures did exist at one time at or near Turtle Cove, and various elders of the tribe recall hearing about them. Preston Nichols and Peter Moon theorize in their Montauk Project book series that the Montauk Indians are a remnant of a very ancient Atlantean civilization, as was ancient Egypt. This location, both in ancient times and currently, and the activities that secret government agencies (with their extensive ties to Masonic-type "brotherhoods") are allegedly conducting there, are vitally important to the human race and its future on Earth.

Another curiosity is the name "Camp Hero". The word hero is derived from the Greek word for the Egyptian god Horus, among whose attributes are the ability to see into other realities as well as backward and forward in time. Although this name was given to the region relatively recently by the federal government (read: Theodore Roosevelt—a Master Mason who owned a large tract of tribal land very close to Turtle Cove), it certainly correlates perfectly with what the Montauk Indians and other tribes believed about this location.

As noted, Camp Hero was known for being a "psych base" since its inception as a government military facility. (George Washington, another Master Freemason with many compadres in the Montauk area, commissioned the Montauk lighthouse and oversaw its construction.) It seems that members of certain organizations or agencies either already knew that this was a very significant spot on Earth, or else soon found it out, and over several hundred years systematically and deliberately manipulated the Montauk Indians into leaving their tribal lands and burial grounds east of what is now the hamlet of Montauk.

Thomas Jefferson made a substantial effort in the early 1800s to personally go to Montauk and record as much of the Montauk's history, language, and culture as he possibly could. (Although the language of the Montauk Indians has now almost completely vanished, there are substantial indications that it was in fact closely related to Vril, a so-called Enochian language of extreme antiquity.) Obviously Jefferson, another Master Mason, considered the material to be rather important. Jefferson later claimed to have lost much of the material in a boating mishap, but it seems odd that he wouldn't have returned to Montauk to redo the missing work if it was so important in the first place, and could indicate that his story was untrue and that, instead, the information was hidden away.

SYSTEMATIC DESTRUCTION OF A TRIBE

The machinations against the tribe and the unceasing attempts to get the Montauk Indians away from the land at Montauk Point and vice-versa culminated in an outrageous, vicious, and indefensible 1910 N.Y. court decision which declared the Montauk Indians to be "extinct", even as some sat there in the courtroom—a particular tactic used against no other tribe in North America. Significantly, construction of military facilities at Turtle Cove began almost immediately after this court decision.

In fact, hundreds of Montauks are still alive today, and this is a definite factor in the federal government's decision to turn Camp Hero/Montauk Air Force Station over to N.Y. State after their purported abandonment of the surface facilities.

There is an existing federal law, called the Non-Intercourse Act, which says that the ownership of any land once inhabited by American Indians, which is occupied and then relinquished by the U.S. government, must revert to those original inhabitants; in this case that would be the Montauk Indians, except that they are conveniently "extinct" by court order. However, that was a N.Y. State court decision, not necessarily binding upon the federal government. Obviously the federal government did not want the Indians to have the property, as that would seriously interfere with clandestine operations there.

If the Montauks can—as they are attempting to do—achieve full legal recognition as an existing tribe, the federal government would be forced to abide by the terms of the Non-Intercourse Act and return the Camp Hero property to them, whom it obviously belongs to—with no funny business about retaining rights to subterranean facilities.

MONTAUK PROJECT REPORT PART 3

SECRET WORLD GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

According to many of those who have investigated the numerous projects, programs, and such which have been discussed in this article, there does exist some sort of international worldwide super-government hidden behind the scenes of the great world stage, so to speak, pulling the strings which have a substantial impact on the outcome of many world events—events often instigated and manipulated by these very same groups.

Very little, if anything, which might have any significant effect on the human race socially, politically, economically or even spiritually, happens unless this hidden control group intends it to happen, or at least allows it to happen.

Such a phenomenon as the Third Reich would most definitely fall within this category. Not only did many prominent persons openly support Hitler and some of the stated objectives of the Nazi movement before the onset of WWII in Europe, but before, during, and mostly after the war, untold thousands of high-level Nazi Party members, top scientists, and intelligence officers, came to the U.S. and worked for the U.S. government—and not just in the aerospace fields as is commonly thought.

Indeed, our intelligence services received the biggest infusion of all; the newly-formed CIA, and even more secretive NSA and other agencies, like the DIA, employed numerous ex-Nazis and incorporated a great many of the Nazis' intelligence methods and techniques as well as a vast amount of "research" and data resulting from one of the most hideous "projects" of all time—the Nazi death camps.

Many allegations and rumors continue to persist that large numbers of other high-ranking Nazis escaped to various South American countries, assisted again by American intelligence and military agencies, where they continue to foment events conducive to their unwavering political and philosophical intentions. Coupled with the fact that there was no full and unconditional surrender on the part of the Third Reich, only a cease-fire agreement, one must allow for the possibility that there is more to the story than was publicly disclosed—that perhaps the Nazis were not really defeated but were to some extent incorporated into our government. There are undeniably strong indications of a substantial Nazi/Aryan involvement in the Montauk Project and many other similar endeavors.

OBVIOUSLY "TOP-SECRET"

A conclusion can reasonably be drawn at this point from the wealth of evidence which is blazingly obvious: certain clandestine groups or agencies have conducted and continue to conduct extremely sensitive, classified, top-secret activities in subterranean facilities beneath Camp Hero/Montauk A.F. Station, with the tacit co-operation, and at times assistance, of the N.Y. State Parks system as well as various other governmental bodies.

Hard evidence as to exactly what activities have been, and are, being conducted in the Phoenix/Montauk Project (and others), which agencies are responsible, and who the victims of this research are, will likely be difficult to come by and will take a sustained and intensive investigation by dedicated people; certainly one must expect the agencies and groups involved to be less than forthcoming and honest regarding any of this.

If secret agencies of government, operating without the knowledge or consent of any duly-elected constitutional authority, are intent on continuing their clandestine, illegal, unconstitutional, and malevolent endeavors at this location, at the very least the areas must be clearly and unequivocally designated, fenced, posted, and patrolled as such.

This is what is being done outside the perimeter of the Area 51 section of Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada, where in May of 1995 the Air Force seized over 4,000 acres from the federal Bureau of Land Management (BLM) adjacent to Area 51 and top-secret S4 at Nellis. This action was taken to prevent the public from getting too close to the very highly classified research being conducted there involving either terrestrial or non-terrestrial aerospace craft displaying antigravity characteristics, witnessed by many thousands of people previously.

PARTICLE BEAM TECHNOLOGY

On the scientific front, there is strong evidence, detailed by Nichols in his most recent book Pyramids Of Montauk, which indicates particle accelerators are in use at Montauk Air Force Station and at nearby facilities—such as Brookhaven Labs—for powering inter-dimensional experiments, particle-beam weapons, HAARP transmissions, and exotic particle-beam radar systems.

The peculiarities and lack of any credible answers in the crash of TWA Flight 800 have led some investigators of clandestine activities on Long Island to suspect the involvement of Montauk Project operations in the crash—in particular, the use of particle-beam weapons, powered by these subterranean particle accelerators. According to information from a former federal agent connected to the Montauk Project, it is a certainty that particle-beam operations were involved in the crash.

In Pyramids Of Montauk, Preston Nichols does provide some information on the general subject of particle-beam weapons. And what or whom are these weapons being used against?

Mr. Nichols told me that, in August 1995, he was informed directly by an Air Force colonel stationed at Montauk, named Ciel Roth, that the particle-beam technology has been developed for use as a weapon. Information relayed by active agents to a former federal intelligence agent with ties to the Montauk project indicates that it is certain that particle-beam operations at Brookhaven Labs triggered the catastrophe [of TWA Flight 800].

According to an item in The Montauk Pulse explaining the events and described as a rumor:

"On the date of the crash, military maneuvers were being conducted in the vicinity of Center Moriches. A low-flying (tactical) nuclear missile, which was deactivated, was discharged in simulated battle from a low-flying plane. It was aimed at a heat-generating target that was trailing behind a C-130. A malfunction caused the heat generator to cease, whereupon the missile locked-in on Flight 800. The missile was designed to circle above its target. It was never meant to hit anything."

In the midst of these errant maneuvers, the particle beam at Brookhaven Labs activated the nuclear mass in the warhead by supplying neutrons to make the fissionable material go to critical mass. Quite simply, it was the particle beam which set-off the nuclear device. Of course, when a nuclear blast occurs, it leaves a residue of radiation. This explains why debris retrievers were seen wearing radiation suits. "...Additionally, green streaks have been reported over Long island by many different pilots. It is becoming old hat. These green streaks are caused by atmospheric reaction with the particle beam."

Some investigators aren't so sure the crash

DELTA T ANTENNA

This is an actual Delta T antenna that sits above Space Time Labs on Long Island. By definition, it can actually facilitate shifting time zones. Two coils are placed vertically around the edges of the pyramid structure at ninety degree angles to one another.

A third coil surrounds the base. Shifting time zones was accomplished by pulsing and powering the antenna, as is discussed in The Montauk Project: Experiments in Time.

Even when the antenna is not powered, it has a subtle interdimensional effect on the nature of time itself.

From Montauk Revisited by Preston B. Nichols p.202

was accidental, as certain French intelligence agents were apparently on board. The area of Long Island, where the jet went down, Westhampton, has been identified by Nichols and others as having particle accelerator and particle-beam technology operating in underground facilities, and is in close proximity to Brookhaven National Labs, cited as a major player (beyond any doubt) in clandestine operations in this region.

The severe and extensive brushfires in this area of Long Island in August 1995 were allegedly caused by certain particle accelerator/particle-beam operations (or malfunctions), and in fact these fires were the primary reason that Mr. Nichols was asked to meet with the above-mentioned Col. Roth. This was apparently an attempt on the part of the Air Force to ascertain whether or not Nichols could shed some light on what was going wrong with the interlinked series of subterranean accelerators between Brookhaven Labs and Montauk Point.

The “secret government”—and those intelligence and military agencies which comprise and/or maintain it—has apparently very nearly completed their mission of thorough domination and control of the more overt means of influencing and molding society through the media and communications. (The Clinton Administration seems determined to introduce major monitoring and censorship of the Internet—not that there isn’t any already.) These groups stand ready to use highly developed, perfected, and fully operational electromagnetic/RF technologies like HAARP, the Montauk/Phoenix Project, and others which result from an unending list of experimental programs and research projects, to implement operations on a domestic/national scale, and a global scale, which can exert very substantial control over moods, emotions, thoughts, health and physiology, the subconscious, and the general level of ethical, psychic, and even spiritual awareness and development of the human race.

As well, due to their possession of and willingness to use weapons of mass death and destruction—nuclear, chemical, and biological, apparently even (in an “experimental” mode) against men and women in uniform serving their country in the Gulf War, as mounting evidence shows—and due to the levels of subliminal fear and intimidation this engenders not only within people of other nations but within Americans too, and in addition, by controlling the information we-the-people are actually given, the circle is completed and the takeover can be accomplished.

It should be clearly stated in closing that none of this information is meant to imply that all intelligence service directors and operatives and all members of the U.S. military high command are responsible for or involved in the projects described herein, nor is it meant to imply that the U.S. government has no right to conduct any legitimate, scientific, and defense-related research and experimentation in many different fields. The activities with which this report is concerned fall far outside any such legitimate bounds and are conducted by agencies unaccountable in any way to duly-elected legislative or executive authorities, in blatant and wholesale disregard for the U.S. Constitution and the rights and protections it affords its people.

John Quinn assembled a great deal of absolutely intriguing information and historical background about the Montauk location and what is reported to be going on there. It is important background to my upcoming interview, later in this article.

For further background, I would like to turn now to an old yet fascinating interview with Al Bielek, which came from the <http://www.trufax.org/trans/bielek1.html> website. We would like to express our appreciation for work done so long ago, yet which is timely today within the context of this article.

[Quoting]

INTERVIEW WITH AL BIELEK PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT SURVIVOR

[Source: Matrix III, approximately 1989.]

Interviewer: I have a basic question which might be a good starting off point. Could you give me a thumb-nail sketch of how you make a battleship disappear? I know it takes generators—now what do you do?

Bielek: A thumb-nail sketch is, you have to distort the normal time field. In the case of what they were doing, they were rotating the time field in which the ship itself sat. If you rotate it at about 45 degrees, it becomes invisible; if you rotate it 90 degrees, it drops out of our reality—and that’s not what they wanted to do.

The basic technique, just in thumb-nail, is that you rotate the time field. Consequently radar signals will pass right through it like it doesn’t exist. If you rotate it far enough, optically it doesn’t exist. It would not be visible to the eye under normal observation.

Interviewer: What is the time field?

Bielek: The time field is an extension of our physical reality. According to Einstein, it is a physical dimension. In other words, it’s the fourth dimension.

Interviewer: And can be moved?

Bielek: It can be manipulated; let’s put it that way. It can be interfaced; it can be manipulated. You can do things with it. Consequently, you do things with whatever is in that area of field that you’re manipulating.

Interviewer: Are you moving it with magnets?

Bielek: You’re moving it with electromagnetic fields and R.F. fields. However, the means of modulation of those fields are such that they generate higher-order fields. In other words, you’re not going to affect the time fields with plain, ordinary electromagnetic radiation.

Interviewer: What’s an R.F. field?

Bielek: Radio Frequency. The same thing as a radio or TV or whatever.

Interviewer: So it takes a combination of the two. An R.F. field interacting in a certain manner, and with additional equipment, to produce higher-order fields which will rotate the time field.

If an object or a person is either brought forward or backward through a time tunnel, doesn’t this create a “paradox” because of the object not belonging to that particular time?

Bielek: Yes, you do.

Interviewer: Was that a problem?

Bielek: No, it was not a problem, so far as I know. I can only speak about Montauk. They regularly sent people through the time tunnels and brought them back. They did send some objects through the time tunnels with no intention of bringing them back at that time. Sort of like storage at a distance.

I understand, from what Dr. Herman Entenman said, was that on some of those occasions they lost what they sent out because the tunnel collapsed due to failure of the equipment. So the tunnel collapses and disintegrates. Whatever is out there is just atoms lost in eternity, so to speak. But other than that, no, they had no problems in sending something out and later retrieving it, whether it was a person or an object.

The real problem came when you made deliberate attempts, which were done, to alter the past history and alter what happened to certain people. That had an inroad effect on me.

Something was done involving an alien who was shipped backwards in time—roughly 100,000 years ago. And also to my brother; I’m not sure what the time period was. I would estimate from what he said, about 12,000 years ago, maybe less, wherein something from a more recent time was forced back upon him and changed his whole nature.

Interviewer: Where did the writers of the movie The Philadelphia Experiment get their information?

Bielek: That is a very long and interesting story. I wondered about that myself and we assumed, for a period of time, that that information came in mostly as speculation on the part of the actual producer. I know who it is, but his name does not appear on the credits and he doesn’t want his name known.

But he asked Preston (Nichols) over a period of time from 1982 to 1983 a lot of questions about the Philadelphia Experiment, and Preston knew quite a bit about it, at that time. He finally admitted it, and answered this guy's 1001 questions, as it were. And this guy became the actual director of the film. We assumed that he expanded with his own speculation on this because some of it in there is not true, but it was based largely on Preston's information and his own expansion on it.

Turns out that wasn't the case at all. We did a lecture in New York in 1989. Preston, Duncan, and myself were invited to talk about the Phoenix Project and the Philadelphia Experiment, which we did. Officially it was not video taped, but privately it was. A copy of this thing somehow wound up over in England and got to EMI Thorn and got to someone in archives.

Well, they came to New York and looked up Preston. They found Preston's address and came to his home one evening and said "We've finally found you!" Preston says "What do you mean?" He says 'Well, we've been looking for you for quite awhile. You're the fourth man in the picture.'

Preston says "What picture are you talking about?" He showed him a photograph of a family portrait that was made in 1890 of the Thorn brothers of Thorn Industries. One of the backers of the organization was none other than Aliester Crowley, and this fourth person who was apparently a bit older. The fourth person was identical to Preston except he looked approximately 10 years older than Preston looked, say a year ago. And they knew that this fourth person was important, and Crowley insisted at that time that this man was not of their time, meaning the time of 1890. He was out of the future, and this guy gave him the whole history of the boat [Philadelphia] experiment and it had been in the archives of EMI Thorn since 1890.

It was some time in the '60s or '70s that EMI Corporation and Thorn Industries merged and they decided to do a movie. The decision to start it was in 1983, and they came to the US to do the filming. But they said that they had the actual record of the experiment in their archives since 1890.

Interviewer: And you're saying Preston brought it back?

Bielek: Preston brought it back according to the statement made by Crowley at that time and according to the records in the archives.

Interviewer: We'd like to clarify some things from the presentation. How old are you now?

Bielek: By my birth certificate, 63. By adding the additional years when I was actually born, I would be 73. In terms of real time, not counting age regression, I'd be 63 plus 30, which is 93 plus the time I spent on various secret government projects, such as the Phoenix Project, where they were doing the right brain/left brain split-type thing, a sort of conjugate personality thing. They do this now to get you to work on two different projects at two identical times, practically as two different people.

Interviewer: So you've lived over 93 years in a 63-year-old body?

Bielek: Yes.

Interviewer: Were you speculating that the Philadelphia Experiment was a set-up by the aliens?

Bielek: It very definitely was a set-up. Right now it is very definite. There was speculation a couple of months ago 'cause some of the pieces were just beginning to come into view. The whole thing was a set-up.

Interviewer: What tipped you off that it was an alien set-up?

Bielek: Finally getting some data on Roosevelt's agreements, where he signed an agreement with the aliens in 1934. I started looking-in on this and it started to make some kind of sense.

The Pleiadians were turned down in 1953 again when they insisted one of the points they required, if they were to work out a deal with the U.S. Government, was that they must scrap all their nuclear weapons. Well, the U.S. Government was just not ready to do that, not in 1953. So they were turned down politely. Then along came the greys and the government made an agreement with them.

But again, back in 1933 was Roosevelt's agreement with the "K" alien group, and because of that, in 1934 the Pleiadians went over to Nazi Germany and worked something out with them. But there you had across the Atlantic two powers which were getting ready to fight each other. There was one ET group on one side of the Atlantic, passing us technical information. It's going to be fairly obvious that it's very likely that there's going to be another one on the other side of the Atlantic feeding information to try and keep some kind of a balance, particularly since one of them was concerned with the survival of a major segment of the human race.

I finally got confirmation from a number of people. The original confirmation, I understand there are hard copy notes on this, comes from Billy Meier in Switzerland.

Interviewer: What does $E=MC^2$ light reciprocal mean?

Bielek: That would be C to the 4th. That does not have meaning other than that would rotate you into one of these hyperspatial locations, which is C to the 4th, and you would be out of the electromagnetic and you would pass into one of the etheric domains.

Interviewer: Would it be accurate to say that, when they made the Eldridge disappear, what they do is just rotate it into another dimension?

Bielek: That's what happened, but that's not what was intended. What was intended was to rotate the time field so that there would be no reflections of either light energy or electromagnetic energy, which is essentially the same.

Interviewer: So they isolated the time dimension.

Bielek: Yes, and rotated it, and that was all they were intending to do. But that of course is not all that happened.

Interviewer: They ended up rotating the entire—

Bielek: —localized field around the ship.

Interviewer: How can you begin to understand that?

Bielek: Because I not only had all the physics training then, but also the specialized training which came from von Neumann because he understood it. At the time when you graduate from the standard physics course, even at the best universities today, even a Ph.D., you don't really know what's going on because that is information that's withheld.

[Editor's note: This is indeed very true—in many more areas of so-called "higher" education than just in the domains of physics or electrical engineering. See the September 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM for further discussion of this matter.]

An understanding comes later. All that is a basis for laying the groundwork for understanding. The REAL understanding of what's happening has to come from private tutoring. This is why the Illuminati has survived so long, because there is a hard basis of knowledge there, as well as ability. But von Neumann had figured it out, along with Hilbert, and his interface with Hilbert, and perhaps Einstein and Levinson.

Interviewer: What would you say to a person who had a physics background who wants to have a deeper understanding; how would they pin it?

Bielek: How? Hmm. You would have to study currently some of the literature and information put out by Tom Bearden, for one example. But you have to be careful also about Tom Bearden, because he also puts out some disinformation. You have to filter it very carefully. He does put out some good information, but every so often he puts a corkscrew in there, and that's particularly true in some of his references to the weather control generated by the Russians. It's not. We have our own.

And some of the other things, some of the other basic physics which refer to the bouncing electron in the atomic shell, that's real for a period of time and then virtual for a period of time. Well, that aspect's correct. But he says when it becomes virtual, it goes into a reverse-time universe, then it falls into the anti-matter universe. An anti-matter universe is NOT reverse time. There is a reverse-time universe and there's an anti-matter universe. So that is disinformation right there. And what he describes is partially correct, but not fully correct.

Interviewer: So where else would you look for more information?

Bielek: Where else? I'd say look into some of von Neumann's works. He has a list of 15 books, and some of them are not at all relative to this. He does have some of the information and some of the works which definitely tie back to the theoretical approach which was made.

Interviewer: But there's no way we can get ahold of the time equations, is that correct?

Bielek: Most likely, no. It is highly classified.

Interviewer: Regarding the boat experiment, was it because they generated too much energy that it took them beyond their anticipated results, or was there an alien manipulation that actually generated the field in such a way that they went beyond their expected results?

Bielek: No, just the rotation of the field itself would not create the problem. It was the fact that they locked-up with another experiment which brought them far beyond the 6th level which they were capable of generating on the Eldridge. They had to be capable of generating 6 levels in order to get 5, and 5 is what they had to have in order to rotate the time fields. Uh, you lose one in there, so to speak. You manipulate from the highest level what is below; that's why they had to go to 6 to get manipulation of the 5th. But that of itself would not have done what happened. You have to have additional orders and you have to have other factors which cause the lock-up.

Interviewer: One of the things that's really interesting about this video that we've seen is you and your brother's unique approach to understanding time, since you have experienced time in a very non-linear fashion. When you've created a loop like the loop that was created between 1943 and 1983 with regards to locking-up of the two different experiments, how does that loop ever break?

Bielek: It doesn't. It is there and it remains there, but after a certain period of time it probably won't have any effect. When you get 20 years past 1983, it's not likely to have any problem at all anymore. You don't lose it, you don't remove it. It just doesn't have any effect anymore. It's already had its effect by the transit and when you come back.

Interviewer: Does it disperse?

Bielek: No, it's just something that stays there and exists like a smoke trail in the sky. It's there and they slowly dissipate over a long period of time.

(Regarding the boat experiment)—Nothing was told to us about travel, only what we were doing in terms of that experiment. We had no expectation of anything like that happening. It was neither planned and wanted, or expected. It just plain happened.

I don't regret that aspect. The only thing I have sometimes thought about, and question whether I have regrets about it, is whether or not we might have all been better off if, instead of letting Duncan go back to 1983, I'd held him there on the ship so he couldn't jump overboard the second time, until the ship returned to normal space/time. He wouldn't have been back through that experience and dead. Things would have been different. Whether or not they would have been better is a wild speculation, and strictly speculation. But it definitely would have been different. I was not in a position to really anticipate what he was going to do. He gave no warning he was going to do it. The movie says otherwise, but of course the movie has a lot of speculation in it that he planned to go back because of his girlfriend. Well, there was no girlfriend at the other end; in fact, it was a disaster for him.

[End quoting]

To continue the evolution of this story, I now present another, later interview with Al Bielek wherein he discusses more of the pieces of this bizarre puzzle. This interview is from the <http://www.trufax.org/trans/bielek2.html> website.

INTERVIEW WITH AL BIELEK—1991

Al Bielek gives an update on the current use of mind control and psychic warfare, and also offered a more detailed account of his experience in the Montauk Project. Montauk, also known as the Phoenix Project, used Bielek and his brother, Duncan Cameron, to explore the underground cities of Mars.

Interviewer: Regarding your experience on Mars, you walked through the time tunnel, you take a step, and you're on Mars: What did you see?

Bielek: Well, I was not on the surface of Mars. We were in the underground. The story goes back to the Alternative 3 book, the TV production in England outlining the fact that we have Mars bases, one or more, provided by a joint operation with the U.S. government. I do not know if the Russians are in on it—and aliens. They are on the surface bases. It's a World Government operation really; that's not strictly the United States government.

After they were on the surface, which was about 1969, they found that there were entrances to the underground, sealed, and they knew there was something down there. The rumors were that there was probably artifacts from an ancient civilization buried underground because there were a lot of remains above ground—ruined cities that have been there, by NASA's estimates, maybe 300,000 years, 250,000 years. But they found the entrances all blocked, all sealed-off to any underground areas. So the word went back through communications (in the late '70s) to whomever, back to the Montauk and Phoenix project: "Can you do anything about this for us? We can't get into the underground of Mars."

They said, "Yes, I think we can. Give us some coordinates on the surface of the planet. We'll have to run astronomical computation." Which they did and plugged these all into the computer. They wanted two people to go, and it happened to be Duncan and myself.

Interviewer: Why two?

Bielek: To corroborate what the other one saw, and also in case there were any problems in the underground. They didn't really know what was down there.

So they sent us and we went up there in the underground. [Using the Montauk Time-Space "Tunnel" device, developed as a result of the Philadelphia Experiment.] There was a problem with light. We had to take lighting with us at the time. Later on, if I remember, we found some of their light sources and turned those on. We found, eventually, that the last remnants of the Martians, if you wish to call them that, died in the underground between 10 and 20,000 years ago by estimate, and they left everything they had of their civilization underground. We found enormous amounts of statuary which appeared to be religious.

Interviewer: What did they look like? How big were they?

Bielek: Typically 6,7,8 foot tall, stone, gems embedded in them and so forth.

Interviewer: These were of human-like people?

Bielek: Yes. They were quite well preserved. Then we found archives. We found a lot of scientific equipment. We found electronic equipment down there; tons and tons of stuff. And the rumor was also later that—I didn't recall until Duncan reminded me of it about a week ago. He said: "Don't forget the 17,000 metric tons of Martian gold they took out. According to his recollection of it, it was very strange gold. It was 5 times denser than ours. It was worth an unbelievable fortune. Where it went we have no idea, but it was returned to Montauk, and from there it went somewhere.

There were several authorized trips. And Duncan and I got the bright idea, since everything was in the computer, let's take a trip or two on our own and do our own exploring. So we did. After the second one, it was found out, and we were stopped. That was when he got into the archives and found enormous records of the civilization that was buried down there.

Interviewer: What did you find out?

Bielek: He was the one who read them. I couldn't read them.

Interviewer: He didn't tell you?

Bielek: No. Well, he did at the time, but I can't remember any of it now. It's a very strange memory. On again, off again, and that part of it was never made clear to me as to what he really found. Right after that we were removed.

But I do remember some of the other installations we saw down there. They had very odd, large generators of some type. If you did not see it, I recommend that you go see the movie Total Recall. In fact it was seeing that movie that reminded me of the fact that I had been there. Not the colonies, but the shots of the underground where they showed these large, round canisters where the director said these were probably for oxygen generation. I'm not quite sure, but we think so. I looked at them and said: "They're not round. They're hexagonal." And I asked myself: "How the hell did I know that?" So that was our view of Mars from the underground. We didn't see hardly a thing of it from the surface.

Interviewer: Did you see ice under the surface, like in Total Recall? All ice?

Bielek: No.

Interviewer: If I remember the movie, that's what they melted, a lot of ice to create the atmosphere.

Bielek: It was not ice under there. There were oxygen generators and they also had some storage. There was a generating system which apparently the ancients had left. I don't really know much about it, but it was activated before they moved the surface colonies in. They also melted down the polar caps. The rumors are that they used a hydrogen bomb or two for that. I don't know if that's true. But they did melt down a lot of the polar ice so they would have some water. It's still sparse but they have it. The atmosphere is thin but they have atmosphere. And the temperature is warm enough. In the equatorial region they have no problem surviving. It runs about 50 degrees and, of course, the astronomers have known this for about 50 years or more. It's quite livable in terms of temperature.

Interviewer: The lighting that you mentioned. What was that like?

Bielek: Unknown form of illumination, after we found out how to turn it on. Some of the power generators are still working. After we turned on the underground lighting we had no lack of light. Otherwise we had to carry our own, and portable lighting was not all that effective because we were dealing with larger underground chambers, several hundred feet across, high ceilings, and portable lights are not very good for a large chamber like that. Eventually we found where they had their own lighting. It was very bright.

Interviewer: Have you any information on the face on Mars?

Bielek: Not that I remember in the underground. There's more than one face on Mars, by the way. They found several. But I remember the NASA announcements some years ago, about 2 years ago, that they're receiving a low-frequency radio transmission from Mars. It was about 50 kilohertz, if I remember correctly.

It was at quite a low level, indicating the equipment or whatever it was that was generating the RF signal, and it was coded, was quite old and probably nearly worn out. So they were amazed there was anything still coming out of it, but it was enough of a signal that they could pick it up and put it through the computer and transcribe it.

It was a warning: A warning message to humans not to repeat the mistakes they made.

Interviewer: Do you have any feelings about being on Mars? What were your general impressions?

Bielek: We were digging in the remains of an old civilization that preceded ours and it felt very peculiar. To look at what was left of a once great civilization, and realize that they literally died there, and left everything behind, and that, eventually, the thing shut down. It was in the underground deliberately, apparently, as survival—because the circle cities had long since been destroyed, and they lived down there, and stayed there.

From what I understand of it, a number of the Martians survived whatever the attack was on the surface and eventually took off for Earth, while others decided to stay behind on Mars in the underground. And quite literally their progeny eventually died-out, and the whole race that was left behind on Mars died-out. It's rather a strange feeling to realize that the remnants of a race died-out in the underground, totally. They just left all their hardware behind.

Interviewer: In Rod Steiger's book, he spoke of March 18, 1990, as being important dates in the history of the Psi Corps. That's during those dates their equipment was zapped and all the psychics resigned March 20th. Could you explain all this?

Bielek: Well, basically what had happened was, a very strange story.

In January 1990, Psi Corps received some new hardware—because NSA had been working on this for years. This was psionic-type hardware that boosts the mind, and the capabilities of people, who already have a great deal of capability. It becomes quite formidable.

They found themselves, after that infusion of new equipment, after learning how to use it, with the capability of locating a picture buried in someone's files anywhere or tracking a missing file or missing information that they had instructions to recover or locate. They didn't do the recovery; they merely located it. And how we found out about this was a very interesting story.

Back in November of 1989, Duncan had told me, he said that I would have the proof of the Philadelphia Experiment in my hands during March of 1990. Well, it seems like during that weekend, that particular Sunday, preceding the walkout, I was in Phoenix. I was out for lunch that Sunday and a phone message was waiting for me that Preston had called and he was in a panic. When I finally got him on the phone, it was already too late. But he told me that some person had visited him.

You see, this person's father had been a senior scientist in the Navy working on the Philadelphia Experiment. And before the scientist died, he told his son what had happened—that he had certain files and that he was turning them over to his son, but he advised his son not to ever tell anyone about it. So, this guy, unidentified to me, never told anyone about what he had.

One week prior to the visitation with Preston, he gets a knock on his door. Government agents. "We want to search your house."

"Well, what for?"

"Get out of our way." And they start tearing his house apart. He knew what they were looking for. He didn't have it there, but he said "I don't know what you're looking for." And they didn't find it. It took several days. And he shook them.

And he went and got his stash of files, which contained two roles of film of Rainbow-3 and Rainbow-4, which were the two Eldridge tests, plus a stack of papers, still highly classified, apparently, from what Preston said, because they wound up in Preston's hands.

So he started calling his friends to see who could take care of this and take it off of his hands, because the government agents were right behind him, about two hours right behind him trailing him. None of his friends would touch it, those who he got through to.

And he finally got to the end of a long list of people and Preston Nichols was at the bottom of the list. He called Preston and he was home.

He said: "I'm coming over to give you something."

"Well, what's this all about?"

"I'll be there at such and such a time."

He goes over and hands him the file and the film and tells him the story about his father and the government agents and so forth.

Preston says "Well, what am I going to do with it?"

He says "I don't know; it's your problem now. The government agents are about two hours behind me."

He takes Preston out and shows him his car with bullet holes in the door, and he says "I'm getting out of here." And he left.

Preston, in a panic, tried to get hold of anybody he knew that day, including myself. I was not reachable. Duncan, previously that morning, got wind of something due to his psychic sensitivity, something very heavy coming down. He took off from Preston's, went home, went into his bedroom, locked the door, and crawled under the bedsheets until about 5:00 that afternoon. This is a fact. He panicked. He would not even answer the phone. He shut off his answering machine.

So this comes down. Preston can't get hold of me. Finally, when he did get through (I called him), he said “Well, I called up NSA and told them I had some very hot material here that I don’t want.”

They asked “What is it?” And he told them.

They said “Well, we don’t want it.”

He says “I’ve got to get rid of this stuff; it’s black-card clearance level.” So they said “Alright, we’ll send some F.B.I. agents to pick it up.”

So, they eventually arrived and he turned it over to them, after verifying that they were F.B.I. He got rid of the whole business. Then I called after that, and I still haven’t forgiven him for it!

But the interesting connection, to get back to your question about the Psi Corps, is that we finally put together the fact that, with the new equipment, they were able to identify a photograph if it’s in somebody’s file and apparently they have standing orders to find any information whatever dealing with the Philadelphia Experiment and make damn sure I didn’t get it. And they spotted something and found out who this guy was, and they sent out the government agents and this whole story ensued about this man who’s father was the senior scientist. And we don’t know what happened to it. We never saw it again.

[Still quoting, later in the interview.]

Interviewer: What is their body form like?

Bielek: Alpha Centauri? Like humans, exactly the same. There’s a much lower population on their planet. They’re not overpopulated. They’re an advanced civilization, a little ahead of us—not a great deal, but somewhat ahead of us.

They don’t like things like government headbashing and that sort of thing and the way they treat some of the government agents they no longer have any use for or whatever. If they are approached—and I don’t know how it’s done—if they are approached and asked for asylum, if they issue the card, you just get on the shuttle and that’s it, you’re there. Beyond that, I don’t know. I haven’t seen them since.

That’s a very interesting little side issue and our government doesn’t like it particularly, but there is some kind of a treaty and they honor it.

Apparently there is that type of treaty with other governments, elsewhere, and I gather it is all Earth governments or includes outside governments; I’m not sure. I have the feeling it includes outside governments too.

There’s regular communication—I don’t know if Preston went into this about the Super Luminary Communication Systems that were developed by ITT in the 1960s. It’s another one of those little developments that come out of all of this business evolving from the Philadelphia Experiment and the spin-offs from that, and research done by ITT because they were involved in the background of that program to some extent. They were very involved and were the principal contractor for the Phoenix Project, but they also had a lot of other little games also.

One of them was building a whole new communication system. This was research based on higher-order energies and the effects and the propagation rates, and studied all this and found out this is all very interesting. With a sixth-order energy we can develop a communication system with a propagation rate of C6, that’s C to the 6th power. They now have one of C8, C to the 8th power.

Interviewer: C being the speed of light?

Bielek: C is the speed of light, to the 8th power. That’s so fast they can literally communicate clear across our galaxy with nothing more than a phase shifter. There is essentially no delay. With the C6 system there was a delay, so they went to the 8th. 50,000 light-years across our galaxy and they can do it in a fraction of a second.

So Einstein was wrong in one sense. Nothing can go faster than the speed of light? It can. It’s long since been done. It was probably done long since he made the statement. Einstein did relent of some of his statements of earlier years before he died, but it was not publicly stated that he had.

Interviewer: Speaking of aliens and technology, do you know which aliens Tesla talked to?

Bielek: The Pleiadians. Basically that was one of his principal communication groups. Also a group called the “K” group. K stands for Kondrashkin. That’s the best literal translation into English. They were sort of light-green-skinned, humanoid-like, with no hair. If you put them up in the right garb and bleached their skin and put an old fashioned wig on them, they’d pass very readily for an Englishman. Not that I’m trying to cast any kind of aspersions on English people, but they most readily pass for English. And the dye or powder or whatever they put on their skin didn’t last more than two weeks.

Then there were 2 others, and I don’t know who they were. When you start calling out into space, you don’t know who is going to answer. And they did.

Tesla knew 11 or 12 languages, and I presume these people communicated back in English, but I don’t know that for certain. I wasn’t there; I only heard the stories from 2 other researchers who had worked with him before he died. I’m told of the equipment and the fact that he did communicate on an almost daily basis with somebody from the “outside”.

Interviewer: You sound angry. Are you?

Bielek: Oh, yeah. I’m very angry about it because they wrecked my life; they wrecked Duncan’s life; they wrecked the lives of a number of other people who I knew who were on that project, the original Philadelphia Project.

They didn’t wreck so many lives from the Phoenix Project in terms of breaking family relations and all this sort of thing. But they did eliminate a number of people who were involved in the Phoenix Project. They were literally killed, some accidentally, some deliberately, and otherwise reprogrammed and shipped off to God-knows-where. And a lot of them were shipped off to another time frame, so they never were returned to their original point of origin; they live their life out wherever they are, under who knows what conditions.

The massive redistribution, if you want to put it that way, of people, reprogramming them, is something which is totally alien to our Constitution and our concepts, not only our religious concepts of freedom, but our political concepts of freedom as we have known it under the Constitution for almost 200 years. The Constitution has existed longer, but I say almost 200 years because these government programs have come into play since about 1947 and they get worse every year and they’re not restricted to the U.S. But the U.S. seems to be the most vicious in it, by far the most vicious. The suppression of men and the control of the media is by far the worst in the U.S. It’s much worse than in Russia. There’s more freedom to speak in Russia than there is in this country. I’m speaking of the last year or two, not prior.

Understandably, what you’ve read to this point seems to grow more and more bizarre with each new assertion brought to the table. How many times did you ask yourself if this is science fact or science fiction?

In any event, with this background information for a foundation, let’s move right into an interview I recently (on 9/13/00) conducted with Michael Ash, a Delta-Commander within the Montauk Project for some years—a time traveler.

INTERVIEW WITH DELTA COMMANDER MICHAEL ASH

Martin: It’s my understanding that you were, in fact, the Delta Commander of the Project. What exactly is that, and how long were you associated with Montauk—during what time period?

Ash: Wow, kind-of my whole life, even before I was born. Remember, it was a time-based project, so there was preliminary foreknowledge of my coming. And there were a number of things that were put into effect to make sure that when I finally did arrive in this place, that I would arrive in a specific town, and place, and time, and that I would be available for them for monitoring, first of all—not that they couldn’t do it anywhere—but where they needed me to be. So, even before I was born I was sort-of involved.

Martin: That’s interesting.

Ash: As far as being “the” Delta Commander, there was more than one of us.

There were a number of task forces and teams. Now, Commander sounds like a big, lofty position. But, if you actually look at the structure of the internal—well, they used, basically, Naval structuring for their officers. And if you actually look at the position of Commander, it's below a Captain, even, so it's not as grandiose as you might think and there were more than one of "me".

The Commanders, themselves, depended on what particular mission we were going out on and what it was doing. Each mission would have a Commander. How many people, or how many particular framed groups you were with, depended on how you were utilized in the project.

Actively? As I said, before my birth my involvement started. After my birth, I was first monitored and kind-of pulled aside at age, I guess it had to be, 5. So, I guess, that would be 1964, age 5. And I was given an IQ test in kindergarten. And my parents were approached and they were told: "Well, he's a little bit on the exceptional side. He's got an above average IQ, and we feel that regular school programs might bore him. So, what we'd like to do, we have these 'special' programs which would challenge him a little bit better." That's, basically, how I got into the monitoring and scholastic end of the project.

My parents really had no idea what was coming down the pike, whatsoever, or what the plan was for me. As far as they knew, they were just doing the best thing that they thought possible. They felt that, "Well, they told us, they really can't challenge him enough, and so this other special program will give him access to special things, special classes, and that sort of thing."

Age 10, they started monitoring me energetically. And when I say that, I don't just mean energetically, I also mean sexually, as well. Because human sexuality was heavy entrenchment in a lot of the machinations of the project itself, as well as the foundational programming or training for the project.

Martin: This is Wilhelm Reich, orgone energy?

Ash: Exactly, exactly. So they started monitoring me about then, and it wasn't really until age 13 where I matured to the point where sexual or energetic manipulation would be possible to the point where they could utilize it at all. So really, at age 13, that's when I first came into a prowess with the project to any degree.

In those days, I was involved in other projects. You know, the Montauk Project itself is sort of a "coined" phrase. It's used for the general public, but it's really not the name of the project at all. The project, so to speak, is really a conglomeration of a number of experiments and "black ops" that go under one heading. They've had many different subtitles and names, all answering to the one conglomerate.

In the early days, it wasn't really in Camp Hero, yet. At that point it was actually subdivided within two places—one place was a local university that has a medical facility within it; and the other facility was a national laboratory that was here on the island.

Once again, this is hearsay, because I think it's really important when people are reading this type of thing, or when people are doing research into this type of thing, to always verify the pedigree of information.

I have been "told" by Preston Nichols that, at one point, a Senate subcommittee had gotten wind of some of the experimentation that had been going on, and had started to be concerned as to their ethics, and decided to have an investigative oversight committee developed. And what they decided, at that point was, that would really cause a problem, so they decided to say, "We just pulled the funding on it, and we've ended all research along those lines. It bore no fruit for us." And, at that point, it was handed over to a purely military body, and moved out to Camp Hero and given that facility at that point.

As far as what it entails being a Delta Commander, in the early days I was, basically, just sort-of a "time empath", if you will. I had manufactured the vortices before people would go on missions, and I would also open the doors up for the way coming back. So, therefore, since I knew where the vortices were going to be, I was always handy to have around.

I went on a lot of missions. And it was decided early on that I should, really, have combat training because up until that point they were expending a lot of man-power and hours trying to keep me alive and safe. So, I became a hindrance instead of part of the team. And that's when I started my military training.

Eventually, I gained so much experience, and I had such a general, all around knowledge and training, that they decided that I would probably make a really good missions commander. So, both inside the project and in my outside life, outside of the project, I had pretty much been involved in all sorts of related training. You know, I was trained as a diver, through the project; I was also certified as a diver, outside of the project.

I was trained for, especially, "crash reconnaissance"—that was a big deal of a lot of things that we did. If extra-terrestrial craft or foreign craft of a new technology type of matter occurred, we were the guys who showed up, handled the scene—you know, the famous military, uniformed guys who drove up, close all the roads, clean-up whatever was there, and be out of there in an extremely short period of time.

Outside of the project—while I was doing this, at the same time, on the inside of the project—I had become a paramedic. I was working with a local ambulance.

I had also started to work as a fireman, and a hook-and-ladder heavy rescue team. And I was specifically trained for crash injury management, which was, of course, only given to our specific department. It was a specially developed class that completely surrounded and encompassed the field of extrication from wrecks, the management of wrecked or crashed vehicles, be it airplanes, trains, or anything else, and clean-up afterwards—stabilization and triage on the scene. Basically, I was trained to, let's say, go into a major plane crash and manage the scene. Inside, in-out, I was in continual training at all points.

I had a decent grip on a number of languages, so that kind of helped as well. By the end of my actual school years, I was moved into another program. I guess that would have to be around 1977, and this program was a "school without walls" they called it. We had to report to a facility. The one wing of the school was us, which was basically people who were considered prodigies at that point, and already had enough credits to have really graduated if they wanted to.

Martin: I'm hearing a lot of heavy, metallic clicks. [Laughter.]

Ash: Yeah, that's going to happen. [Laughter.]

Martin: [Laughter.]

Ash: You know, you get used to it after awhile.

Martin: I'm always amazed, with the technology where it is, it's almost like they want you to know.

Ash: Well, the technology really IS much better than that, and it really IS to let you know, specifically.

When I first got out, when I first officially busted-out of the project was January 4, 1994. And when I first left, I was mega, mega-paranoid for the first two weeks.

Martin: I bet.

Ash: And they took advantage of it. Black helicopters would come down. I live in the third-story of a converted mansion. One day, right after I had gone out, within the first week, a black helicopter had come down in the street, and hovered, eye-level with myself, in my bay-window. It just stood there, looked at me, and then lifted up and took off. I'd say I was a basket-case for the first week-to-two-weeks. And then, I don't know if it was just the constant martial arts, military training, and after a while I just realized that I need to be AWARE, not paranoid!

Martin: Right. Was there some particular event that caused you to leave?

Ash: Actually, it was a whole series of events. For quite some time I had become very sullen and very unhappy, probably increasingly so from the age of 13 on. And if I had gone and done the basic traditional therapy-thing like everybody else—and, for a long time I avoided a lot of stuff—then I could have said, “You know, I’ve just got to embrace every dark thing that’s ever happened in my life, to the point where it has no power over me any more. I have to just look it in the eye, go through it, and deal with it.”

And so, I really had one or two cathartic years where I did that, and at the end of that time I was like, “You know, I’ve dealt with everything dark and grand. I just don’t, really, see what it could be that’s still eating at me or bothering me; what it is. There’s just something wrong, and I don’t know what it is.”

I was in training to be a therapist at the time. I figured I’d heal others and maybe heal myself along the way, or maybe heal myself along the way and gain the insight to help heal others; not that I really believe that you can actually heal someone else, but you can be a catalyst in the process.

I was doing my internship with a Japanese physician; I will withhold his name because I haven’t asked permission before the interview.

Martin: That’s fine.

Ash: He was very revolutionary. He was licensed in Eastern medicine, as well as Western medicine. He had originally studied at the University of Tokyo and become an internist there, then came here and became an internist. He taught at Einstein University, taught at a couple of other local universities here. He was lucky enough to have a reasonably prestigious life, through serendipity, or for whatever reason the heavens intervened. He got to meet a lot of people. He (the doctor) studied Aikido with Morihei Ueshiba. We became very close and very tight, and I believe I was the only intern, at that point, that he had ever taken, and we were working together.

Now, along with the many groups of people he had met, he had met a gentleman who was an Aikido instructor as well, rather high-ranking, by the name of Kozo Nishino. Now, Nishino is both an officiating of the ballet, as well as Aikido. Nishino had come to the United States because he thought, “I’ve done all that I can, I’ve gone everywhere that I can in ballet in Japan, I’d like to come to the United States.” So, he came to the U.S. and got a position in New York, with, I guess, the New York Ballet. And in order to provide funds and money for himself he decided, “Well, I’ll teach Aikido.”

He went about trying to teach Aikido to people, who at that time—remember, now we talk about “chi” and “ki” and that sort of thing, and it’s just part of our society now. Back in the late ’60s and early ’70s, that wasn’t the case. In those days, ki was something that you needed to start your car, or something you sang in. So trying to relay the whole idea of ki, as an experience, he was really having a hard time doing it. Sort of like, as the doctor I used to work with called it, the “banana principle”. If you had never eaten a banana before and someone asked you to tell them what it tasted like, and asked for that information, it’s really something you have to experience.

So what Nishino did was, he worked through a number of different disciplines and he came up with this technique which were comprised of 6 basic movements, and out of those 6 basic movements, as you do them, if you do them correctly, you have this incredible rush of energy just go through your body. I mean, the first time you do it! If you’ve never done it before and someone says “Ok, do this” and you do it, it’s such an incredible experience.

And then Nishino would go: “That’s ki.” And he was also doing some research into the works of Alexander Lowen. Alexander Lowen was the gentleman who brought, first, to the United States the whole idea of body language. He also came up with a technique for relaxation that had to do with first tensing an area, and then letting go of it.

And so, this particular doctor that I was working with had wondered, decided if, maybe this would not only break through but it might loosen-up ingrained body memories, and that sort of thing, and so he had been using it with patients for quite some time, which was really quite revolutionary for a psychiatrist to be doing—trying to wean people off of medication, as opposed to just putting them on it. And he was rather successful at it.

He also found, in his practice, if he told this to people, that it would advance the speed of their recovery, because they would stay so much more centered, they could challenge so much more. It leads you to very profound hum and peace, but it also breaks through a lot of energetic barriers.

He was a strong believer that if you are going to teach something, that you should go through it. And so, if I was going to utilize this in my practice, I was going to have to learn to do it, and I was going to do it with everybody else.

And after practicing it for quite some time, I started to have really, really profound effects. I told him about it, and he said: “If it happens, it happens. Don’t try to develop that.”

I was listening to music one day while I was doing a particular technique, and every time I would do a specific movement and I would move my arms up and in front of the stereo—I was still away from it, 6 or 7 feet—the CD would skip. And I tried jumping up and down. I thought “You know, it must be something else.” I cleaned the CD off. And it didn’t skip at the same spot. It would only skip whenever I was making a pass with that particular technique and movement.

So this kept going on. And the effects became more and more profound, and I felt that something was stirring inside and something was happening.

Finally, one morning—I had some vacation time from an engineering contract that I had at the time—I did the techniques and I sat down and felt very relaxed and very calm and very clear, and I put on the television. And there, on the television, was an old 1970s-like documentary. I believe the background narration was Leonard Nimoy, and they were talking about the Philadelphia Experiment, which I had basically heard nothing about at the time.

And here they were, they were giving a video tour of the Eldridge, and as they were walking down I realized “Wow, I know this ship. This is really strange.” And as they would walk down the hall, I knew the galley’s on this side, and he goes “This is the galley” and it was right where I said it was. And then, a little bit farther down there was this other part.

So, all of a sudden, I started to remember things and I became very upset and very disconcerted. I tried to calm myself. I did. I got myself centered, and I called a good friend of mine.

Now, this friend of mine has been looking into UFOs and ET stuff for a long time, and I, basically, always brushed him off at that point, which I later found was part of my training. But I approached him and I said “You told me that you had met a guy who sounded really familiar to someone that I had described” to him, years and years earlier, which was Preston Nichols. And he said, “Yeah”. And he showed me one of the Montauk books. Now, to this day I have not read any of them, and I haven’t read them for specific reasons. So much of this stuff is so enigmatic, and sometimes even I question myself, which is, I think, always a good thing to do. Not to the point where it makes you indecisive, or unable to move forward, but you have to be as unbiased as you can be or you lose flexibility. You have to be able to say “Hey, maybe I’m wrong.”

So, the books have helped me so much, as in the early days I would talk to Preston and I would tell him things, and sometimes he would go: “Oh, yeah, this is in the book, page whatever.” And he would show me that point in the book. Now, he showed me a number of pictures, and he would cover the bottom, and he showed me the pictures of this one gentleman and he said “Is this Preston Nichols?”

And I said “No, it’s not Preston Nichols.” And he goes “Well, who do you think it is?” And I gave him a name. And the name I gave him was different than the name on the picture. Now, I won’t say the name because I’m not sure, this is another researcher in the field, and I’m not sure if he’s just speaking pseudonominously, or how his name came about. So, I let it go at that point.

And he kept going through the books and he’s saying “Is it this person?”

And I'm saying "No, not him either." And then he turned the page and I said "That's him; that's Preston Nichols." And that was Preston Nichols.

So this really upset me, at that point, that I should really be this specific and know this much. While at a local lecture, this friend of mine had gotten a telephone number from this gentleman, Preston Nichols. And I said "I've got to call him and to talk to him about this." And so, from my friend's house I called up, got Preston on the phone. I talked to him a little bit. We had met, outside of the project, quite a few years earlier, and then immediately broke all contact with each other. And Preston said "Maybe you should come over as soon as possible."

I said "Well, I'll come over now."

He said "I'll give you directions."

I said "You know what, I think I know where you live. Let me try first, and if I can't figure out where you live, I'll call you back. I have your number." And he said "Ok."

I went out, drove for a little bit, made a couple of turns, and then turned around and went back here and there, drove up in front of this small house. At this point it's around 2:30 in the morning, and I figure "Well, hopefully, I'm going to knock on this door and somebody's just going to be really ticked-off, and throw me out, or threaten to call the cops, or whatever."

So, I knock on the door, and the door opens up, and it's Preston Nichols.

At that point, my denial had pretty much been shattered and fallen apart. And that's the beginning of my getting out. Then it went on from there to a number of really eclectic people who helped me stay pretty much out on this side of the project for awhile, until I could get my feelings, so to speak, a little stronger and I could keep myself going and stay out; keep my nose clean for some time.

Eventually I had a therapeutic practice, at that point, and I started to—as I spoke, here and there, about the island and about the country—I started to draw to my practice a lot of people who were involved in the project, one way or another. And that gave me the ability to double-blind a lot of information, especially since a lot of my patients come from other therapists. You know, they sort-of shop people out—they go "I've ran across something, and I really wanted to know if you'd come down and maybe see this person and tell me what you think." And so, I got exposure to a lot of clientele who didn't have knowledge of each other, and I was able to cross-check their information and started to find congruent things that were going on that not only went along with things that I had experienced, which validated a lot for me, but also gave me the ability to validate a lot of things that they thought were just crazy, prior.

You know: "This has been happening to me, and I think maybe I'm just crazy" but the same experience had happened to maybe five or six other people. And I was able to relate, not the people, but the fact that it was a lot more common than they might think, and that maybe they were not altogether crazy. So that's how we got out.

Martin: I am always conflicted when I look at prepared questions, versus just going with the conversation. Let me steer it back to the time issue. I presume you actually experienced travel through time, through the use of the Montauk chair?

Ash: Actually, the chair itself was not designed as a travel medium. It was designed as an interface for human consciousness to be utilized to develop vortices that would manifest within the Delta-T antenna. That would be the travel point.

Martin: This is what I'm looking for. The Delta-T was one of my questions. Can you explain that a little more, in detail?

Ash: I'm not as great a "techie" as Preston is, by any means. That's certainly Preston's forté, but to the best of my ability—I apologize—how it was explained to me is that it is a triaxial antenna.

Martin: Ok, let's say you're talking to a 75-year-old woman, with no technical background, who finds the concept of time travel something that Rod Serling would have created in his dreams. Just speaking to the lay person, not necessarily technical electronic stuff, but just conceptually, how did this thing work?

Ash: Basically, it works like this. First, I'll speak a little bit about the actual mechanics of the Delta-T, and then I'll speak about the mechanization of time itself.

The Delta-T itself is a structure. It has 8 sides. It would almost look like a pyramid on top of another pyramid, joined at the bases.

Within the structure, a number of magnetic fields, very strong magnetic fields, are pulsed on and off, at varying rates, and at varied times. Now, each of these are put in opposition to each other, just like if you were to take two similar poles of a magnet and you push them toward each other there's a repulsion. What would happen is, in these particular fields, put the central focal point—and since there was no venue for them to move outward, they would start to push inwards. And so they would create an artificial, gravitational bend. Alright? Now, we'll leave that idea, for the moment.

Time itself is not at all in the air. We experience time that way, and I'll get a little more into that in a moment. Time itself is actually more like a tensile bubble. Every moment, and every potential moment, is like a dot on the surface of that balloon, or bubble.

Now, what happens is, we tend to think that time is a constant stream and it goes in one direction. What's really occurring, and what's really going on, is that we are jumping, our consciousness—which doesn't have, really, a fixation with distance or coordinates—jumps from chosen instant to chosen instant, in a series.

For instance, let's say you go into a deli and you can have chicken salad, cucumber salad, or potato salad. Ok? And you go in. All three possibilities are in existence on that bubble. But you, as a consciousness, will probably only poke on one of those, and then structure that in a chain of events for yourself—much like the idea of a motion picture, where you have a number of frames and one is slightly different from the other, and when you see them at a certain rate or frequency, it has the appearance, or illusion, of movement. That's what we do. We pick and choose our frames, one after the other.

So, the fact is, time does not pass. Time doesn't move. Time is a stasis. We move, and that's our perception of time happening. Time doesn't move, we move our consciousness.

Basically, within this tensile bubble, if you wanted to go from one specific point, which is both a coordinate of time and of space, to another one that was on the distant shore, so to speak, or on the other side of the bubble, how could you do that? Well, certainly you could weave your way around to the other side, but you have to go through a whole bunch of other things which you have to plug into your movie.

What if you wanted to go back to another part of your movie, or someone else's part of their movie, or what if you wanted to go just to some place completely different—let's say a different, distant place, and you didn't want to go through, like I said, all of those other frames, which would make for a very, very long movie, maybe more than you have film for?

Well, what we would do is—if you can imagine one finger on the one dot, and one finger on the dot on the opposite side of the balloon—now, they seem very far away, but if you push your fingers together, caving in the sides of that balloon until your fingers touch, the distance is only the gap between your two fingers, which is, literally, an instant. That's basically what we were doing, both for time travel and for spatial travel.

The Delta-T was not just used to travel through time, it was also used to travel through distance. How do you, theoretically, get to some place like Rigel, which is quite a few light years away? You could use the Delta-T, and you could fold time and space. So they have an idea, a little bit, about how time really is structured and how we're structured.

There are a number of problems with time travel. Certainly everyone could see this would be a great idea, you could do all of these things, and you could do this and this and this. Every time you go back, you change the film and the order and sequence of the film, not only for yourself but for quite a few people; sometimes it's inadvantageous. Sometimes what you change creates a whole chain-reaction of things that puts you worse off, or no closer, than what you originally did. And sometimes, to accomplish one simple act, it might take 20 or 30 specific missions. You'd either go back and correct things, or stop things, or you know, intervene with yourself before you go—it could get really difficult.

A number of interesting things did happen, and this also shines a bit on our consciousness, how our consciousness is structured, which I think is an important thing to get across. Future time travel didn't seem to work out well, ever, because of the structure of our consciousness.

Now, we can think back, and if you think back, you close your eyes, at a specific moment in your life—maybe it's your graduation day from high school, any given day, your wedding day, whatever, and you pick a day and a time—it seems easy to access that by your consciousness, because your consciousness is so structured that it allows you to do that, it allows you to revisit that perception because it doesn't necessarily interfere with the present.

Now with the future, what happens is—our perception, or an idea of what the future is—let's say we, you and I, can get access to the Delta-T and we were to factor vortices for a month from now. Now, you and I really couldn't walk in and do that, for all intents and purposes, but the people who can, the people in power, the "they" who everyone often speaks about—if they decide to do that, why wouldn't they just do that and get all the stock market stuff, come back, and just have the perfect stock market plan?

Let's say they did that, they go ahead and they do that, and then they come back and they start to buy up this and that and the other thing, in anticipation for this market swing. What literally happens is, by them buying and shifting their finances around—

Martin: It changes things.

Ash: They've changed the final outcome, exactly. So, our consciousness sort of snubs us from being effective. Most of the future time travel, at least that I was privy to—I don't know, since I've gotten out of the project, if they've advanced or done anything else—but when I was in the project, any future time travel always resulted in this sort-of failed operation.

Martin: There are three specific future dates that I have questions on, concerning this project. And, the way I have these sequenced is:

What is the significance of the Shumann frequency, and what is the significance of August 12, 2003?

Ash: I'm not really sure, and that's being quite frank. I know that there was an interesting anomaly that occurred. On this tensile bubble that I told you about, there's sort-of a void, where there's nothing. There's like a blob, a black spot, so to speak. What had happened was, originally, from the year 2000-2010, we couldn't get in there at all; no matter what we tried, we just could not get in. As with any good megalomaniac, the way to get them to try really hard at something is to tell them that they can't.

Martin: [Laughter.]

Ash: And so, all efforts really went into piercing this period, and they did. But then an interesting thing happened. From the year 2011 to 2021—

Martin: 2021 was my next question.

Ash: Yeah, we could no longer get into. We could get into a prior. So what seemed to happen was just like, if you put a drop of oil in water and you put your finger on it, it just moves to another spot on the surface of the water. That's what happened with this void. We haven't been able to get into it. To the best of my knowledge when I left, they had no idea what it was about.

My personal opinion, from my experiences with the time sea, and working within this time bubble, and outside the normal, human constraints, so to speak, that most people affix themselves under, this time bubble is of artificial manufacture. The project created it.

Time, as we know it now, we experience because of this artificial situation. Time was nothing like this before. Our concept of time was nothing like this before. The restrictions that time had was nothing like this. After the project, this has been altered permanently, in both directions—future, past, present, and absolute nothing stasis.

This particular opening, I believe, is sort-of a geometric particulis—like if you get some soapy/bubble liquid and you dip the wand in the bubble stuff and then you blow on it and the bubble forms—that's why, when you're blowing in and you're adding space, you're allowing it to geometrically and exponentially expand on itself as it stresses its surface tension. That particular opening stays the same and is there.

It's also the place—if you stop blowing—that has a potential to just collapse down into and become what it was before. And, I believe, that is what that opening is. I believe that it is both the potential to go back to the regular, sort-of, God time-frame, or it's also the point of expansion, or continued movement outwards.

Martin: I was reading an interview with Alex Collier from May 1996, and in there he talks about July 2004. And he talks about something called the Union of American Republics. Does that have any meaning to you?

Ash: Not to me personally. You have to remember that the project itself, too, is a military-run project.

Martin: So it's compartmentalized.

Ash: Exactly, very heavily so.

For instance, Preston Nichols often said that there were Montauk boys, but to the best of his knowledge all the Montauk girl projects were trashed. Now, like I said before, the best way to motivate a megalomaniac is to say "You can't."

So I found it very hard to believe that Montauk women had not been utilized. And, my practice eventually displayed that that was the case. So what that particular day may or may not have meant, I really don't know. I would be wildly guessing.

Martin: The reference in the interview I was referring to had to do with there no longer being a "United States of America", but a new term for the country was the "Union of American Republics". This was just one probable reality in which the New World Order people had been ousted, and we-the-people took back America. That was one of those scenarios.

Ash: It is highly probable. And I know that a good deal of the research and the stuff that we had worked on was to move toward that whole One World/New World Order type of thing. They tried it, again and again.

Sometimes, in my honest opinion, and because pedigree is important this is strictly my opinion, I believe that some of the more radical attempts at a One World Order—for instance, the Adolf Hitler Third Reich type of thing—I think that they certainly knew that it was going to crash and fall apart. I think they did that, really, because it was so flamboyant; they did that as a main shell so that what they were REALLY up to could subtly move by, underneath, and we would actually jump onboard. After World War II, all sorts of stuff came up: NATO, the United Nations, all that kind of thing.

Martin: Everybody went to sleep.

Ash: Well, suddenly everybody went a little more to sleep. I honestly think they were asleep back then. I mean, everyone really believed, even in those days, "our government is out only for our best interest" and, you know, you really gotta do this.

Even back in those days, Walt Disney—I think the first Donald Duck film, at least the first one that I had ever seen, all black and white, Donald wasn't paying his taxes, and stuff like that, and then he realized that it was hindering our men at the war effort—and the next thing you know, Donald is paying his taxes and being a good citizen, and collecting cans for the tin drive.

Martin: [Laughter.]

Ash: Even back then the lulling had started. I believe a lot of the "cold-war construct" was, once again, to create a phantasmal enemy so that the REAL enemy could live within both our midsts.

I used to work for a major corporation. It was a pharmaceutical corporation. And, as it grew, it bought its competitors, and it incorporated them into the same production facilities. And what they would do is, they would take one brand name and they would give it to half of one of their production force; and to the other half of their production force they'd give another brand name.

Then another facility they would split up as well. And then they would have them try to out produce each other. And it became like a production war, and that's how they motivated their management and their people. But all along, they're the same company. It doesn't matter who makes more, either way it goes into the same coffer. And I think we do that even today.

Martin: Can you talk about some of the places you went? I realize you create a time vortex, you call it.

Ash: That's probably the best way to put it.

Martin: Ok. Say you create the vortex, did you choose the time periods to go to, or you were assigned a time period?

Ash: Ok, let me tell you a little about the mechanism of the chair.

Before I came online, so the speak, or became a component in the equipment, the way it was explained to me when I first came on—there were a number of people who were involved—one person sat in a chair, and their complete conscious focus, which was aided by the use of specific drugs and various mental training techniques and programming techniques, their focus was to aim their consciousness as far back into the infinite possibility of the past.

One person did this for the future.

One person did this for the present, almost like a Zen master type of "here and now".

So with those, you had three directional locks. Whenever you're going to go some place, you need a reference point. You also needed someone to focus on where and when you needed to go, or wanted to go. And one person to coordinate that and go.

You go: "Well, here are the other three tangents. That's where I want to go. So, if those three are there, and that one's there, I'll go here."

And they would film the vortices by amplifying their natural energetics, the vortices that we make, each of us. If you think about something that happened in the past, you've created a vortex within your own whole personal space, and within the quantum space around you. Now, it doesn't create too much of a disruption for people around you, but they do sense it, they do react to it, to a certain degree. By amplifying it, they literally opened up a particulis by just following what would normally occur.

There was also a large Sirian computer—not from Syria, but from Sirius; it was part of a crash-scene recovery thing. And they had called it "the rock pile". And it was, basically, photonic structure; it was, like I said, a computer. It was completely crystalline in basis, and it worked by running lines through various points—and they weren't really too sure how to use it. Vortex structure and integrity weren't always the best. You know, someone could be passing through and all of a sudden it would just collapse. We don't know where they went. I have no idea. Did they get lost in the time sea? Did they get to their point and get lost? What happened to them? I just don't know. Sometimes they would miss periods by large leaps and bounds.

When I actually came online, they realized I had certain innate capabilities, which is what they were waiting for and what they actually wanted. And when I came to fruition, they said "Good, we can use him now." They got rid of the rock pile; I took over its place, and it became a two-man operation. There was a person who held the "fix" as to where they wanted to be.

Martin: Was that Duncan Cameron?

Ash: Very often. Although there were other people; they did try to develop other people's skills, so that they could do it as well. You don't want to wrap all your eggs in one basket. Very often it didn't work. But there were one or two other people—actually, one in particular who I know of, but he doesn't lecture, and he's out of the project now and really doesn't want anything to do with public life, so I won't mention his name.

Martin: As a side-bar, how's he coping?

Ash: Very well. A lot of the people who I've worked with, or who have pulled into kind-of our tight circle of friends and comrades, are doing very well. They're adjusting very well—no more lost time, no more aberrations, no new marks on the body, many of the other things.

A lot of them had repressed trauma that they couldn't deal with; they found the ability to tap into and to reclaim those memories and the charges involved with them, and to just process them and to let them go, naturally, much like any veteran would after spending their time at war.

But, once again—

Martin: Let's go back to the chair.

Ash: So, what had happened was, Duncan would pick a fix or a point where we wanted to go. I, basically, launched myself into the center of the time sea, which is the middle of that bubble, and then I would scan through the surface of that bubble and match the point where he was focusing or experiencing.

Martin: That's amazing.

Ash: And then I would target it, and then they would form the vortices around that.

Martin: Now, before I ask you to talk about a journey, how would they bring people BACK with any accuracy? That just must have been incredibly difficult.

Ash: Well, usually they would use the same person in order to pick a time stream, or a fragment of someone's movie, as we spoke before. I'll give you an idea of how that works.

Have you ever been driving and a song comes on the radio and you remember the summer of, whatever, what you were doing, what it felt like and smelled like and who your friends were, you were there, you went back? They would, sort-of, do that with someone who had a specific memory of a time period.

Now, sometimes, let's say you wanted to go back several hundred years, or several thousand years. How would you do that? Right? Well, they would find people who were genetically linked, through bloodlines, to people who were existing and around at that point, and they would use genetic or race memory.

Martin: Amazing.

Ash: And gene code, in order to gain access to that "witness", so to speak.

Martin: Incredible.

Ash: And Duncan was really good at that. Duncan would just scan through, get their "lock", where they wanted to be, and he would hold that, and the equipment would amplify it. It would be broadcast to my chair, and I would just go at that point.

Martin: Can you describe a journey or two?

Ash: The actual journeys themselves are much different than the experience in the chair. The experience in the chair was one thing, much like I just explained.

The journeys?

One, in particular, we had gone back 4 days before the Tet Offensive, in Vietnam. And, in the original "stream", as it existed up to the point when we decided to go on that mission, we had taken an absolute trashing, almost completely wiped-out. So, we had gone back 4 days prior, and at that point we had contacted, or had been brought into contact with, a high-ranking officer who was around and in a major command position at the point of the Tet Offensive. We had found out specific information that he, and only he, would have known, at that point. I wasn't privy to whatever that information was.

At that point, I was just a young kid who went along. Remember when I told you, in the beginning, how I wasn't really too much of a military presence? I was more just a guy who made the door and knew where the door was going to open up.

We got a witness from someone who was around and near him [the high-ranking military officer] at that point. We inserted ourselves 4 days before, contacted him, back then, told him that we have information; we can't tell you how we got it, but we've been told, specifically, that you need to know this and you need to follow this; and to prove it, we have this specific information about you so you know we're on the up-and-up. They took care of whatever it was that they had to tell him. I just sat outside. You know, it was hot.

Martin: Must have been a mind-blower.

Ash: Yeah, it was a trip. And the odd thing, too, was, at the point of the Tet Offensive, I was just a little kid. In fact, my older brother was in Vietnam at the time. So, here I am, thinking, I'm probably close to the same age as my older brother now, at the same time—but he was nowhere near where we were. We passed the information off.

Four days later, I knew where the point was going to be, because I created the vortices. I knew where and when and what it felt like. You ever have a feeling of déjà-vu? I was looking for the déjà-vu, so to speak, and I knew where it was going to be. And I was able to lead them back to when the vortices did open, and we were able to come back. And we would always make two vortices, before I traveled, at least—one to go, and one to come back, so that we would know where both were.

Martin: Now, is there any way to know what impact that information to that military officer had, historically?

Ash: I know that, while we did lose some people, and we did take a little bit of a whipping, so to speak—although, I guess, if you had lived through it, because I was back before it actually hit—it was not NEARLY as severe as we had originally experienced, and our losses were not nearly as bad.

Martin: So, that was a successful mission?

Ash: Yeah, it sounds like a really good and nice thing to do, unless, of course, you're Vietnamese—or if you happen to be Viet Cong, 'cause from their point of view that was a really crummy thing to do. So, it's a matter of perspective.

Martin: But, from where you were sitting?

Ash: That was like a good idea.

Martin: Sounds like a good idea. Did you go back, by any chance, to the time of Christ.

Ash: [Pause]

Martin: I'm sure you must have.

Ash: Yes, I was involved in a specific mission to do that, although I choose not to disclose any information about that at this time, simply for the reason that I honestly believe that a lot of the things that Christ wanted to put about, he put about in full knowing of how, generationally, it would change.

And, I believe that a lot of the structure of free will, and a lot of the continued questioning and soul-searching that a lot of people do, they do because they don't have a definitive reference.

So, that's about all that I would really like to say about it because, otherwise, it could really tend to put me up as, like, a guru for a lot of people. And a lot of people—I've found, while lecturing and "out there"—are more than willing to put me in that position: "You were there; you knew what he was like; what did he really mean?" That's a pretty heavy load. I'm not taking that one on.

Martin: Obviously the experience had an impact on you.

Ash: Yeah, it did. And on everyone involved.

Martin: I'm sure. How could it not? Ok, we'll just leave that.

Ash: In one of Preston's books there was reference made to it, and some of it was close and on the mark, and some of it was a little off. I also tend to not speak about that too much for a very specific reason, and that being—all my other memories, and all the other instruction and information I've gained which I've released to the public, so far, has been stuff that I've been able to double-blind through, producing and speaking openly about it and having people come up and be able to verify it for me, before I make a bold public statement.

I've used Preston's books, with the help of Preston, to do a lot of validation for myself. I'd tell him things, and like I said earlier in the interview, he would go: "Yeah, yeah, it's here in this book" and I would read little bits of the book that he would show me right then and there, just for verification purposes.

That particular chapter I did read, well ahead of time, and while reading it, started to remember. And so, therefore, I cannot say for sure, from a purely scientific point of view, that that information also I might have seeded by reading that.

Martin: Right, that's reasonable.

Ash: Therefore, for the sake of—for the people who are out there reading this, I really want them to know that I can't validate that that just wasn't seeded information.

Martin: That's very reasonable. Since I don't know what you experienced time-wise, and journey-wise or mission-wise, it's difficult to know what to ask; but are there any experiences, like the Tet Offensive experience, that you could share—like historical events that happened that you observed without trying to affect a change in the historical stream?

Ash: We were around for the trashing of Atlantis. We were kind-of instrumental in that.

Martin: Let's talk about that.

Ash: There was an energetic object that was in play, back then. Now, once I had come on-line, so to speak, I was a new "chip" in the Montauk computer and we were factoring vortices. We found that, every now and then, we would experience a "time wave", which is, basically, a shudder in the bubble from something energetically MAJOR happening.

Martin: And does that mean a change, or what?

Ash: Sometimes it can create a change, and sometimes it was almost just like a wave, where the surface or—if you think of time and space as being structured like this, if you think of a big cargo net, stretched really tight, and all the strands going one direction as being time, and all the strands going the other direction being space, and anything with large gravitation, will put a bend [dent or curve] in that time and space.

So, if you threw a bowling ball out there, it would make a dent. If you threw a tennis ball out there, it would make a dent, but you could hardly even notice it. That's the actual structure, the modality, so to speak, behind gravitation and how gravitation works, REALLY simply put. Sometimes when a vortex or a black hole is opened, it will cause a normal, tensile draw on the surface of that, but if something energetically goes awry, it will cause a shudder in the whole thing, which will affect gravitation, and quite a few other things—LIKE THE STRUCTURE OF REALITY ITSELF. And if you happen to be in a really synthetic, gossamer tunnel, so to speak, at the time when that hits, you can really be in for a world of problems.

And so, this was happening pretty readily, and so we decided that what we'd do is, rather than try to create a vortex, just float me out into the time sea, or the void in the middle of this time bubble, and go: "Where is this problem coming from?" And, at that point, we had realized that it was coming from a point of origin within Atlantis.

So, what we did was, we decided to produce a mission to go back, which we did. And I was really young at the time. And we decided to make ourselves more noticeable, as opposed to blending-in this time—we would usually dress in period clothes. So I, basically, went in with this big Afro and, like, this big, fluffy wad of hair. I was pretty young, a beginning mustache, and a pair of coveralls.

Martin: [Laughter.]

Ash: We used to, at least back in those days, wear one strap off and one strap on. And this military team that went with me—

Martin: [Laughter.]

Ash: —and created a vortex to go and to come back. In hopes that they would stay stable, I closed them while it was going on, and we wound up there. Now, what it turned out, there was this large, energetic device called the Tuali Stone, and it was set within a specific other device, and they were using it to manipulate weather, amongst other things, and certain natural geological problems: "Well, there's going to be, we're having earthquakes in this area, so we need to stabilize this."

It was a very powerful device, and they didn't realize that they were also shuddering and causing rifts and ripples on this tensile bubble, which was making it really difficult.

You know, if you stabilize the amount of mathematical factors that the human consciousness has to do in order to create vortices, and then make rapid changes that quickly, it becomes very precarious, especially if you manufacture it and then you're going through it, because it's not like it's that easy for you to make corrections when you're in the middle of it; there's no chair.

What we did was, we went back and I went in first, this time, and they stayed on the outside. And the deal was, if I couldn't get them to make a certain energetic adjustment to the Tuali Stone by a specific date and time before we went back, they would come in as a military team and try to flex what martial prowess they could and get me back.

I went in, and it was a really interesting political structure that was going on at the time. There was a big rift in the central governmental structure, and there was a lot of ET involvement at that point.

Martin: Which types?

Ash: Primarily, at that point, the ones that I knew of were the Draco and the Sirians. There were others; I just didn't run into them or information that they were on or about.

There was sort of a grassroots "We're native, and we don't need their technology" naturalist-type-of front that was going on: "You know what? If there's an earthquake, or if we're going to have a tornado, we'll have a tornado, we'll have an earthquake, big deal. We've been doing fine before. That's how our planet balances itself."

And then there was the other group who said: "Yeah, why should we have natural disasters? We could have this" and so on and so forth.

So it became apparent that the Tuali Stone was not necessarily native, or if it was native, the technology to manufacture it and its control devices were not.

What I had to do was, I had to become public real fast and get in touch with who I could, within the public range and say: "Look, I'm from the future. We're having these problems. We're going to make corrections. You need to make corrections here or there's going to be a major disaster."

It was sort of an emotional coup-thing that went on, with one of the chiefs-of-state's wife, who was actually the person who made the energetic correction to the device. She had been kind-of taken with me. I was going back. It wasn't reciprocated, but she was, and it created a jealousy triangle thing. So, no matter what I said, as far as he was concerned it was wrong. Her job—she was a "techie"; she was all for ET intervention. He was one of these grassroots kind of guys. And it balanced out. They respected each other's points.

From my point of view, you needed to make this correction, and she saw that this was going to be necessary. And, I managed to get the ruling council, at that point, to agree that that's what they were going to do. And so, they were going to alter this device within a certain tangent, a certain amount of degrees.

And so what happened, before its activation, he decided that "No, it should stay just the way it is." And he went and he brought it back a certain amount of degrees, so that when they did put the correction in, it would be right where it was to begin with. That's what happened—we put in the correction, which really didn't accomplish anything at all. "Thanks. Bye to everyone. So long."

We came back to regular time-stream for us, as we had experienced it as an origin point. And the next point we decided that we were going to just put this—basically, turn up the jets, stomp on the gas, and let's go. And that's what we did. And it basically did-in Atlantis.

Martin: And you could almost trace the whole thing back to a basic jealousy.

Ash: Yes.

Martin: Amazing.

Ash: And then it gets really kind-of heavy, too, when you're out lecturing and people who are very New Age and you tell them "Well, I'm the one who trashed it."

And a lot of them really have very solid connections there, you know: "I was a high priest in the temple" and then it got destroyed.

Martin: Everybody was a high priest.

Ash: It's like "Thanks a lot." So sorry; federal apologies to the world that was.

Martin: I read something, also, in one of these interviews with Al Bielek, about the year 6069.

Ash: One thing does particularly, amongst others—remember, I told you before that travel into the future, specifically, really didn't work too well for us? We did continue to do it on a number of missions. And the reason that we did it was to expand the size of the time-bubble.

Now, remember, they basically were setting up a structure and a rule, and they had control, so to speak, over this synthetic time and space—set aside from God's view of, and variation of, time and space. Basically, they created their place outside of "the Eden". I guess the best way to liken their philosophy is: "Better to rule in your time bubble, then to serve in Heaven." And that's basically what they did. They were just—they would go into the future with the sole purpose of expanding their territory, and that particular date was one of the dates that was targeted to move forward, to push the envelope bigger.

Martin: Were you working directly with ETs?

Ash: Yes.

Martin: And which group were you working with?

Ash: Up until about the age of 13, I had some exposure to the Draco, although after that very little whatsoever. Also, I'm presently working on a book on this particular subject, and that will be coming out, hopefully, soon, as soon as I get a publisher.

I had some involvement with the Rigelians, the Betelgeusians, some off-time Sirians, and on rare occasions, Zeta-Reticulan Greys, some Pleiadians, and one or two Andromedans.

Martin: Did you find the Pleiadians and the Andromedans significantly different than the others?

Ash: Most of the “Pleiadians” that I had come in contact with were not necessarily—remember, this is a military base. And those involved there were not there for the best interests of anyone at large, except for themselves. A lot of the “Pleiadians” I had come in contact with were actually human, who were basically, long ago, their family lines seeded with Pleiadian genetics, and through cross-generational breeding and inter-breeding, they tried to polish them back to as close as they could to actual Pleiadians. So, they weren’t really from the Pleiades Pleiadians, as they’ve been reported by some of the other researchers who have been out there.

The Andromedans were from Andromeda. They’re very close to us, at least this particular race. Remember, Andromeda is a galaxy; it’s not a star system, so there’s a plethora of races there. But the ones who I came in contact with, basically, were much like us. They’re very neutral. And they had, literally, inserted themselves under the guise of being human, specifically to the point to get involved, and if the natural checks and balances of free will were threatened, their job was to take a strike, so to speak, at the project—a toggle into the works.

Martin: Well, early on with the level of—I’ll just call it torture and mind control of—the young boys at Montauk, doesn’t that cross over the line of interfering with free will?

Ash: Not necessarily. We’re not talking about individual free will. You have to take into account that the Andromedans are extremely neutral. They really are extremely neutral. They’re more along the archetype of Star Trek’s “Spock” than even Leonard Nimoy could ever get close to. To them, the interference of free will would be the set-up of either structure or device that, as a whole, would wipe out the ability of the native consciousness to function on its own behalf any longer.

Martin: Wouldn’t that be, in part, what HAARP is doing, and projects like it?

Ash: Not altogether. Even the early mind-control experiments were doing—or even the later stuff, which was much, much, much more advanced, basically they found—and this is an interesting thing—is that natural balance, so to speak, and that damn free-will thing.

Let’s say they broadcast a concept like: “Peck on the ground like a bird.” Well, 33 1/3 percent of the people who are alive, sentiently, would say: “Hey, I don’t know why, but I’m going to peck on the ground like a bird.”

They’d go along with it. About 33 1/3 of the consciousness would say “No!” and would do the absolute opposite. You know, those naturally defiant people, much like the megalomaniacs—thank God for megalomaniacs, sometimes. And the other third were on the fence, going: “Should I? But they’re doing it. It’s stupid.”

And so, a good deal of the mind-control stuff that was put out was, basically, to target that on-the-fence third, especially. And the fact that there still is free will in the world, I mean, they’d like you not to believe it, but there really still is.

I mean, magazines and newspapers like The SPECTRUM still exist; I’m still out talking, when they’d certainly rather have me in a chair somewhere. So, free will really does exist. In fact, the project is probably the greatest monument to human free will that you could possibly imagine. For all the plotting, for all the intricate devices, for all of the manpower, all of this striving, all of the technology—they still can’t make everyone choose the egg salad in that deli!

Martin: Right.

Ash: As much as they would like to. So that’s actually the better way to go. As I told you, there’s tons of problems with time travel. If you go back, you might have to do 20 or 40 missions to get one simple thing straight—one simple thing straight.

You know, you go back and you’ve got to save some scientist in a project because he’s going to be really crucial, but you find out that something happens and he gets killed. So you go back two weeks before it happens and you try to stop him from being in front of that bus and reading that newspaper, so you push him out of the way and he falls in front of another car. Now you have to go back on another mission to stop you from pushing him, and you pull him back and something else happens. You fall and get killed, and you’re dead, two weeks before you get to go, so, all of a sudden you can’t go anymore, and he still goes in front of that car. It’s really a nightmare to do.

Remember how I said, as a group and as an individuals, we all pick those little dots on the bubble? If you really want to rule the world, instead of doing all this time-travel stuff, what if you could just get everyone to do what you wanted to do, structure reality the way you want to? Because reality is a group experience for us. We put all of our little bits of self together, and we play it as a symphony and we go: “This is our reality.”

Martin: Did you ever have any experiences with the vortices or with your journeys where you felt like there was Divine intervention to STOP you?

Ash: All the time. All the time.

I honestly have to sit back and say, looking back in retrospect, the things that we did do turned out for the best, either way. Even if we chose to go back and do something nefarious, it seemed to work out, in the long run. The things that we went back to do and were unsuccessful, that tended to work out just as well. So, I honestly think there was Divine intervention all along—period.

Martin: What would your definition of a nefarious mission be?

Ash: Probably all of them. Because I think nefarious really has to do with intent. And the intent was never—think when we went back as far as the Tet Offensive, they really didn’t care that they were saving American GIs. They just wanted a specific structure and specific people to potentially not die, one or two people. That was because they were going to use them for their own purposes otherwise. The rest could have died; they just wouldn’t care.

I mean, we lost Pearl Harbor, savagely, to the best of my knowledge, unless some other team went back and manufactured a vortex, as opposed to when I was in the project. We didn’t bother to do anything at all about that. I mean, that’s as nefarious as going, if you had the ability to go back and stop it. You wouldn’t even have to have killed all of the Japanese that came over. You would have just had to go: “Get all the boats out of there. Don’t be there that day.”

Martin: How would you go back to an area and not stand out like a sore thumb? Would you dress, get local clothes?

Ash: Yes. There were a number of ways to do that; of course, you would dress in period. But then there’s the stature problem. I was at the Louvre quite a few years ago, and while I was there I managed to see the stately, Henry II’s body-armor, body-armor that he wore in battle. Now, Henry was purported to be of great stature, and I’m standing there looking at the armor, and I’m thinking maybe I’m really far away but it looks to me like Henry II couldn’t have been more than 5’ 2”.

Martin: [Laughter.]

Ash: People were smaller back then, for the most part. If you go back to England, it’s very common for a house to be older than our country. You’ll notice that you can reach up and touch second story windows. If you’re in Canterbury, there are doors that you have to duck to go in.

These people were tiny, so how do you not look like Goliath? Well, there are a number of ways. Certain members of the project, some of those who were gifted, had the ability to morph, or change their physical outer appearance.

Martin: Shape-shifters?

Ash: Exactly. Now, everyone has the potential to do it. And they’ve been developing a technique here for use with people.

I’m not going to get too much into that right now, but based on some of the principles behind that, there are physical cells that are congealed around the matrix of our consciousness, ok? And what they would literally do was, they would refocus an individual's consciousness so that they would, literally, morph, or change.

Another method that they would use is, they would use psionic generators, which are like a phantasmal image device where you would wear this device and you would go, and as you were speaking to people, you would basically be speaking in English, but they would hear it in their own language, and they would see you much as the same stature, and wearing the same evolvment of clothing that they would normally wear—which made it much, much easier.

Martin: Now that's high-tech!

Ash: Compared to some of the stuff that was actually at the project, it's not terribly high-tech at all!

Martin: Sounds high-tech from where I sit; as just an average person, it sounds high-tech.

Ash: And it's meant to be that way. I mean, we all know, when we buy our next computer, that four generations are already in the waiting. They had Windows 2000 long before 2000 ever came. They've had all the plug-ins and other stuff long before we needed them, as well. And that's just pretty much it. You look at the Shuttle and you go: "You've got to be kidding me."

Martin: Well, yeah, it's pretty archaic.

Ash: It's pretty much a bottle-rocket with people strapped to it. So that's how we would go back and not necessarily be recognized, two of the methods. Some we really didn't need to bother that much, you go back—I mean, World War II, you tended to be a little bit taller than a lot of the people there, but for the most part you're just one of those tall yanks, you know. There were people who were pretty big in those days.

Martin: Now, would you be taking orders directly from the Dracos? Or yours was strictly military, would you take orders from military personnel?

Ash: It was a chain of command. We would be debriefed. We would be ordered to do whatever it was you were going to do. After the age of 13 they basically kept the Dracos away from me. There was an energetic exchange that went on—not really exchange—I almost killed one, and after that point there was like a harnessing device put in to try to keep me from being able to continue to do that. And they just felt that, at that point, there's not that big of a presence at the Camp that I would need to be exposed to, so let's not have them around him.

Sometimes we would be briefed on stuff by various ET groups, but our normal stuff would come down through the unit chain of command. It's not like we have this Rigelian captain who travels with us. They might say: "Alright, we're going to go here and we're going to do this specific thing. There's this ship that they need recovered, and they're going to tell you how to do this when you get in the ship, and do that sort of thing, and you gotta shut this down, and you'll have to implement this patch" and stuff like that.

Martin: I'm just reading over my notes here. It just sounds so far out for the average person to wrap their mind around; it's just so amazing. Was there any connection or link between Area 51 or China Lake and Montauk?

Ash: Yeah. In my experience, or at least the way it always seemed to me, many of these places were all basically hooked-up together. And they all seemed to basically answer to Montauk. Now, certainly Area 51 had its own thing and it had its own compartmentalization, but those who were above the compartmentalization, where they actually coordinated all of that compartmentalized information and technology together, answer to Montauk. And there were a number of times where some of our techies, or sometimes even we ourselves, wound up in Groom Lake.

Martin: Really? That's interesting.

Ash: Still there? Or did I lose you?

Martin: No, I'm still here.

Ash: All of a sudden I heard some loud clicks. Did you hear them?

Martin: Yes.

Ash: Then you were kind-of silent, so I thought, ah, they just disconnected me.

Martin: Let's talk about the New World Order and the ones behind it, a little bit. What does their probable future look like from what you've experienced?

Ash: Well, there's a multiplicity of probable futures; people don't realize this.

If you go into the deli that we talked about earlier in a number of instances, and you go in that day and you order the chicken salad, you could, literally, start a whole chain of events. The fact that you ordered the chicken salad, the world is a little bit different, just because you did that. If you had picked cucumber salad, that group consciousness that forms that reality, on a moment-to-moment basis, is a little bit different; so we're all, certainly, co-creators.

They seem to be working on helping us, or nurturing us, to abdicate that propensity from a lot of the mass mind-control stuff that they're playing with, to at least get enough of, or a percentage of that "hundredth monkey", if you will, to buy into their whole point of view and their whole ideal.

So it's kind of enigmatic as to whether or not, or what they're future is going to be like. Do they ever really do it? Don't they ever do it? You've got a whole lot of technology, and a whole lot of help, and a whole lot of resources on their point, and they still haven't done it. I mean, they tend to whittle away, and we tend to give up a little more every day, but if they could rule the world, I honestly believe they would be.

And some people will tell you that they are, that the boundaries between countries don't really exist.

I, personally, it's my honest belief that no matter who you vote for—it's like, I used to be a card-sharp and a gambler, to a certain degree, but I would go to Atlantic City and I'd never bet on computer machines. How do you know that this is your hand in computer black-jack. That computer can, literally, make any card it wants come up. Does any of our voting really amount to anything? Does it?

Martin: I don't believe so.

Ash: I don't believe so, either, but I vote all the time. Why? Because, by my voting, it means that they still have to, at least, put on the façade. They have to put on the pompenstance, the false face that they still have to answer to me. Ok? And it might seem like a false face, and you go: "Well, how does that help at all?" Well, the fact that they have to do it at all shows that we, as a people, as a race, still have enough personal authority and personal power that we have to be recognized and we have to be placated. That, in itself, is an affirmation that free will still exists, to me.

You know, I vote because it's my right to do it, and by my doing it they have to admit to the fact that "we still gotta listen, to a certain degree, to these people." And that's an affirmation that reminds them, too, that they don't rule absolutely.

Martin: Has there been any retaliation against you, at all, for speaking out?

Ash: Oh, yeah.

Martin: In what ways?

Ash: Not so much, lately, but I haven't been as boisterous lately. We'll see what happens when the book comes out, or if my tape sales go way up again, or my new tape series comes out, when that comes out, what's going to happen there.

But as far as retaliation goes, when I first got out, the first year, like I said, immediately the black helicopter came down. I used to go to the beach in the winter. I went to the beach one winter, a local beach here, which happens to be a beach right on the shore of where they shot down TWA Flight 800—oh, I'm sorry, where Flight 800 crashed. Did I say shot? And I was on the beach, and three black helicopters, triangular formation, came in and I'm just sitting on the beach, writing in my journal, they came down so far, and so close to the beach that I was, literally, being sand-blasted and had hundreds of little cuts from sand hitting my body from the prop wash. That happened within the first month or so.

I did my first major lecture series, where I was going to do a four-part lecture over the course of two months. In the midst of that, by the last lecture of that series, right after it—including all the people who supported me up to that point—immediately started a slander campaign; completely did a 180-degree turn and came around. Preston was supposed to lecture there after me. They basically told him “No, we’re not interested. No thank you, we changed our mind.”

I got a visit and was brought out to the Camp, and was told, in so many words, “You’re not going to talk anymore.” And was returned, at the end of the weekend, in such shape that I couldn’t even hold my head up by myself. I drove myself to my doctor. What I did was, I wrapped a towel around my head to keep my head up, and held it—’cause they really screwed up my neck, severely—couldn’t even speak, at that point. I went down into my car, took my weight-lifting belt and strapped my head to the back of the bucket seat so that I could drive, and drove myself to the doctor.

Immediately came home, as soon as I could speak again, I started making phone calls to arrange the next lecture series in which I would divulge even more. Because I felt that it was really important that if I was to let this be the gauge by which they would treat me and I would react positively for them, then that’s how they would deal with me every time. I felt that, for every negative thing that happens, I have to disclose twice as much or make even more engagements.

I eventually slacked-back my engagements to just a couple a year, and then, if I got problems, I would increase the frequency of where I would speak, by the public address that I would do and what I would relay at those addresses. That helped to slack a lot of it off, to a certain degree.

By the time that my second major lecture series was coming out—that’s the one that I actually have marketed on audio right now, the third lecture I was about to do, the night before, which had to do with the ET involvement and the Delta stuff that went on out there, and the actual structure and machinations of time and that sort of thing. I had been seeing a woman for quite some time, and she calls me up and it was 3:30 in the morning, and I had to be there by 9:00 to start the lecture at 11:00—I had to set up all the sound equipment and stuff. And, I had been seeing her for the good part of a year; she calls up at 3:30 and says, “Look, I just wanted to let you know, I’m breaking up with you. I can’t see you any more, but I’ll be at the lecture tomorrow.”

That kind of drop-kicked me. I didn’t get much sleep.

I woke up, and I honestly think: “Do I really want to do this. She’s going to be there. How am I going to focus?” And then I realize, I’ve got to. I have to go there; I have to focus, and I have to, really, disclose even more than I planned—just in case. And so that’s what I did.

Now, in the first two tapes, she had done all the sound recordings with this equipment. This was the third tape, and she agreed: “Well, actually I came because I also knew that you needed help with the sound equipment.” So, she operated the sound equipment and turned-off the microphone that I was using. Now, I had set up a microphone for the audience, so while the audio quality is a little bit less on the third tape of the series, we decided it was really important to keep. So I got a sound engineer to boost it up so that you could hear everything that I’m saying, and we felt that if this much of a—maybe I’m just paranoid, or maybe I was paranoid then—but I felt that if this much drive was taken to stop this particular lecture, or to potentially stop it, that it was even more important.

Now, I didn’t just jump to the conclusion, at that point, that this was the case. As time went on, over the course of the next couple of weeks, she would call: “Oh, maybe we’ll get together”—but then not do it; so I got in a funk. And I had talked to the doctor I had done my internship with, because we were still close friends—we would go out, our birthdays are one day apart, his is on the first of September, mine is on the second. So, we would get together for our birthdays, go out and have sushi, you know, just compare notes, “Hey, how are things going?”, that sort of thing.

So, I called him and said “I’m in a kind-of a funk” like you would confide in a friend.

“Hey, you should come down to the office and see me.” So I did. We hung out for a bit. And I was really doing ok with the whole thing, surprisingly so. I just ended a relationship; it has its toll on you. I went ahead to do the final tape, and then lecture series, at which point I felt like “Maybe I’m just going to retire. I’m getting really tired of this.”

I decided, apparently, not to, because I’m doing this interview now. Time went on, a number of days, and one day in particular she called me up on the phone, out of the clear blue sky. “Oh, I’m thinking about you. What are you doing?”

I said “Well, I’m going to drop some family members of mine off at a relative’s house, and I’m going to be in your area. Would you like me to stop by?”

She says “No, maybe not tonight. No, give me a call when you’re in my area.”

So that’s what I did. I gave her a call when I was in her area, and she said “No, I decided maybe it’s not a good idea we get together.” So I went home.

I always go by my gut. And I got home and my gut just told me: don’t sleep in your bed tonight; sleep in the living room on the floor.

Why? I have no idea; this is in February, ok? I lay down on the floor and put on my favorite video; I had this whole series of British science fiction, some of my favorite videos. I was watching one of these particular episodes and I drifted off to sleep.

In the middle of the night I wake up and I go: “Wow, the cat litter smells terrible!” And I go in to change the cat litter, and I yell at the cat and say “What did you eat?” And I open up the litter box and the box is pretty much empty and it doesn’t smell at all.

And I think “What is that smell?” And I hear this hissing noise, and as I turn around and look up, I realize that every one of the burners on my stove had been turned on.

Now, in order to turn them on you have to push a locking mechanism in, and then turn it counter-clockwise, that movement puts on an electrical igniter that sparks and lights the actual flame. They were all turned all the way up, and the stove itself was turned on. The stove, no matter where you set it, it will keep igniting until it’s lit, so someone literally had to blow the flames out all together, because the igniter was no longer trying to ignite them and each was turned all the way up. And the door—the upper and the broiler part of the oven—were propped open with matchbooks.

So, the first thing I did was shut the gas off, open all the windows, grab the cat, and went out for a drive for about an hour; came back, locked everything up, checked the place out, everything else seemed to be pretty ok. And I came to realize that I had spoken to this woman, just earlier in the evening, who wanted to know what I was doing. I admitted the fact that I was going to drop relatives off. So, how would this look to the general public? You know, it would be a pretty much cut-and-dried case. Here I am, I broke-up from a relationship, I'd been depressed, I'd been to go see my friend the psychiatrist and talk to him about the fact that I had just ended a relationship. Even though I was confiding, he would still have to testify: "Yes, he talked to me about it. He was a little depressed about it." Went home, throw on my favorite film after dropping my relatives off, turned all the burners on, and laid down.

Martin: Cut and dried!

Ash: Yeah, cut-and-dried suicide. But, once again, my gut told me to lay on the floor where there was a draft. And I did manage to get up when I smelled the gas. I wasn't sure what it was, because I was a little bit groggy at first. But I was eventually able to identify the scent. That's what led me to believe that she was involved.

Now, she also had told me, when we had been going out, that she was involved in the project, but she wasn't sure how or where. And all the traditional signs, for some of the women who were involved, were present with her.

So, that was the last, direct, affrontive move toward silencing me.

Martin: Do you ever worry about getting a call in the middle of the night with a series of trigger words that suddenly throw you into operational mode?

Ash: No, because I've disconnected a lot of that. And, an interesting thing: when I became hyper-aware and I started to realize things that were going on, I had a little slim-line phone that I still leave next to my bed at night, the kind that's kind of clear, and when the phone rings, little LED lights flash, and stuff like that; it looks cool and high-tech; it's really not. It's your basic, slim-line, $9.00 phone.

Certain nights I would hear a clicking or beeping noise, and I would wake up, and because the audio tracked with these little LED lights, it would be on the hook, but yet there would still be noises and clicks coming out of the phone, even though it was on the hook.

Now, as I said, I had become sort-of hyper-aware at that point, and I disconnected myself from all the primary triggers—and one of the primary ways that I disconnected myself, for those who will probably be wondering "Well, how do you just disconnect yourself?" If you actually just reconnect yourself and become totally present, you gain access to all the repressed stuff. The subconscious is your own subconscious mind. If you take the bother to look and see what you've got there, you'd be amazed what you find. And we all have access to an "Overself", so to speak. And if you actually spend some time with that and say "Hey, what's going on?" It will tell you.

Martin: Are there any parallel realities that you are aware of, that are currently negatively impacting Earth at this time?

Ash: This takes on two different venues and aspects. The first venue is, there are tons of parallels. Every time you go back—let's say, you go back because you decide that JFK has to die, ok? I've used this model when I did a lot of my lectures, so I'd like to say right here, I had nothing to do with the death of JFK. I don't know that any of this model ever actually existed, because I've gone to do lectures and people say "You know, like when you went back to kill JFK." Never did, never said I did.

Let's say you needed to go back to kill JFK, because he was going to stop the project in the future, whatever it happens to be. And you go back and you get Lee Harvey Oswald, and you say "Lee Harvey, I'm from the future; you've got to save the world, you've got to kill this guy."

And he does it, and he goes "You know what? I'm not taking the rap, because I'm going to talk about it."

When you get back, you find out he talked about it. The project is going to end anyway. Then you have to go back and get somebody to kill him. So then you get Jack Ruby to do that. And then, you come back, and Lee Harvey misses, and you have to appear and shoot from the grassy knoll. The bullet is not from that period, so then you have to go back and steal a bullet from his head. A whole series that could co-join into that great conundrum.

Let's say that all of this goes on. Every time that you go back, there is a skew reality that exists. If at each choice that we make there's a junction—an endless, varied destination—every one of those tracks to that destination, if we didn't decide to make the exchange at that junction, those other tracks still go somewhere. They still exist. How much impact do they have? I'm not really sure.

As far as, are there other parallel dimensions and realities affecting this one? I believe that we are in a sea of both positive and negative influence. The beauty of free will is, either of those, while they both can become seductive, to a certain degree, they're both kept in check to just the point where we can still say "No." If the devil really could make us do it, we wouldn't be responsible for having done anything wrong—or anything right, for that matter—so I believe that while they are there, I believe they have the ability to seduce us, not necessarily control us.

Martin: In some of the Bielek material, he talks about the ability for the time field to be manipulated. Do you think you've covered that, or can you maybe explain that a little bit more?

Ash: Ok. We've talked about the time bubble and the idea of pushing from one point. Once you get past the half-way point, it starts to attract the other point. Black holes work the same way. Now, how to create that without actually creating a black hole, because the extremity within a black hole, and the particle velocity within the black hole would suddenly reduce you to a singularity, as you were passing through the vortices. Now, how do you create a much smoother opening, sort of like piercing-in an earlobe that's healed up. How do you produce that?

Well, what they would do, they found the frequency that time basically modulates at all the time. What does that mean to the layman?

Well, we'll go back to the movie. If you look at a piece—let's say you pulled an old 8mm movie out and started looking at it, and you're just holding it up to the light and moving it across, no movement is occurring, except it looks like you're passing it between your fingers, but you don't see the pictures changing, or people jumping around, or Donald Duck, all of a sudden collecting tin for the drive, so to speak. So where does this idea of movement occur? Well, if our consciousness is opening the "shutters" of our eyes at a certain frequency, it's opening and closing at a certain speed, you have to time the speed that those frames are moving by so that it has the ILLUSION of movement and the speed of movement.

Now, we can change the speed of our consciousness at any given time, and move through time faster and slower. We're all time travelers. Maybe not in the sense that people think of when they think of the project, or H.G. Wells, but everyone moves through time. WE move. That's time. Time doesn't move.

Remember, we spoke about that double idea of consciousness, transcendence. Now, if you're a motor vehicle, time seems to take forever; whereas, if you're having a really great day and you're with wonderful people, and it's really cool, all of sudden the whole afternoon goes in the blink of an eye. Why is that? Because our frequency, at a point through joy, is moving at a different speed—our shutter is opening and closing faster—than when we are in that subdued "God, is it going to take forever or what?" state of mind. If we're in that modality, we lower our frequency, and that shutter speed opens and closes differently.

Now if reality is moving at a certain speed and we can adjust our speed, if reality exists at a certain frequency or stasis, that film—let's say that film is traveling on a reel at a certain speed—if we're adjusting the rate that we view it at, we get different effects. For instance, if you took a fan and put a strobe light on it, and turned the speed up or down, the fan would seem to go either forwards or backwards or stand still, or at different speeds.

Martin: I also read where the time tunnel at Montauk was able to go as far as 100 light-years away, to any point in the past or the future. Is that accurate?

Ash: Oh yeah, it is. Like I explained earlier, it wasn't just used for traveling back and forth through time; it was used to travel anywhere that you needed to in space as well.

Martin: Let's talk about other cultures, other civilizations in other galaxies. Were there any specific galaxies or planets targeted for any specific purpose, such as just, say, observing a higher culture at work?

Ash: No. Maybe it was, but from my experience it was the true adage of: Let's see far-off exotic lands, meet new forms of life, and kill them. You know, if they were sending us, it was basically because there was a conflict, and we were going there to rock some mayhem, so to speak. We were going either into a battle situation, or we were going to steal technology; we were always going into combat at those points. So, as far as really seeing what their culture was like and that sort of thing, I really can't say. As far as experiencing their culture out in Camp Hero—you have to remember, once again, that all of the beings who were there, including the humans, were there for a sole purpose—which was not, necessarily, what you or I or the reader might consider the betterment of mankind.

Martin: Earlier I mentioned August 12, 2003, and the note that I have here by that date is: The collapse of the planetary magnetic field and the increase of the resonate Shumann frequency. So, apparently there is something with planet Earth at that time that will be a significant shift.

Ash: Ok, from the description that you gave me, I wasn't sure of the exact date, there was speculation that had to do with the collapse or the full return to magnetic zero for the Earth. Now, this is something that happens naturally; I'm not sure of the actual frequency, but it does happen. The basic machination behind it goes something like this: At whatever frequency it does occur, the Earth will shift to a point of magnetic zero, or zero gauss, for a short period of time, and then it will climb in gauss, again, to a given rate.

It starts at a given rate, goes to zero, then returns to that same rate again, or that same gauss potential. When it goes to magnetic zero, this affects a number of things, one in particular is, an encrypted field within the magnetic bubble that surrounds the Earth—there's a natural magnetic bubble, and it's field and resonance have to do with gravitation and the mass of the Earth and that sort of thing—and this particular field you've come to know as the Akashic Record. And on the Akashic Record is longterm memory, everybody's longterm memory—anyone who is native to here and doesn't have a fix, or a tangent point outside of this particular world.

So, now, what would happen if we went to magnetic zero is, basically, you would dump that magnetic potential. Quite a few years ago, I had appeared on The Other Side with Preston Nichols, where they heavily edited everything that we said, and on the way there, just prior to going, I called him up and I said “I can't make the same plane that Preston's going on. Can you book me a day later?” Maybe its from being a military man for a long period of time, but at the time, the two major speakers that were out there were Preston Nichols and myself—Al Bielek too, but Al was more involved with the Philadelphia Experiment. He wasn't speaking a whole lot about Montauk at that point. He was doing a really good job of speaking about the Philadelphia Experiment; he's now branched out even more. But at that time, the Montauk theme was being covered totally by just the two of us. To me it just seemed like—

Martin: What a great opportunity to take out both speakers.

Ash: Yeah, I'll take another plane. Preston told me that he was approached, at the last minute, on that plane while he was in the air. Somebody knew my name from within the project.

Once again, from the readers' standpoint, this is hearsay, because I wasn't there to verify this. This is what I was told by Preston. I tended to believe Preston at the time. I see no reason not to now. But, if you're going to do science, and you're going to do pure research, you need to know this stuff when you're making your decisions and using your discernment.

This gentleman approached him and explained this whole scenario to him, and had told him, at that point, that what they had done is, they had taken large optical disks and they had recorded the Akashic Record onto those large optical disks. And they had developed a device, which they would use—it would be one of the possible uses of HAARP—to reboot the long-term memory of this planet.

Martin: Oh, wow! That's incredible.

Ash: Thus, no longer having a true anchor in the Akashic Record, while there is some record of me, for instance, in the Akashic Record, my anchor is in the time sea. If you happen to be not of human origin, yours wouldn't be here. Therefore, my longterm memory isn't going to get dumped.

So, the proposal that they made to Preston at that time was something along the lines of the possibility of me, and a number of other people—because, remember, according to him they thought, I guess it was just an oversight, they thought that I was going to be in the plane with him that day and they had arranged a seat right next to the two of us, and they were going to pass on this information to us—and the offer that, basically, if we would go down and reboot it. So Preston came to me and said “What do you think? Should we do this? What's the deal? What do you think?”

My stand, at that point, this is a natural occurrence, it happens all the time, so just let it happen. First of all, I didn't believe that their copy of what they were going to put back as our longterm memory would necessarily be without “modification”.

Martin: Right.

Ash: Secondly, I kind of thought back and I thought to myself “So, what would we forget?” We would forget that the Israelis have a problem with the Palestinians. Then we would forget that—

Martin: On and on.

Ash: Yeah, that the native Irish people in Northern Ireland had problems with the British crown, and the British crown would forget that they tried to keep a stake and claim on Northern Ireland. I said “There's a reason that this happens. It gives us a chance to sort of dump our hard-drive, and then start fresh again.”

You know, short-term memory isn't lost. Gene memory isn't lost. When we were born to nurse, who tells us that? It's certainly not our longterm memory that we're accessing on the Akashic Record that says “Suck on the breast.” We'd still remember how to go to the bathroom. And that we needed to eat. So it's not like we would become all vegetables. Yeah, technology would probably sit for a long time. And then that might not be so bad an idea either.

One of the interesting things that supposedly came up from all of this is the fact that part of this had to do with the Earth pivoting on a specific axis and tangent with the Sun, because it had to do with—as we do that—that's when we experience a polar shift, to a certain degree. The fielding of the Sun, combined with our own polar presence on the Earth, as far as going magnetic zero, and that they had found some way to hinder that.

Now, for a long time a lot of health technologies have been telling us you should use magnets in your daily life; it's much better for you. And the natural, magnetic field of the Earth has been dropping over such a long period of time. Well why is this a difficulty, if it's natural?

Well, the reason it is, because when it normally would have happened on a much more rapid pace—so the time from its highest potential to zero, back to its highest potential again would be greatly reduced. Since they have tried to slow this process while they were doing all of this recording, while they were looking for people to reboot it, with all this information, they have slowed down the process, which meant that we are existing at reduced magnetic gauss, or an unnaturally suspended period of time. That's why the health problem. I guess that's my pitch for magnetic technologies, if you haven't already done so.

Martin: Have you heard of sound frequency emanating from black holes?

Ash: I haven't, not in particular. White holes, yes. And I know that certain generative energy forms do escape black holes, or are actually produced by the functions of black holes. We happen to know that there are a number of black holes that produce a good deal of x-ray radiation. That particular bandwidth is produced from the other functions of collapse. But whether or not sound has been, it's not something I'm particularly privy to, although I certainly would not disavow it.

Martin: Have you come across the use of limestone at all, in magnifying or amplifying magnetic fields?

[Editor's note: Be sure and go back to the latter parts of Rick's FEMA article, which started on the Front Page of last month's issue of The SPECTRUM, for some of the incentive prompting this question!]

Ash: Oh, yes! As a matter of fact, the actual underground housing or casing for the Delta-T antenna was all done in limestone. Some of the really more famous amplifying plates inside some of the large pyramid structures in the world, I've been told, are made of limestone, where the pyramid might be made of one particular material, and then the actual limestone itself, there are a number of plates constructed right over, let's say, the King's Chamber, or an important vessel chamber within—and they were made of limestone, as well. There were a number of other structures that we had set up which we used limestone for because of its natural resonant powers.

Martin: Let's talk about HAARP again. Did you have much interface with HAARP?

Ash: Not a great deal. In the early days of a lot of the mind-control stuff, they were using a type of radar, which had an antenna of photonic potential. And this particular radar was produced by a company called Cardion Radar. And what they were doing, they were taking frequencies—back in the older days, the Russians had come across the Woodpecker Signal. And we had come up with the American buzzsaw, which was a much more aggressive form.

And then we said: "We certainly know how to agitate people; is there a specific frequency in which we broadcast our feelings of love?" And we communicate it empathically. And so we started to monitor human frequency.

And when we got a lot of that down, we went: "Hey, can we generate a concept, and broadcast a concept?" We started doing that, you know, we're doing that with Sage Radar, and Cardion Radar, and then we had sweeping areas where it would have effect. And we'd have to set-up substations all around.

One of the interesting things, I haven't been in on it recently, but if you actually go on the Department of Naval Defense's HAARP Internet website, when you can basically just go there and see what they're up to, and see where the oversight committees are, and some of the stuff that they're publicly releasing, one of the things that they tell you about is, it is supposedly set-up for radio communications.

Normally, both AM and FM have a range, a carrier range; they can only go a certain distance and then there are natural interferences, and that sort of thing. However, our ionosphere is, basically, radio silent. Nothing broadcasts around the ionosphere. What they were hoping to do, it was said, or at least what I perceive from what they said, was broadcast on the ionosphere so that they could broadcast radio signals that would, basically, broadcast around the entire Earth at one time—which you would need if you were going to try to get everyone on the same track at the same time.

So, if you were going to broadcast the concept that "We really need to be a One World Order because we work so much better together", that would definitely be the modality to broadcast it on. And there are many, many other aspects of HAARP which are much more nefarious.

I have a couple of books in the works. One, that I've put on the back burner right now, that has to do with HAARP a good deal, is a book which I call Battle For The Light, and it has to do with actual photonics, and what I believe are some of the modalities—even from what they've written. If you go to their website, it's a massive tomb of information. They really do give you a whole lot of information; it's just that they give you the information and then, if you don't sit down and read the whole thing, and if you don't have any technical background whatsoever, it's really easy to get lost in the mire.

Martin: Sure.

Ash: And lose your way, and not really know what it is that they're talking about at all. But if you have a bit of a technical grounding, and luckily I do, and you take the time to read everything—what I just did, I just printed out EVERYTHING—and you compare and you shift the information around, and recoordinate it, you begin to find what they're really talking about. And they're talking about how some of the stuff that they're working with, they find that there is a normal radio noise level that comes from outer space. So, radio telescopes pick this up, and they feel that this is interfering with their broadcast. This is their excuse, at any rate.

They have found that there are certain antennas that they have that can filter or alter some of this noise, and one of the things or one of the parts that they were working on doing was creating a noise-free day. Which basically means, you take what's coming into us from outer space, Sunlight, and certain bandwidths of Sunlight, like Sunspots, and shield everyone from it. Essentially you're using the ionosphere as a big pair of blinds to shut out ultraviolet light, and other forms of white-wave, which would create radio noise. So, you're basically controlling the light.

As it is, as a race, I believe us to be maloluminescent. There's so much militation against the Sun. We evolved under it. If we believe even just a pure Darwinian thing, we're just a combination of amino acids and a lightning bolt hit in this primordial muck, and by a freak per chance, we became what we are today. And if you can even buy that—we'll keep it that simple—let's say that that's what happened. We could be under ultraviolet light in even more extreme amounts than we can today.

Now, there was a research study done at the University of Sydney where they said: "Hey, we've got native aboriginal people running around out there, and wearing little more than a wash cloth, and they don't have melanoma. How's that happening?" The highest rate, incidentally, down there, was in office workers who work underneath fluorescent light fixtures.

And they said: "Well, maybe it's genetic. Maybe there's just a genetic predisposition for aboriginal people to not have melanoma. They certainly have a lot of melanin; maybe that was it."

So they looked at the study and they found that some of the people who were in that percentage of office workers who had melanomas, were of aboriginal descent. So the genetic thing went right out the window.

One of the things that they did find, however, was that two chemicals in particular, when worn on human dermis and then exposed to Sunlight, lead to an increased percentage of melanoma. These are titanium dioxide and PABA, both of which are heavily used in Sunblock! They tell you: "Put Sunblock on your skin so that you don't get melanoma, and they put the things in the actual Sunblock that will, literally, give you melanoma!"

Then they go: "Well, you didn't wear enough." And we wind up getting melanomas.

They tell us: "Ultraviolet light is bad for your eyes." Well, certainly. I could put some drops of water in my eye and it doesn't seem to do anything, but if I put a fire hose and put it up against my eye, that would be bad for my vision too, so I could turn around and say—and that's what they did—if you actually look at the original case studies of how they came to this information, they took a number of rhesus monkeys, affixed them into "locked" position, locked their heads so they couldn't be moved, put hooks in their eye-lids, so that their eye-lids would stay open, and put the same drops in that they use in human eye surgery so that the eye dilates and cannot move, it's paralyzed in the socket, and then they put them under multi-thousand-watt ultraviolet lights for an extended period of time. After a while, they went blind. You could cook a hot-dog like that. No wonder they went blind! I'm certainly going to go out and look for a UV protection of 100 on my next pair of glasses.

[Editor's note: As usual, the scam has a large economic component. The technical facts of the matter are that ANY sunglasses with cheap plastic lenses will pass only a very small percentage of ultraviolet light—the more cheap the plastic, the more the ultraviolet is attenuated.

But—put a sticker on these cheap sunglasses hyping that they are “uv blocking”, (as if they could be anything but that!) and you can now sell them with a MUCH bigger price tag—while the public gobbles them up, having fallen for the fear-based misinformation being pushed that ultraviolet is bad for you.

There is plenty of evidence (and a lot of common sense) to back the point that a certain level of ultraviolet light is not only good for your eyes, but ESSENTIAL for overall good health! Think of it as a type of “vitamin” you drink-in through your skin and eyes (and, actually, through the energy field surrounding your body—but that’s another big subject for another day).

Note that this sunglasses scam is a lot like the sunscreen lotion scam Michael referred to earlier. There are ones “behind the scenes” who know better, who know EXACTLY what they are doing, and know the optical industry will dutifully follow along. After all, when there is so much money to be made by all concerned, it is not difficult to add yet another way to make we-the-people sick. Remember that, ultimately, the “healthcare” industries are owned by the same so-called “elite” controllers who are always looking for ways to get we-the-people to pay for our own demise, since we’re “useless eaters” to them.

If you can find it anymore, read Dr. John Ott’s classic, outstanding book called Health And Light for a most fascinating account of the importance of light in our lives. His pioneering work in this field is a clear testimony to the “amateur” scientist who has not been warped by the mind-control machinery of so-called “higher” education which limits both the vision and the integrity of so many so-called “professionals”.

The rest of what follows below on this subject is also VERY, VERY important! Now, where else would you get this kind of information except in The SPECTRUM? Yet we are sorely in need of financial help in a big way if we are to keep publishing.]

Research was being done with dark-field microscopes. And for those readers who aren’t familiar with the idea of a dark-field microscope, let me explain:

When you normally look through a microscope, you’re passing light through the object and into the lenses so that you can see it. What dark-field microscopes do is, they take various colored lights, sometimes even just white light, and they pass it from either the top down or from the sides, to sort of get the insides—different parts of the insides of, say, cells—to light up in a different way, with a black or a dark-field behind it, so that you have more contrast. And it’s really good for finding specific points in the cell.

There was a researcher who was doing experimentation with rods and cones in the human eye, which comprise cells for both color and black-and-white and shading in the human retina, and he had done a cell count; he was counting how many cells he had there, and that sort of thing, and he was trying different color bands—look at them under blue, and under red, and so on—to try and see if he could bring out different parts of the cell.

He had done what he could, and decided to expose it to ultraviolet, and while he was exposing it to ultraviolet light he gets this phone call. He answers the phone call and is gone for an extended period of time.

He comes back and he thinks “Ah, ultraviolet light, I probably baked them.” Well, they all seemed to be very fine—in fact, they were more than when he originally looked. The end result of his hypothesis was that it is beneficial to have a certain amount of ultraviolet light, scanned across the retinas of your eyes. It’s a normally occurring bandwidth of light.

You know, we need ultraviolet light to assimilate vitamin D for our health. And if we don’t get it, we don’t produce it properly. What do we need vitamin D for? We need vitamin D to metabolize calcium, and now, all of a sudden, we have all of these problems with osteoporosis. Perhaps what we really need is, we need to get some Sunlight, once again, in moderation.

If you’re going to go out and bake yourself, you’re going to find some free radicals in your cells. But for the most part, Sunlight, in moderation, produces a natural amount of vitamin D in a way that we can use it. The vitamin D that we fortify our calcium-enriched milk with—and usually our growth-hormone-enriched milk—is basically not the same exact type as the human body produces. So it doesn’t really help, not to a great degree, or at least to as great a degree as they’d like you to think. But it is a form of vitamin D, and they can say that there’s vitamin D in there. And, for those interested, vitamin D does help you metabolize calcium, as I said.

The source that we really need is, we need to get some Sunlight. And it seems to me that, for whatever reason, HAARP is doing this—and I have some speculations, but I’ll save those for the book.

Martin: I have this conversation with my wife a lot. We keep using the expression among ourselves “this is an illusion”, this is a holographic universe.

Ash: Yes.

Martin: We’re really on the “holo-deck” to borrow from Star Trek. Well, my wife’s reaction to that comment is, “That’s baloney; it’s real; it seems real to me, therefore it’s real.” Can you explain the concept of third-dimensional reality being an illusion, in point of fact?

Ash: Both are kind-of right. Third-dimensional reality does exist. There’s actually far many more dimensions to our reality than just the three, but most people perceive in the three, ok? This takes on two different aspects, now, when you take that into account.

The first aspect is, third-dimensional reality does exist, and everything is just a holographic projection. BUT THAT HOLOGRAPHIC PROJECTION IS THE ACTUAL SUBSTANCE OF OUR REALITY. The term “well, it’s real” just means that it’s anchored in this reality. That’s all it means. But what constructs this reality is far more ethereal, and our consciousness does that.

Remember, we spoke about “Are you going to pick the potato salad or whatever?” The construct of what reality appears to be, and as we experience it all, has to do with what frames of those little coordinates we pick out to put in that movie-film that we spoke about. So, we pick and choose what our reality is going to be, to a certain degree, in a supra-conscious exchange with everyone that’s around us.

And certainly, while I’m writing my movie, everyone else who chooses to be in that movie has a picking and choosing, as well, and a certain amount of supra-conscious connection and agreement that “Oh, this part of the movie is going to go your way; this part’s not going to go, it’s going to go seemingly more towards my way”—but it all comes to a final end. So yes, they both do exist.

The other point that I spoke about, as far as tangents go, has to do with 3-D reality. And, as I said, this is actually a much more multi-dimensional, much more multi-faceted reality than just the three that we experience, for the most part, in conversation. Everyone really is experiencing far more than three—like intuition. We have far more senses than we think.

Are we just limited to height, depth, and width? That’s 3-D, right? That’s three dimensions—height, depth, and width. Yet we know that we have this concept of time, which adds another dimension to perception right there. Then there’s an intuitive connection or relation in our interaction; that’s another one right there. And there are multiplicities over that.

When we’re saying “It’s all just 3-D”, it’s really NOT all just 3-D whatsoever. And it’s in most of the subtle places that these three get moved around or shifted.

You know, there was a story that used to be taught in physics classes when I was studying physics. They were talking about “Mr. 2-D”. Have you ever heard about it?

Martin: No.

Ash: What if you were a two-dimensional person, and you only had width and length; you didn’t have height. And you woke-up next to Mr. 2-D. Mr. 2-D would only experience

THE INSTITUTE FOR PERCEPTUAL DYNAMICS™ PRESENTS
THE MONTAUK SURVIVORS SERIES WITH MICHAEL ASH

The Genesis Of Montauk

This lecture delves into the beginnings of the project and gives an overview of the many subexperiments the project encompasses, including everything from the birth of Stealth Technology to time travel. A two-tape set: $20.00

Screams From The Underground

The subject of this lecture covers the controversial Montauk Boys Bunker. As well as the Who, What, Where and Why of what may be the darkest and most diabolical offshoot of the Montauk Project. A two-tape set: $20.00

The Cogs Of Time

This lecture covers some of the more subtle concepts of time travel. Also introducing the operations of the Montauk Delta Force and ET involvements. A two-tape set: $20.00

The Eye Of The Storm

It was in this lecture that Mr. Ash imparted much of what it was like to be part of the project as a personal experience. As well as some of his views on how to utilize the information from the series in our daily lives. There is also an extended question and answer segment. A two-tape set: $20.00

The Dawn Of Delta

This lecture was recorded at the Philadelphia Experience Conference of April 22, 1995. Although presented separately from the Survivor Series, it can both stand alone as well as be a complementary addition to the rest of the series. Single tape: $15.00

Coming soon:

The Gossamer Matrix

Although this lecture from February of 1996 was previously offered by the Institute For Perceptual Dynamics,™ it is being reformatted to contain even more information as well as all-new packaging. It has been called “one of the most comprehensive overviews of the madness behind the methods at work in the world today. As well as perhaps the most cutting-edge disclosures of the modern state of the art of mind-control research and application.” It is also the first to-date presentation concerning the Women’s involvement in the Montauk Project.

Price has not as yet been set due to restructuring of the original text.

you as a thin line, as he perceived you, because you have no height.

But you’d still be in 3-D, and you could look down at him, and you could see him. But if you turn Mr. 2-D sideways, he would disappear because he has no height, whatsoever. Since he’s limiting himself to only looking at those two dimensions, when he perceives you, he doesn’t see the full breadth of what’s going on.

We don’t even see ourselves in the full breadth of this 3-D reality that we’re talking about because, once again, we’re only talking about height and depth and width; not worrying about the concept of our consciousness traveling, which is time, or that, as I said, that inter-relation between each other, that energetic matrix through which we are inter-connecting and choosing what this 3-D is going to be like.

So, without realizing it, we are far more vast beings, each of us, than we actually think that we are. And, at the same time, we have far more control over “reality” than we realize.

[Editor’s note: Doesn’t this sound a lot like one of the recurring themes of the spiritual messages regularly presented in this newspaper and collected together in the WISDOM OF THE RAYS series of volumes of teachings from Masters of the Higher Realms?]

I think that one of the things that the project would very much like for us to do is not to continue to realize, or not to move on to another point of view in which we realize that: “Hey, everything that they are doing is just an amplified version of what we do every day naturally.”

Remember, I said we all do time travel, each of us, every day. You called me at 7:00 this evening here in New York; it’s now 9:49 here in New York. We just traveled; we’re 2 and ¾ hours later from where we first started. You and I both took that trip together. In a sense everybody did; we’re all in a much different place. Life is not the same as when we first talked.

I don’t know if that answered your question at all.

Martin: It did, thank you.

We’re probably winding down a bit. I would like to open it up to you to talk about—Montauk generally, not limiting it to time travel. Perhaps you could make some general comments to our readers about where we are, the kind of influence that HAARP has, whatever hot, current subject in this general field you feel they should know about or be aware of.

Ash: Well, they still do experiment with time travel, to a certain degree. It seemed to me, at least at the time that I left—

Martin: Which was 1994, you said?

Ash: I popped back in-and-out, off-and-on during 1994, because there were a number of things that I had realized. If I absolutely just pulled out now there would be earthquakes and things, there would be general mayhem. It's like, if all of a sudden you decide that it is evil to drive and you stop your car in the middle of the road, someone may crash into you and be killed. So, you really are responsible for, at least to a certain degree, driving off the road.

A large part of the project went towards controlling the hearts and minds of the masses. While this seems, to some degree, somewhat doom-and-gloom, because we're getting back to the whole mind-control thing, there are multiple bombardments, even on a chemical and nutritional level. We're hearing about the contrails [chemtrails] all the time, fluoridation in the water, aspartame, and so many other aspects.

When you get to the "they" who are running the projects, so much money is manufactured and gleaned by, say, aspartame—they basically print the money. They decide how much value the money will have. They don't care about money, at that point. At that point, they've gotten all of the power that they can basically usurp, and they're looking for the only power that's left, which is probably the definition of "original sin".

You know: "Who can be like unto God?" So, what do you do? You play with God's tools. You start to play with time. You start to play with the character and control of the human soul. You certainly can't take it from someone, but can you make them give it up? Can you make them surrender it? Can you coerce them into that? I think that's a good deal of what's going on in the world today.

And if you step back and you take that into view, you've seen the wizard behind the curtain. There's no more: "Pay no attention to the man behind the curtain; he has nothing to do with me" once you see it for what it is. When you turn on the basic news on your commercial TV stations, things just don't quite add-up any more. Things just don't make sense any more.

Someone once said to me: "Who do you think they fear the most?" And, honestly, I think they fear the most humble of citizens amongst us.

You know, the person who is cleaning their toilet in the office building. The executives have their view of themselves in grandiosity, as they get out of their BMWs, and they're in charge of this whole division, and this person is just basically scrubbing the toilet to feed his family. All he's caring about is "Feed my family; love and care about them; be in the moment, scrub this toilet and do a good job at it." How do you shake someone like that? How do you bend their will? How do you get them to choose what you want them to choose? Because they can be monkey 99 or they can be monkey 100, and the executive could be 101 or he could be 7; either way, the executive holds no bigger role in this consciousness as a co-creator than that guy cleaning the toilet—or me or you or anyone else, for that matter.

These people are playing the power game, but it's just an illusionary game. And we can step out of that game, quite easily.

There's an old Chinese story, and perhaps I'll wrap up with this. I'm going to ask you to play the megalomaniac for me. Do you think you could do that for me?

Martin: Sure.

Ash: So, basically, your role is to pick the most power-hungry position, or the most power-hungry "appearing" position in this story. Alright? Don't get New Age on me, just be a corrupt, good ol' boy.

One day there's a stone cutter, and he's cutting away at the base of the mountain, from the time he wakes up until the Sun goes down. And then the overlord allots him two bowls of rice—one bowl for himself, and one bowl for his wife. He eats and passes out. The next day he wakes up, and works all day long for his two bowls of rice.

Now, he's cutting one day, cutting these bricks out of the side of this mountain. The overlord comes up and he's on this beautiful horse and he's got his beautiful saddle bags, and robes of Ermine, bejeweled, everything looks just beautiful. And he rides by with sacks of gold on his saddle, and he looks down, well-fed, well-educated, at the stone-cutter.

So, who's the most powerful person in this particular situation? You get to pick; don't be New Age on me.

Martin: Well, obviously, the man with the wealth.

Ash: Ok, so you choose the overlord. Now you get to be the overlord, and you decide: I'm going to go to my day palace, which is across this desert, and you get half-way across the desert and you realize that there was a hole in your water-skein, and now you don't have enough water to make it to the other side, and you're half way across; you're at that point of no return.

It's too far to go back and too far to go forward, so you try to go forward, and about another half-way, which puts you about three-quarters of the way, you succumb to the Sun, which beats down on you, eventually withers your body away and that of your horse, and bleaches your bones dry.

Now, who's more powerful, the Sun or the overlord?

Martin: The Sun.

Ash: Ok, so now you get to be the Sun. You're beating down and you're shining on all things, and you have omnipotent power to shine almost anywhere you want, almost. Why almost? Because underneath you is a cloud, and as the cloud goes by, it gives shade, and cool, and calm from your scorching oversight. So now, who's more powerful, the cloud or the Sun?

Martin: The cloud.

Ash: Ok, so now the cloud is going along, blocking out the Sun at will, and as he's going along his path, he's moving along, he comes up to a mountain. He can't go around the mountain because he's guided by the wind. He can go above, or he can go down. The problem is, if he goes down, he'll cool too much and he'll become rain; but if he goes up too high, the Sun will dissipate him.

So now, who's more powerful, the mountain or the cloud?

Martin: The mountain.

Ash: And now you're the mountain and the Sun beats on you and you can do nothing about it. And the cloud comes up and can't pass you, it either has to dissipate or turn to rain. And, as mighty as you are, over all of these things, every morning, at the beginning of dawn, until the night-time comes, this stone cutter comes and kneels down at your feet, cuts away at you, and you're powerless against it.

So, the cycle of power is just an illusion. And if all of this darkness, and all of this machination that the project is putting out, and that HAARP is putting out, and everything else—if we just sit back and look at it from the reality of what it is, we're really as powerful as that stone-cutter, and every one of the other players in this small play that we just talked about. No one really has any power over anybody. We can either play in the illusion or we can stand outside of it.

And when we do, we win one more piece for free will, and keep the illusion in check. And we take one more step, spiritually, in our own evolvment.

How's that for a wrap-up?

Martin: That's a great place to end. I really appreciate your taking the time to do this. Thank you.

The Homosexual Agenda That Is Quietly Invading Our Schools

Editor's note: The following information will likely be a shock to most of you readers, and invoke justified rage in those of you who have children in various middle school and high school grades.

The business manager of The SPECTRUM confronted this very same problem already, 5 years ago, when her own daughter was in the sixth grade of a Washington State middle school. She claims that things have only gotten worse and, as the following reveals, that is surely the case. The tactics being used to circumvent the usual checks and balances between schools and parents suggest a very sophisticated brainwashing assault is in progress from some behind-the-scenes source.

It is always instructive and most revealing to follow the money trail behind such a perverted agenda. At least it is evident to those who have bothered to investigate the matter that much of the money for this brainwashing effort is coming from the level of the federal government, through the "legitimizing" front of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC).

This material has been provided by Ingrid Cassel, President, Vaccination Liberation, North Idaho Chapter, P.O. Box 1444, Coeur d'Alene, ID 83816; phone: (208) 255-2307 or 765-8421; email: <vaclib@dm.net>. What you are about to read is a sometimes graphic, excerpted compilation from the investigations of several "warriors" who are on the front-line of this battle and KNOW what they are talking about. These are basically shocked mothers and fathers who care about their children enough to want to get together and DO something on behalf of this unconscionable assault on children everywhere.

As if there are not enough problems with our schools already, parents must become even more diligent in their monitoring of both classroom and extracurricular activities. The question comes to mind how so many school administrators can sleep at night—knowing full well they have become prostitutes to perverted agendas, gladly trading (sacrificing) their students for whatever are the federal grant money "carrots" being held out—just as is the case with the Ritalin atrocity described elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM.

9/21/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

HOMOSEXUAL AGENDA GETTING CLOSER TO HOME

Last year (1999), in a suburb of Massachusetts, Brian Cammacker noted that a traveling exhibit entitled "Multicultural Families: Helping Fight Racism" was touring the public schools. He went to see the exhibit himself since his son's class had been spending quite a bit of time with it.

The exhibit portrayed pictures of bi-racial couples along with homosexual couples. He noted statements written by the children that they were trying to cure their parents of "racist" and "homophobic" sentiments. Later that year he examined his 11-year-old daughter's health class workbook in which the stated goal of the course was that "the children should appreciate and take pride in their sexual orientation".

When he complained to the school, his concerns were dismissed. He was accused of not understanding and being intolerant. He was told that: "It's not about sex; it's about civil rights and tolerance."

It was also noted that all area public schools participated in "Gay Appreciation Days"—a week in which children were further indoctrinated with the concept that the gay lifestyle is normal. A pamphlet that was distributed during this week states: "If you've never slept with someone of the same sex, how do you know you wouldn't prefer it?"

In an article entitled "Homosexual Agenda in Massachusetts' Schools" by Massachusetts Constitutional Party committeeman Scott T. Whiteman, Massachusetts is described as being the model state for promoting the homosexual agenda in the nation's public schools.

According to Whiteman, it all started in 1992 when Massachusetts Governor William Weld created, by Executive Order, the "Governor's Commission On Gay And Lesbian Youth" under the guise of preventing gay youth suicide. The commission was comprised of 16 homosexual activists. Whiteman reported that one commission member, David LaFontaine, had organized an event to throw condoms at newly ordained priests at Holy Cross Cathedral in Boston, and that another commission member had been convicted of breaking into a dynamite factory.

From 1993 to 1996, this commission began writing manuals on Making Schools Safer For Gay And Lesbian Youth, including the mandatory hiring of gay teachers, required seminars for teachers to learn homosexual affirmation, and the formation of a curriculum for the study of gay and lesbian issues.

The Massachusetts state budget has been appropriating money to the commission through the Department of Health and the Department of Education. The money appropriated to the Commission reached a record $1.5 million in 1998. Massachusetts is currently the most "gay friendly" state in the country, with 180 Gay/Straight Alliances (GSAs) in both public and private schools. Throughout the country there are over 700 GSA clubs in schools coordinated by national homosexual activist groups and implemented by state departments of public health and education.

ADOLESCENTS BUSSED TO GAY AND LESBIAN SEX EXPO

On March 25, 2000, Whiteman attended an event sponsored by the Gay, Lesbian, Straight Education Network and Project 10, both of whom receive funding from the Department of Education's $1.5 million appropriation. Numerous gay-friendly teachers and administrators received "professional developmental credits" for attending the event. Building more GSAs and expanding homosexual teaching into the lower grades in Massachusetts were some of the goals.

In one workshop, run by two Department of Education employees and one Department of Health employee, a group of 30 children were given graphic instructions concerning how to participate in homosexual sex. The workshop was presented in a "fun" way to get children to open up and talk about homosexual sex as well as to give them tips on "how to do it better".

In one session, entitled "Struggles & Triumphs Of Including Homosexuality In A Middle School Curriculum", a special education teacher told how she turned the Holocaust portion of her curriculum into a "gay affirming" section. She shared a video produced by her students in which a seventh grade girl is narrating. The girl on the video tells us that the ancient Greeks: "encouraged homosexuals; in fact, it was considered normal for an adolescent boy to have an older, wiser man as his lover."

In this way our youth are conditioned into believing that it is okay for an older man to approach them for sexual gratification. Most of the literature distributed at the conference was aimed at children and contained incredibly disturbing material which encouraged young children to become actively involved in homosexual activities.

Planned Parenthood reportedly provided condoms to any child who wanted them. A pocket-sized “sex kit” was distributed at the Sidney Borum Health Center booth. It contained two condoms, two antiseptic moist towelettes, and six bandages. According to the teenage volunteer manning the table, the bandages were for “when the sex got really rough”.

Children as young as 12 and 13 attended this conference, even being bussed from other counties so that they could attend the event. Parents who protested were accused of being intolerant and homophobic. Parents were not told what their children were learning and were purposely kept in the dark with regard to the subject matter of this conference. Parents who found out and protested, report that they were ignored and ridiculed. As of this writing, state department of education officials maintain publicly that these classes are about tolerance, civil rights, and even human rights; but not about sex.

If it's not sex, then what is it when public employees who visit GSAs teach our children how to participate in lewd and deplorable acts of sodomy and lesbian sex? If you would like more information on this topic, contact Debbie Hopper at 636-861-0060 or e-mail at <dhopper@constitutionparty.com>.

PERFORM GAY & LESBIAN SEX IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS!

I thought you all might be interested in this first-hand testimony of what has been going on in Ohio. If you trace this, it all goes back to the ruse that this is a community funded, community program—not federally funded—and those naive souls who are pushing this will forever claim “we're not doing that!” This all comes from federal grants to private and semi-private entities, as well as Government entities. Please watch the “save the children” stuff, and anything with nosey questionnaires. This stuff is not what the “storyline” says it is. — Dani Hansen

Dear Dani,

I read your message with great interest. I live in Columbus, OH and have participated in fighting this awful program for over a year now. In fact, I participated in the hearings held before the House Education Committee here in January of this year.

You have stated well some of the problems with this program. I must share some things with you, though, to make the case even clearer.

The last speaker opposing the program in the hearings I mentioned was an attorney representing himself and a group of colleagues. They were appalled at the subject matter in the program and set about to investigate fully. They obtained copies of the manuals for the program, the contract between the State of Ohio and the CDC, interoffice and intraoffice memos involving our State Department of Education and the CDC, etc. In fact, he had several BOXES of documents to back up his testimony, which was about an inch and a half thick.

During the course of his testimony, he read excerpts from the manuals. I assure you that what Diana printed in her report merely touches the surface of what is involved in this program. It is so horrifically immoral.

In fact, let me share the experience of a mother who contacted me from Washington State to offer her support of our cause. She told me that her son had come home from school one day completely devastated. He was crying and was completely distraught. He told his parents that he couldn't tell them what was wrong. He told them he would never go back to school again.

They convinced him that they would support him and that, therefore, he could share with them what had happened. He told them that his teacher was teaching them about sex ed (from these very programs) and that she showed them one of the videos involved. It showed two women having sex. This 11-year-old boy simply could not process what his eyes were showing him. Apparently the video was shown to the children in an attempt to teach them “how things should be done” between people of the same sex so that they would know how to do it themselves. The mother related to me that they were seeking counseling for this boy and that they were homeschooling now.

The CDC does not want people to know what is in this program. The attorney I mentioned also pulled out a one-inch-thick manual which is given to the State Department of Education to teach them how to fool the public, parents, and press.

As far as Ohio is concerned, officially the funds for the Department of Education were frozen for one fiscal year. That means nothing. They already applied through the Department of Health for more funds to continue the program. Also, the Department of Education had already completed Phase-II of the program, which means that the original trainers have already trained more people (ie. teachers, nurses, etc.)

to administer the program. This was never stopped or recalled. It is continuing.

I received word from a woman in a rural school district who related that she had warned her son of this program and so he was prepared when they began it in his school. He attempted to bring some papers home that were passed out to the students. However, he was not allowed out the door with them. He also tried to throw away the “complimentary condom” which he was given in the program. The teacher retrieved the condom from the wastebasket and forced him to take it with him.

The fact that it was a rural district is significant. The head of our State Department of Education testified before the Education Committee that this program would only be used in 6 urban districts which had the highest rate of STDs and out-of-wedlock pregnancies. This was a blatant lie.

The attorney who spoke quoted from the contact with the CDC who stated clearly that the program was to be administered to ALL children of the state of Ohio. In fact, there was a further plan to implement it among church and community groups—to make sure no children “fell through the cracks”.

There is so much more I could probably tell you, but you should know that there is BIG MONEY behind this.

My husband happened to be standing out in the hall when a woman from one of the family groups here in Ohio was being interviewed by the press. She was holding a list of financial contributors—to the program and to legislators. The list was made up of pretty unsurprising sources—condom companies, sex toy companies, etc. This whole thing is so fraught with filth, there can be nothing good here.

Yes, we successfully completed a battle in January by blocking the Education Committee's action to release the money to complete this program. It is by no means dead. Our governor supports it (his wife was instrumental in bringing it to Ohio) and I fear there is too much corruption on the Education Committee to stop it forever.

As you may know, Diana listed several states which have contracted with the CDC on this thing. But people in every state should be active in opposing this. This is quite literally a federal program—to get this into the schools of EVERY state. You are right that it will continue unless we do something on the federal level to put a permanent stop to it.

I contacted Michael Reagan in January and got him to feature this on his program. I will get in touch with him again and share with him that we are mounting a national campaign to stop this. Dr. Laura was also receptive to our problem and featured it. She could be a good help again. It would be a real plus if we could force both the presidential candidates to have to answer about this before the cameras! Any possibility of that?

I have another idea, also. I got your message from Sharon Portela on the LDS homeschooling list. Are you LDS, too? When we began our fight in Ohio, I got in touch with one of our Church Area Authorities here in my ward. He forwarded my message and Diana's report to the Area President, who was going to look it over and forward it to President Hinckley. They were reluctant to put the official weight of the Church behind it at that time, hoping it would resolve itself positively otherwise. Perhaps, with the mounting of a national opposition to this program, the Church would now officially come out against it.

Many other churches have come out in favor of it, which completely baffles me. The LDS church has always had quite a political voice and perhaps we could now make that voice heard to oppose this program. What do you think?

I know Diana is in the thick of her run for the Ohio Congress, but there are many of us here in Ohio, hardened by our fight these past two years, who I'm sure would like to participate in this. I am forwarding your message to another woman who may be of great help. Let me know if there are other things I can do. — Laurie MacMillan

ONE MORE REASON TO HOMESCHOOL

From: Dani Hansen <ideagle@if.rmci.net>;
Idaho Citizens Eagle Forum <<http://home.rmci.net/ideagle/>>.

Date: Thursday, 14 September 2000

Hi all,

I have known about these programs for two or three years. Diana is a good friend of mine. She is on the Ohio State Board of Education and has really been diligent in fighting this in Ohio. I have checked with the Idaho Department of Education and, as of last year, none of the three most offensive programs are being applied for by the state. With our new exiting standards health curriculum, this may become a real problem; the standards certainly allow for these programs.

I have Diana's website on my webpage under my citizenship bill; the address is <<http://www.fessler.com/health.htm>>. At the moment, I think that the State Department of Education is "making available" all CDC "programs that work" to local districts. I don't think there are recommendations that go with them. This needs to be watched VERY carefully. These programs are truly unholy in every sense.

Please take a minute to read the following e-mail; the descriptions are very modest compared to the reality of the programs:

JOIN THE FIGHT TO DEFUND CDC'S PERVERTED SEX ED PROGRAMS

While reading the following, keep in mind what Edmund Burke so wisely said in 1795: "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing."

A L E R T !

Under the guise of fighting AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy, the federal Centers for Disease Control (CDC) has developed a scheme using our federal tax dollars to pervert the minds of our children in the public—or as Tony Snow quipped in his column of 10/14/99, called "Public Schools, The Cult Of Condoms"—PUBIC schools of America.

Ohio State School Board member Diana Fessler uncovered the CDC's program and has successfully stopped it in Ohio, at least temporarily. (A full report is at <www.fessler.com/whatsnew.htm> or at <www.southern-style.com/comprehensive_school_health_educ.htm> and at <www.eagleforum.org/educate/2000/may00/cdc-grants.html>. Mrs. Fessler reported that nearly all states are receiving CDC money, mostly through state departments of education or health.

The CDC has developed manuals which are part of its Programs That Work (PTW) and include "Be Proud! Be Responsible!" and "Becoming A Responsible Teen" and "Reducing The Risk".

The first step in implementation of the program is surveying the students so that the schools and/or health department can determinate that the students are at risk and to establish a benchmark to measure the effectiveness of the behavior modification programs. "Confidential" surveys, which include invasive questions about each student's sex life, are called "Youth Risk Behavior Surveys". Although Fessler reported that Ohio officials admitted that the survey is "terrible", they "only used it because we have to in order to get money from Atlanta (CDC)".

Many states have already surveyed their students, while some, such as Alabama, are just now beginning discussions on the questionnaires.

The July 2000 EAGLE FORUM REPORTER, in an article called "Sex Questions Sicken Connecticut Parents", explained that a 95-question Youth Risk Behavior Survey, described by one parent as "pornographic", was given to 800 middle school and 1200 high school students in New Milford, CT. This has Connecticut parents worrying that the survey is a precursor to the CDC's Sex Ed Program.

The AP reported in May that PTW was being used in Illinois for Illinois State University to train teachers to teach the "Reducing The Risk" curriculum to 9th and 10th graders. State Senator Patrick O'Malley called the program "startling" and columnist Phil Luciano in the PEORIA JOURNAL STAR of 5/24/00 said: "Our schoolhouses have been overtaken by condom minions."

EXAMPLES FROM CURRICULUM

In the CDC's Comprehensive School Health Education Program, the "curriculum provides the necessary skills by letting participants handle condoms and practice working with condoms using their fingers as props" or using "acrylic (penile) models or standup toothpaste canisters".

Students are told of lubricants that are handy around the house—grape jelly, maple syrup, and honey—but are advised to avoid butter, Crisco, Cool Whip, and mayonnaise. After being sworn to secrecy, they are divided into teams of two or three, sent to different areas of the room with condom packages, a penile model, some lubricant, spermicide, and paper towels.

As part of this "performance-based curriculum", students practice putting on and taking the condom off the model. They are encouraged to train each other, applaud the success of teammates, and are then given refreshments (Session 6).

In Session 7, they are told to dream safely, that even when daydreaming, they should imagine using a latex condom. They are told that: "Both gay and straight couples engage in anal sex." They are instructed how to make a dental dam for safe oral sex.

Under the BART (Becoming A Responsible Teen) program, they are told to list all the words they use or hear others use to talk about sex, which should create a sense of "comfort and belonging". "If necessary, the teacher will prompt students by asking for words for specific parts of the body, sexual acts, and birth control. The teacher repeats each word and writes it on the board, with everyone agreeing on definitions." (I will not list these pornographic words to which the students are exposed, but they are available in Mrs. Fessler's report in case you doubt.)

Regarding abstinence, students are told that: "There are many ways to avoid pregnancy and sexually transmitted disease (STD)—by becoming a hermit, by being so unpleasant that everyone avoids you, or by never being involved in a romantic situation." Although "no judgment is made about which of these responses is best" (this is called Values Clarification), after students hear the teacher equate abstinence with nerdiness and being disliked, sex with latex will likely be the choice.

Finally, the students must go on a field trip to visit a clinic, preferably with his/her girlfriend/boyfriend, filing out homework sheets describing the route to the clinic, cost of contraceptives and STD treatment, and reasons to recommend the clinic to a friend. (Remember that this could be part of a writing assignment in English class under the concept of "Integrated Curriculum" used in many schools; thus, opting out of sex ed will not necessarily protect your child.)

These programs are aimed at "public and non-public schools" to: "move toward health instruction that works as the core principles of CDC's 'Programs That Work' and are extended to all categorical health lessons traditionally taught in comprehensive pre-k through 12 health education."

IT'S UP TO YOU

Now that you know of this problem, you can do one of three things:

- You can say that this is awful and it's too bad we can't do anything about it.
- You can work to stop it in your own school and state, which will be very time-consuming and probably ineffective as the CDC officials and their cronies will continue to try to sneak it in.
- You can join in a nationwide fight to DEFUND the CDC program and FIRE the CDC culprits responsible for it. An election year should be an excellent time to do this, but we must move immediately. Perhaps some candidates will want to join us? Education is supposedly a big issue this year.

[end quoting]

JOIN US IN ACTION

I urge you to contact your congressman and both senators to ask them for hearings in the House and Senate on the CDC programs—and hopefully to cut-off all funding of them. Remind them that these programs, implemented with FEDERAL money, blatantly conflict with Section 912 of the Welfare Reform Act Of 1996 which amended Title V of the Social Security Act to include abstinence education and also with the definition of abstinence spelled out in Section 510 (b) (2). (The full definition is at: <www.eagleforum.org/education/2000/june00/nosy.html>.)

Also, ask to have the people in charge of the CDC's sex ed programs FIRED for their unmitigated violation of federal law, not to mention contributing to the delinquency of minors.

Please contact all your friends, organizations, talk shows, newspaper editors, church and civic groups which you think would join in taking a stand FOR THE CHILDREN, against the CDC.

Feel free to use any of the information from the referenced web sites as well as this letter.

Please let me know of any senators or congressmen you find who are willing to work on this. Suggestions and/or questions are welcome. — Dani Hansen

GAYS SUE TO KEEP SCHOOL TRAINING SECRET

Source: The Sidney Herald (9/13/00)

Author: Rick Schneider, Publisher

Sometime back, I reported on a shocking scandal involving the teaching of homosexuality to middle school and high school students in Massachusetts. I received a lot of positive feedback on that column, so following is an update on the case by Reed Irvine, chairman of Accuracy in Media.

A parent, concerned about the explicit training of homosexual techniques given to his son in public middle school, is being sued by the Gay, Lesbian, and Straight Education Network, one of the sponsors of the pro-homosexual program.

The story was broken by the Massachusetts News, a conservative monthly that reported the training session in gay sex held at Tufts University last March. The training session was held for middle and high school students. The instructors were Department of Education employees. They showed the boys and girls precisely what homosexuals do to each other, including the dangerous practice called "fisting".

According to the Massachusetts News, when Scott Whiteman learned about the prurient nature of the session intended for his son, he taped it. It was the airing of that tape on a Boston radio show that exposed this scandal. The Massachusetts News reports that Whiteman's answer to the lawsuit says that the purpose of the conference was: "To incite and indoctrinate minors into experimenting with, and practicing, homosexual and sadomasochistic sex, and promoting a radical gay agenda for grammar schools, middle schools and high schools."

Whiteman charges that the suit by the homosexual organization is really an effort to stop distribution of his tape. He believes that the plaintiffs don't want it known that "minor children are being exposed to illegal instruction in sadomasochistic homosexual practices that can put their children at risk of sexually transmitted diseases that are life-threatening."

This charge is confirmed by a report on a talk given at the conference by a middle school lesbian teacher, Christine Hoyle. Her assignment was to tell how gay teachers could circumvent obstacles to promote homosexuality in middle school courses. She told how she changed a class on the Holocaust into an "anti-prejudice unit" that included homosexuality.

The principal at her school didn't want her to invite anyone to talk to the class about homosexuality. She got around that by getting her young, special education pupils to vote for inviting a homosexual.

When the speaker delivered a graphic description of gay sex, the students complained to the principal. The speaker conceded that he said things inappropriate for 13-year-olds, but he says children should discuss gay sex acts with people like him, not with their parents and teachers. Hoyle has her students do a research project and she videotapes them discussing what they have learned. She showed one of the tapes at Tufts. Girls only 13 or 14 years old were shown saying they saw nothing wrong with homosexuality. One student said that ancient Greek poets encouraged homosexuality and considered it normal.

A straight teacher said of the video: "This is clearly desensitization to morality and the law. How come no one ever teaches...about statutory rape?.... How about the tremendous health hazards of this lifestyle? What if the 250 boys who were molested in Middleton had been in this Holocaust class? Wouldn't they have concluded that it was OK to engage in sex with grown men? After all, if pedophilia was openly accepted in the ancient Greek civilization, then why not here in America today?"

This teacher had seen the research material Hoyle gives her students. The lesbian teacher gave her students pro-homosexual books but nothing at all on the other side, favoring normal sexual behavior or acknowledging the dangers of sexual deviancy.

Such a one-sided approach is what is known as brainwashing.

Most parents prefer to provide their own instruction on sexual morality to their children. Even those who are willing to have the schools assume this responsibility would want a balanced, accurate, and complete picture given. Very few parents want their children to be subjected to what amounts to virtual recruitment into the homosexual lifestyle.

POLITICALLY CORRECT NONSENSE RATIONALLY INCORRECT

John Leo of U.S. News & World Report is as offended as I am at all the "politically correct" hogwash that permeates our society. Leo wrote the following about the "cultural craziness" we face every day:

"In Canton, Ohio, a 6-year-old boy who jumped from his bathtub and ran to a window to stop a school bus was suspended by his school for sexual harassment. The boy's mother said she put him in the tub so he wouldn't see the bus go by; he had a doctor's appointment and couldn't attend school that morning. But when his sister told him she saw the bus coming, the tyke ran to the window and shouted for the driver to wait. Since he was nude at the time, the school ruled that he had harassed youngsters on the bus. The school forced him to sign a paper admitting that he knew the nature of the charges against him."

On Health, Helping, And World Politics

9/20/00 HATONN

Greetings, my scribe, and thank you for sitting this day. I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, and I come to you in the Light of Creator God—The One Light. Be still and allow the energy to settle, for there is a need to have a message scribed this day for the general public.

HEALTH

Many ones are struggling with the nature of the physiological changes taking place at this time. Many ones are being caused to confront their past “heartaches” in order to maintain proper physical functioning of the human apparatus. This is as it should be, for the Cleansing Cycle we have been speaking of is the catalyst, and though we have gone into this in great detail, there are still many who refuse to make the connection on a PERSONAL level.

Allow me to be blunt. If you are experiencing physical difficulty of ANY KIND whatsoever, it is in part due to an out-of-balance condition within you that has allowed you to ignore the ever building warning signs until such a point that physically perceived pain results. You ones are responsible for your condition, and for what you will or will not do about same.

There ARE “miracle” cures. However, the “miracle” comes about as a result of personally achieved BALANCE, and paying attention to the clues and Guidance offered to achieve same. With inner balance achieved, the body will naturally come back into proper functioning. Many of you ones simply doubt that such a cure is possible, and with the doubt often comes the justification for not allowing yourselves to feel the personal responsibility for your condition.

Genetic predisposition to an illness is no excuse. The power of the soul to regulate the physical body is such that it can, if allowed, regulate and rebuild ANY bodily function. Again, only if inner emotional balance is achieved will such regulation be possible.

We generally do not get too fixated on the body, for in the longterm evolutionary growth of the soul there are many bodies and many opportunities. However, we need you ones in a state wherein you are not distracted by the body’s malfunctioning.

For many of you, it is simply due to YEARS of careless pollution brought about by a lack of concern for the longterm effects of such as over-indulgence in food (empty and adulterated), drink (soft and hard), lack of proper rest, etc.—and NOW you petition us for answers.

As always, the answer is not what many of you wish to hear. First, find inner peace and balance. From this point of view you will find that a clearer reasoning state of mind is possible and the intuitive messages of Guidance will come forth.

We ask that you ones consider giving up many of your lifelong “vices”—such as alcohol, cigarettes, caffeinated drinks (coffee, sodas, etc.). Purified drinking water makes a good substitute. We also suggest that you ones take regular (but not excessive) supplements of vitamins and MINERALS. Learn to listen to your body.

Then again, you are quite free to do as you please. The choice is always yours.

Bear in mind that, with the maintaining of a truly balanced emotional state, the Higher Self (soul-you) will naturally balance the body—regardless of what pollutants you put into the body. But so, too, a truly balanced emotional state will NOT have need for the many feel-good “vices” such as caffeine, nicotine, and alcohol. Likewise, there will be NO resistance to the idea of giving them up. However, if you are playing mind games with yourself—by saying you are in balance, and yet resisting vehemently the suggestion of giving up the “vices”—then I say to you: You would do well to re-evaluate your perception of what a TRULY balanced state is, for you are fooling yourself.

Dear ones, I am not in the business of body preservation, though it is possible to achieve a mental and emotional state of equilibrium wherein the body would last indefinitely. It simply is not the proper focus at this time or on your world for you who are of Ground Crew come to help assist in this major Planetary Transition cycle.

We ask that you get yourselves together and do what YOU KNOW you need to do in order to remain long enough in the physical to accomplish your part in the mission at hand. If you choose not to do so, then this too is fine, for there is great redundancy built into the mission and there will ALWAYS be another available to take up the slack and carry the mission forward. There are, daily, replacements being born into your world who will respond to “the call” when the responsibility of same crosses their path.

HELPING

Allow me to change subject here, for there is another matter that needs to be addressed. Many of you ones have now had ample opportunity to evaluate the validity and the value that The SPECTRUM newspaper has to offer. The publication runs at a very large loss every month, and if it were not for a small handful of generous souls, the publication would have ceased before the very first issue. I ask that you please consider carefully the value this publication has brought to you (and to others you may have shared it with), and I ask that you support these ones in their efforts to provide a Light so that you and others may better find your way.

The financial strain on a very few is an unnatural strain that need not exist; these ones shall be compensated for their generosity and heart-felt giving in ways that go beyond the physical, materialistic accumulation of dollars. Even so, there is still only so much the few can do, due to current limitations of their own situations. I am asking you ones to please help The SPECTRUM when and where you can. Perhaps—if you are one who regularly waits for and shares another’s paper—you could simply subscribe yourself and at least help out in that way.

Many of you have waited to see what direction The SPECTRUM was going to take, prior to getting involved with supporting them. Neither The SPECTRUM, nor any of the ones associated with it, have any kind of a “get rich quick” scam to sell to you—nor do they ever intend such. There is no guarantee of return, but if you would like to make business loans rather than donations, this too would be welcome and gratefully accepted. The newspaper has all of its accounting in order for its IRS-approved Non-Profit 501(c)3 status, and can provide the necessary information upon request to any serious investor or donor who may wish to investigate same.

The reason for this formal request is simply that many of you ones who would naturally help such a cause are being “hit” very hard by the adversarial forces who are trying desperately to squelch the “fires” these ones publishing The SPECTRUM keep starting. The best place to strike is always the funding sources (or the potential funding sources) for this completely stops the widespread distribution of future potential “fires”.

Never underestimate the importance of your contributions. You ones have an opportunity to support an Inspired, daring publication dedicated to helping EDUCATE those who are ready for a look at the true nature of the games being played. Please help this worthy cause.

Please allow for a break here.

[Editor's note: The scribe needed to attend to an interruption. It is amazing to observe just how many such interruptions attempt to interfere with the receiving of these messages! Our scribes are under nearly constant attack—as is this newspaper for bringing you The Truth. The question of “when” or even “if” a next issue of this newspaper comes out is very uncertain as this note is being written.]

Let us continue, please. I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Light of Creator Source—The One Light. Thank you for asking, my friend.

WORLD POLITICS

Your world is in for great planned changes in October. Many a political maneuvering is being staged to cause great distraction while the “great illusion masters” juggle for position and control of public opinion. There is much more planned than simple political campaign rhetoric.

Pay very close attention to the world scene with regard to China and Taiwan, as well as the United States and the Arabian Desert. The artificial oil “crisis” is simply a mechanism to extract money from the population in the form of taxes so that these ones can mask the budget drains necessary to stage the next great illusionary war on the Middle East.

Dear ones, nothing is quite what it seems to be with respect to the true state of the world's economy, need for war, etc. War is simply a mechanism to kill off the young, strong, and innocent, while the controllers behind the scenes plunder the weak of their wealth; in this case it will be through the illusionary need of oil.

However, there is a growing world concern over the United Nations' strong-arm police tactics, and the likes of Russia and China are NOT happy with the games being played. They are growing tired of all the manipulations. The United Nations, with the support of the United States, uses the control of the world's food supplies to keep these two formidable world powers in check—but that will not continue for much longer.

There is great restlessness in China. As the country continues to expand, so too does its dependency on the rest of the world for its survival. Not unlike a desperate animal, China is running out of options with regard to the need to expand its empire. Though the UN recognizes this threat, it is also engineering same and is positioning itself so that the United States takes the brunt of this Chinese threat. Such is the ruthless nature of the game-players at the “top”. They will surely throw each other to the lions before the ending of the current play.

“What”, you may be asking, “does this have to do with me?” We ask that you consider taking what you feel to be reasonable precautions with regard to survival provisions for your family. Quite literally, World War III is being planned as the power brokers of the world continue to see that their mass mind-control programming is systematically breaking down. They are becoming more and more desperate to maintain control. The final analysis, from their twisted point of view, is that it is much easier to control a smaller number of people than an overcrowded world. Hence, these quite insane ones intend to precipitate events wherein large concentrations of the masses will be obliterated.

Please fear not these things, for there will be intervention as ones awaken to the sheer horror of what is to befall them. Great numbers will survive, and of these great numbers the majority will be the very ones who asked for protection from God. These ones will recognize that they survived for a reason, and the reason will be to NOT allow the Insanity to continue.

Know in your heart that the physical experience is transient and that the real you—the soul-you—is immortal and will persist long after the current physical drama is over. Fear not the rapid changes, for they too serve as a great catalyst for further growth and understanding. Learn to keep love in your heart at all times, despite your experiences during these times. There are many a trump card that we of the Lighted Realms have yet to play, and when the time is appropriate we can (and will) bring your world to a standstill if necessary and if circumstances warrant same.

Will all of this happen in October? No, of course not. There is simply planned great distractions as smaller players try desperately to maneuver for greater positions of power. These maneuverings will cause great distraction for the masses.

Remember that all wars, gas shortages, food shortages and such are controlled and planned out well in advance—and that both the problem and the desired solution is well orchestrated so as to bring about the necessary shift in mass consciousness. There are very few surprises that these dark, would-be controlling ones have not anticipated. However, the greatest unknown they face is a fully awakened Lightworker who is motivated to “blow the whistle” on their whole game.

The reason these ones get as far as they have gotten is because the average person has great difficulty believing anyone could possibly be so “twisted”, let alone pull-off such great hoaxes. And thus you have what I termed earlier the “great illusion masters” who generate and sell illusions for the sole purpose of corraling the masses into a very predictable direction and reactionary state.

At this point the only thing you can do is QUESTION everything you see and hear presented in the news. Ask yourself questions like: “Now, why do you suppose they are showing me the dissidents obstructing traffic abroad?” “How does this make me FEEL?” “Are they trying to get the same thing started here in the US (or Canada, etc.)?” “If so, then why?” (Hmm? Perhaps they wish to impose a state of martial law or have some reason to deploy troops on the streets of large cities?)

QUESTION ALL THAT YOU SEE AND HEAR!!!

Know that there are reasons for all things that take place, and in your world the reasons are often to further the private agendas of the few at the expense of the many. Allow for the unfolding illusion and LEARN TO WATCH as the general masses buy into the façades without any more information than what they are fed from a 10-minute “news alert”.

From our perspective of planetary overseers (Host of God), we see value in allowing the sleepy ones to come into their own awakening in their own time. Such awakenings can be quite harsh as the realization sinks-in and the ego shrieks in pain as the level of ignorance and arrogance is finally recognized.

The value to the soul experiencing same is quite high, and the overall net effect is positive, and thus such seeming atrocities are allowed. Remember the most important endeavor along a soul's journey is that of GROWTH. To say that God would never allow something like this to happen would be like saying to the average school-grade parent: “I don't believe you should allow your child to play video games where he shoots and kills people aimlessly for hours.”

It's just a game. When ones get tired of repeating the same game, over and over, they'll finally realize there is more to learn than shooting, blowing-up, and killing. At such a point in awareness will come the opportunity for these very ones to bring forth this sort of message in a time and place in the future. Until then, there is little to do other than to offer insight to those who have the eyes to see and the ears to hear.

Let us bring this to a close, please. There is much said here that will make many ones a bit uneasy.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn. I come as a member of the Host of Creator God—The One Light. I ask that you each be diligent in your search for personal understanding, and allow those who reject your understanding to do so without animosity in your heart toward them. Each must find their own way in their own time.

I leave you in the Light, Love, and Radiance of Creator God. Salu.

Update On Last Month's FEMA Report

9/29/00 RICK MARTIN

Concerning my Front Page feature investigation in last month's SPECTRUM, I would like to apologize for misspelling Michael Ruppert's name. It is Ruppert, not Suppert. Michael Ruppert publishes the newsletter From The Wilderness "for those committed to the fight against CIA drug dealing" at a cost of $35 per year. The address for From The Wilderness is: P. O. Box 6061-350, Sherman Oaks, CA 91413. His correct Internet website address is: www.copvcia.com. (We know people are paying attention, because he did get calls about the spelling of his name!)

• At approximately the same time as we were going to press with my FEMA report last month, the U.S. District Court in Boston denied Bill Tyree's motion to amend, and that case is now officially "closed". The case in Washington, D.C. against the Army is still open. I heard from Bill Tyree recently, and here's what he had to say on September 12, 2000:

"I wanted to enclose a short note. The CIA suit/FEMA was dismissed two weeks ago. The court said that the refiled 17-page suit was too long! We couldn't shorten it any more without the suit being insufficient to state the relevant information to survive dismissal—Catch-22. If you write what needs to be there, it's too long; if you don't, it's insufficient to get the job done. We still have a suit pending against the Army. That suit is in Washington, and we are waiting to see what the judge does in that case."

In another attached note, Bill Tyree informs me that I left out the Mafia's role in the FEMA article. He goes on to state: "They do the dirty work, the trafficking of drugs and laundering of money, as well as sowing chaos while the citizens demand more laws and sign away our freedoms."

The timeliness of the FEMA report in last month's issue of The SPECTRUM seems even more propitious when reading the many articles circulating around the Internet about the recent meeting of so many world leaders at the United Nations, and rumors of Clinton's intention to stay in office at all cost (which would, of course, kick-in FEMA's role through martial law). Well, for now we'll just classify those as rumors. In the final analysis, time will tell.

The following photograph was taken by Tony Latham of Fish & Game in Salmon, Idaho. Even amidst the destruction, Nature's beauty emerges. Is this the work of FEMA?

Tavistock: The Best Kept Secret In America

Editor's note: For some, the idea of behind-the-scenes world control such as is encapsulated in the idea of a New World Order is a bit hard to accept—until you become more familiar with some of the many “tentacles” of the “octopus” and how they reach into our lives. This is not something that has just sprung-up overnight; it has been an agenda, whereby The Few control The Many, that has been evolving for quite some time—long before the United States was born and soon regarded as a juicy new plum, ripe for the picking.

One excellent source for acquiring an overview of the interconnected hierarchy of the so-called “elite controllers” of this planet is Dr. John Coleman's comprehensive 1992 book called CONSPIRATORS' HIERARCHY: The Story Of The Committee Of 300 and his World In Review magazine (2533 North Carson Street, Suite J-118, Carson City NV 89706-0147; phone: 1-800-942-0821). Dr. Coleman's book is always an excellent reference to keep handy, as you'll see the same names and organizations popping up, over and over again, on the various news programs, especially where “expert” opinions are projected concerning major issues.

Recently a document came to our attention (from the <http://www.nidlink.com/~bobhard/tavistok.html> Internet website) which may, in an abbreviated format, help those who are either unfamiliar with this subject, or may appreciate a bit of a refresher course, to be able to place some of the major players on the playing field of the global control grid—particularly in answer to the question: “Who is running America?” It is then not difficult to extrapolate, from what is presented here, to how these same ones can control any country, and thus the entire planetary citizenry.

Reversing this slick stranglehold begins with an awakening or awareness that such sophisticated manipulation of the public even exists. The picture becomes more real with the actual naming of names and organizations which carry out the covert control agenda. Or as Dr. Coleman put it: “I shall carry on with my task until I have finally ripped off the mask of the entire secret upper-level parallel government that runs Britain and the U.S.”

9/21/00 “BAREFOOT BOB”

TAVISTOCK INSTITUTE
30 Tabernacle Street
London EC2A 4DD

Formed in 1947, the Tavistock Institute is an independent, not-for-profit organisation which seeks to combine research in the social sciences with professional practice. Problems of institution-building and organisational design and change are being tackled in all sectors—government, industry, and commerce, health and welfare, education, etc. Nationally and internationally, their clients range from multinationals to small community groups.

A growth area has been the use of a developmental approach to evaluation of new and experimental programmes, particularly in health, education, and community development. This has also produced new training events alongside the regular programme of group relations conferences. The Institute owns and edits the monthly journal Human Relations (published by Plenum Press) which is now in its 48th year, and has recently launched (in conjunction with Sage Publications) a new journal Evaluation.

Three elements combine to make the Institute unusual, if not unique: it has the independence of being entirely self-financing, with no subsidies from the government or other sources; the action research orientation places it between, but not in, the worlds of academia and consultancy; and its range of disciplines includes anthropology, economics, organisational behaviour, political science, psychoanalysis, psychology, and sociology.

So reads the opening paragraphs of the Tavistock Institute's www.tavistock.org/index.htm home page on the Internet. Under the listing <http://www.tavistock.org/docs/overview.htm> we read:

The Tavistock Institute is an independent social science research, advisory and training organisation. It was established in 1947 as a company limited by guarantee and has charitable status. It seeks to apply social science ideas and methods to problems of policy and practice. A distinctive feature of the Institute's work is its focus on social, organisational, and policy dynamics through action-research, organisational analysis, and formative evaluation. The Institute's programme of work currently includes projects with government, voluntary organisations, and industry in Britain, in Europe, and further afield. Its income is entirely derived from its own resources, research grants and contracts for specific research, consultancy, training, and publishing activities.

The staff of the Institute are made up of social scientists from a cross section of disciplines including sociology, economics, anthropology, psychology, policy science, and organisational studies. The Institute publishes extensively, including an international social science journal Human Relations which is committed to the integration of the social sciences, and in 1994 it launched, in conjunction with SAGE Publications, a new international journal Evaluation: The International Journal Of Theory, Research, And Practice.

* * *

The ideology of American foundations was created by the Tavistock Institute of Human Relations in London. In 1921, the Duke of Bedford, Marquess of Tavistock, the 11th Duke, gave a building to the Institute to study the effect of shellshock on British soldiers who survived World War I. Its purpose was to establish the “breaking point” of men under stress, under the direction of the British Army Bureau of Psychological Warfare, commanded by Sir John Rawlings-Reese.

Tavistock Institute is headquartered in London. Its prophet, Sigmund Freud, settled in Maresfield Gardens when he moved to England. He was given a mansion by Princess Bonaparte.

Tavistock's pioneer work in behavioral science, along Freudian lines of “controlling” humans, established it as the world center of foundation ideology. Its network now extends from the University of Sussex to the U.S. through the Stanford Research Institute, Esalen, MIT, Hudson Institute, Heritage Foundation, Center of Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown (where State Department personnel are trained), US Air Force Intelligence, and the Rand and Mitre corporations.

The personnel of the corporations are required to undergo indoctrination at one or more of these Tavistock controlled institutions. A network of secret groups, the Mont Pelerin Society, Trilateral Commission, Ditchley Foundation, and the Club of Rome is conduit for instructions to the Tavistock network.

Tavistock Institute developed the mass brainwashing techniques which were first used experimentally on American prisoners of war in Korea. Its experiments in crowd-control methods have been widely used on the American public, a surreptitious but nevertheless outrageous assault on human freedom by modifying individual behavior through topical psychology.

A German refugee, Kurt Lewin, became director of Tavistock in 1932. He came to the U.S. in 1933 as a "refugee", the first of many infiltrators, and set up the Harvard Psychology Clinic, which originated the propaganda campaign to turn the American public against Germany and involve us in World War II.

In 1938, Roosevelt executed a secret agreement with Churchill which, in effect, ceded U.S. sovereignty to England, because it agreed to let Special Operations Executive control U.S. policies. To implement this agreement, Roosevelt sent General Donovan to London for indoctrination before setting up OSS (now the CIA) under the aegis of SOE-SIS. The entire OSS program, as well as the CIA, has always worked on guidelines set up by the Tavistock Institute.

Tavistock Institute originated the mass civilian bombing raids carried out by Roosevelt and Churchill purely as a clinical experiment in mass terror, keeping records of the results as they watched the "guinea pigs" reacting under "controlled laboratory conditions". All Tavistock and American foundation techniques have a single goal—to break down the psychological strength of the individual and render him helpless to oppose the dictators of the World Order.

Any technique which helps to break down the family unit, and family-inculcated principles of religion, honor, patriotism, and sexual behavior, is used by the Tavistock scientists as weapons of crowd control. The methods of Freudian psychotherapy induce permanent mental illness in those who undergo this treatment by destabilizing their character. The victim is then advised to "establish new rituals of personal interaction", that is, to indulge in brief sexual encounters which actually set the participants adrift with no stable personal relationships in their lives, destroying their ability to establish or maintain a family.

Tavistock Institute has developed such power in the U.S. that no one achieves prominence in any field unless he has been trained in behavioral science at Tavistock or one of its subsidiaries. Henry Kissinger, whose meteoric rise to power is otherwise inexplicable, was a German refugee and student of Sir John Rawlings-Reese at SHAEF. Dr. Peter Bourne, a Tavistock Institute psychologist, picked Jimmy Carter for President of the U.S. solely because Carter had undergone an intensive brainwashing program administered by Admiral Hyman Rickover at Annapolis.

The "experiment" in compulsory racial integration in the U.S. was organized by Ronald Lippert, of the OSS and the American Jewish Congress, and director of child training at the Commission on Community Relations. The program was designed to break down the individual's sense of personal knowledge in his identity, his racial heritage.

Through the Stanford Research Institute, Tavistock controls the National Education Association. The Institute of Social Research at the National Training Lab brainwashes the leading executives of business and government. Such is the power of Tavistock that our entire space program was scrapped for nine years so that the Soviets could catch up. The hiatus was demanded in an article written by Dr. Anatol Rapport, and was promptly granted by the government, to the complete mystification of everyone connected with NASA. Another prominent Tavistock operation is the Wharton School of Finance at the University of Pennsylvania.

A single common denominator identifies the common Tavistock strategy—the use of drugs. The infamous MK-Ultra program of the CIA, in which unsuspecting CIA officials were given LSD, and their reactions studied like "guinea pigs", resulted in several deaths. The U.S. Government had to pay millions in damages to the families of the victims, but the culprits were never indicted. The program originated when Sandoz AG, a Swiss drug firm, owned by S.G. Warburg Co. of London, developed Lysergic Acid. Roosevelt's advisor, James Paul Warburg, son of Paul Warburg who wrote the Federal Reserve Act, and nephew of Max Warburg who had financed Hitler, set up the Institute for Policy Studies to promote the drug. The result was the LSD "counter-culture" of the 1960s, the "student revolution", which was financed by $25 million from the CIA.

One part of MK-Ultra was the Human Ecology Fund. The CIA also paid Dr. Herbert Kelman of Harvard to carry out further experiments on mind control. In the 1950s, the CIA financed extensive LSD experiments in Canada. Dr. D. Ewen Cameron, president of the Canadian Psychological Association and director of Royal Victorian Hospital in Montreal, received large payments from the CIA to give 53 patients large doses of LSD and record their reactions.

The patients were drugged into weeks of sleep and then given electric shock treatments. One victim, the wife of a member of the Canadian Parliament, is now suing the U.S. companies who provided the drug for the CIA. All the records of the CIA's drug testing program were ordered destroyed by the head of MK-Ultra.

Because all efforts of the Tavistock Institute are directed toward producing cyclical collapse, the effect of the CIA programs are tragically apparent. R. Emmett Tyrell Jr., writing in the Washington Post for August 20, 1984, cites the "squalid consequences of the '60s radicals in SDS" as resulting in "the growing rate of illegitimacy, petty lawlessness, drug addiction, welfare, VD, and mental illness".

This is the legacy of the Warburgs and the CIA. Their principal agency, the Institute for Policy Studies, was funded by James Paul Warburg; its co-founder was Marcus Raskin, protégé of McGeorge Bundy, president of the Ford Foundation. Bundy had Raskin appointed to the post of President Kennedy's personal representative on the National Security Council, and in 1963 funded Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), through which the CIA operated the drug culture.

Today the Tavistock Institute operates a $6 billion-a-year network of foundations in the U.S., all of it funded by U.S. taxpayers' money. Ten major institutions are under its direct control, with 400 subsidiaries, and 3000 other study groups and think tanks which originate many types of programs to increase the control of the World Order over the American people.

The Stanford Research Institute, adjoining the Hoover Institution, is a $150 million-a-year operation with 3300 employees. It carries on program surveillance for Bechtel, Kaiser, and 400 other companies, and extensive intelligence operations for the CIA. It is the largest institution on the West Coast promoting mind control and the behavioral sciences.

One of the key agencies as a conduit for secret instructions from Tavistock is the Ditchley Foundation, founded in 1957. The American branch of the Ditchley Foundation is run by Cyrus Vance, former Secretary of State and director of the Rockefeller Foundation, and Winston Lord, president of the Council on Foreign Relations.

One of the principal (but little known) operations of the Rockefeller Foundation has been its techniques for controlling world agriculture. Its director, Kenneth Wernimont, set up Rockefeller-controlled agricultural programs throughout Mexico and Latin America. The independent farmer is a great threat to the World Order because he produces for himself, and because his produce can be converted into capital, which gives him independence. In Soviet Russia, the Bolsheviks believed they had attained total control over the people; they were dismayed to find their plans threatened by the stubborn independence of the small farmers, the Kulaks. Stalin ordered the OGPU to seize all food and animals of the Kulaks, and to starve them out.

The Chicago American, February 25, 1935, carried a front-page headline: "SIX MILLION PERISH IN SOVIET FAMINE; Peasants' Crops Seized, They And Their Animals Starve". To draw attention from this atrocity, it was later alleged that the Germans, not the Soviets, had killed six million people, the number taken from the Chicago American headline by a Chicago publicist.

The Communist Party, the Party of the Peasants & Workers, exterminated the peasants and enslaved the workers. Many totalitarian regimes have found the small farmer to be their biggest stumbling block. The French Reign of Terror was directed, not against the aristocrats, many of whom were sympathetic to it, but against the small farmers who refused to turn over their grain to the revolutionary tribunals in exchange for the worthless assignats. In the United States, the foundations are presently engaged in the same type of war of extermination against the American farmer.

The traditional formula of land plus labor for the farmer has been altered due to the farmer's need for purchasing power, to buy industrial goods needed in his farming operations. Because of this need for capital, the farmer is especially vulnerable to the World Order's manipulation of interest rates, which is bankrupting him. Just as in the Soviet Union in the early 1930s, when Stalin ordered the Kulaks to give up their small plots of land to live and work on the collective farms, the American small farmer faces the same type of extermination, being forced to give up his small plot of land to become a hired hand for the big agricultural trusts.

The Brookings Institution and other foundations originated the monetary programs implemented by the Federal Reserve System to destroy the American farmer, a replay of the Soviet tragedy in Russia, with one proviso that the farmer will be allowed to survive if he becomes a slave worker of the giant trusts.

Once the citizen becomes aware of the true role of the foundations, he can understand the high interest rates, high taxes, the destruction of the family, the degradation of the churches into forums for revolution, the subversion of the universities into CIA cesspools of drug addiction, and the halls of government into sewers of international espionage and intrigue. The American citizen can now understand why every agent of the federal government is against him: the alphabet agencies—the FBI, IRS, CIA, and BATF—must make war on the citizen in order to carry out the programs of the foundations.

The foundations are in direct violation of their charters, which commit them to do "charitable" work, because they make no grants which are not part of a political goal. The charge has been made, and never denied, that the Heritage-AEI network has at least two KGB moles on its staff. The employment of professional intelligence operatives as "charitable" workers, as was done in the Red Cross mission to Russia in 1917, exposes the sinister political, economic, and social goals which the World Order requires the foundations to achieve through their "bequests".

Not only is this tax fraud, because the foundations are granted tax exemption solely to do charitable work, but it is criminal syndicalism, conspiracy to commit offenses against the United States of America, Constitutional Law 213, Corpus Juris Secundum 16.

For the first time, the close interlocking of the foundation "syndicate" has been revealed by the names of its principle incorporators—Daniel Coit Gilman, who incorporated the Peabody Fund and the John Slater Fund, and became an incorporator of the General Education Board (now the Rockefeller Foundation); Gilman, who also incorporated the Russell Trust in 1856, later became an incorporator of the Carnegie Institution with Andrew Dickson White (Russell Trust) and Frederic A. Delano.

Delano also was an original incorporator of the Brookings Institution and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Daniel Coit Gilman incorporated the Russell Sage Foundation with Cleveland H. Dodge of the National City Bank.

These foundation incorporators have been closely linked with the Federal Reserve System, the War Industries Board of World War I, the OSS of World War II, and the CIA. They have also been closely linked with the American International Corporation, which was formed to instigate the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia.

Delano, an uncle of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, was on the original Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in 1914. His brother-in-law founded the influential Washington law firm of Covington and Burling. The Delanos and other ruling families of the World Order trace their lineage directly back to William of Orange and the regime which granted the charter of the Bank of England.

TAVISTOCK INSTITUTIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

Flow Laboratories: Gets contracts from the National Institutes of Health.

Merle Thomas Corporation: Gets contracts from the U.S. Navy, analyzes data from satellites.

Walden Research: Does work in the field of pollution control.

Planning Research Corporation, Arthur D. Little, G.E. "TEMPO", Operations Research Inc.: Part of approximately 350 firms who conduct research and conduct surveys, make recommendations to government. They are part of what President Eisenhower called "a possible danger to public policy that could itself become captive of a scientific-technological elite".

Brookings Institution: Dedicates its work to what it calls a "national agenda". Wrote President Hoover's program, President Roosevelt's "New Deal", the Kennedy Administration's "New Frontiers" program (deviation from it may have cost John F. Kennedy his life), and President Johnson's "Great Society". Brookings has been telling the United States Government how to conduct its affairs for the past 70 years and is still doing so.

Hudson Institute: This institution has done more to shape the way Americans react to political and social events, think, vote, and generally conduct themselves, than perhaps any except the BIG FIVE. Hudson specializes in defense policy research and relations with the USSR. Most of its military work is classified as SECRET. (One idea during the Vietnam War was to build a moat around Saigon.) Hudson may be properly classified as one of the Committee of 300's BRAINWASHING establishments. One of its largest clients is the U.S. Department of Defense, which includes matters of civil defense, national security, military policy, and arms control.

National Training Laboratories: One of the key institutions established for this purpose in the United States was the National Training Laboratories (NTL). Founded in 1947 by members of the Tavistock network in the United States and located originally on an estate in Bethel, Maine, NTL had as its explicit purpose the brainwashing of leaders of the government, educational institutions, and corporate bureaucracies in the Tavistock method, and then using these "leaders" to either themselves run Tavistock group sessions in their organizations or to hire other similarly trained group leaders to do the job.

The "nuts and bolts" of the NTL operation revolve around the particular form of Tavistock degenerate psychology known as "group dynamics" developed by German Tavistock operative Kurt Lewin, who emigrated to the United States in the 1930s and whose students founded NTL. In a Lewinite brainwashing group, a number of individuals, from varying backgrounds and personalities, are manipulated by a "group leader" to form a "consensus" of opinion, achieving a new "group identity". The key to the process is the creation of a controlled environment, in which stress is introduced (sometimes called dissonance) to crack an individual's belief structure. Using the peer pressure of other group members, the individual is "cracked" and a new personality emerges with new values. The degrading experience causes the person to deny that any change has taken place. In that way, an individual is brainwashed without the victim knowing what has taken place.

This method is the same, with some minor modification, used in all so-called "sensitivity groups” or “T-groups” or, in the more extreme rock-drug-sex counterculture form, “touchy-feely groups” such as the kind popularized from the 1960s onward by the Esalen Institute, which was set up with the help of NTL.

From the mid-1950s onward, NTL put the majority of the nation’s corporate leaderships through such brainwashing programs, while running similar programs for the State Department, the Navy, the Department of Education, and other sections of the federal bureaucracy. There is no firm estimate of the number of Americans who have been put through this process in the last 40 years at either NTL or, as it is now known, the NTL Institute for Applied Behavioral Sciences, which is based in Rosslyn, Virginia, or its West Coast base of operations, the Western Training Laboratories in Group Development, or in various satellite institutions. The most reliable estimate is in the several millions.

One of the groups that went through the NTL mill in the 1950s was the leadership of the National Education Association, the largest organization of teachers in the United States. Thus, the NEA’s outlook has been “shaped” by Tavistock, through the NTL. In 1964, the NTL Institute became a direct part of the NEA, with the NTL setting up “group sessions” for all its affiliates. With funding from the Department of Education, the NTL Institute drafted the programs for the training of the nation’s primary and secondary school teachers, and has a hand as well in developing the content of educational “reforms” including OBE.

NTL is also known as the International Institute for Applied Behavioral Sciences. This institute is a brainwashing center in artificial stress training whereby participants suddenly find themselves immersed in defending themselves against vicious accusations. NTL takes in the National Education Association, the largest teacher group in the United States.

While officially decrying “racism”, it is interesting to note that NTL, working with NEA, produced a paper proposing education vouchers which would separate the hard-to-teach children from the brighter ones, and funding would be allocated according to the number of difficult children who would be separated from those who progressed at a normal rate. The proposal was not taken up.

University of Pennsylvania, Wharton School of Finance & Commerce (Founded by Eric Trist): One of the “brain trusts” of Tavistock, Wharton has become one of the more important Tavistock centers in so far as “Behavioral Research” is concerned. Wharton attracts clients such as the U.S. Department of Labor. It teaches how to produce “cooked” statistics at Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates Incorporated. This method was very much in demand as we came to the close of 1991, with millions more out of work than was reflected in USDL statistics. Wharton’s Economic Modeling is used by every major company in the United States, Western Europe, the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations, and the World Bank.

Institute For The Future: This is not a typical Tavistock institution in that it is funded by the Ford Foundation, yet it draws its long-range forecasting from the mother of all think tanks. Institute For The Future projects what it believes to be changes that will be taking place in time frames of fifty years. So called “Delphi Panels” decide what is normal and what is not, and prepare position papers to “steer” government in the right direction to head off such groups as “people creating civil disorder”. (This could be patriotic groups demanding abolition of graduated taxes, or demanding that their right to bear arms is not infringed.)

This institute recommends action such as liberalizing abortion laws, drug usage, and that cars entering an urban area pay tolls, teaching birth control in public schools, requiring registration of firearms, making use of drugs a non-criminal offense, legalizing homosexuality, paying students for scholastic achievements, making zoning controls a preserve of the state, offering bonuses for family planning, and last, but most frightening, a Pol Pot Cambodia-style proposal that new communities be established in rural areas (concentration camp compounds). As can be observed, many of their goals have already been more than fully realized.

INSTITUTE FOR POLICY STUDIES (IPS): One of the “Big Three”, IPS has shaped and reshaped United States policies, foreign and domestic, since it was founded by James P. Warburg and the Rothschild entities in the United States.

Its networks in America include the League for Industrial Democracy. Lead players in the League for Industrial Democracy have included Jeane Kirkpatrick, former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Irwin Suall of the ADL, Eugene Rostow, arms control negotiator, Lane Kirkland, Labor Leader, and Albert Shanker.

IPS was incorporated in 1963 by Marcus Raskin and Richard Barnett, both highly trained Tavistock Institute graduates. The objectives of IPS came from an agenda laid down for it by the Tavistock Institute, one of the most notable being to create the “New Left” as a grass roots movement in the U.S. It’s been said that Barnett and Raskin controlled such diverse elements as the Black Panthers, Daniel Ellsberg, National Security Council staff member Halprin, The Weathermen Underground, the Venceramos and the campaign staff of candidate George McGovern. No scheme was too big for IPS and its controllers to take on and manage.

Through its many powerful lobbying groups on Capitol Hill, IPS relentlessly used its “Big Stick” to beat Congress. IPS has a network of lobbyists, all supposedly operating independently but in actual fact acting cohesively, so that Congressmen are pummeled from all sides by seemingly different and varied lobbyists. In this way, IPS was, and is still, able to successfully sway individual Representatives and Senators to vote for "the trend, the way things are going". By using key pointmen on Capitol Hill, IPS was able to break into the very infrastructure of our legislative system and the way it works.

IPS became, and remains to this day, one of the most prestigious "think tanks" controlling foreign policy decisions which we-the-people foolishly believe are those of our lawmakers.

By sponsoring militant activism at home and with links to revolutionaries abroad, by engineering such victories as "The Pentagon Papers" besieging the corporate structure, bridging the credibility gap between underground movements and acceptable political activism, by penetrating religious organizations and using them to sow discord in America, such as radical racial policies under the guise of religion, using establishment media to spread IPS ideas, and then supporting them, IPS has lived up to the role which it was founded to play.

STANFORD RESEARCH INSTITUTE:

Jesse Hobson, the first president of Stanford Research Institute, in a 1952 speech made it clear what lines the institute was to follow. Stanford can be described as one of the "jewels" in Tavistock's crown in its rule over the United States. Founded in 1946 immediately after the close of WWII, it was presided over by Charles A. Anderson, with emphasis on mind-control research and "future sciences". Included under the Stanford umbrella was the Charles F. Kettering Foundation, which developed the "Changing Images Of Man" upon which the Aquarian Conspiracy rests.

Some of Stanford's major clients and contracts were at first centered around the defense establishment but, as Stanford grew, so did the diversity of its services:

- Applications of Behavioral Sciences to Research Management
- Office of Science and Technology
- SRI Business Intelligence Program
- U.S. Department of Defense Directorate of Defense Research and Engineering
- U.S. Department of Defense Office of Aerospace Research

Among corporations seeking Stanford's services were Wells Fargo Bank, Bechtel Corporation, Hewlett Packard, Bank of America, McDonnell Douglas Corporation, Blyth, Eastman Dillon, and TRW Company. One of Stanford's more secret projects was extensive work on chemical and bacteriological warfare (CAB) weapons.

Stanford Research is plugged into at least 200 smaller "think tanks" doing research into every facet of life in America. This is ARPA networking and represents the emergence of probably the most far reaching effort to control the environment of every individual in the country.

At present, Stanford's computers are linked with 2500 "sister" research consoles which include the CIA, Bell Telephone Laboratories, U.S. Army Intelligence, The Office of Naval Intelligence (ONI), Rand, MIT, Harvard, and UCLA. Stanford plays a key role in that it is the "library", cataloging all ARPA documentation.

"Other agencies" (one can use one's imagination here) are allowed to search through SRI's "library" for key words, phrases, look through sources, and update their own master files with those of SRI. The Pentagon uses SRI's master files extensively, and there is little doubt that other U.S. Government agencies do the same. Pentagon "command and control" problems are worked out by Stanford.

While ostensibly these apply only to weapons and soldiers, there is absolutely no guarantee that the same research could not and will not be turned to civilian applications. Stanford is known to be willing to do anything for anyone.

MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY, ALFRED P. SLOAN SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT: This major institute is not generally recognized as being a part of Tavistock U.S.A. Most people look upon it as being a purely American institution, but that is far from the truth. MIT-Alfred Sloan can be roughly divided into the following groups:

- Contemporary Technology
- Industrial Relations
- NASA-ERC Computer Research Laboratories
- Office of Naval Research Group,

Psychology

- Systems Dynamics

Some of MIT's clients are:

- American Management Association
- Committee for Economic Development
- GTE
- Institute for Defense Analysis (IDA)
- NASA
- National Academy of Sciences
- National Council of Churches
- Sylvania
- TRW
- U.S. Army
- U.S. Department of State
- U.S. Navy
- U.S. Treasury
- Volkswagen Company

RAND RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION: Without a doubt, RAND is THE think tank most beholden to Tavistock Institute and certainly the RIIA's most prestigious vehicle for control of United States policies at every level.

Specific RAND policies that became operative include our ICBM program, prime analyses for U.S. foreign policy making, instigator of space programs, U.S. nuclear policies, corporate analyses, hundreds of projects for the military, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) in relation to the use of mind-altering drugs like peyote, LSD (as used in the covert MK-Ultra operation which lasted for 20 years).

Some of RAND's clients include:

- American Telephone and Telegraph Company (AT&T)
- Chase Manhattan Bank
- International Business Machines (IBM)
- National Science Foundation
- Republican Party
- TRW
- U.S. Air Force
- U.S. Department of Health
- U.S. Department of Energy

There are literally THOUSANDS of highly important companies, government institutions, and organizations that make use of RAND's services. To list them all would be impossible.

Among RAND's specialties is a study group that predicts the timing and the direction of a thermonuclear war, plus working out the many scenarios based upon its findings. RAND was once accused of being commissioned by the USSR to work out terms of surrender of the United States Government, an accusation that went all the way to the United States Senate, where it was taken up by Senator Symington and subsequently fell victim to scorn poured out by the establishment press.

BRAINWASHING remains the primary function of RAND. S

Longtime Journalist Asks: Does “Global Governance” By UN Really Mean “One World Order”?

Editor's note: In conjunction with our article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM on the Tavistock Institute, we present the following gem on the REAL United Nations, which crossed our path recently and likewise offers thoughtful glimpses into the “Shadow Government” which operates behind the scenes on a worldwide basis.

Many who wonder about the reality and motives of a New World Order or a One World Government—and have difficulty accepting that such a monster could actually exist and might be growing in strength every day—may find it illuminating to walk along the path this longtime journalist presents in describing his own journey of inquiry into The Truth.

Words can be two-edged swords when used by those whose motive is deceit. One who makes his living with words is in a particularly astute position to analyze such deception.

He reflects upon several very key and very fundamental attributes of independence from tyranny and points out how these stand in the way of final world control of The Many by The Few—but not for long.

Perhaps writing from the seasoned perspective that comes from 40 years in the business of generating and dispersing information on an international level, mixed with a serious dose of personal honesty in looking at the data, is enough to help other inquiring minds likewise see the noose that is being tightened around our necks ever so gently behind the distractions of pretty rhetoric.

These are not the words of an American journalist but, if travel is indeed the Great Educator and eye opener, then it is possible his perspective conveys more love for the great experiment in freedom that America represents (and stands to lose) than may be appreciated by ones who are so close as to take that freedom for granted.

9/12/00 LONGTIME JOURNALIST

Below is my contribution, as a career journalist (now retired), to the march protesting against the imposition of the One World Order—also known as “Global Governance”.

Please feel free to use and distribute as you wish. I have not appended my name because that is not important. The information, however, is VERY important, and readers should focus on that, rather than the writer.

I wrote the article recently, after a few decades of contemplating exactly what this UN organization is all about—and reading the UN's own report on Global Governance.

I am not an American, but I was in New York in 1977 to apply for a job with the United Nations.

I walked to the UN building from my hotel, and was struck by the flags of all the countries that are displayed outside the UN building. It was a sub-zero Christmas.

I observed the flags up there in the weak winter sunlight—and then, from the shadows of the New York streets, I saw a hungry, unkempt, dishevelled, homeless American do a “dumpster dive” into a trash can right outside the UN building. He was starving and looking for food.

I was an international newsman, a photo-journalist, and a TV news cameraman. As I said, I was in New York to apply for a job with the United Nations because, at the time, it seemed like this would be an ultimate feather in my cap as a reporter and film maker. But suddenly, I had to ask myself: “What is wrong with this picture?”

I began to question, seriously, what this UN system is really all about. I asked myself: “If America cannot take care of its own, if its people must seek their morning meal in a trash can, right outside the UN building, why is America host to this global organization that pretends that it seeks to solve the world's hunger crisis?”

I read the UN charter—and found that it had cunningly paraphrased the first words of the U.S. Constitution as the first of many subtle ways in which it has molded public opinion in order to establish its claim to respectability.

I read a lot more, and came to the conclusion, reluctantly but honestly, that when one studies the UN objectively, it turns out to be nothing but a major con job designed to misuse the loyalty Americans have to their own history, in order to fool them into accepting “Global Governance”.

Further, if one were to read the original Declaration Of Independence, and simply insert the words “Global Governance” or “One World Government” for every reference to the tyrannical activity of the King, one would be astounded at the similarities between then—and what faces the citizens of the United States right now.

Here's my article:

Judas And The Sheep (Or, Does “Global Governance” Really Mean “One World Order”?)

by Longtime Journalist

I have applied 40 years' experience as an international journalist to analyzing the UN report on “Global Governance”—and come to the conclusion that when it is instituted, it will change the face of the world, and the United States in particular, in ways never foreseen by the Founding Fathers.

My background in the dominant media had me convinced for many years that the UN was a completely benign and altruistic organization, established for the best of all reasons—to promote health, freedom, peace, and political and economic stability.

Like Walter Cronkite and Dan Rather, I thought permanent peace required some form of global body of law, and perhaps even a global government.

But I have changed my mind.

I eventually had to ask myself: “Was there REALLY an agenda aimed at One World Order hidden within the report that was to be discussed at the United Nations Millennium Forum in New York in May 2000? Have the fears of so-called conspiracy theorists finally been realized?” And “Will those who claim we are on the slippery slope to a single global government, and the loss of all freedoms, be vindicated in their beliefs?”

I cannot find a mainstream publication willing to publish these conclusions (and that in itself supports the theory that the dominant media is biased in favor of this UN agenda), so I am offering what I have written for free use.

I have analyzed hundreds, perhaps thousands of reports and speeches over the years, but it was not till I visited the United States—and fell in love with the principles enshrined in the Constitution and the Bill Of Rights—that I fully understood how unique in world history the US really is.

And now it is in real danger of losing every bit of its hard-won sovereignty, with its people nothing more than worker ants to be used and discarded for the benefit of a “king” whose sole interest is power and control.

The United States has its faults. It has created implacable enemies around the globe, and may someday pay the price for that. But it is also in serious danger of imploding, disappearing as a sovereign nation, because today’s leaders are so clearly in favor of the “One World Order” that has been espoused for the past half century.

So I analyzed this report, which is available for all to see on the Internet, and came to the conclusion that any report put out by the UN can be interpreted two ways. One perception—the comforting one—foresees peace and plenty in a world lacking in want. The second—the uncomfortable one, but the one that is most likely—is a world of total control, whether it is referred to as “One World Order” by some, or as “Global Governance” by the UN itself. The “king” has simply changed his clothes.

Unfortunately, what this means is that both individual and national evolution are facing extinction, while any revolution—of the kind which established the United States and set it free from past tyranny—is doomed to failure.

Individual evolution requires freedom of choice, personal liberty, and the right to pursue happiness—all of which are the birthright of Americans, and all of which are denied under the concept of Global Governance.

Revolution is what has been precipitated when those freedoms have been removed, or given away. But, under Global Governance, all revolutionaries will be “removed” as soon as they become a problem.

Neither evolution, nor revolution, will be possible if the world embraces global governance. Yet that is precisely what the world is being asked to do.

In fact, the United States, indeed the whole world, seems poised to embrace the very thing which so many have fought so hard to break free from—and which a few, a very few, are determined to impose.

Society at this turn of the millennium is, one could argue, actually going through a state of evolution, for the better. After a century of unbelievably horrific wars and skirmishes, we have finally—so we are led to believe—reached a point where we are solving such problems by negotiating and implementing political and trade alliances and treaties, ostensibly designed to invoke a better world.

But the one leading the charge toward this “better life for all” is not the United States. It is the United Nations, which has created an aura for itself over a period of half a century as the body to which all nations should look for resolutions to the many perceived problems facing the world.

The United Nations and its so-called Security Council was established at a meeting in San Francisco in 1945, as the Second World War was winding down. It was established to replace the League of Nations which, in turn, had been set up after the First World War with the publicly espoused intent of creating a forum in which disputes could be settled by words, not war.

The benefit of 20/20 hindsight shows very clearly that both bodies have been abject failures as “peace keepers”. The League of Nations did nothing to stop WW2. The United Nations did nothing to prevent the slaughter of millions in Vietnam, Indochina, Cambodia, Tibet, Africa, Ireland and elsewhere.

But what they apparently did do, was divert public attention from any serious questioning of certain hidden agendas—the main one being the eventual and total control of the world by a very few very intelligent and crafty groups of people.

And this is where the national ego of the United States and its people has been used to con the greatest nation on Earth into believing it is the peace keeper of the world (or the world policeman), and that it is a natural extension of that role to embrace and support every so-called “peace keeping” activity of the United Nations.

Ironically, the United Nations is headquartered in New York on land alongside the East River, where industry and slaughterhouses once bloomed. That land was donated by John D Rockefeller, Jr. And the American ego, being what it is, seems to imagine that if the UN is headquartered in its most prestigious city, The Big Apple, then it simply must have the world’s best interests at heart.

The fact is that the United States has simply provided most of the muscle, the money, and the manpower to help those who worked behind the scenes to establish the UN—and who are working their agenda to this day—to achieve their goals. Americans have died in vain, unaware that they (or their children, their brothers, and their sisters) have spilled their blood in a series of wars which have done nothing but bring “Global Governance” closer, and closer, step by stealthy step.

There was a good reason to spill blood, centuries ago, in the effort to throw off the yoke of British royal tyranny. But nevertheless, that was a terrible price to pay to fulfill a great yearning for real freedom. But to the early settlers, subjected to years of injustice and despotic British rule, there was no alternative. And so the United States was born.

The Preamble to the US Constitution says: “We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessing of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.”

Now, in what feels like a perverted misuse of those high ideals, the United Nations is using similar language to mold public opinion toward the concept of a future world, free of bloodshed, full of peace, justice, and tranquility, liberty for some, and a “ready reaction force” to control the rest.

Selling itself for decades as the watchdog and provider for: “We the peoples of the United Nations determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind [the first words of its own Charter, and the paraphrase of the Preamble to the U.S. Constitution], the UN has worked diligently to expand its influence into almost every single sector of global society.”

Almost no one pauses to reflect on the fact that both the League of Nations and the United Nations were abysmal failures at their task. Instead, such failures are excused, indeed welcomed, as reasons for even more controls, more restrictions on individual and national freedoms, more taxes, more treaties that usurp the laws of sovereign nations, and more young soldiers pressed into service—not to defend their homes and families, but to die in some foreign land for the sake of some corporation’s economic interest.

On the other hand, if their real task was to eventually take control of the world, then the League of Nations and the UN have been an almost unqualified success.

Portraying itself as the well-intentioned creation of concerned leaders and nations, the UN has ceaselessly involved itself in many pressing issues, from wars to coups to peace-keeping functions in far-flung places around the globe. It has constantly touted itself as the well-reasoned provider and creator of discussion forums on all manner of social issues, from the environment to women’s and children’s rights, to disarmament and health.

And despite the concerns voiced by innumerable critics, the UN has insisted that its intentions are purely honorable, and it has made many friends among those who mold public opinion and make future policy.

And now, at the beginning of the 21st Century, it has positioned itself to boldly make its case for “Global Governance” to which all nations should, in time, pay homage.

Through careful manipulation of public opinion (which, to put it bluntly, means mind control), aided by successive governments and politicians, the UN has itself evolved. When it was established in 1945, there were those who feared its potential to become a globe-encircling octopus with unlimited and unfettered powers. But as the dramas of the Cold War played out, and despite shoe-thumping headline-grabbing antics of the likes of Kruschev, the new generations of humanity, born and grown under constant publicity about the UN as a “peace keeper”, now believe without thought or question that the UN is mankind’s only real hope for international economic and social stability.

During the 20th Century, powerful bodies such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization were progressively introduced, and in turn became major influences in international economics and trade.

On the battle front, what started out as small UN peace-keeping forces eventually became real standing armies, coalitions, and UN/NATO derivatives, such as those which are deployed in the hot spots of Europe. In most cases, there is evidence that some economic imperative has co-existed with the appearance of civil or military unrest. But it is the function of “peace-keeping” which has been focused on by those selling the idea that UN soldiers can bring peace to a troubled world. The battles going on behind the scenes for control of raw materials, natural resources, and the future productive capacity of a nation’s people, never make the news.

But despite the “trust us, we’re here to help you” rhetoric and the claims that the UN is fulfilling its function, critics still exist, and they charge that the UN is determined to take over the world, by stealth, using all possible means, mostly involving subterfuge, to achieve its goals.

Having consciously converted from supporter to critic, I would say the octopus has evolved, and is now transmuting. It is becoming a giant. And it is using ink to both hide and promote its intent. The report on Global Governance is the ink.

Critics also cite the fact that, in the name of peace, conflicts like Desert Storm were embarked upon by “Coalition Forces” so the “economic interests” of countries such as the United States could be defended. They say that it is no longer the role of the UN or coalition forces to simply intervene and restore peace or depose dictators. Instead, they say the UN is determined to impose its own agenda for world government, including global control of commerce, on those who cannot or will not otherwise be controlled.

Further, some insist that the UN is nothing but a front for the background players whose objective from day one has always been to establish a global government. In the 1990s, they cited President George Bush’s frequent references to a One World Order and a New World Order as evidence that this agenda was reaching its climax.

That agenda is said to have its roots in plans which were first formulated behind the scenes long before the Second World War. Even Hitler is believed to have played a part in this secret scheme, for he is quoted as using the phrase

“One World Order” during his brief but terrible tenure as the would-be Fuhrer of the Third Reich, with its plans for global control that cost the lives of millions. Hitler—reputedly nothing but a paper-hanger who came to power on the popular vote—is said to have actually been financed by the mega-corporations of the time, corporations owned and controlled by the world’s richest dynasties whose actual intent was to install a puppet (Hitler) in Germany so they could then regulate the labor force to their own advantage.

Oddly enough, that same scenario now seems to have taken on global implications, except that the “dictators” will be those who get away with imposing “Global Governance” and the work force will be a global one.

Those family and corporate dynasties exist to this day. They are older and wiser, smarter and stealthier. They have donated much to the politicians of the world, as if they understand very clearly that politicians may come and go—but dynasties and corporations, carefully managed, can go on for hundreds of years.

So who controls who?

Modern corporations continue to exert their influence around the globe, regardless of political conditions. And the UN, in its own words, sees them as valuable, even indispensable, allies in its Global Governance scenario.

Since the formation of the UN, the idea of “One World Order” has been touted regularly by UN secretaries general and others. But in the past few years, the term seems to have virtually disappeared off the radar screen. Instead of “One World Order” we now have “Global Governance” as the public buzz words. It’s as if the diplomats of the UN have taken a cue from the stealth fighter. On the face of it, they are to all intents and purposes invisible, yet they are piloting the UN toward its target under a cloak of electronic deception—ready to appear out of the blue and take their objective completely by surprise.

Astute UN report writers have discovered a new twist to their craft of semantics. Witness the fact that the buzz words about One World Order seem to have dropped out of sight in recent years. They have disappeared from public utterance. And it seems the dominant (corporate owned) media is convinced that this means there never was such a plan in the first place.

But was there? Indeed, IS there?

Well, it depends on how you look at the evidence, and how you read the UN’s own documents, for when you do, if you do so objectively, you can most certainly come to the conclusion that this actually is their real but cloaked intent.

In fact, the UN’s plans can actually be clearly discerned in the most recent report by the UN Commission On Global Governance, titled “The Millennium Year And The Reform Process”.

Like every other massive report produced to overwhelm the public and distract the media, this one has been crafted by politicians who seem incredibly adept at the art of spin doctoring. As always, they point out problems, and then offer their version of the solution. The solution, of course, is obviously in their best interests—though, as always, they claim they are dedicated to “the public interest” and that is their only pure-as-the-driven-snow motivation.

As for the public, there is no other way to say it, except with a hackneyed cliché. With few exceptions, the public really is like a flock of sheep, easily driven in whatever direction the farmer and his dogs might select. Politicians know that.

Thus, like dogs rounding up sheep, they will bark when necessary, or move quietly forward, then retreat a little, or slide left and right to outflank the flock. But always, the flock is being herded in a particular direction. Progress may appear to stall for awhile, and the sheep will settle down, unaware that the pause in their progress was simply to allow the shepherd (the one who is often out of sight, but who controls the dogs) to open another gate to herd the sheep through. And, if any of the sheep show enough wit to question their situation, or to suggest to others in the flock that their destination just might eventually be the slaughterhouse, those sheep are quickly bitten by well-trained dogs. Fear instantly floods through the flock. They turn their back on the silly individuals who question authority, cluster together, and move on as directed.

Politicians of every persuasion become masters at this technique, and those who work for the United Nations are no exception. Let us say they have an agenda, they have a world full of sheep, and they have a destination—not necessarily a slaughterhouse as such, but a shearing shed at least. By analogy, that is the simplest way to perceive a world in which each person (sheep) is to be controlled by a central global government which requires a flock to provide wool (money) and meat (labor) over and over and over again.

Crude metaphors aside, the art of analyzing a political document actually lies in perceiving its intent, which may never actually be openly stated, no matter how many words are used. A document may, in fact, appear to express the loftiest ideals, yet hide the lowest possible intent. In this manner, politicians can keep their detractors running in circles, debating semantics and arguing phraseology, while being able to honestly deny that there has ever been any written reference to any hidden agenda. But that’s exactly how it remains hidden.

The best lies are always couched in about 98% truth. And the best questions are always about what has not been written or said. We must ask both “Why?” and “Why not?”

Take, for example, the use of the phrase “One World Order”. Why was it used by so many influential people, especially during Desert Storm? Was it to test and gauge public opinion? And why does it seem to have since disappeared?

Once again, because public opinion (the opinion that is being molded to accept this very thing) made it obvious that the time was not yet right to take the final step. Critics became too vocal, the public became restless, and it became necessary to find another soft euphemism. The public likes feel-good euphemisms. And so we have "Global Governance". The words have changed, and the sheep have settled down.

The general public seems unaware that, behind the scenes, another gate (or two or three) on the road to the shearing shed (or slaughterhouse) has been opened—and one of them seems to be the responsibility of the UN Commission On Global Governance.

In their own words: "If the new century is to be better for humanity than the passing century has been, much will depend on the United Nations—our principal instrument for cooperative effort on behalf of the world's people.

"Whether it is to ensure peace and security, to combat poverty and hunger, ignorance and ill-health, to safeguard basic human rights, or to protect the habitat, we have to look to the United Nations to reinforce and unite our separate efforts."

So we are presented with an image of an organization which is utterly benign, and which has, as its sole intent, the betterment of planetary civilization. It is reassuring us that, given the daunting problems facing humanity, we need a world leader.

But is this true? What lurks in the shadows behind these comforting idealistic words?

Another agenda? Apparently the answer is yes. However, the hidden agenda, like the cyanide capsule in a candy, must ever be masked by words which are outwardly attractive.

(Using the sheep analogy once again, we should be aware that while dogs are used to force a flock in a given direction, there are also times when sheep must be led. For this purpose, a goat is often used in the slaughterhouse to lead sheep up the ramp to their doom. Given the apparent crisis they are in, and the fact that the goat appears to know how to solve the problem, despite its slightly different genetics, they follow willingly, for they do not have the wit to formulate any alternative for themselves. The goat is what the sheep want it to be—a leader in a time of crisis. SUCH GOATS HAVE LED MILLIONS TO THEIR DEATHS. THEY ARE KNOWN AS JUDAS GOATS.)

And then we read, as if to imply that the public really does have control over the UN, that "the United Nations is (however) what the world's nations want it to be."

In reality, stated bluntly and unequivocally, it is the task of these UN reports to make the world want what the UN desires to be.

For one thing, the UN desires a standing army:

"To give one example, recent developments, including notably the tragedy in East Timor, have reinforced the case we made for giving the United Nations some effective form of standing rapid reaction capacity, available to the Security Council for immediate and timely deployment, so that the Council's decisions may be implemented speedily and effectively in critical situations."

Having established that it wants to impose its will on recalcitrant peoples by force, the report goes on to say "we wish to focus on two areas: civil society and the world economy."

It is this civil society which the UN says will help it on its way to Global Governance by those who control the standing army (we could say that is one pincer) and the economies of the world, through an "Economic Security Council" (the second pincer).

Will that mean government controlled by elected representatives and the public at large, or a planet controlled ultimately by the richest people in the world? This report intimates that, as always, the rich will continue to control the rest.

But has it ever been different? Have the rich ever suffered, seriously, during any depression or any war or any coup? Did they lose their shirts, their homes, their jobs, their families, their lives during the Great Depression, or during the 1998 "crisis" in world money markets?

Or have these events, which have apparently been so disastrous for so many, actually been a benefit to the rich? This report says categorically that they certainly have.

Appearing to express genuine concern about the state of the world, the report says: "At one level, the number of people having to live on incomes of a dollar a day or less is reckoned to have risen to 1.4 billion. At the other extreme, the world's six million millionaires are estimated to have become 12% richer in 1998, the year of financial turmoil."

What is the answer to this inequity? Can the dollar-a-day people be helped in some way? The UN suggests the answer is merely more controls over the 1.4 billion, because "we remain convinced that there is a gap in the structures of world governance that needs to be filled by a body similar to the Economic Security Council we (have) proposed." Oddly enough, there is no suggestion that the rich should teach the poor how to make and manage money.

Reviewing relations between the UN and "civil society", the report says: "The Millennium Forum, to be convened by a large group of NGOs (Non-Government Organizations) in late May 2000, should make relations between civil society and the United Nations its first order of business."

To promote its longterm aims, it says: "The practice of including parliamentarians in national delegations to UN meetings should be encouraged. More parliamentarians should be invited to study UN field operations."

Why? Is it because they become willing ambassadors for the UN and other world bodies, returning to their home countries to espouse the benefits of giving up their sovereignty, their mineral rights, or even vast tracts of land as "world heritage parks"? The answer can only be yes, since that is exactly what has been occurring for several decades.

Such parliamentarians will also, no doubt, be charged with selling "the Tobin tax proposal" to the public. This is a suggested tax designed to "help" the UN do its work. A tax which, inevitably, must increase prices, and reduce living standards even further, even though the report says its real purpose is simply to "raise modest sums to finance global public goods and to reduce the 'churning' of foreign exchange markets".

Next, presaging the demise of the International Monetary Fund in favor of its now-preferred Economic Security Council, the UN report says there should be "a comprehensive assessment of the IMF's mandate, including its roles in the surveillance of major economies and in acting as a lender of last resort".

The chess game goes on. The world is being divided into political and trade zones. The sheep are being fenced more tightly still, and those which still run free (in reality, independent farmers and those who sustain themselves through agriculture) are not forgotten: "The new round of multilateral trade negotiations should give priority to trade liberalization in those areas where barriers are still serious, such as agriculture."

Historically, rural dwellers and primary producers are the least controllable among humanity's millions. Because what they produce is freely grown by Nature herself (rather than the product of an urban industrialized environment), farmers do have the ability to sustain themselves indefinitely from their own labors, provided they are not in debt, or outflanked and undercut by agrinationals and trade barriers.

But what must also be realized is that trade in agricultural products is not the function of producers. It is strictly the province of multinational agribusiness conglomerates, coincidentally owned by the rich, who coincidentally benefit most from reductions in trade barriers.

Why, then, is there a constant concern about agricultural trade? Could it be that the intent behind trade barriers and treaties is to disempower the farmer, in favor of the six million millionaires and the few multi-billionaires who were the advisers to the founding of the United Nations?

Over the years, tens of thousands of farmers have lost their land, despite many so-called "trade liberalization" treaties. Sucked in to taking bank loans or government subsidies, they have suddenly found the value of their crops dropping below production costs. Inevitably, bankruptcy has been the result.

Who now owns that land? Multinationals owned by some of the six million millionaires, a few of whom own both the banks and the multinationals. From that position, they are able to offer farmers loans on the one hand (against the value of next season's crop), and on the other, import the same type of crop from overseas, thus driving down the price for the indebted farmer's produce, and forcing him out of business.

That pattern has been obvious in the US over the last 100 years. In 1900, according to the US Census Bureau, 60% of US citizens were rural dwellers. By the year 2000, 75% of them lived in cities, and most of the land is owned by multinationals, which are owned by the multimillionaires—one of whom donated the land on which the UN building now stands in New York. (Just a series of coincidences, of course.)

The simple fact that the world is controlled by commercial, not political, interests is revealed in the following: "In region after region, private enterprise has come to replace the state as the prime engine of growth and prosperity.... For the UN, these non-governmental forces could represent the wave of the future, if the complexities among governments, civil society, and the world body are handled adroitly."

Adroitly? Jugglers are adroit. So too are sideshow hucksters with their shell games; two of the three shells are empty, and they are moved rapidly before your eyes to confuse your mind and perceptions. Some reports are written "adroitly". And this is one of them.

It says: "It is in the long-term interests of national governments and international organizations to encourage the unhindered development of an active, independent, and dynamic civil society sector, and to build a close working relationship with it...."

"It is time to take a fresh look at how to extend and deepen this process...."

"At the UN, as in most capitals, officials have come to recognize that civil society has an integral, and sometimes indispensable, part to play in the conduct of international relations...."

"Even in security-related fields, once thought to be the primary or exclusive province of governments, civil society groups have assisted in conflict resolution, early warning, and the monitoring of arms transfers and of compliance with arms control agreements."

"As major service providers, they have been full or even leading partners in carrying out programs in fields as diverse as humanitarian assistance, scientific co-operation, health, election monitoring, refugee relief, education, post-conflict nation-building, codification of international law, and the monitoring of human rights, environmental, and labor standards."

Oddly, or perhaps conveniently, the report fails to mention that despite concerns expressed by some areas of "civil society" about human rights abuses, there are commercial interests which are very happy indeed to take the lead in using cheap labor, sometimes even slave labor, to produce their goods for export back to the countries from which they have removed their production facilities under the auspices of UN- and WTO-sanctioned trade agreements. Under international trade conditions espoused by the UN, those who lost their jobs, their homes, and their livelihood when those companies moved abroad, must now buy goods made by workers who earn only dollars a day.

There can simply be no doubt at all that "Global Governance" will benefit the multinationals, whose influence in world politics is indisputable. ITT (a major US telephone system provider) gave at least $1M toward the overthrow of a South American leader (Chile's Allende) who intended to nationalize the ITT-owned telephone service in his country. And in America alone, major corporations donate funds to both political parties. Huge sums. In fact, the parties receive donations from only 4% of eligible contributors, most of whom are well-heeled corporations—which means 96% of Americans have no clout whatever in the political election process, or in the subsequent political decisions which so often favor those who give the most.

Although it purports to have genuine concerns about the world environment, this UN report also ignores the plight of dispossessed peoples in Africa, whose lands are controlled by oil companies, and says absolutely nothing about the depredations of logging firms which have destroyed countless acres of rainforest, or mining companies which pay no heed to the environment in their quest for profit. Yet these are the organizations the UN wants to partner with.

In fact, this report likes the idea of taxpayer money being given to companies to subsidize their operations.

Having hinted at its intention to change its own mandate, the report now does what political reports do so well. It makes sure that, in the future, it can have it both ways. To do so, it pretends to promote concern about the very thing it wants to achieve—in this case, working hand-in-glove with commercial interests. It does so by saying "the participation of for-profit firms in broader issues...should be welcomed and encouraged. Likewise, there should be no political litmus test for inclusion in the ranks of civil society, which should reflect all of the political diversity of national and international society."

If that doesn't mean jumping into bed with whoever has the money, what does?

Now we come to the revelation that "the Secretary-General has paid the greatest attention to repairing ties with the private sector.... In seeking to involve the private sector more fully in the development, humanitarian relief, and peace-building work of the UN in the field, the Secretariat and member states should recognize that firms have much more to offer than just capital and investment. On a range of functional, financial, and managerial questions, private companies have a great deal of expertise and experience to offer."

What contingencies must yet be covered if the UN does indeed wish to have the world fully embrace the concept of a world governance body? Should contingency plans be made to ensure that opinion makers, such as the media, politicians, and academics, are for the most part publicly in favor of such a model? Of course—and they are not left out of this report.

Flattery, as they say, will get you everywhere. Hence: "If the UN's existing information base and global reach could be combined with the analytical capabilities present in the world's universities, research centers, and think tanks, then one could imagine the UN evolving into a global marketplace for ideas and information, a center for the collection and incubation of ideas without borders." But don't forget to mollify those whose support you are also succoring.

"Whether governments would welcome or permit such a development, of course, remains to be seen...yet, program by program, a natural courtship between the UN and elements of the independent research and academic community seems to be unfolding, with individual scholars and research centers now involved in the work of the organization across the board."

Now, move in on the politicians. Admit that: "The developing of ties with parliamentarians, as noted earlier, raises some sensitive issues for the UN [because] their actions and attitudes can have a defining effect on what the UN can and cannot accomplish."

But then pull no punches. Let them know they are likely to become redundant under global government, by saying: "While national governments remain and will remain for the foreseeable future the central actors in Global Governance, they are no longer the kind of dominant players that they were at the UN's founding in 1945. Though some member states would prefer to turn the clock back, the only realistic question at this point is how, not whether, the dynamism of civil society will be taken into account in the UN and other inter-governmental bodies."

DOES THAT SAY, PLAINLY ENOUGH, THAT THESE PEOPLE INTEND TO TAKE OVER THE WORLD?!

Critics have said that, like a virus that has a long gestation, the UN Global Governance plan has been moving insidiously within society's entrails for decades, and its symptoms can best be seen in the manipulation of the health of the world economy.

People are fixated on survival, and for most, this means money. The report addresses that, too, instilling fear of future economic collapse by reference to the 1998 stock market shake-up, and the apparent inability of the IMF to help various nations out of their debt crises, despite the fact that the IMF was set up for the very purpose of assisting (so they said) countries which needed help in the global economic environment.

If one wanted people to welcome global government and an Economic Security Council, one would start by pointing out problems for which a solution must be found. One would also trade on fear: "A long-forecast, major correction in the US stock market still has the potential to precipitate a serious global downturn.... Moreover, significant numbers of people are still mired in poverty generated by recession in emerging markets.... Commodity prices—even allowing for some recovery in oil prices—have slumped to an historic low, with severe consequences for many commodity exporting countries."

Frightening stuff? Yes.

But it would be more frightening still, although enlightening at the same time, if we were to wonder whether these so-called "crises" were in fact deliberately engineered to create problems for which the UN could appear to have the answers.

If that were so, it should be no surprise to hear the Commission on Global Governance say: "Triggered in part by the emerging world's financial crisis last year (1998), there has been a revival of interest in global economic governance. The Commission's report envisaged, at the apex of a reformed system, an Economic Security Council."

Once again, hide your true intent: "The Commission argues for stronger global economic governance, not as an end in itself, but because closer international economic integration—or globalization—through the opening up of markets in goods and services and private capital flows has generated a demand for public goods, financial stability; the rule of law to govern trade and investment flows, standard setting; and environmental protection." In other words, use "public demand" (which has been created by a series of engineered crises) as the reason why such a solution is required.

Since the inception of the United Nations, there have been many so-called "crises" in the world. Each one has served the same purpose—they have added to the "public demand" for stability. Perhaps it can not be proven beyond a shadow of doubt that such crises were manufactured for an ulterior purpose, but the crises themselves nevertheless did occur.

They included: "two oil 'shocks', the bank debt crisis of the early 1980s and, in the mid-1980s, the challenge posed by such global environmental threats as global warming. But there has been a common thread: the need for structures of global governance which could properly address issues of sustainable growth, development, and poverty."

Poverty is not a worry to the wealthy, for "there is a category of super-rich individuals who have been able to benefit enormously from the existence of global markets, exploiting proprietary knowledge and 'star' appeal, who can largely evade national tax jurisdictions, and who can take advantage of globally integrated capital markets to maximize returns on their financial assets." (This paragraph no doubt has a psychological effect on the masses, who traditionally envy the wealthy, and perceive in this statement a hint that the UN intends to rope the wealthy in. They do indeed want to—as partners!)

"The World Wealth Report of Merrill Lynch and Gemini estimates that the world's six million millionaires are now worth $21.5 trillion, their wealth having grown strongly—by 12%—throughout last year's (1998's) financial crisis." Statements like that are a big red flag to the UN's critics, who claim that if the rich can enjoy a 12% increase in wealth during a financial crisis, there are really SOME VERY GOOD REASONS for them to actually create economic problems, because if you are already rich, you can get much richer.

Reading deep between the lines, we can also perceive that the super rich may even be able to gain control of entire nations, and all their human and mineral resources, provided they control the money-lending process—for example, the IMF and the World Bank.

But how would they do that? Did they do it by setting up the IMF and a debt restructuring program that was intended to fail? Consider the fact that, as the first report of the Commission on Global Governance points out, in response to these crises: "international action to relieve nations defined as Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) has also fallen far short of what is necessary to give their people a reasonable chance to put their difficulties behind them. The HIPC debt relief plan launched in 1996 has helped just three countries, from a list of 41, in three years. Even after the improvements announced after the 1998 G7 summit in Cologne, this initiative remains very modest in relation to the size of the problem." The three who were "helped" were Uganda, Bolivia, and Guyana, with Mozambique "close to agreement".

But the latest report now says: "Of the three former success stories, two have since relapsed into unsustainable debt." Odd, don't you think, that the world's financial whiz-boys could not deliver the solutions they promised? Stranger still, according to some authors, that those countries which "collapsed" had put up their natural resources as collateral against their loans.

However, there is an explanation—so we are told—and it is this: the IMF is fundamentally incapable of doing its job. So we need something to replace it: "In reality, in a major crisis, the IMF was not able to perform a lender-of-last-resort function and, in any case, its method of operation made it unsuitable for the task. As was demonstrated in Russia, it lacks the resources to stem panic: its carefully negotiated conditional loans disbursed in segments are inappropriate for this task which requires large-scale, immediate lending."

So we have another problem for which a new solution is required.

"Prevention is invariably better, and cheaper, than cure. (This type of cliché is standard procedure for those who are advocating change. Ironically, it also happens to work, because very similar statements were made prior to establishing the UN, the World Bank, the IMF, the WTO and numerous other UN-backed or UN-affiliated organizations and programs.)

"There is a club of central bankers and other financial regulators, who work through committees of the Bank of International Settlements.... It has been argued, for example, that the IMF and the Bank of International Settlements (BIS) should be brought together to form a single 'super regulator' of financial markets."

And then, of course, there is always another cure-all that has been imposed countless times—with no sign of a cure, one might add: Tax.

"One issue for the Commission is the so-called Tobin Tax—a global tax on financial transactions designed to 'throw sand in the machine'."

That proposal has not met with instant approval, but these UN people do not give up. They clearly want money to finance their objectives, and to that end, they want a tax of some sort. But "the current state of debate on the Tobin Tax is highly unsatisfactory. The tax is widely endorsed in rhetoric but then damned with faint praise. It should either be taken forward, or buried, after a detailed enquiry by an international group of experts who should rigorously examine its technical feasibility. It would perhaps be more plausible as a mechanism for raising modest sums for global public goods than, as is often portrayed, as a cure-all for financial market instability".

Claiming that it has "declined to join in the fashionable attacks on the IMF" the Commission then does so anyway, because it wants to establish a global bank of last resort (by some other name): "Recent events have, however, exposed the Fund to yet more criticism. It publicly endorsed the macroeconomic policies of Asian countries (notably of South Korea and Thailand) and then, months later, set new and stringent austerity objectives for the same countries, as conditions for crisis loans. It largely failed to anticipate the problems arising from poorly supervised, liberalized financial sectors in Asia, but is now charged with overseeing the necessary reforms.

"Critics allege that it has managed to generate the problem inherent in a lender-of-last-resort system—‘moral hazard’, encouraging lending, especially to Russia—without being able to deliver when required.”

Emerging from this perusal of the UN plan for world control, we find yet further evidence that the tentacles are to take a grip on every facet of society. Aside from having on its books a plan to prevent personal ownership of weapons (a clause hidden somewhere in the Report On International Disarmament) the UN also wants to see all commercial competition under total centralized control. A first step in that direction has been the establishment of the World Trade Organization.

“The Commission noted in its previous report that a ‘central issue confronting governments is how to provide a framework of rules and order for global competition in the widest sense.’

“Of far greater importance is the acceptance that the rule of law should apply in trade disputes, through dispute panels. In the five years of its existence, the WTO has had over 150 cases brought to it, four times as many as were dealt with in the 47 years of the GATT. So far it has not been necessary to invoke compensation and sanctions despite the fact that some rulings have enraged vested interests and pressure groups in leading countries, such as that against a US ban on shrimps from Thailand, and another on clothing from Costa Rica. But the dispute over the EU banana quota regime has raised the question of how panel rulings can be enforced if simply ignored by a major trading entity.”

Is this another example of setting up a “world body” simply to have it appear to need modification, so it can be replaced by a newer version which will play a more decisive role in implementing and consolidating the real plan—complete global governance?

Remember, sheep must be moved along in gentle stages, lest they truly perceive where they are being driven. If the WTO can be portrayed as a dog without enough teeth (now that people-sheep have gotten used to its presence), then the world is likely to agree, with little argument, that something better is needed. Thus, the report goes on to say: “As global integration proceeds, individual national authorities are no longer able fully to control anti-competitive behavior by footloose companies. The WTO should adopt a strong set of competition rules, and we suggest that a Global Competition Office be set up, linked to the WTO.”

Now, move the shells a little faster. Dazzle the observer. Enlist the support of the little guy once again, by appearing to pick on the multinationals:

“Recent developments have made the issue more pressing. There have been a number of cross-border mergers and alliances between giant companies which raise the question of how such entities are to be policed....”

It is at this point in the report, in an aside which is simply slipped between sentences, that we discover a plan to also take control of the Internet. Controlling the free flow of information is an absolute necessity if one wishes to control a society of any size—be that a village or a global society: “While the Internet and, now, e-commerce enjoy explosive growth, it is not yet clear what the most important questions are for policy and governance, let alone their solutions. It is not clear who runs, or ought to run, the Internet; one issue, for example, is that of who should be the custodian of the Internet address system. Governance is required which is genuinely international, which recognizes the public goods involved—in address registration and other protocols—and which represents the ‘information poor’ as well as the ‘information rich’ who currently use the system. There is potentially a major role both for the International Telecommunications Union and the WTO in this area.”

Can we really imagine a world in which we must register our names and addresses with the Global Government simply to hook up to the Internet? And what would happen if we did? Would we then be subject to even more new laws and regulations, and have all our correspondence under electronic surveillance by some new global police force to whom sovereignty and privacy mean nothing?

The simple truth is that there is absolutely no “public demand” for any world body to control the Internet. That desire has only been expressed by politicians and their allies who know full well that government is about mind control, which means people control, which requires information control.

What else must be addressed in order to convince a world that it requires complete global government? The environment:

“One of the tests of Global Governance is whether it can rise to the challenge of genuinely global environmental problems: management of the global commons and cross-border pollution.” Yes, we apparently need a global government to solve this one too. Which just might see countries trading what you could call “pollution points” so industry can continue to pollute, up to the highest acceptable level, for the economic good of all.

Two decades ago, the European Economic Community was first seen by UN critics as the prototype of what was to come. They feared the eventual emergence of global government, and the disappearance of borders, self-government, national sovereignty, political accountability, and even their own accustomed currency. All those things have happened in Europe in just a few short years. Critics hate it, but this UN report sees it in a different light: “The European Monetary Union is shaping up to be a remarkable achievement by any standard, in the face of much skepticism and formidable technical difficulties.”

Finally, after 20 or 30 pages of bafflespeak, most of which is clearly structured to evince a reaction that welcomes the final recommendations, we come to the bottom line, the recommendations that could reshape our world very rapidly in the years ahead.

The Commission on Global Governance recommends that the world’s leaders “support the establishment of an Economic Security Council” urging that “a fresh initiative be made to constitute stronger and more representative structures of global economic governance.”

The Commission: “does not think it possible, even if it were desirable, to stop or reverse the globalization of financial markets, but would like to see a detailed, technical study of the feasibility of the Tobin tax proposal.”

The Commission: “welcomes the way in which the WTO has emerged over the last few years as a body whose dispute settlement procedures increasingly command respect and strengthen international law.”

The Commission: “would welcome a new round of multilateral negotiations to liberalize trade and long-term investment flows—and remove discrimination—provided that priority is given to trade liberalization in those areas where barriers are still serious, such as agriculture; provided there is full and active participation by developing and transitional economies, including countries such as China which are not currently members; and provided there is acknowledgement of a development dimension to the rules and disciplines themselves.”

The Commission: “welcomes the progress in strengthening multilateral governance in the environmental field, notably the agreement of the Kyoto Protocol on emission targets for greenhouse gases, and the agreement in principle to develop emission permit trading.”

Further: “the instability experienced in the world economy over the last few years and the unbalanced nature of global growth reinforces the case for a mechanism or institution which can highlight systemic risks and potential crises in the way that specialist institutions and piecemeal initiatives cannot.”

The Commission remains convinced that the concept of an Economic Security Council—however it is designed or constructed—must be further pursued.

And when it is, and when it is instituted, what will we have? What freedoms have we seen under threat in this report so far—though not mentioned in the recommendations, but obviously intended as the blueprint for global governance.

For starters, if a “ready reaction force” is established, there will never be an opportunity for another unique Republic, such as the United States, to become established through any War of Independence.

Based as it was to some degree on the precepts of the first republic the world ever saw—Solon's Republic in ancient Greece—the Founding Fathers of the United States took one of history's boldest steps. Not only did many die in pursuit of freedom and liberty, but for the first time in history, a nation was established with the intention of embracing all nationalities within its borders. Immigrants were welcomed from many nations, diverse religious backgrounds, and racial groupings.

In practice, it has been far from a perfect experiment, and yet, because of that revolution, millions of people who were living in oppressed dictatorships or intolerant societies, have been able to seek and make better lives for themselves.

Politically, the US has strayed far from that republican ideal, which was intended to enable all citizens to have a say in the process of government. In Solon's time, as Archon of Greece, he established local, regional, and national forums of government, under which no single individual could become an incumbent, for he knew well the corruption and manipulation of the masses that inevitably resulted from the centralization of power (both economic and political) in the hands of bankers and the international traders of the time.

The US Constitution and Bill Of Rights were intended to insure that these lessons from history would be enshrined in a new form of government "of the people, for the people, by the people". Power was to be vested in the people—not in a centralized government.

But in truth, that is exactly what has finally happened. The Federal Government, aided and abetted by today's multinationals and international banking fraternities, has progressively taken unto itself exactly the powers which, according to some of the Founding Fathers, it was never intended to have.

For this reason there now exist, within the US, groupings of seriously disaffected US citizens. Whether we label them patriots or militia or Constitutionals, their objections to central government are much the same. They perceive their federal politicians as their forefathers once perceived the King of England—as tyrants. Their common criticism is that the Federal Government has lost sight of the spirit of the pure republic, in favor of the power and control it can wield under the guise of democracy.

And now, they fear those same politicians are embracing the thought and act of giving away America's hard-won independence to unelected officials in the United Nations.

Little wonder, then, that some of these groups would like to see another revolution.

But any such plans have little or no chance of success. Especially if the UN concept of Global Governance comes to fruition, because under its self-created mandate, spuriously claimed to be derived from "public demand", no-one, anywhere, will be free to take such measures against tyranny. Should they try, they will find they have no freedom to disagree with or try to overthrow their rulers, because they will be annihilated by a standing army or ready reaction force controlled by the World Government.

Though it might promise to use such force only in order to preserve democracy, or economic interests, once it is created, the "ready reaction force" will be controlled and unleashed by forces and people over whom the average citizen will have no control at all.

For example, if any one of the 50 united states chose to secede from the Union, it could find itself in the same position as the rebels of Chechnya—except it would not simply be battling the Federal Government; it would also be up against the world's "properly instituted" ready reaction force.

Alternatively, if the militia groups are able to retain their constitutional right to bear arms, and manage to evade the combined push by their own central government and the United Nations to disarm the world's citizenry, they could find themselves staring down the barrels of guns wielded by soldiers from Europe, conscripted to this same UN ready reaction force, whose role under world government is to quash any attempt at revolution.

That aside, there is yet another fundamental of US and world freedom under very serious threat. If this World Government imposes controls on the Internet, there will be no more freedom of speech—even in the United States, where freedom was enshrined in the American way of life because of the courage of one man.

When the first US settlers were beginning to unite against the tyranny of England, in the early 1700s, one John Peter Zenger founded and published The New York Weekly Journal—the only New York newspaper exposing corrupt practices of the British colonial government at a time when such criticism was considered to be sedition.

John Peter Zenger was charged with seditious libel and thrown in jail.

When the jurors considered the charge, they concluded that the British sedition law was contrary to their sense of liberty and justice, and that restricting freedom of speech would be a danger to all their freedoms.

Thus, when they voted "not guilty", they established two legal precedents. As jurors, not as legislators, they nullified the sedition statute; and they said that, in general, where there is no falsehood, there can be no libel. Those precedents would serve their fellow Americans from that day forward.

In 1789 when Congress began considering amendments to the United States Constitution, memory of John Peter Zenger's trial prompted them to structure the First Amendment so it would protect freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of worship, and "of the press".

The First Amendment is the first of the series of ten amendments which the United States calls the Bill Of Rights.

Today, the Zenger News Service—established in a sense as a dedication to the principles held so dear by John Peter Zenger—has, as its Editor-In-Chief, Mr. James Ewart. Ewart was in the US Air Force, stationed in Germany, when he found himself on a bus tour in Berlin, staring down the barrel of a Russian soldier's submachine gun. He said: "It was a paratrooper's submachine gun, with a lightweight folding stock. I'll never forget it."

The Cold War had escalated. Russia was about to close-off East Berlin and construct the Berlin Wall. Ewart considers himself lucky to have made it back to his base, and that experience prompted him to begin decades of research into "what makes the world go round". This culminated in the recent publication of his book titled Money—Ye Shall Have Honest Weights And Measures. It is an indictment of what he calls "history's biggest crime, because it exposes the way in which the manipulation of money and credit has been used to advance an agenda".

Those doing the manipulating and advancing are, of course, very wealthy and very influential.

The intent behind any form of manipulation is to control the way people think and react, so the manipulators can assure themselves of a predictable outcome. In other words, stripped of all niceties, manipulation is mind control for a preconceived purpose.

And mind control—in the sense that people's minds must first be conditioned to accept the UN's proposition on Global Governance—is exactly what reports such as this are all about.

Fortunately, thanks to people such as John Peter Zenger, free speech and the right to air sincerely held and opposing opinions still exists in the US.

But for how long?

Think what we may of today's dominant media and their obvious affinity with the United Nations' pursuit of Global Governance (Walter Cronkite is an open advocate of a world ruled by such a body), it is freedom of the press which has kept people informed and aware of not only the best in Government, but the worst as well.

But a free press, and the free flow of information, is not in the best interests of any group of tyrants. Which brings us back to the fact that the Commission on Global Governance appears to have its sights set on some form of control, perhaps eventually total control, over today's freedoms of expression—in particular, the Internet.

In their own words, the Commission believes there should be centralized control of this global flow of information. It foresees a time when Internet users will have their addresses filed in a central register.

Should we then expect to be told that, in order to “fight crime”, all Internet communications will be subject to monitoring at any time by some new global law enforcement agency? That remains to be seen.

But the precedent is already well established, as witness current concerns in the European Union over Internet monitoring by the secret agencies which control Echelon, a computer monitoring project capable of intercepting all global telecommunications and filing data according to key words and associated addresses.

In the United States, the FBI has come under fire for installing a “Carnivore” program which can read millions of emails, searching for “the meat” the FBI wants. Although the FBI has been known to exceed its authority, it still must ask for a court order to monitor suspects. It is subject to the law of the land.

[Editor’s note: While this author’s points are certainly correct and well taken, regular readers of this publication know that such clever global snooping operations as Project Echelon and the Carnivore and Inslaw software are only the more visible aspects of ALREADY-in-place comprehensive surveillance machinery operated by Big Brother.]

But, in a world with a global government, WHOSE law will be paramount?

There is much more to this future plan of global dominance. Sovereign states which “must face the fact that they cannot turn the clock back” will inevitably find themselves almost totally controlled by multi-nationals, which are to be given a major say in determining world trade law—which will, in turn, supercede sovereign or national law.

Countries which have been economically eviscerated by the IMF are to be encouraged to go deeper into debt by working with a “bank of last resort”.

Parliamentarians and academics—and more members of the dominant media no doubt—are to be enlisted as world governance-friendly spokespersons.

Pollution will be traded off between nations, so long as it is in “the economic interest”.

And what about the three levels of society in this brave new world? Are the dollar-a-day people to have their poverty assuaged? Nope, no mention of that! But they will get jobs. Maybe.

Meanwhile, the rich will get richer, regardless of the economic state of the world.

And as for those in the middle, well they, like the median group in a flock of sheep, are, surprisingly, the most valuable. It is from this group of sheep that a farmer gets the bulk of his wool. So people who struggle all their lives in the middle income bracket will, on the one hand, see interest rates go up (on loans made to them by the wealthy), and on the other, find themselves once again having to pay more taxes (ostensibly to run a world government and help the poor).

Thus, the middle class, via interest rates and taxes, is ever prevented from accumulating personal wealth and independence. It is from the sweat of their brow, the pain in their backs, and the plastic money in their hip pockets, that the rich and poor alike are supported.

They are the sharecroppers of the 21st Century.

The world, to put it bluntly, is moving toward global government on the installment plan. And once it is in place, with the willing acceptance of humanity (albeit engineered), people will have given away their power to make choices.

But above and beyond all the foregoing, there is something far more serious to contemplate. Something not mentioned in any report, and never considered by most of us.

It is a philosophical matter, in some respects, and yet it demands deep contemplation because it affects all of us—the poor, the middle class, the rich, and those in the world government of the future as well. Each and every one of us is blessed with participation in the civilization of our day. We live in a world that has evolved over eons, in a society that has evolved over centuries, and in a time when the world government agenda has been obvious for only a few short decades.

We are the product of all these evolutions because of the choices we have made—or the choices we have allowed others to make on our behalf.

Which brings up the question: “What will suffer most under world government?” And the answer is short, and horrifying to contemplate. Evolution itself!

Evolution on all levels—personal, national, ethnic, racial, political, and spiritual. All are perceivably, clearly, literally, in danger.

For when humanity can no longer think, live, and move in freedom, when the world is a giant commercial factory and its people simply the necessary units that must turn the cogs of the machine, when religion and education are dictated by a world state, when freedom is proscribed by the threat of force, when there are no choices left to be made, when free will has been eliminated in all areas of our lives, and, in particular, when the spirit of man finds no further mystery in life, the evolution of the mind and soul will stop.

There is no evolutionary purpose to a human species that has allowed itself to become a herd of sheep to be oppressed and financially cannibalized by its own kind. When technology, commercialism, globalism, materialism, and freedom of thought, speech, political affiliation, and religion are completely dictated by others, there is nothing left for the mind to achieve, ponder, contemplate, or create.

There is no viable future for such a flock.

Finally it must be said, if one reads this report in depth, that we are indeed far down the road toward global control.

But at least we have left behind the rhetoric about “One World Order”.

Instead, we-the-people are allowing ourselves to be led toward total “Global Governance”—by a Judas goat.

MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION ON GLOBAL GOVERNANCE

There are 28 members of the Commission on Global Governance—one of them a man who was present at the birth of the UN.

This is the United Kingdom’s Brian Urquhart. Urquhart, who is currently a Scholar in Residence at the Ford Foundation’s International Affairs Program, was, according to the resumé attached to the Commission’s list of members, a “member of the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues (and was) involved in the formation of the United Nations in 1945, and served as Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs from 1972 to 1986.” His “main fields of interest and operation at the UN were conflict resolution and peacekeeping”.

Urquhart co-authored several publications which set the tone for the UN’s activities and aspirations over the past 50 years. These include: “A World in Need of Leadership: Tomorrow’s United Nations” (with Erskine Childers, 1990); “Towards a More Effective United Nations” (with Erskine Childers, 1991); “Ralph Bunche: An American Life” (1993); and “Renewing The United Nations System” (with Erskine Childers, 1994).

However, Urquhart, despite his almost life-long dedication to the UN, and his role in establishing its agendas, is actually mentioned second to last among the 28 members of this commission—whose names are listed alphabetically.

Two are from the United States, one other from the UK, and the remainder represent Sweden, Guyana, Indonesia, Kuwait, Costa Rica, Spain, Germany, South Africa, Mexico, Zimbabwe, France, the Czech Republic, Uruguay, Republic of Korea, Kenya, Japan, Uganda, India, Brazil, Netherlands, China, Senegal, Canada, and Russia.

The US is represented by Barber Conable: “President of the World Bank from 1986 to 1991. Currently Chairman of the Committee on US/China Relations, and a member of the Senior Advisory Committee of the Global Environment Facility. Member of the U.S. House of Representatives from 1965 to 1985, where he served on the Ways and Means Committee for eighteen years, the last eight as its ranking minority member, as well as on the Joint Economic Committee, the House Budget and the House Ethics Committee. Has served on the boards of multinational corporations, and on the Board of the New York Stock Exchange."

Also from the US is Adele Simmons: "President of The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation in Chicago. Member of the Boards of several organizations and corporations, and an elected member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and the Council On Foreign Relations. In 1993, appointed by the Secretary General of the UN to the High Level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development. From 1977 to 1989, President of Hampshire College in Massachusetts, where she developed new programs in population and health and in peace and international security. From 1978 to 1980, served on President Carter's Commission on World Hunger and from 1991 to 1992, on President Bush's Commission on Environmental Quality."

Co-Chairmen:

Ingvar Carlsson, Sweden. Prime Minister of Sweden 1986-91. In April 1991, hosted the Stockholm Initiative that led to the creation of the Commission on Global Governance.

Shridath Ramphal, Guyana. Secretary-General of the Commonwealth from 1975 to 1990. Currently Chairman of the International Steering Committee of the international Leadership in Environment and Development Program. Author of "Our Country, The Planet" written for the Earth Summit.

Members:

Ali Alatas, Indonesia. Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Indonesia since 1988. Indonesia's Ambassador and Permanent Representative to the United Nations in New York (1982-88) and in Geneva (1976-78).

Abdlatif AlHamad, Kuwait. Director General and Chairman of the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development in Kuwait. Former Minister of Finance and Minister of Planning of Kuwait. Chairman of the UN Committee on Development Planning.

Oscar Arias, Costa Rica. President of Costa Rica from 1986 to 1990. In 1987, drafted a regional accord, known as the Arias Peace Plan, to end the ongoing wars in Central America. This initiative was signed by all the Central American Presidents on 7 August 1987, and culminated in the award of that year's Nobel Peace Prize to Dr. Arias.

Anna Balletbo i Puig, Spain. Member of the Spanish Parliament since 1979. Member of the Executive Committee of the Socialist Party in Catalonia. Formerly President of Spain's United Nations Association. An activist on women's issues since 1975.

Kurt Biedenkopf, Germany. Minister-President of Saxony since 1990. Prior to entering politics, served as Professor, Dean, and President of the Ruhr University in Bochum.

Allan Boesak, South Africa. Former Minister for Economic Affairs for the Western Cape Region. A leading figure in his country's struggle against apartheid. Previously, President of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and a Patron of the United Democratic Front.

Manuel Camacho Solis, Mexico. Former Minister of Foreign Affairs and former Mayor of Mexico City. As Peace Commissioner in Chiapas, played a key role in establishing the cease-fire in 1994 and face-to-face negotiations with the EZLN. Recently published "Change Without Breakdown", a blueprint for democratic reforms in Mexico.

Bernard Chidzero, Zimbabwe. Former Senior Minister of Finance. Has served in different capacities with the United Nations for twenty years, including Chairman of the Development Committee of the World Bank and the IMF (1987-90), and a member of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

Jacques Delors, France. President of the European Commission from 1985 to January 1995. Member of the General Council of the Banque de France (1973-79), and Member of the European Parliament and President of its Committee on Economic and Monetary Affairs (1979-81). Previously, a Professor at the University Paris Dauphine.

Jiri Dienstbier, Czech Republic. Chairman of the Free Democrats party in the Czech Republic and Chairman of the Czech Council on Foreign Relations. Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of Czechoslovakia from 1989 to 1992. A signatory of and spokesman for Charter 77, and a key member of the group led by Václav Havel initiating political change in his country. As a result of his opposition activities, he was sentenced to three years in prison in 1979. In June 1998, Mr. Dienstbier was appointed Special Rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights for the former Yugoslavia.

Enrique Iglesias, Uruguay. President of the InterAmerican Development Bank since 1988. Minister of External Relations of Uruguay (1985-88). Executive Secretary of the UN Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (1972-85). President of the Central Bank of Uruguay (1966-68). Chairman of the Conference that launched the Uruguay Round of Trade Negotiations in 1986.

Frank Judd, United Kingdom. Member of the House of Lords, where he has been the Labor Opposition's principal spokesman on education and is now the principal spokesman on development cooperation. A specialist and consultant in international affairs working particularly on the UN, Third World issues, conflict resolution, and arms control. For thirteen years, a Member of Parliament, serving consecutively as Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Defense, Minister for Overseas Development, and Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, where he was deputy to the Secretary of State.

Hongkoo Lee, Republic of Korea, Prime Minister. Served as the Republic of Korea's Ambassador to the United Kingdom from 1991 to 1993, and as Minister for Unification between North and South Korea from 1988 to 1990. In 1985, founded the Seoul Forum for International Affairs and served as its Chairman until 1988. Professor of Political Science at Seoul National University from 1968 to 1988, and Director of the Institute of Social Sciences (1978-82).

Wangari Maathai, Kenya. Founder and coordinator of the Green Belt Movement in Kenya. An environmental conservationist and activist on women's issues and human rights. Formerly the Chairman of the National Council of Women of Kenya, and spokesman for nongovernmental organizations at the 1992 Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro. Previously, Associate Professor of Anatomy at the University of Nairobi.

Sadako Ogata, Japan. Currently United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (since 1991) and previously Professor and Dean of the Faculty of Foreign Studies at Sophia University in Tokyo and Director of its International Relations Institute (1980-91). Japan's Representative on the UN Commission on Human Rights in 1982-85, and a member of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues. From 1978 to 1979, Japan's envoy to the United Nations as well as Chairman of the Executive Board of UNICEF.

Olara Otunnu, Uganda. Since September 1998, Special Representative of the United Nations Secretary-General for Children in Armed Conflict. Formerly, President of the International Peace Academy in New York. As Uganda's Foreign Minister from 1985 to 1986, facilitated the peace talks culminating in the Nairobi Peace Agreement. During tenure as Uganda's Permanent Representative to the UN (1980-85), served as President of the Security Council (1981), Vice President of the General Assembly (1982-83), and Chairman of the UN Commission on Human Rights. Has taught at The American University and at Albany Law School, and was a visiting fellow at the Institut Français des Relations Internationales in Paris.

I.G. Patel, India. Chairman of the Aga Khan Rural Support Program in India. Has held key economic positions in India and internationally: Governor of the Reserve Bank of India, Chief Economic Adviser to the Indian Government, and Permanent Secretary of the Indian Finance Ministry. Previously, Director of the London School of Economics and Political Science. Has served as the Executive Director for India of the International Monetary Fund and as Deputy Administrator of the UN Development Program.

Celina Vargas do Amaral Peixoto, Brazil. Director of the Getulio Vargas Foundation in Brazil. Director General of the Brazilian National Archives from 1980 to 1990 and Director of the Center of Research and Documentation on Brazilian History from 1973 to 1990. Member of the InterAmerican Dialogue and has been a member of several national commissions on cultural, historical, and technological issues.

Jan Pronk, Netherlands. Minister for Development Cooperation of the Netherlands, a position he also held from 1973 to 1978. Vice Chairman of the Labor Party (1987-89) and a Member of Parliament (1971-73; 1978-80; 1986-89). Served as Deputy Secretary General of UNCTAD from 1980 to 1986. Previously, a Professor at the Institute of Social Studies in the Hague and at the University of Amsterdam. Member of the Independent Commission on International Development Issues.

Qian Jiadong, China. Deputy Director General of the China Center for International Studies in Beijing. Previously, Ambassador and Permanent Representative in Geneva to the United Nations, Ambassador for Disarmament Affairs, and a representative to the Conference on Disarmament. Member of the South Commission.

Marie-Angélique Savané, Senegal. A sociologist and currently Director of the Africa Division of the UN Population Fund in New York. Formerly Director of the UNFPA country support team in Dakar (1992-October 1994), Special Adviser to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (1990-92), team leader at the UN Research Institute for Social Development (1979-88), and Editor-In-Chief of Famille et Développement (1974-78). Founder and former President of the Association of African Women for Research and Development. Member of the Boards of several international organizations and institutions, of the South Commission, and currently of the UNESCO Commission on Education for the 21st Century.

Maurice Strong, Canada. Special Adviser to the UN Secretary-General on Reform. Formerly, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Ontario Hydro, and Chairman of the Earth Council. Has received the Order of Canada and is a member of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada. Secretary General of the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development in Rio, and of the 1972 Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment. Member of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

Yuli Vorontsov, Russia. Ambassador to the United States, following a five year term as Ambassador to the United Nations, and an Adviser to President Boris Yeltsin on Foreign Affairs. Served as the USSR Ambassador to Afghanistan (1988-89), France (1983-86), and India (1977-83). Between foreign assignments, appointed First Deputy Foreign Minister in 1986.

United, You Can Accomplish Great Things With Your “God Power”

9/29/00 VIOLINIO ST. GERMAIN

There is absolutely no excusable reason that any person on this planet should not have enough food to eat, enough water to drink, or medical attention. It is a travesty that you allow people to die or even suffer from hunger, thirst, and/or lack of medical attention. It is unconscionable that those who lack are used for political fodder!

I am Violinio St. Germain, and I am here with you this day in the Radiant Light of Holy God, Creator Source. Be not misled by the deceivers, for many abound on your world. And many of them come and claim to be of the Light, yet they are but wolves in sheep's clothing. I am a humble servant to The One Source of All That Is—the I AM THAT I AM. It is with great humility and great honor that I am able to serve in this crucial time on your planet.

You have been led to believe that your political system has the answers to your problems, and therein lies your greatest problem. Your political system is corrupt at best, and evil at its worst. Your political system is run by sickeningly rich, greedy bureaucrats who have signed a pact with the devil, so to speak. They have sold their souls, and it matters not whether they are donkeys or elephants, or so-called independent or reformed.

The fact of the matter is that not one of those who are in the race for the presidency have any control over the direction the system takes. They are but silly little figureheads, with enough outwardly apparent “power” to fool you-the-people. There is actually a very small handful of people who are pulling the strings of these political puppets, who serve the adversary. These are the ones who are hurting you-the-people.

There is no way for the “common man” to hold any high office, because the common man has not been trained in the political ways. The real politician knows just how much power he or she has, and knows the invisible line that you just don't cross.

Yes, this is like beating the dead horse, because, even though you already know these things, there is nothing you can really do to change things through the political process. And, to believe that you can is but a fool's dream. The only hope you have is to wake up, realize who and what you are, and make the changes necessary from the SPIRITUAL reality.

We have been harping on creating your own reality for well over four years. Yet, you still sit and wring your hands, and fret over all the things you see in the news.

WAKE UP!

No one—I said no one can or will truly change anything without a spiritual awakening.

WE HAVE BEEN TRYING TO TEACH YOU WHAT TO DO!

It starts inside each of your minds and hearts. And when all your energy is joined up with all the others with the same intent and thought energy, the power of that energy would begin to effect change IMMEDIATELY.

STOP BELIEVING THE LIE that you can make a difference at the ballot box. That is an exercise in foolishness. You do not have any person truly qualified to fulfill the job, so you will, no doubt, cast your vote for the lesser of the evils.

What is wrong with you? Have you not been paying attention? Do you simply read the words and learn nothing?

You say you want change. Fine. Make it so!

Well, if you don't do it, no one else will.

Listen to me: There are more of you than there are of them. If you all were as dedicated to making changes, and focusing your thoughts and intentions in a specific direction, all in one accord, in agreement, you would begin to see those changes taking place.

But you, the individual, sits back and waits and frets and fusses and complains to your neighbor saying “I don't know what to do.”

WE HAVE BEEN TRYING TO TEACH YOU WHAT TO DO!

It starts inside each of your minds and hearts. And when all your energy is joined up with all the others with the same intent and thought energy, the power of that energy would begin to effect change IMMEDIATELY.

Many of you have been practicing changing your own personal lives. Now, why not expand your reality?

Rather than just focusing upon selves, friends and relatives, begin to expand and realize that everyone on the planet is truly your relation, and though you may not be your brother's keeper, you are responsible for the planet as a whole. Remember: if you know you can do something to help, and you do it not, you are held accountable.

New Age gurus will tell you that everyone is responsible for only themselves. If that were the case, you would not be incarnated on a planet with 6+ billion other people. You may have to walk your own walk, but you are walking alongside 6+ billion other souls. And remember: many hands make light the load.

You have become a world of very self-centered individuals. Everything is “me” or “I”. What ever happened to “us”?

This planet is at a crucial crossroads, a crucial decision point. Either it is going to evolve to the next level of awareness, or it will be destroyed. Not by God, but by you.

You were given the planet, and you were given the responsibility for it, and you were given the free will to make your own decisions. I will tell you, truthfully, that your decisions have not been all that great, and unless YOU make the changes, YOU will continue on the current downward spiral—until everything upon your planet is destroyed.

You sit in your comfortable little worlds and cry foul at every turn. But what are you doing to change things? Millions of souls, all focusing their energy and intent to a specific end, WILL HAVE AN IMPACT—it is a Universal Law!

However, first you must have a vision. No, I am not speaking of going on a vision quest or any such thing. I am speaking of a clear vision of what you want to see take place. Then, you must all be in full agreement, and energy and intent focused toward that end. And therein lies one of the greatest problems you have, for it is most difficult to get two or three people to agree, let alone millions.

Divide and conquer. That is what the adversary has accomplished on this planet, and it has gotten you all to quibble over the silliest of matters, to say nothing of the serious matters facing you ones.

Many of you say that it seems so simple. Your air and water are poisoned. Your ice caps are disappearing. Species are being extincted daily. Old growth forests barely exist anymore. The oil companies have you horn-swaggled into gas-guzzling engines. Your topsoil is eroded so farmers' crops are in trouble. The pharmaceutical companies have you over a barrel; the medical industry is a travesty, etc., etc.

And these are all matters that your glorious politicians are bandying about and trying to convince you that they can make a difference. And you believe them? When was the last time a politician ever made any real changes? Do you really believe that any of them have the ability to make any of these changes? Do not be so misguided.

You have been taught that the ways of the world are not the ways of God, and this is a truth. Your battles are not to be fought with bullets and knives, but with the power that is available within each and every one of you. You have the ability and the authority—given unto each of you by Creator Source—and yet you squander it on self-indulgences. So, you have what you have created.

Now that I have chastised you, and hopefully have your attention, I will tell you a secret (which is really no secret):

YOU ARE MIGHTY, POWERFUL, SPIRITUAL BEINGS HAVING A HUMAN EXPERIENCE!

Notice I said that you are SPIRITUAL BEINGS. You ARE—in the same meaning as I AM THAT I AM.

YOU ARE!

Therefore, you can!

God is not some super-natural being “out there” somewhere!

GOD IS EVERYTHING THAT IS.

You are part of that everything. Therefore, you are a part of God—a fragment of The Whole—and, as such, you have the God Power within you. Everything that exists has that God Power within.

However, in your human expression, you have been given the ability to KNOW it and the AUTHORITY to utilize it! So what are you waiting for?

If you are waiting for your brothers from space to come and rescue you from your messes, you are quite mistaken. They may assist and guide, but not do it for you. You ones made the mess, and it is your responsibility to clean up your mess, or go down with the ship, so to speak.

You must unite. You must come to the place of understanding and knowing that the separation from one another, and the animosity you feel towards one another, is PURELY BY PLAN OF THE ADVERSARY TO KEEP YOU DIVIDED. It is the only defense that the adversary has against you. And, I must say, you have fallen for it—hook, line, and sinker.

So awaken from the illusion, for that is

YOU ARE MIGHTY, POWERFUL, SPIRITUAL BEINGS HAVING A HUMAN EXPERIENCE!

Notice I said that you are SPIRITUAL BEINGS. You ARE—in the same meaning as I AM THAT I AM.

YOU ARE!

Therefore, you can!

God is not some super-natural being “out there” somewhere!

GOD IS EVERYTHING THAT IS.

what you are living in. Awaken unto the reality that, together, you are more powerful than the fiercest of adversaries. You ones have been duped into believing that you are so different from one another. But in reality, you are more alike than you are different.

There is not one of you who wants hunger, disease, and death to continue. There is not one of you who wants war instead of peace. There is not one of you who wants your world poisoned. There is not one of you who wants machines of destruction all across your globe. There is not one of you who wants to see another suffer.

But here is the caution: WHATEVER YOU DO, DO IT WITH LOVE FIRST, FOR THAT IS THE KEY TO YOUR SUCCESS.

These are the things that unite you. These are your strengths. Recognize and utilize them for the betterment of your world. This is the weapon you have against the adversary. UNITE AND ACCOMPLISH GREAT THINGS!

Remember: you have a great decision to make. Either make the changes and take your place in the next stage of awareness, or go down with a dying planet. You don't like that choice? Well, I am sorry, but it is the only choice you have.

Remember that a very wise Teacher once said: “Where two or more of you are gathered together, there I am among you.”

He also said: “These things I do, you shall do, and greater than these things shall you do.”

But you must first awaken and know that you are able, and that together, as one mind, one heart, one intent, you ones can reclaim your world and put it back on course. Then take that power and that authority and make changes that count.

Do not wait until tomorrow to do that which you can do today. Turn off the football games and the soap operas. Stop listening to all the political pundits and listen to your heart. Get out of the bars; put down the booze and the drugs and stop anesthetizing yourselves. Get quiet and go within and get in touch with the real you. There is a spark of the Divine within each of you, and it is only waiting to be recognized and called upon, so that it can burst forth and empower you.

Yes, you can change your world. But first you must recognize that you have the ability and the authority to reclaim that which you have allowed to be stripped from you.

But here is the caution: WHATEVER YOU DO, DO IT WITH LOVE FIRST, FOR THAT IS THE KEY TO YOUR SUCCESS.

If you go out with malice or hatred, it will only return to you as destructive energy. Likewise, go out with LOVE, and LOVE will return unto you as creative energy. I speak, of course, of the LOVE that is Creation, not the emotional or physical love that you ones think of.

LOVE is the energy of attraction, and it is the energy which binds the whole of Creation together. LOVE is the spark of Divine Energy that resides within each of you. As you discover it, and allow it to burst forth, you will begin to understand and to know firsthand just what real LOVE is all about.

It is the first step toward evolving to the next stage of awareness.

I am Violinio St. Germain. I come as the representative of the Seventh Primary Aspect of Creator's Infinite Spectral Expressions. I am known by many as the keeper of the Violet Ray of Transmutation.

I thank you for your attention to these matters, for the time is at hand for you ones to awaken and take up your destinies. I serve God of Light, God of LOVE, The One Source of All That Is. You are all members of the same family; you are all related, one to another. See that you walk your path in Light, in LOVE, and in recognition of who and what you truly are.

Salu.

Human life is a spirit-form that has Emerged from the Eternal Creational Spirit and has developed its own consciousness. It is still connected to the Creational Source and progresses through a series of material lives in order to evolve. [The Pleiadian Mission: A Time Of Awareness, Randolph Winters, 1994.]

The heavens and all below them,
Earth and her creatures,
All change,

Angels have been part of the public mind for some time now. Television programs such as Highway To Heaven and Touched By An Angel are good examples of this public awareness. And then, of course,

One Step At A Time For The SPECTRUM

It's a miracle of sorts, but we're still alive and kicking. This happy (though very stressful) state of affairs is partly the result of an expanded generosity from some of you readers, and partly because we "robbed Peter to pay Paul"—though that's not a particularly technical accounting term for the actual situation. Let me explain a bit:

Remember last month I said: "While many generous souls help out the best they can within their means, sometimes faithfully every month, that total amounts to about 5% of our bare-bones monthly operating expenses. That means 'someone' is helping to the tune of 95% of the total load."

Well, the good news is that this month the amount of your thoughtful generosity rose from 5% to nearly 50%. Responding to my plea, you regular donors were even more generous, while a number of new donors likewise helped.

The bad news is that we still had to make up the remaining 50% from "someone". As you can imagine, a lot of time and energy had to be diverted from the newspaper to address this "ticking bomb" kind of time-sensitive challenge. The result was, as I said at the top, a matter of "robbing Peter to pay Paul".

That is, we are grateful to America East Publishers, who are responsible for producing the WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach volumes, for coming to our rescue. But, in order to help us with a loan, they had to indefinitely suspend publication of the French version of Volume I of WOTR. (This was scheduled to go to press later this month. The French version of WOTR has been a several-year labor-of-love project to address the great hunger for spiritual Truth in all of French-speaking Canada and non-English-speaking Europe.) As well, this emergency generosity from America East puts "on hold" any further work on the much anticipated, latest WOTR Volume III in English, until America East's financial resources can be replenished.

But, as Dr. P. C. of America East explained their position to me recently: "If it weren't for your newspaper, there would be no beloved spiritual messages to collect together in the WOTR books. So, first things first, as far as where to direct even our small financial resources. What you do is too important; you MUST stay alive or we all lose!"

So, that's the story behind why you have this paper to read this month. It's a bittersweet accomplishment at best. Next month is another arduous challenge; maybe others of you readers who have been financially blessed would be willing to help at this critical time?

A practical analogy for understanding our situation is to picture a small (but good!) airline, say with a single airplane. You need a reliable mechanic, a pilot, copilot, a few other staff, a dry hangar, etc. These are FIXED costs, just to get off the ground. You can't "turn down" the "cost knob" any further than that—except, of course, to the "off" position.

These bare-bones fixed costs are then offset by how many passengers come on board for each, say, monthly flight. Due to the fixed costs, it costs almost the same to launch the airplane empty as full. But—there's a certain number of PAYING passengers who get you to the "break-even" point; and beyond that, you are self-sustaining and maybe even profitable.

The challenge—with either the airline analogy or this newspaper—is to have the financial resources to stay operational WHILE the "passenger" list continues to build up to, and past, that "break-even" point. Every successful business person I know counsels, from their own personal experience, about how you have to "be patient and persistent" while a business builds over at least several years (like, say, a peach orchard, which takes five years before the first peaches are ready to sell). And that's surely good advice—IF you happen to have the resources to exercise that patience!

You longtime readers know all too well how and why we came into existence in the first place. I won't repeat that sad and shameful story. It's no less than a miracle that we're alive at all—much less growing in respect and visibility and "passengers" every month! Yet we seem to still carry a heavy, heavy load of misplaced "bad vibes" with some of you longtime readers who otherwise would enthusiastically help us financially—as if it is somehow our fault for risking everything by standing up to and exposing a very corrupt situation. Too bad if we burst a bubble of seeming comfort—The Truth is THE TRUTH!

That is what The SPECTRUM stands for—The Truth—and each month, when our "flight" takes off, we have aboard more and more passengers who express sincere appreciation for the integrity of our "airline" and the unique value it provides as a Quality product of wide range that does not economize on "going the extra mile" to deliver the expected goods.

This reputation of Quality likewise holds very, very true with those who, more and more now, actively SEEK US OUT to provide us with The Truth they know from personal experience—so we can share that with you.

Along with our other unique features, Rick Martin has a very special interview scheduled for next month's issue of The SPECTRUM. But will there BE a next month's issue? I honestly don't know at this point.

However, on behalf of all of us here, I want to sincerely thank those of you who helped to make this month's SPECTRUM possible. We feel deeply blessed by such a vote of support!

Leading Doctors' Group Votes To Oppose Mandatory Vaccinations

Editor's note: The following awesome report just came in at the last moment. With all the push going on in the controlled print and broadcast media to encourage flu shots and other vaccinations, you probably aren't going to hear about this decision there! Regular readers of The SPECTRUM are well aware of the dangers of vaccinations—both unintentional and intentional—and so this Resolution is a major victory for our health and safety. This group should be applauded for taking such a moral stand on such a volatile issue. It's about time an important group of people found the courage to stand up and speak The Truth.

Now, who's next? Maybe the good guys at NASA are ready to get together and speak out about longtime ongoing extraterrestrial encounters? Or maybe some of the pilots who are flying the chemtrail jets would like to get together and clear their consciences by speaking out on what nasty stuff they are spraying down upon us? Or...?

11/4/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 11/3/00: [quoting]

Dr. James Hirsen <hirsen@earthlink.net>

A leading national physician organization is calling for a moratorium on all government mandated vaccines and has passed a resolution to that end at their annual meeting.

Members of the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons (AAPS) voted this week at their 57th Annual Meeting in St. Louis to pass a resolution calling for an end to mandatory childhood vaccines. The resolution passed without a single "no" vote. [Text of Resolution and mandatory vaccine fact sheet posted at <www.aapsonline.org> and following this news story.]

"Our children face the possibility of death or serious long-term adverse effects from mandated vaccines that aren't necessary or that have very limited benefits" said Jane M. Orient, MD, AAPS Executive Director.

"This is not a vote against vaccines" said Dr. Orient. "This resolution only attempts to halt blanket vaccine mandates by government agencies and school districts that give no consideration for the rights of the parents or the individual medical condition of the child."

Forty-two states have mandatory vaccine policies, and many children are required to have 22 shots before first grade. On top of that, as a condition for school attendance, many school districts require vaccination for diseases such as Hepatitis B—primarily an adult disease, usually spread by multiple sex partners, drug abuse, or an occupation with exposure to blood.

And yet, children under the age of 14 are three times more likely to suffer adverse effects—including death—following the Hepatitis B vaccine than to catch the disease itself.

Just last week, students in Utica, NY were sent home from school, and told they could not return until they had been forced to receive Hep B vaccinations. Further, parents were threatened by Child Protective Services with possible seizure of their children based on "education neglect".

"It's obscene to threaten to seize a child just because his parents refuse medical treatment that is obviously unnecessary and perhaps even dangerous" said Dr. Orient. "AAPS believes that parents, with the advice of their doctors, should make decisions about their children's medical care—not government bureaucrats. This Resolution affirms that position."

AAPS RESOLUTION CONCERNING MANDATORY VACCINES

"Ethical Medicine" AAPS Annual Meeting October 25-28, 2000 in St. Louis, MO.

Submitted for member approval:

WHEREAS: The statement of Patients' Freedoms adopted by the Assembly at the 47th annual meeting of AAPS in 1990 provides that "Patients have the freedom to refuse medical treatment even if it is recommended by their physician and to be informed about their medical condition, the risks and benefits of treatment, and appropriate alternatives"; and

WHEREAS: There are increasing numbers of mandatory childhood vaccines, to which children are often subjected without meaningful informed consent, including information about potential adverse side effects; and

WHEREAS: Parents who exercise their freedom to refuse one or more vaccines may be subjected to penalties ranging from deprivation of the right to enroll their child in school, to threats of removing the child from parental custody and forcible vaccination; and

WHEREAS: Safety testing of many vaccines is limited and the data are unavailable for independent scrutiny, so that mass vaccination is equivalent to human experimentation and subject to the Nuremberg Code, which requires voluntary informed consent; and

WHEREAS: The process of approving and "recommending" vaccines is tainted with conflicts of interest;

BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED: That AAPS calls for a moratorium on vaccine mandates and for physicians to insist upon truly informed consent for the use of vaccines.

FACT SHEET ON MANDATORY VACCINES

AAPS does not oppose vaccines. AAPS has never taken an anti-vaccine position, although opponents have tried to paint that picture. AAPS has only attempted to halt government or school districts from blanket vaccine mandates that violate parental informed consent.

42 states have mandatory vaccine policies, and many children are required 22 shots by first grade.

According to government statistics, children under the age of 14 are three times more likely to suffer adverse effects, including death following the Hepatitis B vaccine than to catch the disease itself.

The Centers for Disease Control admits that the reported number of adverse effects of vaccines is probably only 10% of actual adverse effects.

The Physician's Desk Reference cites adverse reactions to the Hepatitis B at less than 1 percent. However, if more than 70 million American children receive the vaccine, that means more than 700,000 children are likely to suffer adverse reactions.

Children are a very low risk group for Hepatitis B. Primary risk factors are dependent on lifestyle, i.e. multiple sex partners, drug abuse, or an occupation with exposure to blood.

Rampant conflicts of interest in the approval process has been the subject of several Congressional hearings, and a recent Congressional report concluded that the pharmaceutical industry has indeed exerted undue influence on mandatory vaccine legislation toward its own financial interests.

The vaccine approval process has also been contaminated by flawed or incomplete clinical trials, and government officials have chosen to ignore negative results. For example, the CDC was forced to withdraw its recommendation of the rotavirus vaccine within one year of approval. Yet public documents obtained by AAPS show that the CDC was aware of alarmingly high intussusception rates months before the vaccine was approved and recommended.

Mandatory vaccines violate the medical ethic of informed consent. A case could also be made that mandates for vaccines by school districts and legislatures is the de facto practice of medicine without a license.

The CDC's own Guide To Contraindications To Childhood Vaccination warns that when assessing children's common symptoms: "if any one of them is a contraindication, DO NOT VACCINATE" [caps added]. And yet, under legislated mandates, the vaccines are still required.

[End quoting]

Of course it is purely "accidental" that, rather than reporting the above news, the Montreal Gazette for Friday, November 3, 2000 carries a front-and-center prominent Front-Page story subliminally attempting to embarrass doctors and nurses because so many are refusing to take flu shots like good little New World Order sheep should.

The screaming headline reads: "Flu Shot: Doctors, Nurses Just Don't Get It" and on the continuation inside: "Unvaccinated Staff A Threat To Patients".

The article begins: "Haven't got your flu shot yet? You're not alone.

"Most doctors, nurses, and other medical staff who work in the infectious environments of hospitals, clinics, and nursing homes don't get vaccinated for the influenza virus either.

"Either they think they're too healthy to catch the flu in the first place. Or they share the fear of a lot of their patients—that the shot will actually give them the flu.

"It's a common superstition, disproved by science...." Oh yeah? Disproved by WHAT science? Maybe these prostituted newspaper writers should study the AAPS Resolution very carefully! These Canadian medical professionals know more than they are talking about—and it shows in their ACTIONS, if not in their courage to voice legitimate concerns.

PEOPLE KILLED BY PLANE
SPRAYING OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY
FOOTBALL GAME AND ELSEWHERE

From the INTERNET,
<StopNWO@aol.com>, 10/13/00: [quoting]

Please distribute far and wide, and as updates arrive we will mail.

In Columbus, Ohio on September 2, over 90,000 people were at Buckeye Stadium (Ohio State University) to attend, I believe, the opening game of the season. The stadium was newly renovated to the tune of several million dollars, and for the love of money (as usual) this following story was to be kept quiet.

A well-known patriot and his wife were attending the game. During the game planes were flying overhead displaying banners. In the midst of the banner-flying planes was one or more other planes. This "other" plane/planes was identified as an "agricultural" spray plane. The spray was noticed by some of the fans attending the game. These fans were told, of course, that the spray was "just condensation".

Several weeks later, over 16,000 fans were ill. I was told that eight people had died as of last Sunday night. Apparently the pathogen is a very rare gram-positive rod bacteria. Symptoms are extreme fatigue, pain in the lungs, and were described by several as "the absolute worst I have ever felt in my life". There appears to be an incubation period of around ten days. Other gram-positive rod pathogens include anthrax, diphtheria and tuberculosis.

The plane that was seen spraying at the stadium was later discovered in a hangar in Delaware, Ohio. The plane had been stolen before the game and it is unknown at this time who stole or flew that plane which dispersed the poison over the Ohio State fans.

A nurse at a local hospital told Larry that they had been told to add antibiotics to the football players' Gatorade BEFORE THE GAME. Obviously they wanted to keep their money-making football team relatively healthy to insure their newly renovated multi-million-dollar stadium would be packed to capacity for future season games.

Apparently fans in a healthy state did not become ill, while health-compromised fans either did not recover or have had a REAL hard time attempting to recover.

A phone call from Oregon this afternoon stated that they had been sprayed several weeks ago, became deathly ill with something that ALSO appeared to attack the lungs. The entire family—and I am sure others in the area—were very sick.

The method used by the Oregonians to recover was Echinacea, Olive Leaf Extract, and Grapefruit Extract. They were told not to utilize "normal" methods for recovery or they WOULD NOT MAKE IT! We are not attempting to prescribe, of course, but if it were me, I would either take the above or add colloidal/ionic silver to the protocol, among other items. In fact, I would make sure that my immune system was intact now or start building very quickly—because who knows—the next spraying could be in your area. And if you want to know the truth about it, it probably already was!

The person who is very ill and is presently hospitalized is Larry Harris. Larry is a microbiologist and is very familiar with gram-positive bacilli or pathogens. He was initially taken to a hospital and treated with "shotgun" antibiotics. They are presently attempting to treat Larry with an antibiotic found in Siberia and made from the spores of reindeer antlers. He is on morphine and oxygen. There appears to be very severe pain in his lungs and back.

Larry's wife says that he is now being treated for pneumonia. Test results from the hospital only stated "a rare gram-positive rod". Larry would appreciate help in determining WHICH rare gram-positive rod!

Please take a moment and say a prayer for Larry. People like Larry are very needed in our fight for freedom in this country. He has given more than most of you will ever know, and I pray that he does not give his life in this way at this time. We need him. [End quoting]

I haven't had any update on Larry's condition, but do keep him—and the others so assaulted—in your prayers.

This is "just" an example how blatant these criminals are getting. Are we going to continue to allow them to murder or maim us at their pleasure? Take a look at the article elsewhere in this issue of The SPECTRUM listing the modern historical chronology of human biological experimentation.

The unconscionable twist to this story is that Ohio State officials apparently were aware, ahead of time, of what was going to happen. Does this mean that they were "bought" into silence or told it was a matter of "national security" or what?

LAW AND ORDER TYRANNY

If you live in Albuquerque, and you have teenagers who might be inclined to raid your wine, beer, or whiskey cupboard while you are away, then rent your housing, don't buy. The city council has recently passed a law that lets the city seize your home if it is used for underage drinking. If you think it is cruel and unusual punishment to wreck a family financially, to poison parent-sibling relationships, and to load teenagers with the guilt of losing the family home, you are correct. This Albuquerque law is the latest manifestation of the forfeiture laws brought in by the conservatives' war against drugs in the 1980s.

Conservatives did not realize that the main result of their efforts would be the routine confiscation of the assets of the innocent. Frustrated by the difficulty of deterring drug trafficking, conservatives decided that suppressing the drug trade was more important than the U.S. Constitution.

The result was the federal Comprehensive Forfeiture Act of 1984. This law permits the confiscation of assets that in any way "facilitated" a drug crime.

The confiscation is permitted regardless of whether the owner participated in illegal drug activity or was aware that others had brought drugs to his property. Moreover, no proof is needed. To seize property, law-enforcement officials need only claim "probable cause" for their discretionary actions.

People have lost homes, cars, boats, airplanes, motels, rental property, cash, land and other assets simply because police had "probable cause" to believe that a third party smoked a joint on leased, borrowed, visited, or rented property. In 80 percent of asset forfeitures, no charges are filed against the confiscated owners.

The asset forfeiture powers were expanded in 1988, 1990, and 1992. The forfeiture provision now covers 140 other federal offenses, and a large number of state and local forfeiture laws have been added to the books.

Forfeiture has proved to be a boon for law-enforcement agencies, as they are permitted to keep the money. House Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde has noted that agents conducting drug stings chose valuable sites for their sting operations because the presence of drugs at those sites permits them to be seized for facilitating a drug crime.

Look at it from the standpoint of the police. Their budgets are squeezed to pay for welfare entitlements and political payoffs. Asset forfeitures are a way of augmenting their funding.

Lawmakers show scant signs of learning from their mistakes. Rep Jim Leach, R-Iowa, and Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., want to plow up our financial privacy in order to pursue money-laundering. They have introduced a bill that would, in effect, place each of us under constant criminal investigation of our financial behavior. Financial institutions would be required to maintain profiles of their customers' finances without a warrant, evidence, or reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing.

Moreover, Leach and Kerry want this done on an international level. Their legislation presumes that any "tax haven"—that is, a country with lower taxes than Western welfare states—is ipso facto engaged in money laundering.

In 1998, federal bureaucrats tried to bring in similar rules, but public outcry defeated that effort to require banks to "profile" their customers.

Two years later, elected representatives—Jim Leach and John Kerry—are proposing more abusive rules than those dreamed up by unaccountable bureaucrats.

If Americans paid attention, Leach and Kerry would be defeated at the ballot box. But Americans are so badly educated that they do not understand that the Bill Of Rights is more important than apprehending drug dealers.

In A Man For All Seasons, (Saint) Sir Thomas More is asked: "Why should the guilty have the benefit of law?" He answers that when rights are disregarded in order to pursue the guilty, the rights of the innocent are also lost. If law is designed to facilitate chasing after criminals, the innocent are denied the protection of law.

In his Commentaries On The Laws Of England, William Blackstone developed the concept of law as a shield for the innocent rather than a weapon in the hands of government. In the United States, Blackstone's vision of law—the protection of the innocent from arbitrary power—has given way to Jeremy Bentham's vision of law as a device for apprehending the guilty.

Blackstone's vision gave us the Constitution and the Bill Of Rights. Bentham has afflicted us with asset forfeiture and financial profiling. Unless Blackstone makes a comeback in the law schools, the United States will become a tyranny. [End quoting]

And some think we still have any semblance of freedom in this country? It depends on your definition of freedom!

Forced Genital Exams Of Children—
Nothing Strange Or Unusual Here?

Asheville Tribune

By John W. Whitehead

Strangers entered two different elementary schools in Tulsa, Oklahoma on two separate occasions. They forcibly removed the clothes from numerous children between the ages of three and five—over their cries of fear and desperate attempts to resist—and proceeded to probe the genitals of the now-nude children.

Most schools now have elaborate procedures to screen and account for visitors. However, this sounds like a situation where school safety precautions failed horribly. What happened to these children is much worse than mere negligence because authorities at both schools actually arranged for and supported these outrageous events.

The strangers who entered the elementary schools were LPN nurses assigned to the schools to take blood samples and perform genital exams on behalf of the Head Start program that is associated with the schools. The great majority of the children were of African-American or Hispanic descent.

Ostensibly, the nurses were looking for signs of child abuse or other health problems among the youngsters.

The nurses conducted their exams over the protests of the children, with some crying for their mothers. Still others, intimidated and filled with fear, even attempted to resist physically. Their parents did not know that the exams were scheduled and had not given their consent. So there was no way they could have known the terror their children were enduring during their school day.

The nurses stretched the children out on a floor mat, on top of a school desk, and forcibly removed their clothes. Although the nurses were not even wearing hygienic gloves, they pressed and probed the children's genitals and took blood samples. The exams were conducted en masse—the children endured these humiliations in front of one other, amidst the panic, crying, and fear.

When confronted about the situation, the Head Start director responsible for the exams said that he didn't think there was anything strange or unusual about the physicals. The tragic thing is that the director may be partially right—horror trips like this may become less and less unusual. A similar situation has already occurred to middle school girls at a public school in Pennsylvania.

But the director is definitely wrong about there being nothing strange here. First, standard medical practices seem to have been abandoned. There was no notice or parental consent, and the absence of hygienic gloves may indicate an even broader lack of good medical procedures.

More important, though, is the effect these exams had on the children. Imagine the terror they endured as strangers stripped them and invaded their most private parts, ignoring their resistance and cries. The strangers wouldn't even allow the children's teachers to come in and help calm them down.

These children were traumatized and humiliated and, as a result, suffered psychological and emotional distress. They continue to suffer after-effects such as fear, anger, and guilt. Medical and psychological experts say that it will take a minimum of five years for the children to recover from this event, if they ever do so fully. And their parents are undoubtedly suffering, as well.

This kind of action cannot be justified. Thirteen families have now filed a lawsuit against Head Start, the nurses involved, the county health department, and the school district. The parents allege violations of their privacy, emotional and mental distress of their children, and other constitutional claims. But no matter what the outcome of this case is, these young people will probably never be made whole again.

There is no doubt that sexual abuse is a serious problem and children must be protected from it. But there is no evidence that sexual abuse is so widespread that it justifies activities such as these that, in truth, amount to government-sponsored sexual abuse.

Go back and re-read the feature article on this subject in the last issue of The SPECTRUM for more disturbing news. Parents have to be a lot more vigilant about what goes on at schools than most feel they have time for.

On a larger scale, the above three articles show all too vividly what the so-called "elite" controllers think about us as being their property, their cattle. Could it really have been any worse when we battled for our freedom from England centuries ago?

DENVER, COLORADO (September 22)—On the talk show Freedom Forum, on the American Freedom Network, an investigative reporter, William Zabel, tells how he has the records of a government agent calling into St. Luke Presbyterian emergency room on the government emergency phone line.

The agent called one hour and thirty-five minutes BEFORE the shooting started at the Columbine High School warning the emergency room to prepare for bodies coming because a bomb would be going off and shooting would take place at Columbine High School.

Before two teens launched their deadly attack on Columbine High, bullying was rampant, the Trench Coat Mafia was menacing and the killers gave off repeated warning signs of their intentions—victims' parents and a former staff member charged Monday.

WORST-EVER MASSIVE COAL WASTE SPILL POURS INTO OHIO RIVER

From the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 10/21/00: [quoting]

By Lee Mueller—Eastern Kentucky Bureau, Lexington Herald-Leader

INEZ—The enormity of last week's massive coal-waste spill in Martin County began to sink in yesterday as cleanup crews struggled to wrap their arms around a disaster as difficult to grasp as the foamy sludge itself.

While Ashland officials watched the Big Sandy River for the arrival of a 75-mile streak of black water hovering just upstream from their water plant on the Ohio River, others began to quantify the impact of the spill.

Among the observations:

State officials said it is worse than May's bourbon spill in Anderson County, when Wild Turkey flowed into the Kentucky River from a burning warehouse that had held more than 500,000 gallons. The contamination killed hundreds of thousands of fish in what was called the worst fish kill in state history.

Last week's spill contained measurable amounts of metals, including arsenic, mercury, lead, copper, and chromium, a federal official said yesterday, but not enough to pose health problems in treated water.

A spokeswoman for the Cincinnati-based Ohio River Valley Water Sanitation Commission, which monitors pollution in the Ohio River watershed, said the coal-waste spill could rival the worst recorded inland-waterway spill. That was in 1988, when a diesel-fuel tank exploded in Pennsylvania, dumping a million gallons of the fuel into the Monongahela River.

Wayne Davis, chief of the Department for Fish and Wildlife Resources' environmental section, said: "We have instances of black water every year, but this is the worst one I've seen or heard of."

A federal Environmental Protection Agency official in Atlanta said his agency does not rank disasters, but he estimated that in terms of area affected, the Eastern Kentucky spill probably rates among the 10 worst such cases in the South.

EPA cleanup coordinator Fred Stroud said a coal-company consultant has estimated it will cost $50 million to $60 million to clean up the streams.

About 250 million gallons of water, mixed with 155,000 cubic yards of coal wastes, poured into streams October 11 after a 72-acre slurry pond failed at Martin County Coal Corporation's preparation plant on a hilltop near Inez.

Detecting hazardous metals in the sludge automatically made the disaster eligible for EPA's Superfund assistance. But Stroud said the coal company, owned by A.T. Massey Coal Inc., is insured and has been working hard to limit the damage with its own money.

Among other things, the company is paying for temporary waterlines for Martin County and Louisa in Kentucky, and Kermit and Kenova in West Virginia. That work is expected to be completed this week.

The company has also been dredging the drier sludge from Coldwater and Wolf creeks, the streams that were hit the hardest. Vacuum trucks are being used to remove material from the streams and deposit it in holding pits on company property.

"They seem to want to do the right thing" Stroud said. He said Martin County Coal President Dennis Hatfield "is taking responsibility for what happened and that's a good thing. We've had people run off before."

No injuries have been reported, but so far about 100 miles of waterways have been affected, state officials said.

In Ashland, public services director Steve Corbitt was waiting to measure any additional impact after the sludge reaches the Ohio.

Corbitt oversees the Ashland water plant, which produces 9 million gallons of water a day. He was uncertain what to expect.

"We haven't seen the big nasty stuff yet" he said.

Water treatment plants measure the solids in untreated water in terms of "turbidity" he said.

"Our river water is usually 1 in turbidity" Corbitt said. "We have treated 750 before, during floods. That's dirty."

Yesterday morning, however, Corbitt said he received reports that turbidity at the peak of the sludge, 10 miles away and flowing slowly toward him, was 6,000.

"When it gets up into the thousands, I can't even visualize how heavy that is" he said. "This is a totally different animal than we've ever seen before."

Corbitt said the Big Sandy River's current traditionally carries oil spills and other pollution out into the Ohio River, away from Ashland's water plant, which is 2 miles downstream on the Ohio.

Corbitt said he hopes the river of sludge will loop around his plant, too. If it doesn't, the city intends to send 18 barges, with half-million-gallon capacities, upstream to obtain fresh water for its plant.

Area health officials estimate that the spill has affected 4,500 people in 1,500 residences along the river, said Maleva Chamberlain, a spokeswoman for the state Division of Water.

Gil Lawson of the state Cabinet for Health Services said 27,623 people were without water in two water systems in Louisa and Martin County. That figure does not include people served by wells and smaller systems, he said.

So far, only a few dead fish have been sighted, Davis said, mostly when people stirred water and sludge behind logjams.

On the Tug Fork at Warfield, ducks swam on the black surface yesterday while fisheries biologist Dan Michaelson tried to determine what was happening beneath. He worked from a boat to try to shock fish to the surface.

"Suckers seem to be the hardest-hit fish" Michaelson said. "In some that we've looked at, the gills seem to be coated over. We've found evidence of live fish. Carp seem to be doing fine. But we're only beginning to see the severity of this fish kill."

Michaelson said ducks and other water birds seem unaffected by the spill. Frogs and salamanders, he said, were killed along with fish in Coldwater and Wolf creeks.

"We are not sure how long this black water will last" Davis said. "Fish can stand some conditions like this, but it's already been a week. Can they last a week? Can they last two weeks?"

But We Don't Need A War
The June 10, 2000 issue of the British Medical Journal reports that on March 9, 2000, doctors in the Israel Medical Association went on strike to protest a new four-year wage contract for doctors. Since going on strike, the death rate in Israel has dropped considerably according to a survey of Israeli burial societies.

"The number of funerals we have performed has fallen drastically" said Hananya Shahor, director of Jerusalem's Kehilat Yerushalayim burial society. "This month, there were only 93 funerals, compared with 153 in May 1999, 133 in the same months in 1998, and 139 in May 1997."

Meir Adler, who manages the Shamgar Funeral Parlour says: "There definitely is a connection between the doctors' sanctions and fewer deaths. We saw the same thing in 1983 (when the doctors applied sanctions for four and a half months)." There is one town in Israel where the death rate has remained constant, the town of Netanya. Netanya has only one hospital and the doctors there signed a no-strike clause with their contract and did not participate in the country-wide sanctions.

DRUG AWARENESS: NEW SUICIDE

In response to increasing public concern over suicides among people taking Prozac and other SSRI anti-depressants, the British Medicines Control Agency (MCA), which is the equivalent to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, now requires the manufacturers of Prozac and the other anti-depressants to add the following warning to physicians and patients: "People may feel suicidal in the first few weeks of taking Prozac and similar antidepressants."

Why has the FDA failed to issue similar warnings to protect the American public?

In the U.S. these drugs, though associated with an array of severe adverse reactions in some patients, are widely and haphazardly prescribed, not only for adults, but for children—even toddlers and infants. Contrary to industry claims that these drugs are safe—based on short-term (usually 6 week) clinical trials before they were approved by the FDA—their long-term effects have not been studied, nor is it known whether they are safe for children.

According to FDA-compiled data, in 1994 Prozac was prescribed 349,000 times in pediatric patients under 16 years; Zoloft was prescribed 248,000 times. Furthermore, Prozac was prescribed 3,000 times for infants under one year old! (See Psychiatric Times, March 1998, p.69)

Instead of protecting the public by warning physicians and patients about the risks associated with the drugs, the FDA is protecting the profit-margins of drug manufacturers.

PROVED: 14HZ SIGNAL
SUPPRESSES RAINFALL, INDUCES VIOLENT WINDS

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 10/25/00: [quoting]

Now this is very disturbing! Got this from another list. —Billie

Within the past 24 hours, our ongoing monitoring of low-frequency HAARP transmissions has yielded some surprising and distressing information.

Correlating our data with official weather records, we found that when the 14 Hertz signal was being broadcast at the highest output levels, wind speeds went BALLISTIC—topping out at nearly 70 miles an hour.

But that's in accordance with the effects we've been seeing from this signal the whole time we've been doing this research.

However, what we ALSO realized was that, at the same time, a large, very noticeable weather front approaching the northern California coast yesterday afternoon (stretching all the way to British Columbia) and originally expected to drop some hefty precipitation along the northwest coast yesterday and today, began shredding apart on satellite photos as the 14 Hertz transmissions were turned WAY up.

By cross-referencing our data on the 14 Hertz signal last night beginning around 11 PM (when the front finally came ashore) EXACTLY in chronological terms with the times that measurable precipitation fell or did NOT fall on specific areas in the northern California area, we came to the firm conclusion that these transmissions NOT ONLY amplify/intensify higher-elevation wind velocities and exacerbate atmospheric instability, but they will ALSO severely deteriorate, disperse, and disintegrate moisture-laden weather fronts. POSITIVELY! These are the weather systems which bring GREATLY-NEEDED rainfall to the western U.S. (and beyond)!

The front that was supposed to bring rain to California by this morning HAS BEEN DESTROYED! Check the satellite photos yourself, starting last night!

So: Now we have clear evidence that the vicious, homicidal psychos masterminding the New World Order's global weather modification operations have the clear intention of disturbing, even destroying, the fundamental atmospheric patterns and conditions which enable the development of rain. Their project operators are DELIBERATELY and INTENTIONALLY destroying weather fronts and preventing rain from falling in this targeted region.

Apparently their intention here is to desiccate the very Earth itself, inducing widespread desertification and inconceivable decimation of the Earth's myriad life forms.

That includes HUMAN BEINGS!

We must destroy these satanic monsters and everything they represent, somehow or other, if WE are to survive. —NewsHawk Inc.

It looks like someone has just now awakened to an example of the kind of weather modification that has been going on since at least the mid 1970s. It is true that the HAARP system—as we've reported many times in past issues of The SPECTRUM—can be a formidable tool for weather modification, but it is by no means the only tool, or HAARP's only goal.

Moreover, the weather effects observed and reported above may have been “incidental” to what was actually intended to be accomplished toward some other, non-weather-related goal. In other words, getting your driveway wet is incidental to washing your car, but it still gets wet—even though your agenda/goal was to wash the car, not water the driveway. Much of the intended use of the HAARP system is far more disruptive than “merely” weather modification.

Curriculum To Make Kindergartners Comfortable With ‘Gay And Lesbian Families’

By Allyson Smith

CHICAGO—Members of the Gay, Lesbian, and Straight Education Network, GLSEN, discussed plans to campaign against the Boy Scouts and to introduce positive discussions about homosexuality into elementary school classrooms—including kindergarten—during their annual conference Oct. 6-8 in the Chicago suburb of Arlington Heights.

This year's conference theme, “Ending The Hate Beginning In School”, highlights GLSEN's contention that teaching pro-homosexual lessons to young schoolchildren is an appropriate way to combat “homophobia” and “hatred” directed at homosexuals. But critics like Peter LaBarbera of the Americans for Truth Project, who led a pro-family coalition protesting the conference, said GLSEN's elementary school agenda “manipulates the minds of impressionable children”.

GLSEN chose the Windy City for its conference to celebrate the opening of its third regional office here (the organization is based in New York City). Organizers said around 800 people, including teenage students, some of whom received financial scholarships, attended the event.

Scouts Out, Homosexual Clubs In

GLSEN announced plans to pressure schools to lobby school districts to stop sponsoring the Boy Scouts due to its ban on homosexual scoutmasters.

“The Boy Scouts can present in someone's homeroom, they can get the school lists of students, they can have posters in the halls.... It's a very unique, special access that most other clubs do not enjoy, and at the same time they are a discriminatory club” said GLSEN public policy director M.K. Cullen.

LaBarbera countered that homosexual student clubs advocated by GLSEN nationwide—called Gay-Straight Alliances—often receive much the same access. Recently, Newton North High School in the Boston suburb of Newton, Massachusetts (Rep. Barney Frank's hometown), celebrated “Bisexual Awareness Day”. A large banner with the slogan “Celebrate Bisexual Awareness Day” was hanging over the main entrance of the school until parents got wind of it and complained to school authorities.

Brian Camenker, president of the Parents Rights Coalition, and whose daughter attends Newton North, obtained posters detailing alleged “myths” and “truths” about bisexuality that were posted in the school's halls to promote “Bisexual Awareness”. One of the stated “myths” was: “Bisexual people are promiscuous.” A “truth” was that “Bisexual people may or may not be attracted to both sexes equally.”

At the anti-GLSEN rally Friday, LaBarbera said: “If you asked parents whose agenda—GLSEN's or the Boy Scouts—presents the real threat to schoolchildren, I think most would say that GLSEN does more harm than the Boy Scouts ever could.”

Gay Elementary Social Studies

At a workshop at the GLSEN conference titled “Appreciating A Broader Canvas: How Teachers Understand Gay And Lesbian Content Integration In Elementary Social Studies” participants were instructed on ways to incorporate pro-gay content into family studies for grades K-3 and into U.S. immigration history for grades 4-6.

The K-3 lesson plan advised educators to help students “recognize diverse family constellations” by encouraging discussion of individual family differences and similarities and by showing photographs from a book entitled Celebrating Families, which includes “lesbian mothers/adopted daughters”.

The lesson plan for grades 4-6 told teachers to integrate homosexual-affirming curricula into U.S. immigration studies by interspersing stories of homosexual migration from small towns to large cities amongst traditional immigration studies of other groups who came to America to escape persecution, such as the Pilgrims and Chinese and Hispanic immigrants.

In another session, the film That's A Family! was shown. The movie is the second by lesbian activists Debra Chasnoff and Helen Cohen, creators of the controversial film It's Elementary, which showed instructors giving pro-homosexual classroom lessons to young children. According to a promotional flyer,

That's A Family! is a highly entertaining half hour documentary for elementary school children, featuring kids from a wide variety of family structures. Family portraits include multi-racial families, grandparent-headed families, gay and lesbian families, single-parent families, and others.

In addition to segments depicting male and female homosexual families, the movie also includes a vignette of a family consisting of a mother and her live-in boyfriend. Traditional mother-and-father two-parent families are not shown—except in cases where the parents have widely divergent ethnic or religious backgrounds. GLSEN and other homosexual groups are lobbying to get That's A Family! shown in classrooms across the country.

Gay Geometry

At a GLSEN workshop entitled “LGBT [Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender] Inclusion—Not The Usual Suspects”, attendees received a handout telling of ways to include pro-homosexual content in geometry classes by using “known political symbols (a pink triangle, a yellow Star of David, a political flag, the purple teletubbie) to study shapes. While the geometry lesson is the goal, the history and political information surrounding the shape is also introduced”.

Although conference presenters talked about the importance of disseminating only “age-appropriate” material, all participants, including dozens of high school-aged kids, had the opportunity to receive a “Visitor’s Companion” that advertised Chicago’s homosexual “leather” bars, a sex club, and a homosexual bathhouse called “Steamworks”, which was advertised as a “24-hour men’s gym/sauna”.

LaBarbera questioned why GLSEN’s organizers—already bruising over the recent arrest of a Chicago GLSEN leader for soliciting sex with an underage boy (GLSEN expelled the man)—did not take the “simple step of keeping these gay sex club ads from reaching the teenagers in their care”.

“For years, GLSEN has claimed to protect ‘at-risk’ kids. But they are now helping put young teenage boys at risk by uncritically passing out a gay guide that hawks anonymous sex clubs and ‘leather’ bars in Chicago” he said. “This fits into a pattern of GLSEN failing to shield its young followers from a homosexual male sexual culture that not only tolerates, but often celebrates, promiscuity.” (At last year’s GLSEN conference in Atlanta, a similar sexually-laden booklet was passed out to attendees.)

Coming Out In The Classroom

During an all-day seminar Friday called “LGBT Educators Empowerment”, high school teacher Patricia Nicolari of GLSEN/Connecticut described ways in which educators can “come out” to students based on a five-stage continuum ranging from “In [the closet]” to “Out [of the closet]”. She described actions teachers might take during Stage 3, “Gradual Risks”, as follows:

“You wear the jewelry, maybe a little triangle or a little rainbow, something very subtle. You start with a little sticker on your car or maybe a few little subtle changes in your classroom that only you think that you know...maybe talking about your roommate and the things that you’ve done together, trips that you may have taken. You may bring up gay news...testing the waters, so to speak. When you test the waters, you’re trying to gauge the climate in your school. You could do that in the faculty room. When you bring up gay news, how do the other teachers react?”

During Stage 4, “Increased Risk-Taking”, Nicolari advised “taking your partner to school events”, “addressing gay jokes”, and getting the [school] administration and parents “into place”.

Co-moderator Michael Fiorello discussed the importance of enlisting “straight allies” such as members of Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays and religious leaders who defend homosexual teachers. He added: “I’m not trying to stifle minority religious views...but they should not be the controlling element of curriculum [or of] hiring policy, firing policy, [or] coaching....”

Quoting a 1977 textbook she uses in her junior-senior “Family Life” class, Nicolari said: “In this book, dating will refer to one male and one female spending time together. So I said [to my class]: ‘I feel I need to point this out. There can be exceptions to that. It can be two females dating, or two males dating.’”

Unisex Bathrooms

Much of the GLSEN conference dealt with assisting high school and middle school students in launching and improving “Gay-Straight Alliance” or GSA clubs. These in-school clubs promote the acceptance of “gay”, bisexual, and “transgender” students, and have been the subject of intense controversy all across the nation. Among the workshops offered at the GLSEN conference was one entitled “How To Run A Killer GSA.”

The high level of commitment among GLSEN activists to the “trans” cause was illustrated by the numerous seminars devoted to “transgender” issues.

GLSEN held two all-day seminars for youth activists only on Friday. Among the fliers available outside the seminars was one entitled “Transgender Issues And Resources”. This publication listed “tips and suggested activities that can be used to help your GSA become more gender-inclusive, begin talking about gender and transgender issues, and make your school more safe for transgender or gender-questioning students”. One suggested activity was for GSAs to “watch and discuss movies with gender nonconformist characters”, including Joan Of Arc, a film about a Catholic saint. Another suggestion urged GSA members to “campaign to create a unisex bathroom at your school”.

Combating The “Right Wing”

Another of the all-day seminars was one on “Responding to the Right Wing”. It was co-hosted by Barbara Miner, managing editor of an “urban educational journal” called Rethinking Schools. During the session, Miner said that the strategy of the “right wing” is “to engender distrust of public education [and] to batter down the separation of church and state”. “Right wingers”, she said, are “anti-immigrant” and “very virulent in their anti-government rhetoric”.

Miner expressed fear of school voucher initiatives, saying: “Vouchers and private schools will do an end-run around 20 to 30 years of rights gains.” She said the “right’s” use of the term “high standards” is a “code for edging out diverse values” and cited the banning of a book containing information about breast cancer as an “example of the obsessiveness of the religious right”.

Conference presenters and attendees repeatedly stressed the idea that “respect for others” must supersede private religious beliefs and that name-calling must be stopped. However, the prohibition on name-calling excluded such labels as “radical right”, “religious right” and “right wing” which were frequently used as pejorative labels for those who oppose homosexual activism in schools.

NEA Stands With GLSEN

National Education Association President Robert F. Chase gave the keynote address at the GLSEN conference on Saturday morning. Chase’s remarks were preceded by introductions from GLSEN director of public policy M.K. Cullen and GLSEN Executive Director Kevin Jennings, who said there are now over 700 GSAs “in high schools and middle schools today”.

Cullen criticized a ballot measure in Oregon called the Student Protection Act that would ban the promotion of homosexuality in schools. She derided the ballot initiative, led by Lon Mabon of the Oregon Citizens Alliance, as “anti-gay”. At the mention of Mabon’s name, several audience members hissed.

Jennings reminisced about the birth of the first GSA in 1989 and lauded Chase as “the voice in American education today”. Referring to a campaign launched earlier that week by the Family Research Council, urging members to write Chase to discourage him from attending the conference, Jennings said: “Bob Chase laughed and said, ‘I am happy they are coming after me.’” He added that Chase had approached GLSEN to be invited to speak and quoted him as saying: “I have a platform and I am going to send an unequivocal message.”

Chase began his speech by referring to the Family Research Council campaign and read several e-mails he had received from NEA members. He said the letters represent “the attitudes, fears, and misconceptions that some of our members have". Chase insisted: "I am here today precisely out of concern for the children our members teach. The NEA does not have what the right wing has branded a 'radical pro-homosexual agenda'. Rather, we have a radical civil rights agenda...a pro-human agenda.

"This is not some special interest or radical agenda I'm talking about" he said. "It's not about promoting unsafe and abhorrent lifestyles, but protecting [against] abhorrent behaviors. It's not a matter of recruiting gay or lesbian teachers, but of retaining them. It's simply a matter of protecting all children and all school employees."

Chase concluded: "It is an education issue, no matter what the e-mails say, or no matter what the Family Research Council says."

[End quoting]

Again, it would be useful to go back and re-read the feature article in last month's SPECTRUM to grasp the larger picture surrounding this high-impact subject. And it is well worth repeating, again, that those are YOUR schools and they require quite a bit of vigilant oversight if you—as parents, grandparents, and concerned citizens and taxpayers—wish for schools to move in a different direction than the one boldly being promoted here by this kind of "special interest" group. That the NEA has found a way to so unequivocally rationalize backing such a "special interest" group ought to be enough of a clue to the thinking person that the whole agenda is being orchestrated and FINANCED from a much higher level of direction. It would be VERY instructive for one of these serious investigative reporters to follow the money trail.

RADIO THAT BYTES

Excerpted from POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, November 2000: [quoting]

Holy Marconi! Digital radio services promise crystal-clear sound.

By next summer, your home and mobile radio reception will begin to sound as crystal clear as a compact disc. Say goodbye to the snap, crackle, and pop that are the calling cards of static, hiss, fade-out, and other interference that often plagues AM and FM listeners in large cities, distant suburbs, or on the road. That alone would be cause for joy, but with clarity also comes greater choice.

Don't like the local offerings on the broadcast dial? Does it all sound the same? The solution is arriving in bits and bytes. In the coming age of digital radio, you'll be able to hit a button on your tuner to access any of hundreds of digital satellite radio stations available nationwide.

And you'll be able to record radio programs much the same way you use a VCR to save TV shows for later viewing. Say you've just rolled into your parking spot at work. Before you leave the car, hit the record button and you'll find the remainder of your favorite morning drive-time talk show waiting for your return commute. (Don't worry: the radio could run off an auxiliary battery.)

These next-gen radios serve more than your ears. The radio's display will show far more than just a station's frequency and call letters. Think song information, traffic advisories, weather, stock quotes, and sports scores.

Eventually, web pages could be raining down from the airwaves for your receiver to grab and save for narration and display, e-commerce will soon creep into your car or kitchen: If you like an ad for a car wash or a local organic foods shop, your receiver could print out a discount coupon.

The medium of radio is reinventing itself, and it's going where its nimbler, flashier descendants have preceded it—digital. This assault via bitstream is coming from two different directions. Current terrestrial broadcasters are now working on technical standards that, in the next year or two, will enable their AM and FM stations to send out clear digital signals. Meanwhile, by the time you hit the road during vacation next summer, satellite radio operators will be blanketing the continental United States with a network of hundreds of new digital channels.

[End quoting]

Articles like this are fine, as far as they go, in announcing a new technology just around the corner. The problem is the potential MIS-USE of such a data transmission system in terms of, say, more cleverly imbedded subliminal messages and direct digital assaults upon our brains and nervous systems via broadcast signals. For them to work, all that is required is for the sleeping public to remain unaware of the mind-control aspects of these new technologies.

Which leads to this next item, which is an informed response to someone's email questions (suspicions) about some of the new, miniature "tracking" devices now being hyped for one set of reasons—while the TRUTH of the matter is, as usual, something quite different:

SUSPICIOUSLY SMART IMPLANTS

From the INTERNET, <illusions@beyond-the-illusion.com>, 8/22/00: [quoting]

I am an ex-Microsoft engineer and know a great deal about this technology.

It is a miniature transceiver that relays information to the equivalent of Mobile Telephone masts. The technology will be applied as follows:

These applications include locating lost or missing individuals or household pets; tracking endangered wildlife; managing livestock and other farm-related animals; pinpointing the location of valuable stolen property; finding lost airline baggage and postal packages; managing the commodity supply chain; preventing the unauthorized use of firearms; and providing a tamper-proof means of identification for enhanced e-commerce security.

Now, here is the important part: We have a device that can be implanted. It uses biosensory technology. Why?

If it was only to be used as a tracking system, why the need for technology which can "interpret" the body's signals. This sound like an ID tagging system. This cannot be allowed to happen. "They" would know everything about you, at any time. You will have NO CONTROL.

The system can transmit and receive data. Why receive?

This "reception" plus the biosensors could be used as a form of manipulation. It could manipulate anything from limb movements to creating hallucinations.

This technology sounds incredibly similar to the "alien implants". I don't believe in aliens. So, the U.S. government has developed biosensory implants, lasers which can paralyze people, and are test flying on a daily basis "UFO"-like aircraft at Groom Lake in Nevada.

Also, an implant which can be used to manipulate the human body's senses. Could they create hallucinations such as "aliens". The answer is YES! We have the technology to enable blind people to see by connecting a camera to the brain via a direct "plug in". There is NO reason whatsoever that a TV image could not be broadcast to the implant, causing the user massive hallucinations.

I wonder who our "aliens" could be?

[End quoting]

Again, such new technologies are NEVER put on the market ONLY for the reasons that are hyped to the public. When more of the public awaken from their slumber enough to ask the kinds of questions (and reason the kinds of responses) as did this engineer, then we will be well on our way to slowing and reversing the present people-control agenda that is presently advancing at an alarming rate.

ULTRASOUND CLOT BUSTER

From POPULAR MECHANICS magazine, November 2000: [quoting]

Sound could be the key to dissolving dangerous blood clots.

"The technique would dissolve the clot, not break it up into chunks" says Dr. Evan Unger, the principal developer of sonothrombolysis.

At low intensity, ultrasound is currently used to image heart blockages. Its most familiar application is, of course, in sonograms taken to see if a fetus is developing normally.

Targeting cells with a more powerful blast of ultrasound can disrupt cells and, at high levels, shatter kidney stones.

Unger detailed his findings at the recent Acoustical Society of America annual meeting, which was held in Atlanta.

He said that variations of the technology could be used to deliver drugs to specific disease sites, by causing tiny fatty capsules filled with medicine to, for example, burst near tumors. [End quoting]

With the growing number of benefits available to the general public from Alternative Medicine, it looks like the so-called "elite" controllers (who own the medical industries) are having to start to make some less intrusive medical methods available to stay competitive. This is one area wherein the elite are beginning to bow to the pressures of the awakening public. Alternative Medicine is beginning to really hurt their business. Even medical school applications have shown a big drop, according to a report I read. More and more people are becoming disgusted with the so-called "health care" industry—and can you blame them?! Just go back and re-read the earlier item in this News Desk about death rates dropping when doctors went on strike!

HOME VISITATION LAWS

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, September 2000: [quoting]

By Nev Moore

Like small brush fires across the land, we are hearing stories of parents who claim that Child Protective Services (CPS)—even though there had never been any type of abuse or neglect—abruptly seized their children.

The stories we hear are eerie in their similarity. Without incident, warning, or warrant, government agents from CPS, often accompanied by police officers, show up at a home or school and seize children, based on the most vague and frivolous of allegations.

The children are whisked away to strange foster homes. The parents are not allowed to know where their children are. The parents are not charged with any criminal act, therefore they are not entitled to due process.

In the United States, CPS seizes 3,000 children every single day. According to their own statistics, only 400 are for substantiated acts of abuse or neglect. To make matters worse, Department of Health and Human Services documents that 68 percent of substantiated cases "do not involve child maltreatment". One might ask: What do they involve? The majority are poverty-related issues, but due to several factors, almost anyone could lose their children. The factors that enable government child abduction are:

- anonymous reporting (meaning that anyone with an axe to grind or any mentally unstable busybody can anonymously file a report against you);
- social workers who are given absolute power and immunity, and do not have to account to anyone;
- an agency that receives massive state and federal funding—$12 billion a year and rising—and is rewarded based on the numbers of children they process; and
- an obsessive mentality of social "restructuring" and control that is every bit as unstable and dangerous as the Hitlers, Pol Pots, and Idi Amins of our history.

Thirty years ago a plan was formed to nationalize our children and make them the property of the state. One of the original proponents of this plan was the late Dr. C. Henry Kempe of the University of Colorado.

Hillary Clinton praises the work of Kempe in her book It Takes A Village.

Kempe was an open and wholehearted supporter of communist educators, who stated: "We must remove the children from the crude influence of their families and, frankly, nationalize them."

Kempe's vision was to remove the children and have them raised in state orphanages. His model was the orphanages of Rumania. He, and all the other "child savers" who follow his vision, including Hillary, ignore the fact that mortality in the Rumanian orphanages is 72 percent—mostly due to starvation and medical neglect.

The plan involves placing a social worker in every American home to document "risk factors" that will be entered into an electronic portfolio kept on every citizen from birth. "Risk factors" may include not enough toys or too many toys, cigarette smoking, or birth of a sibling. The plan is clearly spelled out in President Clinton's Goals 2000, a 154-page bill, signed in 1994 and already in effect. Unknown to the majority of the American public, Goals 2000 was called "The Restructuring of American Society, from Cradle to Grave". Goals 2000 is the culmination of Kempe's original plan. Clinton is just the patsy who signed it. Why haven't we read about this Orwellian plan on the covers of Time and Newsweek? Kempe stated that the plan "must be initiated with stealth".

The Plan Implemented

The unholy trinity being used to implement the plan is CPS, the Home Visitation program, and outcome-based education.

The Home Visitation program, now active in 42 states, makes it compulsory for all parents of newborns to have social workers visit their homes regularly.

Rep. Henry Hyde (R-IL) wrote a letter to every member of Congress urging them to try to stop the program.

In his letter he stated: "This is 'big brother' intervention as we have never seen it before. It is a case of the 'village' mentality run wild. Americans have never experienced such intrusion into their family lives."

[End quoting]

Well, maybe not intrusions that they KNOW about, Henry, but Big Brother has been steadily increasing both the surveillance and covert management of we-the-people for many decades of mind control. How better to test if the sheep are docile enough yet than by taking baby lambs away from the herd and watching to see

ORGANIZED MEDICINE
PARTICIPATING IN SINISTER SOCIALIST PLOT TO NATIONALIZE CHILDREN?

Excerpted from THE IDAHO OBSERVER, September 2000: [quoting]

By Don Harkins

According to a midwife who asked to remain nameless, any person attending a live birth must fill out a Certificate of Live Birth that is filed with the Bureau of Vital Statistics. If the form is not filled out completely, it will be returned immediately to the noncompliant attendee who will be liable for a $250 fine. Fifty dollars per day will be added to the penalty until the form is returned in a manner that is satisfactory to the state.

Refusal to comply could mean a loss of state licensing, loss of insurance, and the possibility of serving time in jail.

Many midwives and other alternative healthcare practitioners are forced to comply with state live birth laws. Such professionals we have spoken to resent participating in this Orwellian intelligence gathering mechanism. Organized medicine's corporate hospitals (the fifth branch of government?) seem to experience no crises in conscience in submitting this data for entry into government databases.

Most people have no idea that, from the moment your innocent baby is born, the government has begun to keep detailed records of its little life and, by law, under threat of fines and imprisonment, hospitals, midwives, and family doctors must supply the state with the information.

Not one parent of a newborn, who has been asked, has ever seen the form. The highly personal and private record that is being supplied to the state and, therefore, the federal government, is being obtained without knowledge or consent of the parents.

The form (large in size) lists such information as the parents' education level, type and location of birth, how the birth was paid for, date of last menses and length of gestation. Note also in reverse print to the far left where the person attending the live birth must attest that all of the "personal information provided on this certificate is correct" in the capacity of an "INFORMANT".

"If that doesn't add insult to injury!" stated one midwife who has helped mothers bring hundreds of babies into the world. "We have to live with the fact that, under threat of fines and imprisonment, we must supply this information to the state, then to have us sign our names to the form as an 'informant' just makes me feel horrible inside."

Please excuse our not attaching names to the persons supplying information for this article. The state is so militant about obtaining the information that alternative healthcare practitioners feel that they may be stripped of their ability to openly assist live births should the state learn that they are philosophically opposed to state live-birth laws.

"The push is to make it impossible for alternative practitioners to assist in live births so that all children will be born in hospitals where records are more easily kept and controlled. We must stay in business for those who do not want their baby to be born in a hospital" a midwife said.

Information provided on the form is gathered through a variety of means that include lifting data from other sources such as insurance forms, driver's licenses, and checking accounts. Some of the information may also be picked up by the "informant" through seemingly casual conversation.

According to one midwife, the form pictured is a brand new form that has just been issued to all persons the state recognizes as being participatory in live births. The form is identical to the form that the state has been using for the last several years, except for one detail. In the lower right hand corner, in Box 45, it now says: "CONSENT OBTAINED FOR IMMUNIZATION REGISTRY ENROLLMENT".

Previous forms simply asked if the controversial Hepatitis B shot had been administered to the infant shortly after birth.

"Now that the 'voluntary' vaccination tracking registry is in operation, the state probably feels very confident that by determining whether or not the parents gave their 'consent' to be enrolled in the registry answers the hep B question. They were probably quite proud of themselves for saving the taxpayers' money by avoiding the expense of significantly altering the form" commented North Idaho Chapter of Vaccination Liberation President, Ingri Cassel.

TEACHER SAYS
PUBLIC EDUCATION HARMFUL

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 10/9/00: [quoting]

John Taylor Gatto, a veteran of 26 years in the New York City public schools and also a New York State Teacher of the Year, said that public education cannot be reorganized and should be abolished.

There you have it—an honest insider's assessment.

Gatto, in speeches and essays, said that public education everywhere teaches a covert curriculum whether teachers realize it or not.

This curriculum consists of confusion, class position, indifference, emotional dependency, intellectual dependency, provisional self-esteem, and the feeling that there is no escape from oversight.

Gatto says that public education has become such a giant bureaucracy, with so many vested interests, that reform has become impossible. Better to do away with public education and explore alternatives.

Here is how he describes his pupils: They cannot concentrate for very long; they have a poor sense of time past and time to come; they are mistrustful of intimacy; they hate solitude; they are cruel, materialistic, dependent, passive, violent, but timid in the face of the unexpected. And they are addicted to distraction.

This, Gatto says, is the result of the present system, which affects all children whether they attend so-called good schools or slum schools. He has taught in both.

People should remember that mass public education in this country dates back only to around 1850. It started in Massachusetts, and it was strenuously opposed. Prior to that, education was left to the private sector, and, consequently, education was tailored to the individual's interests and needs.

The Wright brothers did not have degrees in aeronautical engineering; the great car inventors had no degrees in automotive engineering; great builders of the past had no civil engineering degrees. So-called experts are an invention of a giant bureaucracy that consumes billions of dollars to indoctrinate children and turn them into creatures really not fit to be citizens of a free society.

Fortunately, some of the children resist the indoctrination and emerge able to think critically, independently, and creatively, but it seems that each year there are fewer who do so.

Gatto says, by the way, that reading, writing, and arithmetic easily can be taught in 100 hours—not in the six or seven years public education claims to require for today's school children.

It's insane, when you think about it, to institutionalize our children well past the best years of life. In the past, people by the age of 15 were doing productive work, and many had started families. We force our children to sit in industrial-style institutions for 12 or 18 years of secondary education, and another four for so-called higher education.

Even so, children finish secondary school for the most part totally unprepared to make a living. Most are unprepared for higher education. This is despite the fact that universities have themselves dumbed down to the point that few college graduates today could pass tests given to eighth graders in the early 1800s.

What is really needed is a genuine debate about education. Do not confuse education with the public-education industry. The oldest trick in the book used by those with a vested interest is to narrow the debate to tinkering with status quo. That's what politicians are doing today.

National Public Radio (NPR) interview between a female broadcaster and US Army General Reinwald who was about to sponsor a Boy Scout Troop visiting his military installation:

FEMALE INTERVIEWER:

So, General Reinwald, what things are you going to teach these young boys when they visit your base?

GENERAL REINWALD:

We're going to teach them climbing, canoeing, archery, and shooting.

FEMALE INTERVIEWER:

Shooting!!! That's a bit irresponsible, isn't it?

GENERAL REINWALD:

I don't see why; they'll be properly supervised on the rifle range.

FEMALE INTERVIEWER:

Don't you admit that this is a terribly dangerous activity to be teaching children?

GENERAL REINWALD:

I don't see how; we will be teaching them proper rifle discipline before they even touch a firearm.

FEMALE INTERVIEWER:

But you're equipping them to become violent killers.

GENERAL REINWALD:

Well, you're equipped to be a prostitute, but you're not one, are you?

The radio went silent and the interview ended.

Also in the news:

Two former guards at a federal prison are accused of taking thousands of dollars in cash in return for smuggling sperm. The New York Post reports that as many as five New York mobsters fathered children in federal prison.

Authorities began investigating after a convicted Colombo family hit man was seen in a visitation room showing off a toddler he called "my son". The incident raised eyebrows because he had been in jail since 1988.

Yes, this is our world—and truth is STILL stranger than fiction! Holding that thought, consider the following item:

THE SCHEME TO MAKE JAY ROCKEFELLER "PRESIDENT"

From the INTERNET, by Sherman H. Skolnick, <<http://www.skolnicksreport.com>>, e-mail: <skolnick@ameritech.net>, 10/31/00: [quoting]

There has been a long-time scheme to put in a Rockefeller as "President", or King, in the U.S. WITHOUT AN ELECTION

1. Laying the groundwork for the orchestrated Watergate Affair, in the late 1960s, the Rockefellers pushed through the 25th Amendment, to cure the gap in the U.S. Constitution as to how, if a President is dead in office (or assassinated) or unfit to continue to serve, the Vice President takes over and becomes President and automatically removes the unfit President.

2. I was the first to go public with part of the scheme. Elected Vice President Spiro Agnew was removed by a bribery scandal known before he was elected on the Nixon/Agnew ticket in 1972. At the time one of the only ways I could be heard was at college lectures where I spelled out the scheme six months before it happened. "I did not read that today in the New York Times, Mr. Skolnick. Where the hell did you get those details?" Naive college students would shout at me during the question-and-answer period.

By October 1973, Agnew was forced to resign, and President Nixon appointed, under the newly-minted 25th Amendment, as the new Vice President, WITHOUT AN ELECTION, Gerald Ford. Ford previously sat on the Warren Commission fraudulently stating a "lone assassin" murdered President Kennedy. (Nixon had been part of the Dallas plot.)

3. When Nixon was forced to resign in 1974, former Warren Commission member, Gerald Ford, without an election, became President. Ford, in turn, WITHOUT AN ELECTION, under the Rockefeller-instigated 25th Amendment, appointed Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President.

Who remembers Nelson Rockefeller's testimony, upon being ratified by the U.S. Senate? Rockefeller stated that the key members of his family, including himself, had PAID NO INCOME TAXES IN THE PREVIOUS ELEVEN YEARS.

The oil-soaked, richest family in the world, does not and did not support the realm, the infrastructure of America, with the payment of taxes. (You see why this land is so heavily in debt?)

When candidates for election appear on my television show, I ask them, if elected, would they tax the ultra-rich who now, by corruption and malign influence, PAY NO TAXES. I never get a straight answer.

4. In 1975, there were three genuine plots to assassinate President Gerald Ford. A BATF undercover agent, supplied with a large-caliber gun by them, came within a hair of blowing away Ford. That was would-be assassin Sarah Jane Moore, missing her target only because a disabled vet hit her elbow as she was seeking to publicly execute Ford.

My sole publicity device, other than college speeches, at the time, was a recorded phone message. As best I could, with a series of phone lines, I tried to give out the details of the three plots. Without a legal formality, the U.S. Secret Service put false busy signals onto those lines to block my supposed First Amendment free-speech rights. When I threatened, in my wheelchair, to picket the phone company headquarters, a kind phone company bureaucrat explained to me: "Mr. Skolnick, we only follow orders of the Secret Service. They, not us, are blocking your phone recorded message." So, Nelson Rockefeller came within a would-be assassin's bullet of being President WITHOUT AN ELECTION. (I attempted as best I could to spell out the other two genuine 1975 plots against President Ford.)

5. For at least five years now—on the web, on the radio, wherever I was allowed to be heard—I have spelled out various plots to assassinate Vice President Albert Gore, Jr., install John D. Rockefeller 4th as Vice President, and then shove out Clinton, so Rockefeller, under the 25th Amendment instigated by his family, could be President, or King, WITHOUT AN ELECTION.

Are the sheep of America so dumbed down that they would VOTE a Rockefeller in as President, considering that family's infamous history? Just before this year-2000 presidential election, the Rockefeller-sponsored PBS ran a two-part series, more or less praising the Rockefeller family, or explaining away their long-time crimes against the American people. (How about the plot to run two commercial aircraft into Air Force Two, with Gore onboard, in July, 1999?)

founder of the infamous Standard Oil Trust, calls himself "Jay". I dare point out that all documents have been destroyed showing William ROCKEFELLER Clinton as the illegitimate great grandson of the criminal patriarch of the Rockefeller fortune. It is a simple reason why Clinton, despite his treason and crimes, has not been prosecuted and jailed.

Jay's wife, Sharon Percy Rockefeller, has been a kingpin in so-called "public" radio, which I call National Petroleum Radio. She reportedly is part of numerous secret joint accounts in the Harris Bank, Chicago, in the Mideast construction business, in the hundreds of millions of dollars, with Osama bin Laden. The White House said, if they could "find" bin Laden's accounts, they would freeze them since they describe him as the "world's leading 'terrorist'". In October, 1998, I and a TV show associate of mine confronted top dogs of Harris Bank with details. Don't heckle me with naive statements why you did not hear of this in the oil-soaked monopoly press.

6. I have strong reasons from profound sources to believe that a so-called "emergency" may follow the year-2000 presidential election. And that there is a further scheme to install Jay Rockefeller as the unelected "President" or "King" of the U.S., all without having him on the presidential election ballot. Prior to the year-2000 presidential election, so-called "pollsters" and "pundits" made quite an effort to unhinge the brain of the average American with a barrage of "polls". The only "poll" or pole I respect is the one firemen slide down from upstairs in the fire station when the bell rings.

Since my stories are often so far ahead of the "parade", they are often misunderstood by those without our benefit of some one million documents, records, tapes, and details. I do not reveal sources. I do not want to hear one of my sources later was in a plane that somehow blew up, or that his or her body was found floating in the canal. To protect my sources, I have, in 40 years as an activist, been eight times jailed for contempt of court for refusing to divulge sources or how exactly we investigate deep plots and corruption.

Will there be an orchestrated "constitutional crisis" favoring installing a Rockefeller as "President" or "King"? At least in Moscow, in the past, when there was a so-called "emergency", they would play somber, symphonic music on the radio for 24 hours. Just another story suppressed by the liars and whores of the press. You know, the ones with the $50 hairdoes and the nickel heads. Stay tuned. [End quoting]

We have found this man to have a credible reputation as an investigator and reporter. Regardless of whether or not such a plot might actually be carried out, its feasibility is what is worth some thought—especially considering the general "criminal" nature of typical high-level politics!

ANAGRAMS

From the INTERNET, e-mail, 10/9/00: [quoting]

An Anagram, as you all know, is a word or phrase made by transposing or rearranging the letters of another word or phrase. The following are exceptionally clever. Someone out there either has far too much time to waste or is deadly at Scrabble:

DORMITORY

(When you rearrange the letters=>)

DIRTY ROOM

EVANGELIST=>EVIL'S AGENT

DESPERATION=>A ROPE ENDS IT

THE MORSE CODE=>HERE COME DOTS

SLOT MACHINES=>CASH LOST IN 'EM

ANIMOSITY=>IS NO AMITY

MOTHER-IN-LAW=>WOMAN HITLER

SNOOZE ALARMS=>ALAS! NO MORE Z'S

A DECIMAL POINT=>I'M A DOT IN PLACE

ELEVEN PLUS TWO=>TWELVE PLUS ONE

BEWARE OF NEW EYE-SCANNING ID DEVICE

From WILL LOY'S NEWS BULLETIN, September 2000: [quoting]

(Burchette Brothers, P.O. Box 363, Lakeside, CA 92040-0363)

Maybe you saw in the news that they will soon be testing a new EYE-SCANNING DEVICE IDENTIFICATION at airports. What they did not tell us is that this "wonderful new development" uses a LASER BEAM to probe the eye's retina. Amazingly, there has been no public discussion whatsoever as to any possible dangers to the eye. An out-of-adjust laser could easily cause very serious eye problems, especially over time. And we all know that most of today's new computer technologies are always bug ridden. What is even worse, if today's imprudent public accept this "TEST" (and I anticipate them doing so), I foresee this type of identification being used everywhere and for everything (including a version for the Internet) and there will be no concern at all about possible hidden eye problems.

[End quoting]

One more example of Big Brother keeping track of us—and with our unassuming help. And while the laser is scanning our eye, just what sort of information/programming might be injected directly into our subconscious?

UNPAID CHILD SUPPORT

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 9/26/00: [quoting]

Despite numerous state and federal initiatives to force parents to pay overdue child support, new government figures show the amount owed to some 20 million children reached $71 billion last year, up from $50 billion in 1998.

Equally troubling, according to a national child support group, are federal figures that show states collected, but did not distribute, some $430 million in support payments last year, mainly because they couldn't find or identify who sent and who should receive the money.

The figures were released as a Senate Finance Committee subcommittee scheduled a hearing for Tuesday on a bipartisan bill that would transfer child support collection and enforcement responsibilities to the Internal Revenue Service from the states, which have handled it for more than two decades.

[End quoting]

So now it is a question of whether the "foxes" or the "wolves" should be guarding the henhouse.

MY THOUGHTS ON "SOMETHING GREATER" IN LIFE

From THE COSTCO CONNECTION, October 2000: [quoting]

By Wally Amos of "Famous Amos Chocolate Chip Cookies"

Be Positive

I am returning home to Hawaii from the mainland, looking out the window of the jet flying at 35,000 feet. There are clouds as far as I can see. They appear to be very still and serene, and yet this big plane is shaking so much that the pilot has turned on the "Fasten Seat Belt" sign and asked the flight attendants to suspend service.

The pilot said it was rough air. No kidding! How can something so powerful as air shake something so large and not be seen? It is often said that "seeing is believing". Not so! Manytimes you have to believe a thing into existence. And many times feeling is also believing.

How many times have you had a feeling that could not be substantiated? "Oh, it was just my gut reaction" you said, or maybe you credited it to your intuition. Whatever it was, you couldn't actually see it.

How many times have you met someone and developed a feeling to be cautious, trusting, etc.? How many times have you done extensive due diligence and it was still a bad decision? Then there were times you made a decision just because it felt right—and enjoyed great success.

More and more I am trusting the source of whatever it is that can shake a plane, toss a ship like a rubber duck, or uproot a giant tree. I believe that same source can make decisions to help me achieve my goals and realize my dreams.

I choose to call that source God. It's the source of many names. I don't believe it's important what you call it. However, I do believe it's important to believe in something greater than you are.

It's a powerful idea, believing in something that you can't touch, smell, or see. It works for me. Use it and see if it works for you.

INVOKING THE DHARMIC PATH

Extracted from the INTERNET, <AABCC@egroups.com>, 10/26/00: [quoting]

Krishna Invokes Dharmic Path

This is Krishna.

I am an ancient teacher from your past. And I will let you know that there are few who will hear these words who do not know me.

I am here to speak on a most ancient path—the Path of Dharma, the Path of Grace—through Service. When you give yourself in the fullest, the Universe blesses you beyond your imagination.

Many peoples are very fascinated with the Path of Karma: the path of "I do this, and boom, this happens to me."

Yet there are also many Masters and Teachers in the Realms of Light who enjoy much greater fantasies and adventures. This is because of their fascination with "I want to know how to give to my brother and sister today!"

The Dharmic Path is following the heart to its extreme joy! Learn to handle this energy within the body in a calm yet passionate way. The Dharmic Path is the Master's path. It is the path of Grace. As you grace others, the Universe graces you. Thus, this cycle, called the Law of Cause and Effect, spins to bless you, rather than to teach you some lesson you really wanted to learn!

Choose to give of your gifts. This is how gifts develop. This is how you achieve the freedom that you say you so desire. Claim this freedom through the use of one of your special gifts today. Know that another opportunity for your gift will soon show itself.

You need not go out searching for a place to put your gifts, because the Universe will provide you a time and place far more perfect than you could conceive. Simply be ready to give your gift when the Universe says "I'm ready!"

It is the holding back of the gifts and the holding back of the love that causes what we call Karma. If you give freely every day, you will soon cycle beyond the illusion. True abundance then becomes your Way. The wings of the Sacred Bird become your own, and lift you into Higher Planes.

This is how you ascend, O people of Mother Earth! Express your gifts and the beauty lifts you!

When you pray or meditate, this is using your gifts. Practice spiritual gifts—for they increase and empower those around you to employ their spiritual gifts. For when one person walks this Sacred Path known as Giveaway, known as Service, known as Love, it spreads and grows through that web of life.

Your family, friends, and community cannot resist the good that will then grow within them. Before they know what they are doing, they will be doing what you are doing: enjoying the gifts of Life.

This is why the path is known as the Path of Grace. It says "Step out there and do what you've been resisting. Give." Use your sacred talents! Use them when the Universe says "It's time!" Then the Power comes! And then, the Magic comes and the Spirit says "Hurray!"

Serve! Use your grounded talents and create within yourself. For it is you who creates and opens these talents.

If you believe that you can heal, then you will learn how to heal. If you believe that you can pray, you will learn how to pray! If you believe that you can strengthen another, then another will be strengthened!

This is all the Dharmic Path. It is the Spiritual Freedom of Man to walk the High Road of Spirit. This is claiming the sacred responsibility of the Giveaway and walking it with Pride and Strength and Love!

This Life is true. So live it, O people!

Claim your destiny! Dharma! Do what your heart really wants to do anyway! And, know that it is already so.

[End quoting]

Some food for thought (and action) for those of you who are open to these words of wisdom. The Great Teachers always seem to be able to speak in very simple terms, yet they address far-reaching concepts.

By Bonnie Silver of Grant, Michigan

I hadn't been paying attention to the national news that July because it was haying time on our small Michigan farm. My husband, Ron, and I raised a dozen Hereford cattle, and I worried about Ron being stuck outside in the heat when I went to my cashier's job at our local grocery store that Saturday afternoon. As I lay down for a short rest before my shift, I started to pray that Ron wouldn't overdo it. Before I could finish, three words burst into my mind: hay...drought...south. It was the oddest thing. More like a command, really. And with it came such enormous pressure on my body that for a moment even breathing became difficult. Finally I sat up, tears in my eyes. Why was I crying?

I walked into the kitchen. Ron was having a cup of coffee. I asked: "What do the words hay...drought...south mean to you?" He told me there was a terrible drought in the South. Fields were parched and farmers were losing their cattle because the animals didn't have any hay or feed.

I knew how I'd feel if our cattle were dying. "Ron" I said, "that explains my message". I described the cryptic words and the urgency that had overcome me.

"So, what are you going to do about it?" Ron asked.

I had no idea. I didn't know anybody important. I was just a farmwife and a part-time cashier. God, I implored, find someone else to help those farmers.

But later that day when I was chatting with folks at my checkout counter, I kept thinking: hay...drought...south.

The words wouldn't leave my mind.

At church on Sunday, I reminded God that the drought in the South wasn't really something I could do anything about. Yes, we had some hay to spare, but how could we move it down south? By Monday morning when the urging just wouldn't go away, I made a few calls to put the matter to rest. I spoke to some other local farmers. Sure, they'd be glad to donate hay, but there was no way they could send it to the ravaged areas. As for our state's ag department, they hadn't organized a thing. "See, Father" I said, "if they aren't able to do anything, how can I? Please, find someone else."

Hay...drought...south.

By noon I did the only thing I could think of. On the highway I'd often seen trucks from Steelcase, a huge office furniture manufacturer in Grand Rapids.

Maybe they could ship hay. If I made this one call I could be done with it. After all, who'd take me seriously? I looked up Steelcase's number in the phone book and dialed. Almost immediately I was connected with a woman in public relations. To my amazement, she gave me the CEO's private number. Before I lost my nerve, I called and reached his secretary.

"What would you like to speak to him about?" she asked.

"If I told you, dear" I said, "you'd round-file me as a nut."

Minutes later, the CEO of Steelcase, a company with thousands of employees, called me back. I told my story, concluding by saying: "Michigan farmers want to donate hay to the South, but they can't get it there."

"How many trucks would you need, Mrs. Silver?" he asked.

"Twenty" I said, without a pause.

(Where did that number come from?)

"Expect a call from Mr. Marlotti. He should be able to help you."

Half an hour later, when Mr. Marlotti did call, telling me that he was instructed to give me whatever I needed, I hooted into the phone. At that moment I realized this was much bigger than me. All I could do was follow. Okay, God, I prayed, You win. I'll do what you want, but you have to help me along the way.

He did. That day I got a hold of Bill Penn, director of the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Department in Lansing. He promised to send a rep to our house to meet with the Steelcase people and folks from the state ag department, so we could coordinate shipments of hay to the South. Meanwhile, someone from Bill's office set up a 1-800 telephone number to our house. The "Michigan Haylift" was underway.

When the media got hold of the story, broadcasters and newspapers announced: "Call 1-800-Hay-Farm to donate or help ship hay." All those people ended up calling me. Twenty-four hours a day, the phone in our kitchen rang. We even had an extra line added. People would try to dump hay in our front yard. Reporters interviewed me at the checkout counter at work. Finally my supervisor suggested I take some time off: "I want you to devote yourself to the hay project" he said. Amen, I thought.

Sometimes I didn't know how I'd manage. One day I was sitting in my kitchen when the phone rang. "We've got five hundred bales of hay, over here in the Thumb." (Michigan is shaped like a mitten, and the eastern peninsula is referred to as the Thumb.)

"Hang on" I replied, checking the map. "We'll get to you." Then I prayed: God, send me someone who can pick up 500 bales of hay, 150 miles away, and get them to the first convoy of semis going south.

I hadn't even hung up when the other line rang. "I've got an empty truck" a man said. "How can I help?"

"I know just where you're needed!" Things like that kept happening.

On July 24, Bill Penn called from Lansing. "We need you here for a meeting with all the government departments who are involved. I want them to hear from you about what's happening."

I panicked. There was no way I could appear at a meeting in the capital. "I can't" I said. "I can't leave these phones. I can't drive in big cities, and I can't leave the farm."

"You have to be here" Bill insisted. "I'll send a driver to pick you up." How could I argue with that?

When I walked into that conference room in Lansing, I thought I was going to hyperventilate. The table seemed as long as a football field, and around it sat representatives of the state's ag and transportation departments, the governor's office, the state police. They all looked so official.

"Mrs. Silver" Bill Penn said to me, "would you tell these gentlemen about what you're doing?"

I looked at all those suits, said a quick prayer, and spoke. As clearly as I could, I explained about the thousands of farmers donating hay and people volunteering trucks, and how urgent it was to get the cattle feed to the drought-stricken farmers in the South. I told them that I had cattle and knew how terrible I'd feel if I couldn't feed them. At the end of my speech, a young man from our U.S. Senator's office stood up.

"Bonnie" he said, "we've talked to Conrail. You've got as many railcars as you need."

The Lord was working in so many people's lives. The Michigan Haylift was growing by leaps and bounds.

With the railroad involved, we had a more efficient way to ship hay to the South. Drivers picked up hay from farms and delivered them to the 16 rail sites that were set up. Then volunteers loaded the hay onto railcars for the trip south.

One August night, after I collapsed into bed, Ron asked me how much longer I could keep up my part of the organizing, answering phones, talking to reporters, giving out information.

"Until the job's finished" I said. "When will that be?"

"I don't know" I answered wearily.

In mid-August I went to Grand Rapids to see firsthand what was going on. High-school football teams, youth-corps volunteers, prisoners on work detail, all kinds of people were taking the hay from trucks and putting it into railcars. It was brutal work, especially in the heat, but no one slowed down. Good thing McDonald's, Burger King, and Pepsi donated massive amounts of food and beverages to keep everyone going.

We started getting reports from grateful farmers down south, whose cattle were getting fed again. We were delivering hay into seven states—over 10.5 million pounds—and not one dollar had exchanged hands. All the labor, fuel, transportation, and feed were donated.

Then one morning in September a TV reporter came to do an update on the story. I tried to answer her questions, but my words just wouldn't come out right. "Excuse me" I said, "you'll have to talk to my husband."

After the TV crew left, I smiled at Ron. "I guess it's time."

"What time?" he asked.

"You wondered how I'd know when I was finished. Well, all these months God's given me the strength to do things I would've never been able to do on my own. But today I can't. I think that's His way of telling me I'm done."

Drought conditions passed and the project did wind down after that. Our phones stopped ringing; we took out the extra line; people stopped bringing hay to our farm; and I returned to my job at the grocery store. Only one blessing remained, and that was meeting some of the folks who'd been on the receiving end.

On a rainy Thanksgiving weekend—how fitting that it rained—we joined hundreds of others under a big tent outside Greenville, SC. A choir sang, a minister led us in prayer, and a proclamation from the governor was read. "Thank you, Bonnie" people said, "we're so grateful for what you did."

The real thanks belonged to the Lord, for whom I was only a reluctant servant. But He gives us what we need to do His will. That's what I learned. He gave me willingness when I was unwilling, words when I was tongue-tied, stamina when I was weak. How else would a farmwife and part-time cashier ever have been able to help start the Great Michigan Haylift?

[End quoting]

After reading this story, how can any of us ever again say "What can little ol' me do to make a difference in this world?" It all starts with a willingness to Listen Within and then the courage to carry out what we are invited to do. This story is certainly a fitting complement to our Front Page feature article on angels and their interactions with us!

Electricity ... First Aid Kit for the Future

Check the research of Robert C. Beck, D.Sc. based on US Patent # 5,188,738.

The Beck protocol includes 4 steps with 3 units. Endorsed by Bob Beck.

1. The Silver Pulser

$175

Bio-stimulator based on micro-currents. Also makes ionic/colloidal silver with .9999 pure silver wires. Operates from one 9-volt battery. AC option. 3 year warranty.

2. The Magnetic Pulser

$276

Target specific areas. Outputs an intense pulsed magnetic field of >43,133 Gauss. Penetrates 9 inches. Automatic pulsing. Bio-North marked. 12 Volts DC. 2 year warranty.

3. The Water O₃ generator

$360

Lab tests show kills e-coli & staph in water. Freshly ozonate drinking water. Tesla-based technology. operates from 12 Volts DC, fused quartz crystal, high frequency cold plasma/cold corona ozone generator. 2 year warranty.

Bio-Tuner: BT5pro

$200
New model with quartz crystal frequency control. Output same as standard on BT6.

Breaking Loose From Those Limiting Beliefs

10/18/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace and be still.

Allow for the opportunities of the moment as they present themselves. There are no chance happenings—rather, a perfect orchestration of events. This is seldom realized by you ones there while still in the physical. Most times it is quite the opposite, wherein you ones tend to assume that all is more or less "chance" happenings.

ALL things happen for a reason, whether it be coming into great fortune or facing a tedious challenge of patience and persistence. Let not the daily existence "lull" you into a sense of mundane mediocrity, else you will surely become cynical at best and outright depressed at worst.

The physical life experience is to provide you with unique opportunities to grow. It is usually the seemingly "little" things which cause the greatest obstacles, for they tend to be tedious and somewhat monotonous as they tend to resurface time and time again.

Be persistent in the day-to-day experiences, and be quick to note the uniqueness of the day—especially wherein your path crosses with another, even if but for the briefest of a moment. There is much communicated between individuals as brief interactions occur, even if no words are spoken.

Learn to appreciate the subtleties in life. Then you will find that the once monotonous daily routine has become quite an enjoyable experience—wherein fantastic coincidences can be observed if you just put forth a little energy toward wanting to know WHY you have crossed paths at any particular time with another of Creator's unique expressions.

As we have stated in many prior messages, allow for the spontaneity of life to unfold all around you. There is great choreography taking place on the higher-dimensional levels, as ones' paths are drawn together and intersect.

Perhaps you are the first and only bright spot in another's day simply because you smile and tell the clerk behind the counter: "Take your time; I'm in no hurry."

Do you make it a point to always offer a positive (uplifting) gesture to another, regardless of the circumstances, or do you tend to walk toward the ground, avoiding eye contact?

How do YOU feel when others acknowledge your presence with a smile, hand shake, or such?

Please know that your current circumstances will not likely change until you learn the lessons they have to offer. That is, the apparent "mundane drudgery" of living will continue to repeat itself over and over until you learn the lesson associated with the perception that you feel is "THE ONE GREAT OBSTACLE" in your life. There is no such thing, but for many, they believe there is, and therefore they continue to create situations that will seem to reinforce the said belief. All the while what is actually taking place is a deliberate chain of events designed to cause a focus of attention on the area of MISPERCEPTION.

For example, let us say you believe that ALL you need in order to truly be happy in life is a companion or mate, and other than this "one" thing, you are perfectly happy and content, and if it were fulfilled you would be "whole". Meanwhile, everywhere you turn you see couples holding hands, and you spot members of the opposite sex who seem to pass by you without hardly a glance. And this general scenario repeats over and over, and seems to consume you from within. (This general scenario is not at all uncommon in your "modern" society.)

In time, you begin to develop the belief that there is something "wrong" with you. It will usually be along the lines of "I'm too tall" or "I'm too short" or "I'm too fat" or "I'm too thin" and so forth. In actuality there is NOTHING wrong with you, and all of the outward physical parameters you try to blame your "problem" on have almost NO bearing on the actual nature of the real challenge you are faced with. This is to say that you recognize there is an unbalanced situation in your life which is causing discomfort within, and yet you tend to look at the situation from the outside in, rather than from the inside out.

All emotional situations that result in discomfort (anxiety, depression, anger, frustration and such) are a result of a belief held within as true that, in actuality, is NOT true. In short, when you buy into a lie (even a lie that is commonly held by the masses as truth), you will cause within you a great internal struggle between the Higher Self and the highly reactionary "ego" self.

The Higher Self generally uses inner emotional signals to communicate to the conscious mind, whereas the ego self tends to lean towards EXTERNAL "reasoning" as the cause for all things. The ego mind thus tends to develop programs or tapes that play over and over again—until such time as the conscious mind truly sees the actual cause that lies behind the perceived need for such self-programming and negates that need.

The program or tape then disintegrates as soon as the TRUTH of the matter is recognized.

In the above example, the belief that "The ONLY thing missing in life for me to feel fulfilled is a companion or a mate" is a LIE. Your Higher Self knows such a belief to be untrue, and many ones who are in a very unbalanced relationship with another will also testify to the fallacy of this assertion.

The REAL reason the restless person dwells upon the couples holding hands and laments the lack of attention from the opposite sex, and so forth, has NOTHING to do with physical appearance or such. Rather, it is in fact the Higher Self working to help you to overcome your own self-limiting beliefs by constantly bringing to your attention an area of focus

This is to say that you recognize there is an unbalanced situation in your life which is causing discomfort within, and yet you tend to look at the situation from the outside in, rather than from the inside out.

wherein a lie exists that, if left uncorrected, will inhibit further growth.

Some ones spend entire lifetimes wrestling with these “smaller” issues as the inner world goes against the seeming contradictions of the outer world. The “reality” of the outer world is reinforced by the perceptions of the masses which are typically focused upon that outer world and its external parameters, rather than upon the inner world which is truly at cause.

Remember, please, that the world you live in is a byproduct of thought projection coupled with an intense emotional desire which, according to the Laws of Creation, manifest what you ones call the physical. THE PHYSICAL IS A SUBSET OF THE NON-PHYSICAL (the so-called spirit world). ALL answers to ALL questions lie within, for within is where TRUE Knowledge, Understanding, and Strength come from.

Many times we witness ones who refuse to look within for the answers to the “ALL CONSUMING” questions, and as a result there is often a point of severe depression wherein ones will generally feel hopeless, useless, and even worthless. It is often in such moments of severe desperation that these ones will give up all hope of ever finding resolution to the “problem”—and as a result there is no need to “run the program/tape” any longer.

It is often in this spent state that the Higher

Self is able to reach through and help make sense out of the events which precipitate such a deep cry for help. In essence the person will have reached deep within, past the “obstacle” point, to some more basic foundational TRUTH wherein True Strength can be derived. And then there will come the “life-altering” event whereby a renewed outlook on life has been achieved.

The above is the hard, slow way of doing things, but on your world it seems to be the more common way of proceeding. The more simple way would be to assume that the answer to all of your concerns lies within, and develop, through discipline, a system of introspective study.

The above is the hard, slow way of doing things, but on your world it seems to be the more common way of proceeding. The more simple way would be to assume that the answer to all of your concerns lies within, and develop, through discipline, a system of introspective study. Many call this practice meditation, but even this word conveys preconceived erroneous beliefs and ideas, and some ones will never get past the negative reactionary impulses they associate with that term.

Simply take a few minutes each day to sit quietly and ask for Guidance (prayer), and then sit quietly and observe the thoughts that come to mind (meditation?—call it what you like). We advise that you keep paper and writing instrument handy so that you can, if you so choose to, write down ideas as they come. Many of you do this sort of activity already, and it will not seem like a new idea. Others will find this suggestion awkward and may even feel foolish attempting same. It can be done almost anywhere, even on a 10-minute bus commute. Please remember to first call upon The Light for protection, since the dark ones love to exploit every opportunity you allow them for interfering with your mind.

In time, with persistence, you can and will learn to consciously connect within for your Guidance and Knowledge. It is a prerequisite for graduating to the next level of conscious expression as a co-creator.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec. I come in Light and in Service to Creator God—The One Light.

May you each find within the answers to the questions and concerns that cause the stirrings and distractions of the lower-frequency emotional states. As you each learn how to grow in Strength and Wisdom, so does all of Creation grow.

Salu.

WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach

The expansive yet compassionate nature of the messages delivered in WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach not only challenges those already firmly committed upon the spiritual path, but also provide a serious first step to help ones who are just awakening to (and inquiring about) the magnificent Spiritual Transformation now sensed by many to be in progress upon this planet.

“Our Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation are attempting to communicate with ALL of us at this time. Why? Take a look around you. The old ways of doing things aren’t working. Our planet is entering a time of massive, turbulent change and renewal. To put it bluntly: we NEED help! And that’s where this book comes into the picture. Yes, eventually ‘the Phoenix will arise from the ashes’ after this Great Cleansing process, but the ride could be quite a bumpy one, especially for those ill-prepared for what is to happen.

“Just how we choose to deal with such change is THE question each of us must confront. Yet confusion swirls everywhere upon Earth at this time. And restless searchers cry out for that which may help them cope with these truly challenging times ahead. Thus these messages courtesy of our most loving Elder Brothers from the Higher Realms of Creation who are but further along the same spiritual path we all must eventually walk.”

If We But Ask Angels Stand Ready To Help

there is the more recent movie release titled City Of Angels, with Nicholas Cage and Meg Ryan (now available at video stores), which further activates the imagination on this subject. Angels aren't threatening—they're our Guides, our Helpers, our Rescuers in times of peril. Many who scoff at the notion of extraterrestrial involvement in our planet's evolution don't think twice about the existence of angels.

Angels are recognized and written about in most of the world's religions. But there is a certain mystique about them. We know about them, and yet we don't.

In preparing this story about angelic intervention—including God's Hosts—naturally I came across a lot of material (and, I must say, a lot of misinformation and poorly presented nonsense) on the subject. What I've tried to do, for this particular outlay, is to expand upon some conventional research with personal experiences and inspirational messages from and about these great and loving beings.

What emerges from the various "pieces of the puzzle" is quite an awesome picture of Growth—with a capital G—on a cosmic scale. But I don't want to give away the ending here at the beginning!

Let me just say that the personal angelic interventions we have all heard about (and/or experienced ourselves) take on a much deeper significance when viewed from the perspective of the Larger Picture in which the angelic realms play such an exquisite and active part. So, with that said, let's begin our intriguing journey into the subject of angels.

ABOUT ANGELS

I must preface this first excerpt by saying that it was downloaded from an Internet website, but the website was not noted on the documentation in front of me, and I have, subsequently, been unable to relocate the original source. What I am presenting here is only a portion of the material, but I would like to acknowledge that this information was not written by me:

[Quoting—with gratitude to the author, wherever you are.]

The word angel appears over 250 times in the Bible. The word angel actually comes from the Greek word aggelos, which means messenger. The matching Hebrew word mal'ak has the same meaning. (Latin: angelus; Greek: aggelos; from the Hebrew for "one going" or "one sent"; messenger.) The word is used in Hebrew to denote indifferently either a divine or human messenger. The Latin version, however, distinguishes the divine or spirit-messenger from the human, rendering the original in the one case by angelus and in the other by legatus or more generally by nuntius.

We can not perceive them with our corporeal eyes. However, if God opens our eyes to see these angels, we can see them (II Kings 6:17). They may also appear to us, taking human forms (Heb 13:2). They are ministering spirits sent forth to serve those who will inherit salvation (Heb 1:14). The angels are represented throughout the Bible as a body of spiritual beings intermediate between God and men: "You have made him (man) a little less than the angels." (Psalms 8:6) They, equally with man, are created beings: "Praise ye Him, all His angels; praise ye Him, all His hosts...for He spoke, and they were made. He commanded, and they were created." (Ps., cxlviii, 2, 5: Co., i, 16, 17)

THE CREATION OF ANGELS

The Scripture speaks about the creation of angels, so it is clear that they have not existed from all eternity (Neh 9:6; Psa 148:2,5; 1 Tim 6:16). Colossians 1:16-17 indicates that all angels were created simultaneously: "For by Him all things were created, both in the Heavens and on Earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones or dominions or rulers or authorities—all things have been created by Him and for Him. And He is before all things, and in Him all things hold together." The time of their creation is never definitely specified, but it is most probable that it occurred in connection with the creation of the Heavens in Genesis 1:1. It may be that God created the angels immediately after He had created the Heavens and before He created the Earth—for according to Job 38:4-7 "the sons of God shouted for joy" when He laid the foundations of the Earth.

The Bible tells us that they are mighty and holy. It says they are mightier than we humans are. They are so swift as to defy the laws of physics. They are subject neither to decay nor to death. They can be visible or invisible to humans. In most biblically recorded cases of their appearance on Earth, the people who saw and heard them responded with terror.

The following account by Daniel illustrates an angel's impact:

"As I was standing on the bank of the great river, the Tigris, I looked up and there before me was a man dressed in linen, with a belt of the finest gold around his waist. His body was like chrysolite, his face like lightning, his eyes like flaming torches, his arms and legs like the gleam of burnished bronze, and his voice like the sound of a multitude. I, Daniel, was the only one who saw the vision; the men with me did not see it, but such terror overwhelmed them that they fled and hid themselves. So I was left alone, gazing at this great vision; I had no strength left; my face turned deathly pale and I was helpless." (Daniel 10:4-8)

Daniel then explains that when the angel started speaking, he (Daniel) passed out, and the angel had to help him to his feet.

The angel's purpose in coming to Daniel was to give him a message about the future, to let him know what is written in "the Book of Truth" as the angel called it. The angel also reported his intense conflict with a fallen angel, specifically with the demon who held some measure of authority over Persia. This demon had the power to detain the angel for twenty-one days. From these biblical accounts and others, we learn that angels' capacities reflect their existence in at least some of God's dimensions outside the four of the universe. Compared to God, however, angels are limited. The Bible indicates that God alone is omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent. Angels are not. Though they have access to more dimensions than we humans do, they occupy a limited dimensionality, as we do. Though they are able to exercise extraordinary power, they are created beings, as we.

[End quoting]

THE ANGELIC KINGDOM

While this next presentation contains much information on the subject of angels, naturally, there is no way to confirm that this is "really the way it is", but at the very least, it provides some thought-provoking concepts and historical commentary which do provide a greater general awareness of the subject.

The following has been excerpted from the www.ascension.net/angelic.htm Internet website, with some rearranging of the presentation:

[Quoting]

The beings of the Angelic Kingdom have the function of administering to the spiritual needs and the emotional needs of both the Human Kingdom and the Elemental Kingdom. They "take care" of us. Angels work primarily on the emotional plane. Just as an electric heater radiates heat waves, angels radiate unique beneficial energies, with many different wonderful effects.

Each type of angel is a specialist in radiating one particular "quality" or "virtue", which typically has its own unique color, sound, fragrance, and focus.

The angels who work with Archangel Michael specialize in Faith and Protection.

The angels who work with Archangel Zadkiel focus on The Violet Flame of Transmutation.

The angels who work with Archangel Raphael specialize in Healing and Consecration.

Those with Chamuel focus on Divine Love and the Adoration Flame.

The angels under Jophiel specialize in Illumination and Enlightened Understanding.

And, of course, there are innumerable other qualities that angels specialize in: Divine Will, Happiness, Hope, Purity, Opulence, Stillness, Comfort, Ceremony, Divine Power, Peace, Science, Beauty, Ministration, Music—the list just keeps going!

Angels are like rechargeable batteries. Just by hanging out within the aura of their "leader", their auras "soak up" and absorb that quality for which their leader has become an expert. This master angel is like a fountain, producing a continuous stream of this particular quality, and consequently his or her force field is a powerful reservoir of this quality.

For example, the angels working with Archangel Uriel absorb by proximity his special quality of Peace, and then, like a rechargeable battery, when they become totally "full" with this quality, they get sent out somewhere to administer and radiate out this quality. They radiate their quality primarily through their feelings. Once they reach "empty", they return to their leader and once again "fill up" with that quality, to once again be sent out.

As angels evolve, they become continuously improving experts at holding more and more of this specialized quality, and holding it for a longer time, and holding it without contamination from adverse external conditions (usually generated by humans). As they continue to specialize in this quality, with time they too become a fountain-head of this quality, to which many lesser angels come to drink-in and absorb this essence.

Their role is to radiate the aura of God to humans and elementals, to help them and comfort them on their path, and to remind them of their celestial source and heritage. In doing their service to life of radiating energies, angels are typically experts at creating multi-angel force-fields, using sacred geometry and symmetric patterns to create force-fields much more powerful and effective than if they worked independently. Like a good football team, they know just the "play" to implement, to optimally nourish and nurture each situation.

Angels also function as an inter-dimensional conduit, carrying energies both up and down between dimensions. In the "up" direction, they gather all the hopes, aspirations, wishes, and prayers of humanity, and then deliver them up to the appropriate Beings on the higher subtler planes. In the "down" direction, when these higher Light Beings choose to send particular beneficial energies to particular places on the planet, it is the angels who ultimately deliver these celestial energies to their Earthly destinations.

There are, of course, also personal angels, or guardian angels, focusing on the spiritual and emotional well-being of one particular human. Every human has at least one of them. Many Lightworkers have a number of them. If you want your personal angels to work even more closely with you, you can, first of all, acknowledge them and thank them from your Heart, for their undying (and usually unappreciated) service to you.

Then you can do your best to make your personal aura as sweet, harmonious, and loving as you can. Remember—the sweeter your energies, the closer your angels will want to "hang-out" in your aura. Angels just LOVE environments that are harmonious, sweet, and peaceful. It gives them a momentary sanctuary amidst the imperfections on Earth that are continuously being generated by humanity-at-large.

Angels can grow weary from this, and so they just flock to a pleasant energy zone. Just like a hummingbird feeder attracts hummingbirds, a beautiful backyard, with flowers, streams, LOVE, and sweet peaceful energies, will attract angels from all around, as they come to bask in your angelic oasis on the physical dimension.

By the way, if you want your personal angels to work extra hard for you, you can bribe them! How? With their form of currency, of course! No, it's not dollars, it's not credit cards, but it is something that is as valuable to them as hundred dollar bills are to us—LOVE! Love is their form of currency. They value it, they cherish us, they even evolve through receiving more of it! So, whereas your personal angels may have already done an exquisite job of serving you, without receiving one drop of Love or Gratitude from you, if you turn up the throttle and flood them with your love and appreciation, then just hang on for the heavenly acceleration you are about to receive! Elementals can perceive angels, and so always send them love and gratitude.

But angels are not used to receiving very much appreciation from humans—so far!

There exists a Universal Law that Beings in one dimension cannot assist beings in another dimension UNLESS the request or invitation comes from the dimension wishing to receive the assistance. To a great extent, this leaves many angels with their “hands tied” with respect to helping humans. They live but to serve. They love to serve. They evolve by serving. It makes them happy to serve. But you have to invoke them. That means you have to invite and request their assistance. The instant you do, you’ve created an inter-dimensional doorway through which they can pour-in and literally flood you with their endless divine qualities.

As a matter of fact, from their point of view, humans are not really that good at receiving. Even the humans who consciously request and absorb these healing qualities from the angels are really only letting in just a tiny fraction of the benefits they really could absorb—like letting-in a tiny brook, when you could really let-in a Niagara Falls of “manna from heaven”.

So remember—the angels are always encouraging you: EXPAND how much you can receive and absorb beneficial radiations from them! Just know that they will always be there—eager and enthusiastic to give you as much as you can handle!

Why not test them right now, while you read this? Think of some divine quality that you really need or would like more of. Then silently, in the depths of your Heart, request and invite the appropriate angels to administer this quality to you. You can even make your request more specific: Ask for a “heart beam”—with one angel in front of you facing you, and another angel behind you, also facing you. Sense them create a pillar of Light connecting their Hearts, with this Light Beam passing directly through your Heart! Feel this for just a few moments; then you have a sense of the magical assistance that is always lovingly available to you—just a thought away.

When angels appear to humans so as not to scare them, they usually appear in the form that those humans expect angels to look like. But this may be nothing at all like the form they normally take (if any). Remember—the higher you go in dimensions, the more “optional” form becomes.

And, of course, angels are famous for their angelic choirs. It is not uncommon to have 50,000 angels singing in exquisite unison. Why do angels have such beautiful voices? Simple—because they have beautiful feelings.

When you pick up the phone, you can immediately tell how the other person is feeling from their tone of voice. The tone of the voice always has encoded within it the emotional state of that person in that instant. This is true of humans, elementals, and of course angels.

If you wish to have a more beautiful voice, rather than taking voice lessons, get to the source, the cause—just focus on cultivating more beautiful feelings! When angels greet each other, it is a triumphant and ecstatic symphony of gorgeous colors, music, fragrances, and feelings.

Angels want to serve you! They also want to play with you! They even want to worship with you! All of the kingdoms are streams of Life emanating from the same One Universal Source, and in this respect we truly all are brothers and sisters.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE ANGELIC HIERARCHY

All three major religions of the Western world—Christianity, Judaism, and Islam—as well as virtually all of the world’s other systems of religious belief, include celestials in their cosmologies. Their scriptures all contain references to angelic interventions.

Angels, like people, belong to families or clans. Many names have been given to them, but in the opinion of a number of angel historians, the most familiar can be arranged in three categories, or spheres, starting at the top with those closest to God, and moving down to those who are connected to the physical world.

The word “angel” itself is used both as a generic term to refer to all heavenly beings, and as a specific term to refer to the members of the third sphere, those closest to the physical. So, too, the word “archangel” is often used as a generic term to refer to all the higher orders of heavenly beings, although they are in fact but one of the higher orders.

While it looks like there is a higher and lower echelon, it’s more accurate to visualize all these orders in a great circle, with the “highest” and the “lowest” holding hands. For example, seraphim, who appear to be closest to the Creator, also serve the God in us.

In the New Testament, celestial beings are grouped into seven ranks: angels, archangels, principalities, powers, virtues, dominions, and thrones. Plus, the Old Testament adds cherubim and seraphim, which with the other seven ranks, comprise the nine choirs of angels in later Christian theology—although the number has generally been fixed at seven. The angels receiving the most attention and veneration were the four angels mentioned in the Old Testament and the Apocrypha.

THE SPIRITUAL HIERARCHY

The 9 Orders Of Angelic Beings
(1 Being The Highest Order)

The First Sphere—angels who serve as heavenly counselors:

1 - SERAPHIM
2 - CHERUBIM
3 - THRONES

The Second Sphere—angels who work as heavenly governors:

4 - DOMINIONS
5 - VIRTUES
6 - POWERS

The Third Sphere—angels who function as heavenly messengers:

7 - PRINCIPALITIES
8 - ARCHANGELS
9 - ANGELS

SERAPHIM

The highest order of the highest hierarchy are the seraphim, the celestial beings said to surround the throne of God, singing the music of the spheres, and regulating the movement of the heavens as such emanates from God.

CHERUBIM

Beyond the thrones are the cherubim. They are the guardians of Light, and of the stars. Remote from your plane of reality, still their Light touches your lives, the Divine Light that they filter down from Heaven. Lucifer (Satan/Devil) is known as the “angel of Light, whom God’s Light shown through” before his “sin against God”.

THRONES

They are the companion angels of the planets. At this time in your history it is important for you to be aware of the particular throne, the Earth Angel, who is guardian of your world.

DOMINIONS

The dominions are the heavenly beings who govern the activities of all the angelic groups lower than they are. Divine bureaucrats, they also serve to integrate the spiritual and the material worlds. Although they take their orders from God, and rarely contact individuals, their work is connected to your reality.

VIRTUES

Beyond the powers are another group of beings, the virtues. They are of particular importance to you now because they are able to beam out massive levels of Divine Energy. As more groups of you learn to work with the virtues, there will be a greater infusion of spiritual energy available on your planet.

POWERS

They are the bearers of the conscience of all of humanity, the keepers of your collective history. The angels of birth and death are in this category. They are able to draw down and hold the energy of the Divine Plan the same way trees draw down the energy of the Sun. In this way, the powers can send all of you a vision of a world spiritual network.

PRINCIPALITIES

Beyond the group of archangels are the principalities. They are the guardian angels of all large groups, from cities and nations to recent human creations such as multi-national corporations. These might more accurately now be called integrating angels. There are many of these beings involved with your planet; one particular integrating angel carries the pattern of a unified global society in his heart.

ARCHANGELS

Beyond the angels are the beings you are used to calling the archangels. But we suggest that you call them over-Lighting angels, since they tend the larger arenas of human endeavor. These beings are from a different family from the angels. There are many different kinds of over-Lighting angels in this larger family. The four you are most familiar with are Gabriel, Michael, Raphael, and Uriel.

ANGELS

The angels who you're most familiar with are those in the last order. They are the ones who are closest to humanity, the ones most concerned with human affairs. Within the category of angels, there are many different kinds, with different functions.

The ones who you know best are the guardian angels. Because of shifts in their functions and your consciousness, it is useful to think of these celestial beings as companion angels. As you enter a time of increased Light and Love on the planet, they will not need to guard you, but rather will be your guides to greater and greater consciousness.

MICHAEL (Archangel): "Who is like God?"

The one whose name is a question—"Who is like God?"—is surely the best known of the over-Lighting archangels. Michael is acknowledged by all three Western sacred traditions. He is believed to have appeared to Moses as the fire in the burning bush, and to have rescued Daniel and his friends from the lions' den. To Christians, he's the angel who informed Mary of her approaching death. Islamic lore tells us that his wings are the color of "green emerald and are covered with saffron hairs, each of them containing a million faces and mouths and as many tongues which, in a million dialects, implore the pardon of Allah." The Koran also paints the touching image of the cherubim being formed from the tears of Michael.

In the Dead Sea Scrolls Michael emerges as the "Prince of Light" fighting a war against the "Sons of Darkness" in which he leads the angelic battle against the legion of the fallen angel, Belial. Most recently, in 1950, Pope Pius XII declared Michael to be the patron of all policemen.

Michael is the commander-in-chief of God's angel armies. He led them during a war in heaven in which Satan and his fallen angels were driven out of that sphere. In Moslem lore, Michael is described as having hairs of saffron, wings of green topaz, and a million faces, each face with a million eyes, each eye shedding 70,000 tears.

Christian art and iconography show Michael with a sword or with a scale weighing the souls of the dead.

GABRIEL (Archangel): "God is my strength"

The one whose name means "God is my strength" seems to be most frequent from the higher realms. He astonished Mary, and her cousin Elizabeth, mother of John the Baptist, with the pronouncements concerning the births of their respective sons. To the followers of Islam, Gabriel is the Spirit of Truth who dictated the Koran to Mohammed. In Jewish legend it was Gabriel who parted the waters of the Red Sea so that the Hebrews could escape from the Pharaoh's soldiers.

According to court testimony of the time, it was Gabriel who came to Joan of Arc and inspired her to go to the aid of the dauphin (the eldest son of the king of France). Gabriel's apparent ongoing interest in this planet is most probably due to his function as heavenly awakener, the angel of vibratory transformation.

Sitting at God's left hand, Gabriel is said to be the angel who destroyed perverted Sodom.

Gabriel in Hebrew means "man of God" and is seen as God's messenger. Described as a human figure with long hair and multi-colored wings, and often seen holding a scepter or lily, Gabriel's feast day is March 24. He was declared, on January 12, 1951, by Pope Pius XII, the patron of those involved in electronic communications—which emphasizes Gabriel's function as a messenger.

RAPHAEL (Archangel): "God has healed"

Raphael is perhaps the most endearing of all the angels, and the one most frequently depicted in Western art. His image is featured on the canvases of such masters as Botticelli, Titian, and Rembrandt. His name means "God has healed". Not only does he appear to be the high archangel charged with healing the Earth, but, according to the Zohar, "the Earth furnishes an abode for man, whom Raphael also heals of his maladies".

Raphael is the traveler's guide and guardian of youth. The ruler of the second heaven shows up in Christian paintings carrying a pilgrim's stick, a wallet, and a fish. The poet Milton has Raphael eating supper with Adam and Eve in Eden.

Indeed, Raphael's career seems to be peppered with medical missions. He healed the pain of circumcision for Abraham as the old man had not had the procedure done when he was young. Raphael was then sent by God to cure poor Jacob's thigh after he'd been roughed up by Samael. And it's also claimed that Raphael gave Noah a much-prized "medical book" after the flood.

There's a legend that when Solomon prayed to God for aid in building the great temple in Jerusalem, Raphael personally delivered the gift of a magic ring with the power to subdue all demons. It was with this "slave labor" that the Hebrew king completed the construction.

Raphael has also been called "a guide in hell" which, after all, is where healing is needed the most.

URIEL (Archangel): "Fire of God"

Uriel's name means "Fire of God" and he is ranked variously as a seraph, cherub, regent of the Sun, flame of God, presider over Hades and, in his best-known role, as the Archangel of Salvation. Like Metatron, Uriel is said to be one of the angels of the Presence, a most high posting since only the most accomplished angels can sustain the presence of God.

Uriel is thought to have been "the spirit who stood at the gate of the lost Eden with the fiery sword". The Book of Enoch tells us that it was Uriel who was sent by God to warn Noah of the impending flood; and elsewhere it is written that he disclosed the mysteries of the heavenly arcana to Ezra, and that he also led Abraham out of Ur in the Chaldean region.

Some have claimed that the divine art of alchemy was brought down to Earth by Uriel, and that it was also this angel who gave the Kabbalah, the Hebrew mystic tradition, to humankind. John Milton describes Uriel as the "sharpest sighted spirit of all in Heaven".

Uriel is associated by legend with earthquakes, storms, erupting volcanos and such, and has a big part in Milton's Paradise Lost. There, as governor of the Sun, he is tricked by Satan, disguised as a young angel, into giving directions to Earth, and from there to Eden. Once there, tempting Satan sought out Eve's ear.

METATRON (Cherubim): One who occupies the throne next to the Divine throne

In the world of Jewish mystics, this one came to hold the rank of the highest of the angels, despite his not being mentioned in the Scriptures. The meaning of his name has never been satisfactorily explained, although one interpretation of it is “one who occupies the throne next to the Divine throne”. It could also be derived from the Latin “metator”, a guide or measurer.

In a number of traditional sources, Metatron is said to have been the prophet Enoch, who was taken up to Heaven and transformed into an angel of fire, with thirty-six pairs of wings, to continue his days as a celestial scribe. Metatron has also been identified as the Liberating Angel and the one who wrestled with Jacob, the one who stayed Abraham’s hand from sacrificing his son Isaac, and the one who led the Hebrews through the forty years in the wilderness. In certain schools of mysticism, Metatron, said to be the tallest of all the heavenly beings, became known as Lesser YHWH. In Hebrew, the letters “YHWH” stand for the most sacred and unpronounceable name of God.

As God has many names, so, too, Metatron was thought to have many names, the use of which was believed to offer the user protection and access to this great angel’s powers. Yahoel, Yofiel, Surya, and Lad are just a few of his other names.

MORONI: Giver of the Book of Mormon

Moroni is the angel of the Latter-day Saints. While there seems to be a dearth of indigenous American angels, in 1823 legend has it that Moroni appeared to Joseph Smith in upstate New York and led him to discover buried golden tablets inscribed with dense lettering. When translated by Smith, again with Moroni’s help, this text became the Book Of Mormon, which tells us that in about 600 BC, prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, a Jewish family fled the city and made its way by ship to what is now North America. Their descendants became two nations—one the ancestors of the Native Americans, the other lost and gone. However, records kept by one of the elders of that vanished people tell that Jesus appeared to them after His death on the cross. The elder’s name was Mormon, and it was his son, Moroni, who buried the tablets his father had kept, in about 400 A.D. According to the story, Moroni thus joins the ranks of Enoch and Elijah who were transformed into angels, and follows in the tradition of Gabriel in being the angelic giver of a book of revelation.

There is a forty-foot-high statue of Moroni that stands on top of a hill near Palmyra, New York, where Smith discovered the buried tablets. The angel is shown as he appeared to Smith, without wings and clothed in a long robe. Smith, who went on to found the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, described Moroni as a “being of Light with a face like lightning”.

MELCHIZEDEK: Lived and taught 2000 years before the Christ

Melchizedek, the Sage of Salem, is another of the few known cases of a high angel taking a human male body. According to The Urantia Book, he appeared fully formed, some two thousand years before Christ, announcing that he was a servant of El El yon, the Most High. He then set up a teaching center over which he personally presided for ninety-four years.

It was Melchizedek who delivered God’s Covenant to Abraham and introduced the revolutionary concept of salvation through pure faith to the thinking of the planet. He established an extraordinary wide-flung missionary program, centered in Salem, the ancient site of Jerusalem, sending out thousands of missionaries who literally circled the globe.

Called Sydik in Phoenician mythology, Melchisedek was believed to be the father of the seven Elohim—more angels of the Divine Presence. In the third century A.D., a group of “heretics”, calling themselves Melchisedans, claimed to be in touch with “a great power named Melchizedek, who was greater than Christ”. His sojourn here as the Sage of Salem was said to have been a concerted effort on behalf of the celestials to bring some much-needed Light to a dark and chaotic time, and to sow the seeds for the coming of the Christ.

From the Book Of Alma 13:14-18, within the Book Of Mormon, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints:

“14: Yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchizedek, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood forever.

“15: And it was this same Melchizedek to whom Abraham paid tithes; yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one-tenth part of all he possessed.

“16: Now these ordinance were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order, and this that they might look forward to him for remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord.

“17: Now this Melchizedek was a king over the land of Salem; and his people had waxed strong in iniquity and abomination; yea, they had all gone astray; they were full of all manner of wickedness;

“18: But Melchizedek, having exercised mighty faith, and received the high office of priesthood according to the holy order of God, did preach the repentance unto his people. And behold they did repent; and Melchizedek did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace, for he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father.”

ARIEL (Throne): “Lion of God”

Ariel means “Lion of God”. However, some confusion exists as to exactly whose side Ariel is on. He’s ranked as one of the seven princes who rule the waters and is also known as Earth’s Great Lord. To the poet John Milton, however, Ariel is a rebel angel who is overcome by the seraph Abdiel on the first day of the great war in Heaven.

Jewish mystics used Ariel as a poetic name for Jerusalem. In Gnostic lore, that first- and second-century melting pot of revelation, Ariel is the angel who controls the demons. Ariel has also been associated with the order of angels called the thrones and is known to have assisted the archangel Raphael in the curing of disease.

John Dee, magician, occultist, and court astrologer to Queen Elizabeth I, reckoned Ariel to be a conglomerate of Aneal and Uriel, which sets him among the over-Lighting archangels!

Ariel makes an appearance in William Shakespeare’s The Tempest, which may well have been the source of why Percy Bysshe Shelley, the nineteenth-century poet, liked to refer to himself as the angel Ariel.

ISRAFEL: “The Burning One”

Israfel, whose name in Arabic folklore means “The Burning One”, is both an angel of resurrection and of song. By these same accounts, Israfel paved the way for Gabriel by serving three years as a companion to Mohammed, whom he’d originally initiated into the work of being a prophet.

In an Islamic variant of the Genesis account of Adam’s creation, Allah sends Israfel, Gabriel, Michael, and Azrael—the Angel of Death—out on a mission to fetch the seven handfuls of dust needed to make humanity’s progenitor. According to legend, only Azrael returned unsuccessful.

Edgar Allan Poe, writer of mystery tales and verses, footnoted a poem with a cryptic reference to “the angel Israfel, whose heart strings are a lute, and who has the sweetest voice of all God’s creatures”. Elsewhere Israfel is described as a four-winged angel who “while his feet are under the seventh Earth, his head reaches to the pillars of the Divine throne”.

RAZIEL (Power): “Secret of God”

Raziel, which means “Secret of God”, is believed to be an “angel of the secret regions and Chief of the Supreme Mysteries”. There is a legend that Raziel is the author of a great book “wherein all celestial and Earthly knowledge is set down”. When the angel gave his tome to Adam, some envious angels stole it away and threw it in the ocean. After it had been recovered by the primordial angel/demon of the deep, Rahab, the book passed first to Enoch, who apparently claimed it as his own, then to Noah, who learned how to make his ark from it. Solomon, too, was thought to have possessed the book, which allowed him his unusual knowledge of magic and control over the demons.

The Zohar, the major work of Jewish mysticism, claims that set in the middle of Raziel’s book there is secret writing “explaining the fifteen hundred keys [to the mystery of the world], which were not revealed even to the angels”. Other Jewish mystics report that “each day the angel Raziel, standing on the mount of Horeb, proclaims the secrets of men to all mankind”.

What we didn’t know when we began writing this material, but what Abigrael, our recording angel, told us later, is that Raziel is its guide.

SANDALPHON

The sonorously named angel-prince, Sandalphon, is the one who some say Elijah became after his death.

ANGELS AND NATURE SPIRITS

Once you open to your angels, and in some cases perhaps even before, you may run into their cousins, the “Nature Spirits”. The Nature Spirits are themselves an angelic order, but they are literally on a different wavelength and serve a different purpose.

[End quoting]

Hopefully the above provides some food for thought about the endeavors within angelic realms. Keep in mind that even though the historical and literary descriptions of some of these angels may be highly symbolic, there is also likely some kernel of truth underneath each “legend”.

In any discussion of angels and their interactions with planet Earth, it would be a great oversight to not bring into this equation the Great Awakening and overall Planetary Transition that is occurring at this time. Remember that the frequency of planet Earth is steadily increasing in response to constant energy input from the Higher Realms, and along with that is the awakening of many long-dormant abilities within us which the angelic realms are helping us to discover and learn to utilize.

The following expansive message was channeled by C. J. Martes in November of 1996, and was received from the Angelic Council of Twelve:

[Quoting]

WELCOME FROM THE ANGELIC REALMS

You are entering a new age, dear brothers and sisters of Light. You are now at the crossroads—a time of self-discovery, transformation, and awakening of the spirit.

The world around you seems chaotic. However, there is a new peace emerging from within you. Recognize that you are all on a voyage through this universe of consciousness together. You are all struggling to evolve. It is within this collective struggle that you now see that you are not separate beings at all. Things that once divided you will exist no longer, as you realize that the separation from each other is merely an illusion created by fear.

The new era in the universe is now. There has never been another moment in time where so much activation is available to you. This is why we are calling to each of you with this message from our collective heart vibration. We are calling to all children of Light, asking that each of you begin to embrace the profound joy that awaits you.

There is great beauty within your spirits that you have already known to exist inside, even during your most difficult times. It is this Pure Essence of who you are that you have continued to hold fast to when darkness has threatened you from many sources. It is this Essence that we hope to assist you in claiming and bringing forward into your human existence. You all have the same gifts and abilities at your disposal. You have always had a choice whether or not to utilize them.

Many of you are finding it harder and harder to choose to ignore these gifts. This shift is occurring for people all over your world as the vibration of unconditional love is humming within your spirits to be reborn. Each of you who are feeling the call of your hearts must now embrace yourselves and others to set your true selves free. You can all become an example of this transformation and rebirth as this beautiful Light shines forth from your hearts. You have many beautiful things in your world to experience; however, they are of no comparison to the gift and infinite beauty of pure Light and Love that exist within each of you.

You are all one essence within the same beautiful spirit. We wish to welcome you to your journey, whether you are just embarking upon it or have already found your path of Truth. We excitedly applaud each of you because of your many accomplishments. Without your desire to grow and evolve, we would not be here working directly with you today through open channels. If you had not opened yourselves to our existence, it would not matter what information came through into your world because you would be unable to receive it. It is by your creation and desire to learn that the veils between our worlds are becoming thinner and we can assist you more directly within the loving vibration of the Creator.

We wish you Divine Light and Peace on the journey toward your enlightenment. Dance now and allow your hearts to sing with joy as you experience the freedom of your evolution.

[End quoting]

Notice the strongly supportive and uplifting undercurrents to this message. It reflects the sentiment of many similar messages flooding this planet at this time of the Great Awakening.

Another common theme is reflected in the following message, which represents a small portion of a chapter from the book (published by Portals of Light, 1987) called Talks With THE MASTERS, where the Master Teacher Theoaphylos, from the Higher Realms, is channeled by a person known as Tuieta:

[Quoting]

YOU—THE VOLUNTEERS

This school that you all now attend, know you that you are students? For it is so, you are. And you have come to learn many lessons. And the lessons are as varied as there are beings here, as there are brethren upon the face of Earth. And you have come to learn your lesson. But it is that there shall be a great and mighty graduation upon this plane. And you shall have your choice.

You ones, who would be the repeaters, shall again go to school. But ah, not of this place. For this beloved jewel is to be polished, and no longer shall it be marred. For only its beauty shall come forth. And you ones, who would choose not to graduate, but to dawdle a while longer with your studies, shall school of another place.

But you ones who would graduate, who would choose—and hear these words that I do say to you for I say, who would choose—shall be with this jewel, this emerald of the Father's Crown. And they shall be as ones who no longer are in the lower grades, the beginning grades—for I like not the word “lower”—but they shall be as ones to receive the higher lessons.

It would be, as you would say, your university students. For your mode of study shall be greatly different from that which you now experience. For you shall be as ones who will have learned of peace. And you will have learned of the manifestation of brother love. You will be filled with the joy, that is the joy of at-one-ment with your brethren and with all of the Creative Force. Is this not worth working for?

You see, I have achieved this state. And I assure you it is most delicious. For these eons of time, this beloved jewel has been your schoolhouse. Would you graduate with her? Do not look to a far distant day for this graduation process. For I say to you, it has begun. How great, how mighty is up to you. This you have been told before, I know. But it is up to you.

[End quoting]

It would naturally be expected that the angelic realms should figure prominently in the execution of this great sorting and graduation process in which we now find ourselves.

This next message, complementary to and expanding upon the one above, comes from Barbara Marciniak's 1999 volume called Family Of Light:

[Quoting]

YOU ARE MULTI-DIMENSIONAL BEINGS

Your tests today as human beings are not simply about meeting third-dimensional challenges, although there will be many. Your opportunity lies in understanding that, in the cycles of existence, you relive points in time to reach for and achieve something unique. It is time for you to acknowledge your powers and live in the Now.

Live for freedom—for the amount of free you have will depend upon your response-ability. If you cannot respond, then you will lock yourself into a cocoon, a web so tangled you will never wiggle out. As Family of Light, we address you: Look to what is inside yourself. The history of your world shows that people have been penalized for free thinking. You live in a world that at one time sold you a “truth”: “The Earth is the center of the universe. And anyone who disagrees will be burned at the stake!”

Today you face the same shift in perception. Will you expand your vision beyond what you think and have the courage to speak and live your truth?

Love from inside is essential to achieve this shift. Living begins to make sense when you realize you chose to be who you are. You are multi-dimensional beings, and there are many “yous” to get to know. There are versions of “yous” from a few thousand years ago and thirteen thousand years ago, who have jumped into this reality to gather experience. And if you find you did not live at that time, then perhaps your mind has traveled to the libraries in time where everything exists at once, a place where doorways open like videos on the screen of your mind, showing vignettes of what has been, so you can make sense of what you are now.

Your world may appear baffling. You may feel that there is so much to integrate, and wonder: “How can I make sense of it all?”

You can. You must.

You are here to chart foreign territory and to pioneer an unnamed opportunity. By doing so you can truly discover one of your greatest abilities: that you are creators.

You are not victims. You are not flawed. You do not need authorities. And no one needs to save you. You do not need to memorize anything from books. You must learn to use the power of your will and your intent to discover the great flowering and blossoming of life that is occurring in your Now.

[Continuing quoting from a different chapter of Family Of Light]

UNDERSTANDING FEAR

People of great power walked the land and taught the truth of the vibration of love; as well, they helped people recognize the tyranny they lived under. Tyranny uses the tool of fear to control you.

One of the ongoing tests you face from one age to another, from one season to another, and truly from one moment to the next, is understanding fear. When you buy into any version of fear, it can become your experience because your molecules are intelligent and your energy responds to the predominant feeling in your being. The focus of your mind is exactly what gives the orders to create what you experience. Even though your ancestors approached reality from a different point of view, they too had to pass the test of fear, just as you shall in the days ahead.

[End quoting]

If you are in a fearful situation, ask, petition for help—and you will get it. Remember: the call compels the answer. And that answer is typically facilitated from those busy angelic realms.

This next little gem of an angelic “pep talk” is also courtesy of Barbara Marciniak, from her 1992 book called Bringers Of The Dawn:

[Quoting]

BRINGERS OF THE DAWN

You are magnificent beings, members of the Family of Light, and you came to Earth at this time, on assignment, to create a shift, to make a change, to assist in the transition. Love is the key. Love is what makes up the universe.

The present technology on Earth will only develop to a certain extent because mankind does not yet understand that love is necessary. Energy can take all forms of creativity, but when one is dealing with greed or hatred or any emotion that is not working toward Light, one is only allowed to go so far. There is only so much information that is available to that sort of vibration.

Love is the basic building block. So, when one has love, all possibilities exist. Bringing back the concepts of Light, which are information and love—which is creativity—is the plan.

[End quoting]

This is a well planned and well orchestrated Awakening of mankind at this time. The massive role that the angelic helpers play in this project is further explained in the following excerpt from Ken Carey's 1991 book called Starseed, The Third Millennium—Living In The Posthistoric World:

[Quoting]

ROLE OF ANGELIC MESSENGERS

Our race of angelic messengers was ordained at the inception of the human project to awaken you when the time was right. Some of us awaken you from the outside, shaking you and reminding you of who you are. Some of us slide down into physicality, merging our biogravitational fields with yours, awakening within you, looking through your eyes, helping you to reprioritize your lives along the creative currents of Love.

Still others of our more distant kin assist entirely from the outside, by pouring into the fields of thought and emotion around the Earth powerful energies of Love, Joy, and Well-being. These are the spirits who will never incarnate in human form, those of truly extraterrestrial designation. They are not associated with biological processes and never will be. Yet for love of the Great Being who awakens within you, they come to this world as forces of stabilization, beacons of tranquility, to radiate peace and assurance into this sphere during your decades of Awakening.

Throughout these decades, those of us in all three capacities continuously wash the slumbering facets of human thought with the purifying currents of life information. We vitalize you with the renewing energies of eternal love. We help you to roll away the stony conceptions that have prevented the springs of perennial wisdom from bubbling up within you.

[Continuing from a different chapter]

SOURCE

The beam of energy information that shines through the center of each of our spirit identities into our respective individualized human lives is the same information beam that emanates from the center of the Sun and, before that, from the center of the galactic core. Our essential spirit identity is one with our Creator, the Unnameable, the Source who sends but one primal identity beam through the galaxy, star, world, and soul, differentiating like light through crystal layers as it flows, taking ever more specific, focused form, yet remaining one light in essence, originating in one Source, one God, one Creator.

[End quoting]

A central role of the angelic messengers at this time is helping us to sense that inner connectedness to All That Is.

This next excerpt gives us further insights concerning the truly vast nature of the angelic role in assisting our awakening to Creator within us. The message is extracted from the 1954 (reprinted in 1986) book by Thomas Printz, titled The Seven Beloved Archangels Speak:

[Quoting]

TO THE MANKIND OF EARTH,
GREETINGS

I, Michael, Lord of the Archangels, bring to you again the living Presence of the Archangels Who, in Their graciousness, have chosen to part the veil of silence, and describe the activities which engage Their energies and to which They have voluntarily devoted Their lives.

In the great Plan of Creation, the Archangels represent the feelings of The Father-Mother God, as the Elohim represent the mental qualities. The sustaining of these feelings in the atmosphere of Earth, where they are available to the souls of men, is the service of the Archangels.

The Age of Cosmic Ceremonial has dawned. With it comes the fiat of the Eternal to unite the Kingdoms of Angel, man, and elemental in conscious cooperative endeavor to fulfill the Divine Plan. In obedience to this fiat, We come, bringing with us the description of Our services to life, Our activities in connection with the development of mankind's spiritual maturity, and Our Flames and Rays which will nourish and intensify the qualities and activities We represent within the souls of all who choose to accept Our Presence.

It is many centuries since We have been invited into the world of men and given opportunity to speak to the outer consciousness wherein lies the motivating power of illumined and willing cooperation with the Divine Plan. We are grateful for the invitation, the welcome, and the comprehension in the minds, hearts, and feelings of the few who can believe We are! Through these few, who may find merit in Our words and comfort in Our radiation, We shall serve to bless the race.

[End quoting]

Note the mention, again, that all here on planet Earth at this time are not ready for the Awakening. And yet the great gift of the angelic presence in our lives is freely offered for the sake of those who truly are ready and searching.

More about the angelic role in this mandate of Awakening is found in Ken Carey's 1988 classic called Return Of The Bird Tribes:

[Quoting]

MESSAGE FROM THE BIRD TRIBES

Our task today is to help you remove the blinders that historically have distorted your perception. Realize that what you feel in your heart determines what you see. Perception rides upon the expressions of the heart like a canoe rides upon the waters. When your heart expresses fear, in any of its turbulent forms, your understanding becomes jumbled, confused, you perceive through the waves of illusion. But when you love, you understand, for then you share the vision, the very perception of God.

[End quoting]

Now, while this Big Picture is unfolding on our behalf, largely under the magnificent efforts of the angelic realms, let's not overlook the personal interactions which angels have with us on a daily basis, though such help often does go unrecognized and unacknowledged.

For example, our next item is excerpted from the www.intouchmag.com/Angels website:

[Quoting]

ANGEL ON FLIGHT 1641
(A story by Ilsa Troge)

Everything had happened so fast. The ad in the magazine detailing the weekend seminar in Sedona. The call to my travel agent. Flight reservations to Phoenix. Car rental arrangements for the hundred and twenty miles I'd have to drive. Motel accommodations. Getting time off work during our busiest season. And finding I had enough money to afford this spur-of-the-moment trip.

This was certainly out of character for me. I never did anything on the spur of the moment. I detested the monotony of car trips. My immediate "comfort zone" never takes me more than thirty-five miles in any one direction. But here I was, sitting in seat 25D on Northwest Flight 1641, waiting for take-off.

My thoughts were interrupted by a heated discussion in the seats next to me. The occupants, an elderly couple, were having a disagreement about seating. They wound up moving across the aisle to other seats, only to create more commotion when the "rightful" occupants of those seats showed up. One of the young men took the window seat in my row, leaving the middle seat between us vacant. I don't know where his companion ended up, as my thoughts were now focusing on something altogether different.

Were the walls of the plane really closing in on me? Why was it so difficult for me to catch my breath? I felt like screaming, but couldn't. My heart was beating so fast and loud I felt it would jump out of my chest at any moment! All I could think of was getting OFF THE PLANE! But my legs would not move. And the aisle was completely blocked by boarding passengers. What was I going to do? I just had to get off that plane.

I dug my fingernails into the armrests of my seat, as if this could somehow help me hold on to reality, but it only served to magnify the horror of the situation. How could I have been so incredibly stupid as to forget my fear of flying?

The last time I'd flown—seven years ago on a non-stop from Honolulu—the plane had taken a sudden drop in altitude too terrifying for words. Drinks, snacks, stewardesses, and unbuckled passengers were sent flying. Even though the pilot assured us it was "just a little bit of unexpected turbulence", I'd vowed never to fly again. But here I sat, trapped, on a plane still sitting at the gate, scared witless.

My racing thoughts were interrupted by a calm voice asking if the seat next to me was taken. Without looking up, I nodded and mumbled something about my being a white-knuckle flyer.

The voice responded "I know" as baggage was being stowed in the overhead compartment. Was it really that obvious, I wondered.

As he seated himself I noticed we were both wearing pale purple shirts. How synchronistic, I thought, but said nothing, as I was still very much absorbed by my fear-of-flying mode. The next thing I knew he was prying my nails away from the armrest and gently took my hand to rest it between his. Under other circumstances I would've protested this obvious infringement of "my space"—but somehow this was different.

At first his words seemed to be coming from somewhere far away, and I could barely make them out. But it didn't take me long to tune-in to what he was telling me. He gave me a detailed rundown of what was going on in the cockpit, assured me of the safety of the plane, alluded to his innumerable trips on just this type of aircraft, explained each creak, bump, grind, and shimmy the plane made—almost before it happened. I was still in no condition to respond verbally, so I just kept nodding, at once indicating I understood what he was saying as well as encouraging him to keep talking.

He ordered a glass of Chablis for each of us. I eagerly accepted and at last could feel myself relaxing. Once I got my wits about me, I noticed my rescuer was a very attractive man. He had a mischievous twinkle in his eye, and the most sincere smile I'd ever seen. Soon we were talking a mile-a-minute about practically every subject under the Sun, and in what seemed like no time at all, the pilot was giving us our landing instructions.

I thanked the helpful stranger for his kindness, and as we parted in the terminal, shared an embrace only friends of long-standing would find comfortable.

In a moment he was gone. Only then did it occur to me that I didn't even know his name. I returned to the plane and asked the stewardess what the name of the gentleman seated next to me was. She looked at her manifest and with a puzzled expression said: "But ma'am, there was no one seated next to you. The manifest shows that seat flew empty on this flight."

A chill ran down my spine, and I smiled knowingly. It didn't really matter if I didn't know his name. I'd seen Highway To Heaven and Touched By An Angel enough times to believe the TV characters just might have real-world counterparts. And besides, who else would know the intricacies of flying better than the ANGEL seated next to me on Northwest Flight 1641?

Many of you reading this newspaper have no difficulty believing this story and probably have at least a few of your own to add! But just like this lady, do we recognize what is happening only AFTER the event?

CHRIST

While Christ is perhaps not traditionally thought of as an angel, he certainly was a divine messenger by any definition and, as you will see, the following message is very appropriate to "review" within the context of this article. This next gem, although you may have read it in Bible study over the years, differs from what appears in, say, the King James version of the Bible.

The following translation of the "Sermon On The Mount" is taken from the rare and astounding book called The Talmud Of Immanuel. This is the Clear Translation in English and German, published by Wild Flower Press, copyright 1992. The address listed (can't confirm if this is still good) in the book for Wild Flower Press is: P. O. Box 230893, Tigard, OR 97224.

This represents the translation of the Aramaic script written by Judas Iscariot, the close disciple of Immanuel (Jesus), discovered in 1963 in the burial cave of Immanuel by

Eduard Albert Meier, translated into German by Isa Rashid and Eduard Albert "Billy" Meier, and translated into English by Julie H. Ziegler and B.L. Greene. (Judas Iscariot remained a loyal friend and disciple of Immanuel, and did not betray him; the actual deed of betrayal was done by Judas Iscariot, the son of a Pharisee.) Although my original intent was to only quote the first portion of this talk here, after reading it, I've decided to include it in full magnificence of the message being conveyed:

[Quoting]

1. When Immanuel saw the people following him, he went up a hill and sat down; and his disciples came to him.

2. And he taught them, saying: (quoting:)

3. Blessed are those who are rich in spirit and recognize the truth, for life is theirs.

4. Blessed are those who mourn, for they shall thus recognize truth and be comforted.

5. Blessed are the spiritually balanced, for they shall possess knowledge.

6. Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for truth and knowledge, for they shall be satisfied.

7. Blessed are those who live according to the laws of Nature, for they live according to the plan of Creation.

8. Blessed are those who have a clear conscience, for they need not fear.

9. Blessed are those who know about Creation, for they do not follow false teachings.

10. Blessed are the righteous, for Nature is subject to them.

11. Blessed are you if, on my account, and because of our teachings, men revile and persecute you and falsely speak all manner of evil against you.

12. Thus those who belittle the truth have persecuted the prophets who were before you, so rejoice and be of good cheer; life and the next life will reward you.

13. You are the salt of the Earth, and if the salt loses its flavor, with what should one salt? It is henceforth useless, except to be thrown out and stepped on by the people.

14. You are the light of the world, and consider: the city that lies on top of a mountain cannot be hidden.

15. Nor does one light a candle and place it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; thus it illuminates all those who are in the house.

16. Likewise your light should shine before the people, so that they see your good works and recognize the truth of your knowledge.

17. Do not think that I have come to abolish the law or the prophets; I have come not to abolish, but to fulfill and to reveal knowledge.

18. Truly, I say to you: Until the Heavens and the Earth vanish, neither an iota nor a dot of the law of Creation and the laws of Nature will vanish, until all has been fulfilled.

19. Whoever violates one of the smallest of the laws or commandments and teaches the people falsely, will be called the smallest; but whoever spreads the teachings truthfully will be called great and will receive the thanks of the spirit.

20. I tell you: If your righteousness does not exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, you will not receive the thanks of the spirit and of life.

21. You have heard that it was said to the men of old: "You should not kill; but whoever kills shall be found guilty by the courts."

22. However, I say to you: Exercise justice according to the natural law of Creation, so that the judgment is found in logic.

23. Guilty are all who do not act in self-defense or according to a prescribed judgment of the law, if they kill or engage in evil speech and actions.

24. Justice according to the natural laws of Creation alone elevates a verdict in logic.

25. Do not accommodate your adversaries, if you are in the right, and the judge will probably have to decide in your favor.

26. Truly, I say to you: You will achieve justice only when you find it yourself and can make your fellow human understand it.

27. You have heard that it was said, you should not commit adultery.

28. But I say to you: Whoever cohabits with someone other than their spouse should be delivered up to the courts, because it is unworthy of humans, contemptible, and an offense to the laws of nature.

29. If, however, your right or left eye causes annoyance, tear it out and throw it away, because it is better for you that just one of your members be destroyed than your whole body.

30. If a thought causes you annoyance, eradicate it and ban it from your brain. It is better to destroy a thought that incites annoyance than to bring the whole world of thought into an uproar.

31. It has also been said, whoever divorces his spouse should hand over a certificate of divorce.

32. However, I say to you: Whoever separates from their spouse, except in case of adultery, causes the marriage to break; whoever marries a divorced person that is guilty also commits adultery.

33. You have further heard it said to the men of old, you shall take no false oath and keep your oath to God.

34. However, I say to you that you should not swear at all; swear not by the heavens, because they are infinite and immeasurable.

35. Neither swear by the Earth, because it is impermanent; nor swear by Jerusalem, because it is an impermanent city built by the hand of man.

36. You should also not swear by your head, because you cannot change the color of a single hair.

37. Also do not swear by the memory of a person or a thing, because all are impermanent.

38. Let your speech at all times simply be: Yes, yes or no, no. Anything beyond that goes against the laws.

39. You have heard that it was said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.

40. But I say to you: Exercise justice according to the natural law of Creation, so that you find the verdict in logic.

41. Offer your love wherever it is warranted, and punish wherever the law of nature demands punishment.

42. Give to them who ask of you, if they make their requests in honesty, and turn away from them who want to borrow from you in a dishonest way.

43. You have heard that it was said, you shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.

44. However, I say to you: Exercise love and understanding according to the natural law of Creation, so that in logic you find the right behavior and feeling.

45. Offer your love where it is warranted, and despise where the law of nature demands it.

46. You should be wise and learn knowledge, because you will become perfect in spirit like Creation, which conceived you.

47. You should train your spirit and your consciousness in the course of incarnations and let them become perfect, so that you become one with Creation.

[End quoting]

Comparing the above with, say, the King James Bible version is a good example of how different can be the renderings of an event. This is a reminder that another of the projects being conducted by the angelic teachers at this time of Awakening is the correcting of errors and exposing of purposeful lies—such as the elimination of all references to reincarnation in the conventional scriptures, but which is clearly the good advice of the last point made above.

In other words, these are times of great and liberating changes—both without and within—and that leads to our next excerpt. This next sharing comes from the 1994-1997 manuscript Winds Of Change by Robert Ghost Wolf and the Mountain Brotherhood:

[Quoting]

DIVINE ATTITUDE

Change must start from within. In order for you to alter that which is outside of you, you must first go within and expand your abilities within the inner world. You must go beyond the Consciousness that created the problem and become more than those circumstances. You must accept your responsibility for its creation. Take from it its lesson to you and your life's path. Leave it behind you.

If at first you do not complete all the desired changes, this is ok. Go back through the process, ask the God force within to reveal to you what you choose not to release. Perhaps there is a situation that needs addressing before you will be free to continue on the path. Remember, to the true initiate, life is never a problem. Rather, life is a never ending opportunity to develop skills and to become the expanded self.

Everything is energy—sometimes high energy, sometimes not so high energy. Even the feeling of no energy is energy. It is like you are a magical fish swimming in a vast sea of endless energy, going around asking all the other fish "Where is the ocean?" Well, the ocean is all around you. The reason you can't see it is simply because you are immersed in it. Your existence within this field of Sacred Energy, the God Force, is no different.

It is endless and all around you at all times.

Your ability to perceive this endless field of Energy is determined by how much effort you have spent on centering yourself. Also by the effort you expend reconnecting your awareness to the Source. This is accomplished by using your will. At first you will learn like a small child, learning a little more each time. As you mature, or begin to connect, you will pick up speed with each experience.

This life-time, this experience upon the Earth plane, is yours. You created it by choice. You are involved in relationships and interactions with other people. But the experience is yours. No one is going to die for you, only you are going to do that. No one is going to live for you, only you can have the experience. This is your evolutionary experience.

[End quoting]

Indeed these matters of which Robert Ghost Wolf speaks are the truly fundamental evolutionary "sticking points" which many from the angelic realms help us with constantly—if we but ask from the heart. And that reminds me of a personal experience I would like to share with you at this point:

THE TEST ?

by Rick Martin

The year was 1986. It was a hot summer day. A lady friend and I were driving back from a beautiful day along the Illinois River in Southern Oregon, picnicking and swimming. We were about 15 miles back in the woods from the nearest Forest Service station, all dirt road, a road that very few cars traveled in the course of an average day.

As we were enjoying the breeze through the car windows, the way the sunlight danced on the river, and the light through the trees, all of a sudden a "crazy man" came out of nowhere and hailed us to stop. At first glance he looked a lot like a 35-year-old Charles Manson, wild hair, beard, very dirty and unkept. We looked at each other for a moment, reluctantly—after all, this was a very isolated area. After a moment we stopped and asked the man what was wrong. He said his car had died and he needed help to get it started.

We followed him a short distance down a side road, into some very thick, dense brush close to the river. His "camping" spot was not visible from the road. From the appearance of his camp, he had been there for what must have been months. His very old, big clunker of an automobile was filled with "stuff". We tried to jump his car, unsuccessfully. Rather, to be more accurate, this car looked like it was dead to the world, permanently.

All of sudden I noticed his eyes. They were an extremely clear, piercing blue color. As I looked at him there was "recognition", and he saw my look of recognition and was startled by it. As if to cover himself, he immediately started speaking in a crazy mumble-jumble of words.

Thinking how else we might help this guy, we pooled what little money we had and gave it to him, along with what food we had in the car. I stood right in front of him, very close, and said: "I would suggest you pray for a mechanic to drive down this road to help you."

His eyes opened wide and grew very bright, and then he said: "So, you DO believe in God?"

My friend and I both responded, simultaneously: "Oh, yes!"

We wished him well and went on our way. I said to my friend as we were leaving: "You never know who might cross your path. For all we know, that could have been Christ himself testing us. If it was, I believe we passed."

Not being able to get the incident out of my mind, I packed up a box of food, gathered some money, and drove back to where we had seen this man. His campsite was completely empty—as if no one had ever been there. To this day it remains a mystery.

ASK YOUR ANGELS

This next lesson is excerpted from a writing by Alma Daniel, co-author of the volume called Ask Your Angels, the best-selling how-to guide to communicating with these ever-present heavenly helpers. Her book has sold over half-a-million copies and has been translated into French, Spanish, German, and Portuguese:

[Quoting]

Since Ask Your Angels was published in 1992, I've received more than 3,000 letters from readers in Canada, the United States, South America, Germany, Switzerland, Spain, Ireland, Japan, Australia, and New Zealand. Many of these readers express appreciation for confirmation of what they knew to be true but had been afraid to speak about—that the angels are with us, every one, every day. So many people say "Thank you! I knew my angel was with me, even though my family thought I was nuts."

While this represents the majority of correspondents, there is another theme that surfaces—and it troubles me. These are letters and requests from people for me to contact my angel on their behalf with questions ranging from the sublime to the ridiculous. Some folks have written to me asking that I put in a good word with their angels, to help them get what they want. One man wanted to know how the angels could help him pick the winning numbers in a lottery!

This disturbs me on two counts: first, the angels have made it very clear that there is no person who has more of an "in" with them than another. My particular mission is not to connect with other people's angels, but to teach and empower people to make their own connections. So I always encourage people to "Ask Your Angels" yourself.

We spent a great deal of time creating guidelines in our book, to show you exactly how to do this. Second, although the angels are definitely here to help us, I'd like to dispel the notion that they are here to do it for us, or that they can be used to manipulate people or events. If that is where you are coming from, I suggest you forget about the angels. You're on the wrong track.

The angels are here to encourage and inspire us, to support and assist, as we do the enormous healing that is required. But it is we who must do the work, both on a personal and planetary level. Because we are all connected, all cherished children of our beloved Creator, when any one of us heals, it affects every other one, and raises the level of understanding and Light that is available to all.

Angels are not like genies in a lamp that you can rub for luck. They love us dearly, faults and all; in fact, they don't ever focus, as we do, on our "faults". But they are not here to interfere with our free will, which is a gift from our Creator. They answer to God and have only God's will to fulfill. To do this they "serve" us, but they are not our servants.

The angels work to awaken us to our divine selves. They awaken, as well, our intuitive knowing. They re-connect us to our Higher Self nature. When we align with their energies, we move into a far gentler realm than the one which we normally inhabit. As kindness and caring develop and grow within, we become gentler with ourselves and with others around us. We begin to exemplify sacred vows—those of truthfulness and compassion.

The truth about living a spiritual life is that it is not separate from the ordinary threads and weavings of a physical life. We're being required to "walk our talk" in our everyday dealings with friends, family, co-workers, and strangers, to begin to exemplify those qualities characteristic of the angels—nurturance, protection, guidance, unconditional love, and acceptance.

These qualities are ones traditionally associated with feminine energy. It is timely to return to these ways, to honor the divine mother within each of us, men as well as women. It is only by doing this, by embracing and embodying what has been called the feminine Christ, that we are able to be moving through this time of extraordinary transformation with courage and kindness.

We are all here to teach something, and although we may not all be teachers by conscious choice or avocation, each of us contributes something through the unique pattern of our personality, and often, through the work that we choose to do. What I teach is basic: Tell the Truth, Be Here Now, Let Go, Love God, Be True, Have Fun, Show Up, Hang In There, Do the Best You Can. These are all variations on the theme. Be good to yourself. Honor the Divine within. Develop compassion. Quiet the mind. Pay attention. Leave no tracks. Be grateful. And humble.

Working with the angels can help us to be mindful of these precepts and to remember to Lighten up! Whenever I fall into the trap of taking myself and my process too seriously, my angel pops in with a few well-chosen words. Once, when I was in a workaholic binge trying to complete too many projects before leaving for a vacation, she quipped: "Functioning starts with Fun".

It helped me to bring things back into perspective, to release the stress I'd imposed on myself. On another occasion, when my ego flared, she piped up: "It's always too early for self-congratulation." It's never too early to call on the angels for comfort and support. And, best of all, it's never too late.

(Alma has been teaching people how to connect with their angels since 1985, and now trains individuals to conduct the Ask Your Angels workshops that she developed. Alma's Angelic Meditations audio-cassette, with music by Gerald Jay Markoe, is at the top of the New Age charts in the U.S. For information about her other tapes and a video cassette, you can write to her at 300 Central Park West, Suite 25C, New York, NY 10024.

We should all strive for the fluent level of communicating with our own guardian angels that Alma Daniel demonstrates above. They are always present and waiting for the call.

This next insightful article was written by Doreen Virtue, author of twenty-two books on mind-body-spirit issues. Doreen has been a guest on Oprah, CNN, Good Morning America, The View with Barbara Walters, Donnie And Marie, Rossanne, and other national programs. Arrangements are being made at this time to interview Doreen for the December issue of The SPECTRUM—assuming we are able to remain financially afloat for that presentation. For now, enjoy the following from a gifted messenger in her own right:

[Quoting]

HEARING YOUR ANGEL'S MESSAGES

From the Angels: "We aren't that difficult to hear, if you will listen for us with an open heart. Most of the time, we are closer to you than you can imagine. A whisper, a thought, is the only signal we need from you to get a conversation started. We have enormous respect for what you're going through here on planet Earth at this time. We never seek to interfere with your lives, only to bring you blessings of insights and new ways of looking at yourselves."

Not everyone "hears" angelic voices as an audible sound. Many people receive divine messages through nonverbal means such as visions, feelings, or a knowingness.

Hearing the voice of an angel is called "clairaudience" which means "clear hearing". Their voice may sound like your own or it may sound different. The voice can emanate from within your body, within your mind, or sound as if it's outside your head. When an angel warned me that my car was about to be stolen, his voice sounded as if he were talking through a paper towel tube, just outside my right ear.

An hour later, when I found myself in the middle of a car-jacking, the same angel guided my life-saving actions by speaking to me through an inner voice. While receiving the angel messages in my book Angel Therapy, I heard the words both inside and outside my mind.

You might hear a faint voice and wonder what it said. In such cases, go ahead and ask your angels to repeat their message. Say to them: "A little louder, please." The angels appreciate your feedback, as they want to deliver clear and understandable guidance.

Angelic voices are consistently loving and supportive, even when they warn us of impending dangers or wrong turns. As a psychotherapist, I was trained to believe that hearing voices was a sign of insanity. Yet, the voice of the ego is the only source of "insanity".

Ego voice messages are always destructive, abusive, and impulsive. For example, the ego may try to convince you that you'll fail. The ego also changes its mind constantly, so it will tell you to do one thing Monday, another thing Tuesday, and a completely different thing Wednesday. If you listen to the voice of the ego, your life will be chaotic and fear-filled.

Angelic voices, in contrast, patiently repeat the guidance to us day after day, until we finally follow it. You may hear your angels tell you for years that you would be a great healer or author, for example. Or your angels may repeatedly ask you to take better care of your body. You know that guidance comes from angels when it is loving, focused, not hurtful to you or your family, and consistent.

Clairaudience is just one-fourth of the ways we receive angelic assistance, however. Your angels may speak to you in pictures and visual mental images. We call this "clairvoyance" or "clear seeing." Angelic messages may come to you as single snapshot images, either in your mind or outside your mind. Or, you may see miniature scenes, as if from a movie. The images may be black-and-white or full color. Angelic visual messages can be symbolic, such as seeing a stop sign as a signal that you should take a rest, slow, or stop what you are doing.

Intuitively, you might readily understand what the visual images mean. For instance, you might see an image of a trophy and, instinctively, you know this means that success is ahead for you. If you have trouble understanding your angelic visual guidance, be sure to ask for assistance. Ask your angels to clarify their message, and continue asking for clarification until you are completely certain of their meaning.

Sometimes we shut down our angelic channels of communication because of fear. You might see an image of your future that frightens you, and you turn off your clairvoyance by shutting the third eye's eyelid.

One of my clients shut down her clairvoyance when, as a young girl, she saw a visual image of her parents divorcing in the future. Another client closed her third eye because she foresaw herself having an affair with a married co-worker, and she wanted to continue her interactions with him while wearing blinders to the truth. One of my other clients was trying to ignore a steady angelic voice within which counseled: "It's time to look for work at a different place" because she didn't trust God to fulfill her material needs during the job transition.

You might also shut off your clairvoyance if you are afraid of what you might see. As much as you want to see your angels in person, you might harbor a deep-seated fear that seeing a "ghost" would be terrifying. Your angels honor such fears, and you won't see angelic apparitions until you feel confident that such a vision would comfort, not frighten, you.

The third way we receive angelic guidance is through our emotions and physical sensations. We call this "clairsentience" or "clear feeling". Clairsentients get divine guidance through bodily sensations, such as a tightening of the jaw, fists, stomach, or sex organs. They intuitively know the specific meaning of these tightening reactions. A clairsentient feels air pressure and room temperature changes that warn of negative situations.

Each of our five senses has a corresponding Clairsentients receive a lot of guidance through their intuition, gut feelings, and hunches. Much of our intuition comes from the stomach region; the stomach flutters, relaxes, and tightens according to the angelic guidance. Instinctively, the clairsentient interprets the meaning of these gut feelings, and a wise clairsentient follows these internal directives without hesitation.

Clairsentients get angelic messages through their heart and love emotions, as well. If a thought of doing something swells your chest with warm feelings of joy, this is a directive from God and the angels. You may think "Oh this is too good to be true; I am just dreaming" but the joy that your thought has brought you is a roadmap leading you to the life you are meant to have.

We call the fourth means of angelic communication "claircognizance" or "clear knowing". Men are frequently claircognizant, and may not even realize they naturally receive detailed and accurate information from the angels. You can ask a claircognizant a question on almost any topic in the world. Within minutes, such a one will give you an accurate answer, completely supported by facts and figures. You might say: "How did you know that?" and the one will answer: "I don't know! A few minutes ago, I didn't know that information."

A claircognizant knows, without knowing how he/she knows. Consequently, they may doubt the validity of their knowingness. This is a mistake, because when divine wisdom enters our mind, it is a gift we can use to improve our life, and to serve the world.

We all have access to all four channels of communication. Usually, we have one primary means of receiving angelic guidance and one secondary or lesser channel of communication. With practice, you can become adept at receiving messages in all four ways. In the beginning of speaking to your angels, though, most people concentrate upon their natural means of communication.

Naturally visually oriented people will want to pay attention to their mental visions. If you tend to focus upon sounds, then listen for inner or outer words, voices, and auditory messages. If you tend to be a touchy-feely type, your emotions and bodily sensations are the instruments which relay divine guidance to you. And if you are intellectually inclined, or a person who constantly searches for hidden meanings in situations, then you'll want to monitor your thoughts for those heavenly moments of "knowingness" which bring you certainty in guiding your actions.

To better cement the idea of our angels' constant presence, working on our behalf, let's return to a few more personal encounters of the very helpful kind.

This next story has been excerpted from the www.wirenot.net/X/Stories/Angel/Angel%20W-Z/WhoStopTheCar.html Internet website, written by Yvonne Ezzell:

[Quoting]

WHO STOPPED THE CAR?

I had to return my brother's car to him one raining day. I asked my sister to go with me, but she refused. This made me extremely mad, so I left the house driving like a mad-woman.

I made a left turn onto a side-street and was to stop for a stop sign, but in my anger I slowed down and was trying to make the right turn. My foot was off the gas, but not on the brakes. When I tried to turn the wheel, it felt like someone had hold of it from the left. My first thought was "Who had the wheel?" The car came to a complete stop. My foot was not on anything—either the brake or the gas. From the side of my eye I saw a car zoom past, going way over the speed limit.

If I had pulled out, I would not be here today. At that same second, my car wheel loosened and I made the turn. I was not mad anymore. I still don't know who that was, but I do know they saved my life.

[End quoting]

In the mid-1990s, I, Rick Martin, had to drive to Fresno for a court hearing. I was tired on the return trip. The road I was on ran into the road which was the onramp to the freeway. What I was not aware of, at the time, was that the road was a two-lane road with no stop-signs, and people traveled on that road at high speeds on their way onto the highway.

Stopping in the left lane, ready to turn onto the freeway onramp, I just casually glanced to my right to see if there was any oncoming traffic. I had actually made the turn by the time I realized that not only was there oncoming traffic, but a car was about to hit me!

Someone grabbed my wheel and forcibly turned it to the left at that instant in time. I was now safely on the shoulder of the road. Also, at that same instant, the car behind me over-corrected to the right, hit a pole going 40-50 miles an hour and rolled over, leaving a semi-conscious, bloodied woman inside the vehicle.

I had a cellular phone, so the sheriff and an ambulance were there in record time. The woman was taken away on a stretcher in the ambulance—alive, but seriously injured.

The next morning in meditation I was told, in very clear language within my mind: "We interceded yesterday, and you will never know how close you came."

No one has to convince me about angels. I've had too many experiences to confirm their existence!

This next provocative example was written by Sheila Buchanan, and is extracted from the <http://angels-online.com/indexheroes.html> Internet website:

[Quoting]

THE FORK IN THE ROAD

I have been traveling the same road to school and work for the past 2 years. At one point in the road it forks; I always take the left fork.

One morning, for some reason, I took the right fork without even realizing it. I was almost halfway up the road before I had to ask myself why I took this way; I never had before. After traveling a few more miles, I saw an elderly gentleman on the side of the road walking toward the small town ahead. He was in his early to mid eighties. I never even thought twice before I stopped to offer him a ride.

Like I said, I travel a lot on roads where, at any time, an animal might cross in front of you, so I was surprised when this gentleman appeared out of nowhere, in the ditch, and was walking toward the road. He got into my car. (I'm traveling alone and I know it's not the smartest thing to do.)

I was never nervous or even the least worried about him. I introduced myself and stuck my hand out to shake his. He only said "my name is Dan" and, when he shook my hand, he only shook the fingers; our palms never touched.

The only way I can describe him is as an old rancher. His hands were like leather, all tan and rough to look at, but soft to touch. He looked as if he had lived a real hard life. His clothes were old and worn, but they were clean.

He did not say much, just that he was looking for somewhere to get some breakfast. I told him that there was a small town right up ahead and he could get something there.

When we reached the town, I stopped at the stop sign that is right beside the restaurant and told him that he could get something there or, if that was not what he wanted, I pointed out the other two small stores in the town.

I then said good-bye and made my turn to go on to work. When I looked back to see if he was okay, he was not there.

There is no way, walking as slow as he did, that he had time to get inside the restaurant. I went back that afternoon to see if anyone had seen him, but no one knew who I was talking about.

I remember asking God, before I picked him up, once I realized I had taken the wrong road: "Why did I come this way; I never do?" After I let the gentleman out, I said: "God, I know why you sent me this way now." I'm not sure if he was an angel or the Lord Jesus himself, but I do know that I have never felt better about myself than I did that day.

[End quoting]

Often it is through these kinds of very personal encounters that we learn the greatest lessons about life. So was that a teacher-angel along the road, or simply an old man in need? Did he save her from a possible calamity, had she taken the other fork in the road, her usual route to work? Regardless, the good feeling deep within her being is the most important clue as to the true nature of the incident.

It is time to return to the Larger Picture again, and this time place that in the context of an even Larger Picture of growth and expansion which is being assisted from the angelic realms. This next item in the mosaic is a channeled message from the 1961 book Secret Of The Andes by "Brother Philip", republished in 1976 by David Singer:

ARCHANGEL MICHAEL

For a moment, if you will, go back with me to a remote age of antiquity, far greater than we could comprehend in terms of Earth years, and picture in your mind a great spiraling mass of violet-blue flame rising upward leading man on to ever-expanding grandeur in the Universe of our Father.

Remember what Jesus has said: "I know of no other Great Spirit beyond the Father. He is the Ancient of Days. I know, beloved ones, of no other beyond Him, yet I know that there are others beyond Him. I believe they exist."

What is this hierarchy of Gods, of Creators, in the Omniverse? I wish to emphasize this so that you may understand the terminology. It is true, as some of you have suggested, God the Father is the Father that Jesus speaks of. He is a Creator-God, the Creator-God of all ancient mythology and legend. He is the God—God the Father—Thought Incarnate on the Star Sun Sirius. But there are Gods beyond Him of magnificence beyond comprehension.

There are worlds in space where man is nothing but ever-changing color and hue, worlds of fantastic iridescence and glowing beauty, where one form mingles with the other, always one, always changing. There are worlds where man becomes only a tone as a tinkling bell, where life is only a kaleidoscope of Nature, worlds that we cannot even begin to comprehend, that would make God the Father—Thought Incarnate on Sirius—appear as a grain of sand on a lonely beach.

Yet above all of this in the Omniverse itself is the ALL, the PERFECT ONE, the INFINITE FATHER, the ALL CREATOR, the SELF-CREATED ONE, and we call HIM in our Order simply EVERNESS.

What is behind this plan now unfolding upon the Earth? There is a greater plan beyond—even beyond the migration from this Solar System, as we gave you before, and the answer to that is that we are being called from out of the depths of night in space to serve those who cry out to us.

What is the purpose of the schoolroom of Earth? What means all the tears, sorrow, death, misery, anguish? For personal development, yes, but what else? What is the grander plan? Only that a world will become a cinder through an atomic war? No! The lesson to be learned is that Spirit may come to know Itself, that man might be freed from the blight of the great adultery.

One day on your Earth shall come a blinding flash of Light. All the old shall pass away, burned as chaff on the altar of truth. Only the “gems” will remain, the “gems” that can withstand the Eternal Flame.

The Earth is a school for gods. Man—the small Harvest of man upon the Earth—man who has lost the vestiges of the human—there are those on Earth today. It is written, not that the Harvest is great; or is it? Yes, it is written thus: and the laborers few. The Harvest is great according to the laborers, but from the total of the Earth’s population, the Harvest is small.

It has taken millions of years since man has been upon the Earth to bring about this one small concentrated drop of life to evolve in the crucible of time.

The Earth is a classroom for godhood—not Mars, nor Venus, nor Jupiter, nor magnificent Saturn, nor spiritual Neptune, Pluto, nor Mercury, nor even the Sun and its many bodies. The lotus rises from the slime of Earth. And now there is a single bloom. The Father looks down from blue of sky and gold of Sun and sees a single pure lotus opening from the slime, and shortly He reaches down to pluck it and to take it home again.

Therefore you and your fellow men everywhere are being conditioned for the Great Transmutation. And then we march on to other universes and worlds that call for our help.

When man achieves his graduation day and wins his godhood, the work begins. Over countless millions of years man has risen from animal to become angel again! Think of the lives and the intrigues, the battles, and the loves that have gone to produce one drop of the eternal elixir!

Let us lose ourselves in this ever expanding army, a living thing that shall, one great dawn, shine forth as a golden glow over all the Earth. Those who run to the rocks will find no shelter. No bomb-proof shelter will give adequate safety. No cavern is deep enough, no mountaintop high enough, for this is the day of the Great Transmutation, when all elements shall be changed. Not only are you being prepared for other atmospheres, but you are now changing dimensions. You are leaving the world, the kingdom of the third dimension. You are entering the dimension of understanding. Accept that which the Father has for you.

The physical, as it is developed, is only to serve for a brief time. Work as one, for even though you know it not, you stand at this moment before the Throne of God the Father.

Someday we shall together look back upon our Solar System and see it explode like a star in the farthest corner of the Father’s realm, because when it has served its purpose it disintegrates in thought.

In truth we are an army. There are corners of the Omniverse where there is no Light, only darkness, and even an army can only appear as a small pinpoint of candlelight. But remember the great truth that no matter how vast the darkness, no matter how vast the night, one small candle flame holds back that great darkness. In its insignificance it is invincible because it is Light.

Then, as a tiny candle flame, we shall burst forth into an area that has never before known Light and shall bring, even as the workers brought to ancient Egypt, the Light, through Akhenaton. The people had never seen it before. Some it blinded, for it was too bright. They did not, as today, understand because of its blinding Light. It was a thing to be shunned, to fear. And many fell back into the comfort of darkness.

Man is afraid of dark? We say, no; this is not true! Man is afraid of Light. He wishes once again to be in the darkness of the womb where there is no light, for there alone he feels safety, warmth, and life. It takes courage to go into the Light—not the dark.

[End quoting]

[I, Rick Martin, would like to take a moment here to honor Sister Thedra for her years of service to God as a publisher and a “receiver”. She informed me privately, in the mid-1980s, that this book was, in fact, her work, which had been taken from her in South America and published by the person called Brother Philip “out of proper historical sequence”. This is not meant to be a libelous statement; I am merely recounting what was told to me by a once lucid channel, prior to her physical death.]

So now we have a better picture of the Larger Picture’s Larger Picture in which man is progressing toward “godhood”. Only one step in that progression is schoolroom Earth, and yet that step is a most important one. With that thought in mind, let us again return to The Talmud Of Immanuel for a most profound lesson that is not among the narratives offered in the standard biblical accounts:

[Quoting]

JMMANUEL’S FAREWELL

1. They went to the mountain to which Immanuel had directed them.

2. When they had gathered there, he said to them, quoting: Behold, I will talk to you one last time; then I will leave and never return.

3. My path leads me to India where many of this human race also dwell, because they left this land to live there.

4. My mission leads me to them and to the human race that was born there.

5. My path there will be long, because I have yet to bring my old teachings, newly presented, to many countries, likewise on the shores of the great black waters to the north of here.

6. Before I leave you, I will give you my last instruction of the teaching as follows:

7. If people live according to the Laws of Creation, they live correctly in truth, but here is the final goal:

8. Everything human in people has to die, but everything creative in them has to rise and embrace Creation.

9. Consider the universe as the place where Creation lives in infinity.

10. Everything that people possess has its origin in Creation; therefore it belongs to Creation.

11. People shall change their entire spiritual lives and perfect them, so that they will become one with Creation.

12. Whatever people do, they shall do it with the awareness of the presence of the Creation.

13. But they shall never try to force truth onto another because it would only be half its worth.

14. First, people shall watch their own progress in consciousness and spirit so as to produce creative harmony within themselves.

15. No greater darkness rules in people than ignorance and lack of wisdom.

16. The victory of humanity in its greatness consists of destroying and removing each power opposing the creative spirit, so that the creative spirit may win.

17. People should develop their power to judge good and evil and to understand correctly all things, so that they may be wise and fair and follow the laws.

18. It is necessary to understand what is real and unreal, what is valuable and not valuable, what is of Creation and not of Creation.

19. People have to become a universal oneness, so that they become one with Creation.

20. Make your lives equal to the laws of Nature, then you will live according to the laws of Creation.

21. No matter how great the suffering of people, the power of Creation in them to conquer all that is evil is immeasurably greater.

22. If people live only in their consciousness as humans, they are inaccessibly far from their spirits, from Creation, and hence its laws.

23. The greater people's dedication is to the Laws of Creation, the deeper shall be the peace within themselves.

24. People's happiness consists in seeking and finding the truth, so that they may gather knowledge and wisdom and think and act in accord with Creation.

25. Only through the conditions of human life can they develop and use their creative powers in consciousness and spirit.

26. People obtain experience in the use of their powers and capabilities only by trying daily to unfold them.

27. So long as people do not become one with Creation, they will never be able to rise above death and near-death, since fear of the unknown is in them; and only when they can fully recognize the perfection and unity of Creation can they slowly gain eminence.

28. Instead of being guided by instincts and impulses, people should live according to knowledge and wisdom so that they may live justly according to the laws and commandments.

29. People shall not lose their way in the forest of limitations, but shall expand their consciousness and seek and find knowledge, logic and truth, and from it learn wisdom.

30. So that they may come closer to their lives' goal and recognize the creative principle in all things.

31. Thousands of Lights will guide them on their paths, if they watch and follow them.

32. People will attain all their knowledge and wisdom, if they seriously strive for perfection.

33. The laws serve all those who are willing to seek truth in unlimited measure and to learn wisdom from it—

34. inasmuch as they master within themselves all possible dimensions, develop their spiritual powers higher and higher, and in so doing perfect themselves.

35. People should try not to dwell upon their physical misery, but upon the reality of the spirit and the existence of Creation.

36. There is a constant restlessness in people, because they have a premonition that Creation is their fate and destination.

37. They may be great, wise, and good, yet that is not sufficient, because they can always become greater, wiser, and better.

38. There may not be any limits to love, peace, and joy, because the present has to be constantly exceeded.

39. Truly, I say to you: A love that is unlimited, lasting, and infallible is without conditions and pure and will burn in its fire all that is unclean and evil,

40. for such a love is the love of Creation, and hence its laws, for which humanity has been predestined since the beginning of time.

41. Since this is the final goal of humanity, people must take care that this must and shall be so, for this is their destiny.

42. But as yet people do not understand the wisdom of this teaching, so it is being adulterated everywhere on Earth.

43. In their ignorance people falsify it in various ways and forms so that it becomes diffused and unintelligible.

44. But in two thousand years it will be taught anew and unfalsified, when people have become reasonable and knowledgeable, and a new age foretells great upheavals.

45. It can be read in the stars that the people of the new era will be great revolutionaries. Therefore, a few special selected people, the new proclaimers of my teaching, will preach it unfalsified and with great courage.

46. But you, go and prepare the way for my teaching and make all peoples its disciples.

47. However, beware of false teachings, which you might allow to arise because of your ignorance, since some of you are inclined in that way.

48. Teach them to follow everything that I have commanded you, so that you do not falsify my teaching.

49. After he talked to them that way, a thundering came from the sky, and a great light descended.

50. The light landed on the ground not far from them, and it had a metallic glitter in the sunshine.

51. Immanuel no longer spoke, but went away to the metallic light and entered into it.

52. Then a haze arose all around it. Once again, a thundering occurred and the light ascended back into the sky.

53. And the disciples secretly returned to Jerusalem and announced to like-minded people what had happened.

[End quoting]

Two points to call to your attention from the above are: first, of course, verse 44; we are surely in the time referred to therein. And then, verse 31 alludes to the angelic helpers who are here to assist us with this all-important step in our celestial growth.

Before moving on to the next two important writings, let's take just a moment to remember who Sananda and Sanat Kumara are. In WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach, Vol. 1, we read:

[Quoting]

From the One White Light that is Aton (God), there is first the division of that complete energy into the two Primary Rays of Creation. These are the Golden Ray and the Silver Ray, which are sometimes likened, respectively, to the energies of "the heart" and "the head".

The Golden Ray is often equated with the Christed energy, which is most familiarly manifest in that Master Teacher we know as Esu "Jesus" Immanuel Sananda.

The Silver Ray is known as Sanat Kumara, reverently known to many Native Americans as Grandfather, or Tonkashila (in the language of the Lakota).

Your Destiny Is Growing Toward The Infinite

Esu “Jesus” Sananda
June 7, 1997

Good morning, my scribe. Thank you for sitting this day. There is great desire coming forth from many for understanding of who they are and why they have chosen this path at this time. I am Esu Immanuel “Jesus” Sananda come in the Radiant golden-white Light of Creator Source.

It has all been written prior and you ones would be wise to review your past lessons (our discourses on these various subjects). There are many new readers and participants awakening at this time and many who simply need a gentle reminder of these lessons.

Let us begin with WHO you are. You, the non-physical YOU, are an infinite thought projection of the One who created you (God!). You are the product of His desire. You are, in effect, Desire manifest in uniqueness of purpose.

In the creating of YOU, you were given, in balance, all that you need in perfect proportions so that you could fulfill the purpose of your being. This is to say that you were each given part of Creator’s Light Essence in perfect proportions that will allow for your own uniqueness to manifest. No two were given the exact same proportions of the various aspects of Creator’s Infinite Spectral Range.

This is NOT to say that some are better than others. It is simply stating that all are unique in purpose and yet come from One Source.

God is infinite creativity. You are each a product of His creativity manifest in the form of Light Essence. Please keep in mind that we are still referring to the INFINITE you, NOT the physical body that many erroneously perceive as being the entity of themselves. You each are electromagnetic (LIGHT) thought projections of Creator and you carry His “genetic” signature within your being. This is to say that you are created in His image—LIGHT! YOU ARE GOD MANIFEST!

You carry within you ALL of the infinite creative potential of the One who created you. This leads us to the subject of WHY you are there.

You each wish to explore the various aspects of your being and test your own uniqueness in your own unique way. One major aspect of Creator’s desire is to expand and grow. You are part of His desire to do so, and when you grow individually, He is growing alongside of you.

As a “genetic” subset of The One Whole, you must first come into understanding of the impact of that which you are capable of manifesting. You have INFINITE potential within. Potential is the same for each—infinite!

Each individual is at a different level of understanding of HOW to responsibly direct and control this infinite potential. There have been structured various schoolrooms so that ones can come into detailed understanding of the various aspects of harnessing and controlling this infinite creative potential.

The physical (third dimension) is but one, small, yet important, classroom or laboratory in which to explore. You will find yourselves surrounded by ones facing similar challenges upon any one level of experiencing.

Each is efforting to understand, and thus unlock, the doors of the mind that will lead to ever greater and greater understanding and ability to utilize this INFINITE potential. Each will do so in a unique manner and approach according to who they are and the purpose that God has projected forth into their being. No two will have the exact same path in reaching the answers that unlock this potential, and in the searching comes the creativity of experience.

Now I wish to speak about a certain subset of all those experiencing here on Earth-Shan at this time of the Great Transition. And here I mean those who we of the Hosts refer to as Ground Crew.

Most of you who are Ground Crew have chosen to come into the physical to explore during a time of great shift in planetary awareness. This shift will present unique opportunities for you each to experience in conditions most favorable to forward growth and realizations that will help you to unlock doors that were closed and bolted by YOU, out of fear and/or overwhelm, long ago.

This does not mean that you will somehow grow and expand by default. It simply means that the opportunity is there and that you have all the tools you will need to RECOGNIZE and OVERCOME your current limitations.

Many of you have left behind talents and abilities so that you would have a “real” challenge, and so that you would not be easily distracted by the attention that your talents would bring. This is to say that many of you are experiencing without the benefit of your whole self so that you will “fit in” and so that you would be more focused on your personal growth in very specific areas.

If that were not enough, you have also chosen to take on the responsibility of assisting your younger brothers through a turbulent time—as they are, for the most part, resistant to change. You are, in effect, part of the team that is fulfilling God’s promise to send forth His Hosts and to spread The Word to any and all who will hear and hopefully listen.

Many of our Ground Crew are under severe attack at this time. Many are dropping out and not keeping up with the messages that will educate them about how to survive the upcoming Planetary Transition. Many are going through a cleansing period that will cause them to confront the very demons which caused them to stumble in the past. These are indeed trying, yet quite valuable, opportunities to grow past the fears and move forward into understanding and knowing.

Be thankful for ALL of your challenges, for even the smallest of annoyances will provide you with insights about the self-imposed limitations that you have placed upon yourselves. Take time to look at and analyze even these smallest of annoyances, for when you truly understand what is causing the annoyance within you, you will no longer manifest the need for the annoyance and it will be gone from your experience. This is not to say that ALL annoyances and challenges will be gone. It is to say that great value and insights may be gleaned from understanding even the smallest of bothers.

You shall be finding that the challenges you experience from here on out will continue to grow, and you will have to keep up with the ever intensifying pressures of survival—both mentally and physically. If you find yourself in an overwhelmed state, then I, Sananda, suggest that you call upon The Light for balance and guidance.

For some of you, the challenge of focusing a thought is quite difficult, and many feel as though they are simply not connecting with the inner Light Source.

I will here offer a suggestion that will help you to focus upon The Light. This is NOT in any way a necessary thing to do, but it can be quite helpful: Light a white candle. White because it symbolizes purity. The flame represents energy and it produces a natural white light—and it will dance around with a life of its own.

See the flame and know that, with each flicker, the darkness is expelled from your space. Know that all you have to do is look at the light from the candle, and it will reaffirm your Light shielding and support your mental intention that the darkness be gone from your space. This is but a helpful suggestion to any who feel that they are having difficulty clearing, or keeping cleared, their space.

Allow for the challenges of this life’s experiences to present themselves to you. Know that you need each in order to fulfill your goals and manifest the true joy that comes from inner personal growth.

Remember, please: YOU are the Lightworkers who are manifesting God’s promise to the world—even if “all” you do at the present moment is quietly read that which is offered.

There shall come a time in this life experience when you will be inspired to offer that which will quell the confusion of your neighbors when their world and reality are being shattered.

Right now, persistence and patience are the keys to success because “sequence of events” (not the ticking of a clock) dictates progression and unfoldment of this Planetary Transition event. For many, that which is about to manifest in your physical experience will indeed SEEM to come upon them “as a thief in the night”, for these ones continue to sleep in their state of ignorance and illusion.

I am Esu Immanuel Sananda, One with Creator Source, come as promised. In Light and in Love, blessings to you all. Salu!

[End quoting]

Clearly we are in a time of great challenges wherein we must not only recognize the help available from the angelic realms, but remember to ask for that help so that we, in turn, can help others who may be overwhelmed by unfolding events. There is a subtle shift in perspective here which causes us to sense the responsibility of our part in the “bucket brigade”—that we, in turn, are being called upon to act as “angels” toward those who may not be as far along the growth path.

In the Larger Picture, a “continuum of help” exists—as each more experienced level helps the less experienced level. This idea is further expanded upon in the next message, which also comes from WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach, Vol. II:

[Quoting]

Time To Grow Into The Cosmic Brotherhood

Sanat Kumara
May 23, 1998

Good afternoon, my scribe. It is I, Sanat Kumara, come in the Light frequency of the Silver Ray of Creation. You know me well. Many there in the physical, especially among your Native American peoples, associate me with the label “Grandfather”. Again, as stated many times prior, a label is for you in the physical, so that you can have a mental association with which to relate. You will, one day, begin to recognize ones more by their unique energy pattern than by anything else.

I am asked to speak at this time about your position as a planet and a species in relationship to your universal brothers. Your planet Earth-Shan is but one of billions of inhabited planets with sentient life. [Editor's note: Several years ago Commander Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn said there were approximately 178 billion inhabited planets just in the Milky Way galaxy.] Your species has grown to a point of spiritual and intellectual (a subset of the spiritual aspect) competence wherein you will be in need of conscious awareness of your place in the universe and the responsibility of maintaining and holding that place.

This is to say that your world is fast approaching a point of conscious awakening to a Greater Reality and a Greater Truth. Your elder brothers from elsewhere in the cosmos have come to assist you, both in your growth as a species, and as co-creators within the laws of Creator Source.

This is a most unique time in your planet's evolvment in which to be experiencing! There will be MASSIVE change as ones will be caused to confront the inner lies and misperceptions that they have held onto for so long.

There will be, at first, great confusion among the masses. They will, for the most part, be caught off-guard, and thus be psychologically unprepared for the implications associated with this awakening.

This is where you who are of Ground Crew will be called upon to assist those who will be desperately seeking to understand. You will have to deal with great emotional anxiety. This anxiety will have an enormous impact on ALL levels of your planetary experience.

Eventually, as the masses come to accept the greater reality of their true place in the universe, the confusion will give way to a greater peace than your world has ever known. As your species is ready, your world will be gradually brought “up to speed” with respect to other universal intergalactic societies. This will be a very deliberate and calculated rate which is determined by the ability of your species to first comprehend the true functioning of space beyond the limits of your solar system, and then adapt to the universal laws that govern same.

This is as much a matter of UN-learning many present lies as it is a matter of learning new truths. I speak here not only of scientific progress, for great beings in ALL areas of understanding have frequently been gifted (sent) to your planet—only to be “removed” by those who would maintain control over you through deception.

Your learned brothers from elsewhere are well equipped to handle the planetary transformation and integration that is rapidly picking up speed. They will be giving much more guidance on how best to overcome the many fears and superstitious beliefs that the masses now hold onto as truth, which must be confronted and cleansed away.

Fundamentally this situation is no different than when you ones volunteer to participate in, say, the Peace Corps mission to assist a primitive, usually isolated, group of people in some remote corner of your own planet. Many fears and superstitions must be confronted and replaced with truth—whether about basic health and body hygiene or how your airplane and radio work.

You of Ground Crew will need these very lessons so that ones will recognize that this awakening has been coming for some time, and that there is truly nothing to fear and only greater understanding and growth to be gained.

These will be challenging times for you ones to face! You will witness many stories that will try to convince you-the-people that the “alien invaders” mean to do you harm. These stories will only serve to expose the true criminals for who they are. Mainstream religious leaders and politicians will be the greatest offenders and will effort greatly to hold onto their control over you-the-masses.

As the Time of Truth (in terms of sequential events) draws ever nearer, there will be greater and greater efforts made to persuade the masses that these so-called “invaders” mean to destroy you-the-people of the Earth. Some of the events planned by your “elite” controllers will appear so real in presentation, due to their technological sophistication (by public knowledge standards), that many will fall victim to the lies engineered by such vivid stagings.

There are likely to be MILLIONS of people sacrificed by your “united one-world government” in order to convince those remaining that the deception is the truth. There will be a call to defend your planet from these “evil invaders”.

At the same time, however, there will be overwhelming evidence which will show that these higher-evolved beings mean you NO HARM. For instance, ones will be rescued from annihilation (as disasters from both natural and man-made sources become more violent and widespread) and ones will testify to the facts of what happened.

Also, ones among your “elite” scientific communities will finally step forward and testify to the fact that great assistance has been given by your elder brothers from elsewhere in the cosmos, over the past 50+ years, in shutting down secret experiments that, due to ignorance, got out of control and would have otherwise destroyed your planet.

Moreover, the electronic “mind-numbing” devices will be deactivated and ones will begin to come out of the “fog” of mental manipulation. From this will come a clearer ability to perceive the reality of your situation.

There will be great speakers and community leaders stepping forward to speak out and quell the fears of the masses. There will be great need for ones to vent their confusions and confront the fact that they had bought into great lies without much (if any) questioning. Ones will be seeking to understand what is really real and what is truly their place in the “grander” scheme of life. The barbaric, fear-based religions will fall, as ones realize that they have been manipulated and “sold” lies in order to insure their obedience.

Truth will be know in all aspects of social, scientific, and spiritual arenas of concern. The Truth will be your path to liberation—both as an individual and as a planetary society.

You will find that your elder brothers believe very much in the existence of God and, furthermore, that they FULLY integrate spiritual ethics into ALL of their scientific and social research and subsequent developments. This results in a much more perfectly balanced and responsible societal structure than you on Earth presently experience—or can even imagine at this point in time.

Your world will eventually realize that these more advanced ones have eradicated the primal ego concerns to hoard knowledge (power, control, etc.) and have thus achieved true abundance and absolute knowledge. The Law of Giving is a way of life for these ones. Sharing their gifts only helps them to explore and experience more of the infinite variations of Life, and thus more fully appreciate the perfection of both Creator and The Creation.

These are truly wondrous times in which to be alive! But perhaps, more importantly, these are wondrous times in which to survive.

We of the Hosts have been sent to help prepare you ones who will hear the call so that you can best prepare selves both mentally and physically for the chaos that is coming. This is to say that, for instance, if you are still living in areas we have warned are quite unsafe, and you insist upon your way, we shall honor your choice.

But, be aware that if you transition out of the physical, you will have to watch as a spectator instead of as a player. We only can offer our advice and reasoning; you must choose to accept or reject, as you will.

Our hope is that you will learn to trust your own inner Guidance, and thus create the conditions for your own survival and subsequent growth. We are here to assist you in maximizing your growth potential. You can help us to help YOU by efforting to recognize your own inner Connection and Potential. This has been THE important theme of so many of our lessons thus far.

You live in perhaps the most unique time that your planet will ever experience—COMING OUT OF IGNORANCE (DARKNESS) AND INTO KNOWLEDGE (LIGHT). Would it not be wise to take full advantage of this exquisite learning environment?!

I am Sanat Kumara, an elder (more learned) aspect of Creator’s infinite potential. I am what you are and will become. I am your future and

I have walked the path that you are now on. Go within and find these finer aspects of YOUR being, and you will recognize the Truth I speak.

In the Light of Creator Source, ADONAI.

[End quoting]

The entirety of the Great Transformation under way is important to understand in order to really appreciate what is behind so many of the angelic interactions with this world. This is a coordinated effort of tremendous magnitude and even greater love and, as Grandfather sums it up so well above: “We are here to assist you in maximizing your growth potential.” After all, as any one is helped in growth, so grows all of Creation.

CLOSING REMARKS

It doesn’t take a genius to see that this world is a precious creation of God, and we are in-progress representatives of that perfection.

Yes, there is evil in the world. Yes, darkness does exist. But so, too, there is Light in the world; so, too, there is Goodness.

Our angels serve as Messengers, as Guides, as Protectors—all in service to Creator and the Creation. And as we move higher in frequency during our planetary transition upward through the dimensional octaves, so too we come closer to God, and closer to the conscious awareness of the presence of our angelic helpers. Let us pause and give thanks for their (mostly unrecognized) help and love that is so freely offered.

As well, let us take a few moments to recognize and appreciate God’s Hosts, who come bearing words of hope, and love, and promise.

It is easy to be skeptical. It is even easier to be angry these days, with such turmoil and rude behavior the norm on the evening news. It is far more difficult to be of good cheer and filled with gratitude at the opportunity to be of service for the betterment of mankind during this challenging time in our planet’s history.

“Random acts of kindness” should be the norm, not the exception. “Paying it forward” should be an idea who’s time has come, not just a Hollywood concept.

We are dealt lessons and forced to make decisions based upon challenging choices, choices which DO determine the future outcome of this “work in progress”. With that in mind, lend a hand, get to work, do a good deed, give praise, be grateful, and most of all, be kind to one another (after all, that IS the golden rule)—for in the end, we are all in this thing together.

And let us remember to call upon the angelic realms for the help that is constantly and lovingly available along the road—if we just ask—for, indeed, the call always compels the answer.

Coca-Cola/CIA/Tribune Drama

In Federal Chicago Courts

Editor's note: Our Native American brothers and sisters have long been teaching us that "all is connected to all" in terms of our place in the universe. But it's a big shift in attention between comprehending vast spiritual matters of our overall destiny, and dealing with the in-your-face darkness running rampant upon this planet at this time.

Sherman Skolnick has his own very practical way of extending the "all is connected" theme to illustrate the more sordid matters of our modern world. The following is a good example of just such connectedness between matters that are both large and small on the world stage. The important issue to keep in mind as you digest the specifics of the following outlay is its extrapolation to the general—that is, what he describes here for this specific case happens everywhere, all the time these days. And therein lies the most powerful teaching value of this narrative.

PART ONE

BACKGROUND AND PLAYERS

This series is going to deal with the following:

- * Cocaine and Coca-Cola;
- * Coca-Cola and the espionage/mafia cartel;
- * Coca-Cola's reputed spy apparatus inside their enemy's camp in an important unpublicized blockbuster court case against the soda pop monster;
- * Malignant, if not corrupt influence on the courts;
- * Coca-Cola as "Big Brother" and the Project Echelon worldwide spy machine.

From the beginning, Coca-Cola always had a trace of cocaine. Early in the 20th Century it became part of a now forgotten prosecution of the soda-bubble-water drink.

Over the years, doctors treating stomach ailments quietly used a mixture containing Coca-Cola syrup base. Of course, NOT used by doctors, who knew the score, was the base for Pepsi-Cola, Royal Crown Cola, or for that matter, any of the other fizz drinks. Savvy sorts, when they ran short of Drano, knew to pour Coca-Cola down their home plumbing. The acids in Coke cleared the plumbing almost as good as the high-priced hardware store stuff.

Nutritionists raised their eyebrows. What does Coca-Cola do to the human plumbing?

Coke advertised with scenes of sports stars, speed-boat enthusiasts, and such to give the impression that Coke adds to a vibrant, healthy life. Yet Coke rightfully cannot make any nutrition claims. At least that is what their critics swear by and swear at.

Hey, how come Drano and other pipe-uncloggers do not also advertise with speed boat pictures, sports stars, and such?

Some years ago, I interviewed, on tape, a top official of the firm that makes the secret Coca-Cola base. That is Stepan Chemical, headquartered in the north suburb of Chicago, Northfield, and with plants elsewhere.

They are the largest importer in the western world of coca leaves, used for Coke's base. A by-product, as admitted by the Stepan boss, is cocaine—sold by them to the pharmaceutical industry.

Does any of it also slip by as contraband?

In the 1970s, some alternative journalists began heckling cocaine-linked Stepan Chemical. He said he was aware of the criticism of Stepan regarding cocaine. He could not go into it too far, he said, because of reasons of "national security".

Or did he really mean "Stepan security"?

The bosses of Stepan have always been close to the Daley family that, since the mid-1950s with just a short hiatus, runs Chicago's city hall machine.

Early on in their history, the Coca-Cola Company assisted the U.S. in espionage. When the company set up bottling plants and distribution facilities in a new country, sent in were spy operatives. The place to hang their hat was the offices and plants, worldwide, of the much ballyhooed drink. The cocaine trace made it addictive. So did the sugar content, according to some nutritionists.

With the U.S. Senate subcommittee hearings on Iran-Contra late in the 1980s, the CIA/Coca-Cola link was dealt with. In Nicaragua, for example, those with CIA, when the Senate subcommittee asked, where with local offices of the Coca-Cola Company. By the end of the 20th Century, Coke bought about a billion dollars a year in advertisements in the monopoly press—even more when you add up their so-called "independent" subsidiaries.

Coke reportedly uses worldwide, mafia-type strong-arms to assure distribution and wreck competitors—such as making soda pop competitors' refrigerator units in stores disappear overnight. In some places, it is the traditional Sicilian and Italian mafia. In other places, it is former Soviet Secret Police agents, the KGB, like in the U.S. and current Russia, called the mafiya. Elsewhere used, reportedly, are the numerous Japanese underworld, the Yakuza.

Feeding on lush revenues from Coke ads, the press whores are not about to run news items or documentaries pointing out the reportedly close link between the Coca-Cola Company, covert operations of the American CIA, and the criminal cartel.

A key player, reportedly combining covert operations and the soda pop, was Roberto Goizueta. A Cuban, he started with the firm at their Havana offices in 1954. From 1980 to about the time of his death in 1997, Goizueta was at the helm of the spy-pop witches brew, operating in most every place on the globe. Through stock options he became a billionaire.

Goizueta's father was a Cuban sugar plantation dictator. Cuba was the major source of cane sugar used in the cola drink.

Because of the ferment for change, needed was a new front-man in Cuba. Batista, and the mafia, and the wealthy criminal families sucking the sugar-blood out of Cuba, had overplayed their hand. So the American CIA, with the help of their reputed Atlanta-based adjunct, the Coca-Cola Company, installed their darling, Fidel Castro, a popular hero.

When, like Frankenstein's monster, he turned against his creators, they plotted to overthrow Castro and assassinate him. It was 1961—and it was called the "Bay of Pigs" operation.

The Coca-Cola Company and other old-time imperial firms having an entrenched interest to have Cuba as a puppet colony, participated with CIA. Aiding them was Claire Boothe Luce, wife of the boss of the Time-Life Magazine empire.

With the American CIA actually since 1959, through his espionage front, Zapata Petroleum, was George Herbert Walker Bush. He aided, as well, the aborted mission. One of the attempted invasion vessels was named after Bush's operations.

Out of official government office was Richard Milhous Nixon. In 1961, he was the overlord for the planned invasion.

Blamed for the aborted invasion planned actually by President Eisenhower, President John F. Kennedy said, as a punishment, he would scatter the CIA to the wind. CIA boss Allen Dulles, sacked by JFK, called him a "traitor". Some say the JFK threats against CIA led to the plot to assassinate him.

Some would simplify this story by pointing to Coke trying to change over greatly to a diet cola, as a way of breaking loose of filling the void once supplied by Cuban cane sugar, against which there was a U.S. embargo. By the end of the 20th Century, the major player in supplying the chemical sweeteners for non-Diet Coke, was Archer-Daniels-Midland. At the time of Watergate, the head of ADM was to have been prosecuted for secret participation in Nixon's covert operations slush fund. Dwayne Andreas was too useful to the American CIA for them to allow him to be jailed. Like the Coca-Cola Company in the past, by 1999 ADM had an interest in putting their claws on Cuba.

Through foreign subsidiaries, ADM had big investments in operating food refineries in Cuba to exploit their agriculture abundance. ADM was the principal player for the faked propaganda bombardment and orchestrated event to open up Cuba and drop the U.S. embargo. It was called the Elian Gonzalez affair.

Only one lesser-known publication dared spell out the ADM-Cuba-Elian Gonzalez link. In the spring of 2000, under a headline "How Did ADM Pull This Off?", the Massachusetts News started their blockbuster item with "What is Archer-Daniels-Midland and why does it want to build another food refinery in Cuba? Where does it get its power?" The article went on to lambast ADM: "The company is a speculator in and processor of corn and other grains around the world. It has tremendous influence on politicians AND THE MEDIA." (Emphasis added. Note that ADM sponsors many of the mass media's TV talk shows as well as PBS's Jim Lehrer News Hour.)

So, the Elian Gonzalez affair was just a smoke screen. The story quotes Forbes magazine for 2/7/00 and their headline: "ADM PREPARES FOR LIFTING OF CUBAN EMBARGO".

The story of ADM and the Coca-Cola Company and a corrupt Chicago federal judge will be in a later part of this series.

A major player in the Coca-Cola Company has been Warren Buffet. If you are naive and believe in fairy tales, then you believe he made his great fortune through crafty operation starting with a department store in Omaha. To heckle him, some of his critics pronounce his name French-style, phonetically, as Buffay.

Buffet became a major owner of Coke stock and held a position on their Board of Directors. Few, if any, dare even whisper that Buffet's fortune is reportedly based on operating companies that are money laundries and propaganda horns for the American CIA. The list would have to include CIA adjuncts such as the Wells Fargo Bank, helping CIA's Pacific Basin operations, and the CIA apologist, the Washington Post Company. (Read, if you can find it, Deborah Davis' book called Katherine The Great about the Washington Post and the CIA.)

To understand Warren Buffet, who mouths-off his wonders at universities training so-called would-be business stars, you would have to be a profound investigator, from mostly secret sources, on the worldwide dope trafficking by the American CIA. When you are knowledgeable on that, then, and only then, do you understand the financial buffoon, Warren Buffet.

Is it a mere coincidence that his purported nephew, Jimmy Buffet, and his rock concerts seem to be part of making dope use fashionable? His band, The Corral Reefers, is a word play for narcotics. At his concerts, there is reportedly massive trafficking and use of dope. And the local corrupted police have the badge of the three monkeys.

Some had misgivings about another purported relative of Warren Buffet, the once popular Art Bell, the middle-of-the-night talk-show host. Bell was broadcasted on hundreds of major wattage radio stations in major markets, never known to broadcast the truth about the Federal Reserve, or political assassinations, and a lot of other suppressed topics. With his reputed heavy intelligence agency background, was Bell's program just some more psychological warfare operations?

Late in the 20th Century, a strange series of events started targeting the Coca-Cola Company. Various European governments and the European Union began attacking Coke:

- That Coke's products in Europe are contaminated, such as in Belgium and Poland, among others.

- That the Coca-Cola Company uses monopoly tactics to injure competitors, such as in Italy.

- Dawn raids on Coke's offices and closing down their plants, grabbing up records and accusing the Coca-Cola Company of making people sick with their products.

Is there a simple, though incomplete, unpublicized explanation for this epidemic of attacks on the Coca-Cola Company?

The French CIA accused Microsoft of being a spy operation and proprietary adjunct of the super-secret U.S. National Security Agency, the signal intelligence spooks. Further, France and other European countries are accusing the Coca-Cola Company of being, like Microsoft, an adjunct and private company proprietary of the American CIA.

Privatizing some of CIA's operations makes it impossible to get possibly incriminating records, if at all, through invoking the U.S. Freedom of Information Act. You cannot force government disclosure, for example, of CIA's private company proprietary adjunct, Wackenhut, an alter ego for CIA with more employees and operations than CIA itself. (Spy magazine, 9/92.)

Further, France and other European countries are accusing Coke of using some of their methods and satellite operations to assist and as a cover for Project Echelon, the super "Big Brother" gobbling up most everyone's private details and tracking, through key words, what most everyone communicates with anyone else in the world.

Raiding Coke's European plants and offices—claiming anti-trust violations and poisoning the populace—is just another way of sending the Atlanta-based spy/soda-spitting rattlesnake the message: We do not like American spies and vipers.

PART TWO

COCA-COLA'S REPUTED SPIES AND THE CORRUPT FEDERAL WITNESS PROTECTION PROGRAM

First, a short lesson on court corruption.

How do a series of secretly related court cases get onto the docket of one judge? As a case is in the process of being filed in the federal district court clerk's office, the case, under the rules, is supposed to be assigned by random selection; "blindman's buff" they used to call it. But, after studying and investigating court corruption for over 40 years, I know the term to be used is RANDOM MAGIC.

One of the first things we probe when we are on the trail of a tainted or suspicious case is: how did THIS particular case get on THAT judge's docket?

We know from long experience that corruption starts with the assignment of cases. Another tell-tale sign is when THAT judge uses JUDICIAL PERJURY to "fix" the case in favor of a certain litigant. A judge under a malign, if not corrupt influence inserts false so-called "facts" plucked out of the sky and not in the court evidence to justify the decision.

In simplistic terms, the undisputed court evidence shows it is DAY. Operating under a corrupt influence, the judge proclaims it is NIGHT, and applies case law regarding NIGHT to support the decision. Judges operate by case law, that is, by prior landmark rulings or statutes which cannot obviously be changed or sidestepped that easily. So the corrupted judge changes the "facts" and applies case law to fraudulent facts. That, in essence, is judicial perjury.

Not every case is the subject of malign influence. But often the important ones are. Over the years, when we suspected a judge was corrupt, we examined the rulings to see if there are judicial perjuries. An honest judge, mis-stating the undisputed facts, would quickly correct wrong statements. A crooked judge, even when confronted (cowardly lawyers are chicken), refuses.

Of the more than two dozen judges sitting on Chicago's U.S. District Court, one judge, by some witchcraft, has assigned to her a string of cases with apparent concealed links. That is judge Blanche M. Manning (312-435-7608).

Among these, she has assigned to her, by apparent RANDOM MAGIC, the case of Robert E. Kolody vs. Simon Marketing and the Coca-Cola Company, No. 97 C 190.

For a number of years Kolody planned to sue Coke for stealing his intellectual property, designs he made for them. Kolody's confidant, who befriended him over the years and insinuated himself into the matter for some 10 years, has been a local lawyer who was always sympathetic to Kolody's grievances against Coca-Cola and their adjunct, Simon Marketing.

When Kolody retained an out-of-state attorney from Arkansas to represent him in 1998, the rules required the designation of an additional lawyer as "local counsel". That trusted "local counsel" was Kolody's long-time confidant, Daniel V. Hanley (708-474-6633), of the Chicago suburb of Lansing, Illinois.

All of Kolody's legal strategies and plans, and those of his Arkansas lawyer, Dan Ivy, were discussed in confidence with Daniel V. Hanley. But strange things were happening. Coke's lawyers seemed to be able to "beat to the punch" Kolody and Dan Ivy—that is, heading off Kolody and Ivy's legal strategies which, of course, are confidential and not to be divulged by his "local counsel" Daniel V. Hanley.

And Judge Blanche M. Manning arrogantly committed judicial perjuries—which some common people call straight-out lies—about what this copyright case was all about. The Judge evidently knew that she did not have to be careful. She refused to wipe out her judicial perjuries when confronted by Dan Ivy.

As an electronic journalist, on May 18, 2000, I attended a hearing before Judge Manning when she failed to do anything about her judicial perjuries in the Coca-Cola case. Afterwards, elsewhere in the courthouse, in the presence of Ivy, I interviewed Daniel V. Hanley:

Skolnick: What sort of law work do you do, Mr. Hanley?

Daniel V. Hanley: General.

Skolnick: As you know, I do for many years now a cable TV show each week.

Hanley: Yes, I know.

Skolnick: Does Coca-Cola and their attorneys know the legal strategy of Robert Kolody and his attorney Dan Ivy here?

Hanley: Yes.

Skolnick: Really? How could they know?

Hanley: My sister is the media buyer for Coca-Cola.

Skolnick: What does she do?

Hanley: She has been with a New York firm and now is in Chicago.

Skolnick: What firm is she with?

Hanley: (Looked at Skolnick but did not answer.)

Skolnick: Do you think putting Bob here on my TV program about Coca-Cola would do any good?

Hanley: No.

Skolnick: So your sister understands all about this case?

Hanley: Yes.

(Whereupon Daniel V. Hanley left and Skolnick spoke to Dan Ivy:)

Skolnick: Did you hear what Hanley volunteered as a statement? (Kolody had come over to the table and heard the portion, he said, of the colloquy where Daniel V. Hanley said his sister is media buyer for Coca-Cola.)

Dan Ivy: Yes, and we are shocked.

Skolnick: Well, this needs further investigation now that he volunteered this statement.

After another court hearing on July 6, 2000, when again Judge Manning failed to take back her judicial perjuries, I attended in court and interviewed Hanley again, in the presence of Dan Ivy.

Skolnick: So, do you think putting Bob on my TV show will do some good?

Hanley: No. The time to put him on would have been two years ago at the time of the summary judgment. It's too late now.

Skolnick: So Coca-Cola understands all about this case, through your sister.

The foregoing transcripts are contained in my signed Declaration attached to Kolody's Motion for the judge to wipe-out all her rulings of substance because of the fraud upon the court by the judge and Coca-Cola's spy in Kolody's camp for ten years. (Motion was filed 8/9/00 in No. 97 C 190.)

As I later discovered, Daniel V. Hanley's sister, Mary Hanley, is Associate Media Director (312-552-6368) of the huge worldwide advertising firm, DDB. (You can visit their website www.ddb.com and click on their world directory of personnel for Chicago and Mary Hanley.)

As I put in my Declaration in court: "The long-term custom, practice, and usage, in certain parts of the U.S., to purportedly purchase federal judgeships, has been a subject of investigations and commentaries by Skolnick and his closest associates from 1966 to the present date. Skolnick has such a commentary on his www.skolnickreport.com website. Knowledgeable sources have informed Skolnick that the upwards of one million dollars to purportedly purchase the judgeship for Blanche M. Manning came from William F. Cellini via U.S. Senator Carol Moseley-Braun. Law enforcement personnel contend to Skolnick that Cellini, heavily active in gambling casinos, is reportedly a key player in the crime cartel."

More details from my court Declaration:

"Skolnick, jointly with some of his associates in court reform, has been investigating the circumstances of a case pending before Judge Manning USA vs. Joseph Jerome Miedzianowski, et al., defendants, No. 98 CR 923, U.S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. The circumstances show: (a) judge Manning, many times without notice, conducted closed-door and secret proceedings in the case; (b) ordered the censoring, by redacting of court and other transcripts; (c) Chicago Tribune Company petitioned to intervene in the case as of right, for among other purposes, for access to sealed judicial records and transcripts of proceedings; (d) Chicago Tribune apparently never publicly disclosed their objections to the secret proceedings in the case. Some references to this situation are contained in the case in No.98 CR 923, among other items, docket items No. 174, 175, 176, 180, 182, 186, 192....

"Informed sources contend that this situation is due, in part, to matters actually or bordering on so-called 'national security', in that involved in the trafficking of dope into Chicago from Florida and elsewhere was the use of dope couriers or 'mules' as they are known, of persons, some of them women, who also did work for the espionage agencies....

"Daniel V. Hanley has also been the attorney for Danny Harkenrider, who owns and operates Shannon's Landing, an Irish Pub, located with the property of the Chicago suburban airport in Lansing, Illinois. The place has been a reputed center for dope trafficking, including through airplanes. Nothing is done about this by the usual dope enforcement authorities. FBI Division Five, Counter-Intelligence, has informed the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration and other state and federal agencies to take no action against the dope traffic. The excuse being that the FBI purportedly is tracking clandestine IRS activities through the airport and the said Pub—activities to raise funds for the IRS and gun-smuggling through the dope traffic. Harkenrider has had purported immunity in these acts and doings in that his sister, Mary Yokich, was at one time on the third level from the top of the U.S. Justice Department, engaged in special investigations including involved in the Oklahoma City bombings. Some contend the Justice Department and the FBI, to avoid embarrassing details coming out, suppressed details of the tragedy. Mary Yokich's father-in-law is head of the powerful United Auto Workers union which in the past has, through international affiliates, assisted the American CIA in covert operations against unions deemed unfriendly to American corporate interests worldwide.”

It is clear that Judge Manning is busy covering up high-level corrupt government officials implicated in the dope traffic through the Chicago Police as in the Miedzianowski case. Another case assigned to Judge Manning by RANDOM MAGIC, is the case of USA vs. John Serpico, et al., No.99 CR 570. The defendants are labor bosses charged with racketeering, frauds and swindles, bank fraud, among other things. Through her apparent cover-ups, Judge Manning is keeping out of the federal court record that Serpico has a business partner who is a top official of the Federal Witness Protection Program. Some claim that these gangster-like connections have caused several supposedly protected witnesses to be murdered by inside complicity. Thus high-level corrupt federal officials, including IRS officials in Chicago, are kept from being fingered because the witnesses against them are being murdered INSIDE THE FEDERAL WITNESS PROTECTION PROGRAM.

Well-informed sources contend that one of the reasons Daniel V. Hanley volunteered the statement mentioned is that Hanley and his client, Harkenrider, are reportedly in the Federal Witness Protection Program, or being considered to be taken in under the criteria set forth in the U.S. Justice Department Manual under the Witness Security Reform Act of 1984 jointly with other laws.

Sources contend that Hanley and Harkenrider, because of their activities at the Irish Pub, at the Lansing, Illinois Airport, are being threatened from all sides (a) by the IRA not to co-operate with FBI Counter-Intelligence, Division Five, as protected witnesses; (b) by their knowledge that Judge Manning is keeping out of the federal court record, in several of her cases, the corrupt operation of the Federal Witness Protection Program, and that Hanley and Harkenrider cannot expect to be actually protected as witnesses; (c) by the Coca-Cola Company, in that they have had an entrenched spy in the camp of a major copyright case, where Robert E. Kolody is suing Coca-Cola and their marketing adjunct, Simon Marketing, now merged with a firm called Cryk; (d) by various corporate interests whose planes apparently convey dope in and out of the Lansing, Illinois airport with impunity, with state and federal authorities playing the part of the three monkeys; (e) and threatened by the Drug Enforcement Administration agents who often occupy a table at Shannon's Landing and also play the part of the three monkeys.

It is perhaps ironic that the only non-threatening type that Hanley could confess to is Sherman H. Skolnick, a long-known, independent-minded court reformer and cable-TV talk-show moderator/producer. Much more will follow about Chicago Federal District Judge Blanche M. Manning and the highly corrupt Federal Witness Protection Program involved in a string of cases she is covering up. Stay tuned.

PART THREE CONNECTING THE DOTS

This series is dealing with the type of harsh realities uncovered by our research and investigation group over 4 arduous decades of our work.

1. Sometimes whole groups of court cases are assigned, not by random selection, but “random magic”, intentionally to one or more judges as part of a “big fix”. And involved is a malign, if not corrupt, influence upon the judge. Knowing who it is who bought the chair for the judge is one type of influence. Straight out bribery, another. And the major corruption, as we have repeatedly shown, is not in the state courts, but the big-bucks federal courts. We have been showing, as an example, a group of cases assigned to Chicago U.S. District Judge Blanche M. Manning. We have more details on her. And she is not the only one; just an example of the corrupted federal judiciary.

2. Worldwide, major enterprises are secret adjuncts of the American CIA. Privitizing the spy agency avoids Freedom of Information disclosures. One example is Wackenhut. An example dealt with here is the Coca-Cola Company.

3. Government agencies are supposedly set up to protect witnesses from harm in very sensitive cases. For instance, the Federal Witness Protection Program. But they seem to have been penetrated by criminal interests, so that key witnesses, who finger corruption of top IRS and DEA officials, are NOT protected, but terrorized and, on occasion, snuffed out. As we have specified, judge Manning is covering up this situation in the case of USA vs. John Serpico et al., No. 99 CR 570. Serpico, a union purported criminal boss, is reportedly a business partner with a top official of the Federal Witness Protection Program.

4. There are places that operate reportedly as a criminal immunity zone. Anything goes. The state and federal authorities play the part of the three monkeys. One such that seems to fit that description reportedly is a business on the property of the Lansing, Illinois airport, a suburb of Chicago. Called Shannon's Landing (708-895-6919), it is an Irish pub.

Who seems to use that place? Corrupt top IRS officials blackmailing their way into all kinds of deals. (Visit our website series on the crooked IRS bosses and their ocean-going money laundry boat called “California Rose”.)

Dope traffic through the airplanes there and such is used reportedly to raise funds for gun-smuggling for purposes of the Irish Republican Army, the IRA. Agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency often sit at that pub and hear and see “nothing”. The owner of the pub, Danny Harkenrider, is reportedly himself in the Federal Witness Protection Program or being considered under the criteria for such. Another one in that program reportedly being considered for such is a purported lawyer (he does not seem to practice much law), Daniel V. Hanley, of Lansing, Illinois (708-474-6633).

Hanley is a purported spy inside the camp of a fellow, Robert E. Kolody, who sued Coke for theft of storyboards and designs—that is, his intellectual property. Apparently threatened from all sides, Hanley, as the supposed “local counsel” for Kolody, confessed and volunteered to me, in the presence of witnesses, that Kolody's court opponent, the Coca-Cola Company, gets to know his confidential legal strategies through Hanley's sister, Mary Hanley, who is a media buyer for Coca-Cola. She is with a huge worldwide advertising agency in Chicago, DDB (312-552-6368).

5. Federal judgeships, like state judgeships, are bought and sold. A known reputed criminal type bought judge Blanche M. Manning the federal judge's bench and chair she occupies in the U.S. District Court in Chicago. (Visit our website for our story on Buying Judgeships.) A million dollars or more was laid out.

6. A major dope trafficking case, by “random magic”, was assigned to judge Manning. She covered up the involvement of “mules”, dope couriers, some of them women, who also do espionage for the American CIA. (USA vs. Joseph Jerome Miedzianowski et al., No. 98 CR 923.)

The Chicago Tribune are fakers. As shown in the court record, they are privately blackmailing judge Manning, lambasting her for holding, without notice or formalities, secret proceedings, censoring court transcripts and papers. Why does the WORLD'S GREEDIEST NEWSPAPER remain silent about all this in print or on their TV station in Chicago, Channel 9, WGN-TV, or on their radio horn, WGN Radio?

7. In an extremely important anti-trust conspiracy case assigned to her, again by “random magic”, judge Manning tried to go easy on top officials found guilty by a jury—top officials, that is, of the worldwide farm products refinery, Archer-Daniels-Midland.

ADM is a super-duper advertiser in the monopoly press and controls numerous TV talk shows and such. They have, as their puppet, the “Jim Lehrer News Hour” on PBS. And ADM is big with supposedly “non-commercial” radio stations and NPR. Since a Rockefeller holds the key position with NPR, we call them National Petroleum Radio. ADM, like Coca-Cola years ago, is trying to put a grab on Cuba's agriculture by forcing the U.S. to drop the embargo.

By the way, the whole Elian Gonzalez Affair, played out on the ADM-dominated monopoly press, was to soften-up the American know-nothings for ADM's scheme of big investments in Cuba in food refineries to take advantage of Cuba's agriculture abundance. Working on the other side of this propaganda trick reportedly was Jose Basulto, reportedly tied to the criminal combine that includes the family of George Herbert Walker Bush and his criminally-linked, oil-soaked sons. And linked to the American CIA.

The case of the ADM officials is: USA vs. Michael D. Andreas, Terrance S. Wilson, and Mark E. Whitacre. Michael is the son of the long-time ADM dictator Dwayne Andreas, who should have gone to jail in the Watergate Affair. The government whistle-blower, Whitacre, himself an ADM official, wore a wire, and aided the FBI in setting up clandestine video and audio recording of the monopoly crimes. He was done-in apparently with the connivance—here it comes again—of the Federal Witness Protection Program. It is case No. 96 CR 762.

After a jury verdict finding the defendants guilty, judge Manning nevertheless gave a light sentence to Andreas and Wilson, and a more severe jail sentence to the whistle-blower, Whitacre, to scare such finger-pointers to shut-up in the future or be dropped down the chute by the “criminal combine” running the Federal Witness Protection Program. And as mentioned, judge Manning in various cases is covering up the criminals supposedly dedicated to protecting government witnesses, actually persecuting and terrorizing key government witnesses. If that does not work, well, snuffing out witnesses is also the answer. Whitacre rots in jail.

In June, 2000, the banker-judges on the federal appeals court in Chicago did their own blackmail job on judge Manning. They publicly ran over her in the case of Andreas and Wilson. They want to be sure she stays shut on the corrupted Federal Witness Protection Program in the several cases put on her docket by “random magic”. The appeals judges, primarily tied to the Rockefeller interests and not ADM, slapped her down, saying she gave too light of jail sentences to Andreas and Wilson, and sent it back for her to fix it up. Whitacre was not part of the appeal and is left as a thrown-in-the-garbage whistle-blower.

ADM supplies the corn and other sweeteners to the Coca-Cola company. So you see the common link to the cases on judge Manning's docket. ADM is a spy apparatus themselves, just like Coke.

In 1989, ADM wanted to put an armlock on the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. They were countered by the independent-minded young “pirates” who, as speculators, were running the places. ADM arranged to “buy” the federal prosecutor's office to frame-up 46 of these “pirates” on measly five-dollar discrepancy matters. In an unusual procedure, ADM supplied to the federal government prosecutors, undercover spies trained by and for ADM in commodity and other dealing. ADM's undercover provocateurs got “evidence” of the five dollar matters which was and is a common, accepted practice on the exchanges, not considered a crime at all. The federal prosecutors, practically on ADM's payroll instead of Uncle Sam's, destroyed the 46 young people quicker than shooting them.

In 1992, I was sitting in my wheelchair in the front of the front row of the packed courtroom of the U.S. Court of Appeals in Chicago. Before the oral presentation of the appeals, I tried to tell the wives of some of the Soybean Ten that the three-judge panel to hear the appeal was headed by a conflict of interest. That was Federal Appeals judge Richard D. Cudahy. According to his mandatory financial disclosure, he is the richest judge in North America and owns and operates the Patrick Cudahy Trust, which is a speculation instrument in the commodity industry.

Judge Cudahy upheld the severe jail sentences of the soybean traders.

The relatives of the doomed speculators had hired, for about a million dollars, Alan Dershowitz, to argue their appeal. Before the hearing, when I tried to warn the relatives, they just insulted me: “Who the hell are you, Mr. Skolnick?” I answered: “I am just a voice for justice in the wilderness; that's all.”

Hey, maybe you are floored by all these details. Maybe I should not tell you that the Russian mafiya plays a part in some of judge Manning's crooked decisions. Or that Harkenrider is purportedly in with them. More coming. Stay tuned.

PART 4 ENTER MORE PLAYERS

Is the media monster, the Tribune Company, a reputed blackmailer of the Coca-Cola Company?

Here is more that is boiling and bubbling out of that witches brew of a scandal implicating Coca-Cola. For background to this story, you should visit our website story about the Chicago Tribune linked to the criminal cartel, at least from 1910 to date, including the Trib using Al Capone as a labor consultant in 1930 to beat back a strike against the Tribune; and then again, in 1986, using gangster goons with attack dogs against the Trib's own workers in a labor strike.

With a charter for their Canadian pulp from the King of England more than 100 years ago, and large ownership currently by the Queen of England and her dope traffickers, the Tribune Company are no angels. Neither are the Coca-Cola Company—as an adjunct worldwide of the American CIA.

The one who got in the middle between the Tribune Company and Coca-Cola is Chicago U.S. District judge Blanche M. Manning. In a theft-of-intellectual-property case pending against Coca-Cola, judge Manning has issued a series of “judicial perjuries”, as some call them, to corruptly favor Coke. (Robert E. Kolody vs. Simon Marketing and the Coca-Cola Company, 97 C 190.)

Plain-spoken folks call such things straight-out lies by the judge. In August 2000, judge Manning was confronted with a situation involving a spy infiltrating the camp of Coke's court opponent, Kolody, thus becoming privy to Kolody's confidential legal strategies against Coke. How did this happen, as identified in the Court record?

The situation resulted in a Motion for Relief Because of Fraud Upon the Court, filed 8/9/00. The term “fraud upon the court” is a profound principle of law that frightens cowardly members of the bar and corrupt members of the bench. It requires that the rulings on matters of substance by a judge acting under a malign, if not corrupt, influence, be expunged from the court record.

When I run into savvy cynics in or near courthouses, they just cackle: “Skolnick, you have often documented such problems. How can there be a fraud upon the District Court in places like Chicago, a court that is a long-known fraud itself?”

To try to get around Kolody's Motion for Relief Because of Fraud Upon the Court, judge Manning issued a decision giving the Motion a false label, calling it a Motion to Disqualify the Judge. There is no such thing in the Motion. But this is typical of judges operating under a malign, if not corrupt, influence.

And falsely calling the Motion by that name, judge Manning said Kolody did not properly invoke the federal statutes for disqualifying a judge. So the judge said Kolody's Motion is no good. Any one examining the court record could see the judge is a plain rotten liar.

In another case on judge Manning's docket, the Tribune Company has been blackmailing the judge. In a moment you will understand why. It is a case of a dope-trafficking gang, Chicago-Florida, involving Chicago police and dope “mules” or couriers, actually many of them women also working for the American CIA.

The Tribune filed a petition in the case saying they should be allowed to intervene as of right. Why? Because, says the Tribune, judge Manning is conducting, without notice or legal formality, secret court proceedings. And judge Manning is censoring court documents and transcripts, by redacting them, and similar secret methods. Judge Manning's apparent purpose? To cover up the dope trafficking showing complicity by corrupt top-level IRS officials, and the kinky U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, and the corrupted FBI, among others. (Visit our website series on corrupt IRS brass and their ocean-going money-laundry boat.)

The dope trafficking case is USA vs. Joseph Jerome Miedzianowski, et al., No. 98 CR 923, U.S. District Court, Chicago.

According to advertising agency sources, the Tribune Company, as a media empire, has a beef against the Coca-Cola Company which is being corruptly favored by judge Manning with her paper tricks. (Kolody vs. Simon Marketing and the Coca-Cola Company, No. 97 C 190.)

The Tribune Company is sore at Coke because Coke's media buyer, Mary Hanley, reportedly is not favoring Trib and their raft of newspapers, TV, and radio stations and such, with the proper amount of advertising bucks. Get this straight: the Tribune, no crusaders against corrupt federal judges, does not wish to assist Kolody, but rather to strong-arm Coke.

Just after the Fraud Upon the Court Motion was filed, Mary Hanley's boss, the monstrous DDB advertising octopus, announces, in the Chicago Tribune, that Mary Hanley has been promoted to Senior Vice President and is group media director at DDB Chicago. (Chicago Tribune, George Lazarus' column, 8/15/00.) It appears that DDB is playing the part of press agent, to try to get the stink off the mess.

And guess what? To further get away from the ruckus, Coca-Cola's media buyer, Mary Hanley, identified as such by her lawyer-brother, just at that point, is leaving the U.S. for Ireland.

By the way, reportedly arranging such propaganda is an apparatus we call the Banquet Committee, suddenly honoring someone, such as person of the year and such, to counter a scandal. More later.

We have, by the way, been commenting for some 40 years about media units blackmailing slow-to-comply would-be advertisers. The late George Seldes, a crusading journalist, wrote about this type of blackmailing in his book Tell The Truth And Run. Since 1991, on our public-access cable TV program in Chicago, we have spelled out numerous examples of pressfakers using blackmail to strong-arm ads. That is, they threaten to run negative stories about a corporation if they fail to buy plenty of ads.

In simple terms, the Tribune Company wants the Coca-Cola Company to throw more ad bucks its way. And twisting judge Manning's crooked arm (maybe even Mary Hanley's arm) is the way to start the finger pointing leading to loosening up Coke's billion-dollar-a-year advertising bankroll. (Some years ago, we showed how a local TV station in Chicago, Channel 5, WMAQ-TV, an NBC unit, did a series scandalizing Sears, Roebuck & Co., basically because Sears was holding back ad bucks.)

And get this angle: The Miedzianowski case secretly involves the American CIA, details covered up by judge Manning. The background of many of the Tribune Company's correspondents and such is that they come out of U.S. military intelligence, the CIA's competitor. So the Tribune Company has a number of reasons to privately blackmail Chicago U.S. District judge Blanche M. Manning.

Sarcastic sorts crow that if Coke does not bubble up with more ads for the Tribune Company—well, Tribune may order any Coke machines to suddenly disappear from Trib's premises. Or sternly order Tribune employees to drink Royal Crown Cola instead. NOT Pepsi-Cola, falsely described as a "competitor" of Coke, yet Coke and Pepsi are run and owned by the same folks. Ha ha. Stories like this take the fizz out of the soda monster. Stay tuned.

PART FIVE

THE BLACKMAIL MACHINE ROLLS ON

It was set to be a crucial hearing in the media-ignored Coca-Cola case in Chicago's federal district court. U.S. district judge Blanche M. Manning was determined NOT to hear in open court on August 22, 2000, that Coca-Cola had a reputed spy in the camp of their opponent, Robert E. Kolody, who was suing Coke for theft of his storyboards and designs. In law, his claim is called theft of intellectual property.

The monopoly press, beholden to major advertiser Coca-Cola, has purposely evaded reporting on this case. Kolody's out-of-state attorney, Dan Ivy, had on August 9 bravely filed a Motion demanding the judge expunge all her rulings favoring Coke, since the reputed spy reportedly conveyed confidential legal strategies of Kolody to his opponent, Coke. It is called Fraud Upon the Court, an unusual procedure that makes most of those of the bench and the bar plenty nervous. Kolody's required "local counsel", Daniel V. Hanley, the reputed spy, in the presence of witnesses, had confessed to me that Coca-Cola knew Kolody's court strategies because Hanley's sister is media buyer for Coca-Cola.

The court-filed Motion with my signed Declaration attached, among other things, pointed out:

1. That power-broker and gambling casino overlord, WILLIAM F. CELLINI, reportedly paid one million dollars to buy in 1994 the federal court judgeship for Blanche M. Manning. The pay-off was reportedly made through then-U.S. senator Carol Moseley-Braun. (Braun lost the re-election in 1998 because of growing scandals she could not explain away. As to "Buying a Judgeship", visit my website.) Cellini reportedly is linked to the nationwide criminal cartel.

2. My Declaration transcribed two interviews, done in the presence of witnesses, of Daniel V. Hanley.

3. That the Tribune Company, parent of the Chicago Tribune, and their media empire, have been blackmailing judge Manning by seeking to intervene, as of right they claimed, without publicity, in another one of judge Manning's cases and to point out that the judge engaged in secret proceedings without notice, and censored and redacted court records, as part of an apparent cover-up. As later determined, the Tribune Company wanted to pressure judge Manning, and Coke's media buyer, MARY HANLEY, so Tribune would get more advertising bucks from Coca-Cola. With the merger with the Los Angeles Times, Tribune Company got more heavily in debt. Getting a big share of Coke's billion dollars a year advertising slush fund would help Tribune Company and their banks.

Prior to the show-down August 22 hearing, judge Manning jumped the gun and rejected the Fraud Upon the Court Motion, out of hand. The judge issued a ruling loaded with what Dan Ivy, later on August 22, described in court to her face as her "judicial perjuries". Identified by Dan Ivy were how, to try to cover up and evade the Fraud Upon the Court involving the judge herself, that she straight out lied. The judge falsely described the Motion as one to disqualify herself. No such thing in the Motion. Ivy confronted the judge with a string of her lies. The judge resisted allowing the witnesses against the reputed spy to be heard. The witnesses were all present in the courtroom.

Notice the time-line: prior to the key hearing, Daniel V. Hanley informed Kolody that Hanley's sister, Coke media buyer Mary Hanley, is going out of the country, to Ireland. Would she be available as a witness? Her testimony could scandalize her company, DDB advertising agency, in matters that involve both Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola.

Prior to the key hearing, in a business column on 8/15/00 in the Chicago Tribune, it is announced that Mary Hanley of DDB Chicago has been elected Senior Vice President and is a group media director.

By the way, as Coke's media buyer, Mary Hanley has tremendous clout as to who in the mass media get part of Coke's billion dollars a year ad bucks.

After resisting hearing the witnesses, judge Manning suddenly leaves the bench, presumably to get instructions from "higher ups". In the recess, six federal security patrol officers enter the courtroom. An excuse supposedly is that the judge will briefly divert a few minutes to sentence a jail-bird, in an orange prison jumpsuit, brought in through a side door. After the brief diversion, however, the federal police do not leave.

Judge Manning then tries to intimidate me, demanding I roll my wheelchair to the rear of the courtroom. I told her I am an electronic journalist and wish to be upfront to observe and hear good. One of the federal police stands up and started over to me, to forcibly remove me. Under threat, I rolled over to sit right near one of the federals with his intercom in his ear.

Suddenly the judge changes her mind and the witnesses were called, such as me. I was asked what I do. Looking right at judge Manning, I told her I investigate crooked judges for the purpose of putting them in jail. Pointing to the reputed spy for Coca-Cola who confessed to me in the presence of others, I detailed what was said. The reputed spy did not, however, appear to deny my interviews with him about his sister.

In the Kolody case, the two defendants are the Coca-Cola Company and their marketing adjunct, Simon Marketing. Simon's alleged attorney was asked why she did not inform the court that Simon had merged and is now part of Cyrk, Inc. The attorney, Jacqueline A. Criswell (law firm of Tressler, Soderstrom, Maloney & Priess, 312-627-4000) told judge Manning that she did not know of the merger.

Apparently not adequately revealed in the court record is that Criswell does NOT represent Simon Marketing, but rather, the insurance carrier under an errors and omission policy carried by many corporations. And the name of the insurance company has not been disclosed in the court record. Also, Cyrk has reportedly failed to inform the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission of the Kolody suit as required by SEC regulations.

From all the known facts, it appears that there may be a scam underway to rip off the insurance carrier. No great surprise. Illinois and Texas are havens for pirate insurance companies and havens for massive insurance frauds, because of crooked state insurance regulators. Coke appears to be fraudulently shifting the multi-million-dollar damage claim against them, for theft of intellectual property, so their former marketing adjunct, Simon, would take the blame, to be underwritten by the insurance company.

Coca-Cola's advertising agency, DDB, may be part of a huge price-fixing and market-tampering mess. Advertising agencies become privy to tremendous financial and political secrets of their clients—such as the market demographics, data on profiling would-be customers, price trends, political trends that affect marketing products, problems needed to be “fixed” and judges and others necessary to be corrupted for the benefit of their clients, where the product sells the best so as to put a related business unit right nearby, point-of-purchase strategies, etc. Closely scrutinizing DDB's website is helpful (www.ddb.com).

DDB, once called Needham, has been trying to stay low-key about the fact that they represent Pepsi-Cola at the same time they represent their alleged “competitor” Coca-Cola. That sort of an arrangement is both unethical and may well be a violation of the U.S. Anti-Trust laws. The purpose is to freeze-out smaller companies like Royal Crown Cola and others, with Pepsi and Coke together controlling the prices among themselves, dividing up markets among themselves, setting the wholesale price per-case of soda pop in such a way as to screw smaller firms, and then jacking up the price for themselves, and similar federal price-fixing and market-fixing law violations. An open secret, never mentioned in the monopoly press, is that Coke and Pepsi are substantially owned and operated by the same people.

Two days after the key hearing on Coke's reputed spy, the Chicago Tribune continues their “blackmail machine”. The apparent purpose is not to help Robert E. Kolody fight the injustice inflicted on him by judge Manning, but rather, for the Tribune Company to continue to shake down Coke's advertising agency, DDB, to get more ad bucks for the Tribune empire of numerous print-media newspapers, TV stations, radio stations, magazines, and a great number of advertising-sponsored websites.

The Trib blackmail story was on their front page for 8/24/00. The Tribune announced a matter that had so far been kept secret: That there had been a huge Illinois State contract swindle prosecution that actually involved top officials of then-Illinois Governor Jim Edgar (1991-1999): “The list of those linked by prosecutors to the scandal but not charged included Michael Belletire, Edgar's deputy chief of staff and later head of the ILLINOIS GAMING BOARD; JANIS CELLINI, Edgar's patronage chief AND SISTER OF SPRINGFIELD POWER BROKER WILLIAM CELLINI...” (Emphasis added.)

Notice the tie-in to the Coca-Cola case. A gambling casino kingpin, reputedly part of the nationwide crime cartel, William F. Cellini, reportedly bought the judgeship for Blanche M. Manning sitting on the Coca-Cola case.

One of those reportedly covering up dirty business in gambling casinos for Cellini, who later became head of the Illinois Gambling Board, is now named as having been an unindicted co-conspirator. That is, the prosecutor, splitting hairs because of being corrupted or otherwise influenced, left him off the hook. And then the Tribune names William F. Cellini's sister, Janis Cellini, as one who somehow escaped being actually prosecuted and jailed.

Do you suppose that William F. Cellini and the Coca-Cola gang and their ad bucks controller DDB, and Mary Hanley, media buyer for Coca-Cola, along with judge Manning, got the message? See to it, they are told, that the Tribune Company gets their “cut” of the Coke billion dollars a year ad bucks, or else more judicial dirt and Cellini scandals will be published.

So what is next? The WORLD'S GREEDIEST NEWSPAPER suddenly and belatedly finding out that there is an insurance scam reportedly implicating a marketing adjunct of Coca-Cola? Or that the DDB advertising agency is concealing an apparent horrendous price-fixing mess involving both Pepsi and Coke? Stay tuned.

PART SIX ANATOMY OF THE BIG COURT FIX

One of the hardest things to understand, for poorly informed folks, is that the law and the facts are not the controlling factors in important cases in court. Mind you, not every case is corrupted or “fixed”. Too often, however, the big ones show signs there has been a malign, if not corrupt, influence on the judge or judges involved.

Our court reform group, targeting court corruption, has been active for four decades. We know what to look for. The assignment of cases, is, to us, a key sign.

We have been writing and commenting, and did a one-hour cable TV program, on the corruption in the case against the Coca-Cola Company, in Chicago's notorious federal district court. With no exceptions, every judgeship in the place has been bought and sold over the years.

The case against Coca-Cola was brought in January, 1997, by a Nebraska attorney, John DeCamp, with long prior experience with the American CIA. (The plaintiff, Robert E. Kolody, found it difficult to get a local attorney.) DeCamp was in a position to understand plenty. He was in a position to know that this important case in Chicago, involving claims against the soda pop monster for theft of intellectual property, storyboards, and designs, would be difficult to continue. Any plaintiff's attorney might get chewed up and spit out, especially by Coca-Cola, a worldwide adjunct and proprietary operation of the American CIA.

By the corrupt process of “random magic”, instead of random selection, the Coca-Cola case was assigned to Chicago U.S. district judge Blanche M. Manning. And the road to reportedly blackmailing her, to favor Coca-Cola, was already built. Running on that road was waste hauler John Christopher, who had a criminal past with reputed ties to organized crime. He agreed to be an FBI “mole” and to wear a “wire” to target some of Chicago's City Officials, known as “the best that money can buy”. The FBI/U.S. Justice Department project was dubbed “Silver Shovel”.

Screwing the residents in their own districts with poisonous waste, various city council Aldermen took apparent pay-offs or reportedly extorted pay-offs from Christopher, so he could illegally dump huge waste loads, such as left-over construction junk, in their neighborhoods. This was primarily or exclusively in poor Black areas, with an empty lot or two; areas without financial or political clout. By the way, after the FBI dust had settled, the U.S. Government did NOT quickly offer to haul away all the toxic mess that Christopher unloaded, often right near populated inner-city areas.

“Silver Shovel” was a headlined scandal in the local press, starting about January, 1996. By the time the Coca-Cola case got started, a year later, City of Chicago Commissioner of Water, John Bolden, was targeted for federal criminal prosecution in “Silver Shovel”. His and the soda pop case were both pending before judge Manning. Commissioner Bolden’s defense attorney, James Montgomery, was reportedly a close crony of judge Manning. It was obvious to savvy sorts what might happen. Montgomery reportedly had ties of some sort over the years with Nevada gambling casino gangsters. Reportedly part of the crime cartel and a big-time owner of gambling casinos, William F. Cellini reportedly had bought the federal judgeship for Manning, paying some one million dollars through then U.S. Senator Carol Moseley-Braun (D-IL).

John DeCamp, in a position reportedly to understand a few things about Coca-Cola and the CIA and the Chicago federal judges, withdrew from the newly started case against Coke in July 1997. A few weeks later there started the federal criminal trial of USA vs. John Bolden. Same judge.

Anyone knowing a lot about court knows that even trials by jury can be “fixed” or sabotaged by the trial judge. Such as, by the judge keeping out key evidence as being “inadmissible”, by manipulating the dates and circumstances of the jury procedures. By slanting the court procedures against the prosecutors and in favor of the criminal defendant. By scheduling the jury under peculiar circumstances.

In September 1997, the jury in the Bolden case came back with a split verdict. Guilty on tax evasion, wherein Bolden could get, at most, six months in prison. They acquitted Bolden on the more serious charges of extortion.

John Bolden was a bigshot making as much as $90,000 a year as Commissioner of Water for the City of Chicago. (And perhaps much more as pay-offs to influence his official position.) He was a big fish.

The team that helped put together the charges against Bolden were and are livid. Why? They contend that judge Manning, to go easy on Water Commissioner Bolden, got a “financial benefit” that some might construe as a bribe. The team, in plain language, grumbles loud enough for others to hear that U.S. District judge Blanche M. Manning is a crook, whose chair reportedly was bought for her by a crook, and that she belongs in prison, along with the one who bought her the judgeship.

To understand this story fully, you have to understand the realities of political and financial power. Those who put together criminal charges are most often NOT concerned about bribes to judges in CIVIL cases. So, if judge Manning had been bribed or corruptly influenced or blackmailed in the CIVIL case, the one against Coca-Cola, well, the team is NOT concerned.

In the Water Commissioner’s case, judge Manning made the same mistake, however, as Chicago Federal Appeals Judge Otto Kerner, Jr., in 1969. He had reportedly taken a huge bribe in a CIVIL case, involving a five-million-dollar claim regarding a pet food company. The matter, however, that instigated the federal criminal charges against Judge Kerner was that he had been corrupted to turn loose the Silver Hi-Jacking Gang, an important federal CRIMINAL case.

A federal judge is a fool to counter the prosecutors in a federal criminal case. A federal judge who takes bribes or financial benefits or is corruptly influenced or blackmailed in a CIVIL case most likely stays peacefully and quietly on the bench until he or she retires or croaks.

The other, some two dozen, U.S. district judges who sit with judge Manning in the federal courthouse in Chicago are just as corrupt as Manning. EXCEPT, they do not screw or sabotage CRIMINAL cases. (This is not a blanket generality. I could detail their crimes as well, one by one.)

Judge Kerner learned the hard way the number-one unwritten law that applies to crooked judges: YOU DO NOT SCREW AROUND WITH CRIMINAL CASES, only civil cases.

Our group, by the way, was instrumental in getting Kerner put in prison. He was the highest ranking sitting federal judge to be sent to jail for bribery in U.S. history. Also sent to jail with him, by our work, was his crony, the former Director of the Illinois Department of Revenue, the highest Illinois state tax collector, Theodore J. Isaacs.

When I publicly accused Kerner, he tried to get a fellow judge to jail me for contempt of court. Kerner held a press conference and all the local media carried his statement calling me a “liar”. But get this: he died an ex-convict. So who was lying after all?

Here are a few questions to think about:

1. Were and are Coca-Cola’s hotshot Chicago lawyers in a position to know that judge Manning may be in big trouble and subject to blackmail, such as reportedly by Coke’s lawyers, because of her role in the Water Commissioner’s case? Coca-Cola’s attorneys include Ms. Laura Beth Miller (of Brinks, Hofer, Gilson & Lione, 312-321-4715).

2. Why is nothing done about Simon

Marketing, a marketing adjunct of Coca-Cola and also defendant with them? The one in court that purports to represent Simon Marketing, reportedly actually represents the insurance carrier. Are they committing a fraud upon the court? Simon Marketing merged with Cyrk, Inc., not shown in the court record. Purporting to represent Simon Marketing is Jacqueline A. Criswell (312-627-4000), of Tressler, Soderstrom, Maloney & Priess.

3. Why did judge Manning have six federal police in her courtroom, to intimidate me, when I testified at a hearing as to my investigations with respect to judge Manning and the Coca-Cola case?

4. The other judges in the federal courthouse with judge Manning know better than to sabotage or corruptly screw up the prosecutors in a federal criminal case. How is it that she does not realize she is on the road to possible disaster? Did she flunk-out of Crooked Judge 101? The other crooked judges in her courthouse have all passed the test. They are each as corrupt as her, but know how to survive as a corrupt judge.

Cynics claim that the school for training corrupt judges how to survive is financed, in part, by gambling casino loot. Wise bookies are refusing bets, however, on judge Manning, a judicial school drop-out.

Do we know who actually runs such a school? You betcha. Stay tuned.

PART SEVEN SUMMARIZING THE REAL-LIFE DRAMA—AND WAS IT MURDER?

ROBERT E. KOLODY: For upwards of ten years a local lawyer he trusted, DANIEL V. HANLEY, reportedly elicited from Kolody details of his legal strategy plans. Kolody contends that the Coca-Cola Company and their marketing adjunct, Simon Marketing, stole Kolody’s intellectual property, being storyboards and designs. Kolody had difficulty getting a Chicago-area attorney to pursue his claims. Since 1997, Kolody’s case has been in the U.S. District Court in Chicago, No. 97 C 190.

In February 1999, Kolody retained Dan Ivy, an outspoken attorney from Arkansas. As required under the local federal rules in Chicago, Ivy designated Hanley as “local counsel”, meaning Hanley has to be informed of all proposed court filings and procedures.

SHERMAN H. SKOLNICK: As a long-time court reformer and TV show moderator/producer, I began investigating the Coca-Cola case.

TRIBUNE COMPANY: As the parent firm of the Tribune media empire, the Tribune Company owns the Chicago Tribune, the Los Angeles Times, and other newspapers around the country, as well as numerous radio and TV stations. Tribune Company is reportedly trying to strong-arm Coca-Cola for more advertising dollars, by reportedly leaning on DDB. But Tribune has not been interested in publicizing the Kolody suit against Coca-Cola.

U.S. CHICAGO DISTRICT JUDGE BLANCHE M. MANNING: The Tribune, without publicity in their newspapers, radio, and TV, has sought to intervene in one of judge Manning's criminal cases to accuse her of secret proceedings and other unlawful acts and doings. The apparent purpose? To blackmail the judge and put pressure on Coca-Cola and DDB for more ad bucks, to relieve the Tribune's huge debt overhang caused by merging with the Los Angeles Times.

In a series of court-filed Motions by Kolody, he documents how judge Manning has been stuffing the court records with "judicial perjuries"—straight-out lies used to justify arbitrary and corrupt rulings favoring Coca-Cola.

GEORGE LAZARUS: As the Chicago Tribune's long-time, widely-read columnist on marketing and advertising, Lazarus on 8/15/00 runs an item: "Mary Hanley, a group media director of DDB Chicago, was elected a senior VP of the agency" and includes a picture of her.

MARY HANLEY: Selected to be a top official of DDB Advertising, she is reportedly unavailable to be a witness at an important hearing in Kolody's case. Her brother, DANIEL V. HANLEY, tells Kolody and Skolnick, in a conference call, that Mary Hanley is leaving the country for Ireland. Later, Hanley tells them she will be back in 15 days. (Is there a link to the IRA? See previous parts of this series.)

While Kolody is listening on the phone, Skolnick interviews JILL ZEMANSKI, private secretary of Mary Hanley. Jill confirms that Mary Hanley represents Coca-Cola Company.

THE HEARING ON AUGUST 22, 2000: Informed by attorney Ivy that there are in court, present, two witnesses, Skolnick and Kolody, prepared to testify that judge Manning is committing a fraud upon her own court in the Coca-Cola case, judge Manning brings into the courtroom SIX FEDERAL POLICE to menace and intimidate Skolnick sitting in his wheelchair.

The purpose of the hearing? For judge Manning to hear and consider whether she herself has committed a fraud upon her own court through the judge falsifying the facts and filling the court records with her "judicial perjuries". The judge does NOT seem to understand that such a hearing, with her presiding, is outlawed by Anglo-Saxon law—that is, for a person TO SIT AS A JUDGE IN THEIR OWN CASE.

Ivy tells the Judge that the remedy he and his client Kolody seek is for the judge to expunge from the court records all of judge Manning's rulings favoring the Coca-Cola Company and Simon Marketing. Judge Manning said she will take the matter of her own fraud upon the court and instances brought-up of newly discovered evidence "under advisement". (The foregoing is shown in the Report of the Proceedings of her Court for 8/22/00.)

Following the hearing, the Broadsides cable TV program sends an envoy to Tribune columnist GEORGE LAZARUS, informing him about what is happening in court as to the Coca-Cola Company, Mary Hanley, and DDB advertising. He expresses an interest that he is going to follow-up the matter for his column. (Or, are his bosses at the Tribune intending to over-rule him and pursue their reported blackmailing of DDB, judge Manning, Coca-Cola, and others, to shake-down more ad bucks for the Tribune Company?)

In a court order dated 8/29/00, judge Manning issues a nine-page ruling with more of her falsified facts and "judicial perjuries", contending she finds that she has NOT committed a fraud upon her own court. (An obvious ruling by someone sitting as a judge in their own case.) As to some of the prior rulings, Ivy files a Notice of Appeal on August 31, 2000.

Among the issues involved in the case against Coca-Cola is that: (1) the Coca-Cola Company allowed their copyright to lapse and it is now owned by Kolody as shown by documents of the U.S. Copyright Office; (2) that Coca-Cola has, with respect to this litigation, committed a fraud by not reporting it to the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission that regulates listed stock such as that of Coke.

Several weeks into the works was a story published in the much-watched Tempo Section of the Chicago Tribune, usually published on a Thursday. Published on Thursday, September 7, 2000 was a lengthy Tempo story about various other soda pop companies. In quoting a seller of a flavored foreign pop called Tarhun: "People believe Tarhun is good for you and Coke is bad for you." Then further quoting the seller: "For instance, have you ever seen what happens when you put a chicken liver in a glass of Coke?" In so doing, the Tribune was taking a swipe at Coke to reportedly shake them and DDB down for more ad bucks.

While they were commenting, the Tribune could have added that Coca-Cola can be a substitute for Drano to clear out your home plumbing.

The very next day, Friday, September 8, 2000, player George Lazarus was found dead on the commuter train he took each day to the Tribune offices. In a lengthy story on Saturday, September 9, 2000, a sort of obituary, headlined "Veteran Business Columnist George Lazarus Dies", the Tribune stated: "His daily column, put together through an indomitable force of will for 39 years, all but 11 of them at the Tribune, was practically Holy Writ for executives in the marketing and advertising business in Chicago."

Then the Tribune adds this strange sort of cynical humor: "'WE WERE SURE HE WAS HIDING IN OUR RESTROOMS' said DDB WORLDWIDE CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER KEITH REINHARD. 'MANY TIMES, WE COULDN'T FIGURE OUT HOW HE GOT THE STORY.'" (Emphasis added.) Did someone plant that item in that obituary to take the glare of possible foul play off of themselves and DDB and the Tribune and all the matters discussed in this series?

The Tribune story stated: "A Metro [commuter train] employee found him Friday morning, slumped in his seat on his way to work, his customary collection of morning newspapers still in his lap. He had died on his morning commute from his Flossmoor home to his office downtown."

Some of his buddies, however, have confided to us that they are convinced that George Lazarus was murdered. One media honcho, poorly informed and naive, said: "Was he shot with a gun?" That's a foolish question in the current era of political assassination. (Evidently he never read the reports by CIA to Congressional intelligence committees about cyanide pistols and potassium killer devices.)

Did the Tribune want their own reporter DEAD? There is the unsolved crime from about 1930, involving a Tribune reporter, Jake Lingle, who was shaking down mobsters and others to hush up stories. He was bumped off by being shot in a public place. (It may be a small item, but Lazarus lived among the numerous hoodlums in the south suburb of Flossmoor.)

So you thought that mass-media reporters are only knocked off in Mexico? Ha, ha. Lazarus was reportedly pursuing some of the issues raised by our series. Was the highly corrupt U.S. Justice Department going to finally take an interest that Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola are owned and operated by substantially the same people? That they are a price-fixing monopoly designed to wreck other smaller soft drink beverage firms like Royal Crown Cola. And that DDB advertising represents both of the two major soda pop companies, Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola.

So how many more are they going to have to assassinate to cover up the Coca-Cola espionage and corruption scandals? Stay tuned.

A Short History Of Secret Human Biological Experiments

Editor's note: The anonymous author who assembled the following "litany of sins" against a largely unsuspecting public deserves a great hand of applause. That there are, in secret places, dark ones of high technical accomplishment but low conscience and morality is amply displayed as the list below unfolds.

In many ways this list is quite conservative. It neither goes back far enough to include, say, the very suspicious 1918 "influenza" outbreak which killed well over 20 million people, nor does it cover the outrageously bizarre non-biological aspects of some of the super-twisted experimental programs that do get mentioned herein, such as MK-ULTRA. (Our Front Page story in last month's issue of The SPECTRUM began to examine those hard-to-believe areas.) Actually, some of those non-biological, electromagnetically moderated, mind-control aspects make the biological shenanigans seem relatively tame by comparison.

To expand upon this list means to turn to such as the exceptional investigative work of Eustace Mullins and his classic book Murder By Injection, or Dr. Len Horowitz, as chronicled in his astonishing books, especially EMERGING VIRUSES: AIDS & Ebola—Nature, Accident, Or Intentional? (These are available from Wisdom Books & Press, noted elsewhere in this newspaper.) Regular readers of this newspaper are quite familiar with Dr. Horowitz's regular contributions as an investigator and researcher who does not hesitate to name names and tell it like it is!

But first consider the following. Without this 66-year list to put a very sinister effort into perspective, it would be nearly impossible for any decent person to accept that any one of these items actually occurred, much less all of them! But they did—and will continue until we finally put a stop to such clandestine madness. Again ask yourself the question: "How could we go so wrong?" in considering how our higher educational system could release such conscience-less "professionals" on the public.

(www.healthnewsnet.com)

1931: Dr. Cornelius Rhoads, under the auspices of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Investigations, infects human subjects with cancer cells. He later goes on to establish the U.S. Army Biological Warfare facilities in Maryland, Utah, and Panama, and is named to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. While there, he begins a series of radiation exposure experiments on American soldiers and civilian hospital patients.

1932: The Tuskegee Syphilis Study begins. 200 Black men diagnosed with syphilis are never told of their illness, are denied treatment, and instead are used as human guinea pigs in order to follow the progression and symptoms of the disease. They all subsequently die from syphilis, their families never told that they could have been treated.

1935: The Pellagra Incident. After millions of individuals die from Pellagra over a span of two decades, the U.S. Public Health Service finally acts to stem the disease. The director of the agency admits they had known for at least 20 years that Pellagra is caused by a niacin deficiency, but failed to act since most of the deaths occurred within poverty-stricken Black populations.

1940: Four hundred prisoners in Chicago are infected with Malaria in order to study the effects of new and experimental drugs to combat the disease. Nazi doctors later on trial at Nuremberg cite this American study to defend their own actions during the Holocaust.

1942: Chemical Warfare Services begins mustard gas experiments on approximately 4,000 servicemen. The experiments continue until 1945 and made use of Seventh Day Adventists who chose to become human guinea pigs rather than serve on active duty.

1943: In response to Japan's full-scale germ-warfare program, the U.S. begins research on biological weapons at Fort Detrick, MD.

1944: U.S. Navy uses human subjects to test gas masks and clothing. Individuals were locked in a gas chamber and exposed to mustard gas and lewisite.

1945: Project Paperclip is initiated. The U.S. State Department, Army Intelligence, and the CIA recruit Nazi scientists and offer them immunity and secret identities in exchange for work on top-secret government projects in the United States.

1945: "Program F" is implemented by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). This is the most extensive U.S. study of the health effects of fluoride, which was the key chemical component in atomic bomb production. One of the most toxic chemicals known to man, fluoride, it is found, causes marked adverse effects to the central nervous system—but much of the information is squelched in the name of "national security" because of fear that lawsuits would undermine full-scale production of atomic bombs.

1946: Patients in VA hospitals are used as guinea pigs for medical experiments. In order to allay suspicions, the order is given to change the word "experiments" to "investigations" or "observations" whenever reporting a medical study performed in one of the nation's veterans' hospitals.

1947: Colonel E.E. Kirkpatrick of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission issues a secret document (Document 07075001, January 8, 1947) stating that the agency will begin administering intravenous doses of radioactive substances to human subjects.

1947: The CIA begins its study of LSD as a potential weapon for use by American intelligence. Human subjects (both civilian and military) are used with and without their knowledge.

1950: Department of Defense begins plans to detonate nuclear weapons in desert areas and monitor downwind residents for medical problems and mortality rates.

1950: In an experiment to determine how susceptible an American city would be to biological attack, the U.S. Navy sprays a cloud of bacteria from ships over San Francisco. Monitoring devices are situated throughout the city in order to test the extent of infection. Many residents become ill with pneumonia-like symptoms.

1951: Department of Defense begins open-air tests using disease-producing bacteria and viruses. Tests last through 1969 and there is concern that people in the surrounding areas have been exposed.

1953: U.S. military releases clouds of zinc cadmium sulfide gas over Winnipeg, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Fort Wayne, the Monocacy River Valley in Maryland, and Leesburg, Virginia.

Their intent is to determine how efficiently they could disperse chemical agents.

1953: Joint Army-Navy-CIA experiments are conducted in which tens of thousands of people in New York and San Francisco are exposed to the airborne germs Serratia Marcescens and Bacillus Glogigii.

1953: CIA initiates Project MK-ULTRA. This is an eleven-year research program designed to produce and test drugs and biological agents that would be used for mind control and behavior modification. Six of the subprojects involved testing the agents on unwitting human beings.

1955: The CIA, in an experiment to test its ability to infect human populations with biological agents, releases a bacteria drawn from the Army's Biological Warfare Arsenal over Tampa Bay, FL.

1955: Army Chemical Corps continues LSD research, studying its potential use as a chemical incapacitating agent. More than 1,000 Americans participate in the tests, which continue until 1958.

1956: U.S. military releases mosquitos infected with Yellow Fever over Savannah, GA and Avon Park, FL. Following each test, Army agents posing as public health officials test victims for effects.

1958: LSD is tested on 95 volunteers at the Army's Chemical Warfare Laboratories for its effect on intelligence.

1960: The Army Assistant Chief-of-Staff for Intelligence (ACSI) authorizes field testing of LSD in Europe and the Far East. Testing of the European population is code-named "Project Third Chance" while testing of the Asian population is code-named "Project Derby Hat".

1965: CIA and Department of Defense begin Project MK-SEARCH, a program to develop a capability to manipulate human behavior through the use of mind-altering drugs.

1965: Prisoners at the Holmesburg State Prison in Philadelphia are subjected to dioxin, the highly toxic chemical component of Agent Orange, used in Viet Nam. The men are later studied for development of cancer, which indicates that Agent Orange had been a suspected carcinogen all along.

1966: CIA initiates Project MK-OFTEN, a program to test the toxicological effects of certain drugs on humans and animals.

1966: U.S. Army dispenses Bacillus Subtilis, variant niger, throughout the New York City subway system. More than a million civilians are exposed when army scientists drop lightbulbs filled with the bacteria onto ventilation grates.

1967: CIA and Department of Defense implement Project MK-NAOMI, successor to MK-ULTRA, designed to maintain, stockpile, and test biological and chemical weapons.

1968: CIA experiments with the possibility of poisoning drinking water by injecting chemicals into the water supply of the FDA in Washington, D.C.

1969: Dr. Robert MacMahan of the Department of Defense requests from Congress $10 million to develop, within 5 to 10 years, a synthetic biological agent to which no natural immunity exists.

1970: Funding for the synthetic biological agent is obtained under H.R. 15090. The project, under the supervision of the CIA, is carried out by the Special Operations Division at Fort Detrick, the Army's top-secret biological weapons facility. Speculation is raised that molecular biology techniques are used to produce AIDS-like retroviruses.

1970: United States intensifies its development of "ethnic weapons" (Military Review, November 1970) designed to selectively target and eliminate specific ethnic groups who are susceptible due to genetic differences and variations in DNA.

1975: The virus section of Fort Detrick's Center for Biological Warfare Research is renamed the Fredrick Cancer Research Facilities and placed under the supervision of the National Cancer Institute (NCI). It is here that a special virus cancer program is initiated by the U.S. Navy, purportedly to develop cancer-causing viruses. It is also here that retrovirologists isolate a virus to which no immunity exists. It is later named HTLV (Human T-cell Leukemia Virus).

1977: Senate hearings on Health and Scientific Research confirm that 239 populated areas had been contaminated with biological agents between 1949 and 1969. Some of the areas included San Francisco, Washington, D.C., Key West, Panama City, Minneapolis, and St. Louis.

1978: Experimental Hepatitis-B vaccine trials, conducted by the CDC, begin in New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco. Ads for research subjects specifically ask for promiscuous homosexual men.

1981: First cases of AIDS are confirmed in homosexual men in New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco—triggering speculation that AIDS may have been introduced via the Hepatitis-B vaccine.

1985: According to the journal Science (227:173-177), HTLV and VISNA, a fatal sheep virus, are very similar, indicating a close taxonomic and evolutionary relationship.

1986: According to the Proceedings Of The National Academy Of Sciences (83:4007-4011), HIV and VISNA are highly similar and share all structural elements, except for a small segment which is nearly identical to HTLV. This leads to speculation that HTLV and VISNA may have been linked to produce a new retrovirus to which no natural immunity exists.

1986: A report to Congress reveals that the U.S. Government's current generation of biological agents includes: modified viruses, naturally occurring toxins, and agents that are altered through genetic engineering to change immunological character and prevent treatment by all existing vaccines.

1987: Department of Defense admits that, despite a treaty banning research and development of biological agents, it continues to operate research facilities at 127 facilities and universities around the nation.

1990: More than 1500 six-month-old Black and Hispanic babies in Los Angeles are given an "experimental" measles vaccine that had never been licensed for use in the United States. CDC later admits that parents were never informed that the vaccine being injected into their children was experimental.

1994: With a technique called "gene tracking" Dr. Garth Nicolson at the MD Anderson Cancer Center in Houston, TX discovers that many returning Desert Storm veterans are infected with an altered strain of Mycoplasma Incognitus, a microbe commonly used in the production of biological weapons. Incorporated into its molecular structure is 40 percent of the HIV protein coat, indicating that it had been man-made.

1994: Senator John D. Rockefeller issues a report revealing that for at least 50 years the Department of Defense has used hundreds of thousands of military personnel in human experiments and for intentional exposure to dangerous substances. Materials included mustard and nerve gas, ionizing radiation, psychochemicals, hallucinogens, and drugs used during the Gulf War.

1995: U.S. Government admits that it had offered Japanese war criminals and scientists who had performed human medical experiments salaries and immunity from prosecution in exchange for data on biological warfare research.

1995: Dr. Garth Nicolson uncovers evidence that the biological agents used during the Gulf War had been manufactured in Houston, TX and Boca Raton, FL and tested on prisoners in the Texas Department of Corrections.

1996: Department of Defense admits that Desert Storm soldiers were exposed to chemical agents.

1997: Eighty-eight members of Congress sign a letter demanding an investigation into bioweapons use and Gulf War Syndrome.

[Editor's note: And then, at the very least we could add, starting in 1998, the mysterious yet bold and persistent "chemtrails" sprayings over our heads which have sent many people, especially the elderly, to hospital emergency rooms or the morgue. So far nobody, of the likely culprits, is publicly claiming responsibility for this project which, according to the available evidence, seems to have both biological and electromagnetic agendas.]

An Overview Of The Illuminati

Editor's note: There is a great deal of material circulating around concerning the super-secret, elite fraternity known as the "Illuminati" which is closer to being well-engineered disinformation than Truth. But every once in awhile something appears which is worth sharing, which suggests a strong flavor of "insider" credibility.

According to credible and daring research works such as Dr. John Coleman's excellent and very comprehensive volume called CONSPIRATORS' HIERARCHY: The Story Of The Committee Of 300, the group known as the Illuminati are "just" one of the organizations of the wealthy, so-called "elite" families who strive to be in control of this planet through a dizzying array of institutions. And yet the Illuminati are historically perhaps the oldest and most dominant group, something like the "board of directors" of a large, multi-faceted corporation.

The following is excerpted from the paratext@tje.net Internet website and is from a 12-chapter book which claims to have been written by a former Illuminati programmer who titles the work Breaking The Chain: Breaking Free Of Cult Programming. The objective here is not to present that entire outlay, but rather, give a sense of how such super-secret societies can operate right in our midst and yet remain mostly camouflaged from view—unless you know what to look for.

10/20/00 NEWS DESK SPECIAL REPORT

CHAPTER ONE: AN OVERVIEW OF THE ILLUMINATI

By "Svali"

In order to comprehend Illuminati cult programming, it is necessary to first understand something of the structure and philosophy of the organization. The Illuminati are a group of people who follow a philosophy known as "Illuminism" or "Enlightenment".

Although named only several hundred years ago, they trace their historical roots to the early "mystery" religions of Egypt, Babylon, and even Mesopotamia. Out of these ancient religions (which were practiced secretly over many centuries) there arose esoteric groups which maintained the traditions, continued to practice the rites, and reflected the enculturation inherited from the original groups.

Over the centuries, these groups operated openly in some countries, but covertly where their practices were opposed by Christianity or certain other religions. Some of the groups which evolved from these ancient roots were the Order of the Knights Templar, Rosicrucianism, Baphetomism, and Druidic cults. Modern-day Illuminism has developed from these groups; the original Illuministic leaders extracted what they deemed the best practices of each root religion, and combined them into principles which were then organized according to specific guidelines.

Modern day Illuminism is funded by the wealthy, but practiced in all social strata. Having originated from the German branch of Rosicrucianism, expanded into England, then arrived in America with the first settlers, it is a philosophy whose tenets have continued to spread throughout the world.

The Illuminati have three main branches: the Germanic (which oversees the others), the British (which handles finances) and the French/Russian. All three are represented in both the United States and Canada, as well as every other country in the world.

HOW THE ILLUMINATI ARE ORGANIZED IN THE UNITED STATES

The Illuminati have groups in every major city of the United States. They originally entered the U.S. through Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and from there spread across the U.S. There are 18 cities across the U.S. which are considered major "power centers" for Illuminati power and/or influence. These include:

Washington, DC and the surrounding areas; Albany, NY; Pittsburgh, PA; the "golden triangle" of the Winston-Salem/Raleigh/Durham, NC area; Minneapolis, MN; Ann Arbor, MI; Wichita, KS; Phoenix, AZ; Portland, OR; Flagstaff, AZ; Seattle, WA; Houston, TX; Los Angeles, CA and surrounding areas; Atlanta, GA; New Orleans, LA, Springfield, MS. Other cities are important to the Illuminati, as well, but these cities funnel money for them, conduct research, and often regional councils sit within them.

HIERARCHY OF THE ILLUMINATI

The Illuminati have organized their society along extremely hierarchical, or stratified, levels.

The Illuminati have divided the United States into 7 geographical regions. Each region has its own regional council, composed of 13 members, with an advisory board of 3 elders to each one. These regions interact for purposes of finances, personnel, teaching, etc.

Beneath each regional council is a local council. This is a council of 13 members, the head of whom sits on the regional council and gives it information about the local groups underneath his leadership. The local council will also have an advisory council of 3.

A local leadership council in a large metropolitan area might look like this:

- Head of local council (reports to regional council);
- Two intermediaries (report all activities under leader to him);
- Four administrators (oversee finances, administer, set up group activities);
- Six head trainers (over trainers in local groups, teach other trainers).

Underneath the above leadership council will be six people designated as informers or intermediaries, who go to the local group meetings, interact with local group leaders, and report to the leadership council.

The levels below the leadership council are known as the anarchical levels.

Underneath the intermediate level is the local group level. It will look like this:

Local "sister groups" will vary in number, according to the size of the city, or cities, in the area. A large metropolitan area may have anywhere from ten to twenty seven groups.

Each sister group will be headed up by:

A high priest and priestess; this job is rotated every 3 years, to allow different people within the group to take on leadership roles. Each group will also have different members, with specific roles/jobs within the group.

One thing that I would like to emphasize is the fact that the Illuminati today are generational. Its members are born into the group, which is highly organized, as described above. The set-up discussed above is representative, with minor variations, of most major metropolitan regions of the United States. Smaller population centers will be organized under similar guidelines, but will be umbrellaed together with several cities within the region to create the local leadership council.

HOW THE ILLUMINATI MAKE MONEY

The Illuminati are involved in many areas of making money, as they need continued financing to survive. There are several illegal enterprises that they are involved in, as well as legal ones.

Drug running: The Illuminati linked up with the Mafia and the Columbians, years ago, to help each other out with bringing drugs into the United States. They also provide couriers for taking drugs and money out of the States. The Illuminists are generally wealthy businessmen, who have four layers of people underneath them. The fourth layer down actually has contact with the people in the drug industry. They never identify themselves as Illuminists; only as people interested in investing with a guaranteed profit, and are highly secretive. In return, the local groups supply people willing to be couriers of money or drugs, or people willing to help cover for the local operations.

Pornography: The Illuminati are linked in many cities with pornography, prostitution, child prostitution, and White slavery sales. Again, several layers are present, as a buffer, between the true “management” and those either engaged in the activities, or in paying for/funding and eventually being paid for the activities. Children are often supplied from the local cult groups, and taught to be child prostitutes (and later, adult prostitutes); they are photographed and filmed in every type of pornography available, including “snuff films” and violent films.

Gun running: The Illuminati and other groups are also involved in international gun sales and shipments. The Illuminists have well trained couriers who will cross international and state lines. These couriers are highly secretive, and will not reveal their sources, on pain of suicide or assassination. These people are accountable to others above them, with two more “buffer layers” of people above these, before the person in the Illuminati with money, who helps fund this, is found.

Buying access codes for military computers: The Illuminati will have people from all strata of civilian life trained to go and make pickups near or on military bases. A typical person used might be the innocent looking wife of a military person, a local businessman, or even a college student. There is a contact inside the base, also a dissociative Illuminist, who brings the information to the outside contact. Occasionally, the contact person is paid with money, information, or goods. The military computer codes are changed on random schedules; the Illuminati have at least 5 or 6 contacts on each major base, who alert them when the codes are getting ready to change, on pain of death. The Illuminists like having access to military computers, because that will gain them entrance to closed files the world over.

Hiring and selling assassinations: This is done worldwide, more in Europe than in the States. These people are paid big money to do either a private or political assassination. The money is paid either to the assassin, or to the trainer; usually they both divide the fee. The assassin is offered protection in another country for awhile, until the trail runs cold. If the kill is done in Europe, they may be sent to the Far East or the U.S., and vice versa if the kill is done in the U.S. The Illuminati have a wide arena of places and false identities to hide these people, unless for some reason they want the assassin disposed of as well. Then he/she is caught and immediately executed.

Mercenaries/military trainers: Guess who gets paid money to come in and train paramilitary groups? Who has training camps all over the states of Montana, Nevada, and North Dakota? Who occasionally will offer their expertise in return for a large financial reward? They never advertise themselves as Illuminati, unless the group is known to be sympathetic to their cause. Instead, these are tough, cold, brutal military trainers who offer to teach these groups in return for money, or even better, a promise to affiliate with their group in return (loyalty in return for knowledge). More and more paramilitary groups have been brought into the Illuminati this way, without their full knowledge of who and what the group really is. This gives the Illuminists a way to monitor these groups (their trainers report on them and their activities), and it can be useful to have trained military groups that they can call on someday.

Banking: The original Illuminists were bankers, and they have highly trained financiers to organize their money, and funnel the above illicit funds into more “respectable” front groups/organizations. They will also start benevolent charities, community organizations, etc., as fronts, and funnel the money from a broad base into these groups. The Illuminati particularly pride themselves on their money making and manipulation skills, and their ability to cover their paper trails expertly through layer after layer. All banking trails eventually will lead to Belgium, the Illuminati financial center for the world. These are some of the major money making enterprises that the Illuminati are engaged in. They have a lot of financial resources backing their enterprises, which means that in reality they can engage the best lawyers, accountants, etc., to help cover their trail as well.

CHAPTER TWO

JOBS IN THE ILLUMINATI (OR, WHY THEY SPEND ALL THAT TIME TRAINING PEOPLE)

To understand generational programming, it helps to understand WHY the cult goes to the amount of trouble that it does to place programming into people. Training represents time and effort, and no one—especially a cult member—will spend that amount of energy unless there will be a return on the investment. This will be a simple overview of some of the more common jobs in the cult. It is not meant to be exhaustive, or in any way considered to be complete.

The cult has a very organized hierarchy of jobs. Like any large organization, in order to run smoothly, it needs people who are well trained in their jobs—so well trained that they can do their tasks without even thinking about them. To maintain secrecy, this group must also have people completely dedicated to not revealing their roles in the cult—even under threat of death or punishment. The cult wants members who are completely loyal to the group and its tenets, who never question the orders they are given. These qualities in group members ensure the continuance of the cult, and that its secrets are never revealed to the outside world.

The following is a sampling of some jobs in the cult (not listed in order of priority).

Informers: These people are trained to observe details and conversations with photographic recall. They are trained to report to their local cult leader or hierarchy, or trainer, and will download large amounts of information under hypnotic trance. Detailed knowledge of conversations or even documents can often be retrieved in this manner. They are often used as “plants” to gather information in both governmental settings, and within the cult meetings.

Breeders: These people are often chosen from childhood to have and breed children. They may be chosen according to bloodlines, or given in arranged marriages or cult alliances, to “elevate” the children. A parent will often sell the services of a child, as a breeder, to the local cult leader in return for favors or status. These children are rarely used as a sacrifice; usually they are given to others in the cult to adopt or raise, but the breeder is told that any child born to her was “sacrificed” to prevent her looking for the child. Occasionally, in anarchical cults, a local leader or parent will have a child as the result of an incestuous liaison. Such a child is given away or killed, but the mother will be told the child was given away to a distant branch, and must be given up.

Prostitutes: Prostitutes can be a male or female of any age. They are trained from earliest childhood to give sexual favors to one or more adults in return for payment to the child’s parents or their local cult group. Occasionally, the prostitute may be given to a member of the cult on a temporary basis, as a “reward” for a job well done. Child prostitution is a big business for the cult, and training very, very young children in this role is taken very seriously. Child prostitutes are also used to blackmail political figures or leadership outside the cult.

Pornography: A child used in pornography (which may include bestiality) can also be of any age or sex. Child pornography is also big business in the cult, and includes snuff films. Children are trained in this role from preschool on, often with the help or approval of the child's parents. The parents are paid or given favors by the cult in return for selling their child or allowing their child to be trained in this area.

Media personnel: These are very bright, verbal people. They will be sent to journalism school and will work for local or regional media upon graduation. These individuals have many contacts within the organization as well as the outside world. They write books and articles sympathetic to the Illuministic viewpoint without ever revealing their true affiliation. They will tend to do biased research in their articles, favoring only one viewpoint, such as denying the existence of DID or ritual abuse. For instance, they will interview only psychiatrists/psychologists sympathetic to this viewpoint and will skew data to present a convincing picture to the general public. If necessary, they will outright lie or make up data to support their viewpoint. There are members of groups whose people have been purposely trained to try and help formulate public opinion on the nonexistence of the cult (i.e., cults don't exist; no rational person would believe this "mass hysteria"). The Illuminists believe that to control the media is to control the thinking of the masses. For this reason, they take training media personnel quite seriously.

Helpers at rituals: Cleaners clean up meticulously after rituals. They will scour the site after a ceremony, rake the area, etc. They are taught this job from preschool years on. Preparers set up tables, cloths, candles, and paraphernalia quickly and efficiently. This job is learned from infancy on.

Readers read from the Book of Illumination or local group archives; they also keep copies of sacred literature in a safe vault and are trained in ancient languages. Readers are valued for their clear speaking voices and ability to dramatize important passages and bring them to life.

Cutters are taught to dissect animal or human sacrifices (they are also known as the "slicers and dicers" of the cult). They can do a kill quickly, emotionlessly, and efficiently. They are trained from early childhood on.

Chanters sing, sway, or lead choruses of sacred songs on high holy occasions.

High priest/priestess: The person who holds this job is changed every few years in most groups, although it may be held longer in smaller, more rural groups. These people administrate and lead their local cult group as well as coordinate jobs within the cult, give assignments, and pass on meeting dates given from the local hierarchy or leadership council. They also will activate the local group's telephone tree, evaluate their local group members for job performance, and lead in all spiritual activities. They report to the local or regional leadership council over their group.

Trainers: These people teach local group members their assigned jobs and monitor the performance of these jobs at local group meetings or after an assigned task. These people report to the high priest/priestess over their group, as well as to the local head trainer on leadership council.

Punishers: These are the people who brutally punish/discipline members caught breaking rules or acting outside of or above their authority. They are universally despised by other cult members, although they will be praised for a job well done by the local high priest or priestess. Usually physically strong, they will employ any method deemed necessary to prevent a recurrence of the undesired behavior. Punishment may be public or private, depending upon the severity of the infraction. Each local group has several punishers.

Trackers: These people will track down and keep an eye on members who attempt to leave their local group. They are taught to use dogs, guns, taser, and all necessary tracking techniques. They are also adept at using the Internet to monitor a person's activities. They will track credit card use, checks written, and employ other methods to find a missing person.

Teachers: These people teach group classes to children to indoctrinate cult philosophy, languages, and specialized areas of endeavor.

Child care: These people care for very young children when the adults are at local group meetings. Usually care is for young infants only. After age two, children are routinely engaged in some form of group activity led by trainers of the youngest children.

Infant child-care workers are usually quiet and coldly efficient.

Couriers: These members run guns, money, drugs, or illegal artifacts across state or national lines. Usually they are people who are young and single without outside accountability. They are trained in the use of firearms to get out of difficult situations. They must be reliable and able to get past any anticipated barriers.

Commanding officers: These people oversee military training in the local groups and help ensure the smooth running of these exercises. They will delegate jobs to those ranking under them and are responsible to the local leadership council. The council will have at least one member on it representing the military branch of the Illuminati. In addition, there are many military-related jobs beneath the commanding officers.

Behavioral scientists: These individuals often oversee the training in local and regional groups. These students of human behavior are intensely involved in data collection and human experimentation in the name of the pursuit of knowledge of human behavior in the scientific realm. They are almost universally cold, methodical, impersonal people and will employ any methods to study trauma and its effects on the human personality. Their main interest centers around implementing programming and cult control in the most efficient and lasting manner.

There are many other jobs inside the cult. The cult spends quite a bit of its time getting people to do these jobs for them for FREE, which is why they PROGRAM people to believe they are doing their "family" and the world a service. The reality, of course, is that the individual is being abused and taken advantage of by the cult.

Be Thankful For Your Planet's Great Gift Of Compassion

11/3/00 HATONN

Good afternoon, my scribe. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Radiant Light of The One Light, Creator Source. Be still, my friend, for there are ones who wish to stop this communication cycle. Persist and know that We of the Higher Lighted Realms can neutralize the psychic and electronic attacks. Always keep The Light about you, and ask for Assistance whenever the thought crosses your mind to do so.

Great chains of events are currently unfolding which will impact the lives of all ones on your planet. These events are orchestrated so that the twisted "dreams" of a few will be realized, while literally enslaving the rest of those who remain in the physical.

These events will NOT come off as the would-be slavemasters intend. As with all such ill-gotten plans, they lack balance, and thus cause great inner emotional stirrings in the ones they intend to victimize. This emotional energy often results in a great resurgence of inner connection to Source, and thus summons forth great Unseen Forces that will literally dissolve the illusion perpetuated by these ones who have sold their souls for the IDEA of power—never once realizing that they themselves are being used, let alone set up for great karmic strife.

Many of you ones, including my scribe, wish to have more specific details as to what is planned. Dear ones, look around you and ask yourselves: "Can this world continue going down its current path without 'something' breaking?"

The economic markets around the world are quite fragile. Your population growth has hardly begun to slow, despite the many attempts to unleash massive plagues, such as AIDS, or sterilization efforts through inoculation and such.

These things do not work because the Will of man is greater than any man-made device of mass destruction. When the Will of man is clearly focused and centered around Creator God, many "miracles" can and are manifested within the physical realm.

For example, this means that for every man-made plague there will also always be generated (through Inspiration) many possible ways to counter such assaults. Put generally, in response to any such emotionally charged challenges, there will ALWAYS be ones who are Inspired to take actions which will lead to the discovery of a balancing solution.

God works on ALL levels of science, as well as religious philosophy. There are many ones on your planet who have come to balance their "karmic scales" by applying their unique gifts toward the goal of breaking the cycles of destruction that your planetary mass consciousness seems to fall for, time and time again.

Great strides are being made at all levels of "conventional" science that are causing great concerns for those who wish to keep certain technologies out of the "public" sector. Why would those who control your governments of the world wish to keep secret the many discoveries of ones such as Nikola Tesla, who came forth to give your world energy sources that would not disrupt the natural ecological balance of your planet? (Fossil fuels not only pollute the air and water supplies, but they are disrupting the natural electrolytic functioning of your planetary orb when you deplete them. Think of these oil deposits as part of an electrolytic capacitor, and you may find insight concerning the natural reason they exist in the first place.)

Your general understanding of your planetary physiology is quite unsophisticated, and though many of you take for granted the orb upon which you live, she is quite alive and has a consciousness. Her will is similar to your own, and she wishes to be healthy and in a state of balance. Her calls are NOT being ignored!

Due to the severe abuse of your planet, there will come a time when the mass majority will need to be relocated to other "school rooms" while she is given opportunity and time to heal. There will always be caretakers assigned—both physical and non-physical—who will put forth great healing energies toward your planet, as they nurse her back to a balanced state of health.

Her challenges are great and she knows that she is providing a service (environment) to you ones so that you may have the opportunity to learn and grow, but this does not mean she will necessarily go the way of Maldek (the remnants of which is the asteroid belt between Mars and Jupiter).

At present there is little solace being offered to her from the burden she carries. However, great energies are being sent to her and, though the constant attacks are relentless, she is being stabilized to a great extent with the help of many a Lightworker from the Inter-Galactic Federation Of Sovereign Planets. We have many ones stationed in craft, all about your planet, supplying assistance to her. These efforts are designed to relieve the pressures slowly, so as to allow for less destructive shifts in your planet's crustal plates and waters.

Why is this being done? Because your planetary orb has asked that it be this way, for she realizes the general state of ignorance of your species. She has great compassion as a being who wishes to see you each have the greatest opportunity possible to wake up and move out of your various states of ignorance—and back into a state of balance, a state of en-Light-ened awareness of ALL life, and an appreciation for the interconnectedness we ALL share.

Does this mean that the massive "Earth Changes" have been averted? No. It means they have been delayed and, to some degree, lessened in severity in probability space, according to our probability models.

There are a great number of variables which affect the stability of your planet. Not the least of these are the artificial stresses caused by man's tinkering with the etheric forces (through scalar technology) that modify the "bio-rhythms" of your planet—something like the effects of an artificial pacemaker implanted into someone's heart. These energies, if better understood, COULD be used to help stabilize your planet. But this idea is hardly a concern of those who control and otherwise dictate the application of such technologies.

Be thankful for the stable time you now have, for it is truly a byproduct of a magnificent being's compassion for Life. As your Native American brothers and sisters have long taught, take time to thank Mother Earth for her gift of this exquisite learning environment.

Many are asking such questions as: "When will the Earth Changes come?" and "When will the great economic collapses happen?" and "When will the extraterrestrials make their presence known?" and "How much longer will this 'dancing on the edge' continue?"

To these questions, and ones like them, I will only say that IT WILL NEVER BE THE WAY YOU ONES THINK IT WILL BE.

Many of you ones want prophecy so that you can sit back and wait and do nothing, or so that you can know how much time you have left to “play in the sandbox” before you have to take seriously the suggestions long offered through such as these messages. These “wrong reasons for asking”—coupled with the fact that there are a great number of variables (both physical and non-physical) affecting the actual physical manifestation of such changes so that the exact timing of such events is constantly shifting—make such prophecy nearly impossible. One missed communication, one “hunch” NOT acted upon, can dramatically shift the playing field in terms of which sequence of events is next appropriate.

We of the Lighted Realms are in no hurry for any sort of cataclysmic event, for it would only shorten the opportunities available to you ones. Thus we tend to focus our energies toward balancing out any given circumstances so as to allow for the greatest possible growth and awakening among your general population.

Does it make any real difference which candidate gets elected for the office of President of the United States? No, not really. The candidate has, long ago, been selected, and the presidential race is simply being used as a means of distracting those of the older generations who still think that there is some sort of meaning in participating in such political happenings. The younger generations have not, for the most part, been educated in the basic functioning of the government—let alone the Constitution—and therefore they can’t make heads or tails out of the whole mess, and thus tend to look at such as presidential elections as nothing more than a popularity contest—not unlike voting for the next Miss America.

Be not in despair over anything that happens, for even the seemingly worst of events will have a positive “backlash” for those who can remember to stay centered and keep Creator Source (God) within their daily plans for life and living. With all great “tragedy” that befalls large numbers of a populace, there comes a resurgence of basic fundamental principles of living. This means ideas such as “ALL ones are important” and “TOGETHER survival of any situation IS POSSIBLE” become the basic philosophical building blocks from which balance and stability can be regained.

Those who refuse to carry their fair share of the “load” simply will not “eat” (partake of the rewards of another’s work). This means that those who are used to being waited upon by servants and such will have to either learn to contribute or they will be left to find another parasitic host to “infect”.

You each have great gifts to share with your world. Some of you have taken great strides toward recognizing and strengthening your gifts and have cultivated great inner personal rewards as a result. Others of you have become so distracted with the whole physical game that you have difficulty seeing what gifts you have to offer and tend to “drift” from one idea to the next, always searching to find your “purpose”.

To you who feel the latter applies to you, I offer the following suggestion: Get still, call upon the Light of Creator Source (the One who created you), and ask for Assistance. Ask for clues that will help you to see your strengths. Ask for events to unfold in your life that will help you to use and strengthen your gifts, as well as develop those areas which you need to stretch in understanding.

There is not one upon your world who is without room to grow in several areas of understanding. Be thankful for the opportunities you now have, and be persistent in pursuing those avenues wherein INNER satisfaction results. Greatness is not determined by how many zeros you have in a bank account, or by any other external physical parameter. True greatness comes when YOU, as an individual, can recognize and see and appreciate Creator God in all ones and in all things. This higher perceptual level of awareness, when truly understood and felt, will spark within you great surges of Energy which will enable you to tap an Inner Strength that will literally allow you to walk through fire—if that be the obstacle between you and your chosen destination of achievement!

To TRULY love a person or thing means to be able to match frequency with it and resonate in harmony with same. In essence you become one with the object, through Creator God, and it can have no negative effect upon you.

Think long and hard upon the words of a great Teacher: “I and my Father (Creator God) are One.” Within this statement comes great insight into recognizing who you are and from where you come—and the key to unlocking the “mysteries” of the universe and MUCH, MUCH more.

Let us leave this here, for there are great pressures upon the one who sits and pens this message. Take not these opportunities to share for granted, for they are indeed precious.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, and I leave you in the Lighted Radiance of The One Light, Creator of All That IS. May your journey never be without a good challenge, and may you find and exploit that which brings you inner balance and peace.

Much Love and Light to you ALL!

Salu. ☺

How To Help Us!

Many of you concerned subscribers have been asking us how you can help The SPECTRUM to stay alive. Here are some suggestions:

- Subscribe for your local library (wide exposure)
- Subscribe for your local college library
- Subscribe for your local prison library
- Subscribe for a friend, family member, or loved one
- Tell a friend
- Give Christmas gifts of subscriptions to The SPECTRUM
- Donate to The SPECTRUM (monthly) on your credit card

For example: If all SPECTRUM subscribers could donate $25/month, we would have our basic operating expenses covered.

The angels say that the word angel begins with a, which stands for “ask”. It ends with l, which stands for “listen”. “If you’ll remember to ask and then listen,” the angels say, “everything in between will begin to gel.” Let’s all ask together:

Dear God and the angels,

Please help us to keep our thoughts centered on peace and love. Please remind us when our minds wander from the path. Help us to know that we truly create our reality each moment, and guide us in making the best choices in our thoughts and deeds. We ask for and accept additional angels in our lives. Please help us to know and feel Your love, so that we may experience and teach the peace that is Your will for us. Amen.

— from the book Divine Prescriptions: Using Your Sixth Sense. Spiritual Solutions For You And Your Loved Ones, by Doreen Virtue, Ph.D.

Doreen Virtue is out of the closet. That’s right. Gone are the days of the quiet whisper: “Do YOU believe in angels?” She openly talks about angels with EVERYBODY—the man on the street, the housewife, the cop, the doctor, the lawyer, even the clergy.

It’s a bit like the old story about do you light a lamp and hide it under the basket, or put it high on the hill for all to see. And what does she find? Most people DO believe in angels—and not only believe in them, but

Reflections At This Time Of The Holiday Season

All hustle and bustle and jingle bells aside, in the spirit of its best intentions, the Holiday Season is a reminder of Possibilities, of Miracles, and especially of the Joys of Giving. The fact that you are reading this issue of The SPECTRUM is one such miracle-of-giving of this Season, and for that we are very thankful.

We are thankful to those of you who have seen fit to share your generosity with us. We are astonished by the level of sacrifice some of you have made in order to help out our tedious financial bind. We are deeply honored by the ever-encouraging notes of good cheer which have accompanied your monetary gifts—notes written from the heart and sometimes OVERWHELMINGLY expressive of your strong support for what we are all about.

You think maybe I'm exaggerating a bit when I say some of your notes are overwhelming? Well, consider this: it can even become "embarrassing" to open your notes in a public place! Our business manager, Gail Cortright, says she's often ready to burst out in tears—right there in the line at the Post Office—if she picks up the mail first and makes the "mistake" of opening some of your wonderful notes while in the line attending to other postal business.

We also chuckle (along with you) in response to some of your other laughter-is-the-best-medicine kinds of comments. For example, you're quick to point out how the "good people" just don't generally seem to have much money, while the "bad people" seem to always have and hoard plenty—and wouldn't it be nice if the opposite could prevail more often. Of course, the Big Test we all face on this schoolroom planet is what we do with what we HAVE, not what we'd LIKE to have!

Meanwhile, there are a few noisy ones heavily under dark influence who have been quick to gloat that we (The SPECTRUM) must be doing something "wrong" or we'd be rolling in money. Oh? The miracle is the fact that we're alive at all! Moreover, again, on a darkened planet so materially focused, it is not the Mother Teresas, but the Rockefellers, who have the extra money. And such intrinsically "me first" entities (invariably backed by the cautions of their lawyers and accountants and other low-frequency advisors) are hardly of a mindset to support an enterprise of Awakening Mankind To Truth, which would surely put the material ones in an uncomfortable—and maybe even profoundly unfavorable—Light!

President William Jefferson (Rockefeller) Clinton, in his weekly radio address the Saturday after Thanksgiving, mentioned a new report which was just released stating that philanthropic giving was at an all-time high this past year. But, now, here's the REAL meat of the matter—added almost as an afterthought, and worded as diplomatically as possible: "The wealthiest gave a smaller percentage of their income than did those of more moderate or modest means."

Exactly my point. Indeed, it is largely the people of "modest means" who are the dear ones efforting to keep us—and apparently a lot of other organizations—afloat.

I can't help but remember a brief but VERY important point made near the end of Rick Martin's front-page story on the Montauk Project and time travel (October 2000 issue of The SPECTRUM), during his first-person interview with Michael Ash. Michael said the crooks in high places were—get this—MOST afraid, NOT of the other crooks in high places who ALL want to be THE "king of the hill", but of the "little people" who, say, clean the toilets in the buildings wherefrom these so-called elite power brokers control world affairs.

Why? Because the crooks KNOW the Unlimited LIGHTED Potential available to any of the decent, honest, uncomplicated, hard-working people should they desire to put their mind to something creative. This gets into several of the spiritual messages herein—about the power of TRUE, selfless Giving, and the amplifying Universal Law which governs the effects whenever such Energy currents are put into motion. It is God's will—and no less!

And speaking of giving, let me report that, in terms of the numbers for this month, the situation is the same as last month. That is, about 50% of our minimal operating expenses were met from the wonderful generosity of you readers and supporters. The other 50% was again covered through a loan from America East Publishers (who produce the WISDOM OF THE RAYS: The Masters Teach volumes of spiritual messages). However, now America East is completely out of resources and unable to help us further. Yet, Dr. Pierre Cloutier of America East still firmly maintains that the survival of The SPECTRUM is a prerequisite to collecting together and publishing the unique spiritual messages which are always first presented to you who read this publication.

As I said at the start, the Holiday Season is, at its best, a reminder of Possibilities, of Miracles, and especially of the Joys of Giving. We cannot find the words which seem at all adequate to the job of conveying our deep appreciation for all you (and YOU know who YOU are) have done, are doing, and will yet do to help keep alive this unique conduit for The Great Awakening Of Planet Earth.

The Holiday Season can also be a reminder of who your friends REALLY are. We sure know who YOU are, and we're deeply thankful for your friendship. Bless you. And let's all move forward in Light as the New Year dawns.

WATCH-OUT AMERICA: MILITARY TO BECOME POLICE

From The SPOTLIGHT, via M.O.M., <nox2128@blackfoot.net>, 9/25/00: [quoting] (Exclusive to The SPOTLIGHT, by Mike Blair.)

Military Trained For Police Ops

A retired colonel charges that the U.S. military's elite units are being trained in civilian areas in America to take over the role of domestic police.

A high-ranking retired Special Operations Command officer told The SPOTLIGHT that elite military units have been undertaking urban warfare maneuvers in cities and towns across the United States in preparation for assuming the duties of U.S. law enforcement. The retired colonel confirmed for the first time that the mysterious training engaged in by U.S. Army Special Forces and Delta Force, Navy Seals, Marines Force Recon, and U.S. Air Force Air Commandos is intended for domestic operations.

Use of U.S. troops to enforce civilian law is a gross violation of the Posse Comitatus Act, legislation passed during the Rutherford B. Hayes administration prohibiting the U.S. military from engaging in domestic law enforcement, and the Constitution. The officer, a retired colonel, told The SPOTLIGHT that the Pentagon has been purposely misleading the public by explaining that these exercises are urban warfare training to prepare American elite troops for missions in foreign lands, such as hostage rescue operations at a besieged U.S. embassy or other U.S. interest centers. The colonel said, however, the fact is the troops are primarily training for police-type activities, particularly in the United States.

Two units have been heavily involved in the training: the Army's Delta Force and the Night Stalkers, the latter group being a unit of highly-trained helicopter pilots, who ferry the Delta Force troopers into action and have been responsible for flying low, at almost tree-top or roof-top level, over civilian areas.

The colonel, who spoke with The SPOTLIGHT on the condition of anonymity, has been supported in his revelations by disclosures to the Internet website, World Net Daily, by former Night Stalker, Captain Jeff Norgrove

"These aren't really military exercises" Norgrove said. "They are SWAT training. The Army will never admit that to you, but that's what it is."

Last year, Delta Force and the Night Stalkers were involved in a controversial exercise in Kingsville, Texas, where the SWAT (Special Weapons and Tactics) troops used live ammunition and explosives to conduct their training. Special Operations Command officials at Fort Bragg, NC, insist that only "training ammunition" was used during the exercise in Kingsville and other American communities.

A number of retired military officers have come forward to insist that Army claims of the use of only "training ammunition" are untrue. "They really think we're so stupid that we can't figure this out" Norgrove said.

Most of the Night Stalkers and the Delta Force troops, according to Norgrove and the retired colonel, are young and not fully aware of what is going on. "They just do what they are told" Norgrove explained. "It's exciting and the pay is very good."

The colonel told The SPOTLIGHT that the young Delta Force soldiers and Night Stalkers involved in the activities are heavily indoctrinated. "They would not have any hesitation to shoot at their fellow Americans if they were ordered to do so and felt that it was the right thing to do under a given circumstance" the colonel said. "They are part of what the military refers to as 'the warrior class' and if they are asked to take out the enemy, that could mean, to them, under the right circumstances, either foreigners or their own countrymen" the former Special Operations officer explained.

While the FAA regulations require aircraft to fly well above the tops of houses and buildings, the Night Stalkers are criss-crossing American cities and towns at extremely low levels, many contend, endangering the civilian population. In Kingsville, as an example, a helicopter struck the top of a telephone pole, causing a fire near a home.

The Delta Force and Night Stalkers do not even wear standard military uniforms. Instead, just like any SWAT team, they are garbed in black uniforms, complete with black helmets and face shields. They also wear bulletproof body armor and are usually discharged from the Night Stalkers helicopters wielding German-made Heckler and Koch 9-mm machine guns.

The maneuvers are always conducted at night. The helicopters are painted dark, with a special paint that has a sandpaper texture, appears black, and enables the aircraft to avoid radar. They are flown without lights by Night Stalker pilots utilizing night-vision goggles. The helicopters bear no markings that can be seen in the darkness. The special paint is obviously responsible for stories about and sightings of "black helicopters", which have long been pooh-poohed by the Pentagon as the hallucinations of "right-wing nuts".

You don't suppose the above exercises could be at all connected with (in anticipation of) the engineered presidential election brawl that has been our nation's main focus of attention for weeks now? MORE ON CHEMTRAILS

From the INTERNET, 10/29/00: [quoting]

I've seen elements of the information below before. It is VERY likely that this information is CORRECT.

Information on Discovery Channel and Art Bell Show CONFIRM that Rockefeller had a corpse dug out of glacial ice to extract and grow SPANISH FLU VIRUS from his lung tissue. Story was later circulated that it had somehow gotten stolen from the lab. Yeah, sure. Rockefeller is big into the U.N. population REDUCTION scheme. The only way we can fight this is to get this information CIRCULATED!

I've tried to show you how important it's become for these monstrous fiends to give us FLU SHOTS.

This all makes sense. WE HAVE TO STOP PEOPLE FROM WANTING TO TAKE THESE SHOTS!

Chemtrails

So, you haven't yet figured out the airborne conditioning-agent release program that is being operated by the government? I'll give you some hints, but first I'll give you a little information about myself. I'm a retired government scientist with an advanced degree in one of the health-related disciplines. I do not use my real name for fear of retaliation, either against me, or against members of my family. I always try to route my e-mail communications so that they appear to come from another source, usually from one somewhere within the government. Sometimes I use the Internet resources of the public library—whatever it takes to hide my true identity and confuse those who don't want the sort of information I possess to fall into the public's hands.

I have a small circle of friends who are, or were, in key positions within our military and several government agencies. These are not the very top-level personnel, but mid- to upper-mid-level people, scientists and analysts, who are in positions where they can see the day-to-day activities of what's going on, who are charged with implementing the details, but who are never quite privy to the schemes behind the work they do.

Each of my contacts has been able to supply me with a portion of the puzzle, but separately, none of them understands the whole story. I'll tell you what I've pieced together so far. But I have to admit that this information frightens me because there is no place I can go with it. What am I supposed to do—write my congressman? I believe that would be like signing my own death warrant.

This whole chemtrail issue is related to the plan for decreasing the world population to around 450-500 million—and starting with the US first. Why? The people of the US are the only ones with even the remotest chance of stopping this. That is, if they knew about it. That's why the US has to be the first to go. You have to understand that the world's elite covet the US for its geographic diversity—and they would love to return this country to its condition as it existed prior to Columbus setting foot here, but without the Native Americans this time, of course.

You may have already heard how several [quite a few, actually] national parks have been designated as world biospheres—that's the plan for all of North America, a giant Nature park and playground that will be devoid of annoying human beings (that would be us). And the people actually involved in doing the spraying, as well as those who will take part in the rest of the plans, are being duped into believing they will be spared, that is, permitted to live and remain on this continent as administrators and caretakers of this vast Nature preserve.

I understand that about 150 to 200 thousand people are projected as necessary for maintenance purposes. But it's likely these people will not be Americans. Those in charge wouldn't want to risk the possibility of some sort of revolt, so the workers will probably be brought in from Europe and Asia.

There are rumors floating about the Internet that the chemtrails are part of some sort of secret program the government is doing to protect the US from future biological attacks. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The plan is to sensitize, or condition, the US population to being wiped out by influenza A. Over the past few years, people have been encouraged to get flu shots to protect them against the generally non-lethal strains that circulate through the population during flu season.

Each year the US government has guessed which strains were most likely to spread. They seem to always guess right—don't they? This flu season, the government protected people with a trivalent vaccine that included the A/

Beijing/262/95-like (H1N1) and the A/Sydney/5/97-like (H3N2). It also contained the B/Beijing/184/93-like hemagglutinin antigens. For those not familiar with virology, the H and N refer to proteins on the outside of the virus, the hemagglutinin and neuraminidase, which are responsible for the virus attaching to, and then invading, a host cell. The public has been quite pleased with the success of the vaccines offered so far.

But that will change in the future.

Researchers at the US Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases (or USAMRIID) at Fort Detrick in Frederick MD have reconstructed and modified the H1N1 Spanish Flu virus, making it far more deadly than it ever was back when it was responsible for the 1918-1919 flu pandemic that killed over 20 million worldwide and over 500,000 here in the US. Consider that it could have killed many more, but back then, people couldn't hop on a jet and travel from New York to L.A. in five hours. Now, our ability to travel will increase the spread and will be our downfall.

The flu vaccines contain killed virus and protect the body well against challenge by that particular strain, but work poorly against other strains not included in the inoculation. At some point, the vaccine stockpile will include the more lethal modification of the 1918 H1N1 in its live form. Most people receiving this vaccine will simply be renewing their annual flu shot, and the vaccine will still include the inactivated version of the more benign form of H1N1 (as was included in this year's vaccine). The presence of the milder strain in the inoculum will slow down the progression of the more lethal H1N1 form, so people will become sick more slowly—but they will still eventually die. It will just take a few weeks longer.

In the meantime, they will be carriers for the lethal form of the virus, passing it on to everyone with whom they make contact. And as people hear that others are dropping dead from the flu, they will flock to get their own vaccination. And the entire population will be more receptive to infection because their lungs will have been pre-conditioned to guarantee it.

If you will remember back to 1968 and '69, the Hong Kong flu, which was influenza A type H3N2, killed over 30,000 people in the US alone. That was a fortuitous learning event for some because it taught them that the flu could still conceivably be used to wipe out a population. But at the same time, it pointed out the need to precondition the populace so that those who might normally be resistant could be rendered susceptible. Hence the development of the vaccine program and the aerial spraying procedures to condition the population.

The purpose of the chemicals in the chemtrails is to help the viral envelope fuse with lung cells, permitting easier penetration and infection.

But what about those few individuals who don't succumb to the flu? Probability alone demands that there will be some who survive—pockets of the population that are either not reached or somehow (and this is less likely) are resistant to the lethal H1N1 strain. At this point you must also remember that our military personnel have been immunized against a variety of pathogens, including the anthrax bacillus.

For those geographically isolated areas where the flu doesn't do its job, it's a fairly simple matter to lay down anthrax spores and then send in what's left of the military to take care of anyone still breathing. The anthrax spraying will probably come under the guise of a flu protection program to save those still alive after the epidemic. And the military, having been exposed to civilians with the flu, will eagerly await their own flu shots. I should emphasize that this is a last resort scenario. Those orchestrating the plan will not want to use anthrax until all other possibilities are exhausted—this because of the long-term viability of anthrax spores. To scatter them over the countryside would mean the area would be dangerous for use by humans, at least those not vaccinated against the bacteria.

And think about this for a moment: Why do you suppose agencies like Fish and Wildlife are so eager to reintroduce wolves and other species into areas of the country which haven't seen these animals for generations? It's all part of the plan to restore this land to what the elite envision as its early paradise-like state, with wild animals freely roaming the uninhabited plains and forests. Granted, it will take some time to clean up the place and to maybe destroy a lot of small towns that might otherwise be considered a blight on the landscape. But, for the global elite, it will be a small price for us to pay for their enjoyment.

[End quoting]

Of course there is no way to confirm the above information. However, IF this writer has some of the pieces of a bigger scenario, due to a confidential government employment position, then his conscience would likely motivate him to share this information as he has done. Wide publicity is the most effective way to cause an alteration in the plans. Also, be sure and read the eye-opening vaccination items further along in this News Desk. You KNOW the push for vaccinations is more sinister than "merely" the profit margins of the pharmaceutical companies.

DOING AWAY WITH THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE IS RUSE TO REPLACE CONSTITUTION

Excerpted from RUMOR MILL NEWS (RUMILLS), <<http://www.rumormillnews.com>>, 11/8/00: [quoting]

Senator Wants To Do Away With Electoral College

I may not know as much as the rest of you. But if the Electoral College was established by the 12th Amendment, doesn't this mean that a Constitutional Congress will have to be convened?

And if a Constitutional Congress is convened to do away with the 12th Amendment, do you really think we will have a Constitution left after the Constitutional Congress adjourns?

No, I think the bid to do away with the 12th Amendment is just a ruse to get rid of our Constitution.

[End quoting]

For a long time the crooks in high places have been efforting to create some "situation" wherein the U.S. Constitution could be "adjusted" more to their liking without awakening or alarming the majority of the public to the REAL agenda being carried out. Every time, recently, that this proposal comes up on the evening news to do away with the Electoral College via tinkering with the Constitution, because of an obviously contrived presidential election brawl, one can easily become more and more suspicious.

WATER FLUORIDE TESTS KILL 80% OF RATS BEFORE STUDY FINISHED!

US EPA CONCEALS STUDY RESULTS FROM PUBLIC

By George Glasser
<gtigerclaw@worldnet.att.net>

Couched in an obscure paragraph of a twenty-two page response to the House Committee on Science, Charles Fox, US EPA spokesman wrote:

"In 1999, EPA convened a group of experts to carefully consider the results of the Varner et al. (1998) study. As a result of that conference, EPA has requested that the National Toxicology Program consider the possibility of conducting additional studies of the neurotoxicity of aluminum that include verification of the results observed in the two previous Varner et al. studies."

The initial Varner et al. study was done to see if alum (aluminum sulfate) added to drinking water as a clarifier [makes the water appear clean] would combine with fluoride and penetrate the blood-brain barrier. The results were startling. 80% of the animals in the low-dose range died before the experiment was completed. The dose of fluoride and alum fed to the animals in drinking water was similar to that in artificially fluoridated drinking water. The same results were confirmed in two subsequent studies.

The animals given both aluminum fluoride and sodium fluoride in low doses suffered from significant kidney and brain damage.

The Varner team stated that: "Striking parallels were seen between aluminum-induced alterations" in cerebral blood vessels that are associated with Alzheimer's disease and other forms of presenile dementia. They concluded that the alterations of the blood vessels may be a primary event triggering neuro-degenerative diseases.

Astounded by their results, the researchers also noted in the study: "Not only did the rats in the lowest-dose groups die more often during the experiment, they looked poorly well before their deaths. Even the rats in the lowest-dose group that managed to survive the 45 weeks looked to be in poor health."

The Varner et al. study was a replication of the disturbing results of two previous studies conducted by the same team. Despite these alarming findings, it may take two to three years for the National Toxicology Program to act upon the US EPA request for further research.

This research, as hushed as it was kept, should awaken us to what water fluoridation is all about, if nothing else did. Though the above experimental results are quite a bit more dramatic than other studies and professional opinions opposing fluoridation, there has long been stated a link between the agenda to fluoridate drinking water and the goal of people control through mind control, since a docile mind is an easily controlled mind.

VICTORIOUS!

The SPOTLIGHT readers acted quickly to save us from police-state legislation.

Responding quickly to an Emergency Liberty Letter published in The SPOTLIGHT Oct. 30, readers flooded the House of Representatives with phone calls and e-mails and played a major part in stopping passage of police-state legislation lurking in the budget battles.

The Fugitive Apprehension Act (S. 2516) had already sailed through the Senate and would have empowered the attorney general to issue subpoenas without a court order as required by the Fourth Amendment.

Under the defeated legislation, the attorney general could act on a tip ("information") to send federal lawmen into your home or office and seize your personal files, papers, and computer.

They would have been empowered, without

Carl Thorsen, counsel to the House Judiciary Committee's crime panel, told The SPOTLIGHT that the bill was going to "sit" (die) because congressmen received phone calls and e-mails from constituents concerned about Fourth Amendment rights.

The bill will probably be introduced again in the new Congress to be seated in January, Thorsen said, where the whole legislative process would have to begin anew.

FBI MENTORS REACH OUT TO YOUNGSTERS IN VALLEY

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 11/9/00: [quoting]

With their right hands raised, 64 children at Pacoima Middle School took an oath Wednesday to obey laws and do their best in school.

And then the children in grades six through eight were sworn in as "Junior Special Agents", as part of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's community outreach effort.

"It's cool and fun and interesting" said eighth-grader Nancy Padilla, 13. "I wish to be an FBI agent or maybe in the CIA. If I can't do that, I'll major in forensic science."

This is the first such program in the San Fernando Valley.

The program, which started two weeks ago, calls for 10 FBI community outreach specialists in the classroom for an hour every two weeks to discuss the importance of staying in school, and the perils of gangs and drugs.

In addition to the mentoring, students are required to complete written assignments that test their memory and awareness skills, and general knowledge of law enforcement issues.

If the kids finish the class successfully, at the end of their school year they will receive Junior Special Agent badges and credentials.

Nancy, the daughter of a factory worker and hospital technician, said the program has inspired her to one day work in law enforcement.

The FBI developed the program 10 years ago in Washington, DC, as a way to help at-risk students become good citizens. Currently, the FBI operates its program at about 80 schools across the nation. Along with Pacoima, authorities have a program in place in Compton. In the coming years, authorities hope to reach out to schools in Watts, Orange County, and the San Gabriel Valley.

"I think it's very important that the kids know there's an outside world" said Pacoima Middle School Assistant Principal Aaron G. Moretzsky. "The importance of contact with the 'real world' is an important ingredient in a child's education." [End quoting]

Well, what better way to filter potential candidates for the FBI (and other agencies) than through such a cover as this scheme? Why wait till they're college age for recruitment? Plant the seeds now, while they're quite young and impressionable.

One of the most important things the CIA does to any new recruit is to run them through a number of levels of mind-control—depending upon what their assignments will be. I'm quite certain the FBI is no different. Once they have been mind-controlled, they no longer can be considered to know what they are really doing—shades of Lee Harvey Oswald, Columbine school children killers, and hundreds of others who commit the assassinations and other dastardly deeds for the crooks in high places.

ON VACCINES AND RELATED MATTERS, IS HILLARY "FOR THE CHILDREN"?

From the INTERNET, <AABCC@egroups.com>, 11/16/00: [quoting]

By Phyllis Schlafly

That great national authority on health care and on children, Hillary Rodham Clinton, owes it to her public to give her opinion on two current controversies in New York State. Does she support government-mandated medical treatment of children over the objections of their parents?

In Utica, NY, parents of 77 middle schoolers were warned in October that their children will be taken and turned over to Child Protective Services for neglect unless they are vaccinated against Hepatitis B within two weeks. Yet, there is no emergency, no epidemic of Hepatitis B against which children need to be protected, and no evidence that Hepatitis B is being transmitted at school.

The "emergency" is that the school district will lose a substantial amount of state funding if students do not comply with the vaccine mandate. So school district physician Dr. Mark

Zongrone, giving his financial (not medical) diagnosis, says "We refuse to let that happen."

How did we get to a circumstance in America where a school, for its own financial self-interest, imposes medical treatment on children in opposition to their parents' wishes? Is this America or Nazi Germany?

Hepatitis B is primarily an adult disease spread by multiple sex partners, drug abusers, and those in occupations where they are exposed to blood. Unless the child is born to an infected mother, children under the age of 14 are three times more likely to die or suffer adverse reactions from the Hepatitis B vaccine than to catch the disease itself.

Down the highway in Albany, in September, a family court judge ordered the controversial drug Ritalin to be given to a seven-year-old diagnosed as having ADHD (Attention Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder).

The parents, who had tried Ritalin but wanted to stop it because of adverse effects, were visited by the Albany County Child Protective Services, served with a petition to appear in court, and intimidated into compliance by what was described as "at least the theoretical threat of having their child removed from their custody".

Public schools are increasingly accusing parents of neglect when they refuse to drug their children with Ritalin, and some are fighting back. Two major class-action lawsuits have been filed against the manufacturer of Ritalin, and Britain's National Institute of Clinical Excellence is expected soon to announce strict guidelines for its use and even ban it for children younger than five.

We would be very interested in Hillary Clinton's comments about these New York cases. We would also like to know where she stands on the letter Rep. Dan Burton (R-IN), chairman of the House Committee on Government Reform, wrote to HHS Secretary Donna Shalala on October 25.

His letter was the result of a July 18 hearing about the health dangers from vaccines containing thimerosal (mercury). Babies who are injected with the vaccines specified on the Universal Childhood Immunization Schedule, which are typically delivered in four to six shots during one doctor's visit, may receive 40 times the amount of mercury that is considered safe under Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) guidelines.

An independent evaluation conducted by the National Research Council confirmed the EPA guidelines as accurate, and the FDA's own website states that "lead, cadmium, and mercury are examples of elements that are toxic when present at relatively low levels". Credible testimony was also given regarding the possible relationship between symptoms of mercury poisoning and the skyrocketing rate of autism, now occurring in one in 500 children nationwide.

Requests to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to recall all thimerosal-containing vaccines by Chairman Burton and by parents of vaccine-injured children have so far been ignored. This is despite the fact that the FDA admits that the vaccines on the Childhood Immunization Schedule are all available in a thimerosal-free version.

Apparently, the FDA is not planning to recall any of the 50 thimerosal-containing vaccines but only suggest a “phase out” over time, thus allowing the pharmaceuticals to unload their defective merchandise on unsuspecting children. For years to come, these toxic vaccines will continue to be injected in babies in Public Health Clinics, doctors’ offices, and managed care facilities.

It is unconscionable to continue to put thousands of babies every day at risk from mercury poisoning, especially when the government is recommending use of these vaccines and the schools are making them mandatory, and when safe alternatives are easily available.

Leaving these dangerous vaccines on the market so that the pharmaceuticals can continue to receive revenue from current inventories seems to be the pattern. Even after it was known that oral polio and whole cell pertussis vaccines caused a higher rate of adverse reactions, clinics and doctors continued to use their supplies for years rather than pitch them in favor of safer vaccines.

If there is any reason for HHS and FDA to continue to put thousands of babies at risk from dangerous vaccines other than to protect the profits of the powerful pharmaceuticals, we’d like to know what that might be [done as part of the mass depopulation plan]. What does our great national health care authority, the one who wants the “village” to raise children, have to say about the government’s responsibility for vaccine injuries to children?

We have covered this unconscionable vaccination issue in many past issues of The SPECTRUM. Most recently we carried a special report on page 3 of the last issue—this time announcing that the leading national physicians organization is calling for a moratorium on all government mandated vaccines and vaccinations. What more do you need when even the doctors are getting nervous enough about the pharmaceutical companies’ greed to say “enough is enough”?

But they’re not aware, for the most part, about the Larger Picture, wherein even the pharmaceutical prostitutes are merely agents for administering some of the depopulation poisons disguised as vaccines. Moreover, the crooks in high places are VERY afraid of the children being born into this world right now, often called the Indigo Children, who bring fantastic gifts and powers to help reverse what the crooks have worked so long and hard to create, and thus they have assembled a “special effort” to incapacitate the children.

“FREE TRADE” BACKFIRES IN MEXICO

From THE SPOTLIGHT, by Clayton Potts, 11/20/00: [quoting]

More and more, companies that crossed the Mexican border after passage of NAFTA in search of cheap labor are finding out that the costs of doing business south of the border are too much.

Some internationalists who rushed to close their industries in the United States to exploit cheap labor in Mexico under NAFTA are departing broken-hearted, according to Ted Farrell, who has been involved in business there for 50 years.

Long-standing, entrenched government corruption that extorts entrepreneurs, extensive crime by public officials and private citizens, and workers who toil hard while illegally in the United States but become lazy when sent back to Mexico are among the factors Farrell cited.

Farrell, 71, operates out of Coronado, California and Ensenada, Mexico.

“Many a company from the United States is closing and trying to escape with some of their expensive, movable equipment to avoid confiscation of whatever they have,” Farrell said.

Such departures are usually on “weekends and at night with the help of their lawyers and truckers” Farrell said.

Farrell’s wife, Elisa, said that while Mexico has many unemployed loafers begging, the “help wanted” signs abound.

“It seems that anything more complicated than sewing a T-shirt is cause enough to walk off the job” she said.

One businessman shifted operations from Glendale, California, where his company was producing uniform shirts at a cost of $4.50 each, for labor to Mexico, where he expected to reduce the costs to $3.50 each.

The gentleman said he started off with 300 employees upon opening” she said. “He started with T-shirts, and when he thought he was ready to do uniform shirts, 200 employees walked off because it was too much work.”

“Here in Mexico we cannot find responsible people who will take the work for $3.50 in U.S. currency” she said.

Corruption prevails at the petty level in Mexico, said Farrell.

“When the police needed CB radios, any American caught with one in his vehicle lost it,” he said. “I fought for mine, and, as it was illegal to steal it and with powerful friends, I did not lose mine. But I did move it from my vehicle. These acts are a national custom.”

On one occasion, the government seized a television set belonging to his company, claiming a small tax liability. He paid the tax, but they could not find the TV to return to him. Months later, it was discovered in the home of one of the employees of the agency that had seized it.

Mexicans are unaware “that their nation and military have been passed on to the United Nations” he said.

“Mexico is an oil-producing, oil-exporting nation, yet when the U.S. industrial complex raises prices on oil that the United States is importing, Mexico raises its prices accordingly” he said.

“I say, buy from Iraq and stop murdering that sovereign people” Farrell said.

“There is no way to be honest and survive in business in Mexico; for that reason, the government likes the American factories that come south leaving Americans jobless or working for less” Farrell said.

American entrepreneurs in Mexico who fail to “become close to those in power, or marry into their families, will be putting their plant or factory in the hands of the government” he said. “That is the name of the game.”

While “I disapprove of drugs, if they were legalized the government might go bankrupt because it is heavily involved for immense profits” Farrell said.

A particular extortion involves government utility companies that discover an “unpaid” bill, sit on it while interest rates of 300 percent mount up, then chase down the consumer for payment, Farrell said.

Many Americans cross the border for cheap auto repairs but “if you are not lucky, Mexican authorities will confiscate your vehicle and whatever else you may have” Farrell said.

“They make it so expensive for you to recover your losses that, after many months and trips with attorneys, most Americans just give up and take their loss” Farrell said. [End quoting]

It looks like the elite pulled another big scam on the ones in business who didn’t have enough “correct contacts” before they made the move to Mexico. Think of the fortunes that “someone” made on this scamming of US businessmen who fell for this “get rich quick” deal. Don’t ever think that the big boys didn’t know what would happen to these businessmen without their organized protection.

But then—there is a kind of justice underneath it all, don’t you think, in terms of those businessmen who were focused on profit too single-mindedly above the welfare of stranded employees they left behind in the United States at the time of the move south. The companies that stayed in the United States probably feel a lot better right about now.

JAPAN DOLPHIN KILLING STARTS

From INTERNET, A READER, 11/7/00: [quoting]

Dear All—Please help the dolphins by sending a quick e-mail to the Prime Minister of Japan. Thank you!

Annelise Sorg, Canadian Marine Environment Protection Society, <cmepps@whaleprotection.org>

THE HUNT IS ON

JAPAN DOLPHIN KILLING FROM OCTOBER TO APRIL

JAPAN'S DOLPHIN SLAUGHTER IS ON AGAIN

Officials instruct: "Keep out of public view"

The slaughter of dolphins by Japanese fishermen for sale to commercial markets for human and domestic animal consumption resumed this month.

Warned by the Japan Fisheries Agency to "keep dolphin killings out of public view", those conducting the "drive fisheries" at coastal towns once waited until after dark to herd dolphins into shore, trap them in nets, and slaughter them, and claimed the dolphins had beached themselves. In October 1999, Japan's Whale and Dolphin Action Network (IKAN), caught a daylight dolphin drive on videotape at the port of Futo. When the tape was shown at the annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission in Adelaide, Australia, last June, the Japanese delegation walked out.

"Japan's dolphin hunt kicked into high gear in 1986, the year the ban on commercial whaling went into effect" said Paul Watson, president of Sea Shepherd International. "Japan is steadily hunting its coastal cetacean populations to extinction. By 1995, a single species—Dall's porpoise—was being taken at a rate of 17,000 per year. Hundreds of boats are licensed to kill, and they have severely depleted, in sequence, populations of striped dolphins, pilot whales, beaked whales, and Dall's porpoise."

The crossbow and hand harpoon fishery kills 10,000-15,000 dolphins and porpoises annually. The drive fisheries, killing 1,000-2,000 dolphins, are driven by the dolphin captivity industry, which pays fishermen up to $30,000 each for a few live dolphins for aquariums and amusement parks, with the rest of the captured pods consigned to slaughter. The hunts take place every year between October and April.

A recent Environmental Investigation Agency report revealed that Japan has killed more than 400,000 dolphins and small cetaceans over the last 20 years.

"There's no control and no enforcement" said Andrew Christie, information director for Sea Shepherd International. "Japan routinely ignores resolutions by the International Whaling Commission to at least reduce the slaughter to the point where its numbers do not threaten the existence of the targeted species. The federal government passes along responsibility for quota enforcement to the local prefectures where the drive hunts take place, and the prefectures pass responsibility to the fishing cooperatives, which consist of the fishermen who do the killing. They promptly report to the government that they are not killing too many dolphins."

ACTIONS TO TAKE : (1) Send a fax to Japan Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori: (0) 81-3-5511-8855; (2) or send him an e-mail from this website: <<http://www.ijnet.or.jp/sorifu/kantei/foreign/comment.html>> and also send to: <ldp@hq.jimin.or.jp>, Liberal Democratic Party of Japan; (3) Fax the Embassy of Japan in Washington, DC: (202) 265-9482 (in USA). These are very special creatures who serve a much needed purpose in terms of planetary stability. Japan would be wise to consider the precarious geological conditions under which it remains afloat and then consider treating these awesome beings with respect and appreciation.

TELL BIG BROTHER TO GET OUT OF OUR WASHING MACHINES

From the INTERNET, "Janine Hansen" <info@nevadafamilies.org>, 12/3/00: [quoting]

By Phyllis Schlafly

Few changes in our society have done as much to liberate women from the drudgery of "women's work" as the washing machine. American ingenuity and the private enterprise system combined to provide us with a wide variety of models of this convenient labor-saving appliance, the envy of women all over the world.

Some 81 million households are equipped with washing machines and 10 million are bought every year. But Big Brother Busybodies in the Clinton-Gore Administration want to take off the market the models that Americans have been buying, and then force us to change to a style the environmental extremists claim will reduce global warming.

This is the same Administration that sanctimoniously espouses "a woman's right to choose". But it wants to deny us the right to choose the kind of washing machine that sales data prove we prefer.

In a back room deal without consumers or taxpayers present, the Clinton-Gore environmentalists conspired with industry to mandate the manufacture of only front-loading, instead of top-loading, washing machines. The mandate requires elimination of the agitator which is the element that washes our clothes.

Front-loading washers are available now, but they make up less than 12% of sales. So Big Brother's attitude is, let's force people to buy front-loading washers.

On October 5, the Department of Energy (DOE) proposed two new regulations, one for clothes washers and the other for residential air conditioners and heat pumps. Not many homemakers make a practice of reading notices in the Federal Register, and the 60-day comment period will expire just as households are busy getting ready for Christmas.

DOE Secretary Bill Richardson had the nerve to issue a press release claiming the new regulation will bring "big savings for consumers and the environment". However, the regulations will actually add $240 to the price of a clothes washer, $274 to the price of a residential central air conditioner, and $486 to the price of a residential heat pump.

In addition, a load of laundry will take about 10 minutes longer to wash than in ordinary washers, and will require a special detergent. If the housewife uses her ordinary detergent, it over-suds; if she cuts back on the amount, her clothes won't get clean.

The reason for these mandates is that the Gore-style environmentalists want to reduce the amount of water and electricity Americans use in order to comply with United Nations treaties about energy, even if the United States hasn't ratified them. And they don't care how much this costs consumers or how much it reduces our standard of living.

Where does the Department of Energy (DOE) get the authority to upset housewives all over America with these draconian rules? A 1987 law, the National Appliance Energy Conservation Act, authorized the DOE to impose efficiency standards in order to reduce U.S. dependence on foreign oil. The Clinton-Gore environmentalists are trying to exploit this law to implement the Kyoto Protocol on Global Warming, a treaty so extreme that the Senate has refused to ratify it.

These regulations come from the same mindset of the bureaucrats who in 1992 banned the sale of toilets that use more than 1.6 gallons of water per flush. Today there is a flourishing black market in old-style toilets because the new toilets simply can't carry out the mission assigned to toilets.

The 1.6-gallon toilets don't help the environment, either, because it usually take two flushes to do the job that the old-style toilets can accomplish with one flush.

Don't look to big business to defend us from the federal environmentalists who are now licking their chops at the prospect of dictating all our energy use if Al Gore is elected President. The appliance manufacturers are glad to support the new rule to force us to buy the more expensive front-loading washing machines that otherwise don't sell.

One manufacturer said, "selling it in the marketplace is easy if there's a [government] standard in place". A press release from Whirlpool "commends" DOE for requiring Americans to buy and use the more expensive energy-efficiency appliances "because consumers have historically shown a disinclination to pay more for products that are more environmentally friendly."

The manufacturers have also been induced to go along because the White House is proposing a tax credit for appliance manufacturers who cooperate with these regulations. This washing machine mandate is a good example of the anti-free-market, high-tax-regime that would be imposed by the Gore environmentalists who truly believe that government knows best, even about such things as how to wash our clothes.

At this late date in the congressional session, the only practical step citizens can take is to demand that Congress append an amendment to any piece of must-go legislation to order DOE to extend the public comment time until those of us who actually use washing machines have time to register our objections. Call your Members of Congress today.

Phyllis Schlafly (column 11-01-00)

Online version of this column: <<http://eagleforum.org/column/2000/nov00/00-11-01.shtml>>

[End quoting]

Here is yet another test to see if the sheep are yet docile enough for complete control of our lives. What's next to be done "on our behalf" since we can't make choices for ourselves? The appliance repair people are probably smiling also, since front-loading washers have always been notoriously prone to problems from leaks around the door gaskets to bad bearings which mean major repair surgery. And then—dare we mention it—there will spring up a thriving "black market" in the old-style washers!

"TOILET TOTALITARIANISM" FLUSHED BY AMERICANS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, by F.C. Blahut, 11/20/00: [quoting]

Every cloud has a silver lining. Americans against government interference are using an international trade agreement against Washington's bureaucrats.

More and more Americans are lining up at plumbing supply stores just across the U.S. border in Canada to purchase toilets with a 3.5 gallon tank capacity. Then they bring them back and install them into their homes.

It's a reaction to a "Big Brother Knows What's Good For You" decision by the environmental bureaucrats in Washington who, some six years ago, decided toilets were using too much water.

Their solution? Limit the capacity of toilet tanks to 1.6 gallons.

The obvious problem with the 1.6 gallon toilet tanks is that they don't work sufficiently well.

U.S. toilet makers, such as American Standard, Mansfield, Kohler, and Eljer, have been using the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) to make the larger capacity toilets only for export.

But there is no law stopping Americans from driving across the border into Canada, buying the big ones, and bringing them back to the United States.

Of course they aren't permitted in new homes, so if some overzealous bureaucrat catches you—or your contractor—the fine is $100 per commode. And then you have to put in the little ones.

But resistance is growing in the United States against government intrusion into your bathroom.

"Why do I need the government to tell me what kind of toilet to buy?" Linda Walton told Water News.

The Waltons (parents and two sons) had traveled more than five hours from their home in Indianapolis to Windsor, Ontario, to get a toilet that works.

According to reports, they are far from alone. Canadian border towns from New Brunswick to British Columbia now offer what one Vancouver plumber has called "Canuck commodes".

According to Water News, the Indianapolis family was shopping at Windsor's Veteran Plumbing and Supplies "conveniently located only two blocks from the mouth of the tunnel from Detroit".

Some of the toilets carry a sticker saying "For Export From The U.S. Only".

Made in the U.S., the toilets are shipped to Canada, where at least half of them, according to informal surveys, are sold to Americans and come back south—across the border.

Kurt Sutts, the owner of Veteran Plumbing, told Water News: "It is legal for Americans to bring them back home."

Of course, a new home in the United States won't pass inspection with a large capacity toilet. But many Americans, with bureaucrats' inspections behind them, indulge in what has come to be known along the border as "toilet swapping".

Tim Harmon, the owner of Tim & Billy's Salvage Store in Indianapolis, said: "We have people building million-dollar houses, but they come in here to buy an old toilet".

Harmon added: "Everybody complains about the new ones. The biggest argument that you hear is that you have to flush it two or three times, so who's saving water?" Good question.

One Michigan home-builder, Mario Muglia, said that about one-quarter of his clients insist on old-style toilets.

And, in a membership survey by the National Association of Home Builders, almost half said the new toilets were a problem.

And more Americans are fighting what one radio personality calls "toilet totalitarianism", boasting that he went overseas to acquire illegal toilets for his home.

It isn't a trivial problem, insists Rep. Joe Knollenberg (R-MI), who is sponsoring legislation to restore toilet choice.

The congressman reportedly assailed Washington for imposing a one-size-fits-all toilet on the entire nation.

According to Knollenberg's aide, Paul Welday: "We found that we had a number of constituents who were crossing the bridge to get those toilets."

He says the congressman has received support from all across the nation and expects the measure to come up again during the next legislative session. [End quoting]

Again we see the hand of Big Brother attempting to herd the sheep. The problem here for the bureaucrats is that this matter becomes such a daily annoyance to so many of the sheep that it becomes, in essence, a constant reminder to the sheep of what happens when government takes free-will choice out of the hands of those sheep—so it's likely to backfire and wake a few of them up!

BATTERY BATTLE

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, for December 2000: [quoting]

We love our digital cameras, PDAs, and portable CD players—until they run out of juice at the wrong moment. To keep these high-drain devices running longer, Energizer and Duracell have developed new alkaline batteries that, they claim, last 50 to 80 percent longer than regular alkalines.

Energizer's E2 unlocks more power with improved cell construction and a unique titanium compound that facilitates the flow of electrons. Duracell's Ultra M3 improves performance by reducing inert materials, which frees up more space for fuel. Duracell also reformulated the remaining battery compounds for better electron flow.

So are the E2 and Ultra M3 worth the 30 percent premium you'll pay over regular alkaline batteries? We tested them against non-premium Rayovac Max AA alkaline batteries in a Kodak DC3800 2.1-megapixel digital camera, shooting in dark areas so the flash was used each time, until each battery was completely drained.

The results: 301 shots with the E2, 293 with the Ultra M3, and 184 with the Rayovac Max—or roughly 60 percent more shots with the premiums. While the difference between the E2 and Ultra M3 was negligible, the Energizer E2 earns bonus points for its nifty reclosable plastic carrying case. — Jill C. Shomer [End quoting]

Advances in battery technology have suspiciously lagged quite a bit behind advances in other areas of electronics. One wonders if this latest development is simply a "table scrap" thrown our way while the REAL advances are held in secret. Regardless, the above is some good information just in time for all those Holiday gadgets and other toys that eat up a lot of batteries.

A VIOLENT BIRTH FOR THE BLACK DEATH

Excerpted from POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, December 2000: [quoting]

Long associated with immediate death and widespread destruction, volcanos may have played a far more ominous and subtle role throughout human history; they may have also triggered the spread of catastrophic plagues, including the Black Death, or bubonic plague, which originated in Mesopotamia in the 11th century.

Based on historical records, ice-core samples, and tree-ring data, climatologist Richard Stothers at the Goddard Institute for Space Studies in New York has linked incidences of plague to volcanic events. He discovered that each of the seven largest eruptions of the past 2,000 years spewed at least 100 megatons of sulfurous gases into the stratosphere, where they combined with water vapor to create sulfuric acid particles called aerosols.

As this aerosol curtain spread across the atmosphere, it screened out much of the Sun's radiation and caused the northern jet stream to shift south, which ferried cold polar air to the temperate latitudes of Europe and the Middle East, the data suggest. "This aerosol veil created a cooler, more humid environment" explains Stothers. During the past two millennia, these unusual weather patterns allowed Yersinia Pestis, the plague bacillus, to steamroll across Europe and the Middle East within five years of at least five eruptions, he adds. [End quoting]

Considering the supposedly "inside" information shared early in this News Desk related to the chemtrails sprayings, one wonders if this volcano "hypothesis" is yet another smoke-screen excuse that will get the blame for what will actually be purposeful biological warfare waged upon we-the-people to decimate most of the world's population.

The elite have always had the means to wage biological warfare when they chose to do so. They've had access to (and hidden away) many ancient records of historical data and advanced technical information.

They caused the World War I flu epidemic, they spread smallpox to decimate the Indians through dispensing free blankets "to keep them warm"—laced with smallpox, etc. See the long list of some of their "accomplishments" under the article titled "A Short History Of Secret Human Biological Experiments" as presented in the last issue of The SPECTRUM.

HOW THE GOVERNMENT WORKS YOU OVER

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER, for November 2000: [quoting]

Big Boy/Big Brother

A young Spokane, Washington girl named "Spuds McKenzie" almost turned 18 and received a notice in the mail that it is time for her to register for the draft. The girl filled out a form from Bob's Big Boy on North Division Street so that she could get a free hamburger on her 12th birthday. When she filled out the form, she falsified her name to Spuds McKenzie (remember Budweiser beer's "party animal" bull terrier?) and stated her birthday to be two weeks earlier than it actually was.

Six year later, "Spuds" received the reminder in the mail on the birthdate she recorded on the form for a free birthday burger.

How about that? Fast food restaurants are now working for Big Brother as intelligence-gathering operatives.

$1.9 Trillion

In mid October, just driving down the road listening to KXLY talk radio out of Spokane, Washington, I heard the ABC newsmen, Doug Limerick, say that some semi-official source had tallied the combined total government employees' retirement funds and it equals $1.9 trillion.

This figure was EXCLUDING federal government employee retirement funds.

Limerick reported that it was speculated that the incredible expansion of the stock market has allowed government employee retirement funds to be so stuffed with cash.

What about the Social Security trust fund? Presidential hopefuls Gore and George Bush, Jr., agree that we must save Social Security.

What a mockery of the American people. While Congress has allowed the tax-paid bureaucrats of this nation to spend the Social Security trust fund into insolvency, they have jealously protected and padded their own retirement funds to the point that the amount of money it holds isn't even a real number, it is so astronomical.

"Code Of Ethics For Government Service"

I was recently furnished with a copy of a document that, at least as of five years ago, was being given to those who hire on as federal employees. Entitled "Code Of Ethics For Government Service", the document was agreed to by the 85th Congress in the form of Concurrent Resolution 175 and fits on one letter-sized sheet of paper. "The Code applies to all government employees and office holders" the document states.

It begins by stating in bold letters that "Any person in government service should: "Put loyalty to the highest moral principles and to country above loyalty to persons, party, or government department.”

It then goes on to tell its minions to “Uphold the Constitution, laws, and legal regulations of the United States and all governments therein and never be a party to their evasion.”

The document outlines several other very noble things that do not seem to occupy the minds of most federal employees. The last three are really noble:

- “Never use any information coming to him confidentially, in the performance of governmental duties, as a means of making private profit;
- “Expose corruption wherever discovered;
- “Uphold these principles, ever conscious that public office is a public trust.”

How about that for a “how the government works (you over)” piece? [End quoting]

What do you think? There must surely be a lot of guilty consciences among government employees. And if we focus on Congress, we’re left with Mark Twain’s observation of a century ago, that: “There is no distinctly native, American criminal class—except Congress.”

ENERGY BILLS GOING WILD

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, for 11/5/00: [quoting]

SAN DIEGO—Gov. Gray Davis and the state’s top energy regulators urged federal authorities Tuesday to order refunds and immediate price controls in California’s troubled deregulated electricity market.

The governor told the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that it has broad authority to order rebates, impose price and bid limits on power sales, and make other changes “to nurse this marketplace into equilibrium.”

[End quoting]
The public utility energy problems that California is now having will be a problem for the rest of the US if we all don’t protest now! California is often used as a test-case for many of the elite’s more outrageous scams. And for a lot of you readers who reside in California, you know first-hand about the soaring electricity bills you’ve been receiving in recent months, starting with the nonsense in San Diego which led to riots many months ago.

Those fortunate enough to be “off the grid” (or even partially so) will better appreciate the REAL value of their alternative energy systems as this calculated energy-deregulation scam kicks into high gear—where “accidental” power outages may compound the misery of artificially high utility bills.

THE TRUTH THAT NO ONE WANTS TO ACKNOWLEDGE

From A READER, 10/27/00: [quoting]
What is the truth that no one wants to acknowledge? Could it be that we are living in a world of the blind and the crippled? Could it be that our so-called modern civilization has now entered the terminal stage of decadence? Could it be that everywhere we look, whether it be education, medicine, or government, what we see are unenlightened experts who, after offering to solve our problems for a fee, invariably create more problems to be solved? Is it not then a choice between compassion and laughter?

In Love’s pure Light, A.H. [End quoting]
As more people come to recognize the Truth in the words above, maybe their will be a third choice: action. That’s the test in progress at this time on schoolroom Earth.

TWO SCHOOLS BAN POPULAR ENERGY DRINKS

Excerpted from THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 11/13/00: [quoting]

BURBANK, CA—Students in Burbank High School English classes took pen to paper to call attention to a possible problem with energy enhancing drinks, after three local students went to the hospital after drinking them.

School officials said two student athletes fainted at John Burroughs High School last month after consuming an energy drink; they were both unconscious for several minutes and had to be taken to the emergency room.

As a result, administrators at Burbank High School and Burroughs decided to ban the beverages from the campuses although they weren’t sold at school.

When Burbank High School English teacher Kim Kosach told her classes about the ban, one girl said she, too, had to be out of school for a few days when she fainted after drinking one.

Fired up, more than 70 of Kosach’s students wrote letters to support the ban and ask merchants not to sell them to minors.

In her letter, Carolyn Davidian said the issue should be taken very seriously, the products should be tested and regulated.

“The stores that sell these drinks should put some kind of warning label for kids and have IDs checked” she wrote. “We’re supposed to go to school, not miss school because of energy drinks that make us ill.”

Kosach said she was surprised at the reaction when she read the memo to her classes.

“I thought they would think it was dumb or really lame that this fuss was being made” Kosach said. “I thought to them it would just be another thing we’re not allowed to have at school, when in fact, they were really concerned.” [End quoting]

Since any specific brand names were not mentioned (probably on the advice of newspaper lawyers more concerned about profit margins and lawsuits than public health), we are left with a vague caution to keep in mind concerning ALL such drinks. Too bad the local water is likely to be no more safe to drink than are these concoctions!

practice and scientific evidence, if child abuse has in fact occurred.

Shaken Baby Syndrome (SBS) was described in medical literature in the early 1970s but was recognised as a form of severe child abuse as far back as 1860. It is a collective term for internal head injuries which a baby or young child may sustain from:

(a) being violently shaken (child abuse);

(b) a combination of medical problems exacerbated by a serious vaccine adverse event;

(c) a lone serious vaccine adverse event.

According to New Scientist, researchers may be on the way to identifying a biochemical signature that can help distinguish between brain injuries caused by accidents and those resulting from violent abuse. Whilst this research may identify SBS, it may not identify underlying medical problems which have been exacerbated by a serious vaccine adverse event or a lone serious vaccine adverse event.

Unless sound scientific evidence is initiated swiftly to diagnose the difference, parents could find themselves in the position of a father in Sydney, Australia, who in 1995 was charged with the murder of his child.

VACCINATIONS: THE FACTS!

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <<http://sightings.com>>, 11/14/00: [quoting]

<<http://www.alanlam.demon.co.uk/vac2.htm>>

Immune System FACT: Vaccines trick the body into focusing on only one aspect, antibody production, of the many normally available to the immune system. When the vaccine virus is injected directly into the blood stream, it gains access to all of the major tissues and organs of the body without triggering a normal immune response. Antibodies that do respond to the invading vaccine germs become committed to those germs and are unable to react to other viruses.

FACT: The immune system is designed to help the organism discriminate "self" from potentially dangerous "nonself". Alien viruses injected into the body fuse with healthy cells, and continue to replicate along with those cells. Under these circumstances, the immune system is likely to either invade its own cells (cancer), or ignore danger signs all together, leaving the body vulnerable.

FACT: The thymus gland plays an essential role in the immune response against germs and non-human proteins, making T-cells, protecting against diseases. When autopsies were performed on vaccinated Americans, it was found that the thymus gland had shrunk after puberty, while there was little deterioration in the thymus gland of adults in poorly vaccinated countries. Thymus gland abnormalities are associated with many diseases and tumors.

Contamination FACT: The Simian monkey kidneys, used as the bases for the polio vaccine in the 1950s and 1960s, were found to be contaminated with the SV-40 virus. SV-40 is a powerful immunosuppressor and trigger for HIV—the name given to the AIDS virus. Researchers consider it to be a cancer-causing virus. The greatest spread of HIV coincides with the most intense and recent smallpox vaccination campaigns, which activated the dormant contaminated polio vaccine. The polio vaccine today can still be contaminated with an undetected strain of monkey virus.

Side Effects FACT: The principle cause of encephalitis, in the USA and other industrialised countries, is the childhood vaccination programme. Encephalitis is the inflammation of the brain affecting the central nervous systems. Subtle and often overlooked reactions to the vaccine (a slight fever, fussiness, drowsiness) can be a case of encephalitis which is capable of causing severe neurological complications months or even years later.

FACT: Medicine accepts that the rubella vaccine can cause long- or short-term arthritis. Wellcome notes in The Datasheet Compendium say that the rubella vaccine causes arthritis in 3% of the children and 12-20% of adult women who receive it. As many as 26% of children receiving rubella vaccinations in national testing programs developed arthritis. Some were hospitalised to test for rheumatic fever and rheumatoid arthritis.

Non-Efficacy FACT: In the Philippines, the largest smallpox epidemic occurred between 1917 and 1919, in which there were 162,503 cases and 71,453 deaths. All cases were vaccinated.

FACT: In England, smallpox vaccinations were made compulsory in 1853. Between 1863 and 1865, the population rose 7% and the death rate rose by 41%. Between 1870 and 1872, the population rose 9% and the death rate from smallpox rose 123%.

FACT: Following the introduction of compulsory immunisation, the incidence of diphtheria increased by 30% in France, 55% in Hungary, 200% in Switzerland, and 625% in Germany. In Sweden, diphtheria virtually disappeared without immunisation.

FACT: Germany began compulsory diphtheria vaccinations in 1939. After that country was thoroughly vaccinated, cases of the disease skyrocketed to 150,000. France initially rejected diphtheria vaccinations because of the disasters she witnessed in other countries due to its use. But after the German occupation, France was forced into submitting to the shots. By 1943, cases of diphtheria in that country had soared to nearly 47,000. At the same time, in nearby Norway, which refused vaccinations, there were only 50 cases.

Children FACT: Toxic materials (vaccines) injected into an infant's bloodstream at only two months old destroy critical nutrient stores and can catastrophically damage the baby's still developing central nervous system. By the mid-1970s, Japanese officials realised early DPT shots were, in fact, killing babies.

FACT: Cot Death or SIDS (Sudden Infant Death Syndrome), has been linked to the DPT vaccine. Dr. William Torch, of the Nevada School of Medicine, issued a report showing that two-thirds of 103 children who died of SIDS had been immunised with DPT vaccine in the 3 weeks before their deaths, many dying within a day of the vaccine.

Cholera FACT: It is generally recognised that there is no satisfactory cholera vaccine. The product available up to the present has been largely a public relations gambit. So distrusted is the current vaccine that the medical authorities didn't bother to rush the drug to Peru during the outbreak there in 1991.

FACT: Certain vaccines, such as that given for cholera, are known to be of no value, and the emphasis in general practice should really shift more towards proper advice, which can often be more time consuming than injections.

Bad Medicine FACT: In England, the National Health Service pays a "bonus" to doctors with documented vaccination rates above specified percentages. Doctors who vaccinate the largest percentage of patients on their books stand to gain the most, while those who exercise greater discretion in the administration of vaccines, or who are willing to support parents who do not wish their children to be immunised, are financially penalised.

FACT: Scientific literature recommends not giving the pertussis vaccine if the child is ill with anything, including a runny nose, cough, ear infection, diarrhea, or has recovered from an illness within one month before a scheduled DPT shot, or if the child has a personal or family history of severe allergies (i.e., cow's milk, asthma, eczema).

FACT: The Department of Health admitted that if a person has been vaccinated, it has a bearing on the accurate diagnosis of subsequent diseases. This means that for a person who has been vaccinated, the diagnosis of subsequent diseases could be diagnosed as something else (examples include chickenpox, pustular eczema, varioloid and monkeypox).

For more shocking information, see the <<http://www.alanlam.demon.co.uk/vac2.htm>> Internet website. [End quoting]

If you go to the website, you'll find a long list of references from which this alarming sample was extracted—also more information.

Certainly we've given you enough information to make it very clear that vaccinations are a source of much well-founded skepticism—even without the medical revolt we reported in the last issue of The SPECTRUM.

If you want to stay healthy overall, it's best that you pursue more constructive avenues to keep your immune system healthy. Back in the December 1999 issue of The SPECTRUM we presented a dynamite lecture from the well-known Dr. Richard Schulze, titled: "Get Well! How To Create Powerful Health. 20 Steps To A New Healthy Life." That's a very good place to start, if you need a New Year's resolution to work on!

CIA OVERSEES "WAR ON AIDS"

From NEXUS magazine, <<http://www.nexusmagazine.com>>

Nov.-Dec. 2000: [quoting]

On 30 April, the Washington Post announced a National Security Agency (NSA) move to place AIDS science, and all public health agencies conducting it, under the command of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

Curiously, this move follows South African President Thabo Mbeki's decision to include the testimonies of "dissident" scientists in his country's review of HIV/AIDS treatment practices and the epidemic's origin.

President Clinton, advised by the National Intelligence Council (NIC) to formally declare global AIDS a US "national security threat", signed this policy into law. The action foreshadows the likely persecution, if not incarceration or assassination, of "dissident" AIDS scientists.

The CIA warned in its report to the President and press: "The persistent infectious disease burden is likely to aggravate and, in some cases, may even provoke economic decay, social fragmentation, and political destabilization in the hardest-hit countries."

The study defined "instability" as revolutionary wars, ethnic wars, genocides and disruptive regime transitions. Dramatic declines in life expectancy, the study said, are the strongest risk factor for "such threats to national security".

Killing two birds with one stone—promoting vaccination and medication—the propagandist report stated that such threats and "deterioration" might be followed by "limited improvement...owing to better prevention and control efforts, new drugs, and vaccines."

Given the potentially grave socio-economic, political, and now military implications of uncovering a vaccine-industry-linked cause of AIDS, future publications and open dialogue regarding this hypothesis in the mainstream and scientific media may be increasingly difficult to achieve.

(Source: By Dr. Leonard Horowitz, Idaho Observer, USA, July 2000) [End quoting]

Does it strike you as being just a little bit strange that the CIA would now be put in charge of overseeing the AIDS program? Unless there is something very, very, very big to hide.

HOMESCHOOLING AT RISK?

From the INTERNET, <<http://www.militiaofmontana.com>> 10/30/00:

[quoting]

(Originally from THE MODESTO BEE):

Tony Esolen, State Coordinator

Rhode Island Guild of Home Teachers

I would like to pass along some urgent information. The Democratic Party has now aligned itself squarely against homeschooling and parental rights. The Democratic National Committee's website (www.dnc.org), endorsed by Al Gore, attacks Republican Presidential nominee George W. Bush for being "soft" on homeschooling. That same website parrots the agenda of the NEA, the nation's biggest teachers' union, insisting that all teachers of all children should be required to possess state certification.

That requirement would KILL homeschooling. It renews the threat of HR-6, which homeschoolers helped to kill in 1994. That bill would have required the same thing, state certification. That means, unless you spend many thousands of dollars and several years taking courses in how to teach, you will not be able to teach your child at home.

That bill passed through the House Education Committee with every Democrat voting for it, and every Republican voting against it. George Miller (D-CA), then chairman of that committee, will become its chairman again if the Democrats win control of the House, and has vowed to reintroduce the bill. This time, the Democrats would not be facing the imminent disaster they faced in the 1994 elections, when Bill Clinton was at his lowest in popularity. They will have little to fear.

IT IS DISHEARTENING TO ME THAT A MAJOR POLITICAL PARTY IN THE UNITED STATES SHOULD SO BLITHELY ATTACK THE FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOM OF THE FAMILY.

It is disheartening, but not surprising. I teach at an American college; I know the left very well. The Democratic Party is now wholly controlled by the left—by people who believe that the state, not the family, is the basic institution of society. That is why the left wants taxpayer-financed day care.

Former feminist, now Christian professor Elizabeth Genovese, warns that public funded daycare is the next arena of assault on the traditional family, and will make it more and more difficult for tax-strapped families to keep the mother in the home, and more and more economically enticing to leave children with others.

That is why the left wants to destroy the Boy Scouts. President Clinton's Justice Department recently decided to examine whether the Boy Scouts should be banned from National Parks, because of their refusal to admit homosexual scoutmasters.

Homosexuals do not mince words when they assert that the traditional family, and traditional manhood and womanhood, must be overcome. That is why they despise homeschooling.

John Taylor Gatto has written a long article on the fight one small Vermont village had when the last one-room, public schoolhouse in the state tried to stay alive. The powerful Vermont chapter of the NEA crushed them.

When the left cannot abide even a traditional PUBLIC school, what makes us think they will be friendlier with us homeschoolers? To a tyrant, any deviation from conformity, no matter how apparently small, is a threat that must be wiped out. We homeschoolers have for a Presidential candidate the governor of the most homeschooling-friendly state in the country, opposed by a party that has cast its lot with: the NEA, the feminists, who despise the traditional family, want nationalized curricula designed to teach children what they should believe.

NOW IS NOT THE TIME TO BE COMPLACENT. NOW IS NOT THE TIME TO SAY "I DON'T UNDERSTAND POLITICS!" OR "WHY SHOULD I VOTE FOR THE LESSER OF TWO EVILS?"

The choice is acutely clear. When will we get another opportunity like the present? Hillary Clinton once compared the traditional family to SLAVERY. And so I urge you, contact your friends and relatives in other states—those who are friendly to homeschooling.

Ask them to consider, this year, whether the freedom of the family is worth preserving. This election will be close! Of course you must vote as your conscience dictates. But I pray that you will think of homeschooling as a touchstone—as a way of telling what the two parties, and the two Presidential nominees, stand for.

Yours, Tony Esolen, State Coordinator,
Rhode Island Guild of Home Teachers

For those of you who keep the Larger Picture in mind, note that the crooks in high places are going after any and all means of avoiding the blatant mind-control people-programming war that is being waged on many levels, from the evening news programs to the classroom. This upcoming generation of Indigo Children so frightens the power elite that they are really clamping down through such as the use of the Ritalin drug and the elimination of home schooling.

Interesting data is starting to emerge at the university level from those young adults who were home schooled. They tend to be much better students—more independently motivated and better focused, as well as more likely to pursue unconventional, demanding, creative majors such as combining concert pianist with computer programming. And the social "backwardness" that was predicted to plague them just has not materialized. Moreover, they tend to mesh better with adults (and thus integrate better with society) and be far less susceptible to peer-pressure "herd mentality" behavior.

Needless to say, none of these traits are helpful to cultivating docile sheep who do not question the world around them! Thus the attack on home schooling by the crooks in high places. Too bad the author of the message is naive to the utter puppetry of EITHER presidential candidate; home schooling will be a target of attack REGARDLESS of who is in the White House.

THANKSGIVING

From the INTERNET, Jon Galt, <justicus@gci.net>, 11/18/00: [quoting]

If you woke up this morning with more health than illness—you are more blessed than the one million who will not survive this week.

If you have never experienced the danger of battle, the loneliness of imprisonment, the agony of torture, or the pangs of starvation—you are ahead of 500 million people in the world.

If you can attend a church or synagogue without fear of harassment, arrest, torture, or death—you are more blessed than three billion people in the world.

If you have food in the refrigerator, clothes on your back, a roof overhead, and a place to sleep—you are richer than 75% of this world.

If you have money in the bank, in your wallet, and spare change in a dish someplace—you are among the top 8% of the world's wealthy.

If your parents are still alive and still married—you are very rare, even in the United States.

If you hold up your head with a smile on your face and are truly thankful—you are blessed because the majority can, but most do not.

If you can hold someone's hand, hug them, or even touch them on the shoulder—you are blessed because you can offer a healing touch.

If you can read this message, you just received a double blessing in that someone was thinking of you, and furthermore, you are more blessed than over two billion people in the world who cannot read at all.

Have a good day, count your blessings, and pass this along to remind everyone else how blessed we all are. [End quoting]

Despite all the negative news circulating around, we should never forget to thank God that most of us reading this still have some blessed freedoms compared to many other of this Earth's inhabitants.

A LITTLE GIRL'S PRAYER

From THE IDAHO OBSERVER owner and editor, "Ingri Cassel" <vaclib@dmj.net>, November 2000: [quoting]

A TRUE TALE FROM AFRICA

Helen Roseveare, a missionary doctor from England to Zaire, Africa, told this as it happened to her in Africa. She told it in her testimony on Wednesday night at Thomas Road Baptist Church. The next Wednesday night Jerry Falwell choked up and said: "I almost feel guilty for standing in the pulpit after the one who spoke here last week."

READ it. You will have goose bumps and weep with joy:

One night I had worked hard to help a mother in the labor ward; but in spite of all we could do, she died, leaving us with a tiny premature baby and a crying two-year-old daughter. We would have difficulty keeping the baby alive, as we had no incubator. (We had no electricity to run an incubator.) We also had no special feeding facilities.

Although we lived on the equator, nights were often chilly with treacherous drafts. One student midwife went for the box we had for such babies and the cotton wool the baby would be wrapped in. Another went to stoke up the fire and fill a hot water bottle. She came back shortly in distress to tell me that in filling the bottle, it had burst. Rubber perishes easily in tropical climates. "And it is our last hot water bottle!" she exclaimed.

As in the West, it is no good crying over spilled milk, so in Central Africa it might be considered no good crying over burst water bottles. They do not grow on trees, and there are no drugstores down forest pathways. "All right" I said, "put the baby as near the fire as you safely can, and sleep between the baby and the door to keep it free from drafts. Your job is to keep the baby warm."

The following noon, as I did most days, I went to have prayers with any of the orphanage children who chose to gather with me. I gave the youngsters various things to pray about and told them about the tiny baby. I explained our problems about keeping the baby warm enough, mentioning the hot water bottle. The baby could so easily die if it got chills. I also told them of the two-year-old sister, crying because her mother had died.

During the prayer time, one ten-year-old girl, Ruth, prayed with the usual blunt inciseness of our African children. "Please, God" she prayed, "send us a water bottle. It'll be no good tomorrow, God, as the baby will be dead, so please send it this afternoon." While I gasped inwardly at the audacity of the prayer, she added by way of a corollary: "And while You are about it, would You please send a dolly for the little girl so she'll know You really love her?"

As often with children's prayers, I was put on the spot. Could I honestly say "Amen"? I just did not believe that God could do this. Oh, yes, I know that He can do everything. The Bible says so. But there are limits, aren't there?

The only way God could answer this particular prayer would be by sending me a parcel from the homeland. I had been in Africa for almost four years at that time, and I had never, ever received a parcel from home.

Anyway, if anyone did send me a parcel, who would put in a hot water bottle? I lived on the equator!

Halfway through the afternoon, while I was teaching in the nurses' training school, a message was sent that there was a car at my front door. By the time I reached home, the car had gone, but there, on the verandah, was a large twenty-two pound parcel. I felt tears in my eyes. I could not open the parcel alone, so I sent for the orphanage children.

Together we pulled off the string, carefully undoing each knot. We folded the paper, taking care not to tear it unduly. Excitement was mounting. Some thirty or forty pairs of eyes were focused on the large cardboard box. From the top, I lifted out brightly colored, knitted jerseys. Eyes sparkled as I gave them out. Then there were the knitted bandages for the leprosy patients, and the children began to get bored. There were some mixed raisins and sultanas that would make a nice batch of buns for the weekend.

Then, as I put my hand in again, I felt the—could it really be?

I grasped it and pulled it out. Yes, a brand-new, rubber hot water bottle! I cried. I had not asked God to send it; I had not truly believed that He could. Ruth was in the front row of the children.

She rushed forward, crying out: "If God has sent the bottle, He must have sent the dolly, too!" Rummaging down to the bottom of the box, she pulled out the small, beautifully dressed dolly. Her eyes shone! She had never doubted.

Looking up at me, she asked: "Can I go over with you and give this dolly to that little girl, so she'll know that Jesus really loves her?" That parcel had been on the way for five whole months. Packed up by my former Sunday school class, whose leader had heard and obeyed God's prompting to send a hot water bottle, even to the equator.

And one of the girls had put in a dolly for an African child, five months before—in answer to the believing prayer of a ten-year-old to bring it "that afternoon".

Please share this amazing story with as many others as you can.

[End quoting]

If only, as adults, we would learn to hold the faith of a child. Think of the possibilities then! (And it wouldn't hurt, either, to go back and re-read the front-page story.)

A LITTLE GIRL'S SAVINGS

And most people think they need millions to do God's work.

From A READER, e-mail, 11/6/00: [quoting]

A little girl stood near a small church from which she had been turned away because it "was too crowded".

"I can't go to Sunday School" she sobbed to the pastor as he walked by. Seeing her shabby, unkempt appearance, the pastor guessed the reason and, taking her by the hand, took her inside and found a place for her in the Sunday School class.

The child was so touched that she went to bed that night thinking of the children who have no place to worship Jesus. Some two years later, this child lay dead in one of the poor tenement buildings and the parents called for the kindhearted pastor, who had befriended their daughter, to handle the final arrangements.

As her poor little body was being moved, a worn and crumpled purse was found which seemed to have been rummaged from some trash dump. Inside was found 57 cents and a note scribbled in childish handwriting which read: "This is to help build the little church bigger so more children can go to Sunday School."

For two years she had saved for this offering of love. When the pastor tearfully read that note, he knew instantly what he would do. Carrying this note and the cracked, red pocketbook to the pulpit, he told the story of her unselfish love and devotion. He challenged his deacons to get busy and raise enough money for the larger building.

But the story does not end there! A newspaper learned of the story and published it.

It was read by a realtor who offered them a parcel of land worth many thousands. When told that the church could not pay so much, he offered it for 57 cents. Church members made large donations. Checks came from far and wide.

Within five years the little girl's gift had increased to $250,000—a huge sum for that time (near the turn of the century). Her unselfish love had paid large dividends.

When you are in the city of Philadelphia, look up Temple Baptist Church, with a seating capacity of 3,300 and Temple University, where hundreds of students attend.

Have a look, too, at the Good Samaritan Hospital and at a Sunday School building which houses hundreds of Sunday scholars, so that no child in the area will ever need to be left outside during Sunday School time. In one of the rooms of this building may be seen the picture of the sweet face of the little girl whose 57 cents, so sacrificially saved, made such remarkable history.

Alongside of it is a portrait of her kind pastor, Dr. Russell H. Conwell, author of the book Acres Of Diamonds—A True Story.

Goes to show WHAT GOD CAN DO WITH 57 cents. [End quoting]

Once again, the moral of the story is what can be accomplished if we but maintain the pure faith of a child who sees no limits to possibilities. And if we remember to call for the Unseen Higher Help that stands ever by us, always ready to assist, there's no telling just what miracle may await us.

Happy Holidays to all of you who share so many possibilities with me and then, through my column, with your fellow SPECTRUM readers. May the New Year open great possibilities for us all.

Expressing Yourself More Fully On Creator's Living Canvas

11/24/00 SOLTEC

Good afternoon, my friend. It is I, Ceres Anthonious "Toniose" Soltec, come in the Radiant One Light of Creator Source. Be at peace.

Allow for the current unfolding events to impact your mind, for there are many teachings in this world that shed Light upon the path back home, to Creator Source. The most important path one can take is the one that is self determined. This is to say, when ones learn to go within and connect for self to the Infinite Oneness, Creator God, they will then have access to ALL knowledge, and will be given that which best serves their current situation.

Great wonders await you all on this journey of personal discovery; there are none who can do the work of spiritual attainment for you. The greatest teacher can but offer insight to you, for to do more would surely usurp your free will. YOU must make a determined effort toward finding true personal en-Light-enment, for the uniqueness of each of God's creations can only be fully appreciated when one truly takes responsibility for all of one's actions and thoughts.

We are all brush strokes on the same living canvas that makes up the Whole of Creation. Creator God is the Master Artist who paints each stroke and gives life and animation to His created works. Each stroke is then given free will to choose how it will manifest in perfection upon the ever-evolving canvas of life.

Each of you will find Greatness within if you but look. The materialism of your current "modernized" world is what is behind all of the conspiracies that take place upon your world. Ones believe that material wealth equates to power. This LIE is being sold to all who will listen, and has been especially swallowed by those ones you call the "elite" controllers of your planet.

So great is the importance placed upon money (in one or another of its forms) that ones look to it as their security, and forget that they are created in God's image as a co-creator. This is a form of idol worship, and yet most of you ones see it not.

Creator is abundance. Creator is security. Creator is all that there is. Look to Creator for your needs. Look from the perspective of infinite abundance, and know that your needs will be met.

Money is not bad. Having material things is not bad. However, when fear of losing the "things" (or money) becomes your greatest concern, then you have become a slave to the material world and, in essence, you spend great amounts of time managing or maintaining your assets.

Look not for (and dwell not upon) that which you do not have; rather, see yourself as already having that which is your desire. The difference is the vibrational frequency of the request.

To those of you who feel this may be intended for you, please ask yourself: how much time do you spend managing or maintaining assets?

Now ask yourself: how much time do you spend in prayer and meditation?

Do you see that you may have become much more fixated on the physical, rather than on the spiritual side of life?

For those of you who have little in the way of money, and feel that you have "struggled" enough, and therefore are deserving of a reward, I say to you: why do you feel the need to punish self in order to somehow justify your worthiness of having? This too is an out-of-balance condition wherein you are unnecessarily punishing self. In many ways you feel that, if you crawl and grovel enough, then God will somehow see you as worthy. This too is an error in perception.

Look not for (and dwell not upon) that which you do not have; rather, see yourself as already having that which is your desire. The difference is the vibrational frequency of the request.

Let me example: When you ask to be healed from a sickness, you are holding onto (and focusing upon) the vibration of sickness. When you ask for perfect health, you are holding onto (and focusing upon) the higher-frequency vibration of well-being. THE TWO REQUESTS ARE NOT THE SAME! Learn to recognize (or better yet, FEEL) these subtle differences, for such is the key to unlocking within yourselves the Unlimited Potential you ones constantly overlook.

Love is the greatest force in all the universes, for it represents the highest vibrational frequency when offered in purity. Love is the greatest healer and the greatest mover of creative energies.

Love, held in the heart, will raise the vibrational frequency of the individual, and thus allow for a greater perception and understanding of all that crosses your path. This same Love simultaneously radiates outward to uplift others.

Learn to discard that which does not resonate with "Love in your heart" in the face of any and all challenges. The energy of Love is infinite and without end; you cannot possibly use it up or have more than your fair share, for each is given an infinite stream of Love (pure Creative Energy) to then re-give to others. Let not anything in your life keep the feeling of Love from being felt and expressed by you.

Security is only a concern for those who hold fear in their heart. Those who have truly eradicated fear will not concern for safety, money, food, clothing, or shelter—for there will always be provisions of same despite what may seem to be any "hopeless" situations or circumstances being encountered. These are hard words to swallow for many who have been thoroughly sold the materialistic ways of the current societal structure.

What lies behind, say, the perceived "need" for a financial "safety net"? Fear of not having enough. Fear of not being taken care of in old age. Fear. In essence this is due to lack of TRUE understanding of, and faith in, your God-self—in that unique spark of Creative Essence which is YOUR core self.

How do you strengthen that Creative Spark and eliminate the fear? Learn to go within and connect to Creator God for yourself and find your own answers to those matters which concern you. The path to greater understanding will be shown to you.

This does take discipline; this does take dedication. But no more does it take than to discipline self to get up in the morning and go to your job or attend to your children when you feel like resting. Make communing with God a DAILY practice—and watch how your life changes for the better.

Many feel themselves “too busy” to take the time to do such a thing. Too busy to find time for your own spiritual growth? So be it, for the choice is, as always, YOURS. There is no punishment for being lazy—other than the self punishment you are unnecessarily putting yourself through by holding fast to your ignorance.

You will find great need to return into the physical, again and again, until the value of the inner world is recognized as the only TRUE purpose of the physical experience. God knows infinite patience, and He will surely wait for you ones to come to Him in your own time and in your own way.

These words are in answer to your many petitions for Guidance and Understanding. The answer is always the same: go within and learn to find YOUR own answers so that YOUR unique situation can be addressed in a quite personal manner.

Does this mean taking responsibility for yourself? Yes, it most certainly does!

Do you feel that you are somehow incapable of finding your own answers? ALL ones are capable of connecting within to the Divine Source for self. If you choose to seek God through external sources, then you will never be wholly satisfied, for there can only come TRUE satisfaction when one can learn to enter into a conscious communication with Creator God for self.

Does this take determination? Yes.

Does this take persistence? Yes.

Does this take the willingness to be responsible for self? Yes.

God knows your needs, wants, and desires. God has provided for them all—and much, much more. As you progress along your spiritual journey back to Source, you will say: “Let Your (God’s) will be done (thru me) on Earth as it is in Heaven.”

There is no greater joy to be experienced, for when this happens, you will have achieved great Wisdom and Knowing about the

Eventually you will come to appreciate that the greatest joys in life and living will ONLY come when you have realized that expressing God’s will through you is the greatest achievement possible. This is to say: “Let Your (God’s) will be done (thru me) on Earth as it is in Heaven.”

Perfection in which you are created. Let not anything—especially fear, in any of its disguises—detour you from achieving this state of Awareness and Joy!

You will always find that giving of yourself (and what has been given to you) is central to achieving this state of joy, since it is in freely giving that the cycle of re-giving back to you is set into motion. No matter what it is you have to give, the principle remains the same and leads to an amplified return of the energy sent out.

Many times you ones petition for great insights into what will befall you in the future. Many are simply looking for confirmation and validity of these very messages. Many of you want to definitively prove or disprove these messages, and therefore you devise tests of prophecy so as to achieve certainty in a most external manner.

To you ones I say: “Go within and find your own answers—and stop relying on others to do it for you!” If you have not the discipline to do so, then start there and work on the self discipline until you can do this.

None is greater than another. NONE. There are simply ones at different levels of knowledge and understanding. With greater knowledge comes greater responsibility. Those who have chosen to bring forth these messages are in no way greater than are you who simply read them. In fact, these messages are AS MUCH or MORE for them as they are for you.

These ones are striving to be of service while they too find their own answers. They too are asking for the same as are many of you. They have simply decided to go within to seek out their answers, and when appropriate they are asked to share what is given to them so as to learn to flow the Creative Energy (Love) through them, and thus come to understand the giving and re-giving nature of Creator’s grand design.

These ones are students, the same as you, and in no way greater or lesser than any other of Creator’s creations. Allow for these words to enter within your mind and give rise to inner thoughts as such may present themselves to you.

Has there been a stirring within that was not there prior? Examine the nature of your thoughts and the emotions associated with them. What are they telling you? Do you see limitations in the words? Do you see a better way to express the same concept or idea? Would you agree or disagree with the basic concepts? What is this stirring you feel? Why is it there?

Look closely at these inner promptings because there is a message there for you—if you but look and take the opportunity to expand each thought, idea, and feeling until the

The nature of man is to evolve and grow. This innate nature requires that he ask questions and find answers to the questions. Those who ask a lot of questions make the best students. The best students make the best teachers.

Each will eventually teach what they have learned. Each will eventually contribute their unique experiences to the whole of Creation, and thus Creation is forever expanding and growing. Life and living is expansion and growth of all ones, everywhere. You all contribute to this expansion, and you each have a unique part to play as you learn to express yourselves more fully on Creator’s Living Canvas.

I am Ceres Anthonious “Toniose” Soltec, along with MANY others who have gathered for this sharing. We come in the Light and Love of Creator God, who we express through us so that His will may be done.

We leave you in this Radiant Light and Love, and pray that the message herein finds its proper place within your heart.

Blessings and Love to you ALL! Salu.

World Healing Begins With YOU!

KNOW that they interact with our lives.

Dr. Doreen Virtue (yes, that is her real name) is a spiritual clairvoyant and Doctor of Psychology who holds BA, MA, and Ph.D. degrees in Counseling Psychology. Dr. Virtue is the author of twenty-two books on mind-body-spirit issues. Inclusive of this list are such titles as: Healing With The Angels; Divine Guidance; Angel Therapy; The Lightworker's Way; and The Yo-Yo Diet Syndrome.

Dr. Virtue is the founder and former director of WomanKind Psychiatric Hospital at Cumberland Hall Hospital in Nashville, Tennessee. She was also an administrator at Woodside Women's Hospital in the San Francisco Bay Area. Both all-women psychiatric hospitals specialized in treating women's psychological issues. Dr. Virtue also directed three outpatient psychiatric centers, including an adolescent drug & alcohol abuse center.

As a child, Doreen was a natural clairvoyant, seeing and conversing with what many people call "invisible friends" (which are really angels and deceased loved ones). But this natural gift and ability was little understood by the young Doreen and her family, and was the cause of teasing by her friends. Consequently, Doreen learned to deny her abilities, effectively shutting them down before she was mature enough to fully appreciate them.

But on July 15, 1995, Doreen's personal life and her career, marked by exemplary but conventional success, would be irrevocably altered by an incident that is nothing short of miraculous. Doreen had been ignoring her angels' guidance to become a teacher of mind-body-spirit issues. So, when an angel warned Doreen that her car was going to be stolen on that fateful July afternoon, Doreen ignored him.

After all, her habit of arguing with and ignoring the angels was deeply ingrained by then. Despite this, the angel did not abandon Doreen in her most dire moment. As she was parking, two armed men, intent on a car jacking, brandished weapons and physically accosted the unsuspecting Doreen. The voice screamed, and her life was saved by passersby who became alarmed and sent her attackers running.

Dr. Virtue immediately began a daily rigorous practice of receiving and deciphering her Divine Guidance. Simultaneously, she was reexamining her spiritual beliefs, along with her Western psychological beliefs. The end result was twofold: Dr. Virtue was guided to look at psychology from a whole new perspective, and her natural clairvoyance rapidly returned with the same clarity and strength of her childhood experiences.

Dr. Virtue's practice then naturally evolved into "Angel Therapy" in which she combines her skills as a Doctor of Psychology with her spiritual abilities.

Dr. Virtue's belief is simple: everyone is born with some form or forms of psychic abilities—in other words, a sixth sense. This ability, like all other God-given abilities, needs to be nurtured and exercised to maximize its strengths. Dr. Virtue cites over three hundred scientific studies from Harvard, Cornell, and other leading universities supporting her beliefs in people's natural psychic abilities and in the power of prayer in healing.

Dr. Virtue currently lectures and gives experiential workshops on spiritual psychological issues worldwide. Doreen's topics include: angel therapy, angel communication, spiritual healing, mediumship, reincarnation, channeling, and other spiritual topics. Many of her students are medical and psychological professionals, including M.D.s, R.N.s, psychologists, and social workers.

Dr. Virtue's national media coverage includes: Oprah, CNN, Good Morning America, The View With Barbara Walters, Donny & Marie, Rosanne, and other national programs. National print media coverage includes: Redbook, Woman's Day, and USA Today. (Contact with Doreen can be made through Mr. Steve Allen, at 661-255-8283, and the www.AngelTherapy.com Internet website.)

Doreen keeps some very interesting company. One of her latest books, Divine Prescriptions, has endorsements from Neale Donald Walsh, James Redfield, Dannon Brinkley, John Edward, and Gregg Braden.

John Edward writes: "If one suffers from diseases like 'loss of faith', 'lack of spirituality', 'narrow-mindedness', or 'cynicism', then Doreen Virtue's Divine Prescriptions is the cure. She gently eases you into understanding how her angelic messages are medicine for the soul."

I'd like to take a moment to express my appreciation to Steve Allen and to Doreen Virtue for taking the time in their very busy spoke to her again—it was loud, distinctly male, and it instructed her to scream with all her might. This time she listened. She schedules to allow for this interview, which we have for some time wanted to share with you, our SPECTRUM readers.

It seemed that everything just happened to come together “coincidentally” so that we could share this as a kind of a gift to you for this Holiday Season. Yes, in some respects it is a continuation of the front-page theme of last month’s SPECTRUM. But the subject IS THAT IMPORTANT! No matter what conspiracy is afoot, what trap has been set for humanity, what enslavement has been ever so carefully put into place—that is ALL third-dimensional in nature, an illusion bought into. We need only remember to rise above that and ask for Higher help. And then there is literally NOTHING that can stand in our way of achieving what we say so often at this time of the year: “Peace On Earth, Good Will Toward All!”

* * *

*I haven't even begun to get with God completely.
But as soon as I move toward God
inside of me,
and start viewing what is taking place,
I start realizing that whatever is taking place,
whatever is present,
is just fine.
I realize that I'll get through it;
I'll survive it.
I start seeing that whatever is going on is not going to last,
that things change,
and that everything is in motion.
Then, as I go a little bit higher in consciousness,
I start realizing there is great harmony.
I start seeing the value in most things.
Then I start seeing the value in everything.*

— John Morton, The Blessings Already Are.

* * *

Let’s now move directly into a most cordial and en-Light-ening conversation with Dr. Doreen Virtue, which finally (despite her busy schedule) took place on November 13, 2000.

Martin: When you enter a semi-trance state to receive messages from the angels, can you explain that process to our readers to assist them in opening up to receiving help from the Lighted realms?

Dr. Virtue: Sure. I’m a semi-trance and a full-trance channel, and the common denominator to anything I do involving receiving Divine Guidance, involves first, prayer. And what I do, is: I enlist help, or I ask for help—and that puts me into a receptive state which we’ll call a trance.

Because my background is “Christian

Mysticism”, which is also known as “new thought”, my prayers are very Western and Christian. In my case, before I do any “reading”, I say: “God, Holy Spirit, Jesus, and the Angels, Archangel Michael, please speak through me. Help me to hear the Guidance very clearly and receive blessings on behalf of myself and the person I’m reading for.” And just saying that flows energy down my body; it seems like it has a central nervous system effect, and I go into an alpha state, automatically.

I also do—before I do readings on TV or where I’m going to be doing public readings in front of a large audience—I do yoga stretches, yoga chanting, or I’ll chant “om” to center myself and go into a meditative state. And I teach these methods to my students as a way of connecting with their angels.

The angels who I connect with—I use the term “angels” as a verb as opposed to a noun, and the verb is “those who help us”—and generally I’m talking about people in the spirit realm who help us, beings in the spirit realm.

There are three types of beings I connect with, when I’m doing this work. The first level in spiritual frequency, the lowest level, are the deceased loved ones of my client. Everybody has these loved ones around them. Usually they are grandparents, second generation back, who have passed on, sometimes before the person was born. Sometimes when they were children, or even recent. There seems to be a real grandparent connection that’s strong. Sometimes, it is their parents, their own parents, or an aunt or an uncle might be there, a brother, sister, or the children who have passed.

And these beings, these loved ones, are there to help us and also to help themselves. Maybe they didn’t fulfill their life purpose when they were living. They can vicariously do some good for mankind through us, by guiding us. Or they have a similar background to what our life purpose is. Maybe Uncle Joe was a journalist and our life purpose is to be a writer, so he’ll be our spirit guide to help us to go in that direction, because that’s ultimately what our life purpose is.

The next layer is the Ascended Masters, and that’s the great teachers who walked on the Earth, who are now helping us from the other side.

Martin: The Ascended Masters are something our readers are very familiar with. So you are right in the zone, as we say, with that area.

Available in your local book store.

Dr. Virtue: Beautiful, so your readers will be familiar with the Ascended Masters I work with, which include: Jesus, St. Germain, some of the saints, Archangel Michael in the angelic realm, but we often think of him as an Ascended Master also. And the Ascended Masters are with the person either for their life purpose or because they have been called.

I'm a clairvoyant, and I see Jesus around, roughly, one out of every 300 people. Not necessarily just because someone calls themselves a Christian. I don't necessarily see Jesus with that person. And people who don't consider themselves Christians may be working with him. He's the one—he seems to be around people who call him, who have a brother relationship with him, sort of a “heart-to-heart” relationship with him.

The other Ascended Masters seem to kind of show up on their own volition, according to the person's life-purpose. For instance, Mother Mary is usually found around people whose life purpose involves helping children, either as a parent of many children, or as someone who's supposed to be a traditional teacher, or someone who's supposed to be a child's advocate.

Archangel Michael works with those who are considered to be Lightworkers. A Lightworker, of course, is someone who feels compelled to help the world in a spiritual way, even if they are not sure how, if they want to make a difference while they're living here, in a Higher way.

So the Ascended Masters are definitely among, what I consider, as a group, the angels. And then, of course, there are the “winged ones” that we traditionally think of when we look at Christmas cards or Valentine cards. And they really do look like that. They don't use their wings for transportation; they don't flap their wings like birds, because they don't need to. It appears more that they come to us looking like that, with wings, because that is how we expect them to look. I believe that the early Renaissance painters mistook the aura of angels for wings and started painting them that way.

Martin: That makes sense.

Dr. Virtue: And so, they shape-shift, according to our expectations. I have a new book out, called Angel Vision, that has case studies of people, adults and children, who've seen angels, and they report seeing the same type of being. But, it's interesting Rick, when I am doing a reading on someone from an Eastern background, their angels don't have wings. Their angels look very different than [those around] Western people. On the inside they're still the same, but the outside looks very different.

Martin: Obviously there's concern among many who have experienced channeling in its various forms—and you go into this in the book Divine Prescriptions somewhat—that dark entities may interject themselves perhaps even before Lighted input.

Dr. Virtue: Yes.

Martin: Have you experienced these deceivers directly, and how do you guard against them?

Dr. Virtue: Well, that's where Archangel Michael comes in. Archangel Michael is, literally, “Superman” among us, and sometimes I have to work with folks who may be reluctant to work with them because of negative experiences with churches, where they are rejecting anyone who sounds like church.

But Archangel Michael is non-denominational and works with anybody. He is also the “bouncer angel”, like a night club bouncer. He, like all of the Ascended Masters and all of the archangels, can be with anyone who calls on him, simultaneously. So, he is able to have unique experience with every individual who calls upon him.

And the point I'm making is that we don't have to worry that when we call on Archangel Michael, we're pulling him off of someone else. Just like Jesus says: “I'm with you always.” So is Archangel Michael. And if we ask Archangel Michael to live with us, that's the key. He'd like us to do that.

One of my chief life purposes, as I go around meeting audiences, is to invoke or invite Archangel Michael to be with them, because he recruits Lightworkers into the cause of peace. And if we have Archangel Michael next to us, we don't have to even be concerned that a lower entity could come through that door. He won't let it happen.

Martin: Thank you. I'm glad you clarified that because a lot of people, I find, tend to be fear-based when it comes to this sort of thing.

Dr. Virtue: Yeah.

Martin: A lot of it has to do with, of course, fear-based Christian programming.

Dr. Virtue: Yes; the paradox is that those who fear evil attract those lower entities. Like attracts like.

Martin: Would you share with our readers what you mean by the phrase “Divine Prescriptions”?

Dr. Virtue: “Divine Prescriptions” is the Guidance that's been given to us for different situations by the angels. Whenever we ask for help from Heaven, it's ALWAYS answered; we ALWAYS are helped.

But, it's not always direct intervention. It's not always that, say, we pray for a soulmate, then the doorbell rings, and there he or she is. It's more often, when we get Guidance, that we get ideas, or a road map of how we can help ourselves. And these prescriptions that have been given to me over the years, in my case studies, they're answers that just about anyone can use, according to the types of situations outlined in the book.

Martin: How would you suggest that our readers unblock fear to hear angelic guidance?

Dr. Virtue: And, of course, fear is the only thing that keeps us from hearing, or acknowledging that we do hear the angelic guidance.

In my experience, everybody hears angels. Everybody has conversations with God. It's just that many people feel unqualified, because of religion or low self-esteem, to receive it. So they go look for someone special to put on a pedestal.

WE'RE ALL EQUALLY SPECIAL, WE'RE ALL EQUALLY GIFTED PSYCHICS!

When I give an angel reading for someone, the number-one comment I get is: “I had a feeling that's what my angels were trying to tell me.” (laughter).

They already know, at a gut level, what's being said. And I also want to mention that it's a misnomer, or misconception, that we only get angel messages by hearing. There are actually four main ways that we get the angels' messages. So the number one thing is to be aware of what you already get.

Martin: That was one of my next questions, the four channels of Divine communication.

Dr. Virtue: Ok, so let's stick with the fear then, because that's important.

I find that the easiest way, the no-brainer way, to clear the fear is, before you go to sleep at night, ask the angels—or, you know, if you feel like you don't want to ask angels because you're nervous about it, then ask Jesus or ask God—to enter your dream at night and clear the fears that keep you from hearing them. It's as simple as that.

It all comes back to: WE'VE GOT TO ASK! If we don't ask, even God Himself doesn't intervene, without our permission. The only exception is a life-endangering situation before it's our time. Other than that, we have to INVITE their help, or they can't do it.

Martin: That, also, is one of my next questions—just talking about the importance of asking, and free will, and free will's part in intervention.

Dr. Virtue: Crucial.

Martin: As last month's front-page SPECTRUM headline says: The Call Compels The Answer—If We But Ask.

Dr. Virtue: If we ask. The angels say that the name angel begins with the letter “a” because it stands for “ask” and ends with the letter “l” because it stands for “listen”. And if we'll just ask and listen, everything in between will “gel” in our lives. It's that simple.

Of course, the ego rejects simplicity. The ego wants problems, and chaos, and exotic diagnoses, and such. So, the ego has a hard time that it's just that simple—but it REALLY IS!

The listening goes back to what your other question was about—the four ways that we receive Divine guidance. It is not just HEARING. That's one way that you hear the "still small voice" within, or you actually hear a voice outside your ear warn you, or guide you. But it could also be that you overhear a conversation that gives you some much needed guidance, and you wonder if that's a coincidence. It's not. Or you hear a song on the radio, over and over and over again, or even in your head, spontaneously. Listen to the lyrics to that song, it may be true guidance for you.

Another is SEEING. We often get visual messages from the angels. It could be that we dream about a deceased loved one, and it's a real encounter. It's not just a dream. Or we get a vision in our dream of some answer that we've been looking for. It could be that we see sparkles of light out of the corner of our eye. And that's acknowledging that we're seeing the angel's trail, the energy of angels moving across space. Seeing also means that we see signs from Heaven, such as pennies from heaven that fall in front of us, or feathers, or butterflies, or birds that are just these loved ones sent to us as a sign—rainbows, flowers, clouds, or mists that look like angels.

That's the visual way we connect with the angels and their messages. Or the number sequences they show us. If we keep seeing 11:11 on every license plate or every clock, that could be a definite sign. Or any number sequence. I actually have a book called Healing With The Angels that has a whole chapter on what the number sequences mean.

The third way is through our FEELINGS. I find a lot of people discount their feelings, thinking that it's not valid, but emotional or physical feelings are just as valid a way to talk to God as is hearing, if not moreso.

And it really goes back to that old Joseph Campbell adage: "Follow your bliss." Bliss IS the message from Heaven. It's a road map to keep us going in the direction of our life purpose.

Physical feelings can also include smells, where you get a sense of a disembodied odor, like smoke or flowers. That's a sign that the angels are near. It can also include when your stomach tightens up for no seeming reason; you're just sensing something is off, then pay attention.

And the fourth way is THOUGHT—where we get a sudden insight, revelation, or just a knowingness, without knowing how we know. And I find that folks who get messages this way sometimes discount their messages because they think: "Well, everybody knows that!"

Martin: Right.

Dr. Virtue: And yet that's usually not true. These are the folks who get the great ideas for inventions or books, and if they don't follow through, two years later they see that someone else did, and they kick themselves.

Martin: I noticed you refer to these as clair-audience (clear hearing), clair-voyance (clear seeing), clair-sentience (clear feeling), and clair-cognizance (clear knowing).

[Editor's note: Go back to page 31 of last month's SPECTRUM, under the "Hearing Your Angel's Messages" heading, for a lengthier explanation by Dr. Virtue of these four categories.]

Dr. Virtue: Yes.

Martin: Many people have misconceptions about what they can or cannot ask from the angelic realms.

Dr. Virtue: Oh that's for sure.

Martin: Would you please speak for a moment about mundane matters versus important spiritual intervention?

Dr. Virtue: Right. And I believe this must be from religion. There's this belief that you can only ask for big things from God, or else you're just wasting their time in Heaven. That comes from the limiting belief that the angels and God can only help one person at a time, and not realizing that they help all of us, simultaneously.

It also comes from the belief that money is evil, and not seeing that money can be a tool to help, like Mother Teresa was such a great example of showing us.

The angels say matter doesn't matter; that it doesn't matter what we ask for, because all matter is illusion anyway. So, it's very much like Course Of Miracles says, that there's no order of difficulty in miracles. One is not larger or smaller than the other. They all come from love, ultimately, which is the ultimate miracle.

The angels also say that they are doing their best to alleviate the stress of the human race that is the cause of so much violence erupting. And the stress comes from the so-called "little things"—the parking-lot jam, the unpaid bills, the misunderstandings with your partner. The angels are doing their best to help us with the little things, but gosh, it goes back to: we've got to ASK for their help, and KNOW that we deserve their help with all things, small and big.

I'm talking to the angels continuously. I think that this is what the apostle Paul meant when he wrote about "praying without ceasing".

Maybe angels are like a basketball team. They're around us, so we need to be continuously passing the ball to whoever's closest to the basket, and not worry whether we're passing to the right angel or not. They're ALL the right angels around us. And all we have to do is ask, and they'll just come and help us out.

Just a couple of hours ago I couldn't find my keys, so I said to the angels: "Need your help here—gotta find the keys!" And boom, there they were. And, it was as if the keys materialized, because I had looked in that spot three times before.

Martin: (laughter) It almost seems like angels are an idea who's time has come.

Dr. Virtue: Well, yes. I think that more people are aware of them, more than ever. The belief in angels and life-after-death is up, statistically, right now.

Martin: Is it?

Dr. Virtue: Yes. In fact, the belief in life-after-death is up, significantly, for college educated adults. So, that's kind of interesting.

Praise From Our Readers

"I really admire you all for standing up for what you believe. Thanks so much for the paper—it is most interesting and helpful. I had a few bucks come my way and I am happy to share some of it with you. Thanks again." — V.R. from Canada

"Thank you for all your kind remarks and printing spiritual truths from our Creator or I would not have had this much enthusiasm to share 'it' with a 'talent'. I always liked the parable of the talents, 'When using them for God, we get more!' It is happening at this time in my life. You all have a constant strenuous life, not many could have done what you are achieving. I am not a teacher—only sharing what I like to do most—sharing Aton's words. Much Love & Light." — M.G. from PA

"My dear friends, I do hope and pray that your 'cup' runneth over with love and funds to keep The SPECTRUM alive and well. I consider this paper to be one of my greatest blessings. I hope there are many others who share my sentiments. Thank each one of you for your unbelievable contribution to my life! In love and appreciation." — D.W. from NC

And in all religions that have been studied, Catholic, Christian, Jewish—belief is up. That’s according to Andrew Sheeley, from the University of Chicago. According to Gallop, the number of people who believe in angels is anywhere between 82% and 85%.

Martin: Oh, really. I didn’t know it was that high.

Dr. Virtue: Yeah. The lowest you see in all the polls is that 75% of American adults believe in angels. I don’t know the international figures.

Martin: That’s actually good news.

Dr. Virtue: Well, what it means—and I’m not, my training is as a psychologist, you know, I have a B.A. and a Ph.D. in psychology. And the way we psychologists designate what is normal and abnormal is by statistics, and “what does the majority do”. So, in this case, according to this definition, it is abnormal to be skeptical. It’s normal to be a believer, right at this point in history. Isn’t that great?

Martin: I think it’s great!

Dr. Virtue: And you know what’s going on is, 32% of the people say that they’ve encountered an angel. CNN says that 40% of Americans say that they have a Divine figure that they’ve encountered. What a miracle.

What I find when I travel, which is continuously, I’m always traveling and I’m very much open about this. I’m out of the spiritual closet, so I’m talking to taxi-cab drivers, I’m talking to flight attendants, people on the plane next to me, I’m talking to everybody, not just people who come to my workshops. And I really feel like I got my finger on the pulse of belief. And here’s what I find: almost everybody believes, but they are afraid to admit it, for fear of seeming crazy.

Martin: Right.

Dr. Virtue: And my job, as a psychologist—I’m actually a retired psychologist—is to be the one to say: “Look, this is not crazy; it’s normal.” Let’s just admit it, because you know, everyone knows that when you admit it to someone, then you have the most wonderful conversation.

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: They’ll say “You, too? Let me tell you what happened to me!”

Martin: Yes.

Dr. Virtue: And you swap these miracle stories and you just feel like a million bucks. But it goes way beyond, of course, good feelings. It’s about being teachers of The Truth, and helping others to remember that we’re not alone, that we’re these wonderful children of God, made in the image and likeness of this awesome Creator, who loves us sooo much.

Martin: In your understanding, in what ways are prayers answered? You talk about this in your book.

Dr. Virtue: Yes. Well, prayers can be answered by a direct intervention. You pray for enough money to pay the rent, and this check comes from out of nowhere. They can be answered with the angels giving you guidance, such as: “Go call Ned.” And you call Ned and he offers you a wonderful new job. You know, that’s where you get the Divine guidance. They can be answered through someone else, God speaking through someone else, and it’s just the message you need to hear.

Martin: I’ve always said, in talking with friends over the years about asking for Guidance, that it will never come the way you think it’s going to come.

Dr. Virtue: Yes.

Martin: Just expect the unexpected.

Dr. Virtue: Exactly! And it’s similar to what I say to people: “the how” is up to God. Because we can’t just hand God a script and say: “Here. Fix it this way, Father.” It’s really just asking, and then letting go of how the answer’s going to show up, like you said.

Martin: You can, literally, ask for help and it could take a week for the unseen helpers to orchestrate a situation that is absolutely perfect to the situation.

Dr. Virtue: That’s right.

Martin: So, I think there needs to be an awareness with people, and I think there is—but often we don’t talk about this—that when you’re asking for help, first of all, don’t expect it any particular way. And secondly, allow enough time for the answer to come.

Dr. Virtue: Right, because it’s all about Divine timing. I agree.

Martin: I’m talking to the choir here, I know.

Dr. Virtue: Well, no. I’ve had (laughter) to learn this lesson practically every day. You know, it’s all perfect and everything is in Divine and perfect order. And if we keep affirming that, then we don’t get uptight when things seem to take a little longer than we like.

Martin: Yes. Well, I guess impatience would be another one that I’m sure a lot of people experience—either impatience over money issues or relationship issues or work issues. (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: Yeah. Well, you know, what I find is, when someone feels stuck, like they’re not making progress, it’s because they’re not following the Guidance that’s been given them. And, again, it’s that old thing we discussed, where they’re handing God a script and saying: “Here. Follow this script, God, and give it to me this way.”

When I work with people who want to find their soulmate, sometimes angels come back and say: “Get to the gym and get your body in shape first.”

Martin: Yes.

Dr. Virtue: They don’t want to hear that. They ignore that part and they get mad at God, thinking: “Well, where is he? Why hasn’t he shown up yet?” They’re not hearing those steps. When I was praying to meet my soulmate, the message was: “Go to yoga.” And that’s where I ended up meeting him.

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: You know, it’s usually always different—different ways that we get Guidance, as you mentioned, than we expect.

This one woman who I was working with, her name was Jackie, she prayed for help with her teenage son. And the message she got was: “Go to the car wash, go to Danny’s Family Car Wash, right now.” And she heard that as a booming voice from Heaven.

And she said: “What? I don’t need my car washed. I need my son fixed.”

And she heard it again: “Go to Danny’s Family Car Wash, now!” And she was arguing with God, and finally she said: “Ok, I’ll go.”

She drags herself to the car wash, and as she pulls up, the lead man says: “You are going to get your car detailed, now.” And she felt like she was in the Twilight Zone by this point. And she said: “I am? I don’t have time.”

He says: “Yes, you do.”

So she goes over to the waiting area, where there’s a man who’s asleep with a lot of books covering his eyes, to shield the Sun. And she just casually glances at the book titles, and notices that every one of them had something to do with teenage psychology.

So, she starts to understand the connection now—why she’s there—and she wakes the man up, out of a deep sleep, and says: “Why do you have all these books on teenage psychology?” And the man recounts the story that his own son had been having behavioral problems very similar to Jackie's son, but that they had found this miracle-worker psychologist who'd absolutely fixed the son and had assigned the parents to read these books. And Jackie said: "Give me the name of the psychologist, right now!"

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: And now her son is healed because she went to Danny's Family Car Wash, rather than ignoring the advice and just sit and think: "Well, that has nothing to do with what I'm asking for."

Martin: It seems like, again, people ask for help, you ask for help, and if the answer is "Go to Danny's Car Wash"—you have to trust that that is an appropriate answer to what you're asking for and follow that, instead of the ego overriding that, and canceling it out. I think what happens with people, I know it has happened with me in the past, is that there is a tendency to override.

Dr. Virtue: That's the bottom line of all this. You said it in a nutshell, Rick, right there. That's the article. (laughter)

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: It's about walking IN FAITH. And if we need more faith, gosh, we can ask for that, too. It's not like we have to clean-up the house before the housekeeper gets there!

Whatever we need, whether it's more faith, whether we need to release the fear that we're going to do something wrong—the easiest way is, before we go to sleep at night, ASK the angels to come in and clear away the fears that keep us from having full faith. And right there is a big, big part of trusting—so that we can (a) hear, and then (b) follow.

I'll tell you, they have pushed me, sometimes, to walk away from situations where I would have made a lot of money. They say: "Don't take the money; walk away." And I do! And it turns out that it was a horrible situation, and the money will later come from a different source, in integrity.

Martin: Yes, I understand that one.

Dr. Virtue: You know, I'm just so grateful that I've learned to trust and follow such Guidance. My life has become such a blessing because I absolutely, absolutely trust my angels.

They do everything for me, like whispering in my ear that: "Ok, it's time to pay your bills today." I'll go home and I'll see this bill that's due right now; and so, they are my accountant. They frequently tell me to take this road or that road, so I'll avoid an accident or traffic jam. "Buy this house, not that house." They just absolutely guide me in every facet of my life, and I've let go of feeling like I'm alone, or I have to worry.

Martin: This, I'm sure, gets back to fear. Why, in your experience, do people block out Divine guidance and "Divine prescriptions"?

Dr. Virtue: The reason that people don't hear it and don't follow it is because the ego has convinced us that it's dangerous to follow love. The ego, being 100% fear, wants us to believe in our littleness, wants us to think that we don't matter, that we can't contribute, that we are not qualified to hear the voice of God. And so it comes down to that we're allowing fear to rule us, rather than the voice of love.

I work with a lot of folks, helping them to realize that they are beautiful masterpieces of God. And that, of course you deserve God's help, just like you want your own children to have happy, healthy, abundant lives.

I also help people to "forgive" God. There's many times we don't hear Divine guidance because of this. For example, a woman I worked with last week came up to me, after our session, and said: "You know what? I actually thought of God as being evil, because of what my church taught me—that God was vengeful, and jealous, and angry, and was going to send me to Hell if I did anything wrong." And so she realized how frightened she was of God, and so why would she want to listen to that?! And I helped her to reframe that, that God is the Voice of Love. These teachings that she had—I mean, we should respect and honor those people as children of God, but we can't listen to fear coming from ANY source, including religious leaders!

Martin: Well, that's why the Master Teacher taught the Golden Rule as being the most important thing: Love your neighbor as yourself.

Dr. Virtue: Yes.

Martin: The whole message was love and compassion.

Dr. Virtue: Exactly, and the key—

Martin: And nowhere in that message was there judgement.

Dr. Virtue: Right.

Martin: Or anger or hatred.

Dr. Virtue: I know. Well, we—you and I could have a long discussion about that, I have a feeling. (laughter)

Martin: Well, we can start right now. (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: I mean, that could be a can of worms, too, because you're talking about mistranslations of the Bible, as being a big part of it.

Martin: Well, our readers are very familiar with how the Bible has been edited and "adjusted" and altered.

Dr. Virtue: Yeah. So they know.

I think that the beautiful news is that more of us are having "mystical" experiences. And at my workshop, I'm finding folks of mainstream backgrounds—there's almost always medical doctors at my workshops, now, learning how to hear their angels, openly saying: "I'm a medical doctor; I love angels."

I have lawyers, accountants, stock brokers show up—you know, what we usually think of as "three-piece-suit folks"—are now showing up at these New-Age workshops to get in touch with Heaven.

So, I'm just thrilled with the direction that society is going right now, with more people admitting that they believe in mystical experiences than ever before. More of us are praying than ever before, actively, collectively. How can that not continue to help us go into a positive direction?

The angels give me some clear pictures of where we're going, collectively, as a human race. They say that we are all becoming more telepathic, and we're allowing that telepathy to occur. Studies, scientific studies, show that the human mind is telepathic. I don't know if we need to go into the scientific studies so much.

Martin: No.

Dr. Virtue: We have the natural psychic gift, in our brain. As we lose fear, and actually start to feel—not a moral obligation, but almost like that—that we have these gifts and we need to use these gifts in service, then we kind-of donate our psychic gifts to the cause, if you will. Then we, collectively, as a human race, will very soon let go of clumsy communication modes.

The angels say that e-mail is a precursor to all this, that e-mail is giving us all a craving or a taste for instant communication. And you see how frustrated we get, now, when an e-mail takes five seconds too long to go through.

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: Right?

Martin: Yeah.

Dr. Virtue: Isn't that true? We're all getting so spoiled that we want "instant communication". And the next step, after e-mail, is telepathy.

And they say, as soon as we allow this to occur, then what happens is that lying will no longer be an option. That's why the angels, right now, are telling all of us to get our lives in order, in integrity. That's why their central message is: get your life in shape, get rid of the parts of your life where you're selling out or compromising. Get into integrity, because it's coming up that the whole world will be in integrity.

When that happens, there's going to be a shift in agencies and groups—government, legal, educational, media—that have foundations of dishonesty or lack of integrity. They will fall, necessarily, and we need not be afraid of that when it occurs. It's a "good riddance" type of switch.

Martin: Yes. We have been sharing messages on that subject from various Ascended Masters for some time.

Dr. Virtue: The new children, what we call the Indigo Children, have been brought in to help us, to usher in this new change. [Editor's note: Rick Martin conducted a front-page, in-depth interview with Jan Tober, co-author of the astounding book, The Indigo Children, back in our March 2000 issue. Back issues are available of that lively interview. Also, Jan's book is available from Wisdom Books & Press, whose contacting information is noted elsewhere in this newspaper.] These children, ages zero to twenty-two, the millennium children, are very psychic, very sensitive to lies, to lack of integrity, and also to toxins and additives in foods; they are generally highly sensitive beings.

They are openly psychic; they openly say "Yes, I see angels with these people." And, these new children also have, kind of, an aggressive personality, many of them, because they've been brought in to no longer tolerate the mess of government and other agencies.

We, our generation, was supposed to do this in the '60s and '70s, and we started off really in a good direction, with protest marches and such. Many of the people, like yourself, in the media, have continued that good work, but others got distracted, fell back asleep at the wheel, forgot who they were.

These new kids won't do that. These new kids are kicking butt and taking numbers, and unless we put them in chemical "straight jackets" of Ritalin, because we call them ADD and ADHD, these are the new kids who will usher in this beautiful age of peace that comes through integrity, through authenticity.

Martin: I did a front-page story, some months ago, with Jan Tober, and the front-page story was on the Indigo Children.

Dr. Virtue: Good, excellent. I'm right now writing the follow-up to that book, called The Care And Feeding Of Indigo Children.

Martin: Oh, great. That sounds terrific. Well, it was Jan Tober who was quite adamant about me interviewing you. She said: "You have to talk to Doreen Virtue!"

Dr. Virtue: Bless her heart.

Martin: So, that was how we made the connection.

Dr. Virtue: Oh, beautiful. She's a sister, definitely.

The angels also say that the quantum physicists are coming out with research to show that our focus, our over-focus on time, earthly time—through wearing watches and looking at calendars—is limiting the number of miracles we experience, by flattening our experience into the third dimension. I'm sure you've noticed, Rick, maybe you've done it yourself, that many Lightworkers are taking their watches off.

Martin: Yes.

Dr. Virtue: I know, among my friends, sometimes we'll say: "Does anyone know what time it is?" and none of us have watches on.

Martin: Yeah.

Dr. Virtue: We'll have to pull out a cell phone and turn it on to see what time it is.

The angels say that we are near the Aztec end of time, noted with the Mayan calendar—the end of time meaning the end of measuring time at the 2012 mark. They show me a world where we are all going to be much more natural. The precursors we see now are that many of us are being guided to clean up our diet, have more organic food, become more vegetarian. Get away from the grid. Get away from the hustle and bustle—just become more natural and authentic, it all comes back to.

Martin: Sounds good to me. Let's go. (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: Yeah. Change. Change can seem scary, but it's ultimately "out with the old and in with the new". (laughter)

Martin: Well, one thing that I've observed over, well, since 1987, I have in front of me, on the wall, Gordon Michael Scallion's future map of the United States.

Dr. Virtue: Ah-huh.

Martin: As I'm sure you've seen or heard about.

Dr. Virtue: Oh, yes.

Martin: And there was a lot of channeled guidance from the Masters and others about the Earth changes and the necessity for Mother Earth to cleanse herself. And there was, what I'll have to say was, a lot of fear-based information—

Dr. Virtue: Yes.

Martin: —that created, one, the necessity to prepare, but two, created kind of a fear energy, with a lot of people. And what I sense, just intuitively, about the world now, is that things have kind of mellowed.

Dr. Virtue: Yeah.

Martin: And I don't know if it's because there's been an alteration in the time sequence, or because of the level of compassion that people are feeling within themselves that somehow created a new probable future, that's different and less geophysically impacting than the one that we lived in ten years ago. I don't know.

Dr. Virtue: Well, the other thing—and this is kind of mind blowing—is that the angels show me that there's these parallel realities that you touched on. The parallel realities are likened to 7 movies in 7 VCRs that are continuously playing. There's a masterpiece movie, and there's all the way, ranging to the horror, "b"-grade, low-budget film, and everything in-between. So those who believe and who put their focus on the tragedy, actually are experiencing that type of reality, right now.

Martin: Do you think there's been a change?

Dr. Virtue: I think that those of us who have faith are in the masterpiece movie, and those who don't have faith are in a "b"-grade horror movie. I think we all have different realities. I think there's a lot of souls who, during the millennium shift, had pain occur.

Martin: Yeah.

Dr. Virtue: That's what they expected. And those of us who experience peace, that's what we expected.

Martin: Ah-huh.

Dr. Virtue: So, everyone's experiencing a different reality. You're in a reality where there's peace and helpfulness, because that's your mindset. If that makes sense.

Martin: It does.

Dr. Virtue: I spoke out adamantly when the so-called prophets—I used to call them P-R-O-F-I-T-S (laughter)—were selling generators and water purifiers, right before the millennium.

Martin: Right.

Dr. Virtue: The angels had clearly told me that the Y2K issue was going to be expensive, in terms of a lot of computers and computer programming, but that we'd be fine, and just, absolutely, don't panic. I mean, they told me that two years before the millennium 2000—and there were a lot of people, including Jan Tober's ex-husband, who were out, just as loud as they could, saying: "It's not that the end is near, it's the opposite. The now is happening, and the now is beautiful, and so is the future; there's nothing to fear." But, it's sexier, sometimes, to say that there's a problem.

Martin: Ah-huh.

Dr. Virtue: The 10 o'clock news—do you tune in because they talk about problems or solutions? Sadly, the majority still like the tragedy story. So, that particular map that you have in front of you, I call it "the onion map", and it stinks; it stinks to sell that kind of fear. You know?

Yet, if you followed one of my favorite authors, Dolores Cannon, who wrote the Conversations With Nostradamus books—I'm a big fan of her work. I feel like she really is very careful with what she prints. And Nostradamus, if you'll recall, said that we were at a fork in the road at the millennium, where we needed to make sure we didn't go to World War III, before the millennium shift. And I find that we still have the angels warning us about the Middle East situation.

Martin: Yes.

Dr. Virtue: Archangel Michael, who I channel, has come to me in the last week or so, and really put his foot down and said, you know, "You humans, this is enough! You're toying with something very dangerous here." And it culminated yesterday, on November 12.

Martin: The worldwide vigil?

Dr. Virtue: The worldwide vigil that we held overseas. I was actually channeling Archangel Michael over the Internet. He wanted to come through and identify himself. And I said "No, I'm not ready to announce this is Archangel Michael talking." But he, I don't know if you listened to it, but he was—

Martin: No, I didn't.

Dr. Virtue: He was very passionate that we all need to stop toying around with lukewarm measures to achieve peace. And we need to put our foot down, collectively, and say "Enough! Enough!" That "I will no longer tolerate these guns and these weapons."

He said, not only is it dangerous, in terms of our potential future, but it's wasting our time because what is ahead of us is so awesome, so beautiful, that we can't open that new door until we close this old door of violence.

He really, really wants us to put our passion into vigilantly seeing only what we want, not what we don't want; only see peace, and of course that means at a micro level, as well as at a macro level. When we go to, say, the grocery store, the post office, only see the Divine spark in everyone. And don't allow ourselves to go into any ego judgments, about anyone, including ourselves. And he seems a little impatient with us, or urgent, lately.

When I channel him, I'm doing trance channeling. And my students copy it down, very often, and post it. I don't know whether they post it on my website or not, because I'm so "in the moment" that I don't stop to check.

Martin: Right.

Dr. Virtue: But I should write it down. It's just that I don't, I'm not aware of it a lot of times. But you can go to the angeltherapy.com Internet website and then maybe there is the channeling.

Martin: How do you recommend that people emotionally clear themselves to hear angelic council?

Dr. Virtue: Well, the first thing is to ask the angels for help with any fears you have. My favorite way is to ask before you go to sleep at night.

The second thing is that the angels very often give us guidance to purify the piano case that we live in, that we call the body. They liken it to a piano case, so that we can get more harmony in the music. They often ask us to make changes in our lifestyle, including diet, to have a more pure, organic, and vegetarian-based diet, to stop eating the processed foods that lower our frequency, such as caffeine, nicotine, sugar, white flour.

They usually prescribe us to get outside in Nature, as a way of increasing our spiritual frequency and attuning to what are called the Nature angels, or the elemental kingdom, to clear the aura, like air purifiers clear the smoke out of the air.

The angels also help us to increase our frequency through yoga and meditation, charka clearing; these methods are very powerful and have a measurable result in terms of psychic abilities. And, you know, I've found that the greatest part about discernment, about being in-tune, is to be really honest with yourself, vigilantly honest, to always be monitoring your thoughts and your feelings. The angels really, really say that our only path, as humans, is to be responsible for the contents of our thoughts, at all times, and to not allow ourselves to have the luxury of negative thoughts or thinking about what our fears are. As soon as we're aware of any pain at all, psychic pain, existential pain, physical pain, to ask for help and not tolerate pain at all.

The angels would like us to adopt a "zero tolerance for pain" policy, and not think that any amount of pain is acceptable. But, as soon as we become aware of it, to mentally ask for help with it. They're upping our standards, in other words.

Martin: Well, again, I think there's often reluctance with people to do that, and it's back to the worthiness issue.

Dr. Virtue: Right.

Martin: And also, it's like waiting for the truck that's barreling down on you—you know, THAT'S important so, HELP! (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: Right.

Martin: But the other stuff is, it almost seems, well again, it gets back to worthiness.

Dr. Virtue: It does! It's absolutely that, and I work continuously with my students on that very issue because that's the big hurdle, right there. Do I deserve God's help?

You know, there's the argument that ego gives us: "Well, you haven't been to church enough. You haven't been to temple enough. So you're ignoring God; why should He help you?" Or: "You haven't tithed enough." I mean, that's based on the Santa Claus theory, isn't it? You have to be naughty or nice, and that's how you relate to God, like God is Santa Claus.

And the angels just look past all the surface. They look past our mistakes; they look at our mistakes with compassion, with a good sense of humor, sometimes. They look past our surface personality, our race, our religion, our weight, and they see within us that Light. They see God within us. They're in love with God, and so, therefore, they're in love with us. It is their pleasure to help us to have joy and peace. In other words, we help our angels when we give them a task to do. There's so many unemployed and bored angels out there.

Martin: And, I'm sure, unappreciated, unrecognized.

Dr. Virtue: Well, you know what? That's ok with them; they'd rather be unrecognized than bored and unemployed.

Martin: (laughter)

Dr. Virtue: Their main mission that they've got me doing, is teaching people TO ASK!

Martin: That comes first.

Dr. Virtue: And it doesn't really matter if you scream at God. You know: "Help, help, help!" even yelled disrespectfully. They just want to be enlisted because they know, ultimately, we'll come around and lose our anger—which is always fear, isn't it?

Martin: Yes. Fear has so many disguises.

Dr. Virtue: Sometimes people want to know what specific invocation or prayer you use for specific situations, and I provide those in my books, and it's not necessary. ALL THAT IS NECESSARY IS A SINCERE REQUEST FOR HELP.

Martin: Heart intent.

Dr. Virtue: Intent, exactly. You got it.

Martin: I know you're feeling the time restraint, so let me just ask you one last question, and that is: What words of counsel would you like to leave our readers with?

Dr. Virtue: The main thing I want to let everyone know is that you really do have angels with you, right now. And if you'll just spend a moment, maybe close your eyes and take a couple of deep breaths, ask your angels to help you be aware of them, you'll feel their presence on either side of you. They're next to your shoulders, they're above your head, they're in your house—we are literally swimming in an aquarium of angels at all times.

And, the angels are here and on our side. They're not here to wrong us, or shame us, or to take away our goodies. They're really aligned with what we ultimately do desire.

So that comes down to, you can let go and you can trust. And they really will heal every part of our lives, and our world.

You know, I think the bottom line is, if someone reading this article says: "How can I help the world?" the greatest way you can help the world is start talking to your angels, because your angels will accelerate that process of peace through creating individual peace.

As you know, world peace starts with me, starts with you. When I'm at peace, and everybody takes responsibility for their peace, you have world peace. And, in my opinion, the quickest way to achieve that is through working with angels.

Martin: That's a perfect place to end. Thank you for taking the time to share with us.

Dr. Virtue: Oh, my pleasure.

The Cure-All: Chaparral (Larrea Tridentata)

Editor's note: Over the years, whenever anyone has asked me (E.Y.) about selecting a good book on herbs, I always say "Look up 'chaparral' and you'll know right away!"

That is, if you're in a bookstore at the shelf full of herb books, you can sort them into three categories: The first are the books that don't even mention chaparral (toss them in the garbage can, quickly); the second are the books which mention it, but with a lot of disclaimers and cautions in step with the disparaging FDA/AMA thought-control police policy concerning chaparral (also toss in the garbage can); the third category are the books to keep and treasure for their Truth.

These are the ones which begin with something like how the medical expert and longtime dedicated herbalist, Dr. John Heinerman, begins one of his many excellent herb books (this particular one I'm looking at right now is called Miracle Healing Herbs). Here is how he puts it, short but sweet: "Chaparral is one of the most amazing herbs ever found in the plant kingdom."

Is that direct and clear enough for you? And if what Dr. Heinerman says is true, why do you suppose this herb is either missing from, or heavily "discounted" in, so many so-called books on herbs? (Oh no—not another conspiracy!?!)

The same FDA/AMA scare-war waged on the Western United States desert herbal plant called chaparral in the early 1990s was also waged on the wonderful Eastern United States herbal tree/plant called sassafras (root and bark) about a dozen years earlier. Like chaparral, sassafras is now back on SOME health store shelves and mentioned properly in SOME herb books. But since the root beer manufacturers had to find synthetic flavoring substitutes for sassafras back at the time of the contrived government scare in the later 1970s, they've continued using those "imitation flavorings" and so root beer is now completely devoid of the natural goodness (and great flavor) it once possessed. (The sad addendum here is that some "natural" root beers boast sassafras in big letters on the front of their labels—until you read the very fine print connected to a tiny footnote elsewhere on the label, which then says they're using a SYNTHETIC sassafras flavoring. How's that for a well-calculated deception aimed at catching those who know the true value of this herb?!)

I personally mix chaparral with equal parts red clover and spearmint for making herbal tea that is not quite so "strong" of taste as is chaparral alone. Those who are familiar with Native American healing remedies know how highly and widely this humble desert "scrub" plant is regarded by many tribes.

We here at The SPECTRUM would like to sincerely thank Ingri Harkins of The Idaho Observer for having the courage to write and publish the exceptional article we are sharing here with you about this extraordinary—yet not generally very well known—herb. Once you read the following, you'll probably see why the FDA and AMA police have tried so hard to "protect" you from this powerful herbal gift.

AUGUST 2000 INGRI HARKINS

(from The Idaho Observer)

Chaparral is one of the best non-toxic blood purifiers on Earth. The history of chaparral dates back to ancient Indian times, when medicine men administered chaparral tea brewed from the leaves of the desert creosote bush.

The Shoshone Indians used chaparral tea as a cold remedy, a diuretic, and a venereal aid. The Papago Indians used chaparral both internally and externally. It was considered a universal remedy for stiff joints, festering sores, poisonous bites, and menstrual cramps. The dried and powdered leaves were used on a newborn infant's navel to promote healing, and a tea of the leaves was applied externally to the mother's breasts to stimulate the flow of milk.

The Pima Indians relied on chaparral when they needed an emetic to cleanse the stomach. The resourceful Pima sometimes heated creosote bush branch tips to obtain healing sap which they dropped into the cavity of an aching tooth.

The Coahuilla Indians called chaparral a-tukul and drank chaparral tea for bowel complaints and consumption. They also gave it to horses suffering from distemper and colds.

It is interesting to note that the scope of Native pathology consisted of bowel and stomach complaints, coughs, colds, milk fevers, sore eyes (from fire smoke), sprains, muscle soreness, injury, and occasional rheumatism. After White contact, which included White man's trading items of sugar and alcohol, measles, whooping cough, smallpox, venereal disease, and tuberculosis were introduced.

Chaparral was an official medicament in the United States Pharmacopoeia from 1842 through 1942, and was listed as an expectorant and pulmonary antiseptic.

Before my mother knew about other herbs for healing, our family used chaparral as a cure-all for whatever ailed us. The alkalinizing, cleansing action of chaparral could always be counted on to do the job of effecting a cure, since most of our illnesses were caused from excess toxicity accumulating in our bodies.

The most dramatic cure was when my mother developed a polyp in her uterus which was the size of a small lemon, and the doctors who diagnosed her condition recommended a hysterectomy. She politely declined and began drinking chaparral tea and taking chaparral capsules in earnest. A couple months later, when she returned to the same doctors for a pap smear and diagnosis, they were sure they must have made some mistake—since there was not a trace of the original tumor and her pap smear came back totally normal.

We have since shared the value of using chaparral with other women who have tumors or cysts in their reproductive organs. All the women who have used chaparral on a daily basis for several weeks report back that their tumor/cyst has disappeared and they are ever so grateful for learning about this wonderful plant.

Chaparral is best known today as an anti-cancer agent. There are countless testimonies of people who have used this herb successfully to rid their bodies of melanomas, tumors, and most forms of cancer. Jason Winters Tea, a popular cancer remedy, contains chaparral as its number-one ingredient. Winters claims that he cured his cancer using his proprietary formula of three herbs. [Editor's note: There is a great story of determination concerning the history and evolution of this tea. For awhile, during the early 1990s FDA/AMA war against chaparral, Jason Winters Tea had another ingredient listed in place of chaparral. Now chaparral is back, but not listed as the main ingredient. Jason Winters Tea is widely available through health stores and related merchandisers. Just be sure to check the ingredients in case the store is pushing old stock that may not contain the chaparral ingredient.]

I have often referred to chaparral as an "internal detergent". I tell people: "So you bathe everyday, but never think about giving the inside of your body a bath? If you do not do regular detoxing and internal cleansing, you are welcoming health problems into your life."

So how does chaparral work to reduce and eliminate malignant tumors and other complaints? The following is paraphrased from Dr. Kelly's book One Answer To Cancer:

As a blood purifier, chaparral cleanses deep into the tissues and assists the body in eliminating toxic debris. In our modern society our pancreas, liver, and other tissues and organs are so congested with poisons from pharmaceutical medications, sprays, metallic poisons, and other pollutants that our organs cannot carry on normal activity. This serves as an antagonist to the enzyme, mineral, and vitamin metabolism in our bodies. In cancer, specifically, the pancreatic enzymes are locked with the antagonists and are rendered totally ineffective. By chelating these antagonists (with chaparral) from the pancreatic enzymes, we find that the person's own cancer defenses take over and destroy the malignant tumor. It has also been found that chaparral works well in chelating the toxins and drug residues out of those who have been drug addicts.

Fifteen years ago I was in Tempe, Arizona, working at Gentle Strength Food Co-Op in the herb section. Many people came to our department for various ailments. Although we were not supposed to diagnose and prescribe, I couldn't help sharing with people the power of the creosote bush that was native to the area.

One man in his late 20s wanted something that would help his complexion. I suggested that he take six chaparral capsules a day for a week, and then take ten capsules a day after that, spread out in doses of three times a day. He came back after a couple of weeks elated with the results. His complexion had improved dramatically. But the most significant change for him was his steady weight loss and increased energy level.

He began sharing chaparral with all his family members. His mother, who had suffered from arthritis, was also deriving tremendous relief by taking chaparral capsules daily. He came in every couple of weeks for more and more chaparral capsules to share with his friends and others who crossed his path.

Another woman came in who was suffering terribly from poison ivy. I suggested she make a poultice with chaparral leaves and leave it on overnight. She, too, came by to thank me since the itchy rash was completely gone when she removed the poultice in the morning.

Naturopath Eileen Marsh gave the following testimony:

"I started taking two tablets of chaparral with each meal, and in six weeks I noticed a marvelous sense of well being. I also noticed a little 'crick' noise I had heard in my knee when I went upstairs had vanished. So then I decided to take four with each meal and see the effect, for I always believe in being my own guinea pig. After five days, I noticed that a warty cyst on my skin had completely flattened. I had been trying for at least a year to get rid of it. Now I know that it helps arthritis and has an effect on 'lumps' and bumps.

"I then experimented with taking five with each meal. This made me feel wonderful. It made me have four to five bowel movements a day, so although it is not a laxative, it helps the bowel.

"I have a cancer patient who is taking 24 tablets a day, six with each meal and six just before retiring. It has already reduced the swollen look of his face and enables him to pull his ear now without pain, all in one week, so it does have a beneficial effect."

Before trying this yourself, you need to know that chaparral is the most powerful detoxifier I know of. Most people experience their skin breaking out in pimples or rashes when taking it the first few days.

Start out slow and increase your water intake. A dear friend of mine, who had terrible body odor and admitted to having taken LSD regularly over the course of a year in his youth, took a concentrated blood purifier whose main ingredient was chaparral. He experienced hallucinating at the job site and luckily trusted my explanation of chaparral's properties and continued to take the product.

The first week of consumption is often an unpleasant experience, as one can go through a period of headaches and low energy as the toxins surface. However, the end results are definitely worth the temporary, initial discomfort.

I, personally, have known when chaparral needs to be incorporated into my daily regimen. After experiencing a lot of stress coupled with chemtrails, I knew I was due for several weeks of daily chaparral ingestion. Most of us do not do anything until crisis hits, and it hit me in the form of hayfever. I immediately began to make up chaparral and cayenne capsules, and am gratefully experiencing the benefits.

Chaparral is very inexpensive and can be purchased in many forms at your local health-food store. Through my many years of using and recommending this herb, I have found no adverse side effects.

The FDA attempted to take it off the market in the early 1990s, claiming that it caused damage to the liver. It has since been vindicated enough to be available today. The pharmaceutical industry has long been envious of products that grow wild in your own yard since they cannot patent them. As long as natural, inexpensive remedies in the form of herbs or weeds are growing around us, we need to learn how to utilize them.

We encourage you to make chaparral a key ingredient in your own personal pharmacy.

We would love to hear from you!

At This Holiday Season Awaken The Gift Of Your God-self Within

11/30/00 ESU "JESUS" SANANDA

Good evening, my friend. It is I, Esu "Jesus" Sananda, come in the Radiance of our Father, Creator God—The One Light.

Be at peace, for there is great work yet to be accomplished and the time is drawing near when darkness will be a thing of the past.

Your world's population is in great need of remembering the Christ Within. The Christ Within does NOT mean find Jesus within. The Christ Within means developing an awareness of the Infinite Creator God who lives within and through you. Such an awareness includes a personal understanding of your Divine inner connection to Source.

This is to say that each and every one of you who read this should be consciously striving to recognize for SELF the meaning of the statement "I and my Father are One." This was not some statement meant for just me, Esu "Jesus"—but rather, a statement used to express to you ones the true nature of your own spiritual heritage.

Let not the perception of separation from God, the Creator of All That Is, linger within your mind, for this is the greatest LIE! We are all of the same Source. I am NOT greater than are you with respect to OUR Father. I am simply a brother who has progressed further in my understanding and recognition of the ONENESS we all share with Creator Source—The One Light. That is one reason our Father has given me the name Sananda, which means "One with God". It is a level of accomplishment or progress that ALL may attain.

The majority of your world perceives God as some sort of mythical entity who sits on a throne "out there" somewhere, in a mythical place called Heaven. No, dear ones; this is NOT the case.

Creator Source is a LIVING God who resides within each of you, as well as within every speck of matter, and likewise permeates the entirety of "empty" space, all the planetary bodies, and all perceivable expanses of the universes. Within this endless domain that we often refer to as The Creation, is the All That Is—Creator Source.

This God-Energy that penetrates all matter is often referred to as prana. Prana is the Infinite Life-Force Energy (which is God) in its un-focused state. Man (This includes woman; I just use the term "man" in a generic sense for simplification sake.) was created in the image of God—in that all the abilities and attributes of God are given to man. Man alone has the ability to focus and use this infinite Life-Force Energy as he will. Man alone is granted free will to choose his own path—even if the path chosen is one wherein man chooses to ignore the Inner Connection that gives the very breath of life to the physical form and gives consciousness its ability to think.

There are Laws that govern all of God's creations. The highest and purest is the Law of Love which states: GOD LOVES ALL HIS CREATIONS WITHOUT CONDITIONS OR JUDGEMENT, AND FOREVER OFFERS THIS LOVE TO ALL ONES, UNCONDITIONALLY, AT ALL TIMES.

This may be difficult for many ones to believe—that God judges you NOT! God IS you and you are God. God knows that many of His children have lost conscious awareness of this Inner Connectedness that permeates all ones. He also knows that what you do in your ignorance is a result of this same ignorance. He also experiences along with you the many perceptions you carry around regarding self and others. There is complete understanding of your condition, and still God loves you with all of His heart and all of His being, for God IS you and you ARE God!

There are many ones among the various religious factions and priesthoods of your planet who have taken the many teachings I taught over two thousand years ago and perverted their meanings and deliberately altered them so as to keep their "flock" under their own control and determination. I spoke these same concepts of Oneness then, as I do today, for it is The Truth that I came forth to example to the world.

Man longs for the understanding and remembrance of his true spiritual heritage. Man longs for the wholeness that goes along with this understanding. There is NO separation when you KNOW for yourself that: I (you) and our Father are One!

Many denounce this teaching today as they did, lo those many years ago. For it is beyond the conscious grasp of many that they ARE the Living God, manifest, and that through all of His creations God expresses and experiences. There is nothing but Oneness.

I know you each, for you are as I am. Give recognition to the inner God-connection. Acknowledge your own spiritual self, and in so doing you acknowledge Creator God.

The illusion of separation is a byproduct of several factors. The greatest factor is your choice to gaze upon conflicts of others and, in your awareness of a conflict, you perceive a separation or a division, and ones want to try to determine who is "right" and who is "wrong".

Many hundreds of thousands of millennia past, man existed in the highest states of Awareness and Oneness with God. All were perfect creations who expressed themselves deliberately and purposefully, and for many thousands of millennia all was well.

Over time, ones began to compete with others as to who could create the most grand and most beautiful that could be expressed through them. In undertaking such activities, others were called upon to judge. This created the first conflict—what many of you would call a contest.

How can you judge one of God's creations to be greater, of more importance, or more perfect than another? This question then led to the creation of "rules" by which the "game" or contest would be "played". This led to further division, as "rules" place parameters and limitations upon the participants who would otherwise know no limitations.

These SELF-IMPOSED limitations quickly (relative to the many millennia of perfection) led to the downward spiral of perceived separation that now exists upon your world. The first "loser" of a competition was caused to experience great self-doubt, and thus were created the first "seeds of doubt" which caused ones to ponder their perfection and their connection to and with Source.

And yet this judgment was not from within self, but rather from others who judged according to the "rules" of the competition. So great was this wave of negativity that all ones, everywhere, focused upon the event, and thus came about the great perception of duality—wherein ones questioned their own self-worth and validity.

Likewise was born a great challenge to be overcome. That is, as these doubting ones became caught-up in the perception of separation, their vibratory rates began to lower and lower to the point of near solid mass. Thus the term “fallen ones” (or “fallen angels”) has come to be known as those who are somehow lesser.

No! These so-called “fallen” ones are merely aspects of God who gazed upon that which was a self perception of doubt, and then followed that idea, in an exploratory manner, until such point as they manifested the “reality” of separation for themselves.

This self perception of doubt and separation is NOT a perception held by Creator God, and therefore it simply is NOT TRUE. Often, when well-meaning ones attempted to “rescue” these “fallen” ones, they too would become enmeshed in these ones’ perceptions, in an empathic manner, and they too would become trapped in their own inner conflict with self doubt and separation from Source.

Over many hundreds of thousands of millennia, the condition as now exists on your world (and others like yours) is the result of this once original thought of competition as just described. The majority of ones on your world are still living and re-creating this LIE of separation. The majority see themselves as lesser than God. They make those of your brothers such as myself (“Jesus”), Buddha, and Mohammad out to be God, and offer their praise and worship to these ones who are “out there” somewhere.

This is an error in understanding and a false humility brought about through the ignorance that results from the very separation itself. The answer to this dilemma is to go within, and still the mind, and ask with all your heart for Creator Source—God, Allah, Jehovah, Buddha, Mohammad, Jesus, Aton, or any other name you ones wish to ascribe to the Prime Mover and Infinite Source of All That Is—to bring forth greater understanding and awareness of the true nature of the God-self. Ask this often and at all times of perceived confusion. FEEL His Radiant Light fill you from within.

As the diligent student continues along this path, there will come great rewards and greater personal responsibility wherein you will perceive that to deliberately lie, cheat, steal, covet another’s possessions, or to perceive any sort of lack only serves to negate your belief in the inner God-self (and the Perfection in which you were created), and thus lowers your vibratory rate, and thus you will naturally feel un-ease. It will take great discipline and self determination to “hold the course” and thus maintain and elevate your vibratory rate to an ever increasing level, until such time as you have the recognition of what has been widely termed the “Christ consciousness” state. This is another name for the recognition—and full realization, without doubt or reservation—that: I (you) and my Father-God are One!

The challenges you will face are indeed great, for they challenge the lie that is deeply rooted within. And your own beliefs, fears, and doubts will need to be studied and seen for what they truly are—the “weeds” in your garden, not sewn of God when He created you, but rather created by man in his perceptual state of ignorance, doubt, and separation. With each of these “weeds” that you confront and pull, you will become stronger, wiser, and better prepared to pull the next weed—tap root and all—on your way to the “Christ consciousness” state.

With this cleansing of the mind will also come greater and greater freedom from the material world, and your perception of self and others will become greatly shifted. For example, you will not see an enemy; rather, you will see God manifest in all ones, some of whom will be struggling greatly with the material world and their own ignorance, brought about from an unnecessary sense of loneliness, sorrow, and anger that results from the belief in the IDEA of separation from Source.

When you can see that God is the “Spark of Life” in ALL ones, you will not view anyone the same, ever again. Learn to focus the Life-Force (prana) Energy that flows through you, and send it forth with the intention of doing good, for all who come your way. This Energy is truly limitless, and is the substance from which all matter is manifest. With diligent practice and continual striving for greater Understanding, you will be able to manifest as did I show to the world as “Jesus”.

This IS the nature of your TRUE spiritual self. When there are no self-imposed limitations, no self doubts, nor feelings of separation, then you will have regained your rightful place as a Christed being who is “One with Creator God”.

I offer this message at this time, for it is often during this annual time-frame of your Holiday Season that the majority remember and acknowledge my Energy and the example I left with you. Even in its distorted teaching, that Energy carries with it great INNER emotional stirrings as ones are caused to recognize (remember) that which they once possessed—a Higher Perfect Understanding of who YOU and I REALLY are. Honor not the man that I was, but rather the Ideal for which I stood and brought forth as example to ALL ones. Know also that: “That which I do, so too can you do, and MUCH more.”

Go within and still the mind. Let go of that which happened yesterday. Focus upon where you are heading, and KNOW that it is Grand, Beautiful, and Perfect—for the TRUE destination of mankind is returning to the Perfection in which you are created, in which YOU ARE TRULY ONE WITH CREATOR GOD WITHIN.

I am Esu “Jesus” Sananda. I come in and of The One Light—Creator Source—who lives within us all. Call upon me and I will come, for I am as God IS—as close as your breath.

My greatest pleasure is to assist another to find re-cognition of the God-self within. May you forever seek within to KNOW THYSELF and KNOW THAT YOU ARE AS GOD IS. Hold this to be true, and never again speak of self, or look upon another, as somehow being lesser.

Much Love, Light, and Peace to you all, my Brothers and Sisters. Salu!

Daring Journalists Victorious In FOX News Censorship Case

Jury Awards Nearly $500,000—FOX To Appeal Verdict

Editor's note: The following superbly revealing story becomes all the more worth sharing if you ever have the chance to meet these courageous journalists in person and discover what warm and sincere professionals they are. Talk about being Tested Bigtime and electing to resolutely stand up for The Truth!

Of course the larger reason for sharing this story is to make the point—by way of a concrete, up-close-and-personal example—of just how the media is controlled. This is a powerful example to share with those friends of yours who “just can’t believe” the media is anything but a straightforward presenter of news and related information. (Oh, barf!)

Just studying the single example of how the media has been presenting the election circus is enough to observe not only how these tightly scripted “entertainers” are very selective in what they report versus what they ignore, but then there’s the subtle (some would say obvious) mind control injected almost subliminally: You’re told what to get mad about and what to overlook; you’re told what to think if you want to be “in” and what you should not question because the “experts” say such and such is what’s important.

This story also has a kind of an “imbedded commercial message” since it makes a strong case for WHY we need sources of information such as The SPECTRUM—and under what great odds we try to stay alive. (As this note is being written and this article processed, we really don’t even know if or when you might be seeing this—due to the precarious nature of our funding situation—though we work as if there will indeed be a paper, and on schedule.)

You sure didn’t see a report of this matter on FOX television news or anywhere else—nor would you. Yet regular readers of The SPECTRUM are well aware of the multinational corporate giant Monsanto and their pivotal (some would say diabolical) role in advancing genetically engineered foods and related products, such as the Bovine Growth Hormone, dubbed BGH—which then enters the dairy products we consume from cows who have been injected with the BGH. (Moreover, regular SPECTRUM readers are even aware of the wonderful, Truth-is-stranger-than-fiction tidbit about employees at Monsanto’s headquarters voting overwhelmingly AGAINST using their own genetically modified food products at their own cafeteria! Hmmnn.)

We would like to sincerely thank a very professional organization—Paul Hall and his The Jubilee newspaper (209-742-6397)—for not only allowing us to reprint this story, but assisting us by providing an electronic format of the story which made our processing job a lot easier than it could have been. They had already done the job of reporting most of this milestone journalistic event, and therefore there was certainly no need for us to “reinvent the wheel” in order to share the basic story.

Rather, read on and KNOW that, with persistence, The Truth can prevail. Spread this far and wide—and show the controlled media puppets that they’ve only helped to put a Bright Light on their often dark and dirty secret life.

Oh—and by the way—if The SPECTRUM can stay afloat through your financial help, we promise to fill-in some VERY interesting “color” about this matter by way of an in-depth interview with these resolutely courageous journalists who are as articulate as they are sincere. For teasers, what will we cover? How about the dynamite, devastating legal deposition in defense of these journalists from longtime “Mr. Evening News” Walter Cronkite. Walter—who has had a lot of time to think about his career from the perspective of retirement—spelled out in no uncertain terms his knowledge of (and feelings about) the chronic, sleazy, media manipulation that has been, in his experience, the norm of behavior in the broadcasting business.

And then there is the live testimony of Ralph Nader who, despite being in the thick of his presidential campaign duties when it was time to fulfill a promise made much earlier, cleared his schedule and pathway to be in that Florida courtroom on behalf of these journalists and the public welfare issue they held firm about.

SEPTEMBER/OCTOBER 2000
THE JUBILEE NEWSPAPER

Award-winning journalists
Steve Wilson and Jane Akre emerged from a Tampa courtroom with an unprecedented victory over FOX Television Network and ostensibly the big guns of chemical manufacturer Monsanto.

Editor's Note: The Jubilee’s interest in this unprecedented story is because it is the first time journalists from the dominant media have actually had the fortitude to challenge their employer for deliberately altering a story due to pressure from a multinational company. We have reported for over a decade how the media lies to cover up corruption, both government and private, here now is the proof in the pudding – pudding, we might add, that is made with tainted milk.

After five weeks of trial and deliberations lasting over six hours, a Hillsborough (Florida) Circuit Court jury found that journalist Jane Akre was fired for threatening to report her employer to the FCC after being pressured to broadcast a false, distorted, or slanted news report. The husband and wife journalistic duo were fired in December, 1997, because the two refused to broadcast a story they knew to be false and misleading. Specifically, the couple would not agree to edits in their story that withheld pertinent information from the public about the safety of milk sold in supermarkets throughout Florida and the nation.

The four-part series questioning the safety of milk tainted with the controversial hormone BGH became a year-long debate after Monsanto, the manufacturer of BGH, sent threatening letters to FOX. Wilson and Akre subsequently filed suit against their employer, FOX affiliate WTVT (Channel 13 in Tampa, Florida) in April of 1998 using the Florida Whistleblower Act. Wilson and Akre alleged FOX executives ordered them to lie in their television series that criticized the use of the controversial hormone. Ultimately, using a provision in their contract, FOX fired the couple.

The jury awarded $425,000 in damages to Jane Akre on August 18, 2000, after finding that FOX fired Akre solely because she threatened to blow the whistle to the FCC. The jury did not award Wilson any damages because his termination was NOT based solely on a threat to call the FCC. In order for the jury to find WTVT violated the Florida Whistleblower Act in terminating Wilson or Akre, they had to find it was the sole reason for the termination. Wilson speculates the jury did not sustain his complaint, probably because FOX raised other issues as possible reasons for his termination (i.e. discussion of the story on the Internet violated the confidentiality provisions of his contract).

Wilson and Akre twice refused FOX's six-digit offers to keep quiet about what they knew before filing their case, and survived three FOX efforts to have their case summarily dismissed. It is the first time journalists have sought the protection of a whistleblower law to acquire a legal remedy after being fired for refusing to distort the news.

Wilson and Akre have not been offered full-time work in the "mainstream media" since their experience at FOX and in court.

DISPUTE BACKGROUND

When Steve Wilson and Jane Akre were hired by Tampa, Florida, FOX affiliate WTVT in December 1996, Steve was to be a part-time investigative reporter providing programs for key ratings periods known as "sweeps" and Jane was hired full-time as an investigative journalist and weekend anchor. The station told the journalists to produce hard-hitting, 60 Minutes-style investigative reporting—something Steve Wilson is particularly known for.

According to Wilson, WTVT promised that when their stories generated the inevitable heat and pressure from the subjects of their investigative reports, station managers would stand up and support them and ultimately broadcast the truth. They promised that the people and companies who would threaten to sue or cancel their advertising would never force the station to back down and pull the stories, or edit the heart of them.

Immediately the two began work on a story involving the use of Posilac, the controversial hormone widely used by dairy farmers.

Posilac is a genetically engineered replica of a hormone cows produce naturally to spur growth. By injecting the hormone twice a week into cows, farmers can increase milk production by as much as one-third. Posilac is the Monsanto brand-name for bovine growth hormone, or BGH.

Even though the FDA approved the hormone for use on cows in 1993, many scientists have voiced strong concerns about its safety for humans and bovines. BGH is banned throughout Europe and is unapproved in several other countries because of human health concerns. Scientists claim BGH is linked to higher levels of a growth factor suspected of promoting tumors in humans. Another concern is that BGH increases the incidence of infection in cows, with a variety of consequences. Many farmers are forced to inject their animals with powerful drugs to fight infections and other side-effects experienced by cows treated with the BGH.

No labeling law in Florida requires milk producers to tell consumers when their milk or other dairy products come from cows treated with the controversial hormone. In fact, Monsanto has fought efforts by dairies that do NOT use Posilac from saying so on their labels. Ben and Jerry's ice cream, which buys only from farmers who do not inject their cows with BGH, recently was forced into a costly fight with Monsanto over the labeling issue and ultimately secured a legal victory in Illinois that allows them to label their products "artificial-BGH-free".

When questions were raised about the safety of milk from cows treated with Posilac, some Florida grocers said they would request their milk providers not use it. And many promised they would not sell milk produced by cows being injected with BGH—at least until the public was comfortable with it.

Akre decided her first scoop at WTVT would be to see if that promise was being kept. Her husband (Steve Wilson) would assist her. What they found would be as shocking as the artificial hormone itself. In a random check of seven Florida dairy farmers, all seven were using BGH, which raised the obvious question: could Florida grocers tout their milk as BGH-free?

MONSANTO THREATS

While BGH helps farmers milk their cows, BGH also helps Monsanto milk the farmers of billions of dollars each year.

After running expensive TV and radio promos for weeks, the four-part series was scheduled to run during the February 1997 sweeps period. Three days before the series was to air, however, Monsanto attorney John Walsh sent a threatening five-page letter to Roger Ailes, President of FOX News Corporation, dated February 21, 1997.

Walsh criticized the series' premise and "reporting techniques" used by the couple. The multinational corporate giant said they were concerned about the "assault on their integrity...blatantly carried on by Ms. Akre and Mr. Wilson".

The letter put an even sharper edge on Monsanto's point in advising the television execs to back off: "There is a lot at stake in what is going on in Florida, not only for Monsanto, but also for FOX News and its owner" and "on behalf of Monsanto, I ask that you and your FOX News colleagues consider thoroughly what is at stake and the enormous damage that can be done by the reckless presentation of unsupported speculation as fact and the equally reckless publication of unsupported accusations or innuendo of fraud, deception and bribery in connection with something as serious as the obtaining of approvals for a product such as rBST." [or BGH]

After reviewing the letter, provided by their employer, Wilson and Akre advised station management that nothing in the letter raised any credible claim as to the truthfulness, accuracy, or fairness of their four-part report.

The decision was made, however, to postpone the airing of the series in order to "carefully review claims made in the letter".

According to court documents, the station's news director at the time, Daniel Webster, admitted to Wilson and Akre that the reports were being withheld solely because of the Monsanto letter.

What followed was a nearly nine-month process in which Wilson and Akre were ordered to write and re-write some 83 versions of the broadcast script. Meanwhile, FOX repeatedly threatened and carried out various threats of retaliatory employment actions to coerce their reporters to broadcast information that Wilson and Akre demonstrated as unfair, inaccurate, false, and misleading.

The revision process was becoming arduous. Rather than back their journalists as promised, FOX management took the side of Monsanto and suddenly began arguing that their own reporters were being "unprofessional".

TERMINATION CRUSADE

After attempts to loosen the noose around their neck proved unsuccessful, Monsanto would send another letter to FOX. This time the threats became even more pointed, predicting "dire consequences for FOX News" should it broadcast certain information disputed by Monsanto. The letter also rejected an offer to conduct an additional interview [by Wilson and Akre] because Monsanto had concluded interview subjects would "become the target of accusations repeated by Ms. Akre by unidentified and, in all probability, scientifically incompetent persons".

In response to this second letter, the rescheduled broadcasts were postponed yet again without explanation to Wilson and Akre and another meeting was scheduled for Wednesday, March 5, 1997, with Wilson, Akre and WTVT news management and their staff and outside counsel. Without explanation, however, Wilson and Akre were excluded from the meeting and were subsequently directed to revise their reports and provide additional documentation for new questions that were raised. A two-inch binder was promptly provided by Wilson and, in further discussions with management, Wilson and Akre agreed to make numerous additional changes to the script.

According to the suit filed by Wilson and Akre, FOX management would ignore the documentation they provided which “clearly verified the truth and accuracy” of the reports as written and [FOX] would further instruct the duo to “include information [in their report] which plaintiffs [Wilson and Akre] knew to be false or misleading”.

The crusade to rid themselves of the uncompromising husband and wife team and their damaging report was intensified when FOX’s own station counsel, Carolyn Forrest, wrote a letter charging the journalists’ reports contained “unfair treatment, unbalanced attacks, careless representations, questionable links to unrelated points or unsubstantiated assertions”.

The letter also offered to release the duo from their employment contracts and warned that “failure to adhere to and cooperate with our procedures and directions constitute insubordination and are a breach of your employment agreement”. The letter was sent to the President of the FOX Television Stations, the largest group of stations in America, and to other top officials throughout the company.

Pleas to Station Manager David Boylan to review the reports by Wilson and Akre were summarily rejected. Boylan’s response was that he “wasn’t interested” in the story and, instead, pressured Wilson and Akre to follow whatever directions company lawyers made regardless of how such directed changes “may conflict with the truth or fairness of the broadcasts”. He made it clear that failure to do so would have detrimental effects on the employment status and future careers of Wilson and Akre, warning them: “Are you sure this is a hill you’re willing to die on?”

Wilson and Akre assert that on April 16, 1997, Boylan ordered them to broadcast material known to be false and misleading.

“We paid $3 billion for these television stations” Boylan touted. “We will decide what the news is. The news is what we tell you it is.” Boylan then notified both Wilson and Akre: “You will be fired for insubordination within 48 hours.”

Undaunted, Wilson and Akre (with some 50-odd years of combined journalism experience) responded by informing the station manager that if a false and misleading report were aired, it would be their responsibility to file a complaint with the Federal Communications Commission charging willful and intentional falsification of the news by a television licensee, a violation of the Communications Act of 1934.

HUSH MONEY

Given the impasse, Boylan suggested the other alternative [to firing them] was a settlement in which both Wilson and Akre would be paid for the remainder of 1997 in exchange for a confidentiality agreement not to disclose details of the BGH story or how it had been handled at WTVT. The offer was refused.

Wilson and Akre were not terminated within 48 hours as promised. Wilson reports that he sent letters to Forrest reasserting his willingness to cooperate as long as he did not have to compromise the integrity of the story by adding false or misleading statements.

By May 6, Wilson and Akre were again offered “no-show consultant” jobs—a deal tantamount to termination with pay for the remainder of the first and second year of the two-year contract. The deal offered the duo to be paid full salary in exchange for a release of “all potential claims they have or may have against the company and its related entities and persons, and for [Wilson/Akre’s] silence on all information, knowledge, or data about the company or related entities which has been designated and/or treated as confidential”. (The jury did NOT hear about the second hush deal since the judge decided it was part of a “settlement offer” and not admissible.)

The second offer was also flatly rejected. Incredibly, on May 29, 1997, Forrest telephoned Wilson saying: “I don’t think this story is worth going to court and to trial spending a couple of hundred thousand dollars to fight Monsanto.” Forrest added: “It doesn’t matter if the facts are true but whether a possible lawsuit by the chemical maker Monsanto could be dismissed quickly and easily by summary judgment.”

It was clear the threat by Monsanto affected the thinking of management severely. Wilson was not willing to compromise his principles but continued to make an attempt to placate his employer in the interest of getting the facts to the public. By June 19 the script had been rewritten 18 times. Wilson maintains that even though editors constantly omitted material, at no point could they identify a single example of an inaccurate or misreported fact in any of his numerous scripts.

Further attempts by management and Wilson were made to edit the script in a way pleasing to all, but WTVT counsel refused to approve the versions acceptable to Wilson, Akre, and VP of News Mr. Metlin. Still further changes were made and a new air date was set for August 10, but counsel would again reject it; it would be the sixth air date set and cancelled by WTVT.

Wilson and Akre took a scheduled vacation and while away were notified they may be terminated. A provision in their contract allowed the company to terminate them by December 2, 1997, if written notice was provided by September 1, 1997, to September 21, 1997. Wilson received his termination notification by mail within the prescribed time. He was dismissed “without cause”. Akre returned to work because she maintains she had not been notified of her termination until one day after the contractually stipulated notice period had ended.

Wilson contested his termination in a letter to Station Manager Boylan, stating his termination was not “without cause” as claimed but was actually in retaliation for his refusal to go along with the station’s “desire to slant the story in favor of a corporate giant who has threatened you with ‘dire consequences’ for telling the truth on television”.

Akre wrote a similar letter to Boylan contesting her dismissal but also charged the station with “Breach of Contract” citing her one-day-late notice. (She included this in her suit against WTVT, but Circuit Judge Ralph Steinberg threw it out on the last day of trial.)

Incredibly, on September 24, 1997, the VP of News Mr. Metlin, asked the duo to remake two more versions—one they liked and one management would approve. At this point the Wilson/Akre team had already submitted over 80 versions of the script. While writing yet two more versions (per Metlin’s request) the two were suspended for 10 days without pay for “insubordination as evidenced by their September letters contesting their dismissal and indicating they would pursue remedies through the FCC and courts”. And further, they were told, they must finish the two versions (without pay) or “risk termination for cause, the cause being failure to perform work as assigned”.

Wilson and Akre finished the last two rewrites without pay even though—as a result of their suspension—they were locked out of their building and computers where their notes and files were stored. Boylan would recant his “without pay” decree but add another week to the suspension. The WTVT general manager would then promise NOT to terminate them and added that the story would run. Then, suddenly, Wilson and Akre were sent a fax from the FOX Inc. Los Angeles headquarters announcing: "Your services are terminated on December 2, 1997."

Ultimately, FOX did air their own version of the four-part series—one which Monsanto would not likely sue them for airing. In court papers, FOX denied it wanted to broadcast an uncritical piece, saying it did air "a hard-hitting investigative piece on a subject of controversy that contained a number of statements highly unfavorable to Monsanto".

But Akre and Wilson say the station was still catering to Monsanto. They said FOX's use of lawyers to alter scripts compromised the journalistic integrity of the process.

"Nathan Lang, WTVT's new reporter for the story, did many of the things we refused to do" Wilson said.

Lang omitted several charges in the Akre-Wilson stories:

- Information that Monsanto had sued to stop ecologically conscious companies from labeling its milk as free from the synthetic hormone.

- Allegations that grocery chains misled customers about their efforts to avoid selling milk from treated cows.

- Monsanto's history of manufacturing government-approved products that later proved harmful, such as Agent Orange and PCB.

Did WTVT drag the "editing" process out long enough to exercise the company's option to end the two-year contract a year early? Wilson told The Jubilee: "Perhaps that was their goal near the end of the process, but for a long while I think they figured they could pressure us into either running the story the way they/Monsanto wanted, or just run us off altogether and get rid of their 'problem' that way. In the end, by throwing away the final scripts without even reading them (one of which was written exactly the way they claimed they wanted it), they made it clear they had no intention of running anything [from us]."

As late as April of 1998—four months after the termination of Wilson and Akre and the same month Wilson and Akre filed their suit—FOX was quoted in news reports saying they had no plans to run the story. Wilson says it was after the suit was filed that FOX attorneys suggested they do run the series so that FOX could not be accused of having no intention of doing the story. The series ran in May of that year. Wilson said airing the piece was not because they had important things to tell, but rather, "It was pure damage control."

Following their termination Wilson and Akre filed suit—seeking protection under Florida's Whistleblower Act. (As in many states, Florida protects workers who are fired either for refusing to participate in an activity that is against the law, or for threatening to report such activity to a government agency.)

TRIAL AFTERMATH

The Wilson-Akre-FOX relationship became a tumultuous one, starting with the day the first Monsanto threat letter arrived at WTVT-TV. And now, after the trial, the jury's decision has even become a point of controversy.

FOX is calling their obvious $425,000 loss a "victory" since Steve Wilson, who represented himself, was unsuccessful in getting any financial relief from the jury. And because, FOX says, the jury did not find that WTVT was guilty of actually distorting the news.

Wilson disagrees: "First, we did not go to court for money; we went to get a jury to establish that this television station did deliberately pressure us to falsify the news and that we were fired because we threatened to report them...and the jury saw that to be the case by finding for Jane" Wilson told The Jubilee.

The jury determined Akre was fired for threatening to report WTVT to the FCC for an "activity, policy or practice of the employer that is in violation of a law". In this case, the violated law was the FCC Act of 1934, which prohibits "the deliberate falsification or distortion of the news".

The question now becomes whether the Whistleblower Law, which was clearly violated, automatically implies that an actual violation of the law (FCC Act of 1934) took place or whether the plaintiff [Akre] simply "believed" it did. The Whistleblower Law itself, as cited in the jury instructions, does not use the term "reasonable belief" anywhere. It is not until the judge interprets the law (Fla. Stat §448.102) in the jury instructions that we see the term that has caused the new rift between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

FOX Attorney Ted Russell told The Jubilee that: "The jury's only requirement (per their instructions) was to determine if Akre 'reasonably believed' FOX was distorting or falsifying the news...not that FOX actually did."

Tom Johnson, Akre's attorney, responded: "To a degree, FOX is right, but several things have to be taken into consideration. First, the jury definitely found that WTVT violated the Whistleblower Act. That ought to be bad enough for a television station." Secondly, Johnson explained: "Was the jury required to find that there was a violation of the Law (FCC Act of 1934 which prohibits the deliberate falsification or distortion of the news)? No.

"The jury was required to find that Jane had a good-faith reasonable belief that there was a violation. That leaves us with a six member jury who found any objective person would have believed that WTVT's actions violated the FCC Act of 1934."

Johnson says there are two reasons the jury did not find that there was an actual violation [of the FCC Act]. "One, only the FCC can determine if there was an actual violation; the courts can't do that. And second, they weren't required to." It is more inappropriate for FOX to claim the jury did not find FOX violated the FCC Act than it is for Wilson to say they did.

While the WTVT case was never brought before the FCC, Johnson stresses the jury found that any "objective, reasonable person would look at these circumstances and believe that Ms. Akre was entitled to think that there was a violation of the FCC Act of 1934. That means that however many FCC commissioners would have looked at it, they would have more than likely found the same thing—a violation of the FCC Act".

Technically, the jury's verdict did not prove the violation, "but where does that leave FOX?" Johnson snickered. "That leaves FOX in a place where they spent millions of dollars and five weeks trying to get six people to believe that there was no objective basis to believe that they [FOX] told somebody to slant and distort the news, and they couldn't do it. Now, if that's a badge of honor, I'll pin it on them myself."

So did the jury find that FOX did deliberately distort the news? Maybe not specifically, but they did find that FOX violated the Whistleblower Law, "and if you think about that" Johnson said, "that may be even more damning than violating the FCC Act itself because they retaliated against reporters who wanted to tell the truth".

"I don't care what Ted Russell says" Johnson quipped. "That jury found out that WTVT did the wrong thing, and they did the wrong thing about the truth. They did the wrong thing about something that has been entrusted to them by the public. They tried to mess the public over for fear of Monsanto and they got busted for it.

"The only adjudication that we have one way or another, as to whether or not FOX violated the FCC Act, is a jury verdict on August 18, 2000, that awarded somebody $425,000 for the damage FOX did to a reporter" Johnson concluded.

FOX, represented by Williams and Connelly (the same firm that represented Bill Clinton and brought us the definition of "is"), has spent an estimated $3 million trying to defend their in America" Wilson said. "You can stand up and do the right thing and not be destroyed in the process."

WHAT'S NEXT FOR WHISTLEBLOWING DUO?

Since leaving WTVT, the couple sold their "dream home" in a ritzy Florida neighborhood. "When our family income dropped to zero, it seemed prudent" Wilson said.

They now live in a modest home they purchased in Pinellas County, Florida. Wilson says the TV news business may have no place for him or his wife—leaving him convinced that executives are more concerned with selling advertising time than presenting quality stories.

"There's a growing mindset in this business, where they're marketing the news like they market socks or any other product" says Wilson. "Everybody should be concerned about that."

"We set out to tell Florida consumers the truth about a giant chemical company, and a powerful dairy lobby clearly doesn't want them to know" Wilson said. "That used to be something investigative reporters won awards for. As we've learned the hard way, it's something you can be fired for these days whenever a news organization places more value on its bottom line than on delivering the news to its viewers honestly.

"Had this been a story about some guy turning back odometers" Wilson said, "it would not be worth falling on your sword and ending a 28-year career. But this is about the difference between telling the truth and lying to people; this is about something we all pour on our kids' cereal."

position. Curious observers can only assume the $3 million is a bargain compared to the loss they might have incurred had they had the fortitude to take on Monsanto.

FOX's legal dream-team filed a motion and a 62-page memo asking the trial court to vacate the jury's decision in favor of Akre and to grant a directed verdict in favor of FOX. The motion will be heard October 26. The judge has already told FOX attorneys he is "not inclined" to change the jury's verdict. FOX plans to move the case to the appellate court, a process that can take many more months—and at an estimated $650 an hour for the Clinton shysters—another million bucks.

Steve Wilson has also filed a motion on his own behalf, asking the court to correct a ruling regarding the jury instructions in his case and to order a new trial on only his whistleblower claim. FOX, however, is arguing his motion was not filed in a timely manner, a matter the court will need to review.

Who Are Steve Wilson And Jane Akre?

STEVE WILSON has spent more than 28 years as a working journalist in print and broadcast news. His reporting is characterized by a passion for telling the truth in a hard-hitting, plain-talking, no-nonsense style.

Besides his position as Senior Investigative Reporter for Fox-owned WTVT in Tampa, he was Senior Investigative Correspondent for the nationally syndicated television newsmagazine Inside Edition for more than five years before resigning in 1996 to take a break from the constant travel demands of the national program.

Winner of four Emmys and numerous other awards, the National Press Club has honored him with an award for Consumer and Investigative Reporting on Television for a series of reports about faulty rear-door latches in 4.2 million Chrysler-made minivans. It was Wilson's reports that first revealed the hazard.

His reporting on the faulty latch situation also characterized Steve's tenaciousness on a story. When Chrysler finally responded with a proposed solution the government accepted, independent testing arranged by Steve showed the fix was worse than the original problem. Ultimately, the government withdrew its approval and Chrysler came up with a replacement part that would work.

Other recent Wilson reports have revealed fire hazards in Ford ignition switches, a series which prompted the largest-ever recall of automobiles in the U.S.; U.S. Senators taking expensive gifts and favors from special interest lobbyists; and the transgressions of TV preachers Robert Tilton, W.V. Grant, and Benny Hinn.

It was Wilson who also made news for stories that exposed ABC Newsman Sam Donaldson taking federal subsidies while he used his Sunday morning network soapbox to complain about others doing the same thing, and Dan Rather for his reporting years ago about a Los Angeles doctor CBS linked to insurance fraud.

Earlier in his career, Wilson syndicated his own investigative reports to television stations across the country. He also headed investigative units at an ABC-owned station in San Francisco, a CBS-owned station in New York, and he worked at stations in Buffalo and St. Joseph, Missouri.

JANE AKRE has spent 20 years as a network and local television reporter and anchor at various broadcast news operations throughout the country. Most recently she was Investigative Reporter and Anchor for FOX-owned WTVT-TV.

Her career has included numerous assignments in the specialty reporting areas of health and medical issues, as well as investigative and consumer reporting in addition to her anchor assignments. She has won a number of awards, including an Associated Press award for investigative reporting. The birth of her daughter in 1994 heightened her interest and curiosity about all issues related to health.

Akre began her broadcasting career in Albuquerque as a radio news director. She moved to television in 1980 when she accepted a weekend anchor job for an ABC affiliate in Tucson, and later accepted a reporter-anchor position at KTVI in St. Louis.

For three years she anchored and reported for CNN in Atlanta before moving to a main anchor position in the San Francisco market. Prior to anchoring positions in Tampa, Akre also anchored news broadcasts at WSVN in Miami.

David Icke's Journey: A First-Person Account

Editor's note: "We are on the cusp of an incredible global change. A crossroads where we make decisions which will influence life on Earth well into the future of what we call time. We can fling open the doors of the mental and emotional prisons which have confined the human race for thousands of years. Or we can allow the agents of that control to complete their agenda for the mental, emotional, spiritual, and physical enslavement of every man, woman, and child on the planet with a world government, army, central bank and currency, underpinned by a microchipped population.

"I know that sounds fantastic, but if the human race lifted its eyes from the latest soap opera or game show for long enough to engage its brain, it would see that these events are not just going to happen—they ARE happening."

The above is from a writing called "Days Of Decision" by David Icke. It is how he begins the Introduction chapter of his monumental 1999 book THE BIGGEST SECRET.

Longtime readers of The SPECTRUM are certainly well aware of David Icke—possibly the most controversial man on the planet today. Through his many books and lectures, David has not only courageously uncovered and shared information far outside the range of any other investigator, but he has also been a gracious "team player" and enthusiastic supporter of this newspaper since the moment of its initial launching.

Because David has taken the time recently to share his own story in a concise and warmly personable writing, we would like to share that with you here. Needless to say, his Awakening has included a genuinely fascinating array of Guided experiences. Why is it one gets the feeling that his story has REALLY only just begun?!

FALL 2000 DAVID ICKE

Many who are new to my work have asked me how I got into all this. So I am going to briefly tell the story here—or as briefly as I can, because so much has happened.

I was born in Leicester, England, at around 6:15 p.m. on April 29, 1952. I was brought up in what they call in Britain a "working class" family on a big council housing estate and money was short, very short, throughout my childhood. I wanted to be a professional soccer player for as long as I could remember, and I achieved that by leaving school to play for Coventry City and Hereford United in the English league.

Just six months after my soccer career began, however, my left knee swelled up for no apparent reason, and after months of tests they told me I had rheumatoid arthritis. I decided to play on because that was all I had ever wanted to do, and I continued for the next five years, progressing in my career, but also watching the arthritis progress into my ankles, left knee, elbow, etc. In the final year of my career, at the age of 20, I was in agony every morning at training, until my joints were warmed up and loosened a little. But I was enjoying a successful period and I wanted to carry on.

It activated still more of a fierce determination I have always had—not to capitulate to adversity and to overcome whatever life may choose to put before me. Or, in truth, what my own journey chooses.

Towards the end of that soccer season, the pain disappeared for around a month and I thought I was going to be OK. But then one morning I awoke to find that every one of my joints was in agony, like a knife being stabbed into them—and my career was over. It took some days to even be able to hobble, never mind walk again. I was just turned 21 and I was led to believe that I would end up a cripple. It hasn't happened. It won't happen. It is not in my reality at all.

I decided I wanted to be a television presenter with the BBC and began to start on that goal by looking for work as a journalist. This was not easy because school had bored me rigid and I left to play soccer before taking any exams. (Thank you, God.) I would do my learning on my terms, in my time, and the "educational" system barely touched me. I rejected it all with a sort of inner knowing that it was not relevant to me.

I managed to get a job on a small weekly paper in Leicester—not least because I was the only applicant. From then on, I advanced quickly through newspapers, local radio, regional television, to become a national sports and news anchorman and reporter. Soon after I achieved this, in 1982, I moved to an island off the south coast of England called the Isle of Wight, a place to which I had been attracted since I was a small child.

It was here that I began to campaign on environmental issues, and this led me to becoming a national spokesman for the British Green Party, a post I held at the time of the Greens' greatest, indeed only, success at national elections in the UK, the election for members of the European Parliament in 1989. But I saw that, while the Green Party talked about being different, it was, like all the Green parties I have come across, just the old politics under a new name. I lost interest and left, as my life went through the most unbelievable upheavals.

From the mid-1980s onward, I had also lost interest in television. I was doing it to earn money to spend on what I really wanted to do—environmental campaigning—and not because I actually desired to do it. I found television to be an empty, soul-less world, in which insecurity and fear abounded. And after the events of March, 1990, my time in television was soon to be over.

I wrote a book in 1989 called It Doesn't Have To Be Like This, setting out the vision and agenda of the Greens because I felt they were talking to each other and not to the public as a whole. As I was writing the book, and in my work for the BBC, I began to feel a presence around me, like there was always someone in the room when there was not. It got to the point where I sat on the side of the bed in a hotel room in London, in early 1990, and said to whoever or whatever: "If you are there, will you please contact me because you are driving me up the wall."

Soon afterwards, events began to move quickly.

In March, 1990, I was playing soccer with my son, Gareth, on the seafront at Ryde on the Isle of Wight, and I said to him we would go and have some lunch at the railway station cafe, a short walk away. The cafe was full, and we turned to walk away when someone recognised me and began to ask me questions about soccer. When the conversation was over, I couldn't see Gareth, but I knew he would be in the newspaper shop nearby, looking at books he liked.

So it was. I stood at the entrance to the shop and said we were going now to find another cafe, but as I turned to leave, my feet were stuck to the ground as if two magnets were pulling them to the floor.

I don't hear voices or anything; I just follow my intuition. But in this early period of awakening I did hear three voices very clearly. This was the first. It said: "Go and look at the books on the far side."

"What the hell was this all about?" I thought.

I knew this shop very well and the books in that section were of no interest to me. But given the voice and what was happening to my feet, I went over to see what would happen.

The first book I saw was one by a psychic lady. I was immediately intrigued because of this presence I had felt around me. I wondered if she would be able to tell me what was going on. She was also a hands-on healer, and so I wrote to her and made an appointment for healing, not telling her about the presence or anything else. To her, I just wanted to try her healing on my arthritis.

I only saw her four times. In the first two visits nothing happened of note, except that I talked with her about other dimensions and the wider vision of life.

Then, on the third visit, I was lying on the couch while the healing was done, when I felt like a spider's web on my face. I had remembered reading in her book that this can happen when "spirits" are trying to make contact. I said nothing to her, but within fifteen seconds, no more, she pushed her head back and said: "This is powerful; I'll have to close my eyes for this one!"

She said she was seeing "a figure" who wanted her to pass on messages to me. The same happened a week later, and this is what the figure asked her to tell me on those occasions:

He [David] is a healer who is here to heal the Earth and he will be world famous. He will face enormous opposition, but we will always be there to protect him.

He is still a child, spiritually, but he will be given the spiritual riches. Sometimes he will say things and wonder where they came from. They will be our words. Knowledge will be put into his mind, and at other times he will be led to knowledge.

He was chosen as a youngster for his courage. He has been tested and has passed all the tests. He was led into football [soccer] to learn discipline, but when that was learned it was time to move on.

He also had to learn how to cope with disappointment, experience all the emotions, and how to get up and get on with it. The spiritual way is tough and no-one makes it easy.

We know he wanted us to contact him, but the time wasn't right. He was led here to be contacted, not to be cured. But one day he will be completely cured. He will always have what he needs, but no more.

Don't try to do it all alone. Go hand-in-hand with others, so you can pick each other up as you fall.

One man cannot change the world, but one man can communicate the message that will change the world.

He will write five books in three years.

Politics is not for him. He is too spiritual. Politics is anti-spiritual and will make him very unhappy. He will leave politics. He doesn't have to do anything. It will happen gradually, over a year. (Exactly what happened.)

In 20 years there will be a different kind of flying machine, very different from the aircraft of today. Time will have no meaning. Where you want to be, you will be.

There will be great earthquakes. These will come as a warning to the human race. They will occur in places that have never experienced them. Taking oil from the seabed is destabilising the inner Earth. The centre of the Earth will move and the poles will change. The sea spirits will rise and stop men from taking oil. The sea will reclaim the land, and humans will see that they cannot do these terrible things. They cannot abuse the elements. They have to be treated with respect.

All this was told to me on March 29, 1990, and on the second visit about a week later. At the time, I was a BBC television presenter and national spokesman for the Green Party, and had no idea what this was all about. Yet, ten years later, most of it has happened or is happening. Even down to the five books in three years, which I wrote to the month.

I told some of the Green Party leadership about these experiences, but their reaction was just as closed-minded, ignorant, and uninformed as you would find in the system the Greens were claiming to challenge. "I think David is going crazy." Yea, right. Welcome to the new politics!

I wrote of these early months of awakening in a book called Truth Vibrations (Gateway Books). Then came the most astonishing event of all—in an endless stream of fantastic experiences I was having and continue to have.

I felt this enormous urge to go to Peru in late 1990, early 1991. I headed there in February 1991, purely on the strength of this intuition. A series of stunning things happened to me there and it culminated with the following experience.

My Peruvian guide had booked us into a hotel called the Sillustani in Puno, not far from

The Biggest Secret

by David Icke

The long awaited NEW RELEASE by David Icke. The blockbuster of all blockbusters! With stunning information never before released on the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales.

David Icke's most powerful and explosive book to date includes the astonishing background to the murder of Diana, Princess of Wales. Every man, woman, and child on the planet is affected by the stunning information that Icke exposes. He reveals in documented detail how the same interconnecting bloodlines have controlled the planet for thousands of years. How they created all the major religions and suppressed the spiritual and esoteric knowledge that will set humanity free from its mental and emotional prisons. It includes a devastating exposé of the true origins of Christianity and the other major religions, and documents suppressed science, which explains why the world is facing a time of incredible change and transformation. The Biggest Secret also exposes the true and astonishing background to the British Royal Family and, through enormous research and unique contacts, Icke reveals how and why Diana, Princess of Wales, was murdered in Paris in 1997. This includes information from a close confidant of Diana for nine years, which has never before been made public.

The Biggest Secret is a unique book and is quite rightly dubbed "The book that will change the world". No one who reads it will ever be the same again.

Lake Titicaca, the highest navigable lake in the world. Sillustani is an ancient Inca site about an hour's drive from Puno, and there were pictures of this around the hotel for obvious reasons.

I said that I wanted to go there, and I had to hire a tourist mini-bus for myself because it was out of season and there were no scheduled trips. There was just me, the guide, and the driver.

Sillustani is a mound next to lagoon with the Inca ruins on the top. It is in an uninhabited area and it was very quiet when I was there—just a couple of children with a lama waiting to sell photographs to tourists, not that there were any.

After I had walked around the ruins for an hour or so in the piercing Peruvian Sun, I went back to the tourist bus to go back to Puno. I thought the trip was over, but it had hardly begun. About three minutes drive down the road, I was looking out of the window and I saw a mound to my right. As I looked at the mound, a voice in my head began to say: "Come to me, come to me, come to me." Very strange, to say the least, but I asked the driver to stop because I wanted to go and look at the mound.

Although I could not see it from the road, I found there was a circle of standing stones at the top of the mound and they had clearly been there for a very long time. I stood in the centre, looking back across to Sillustani, with the mountains way off in the distance. There was not a cloud in the sky and the Sun was extremely hot, burning my face.

Suddenly, I felt my feet pulled to the ground again, like a magnet—the same as in the newspaper shop, but this time far more powerful. My arms then shot up above my head, with no decision by me for them to do so. Put your arms above your head, slightly outwards at about 45 degrees, and see how they start to ache within a minute.

My arms were like that for well over an hour, yet I felt nothing until it was over, and then they were agony.

A flow of powerful energy began to go into the top of my head, like a drill, and I could feel the flow going the other way, up from the ground through my feet. It was then that I heard the third voice in my head, something that has never happened since. It said, very clearly: "It will be over when you feel the rain."

What? What rain? There was not a cloud to be seen anywhere, just a glowing Sun in a clear blue sky!

I stood there as the energy increased and increased, to the point where my body was shaking as if plugged into a power station. After a while, I saw a light grey mist over the distant mountains, and as I watched, it got darker and darker.

It had begun to rain far away. Very quickly this storm emerged from those mountains, filling the sky with clouds, and covering the Sun. Eventually it was over me and I was seeing faces in the billowing clouds. The storm was moving so fast, it was almost like time-lapse photography. Then it began to rain, and as I felt the water on my face, the surge of energy suddenly stopped—as if someone had flicked a switch. I staggered forward, my legs like jelly, my shoulder and arm muscles now very painful.

Energy was pouring from my hands with fantastic power, and I went down to the bus to grab a crystal in an effort to diffuse some of it. My feet continued to burn and vibrate for some 24 hours. I could hardly sleep that night because of it.

My life was to change dramatically—in fact as dramatically as you could imagine, in the weeks that followed. I felt like a dam had burst within me and my consciousness was thrashing around trying to rebalance itself under the new circumstances. That took some two months to happen, and in that time of enormous confusion, Truth Vibrations was launched and I went on national TV in the UK, to be ridiculed beyond belief.

For two years and more I could not walk down any street in Britain without being laughed at by most of the people. Comedians only had to mention my name and they got an immediate laugh.

But nightmare as this was, it set me free of the prison that most people live in—the fear of what other people think. Only by breaking free from that could I now be going around the world talking about shape-shifting reptilians occupying the positions of global power. If you need people to respect you as your sense of security, there is no way you would do that—one key reason why it has so rarely been communicated before. That ridicule was a major part of my journey and it set me free of so much.

From that time, I have followed the flow of life. Exactly what I was told would happen, through the psychic lady in 1991, did. I have been led to knowledge, more and more all the time, which has revealed a picture of how the world has been controlled, by a tiny few, for thousands of years. And how the suppression of the spiritual knowledge—the understanding of who we are and the nature of life itself—has been the foundation of how this has been done. I have also learned of the Great Awakening, the Great Transformation, that is upon us.

The trickle of information became a river, and now it is a tidal wave. Yet, we have hardly begun, and the rest of the story promises to be even more amazing than what has already happened in these last ten incredible years.

Revelations of a Mother Goddess

—VIDEO—

An Interview by David Icke

The staggering story of human sacrifice and satanic ritual, involving the most famous people in the world.

Arizona Wilder, formerly Jennifer Greene, was mind-programmed from birth to become one of the three most important female conductors of Satanic rituals on the planet. Her programmer was Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" in the Nazi concentration camps. When he died in the late 1980s, her programming began to break down.

In this video interview with David Icke, she describes human sacrifice rituals at Glamis Castle and Balmoral, in which the Queen, the Queen Mother, and other members of the Royal Family sacrificed children in Satanic ceremonies.

She talks of the same experiences with Henry Kissinger, George Bush, Bill Clinton, members of the Rockefeller and Rothschild families, and a host of the most famous names in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Your view of the world will never be the same when you hear the revelations of Arizona Wilder and consider their relevance to your daily life.

Do You Smell A Set-Up?

Cool Calculation Behind Ongoing Election Brawl

Editor's note: Regular readers of The SPECTRUM are well aware of the various "situations" that are on the drawing board for provoking a state of Martial Law as just one of several mechanisms to advance other blanket population enslavement agendas of the New World Order gang.

One of the game-plan scenarios would keep Clinton on as president for a third term. Another, which we previewed in a News Desk item last month from Sherman Skolnick, was titled "The Scheme To Make Jay Rockefeller 'President'".

And then there is the obvious tug-of-war going on between Gore and Bush, fronting for different squabbling behind-the-scenes "interests"—who both thought that THEY had the election "in the bag" through their own unscrupulous, covert, vote-adjusting "techno-tricks". How can one call the other a crook, now, without risking exposing their own fraud?

Remember that the early-on information advanced by some with an "inside track" on high-level decision making stated that the behind-the-scenes power rulers were going to make Bush president; this was the news put forth well over a year ago. And to strengthen that, one unofficial after-election report of counties across the United States showed 677 for Gore and 2434 for Bush.

So, exactly how did the election get to be such a "close" one? Are we watching what happens when "conspiracies" clash? And then—is this clash itself a manufactured one purposely engineered as just one step toward advancing a more sinister agenda?

Yes, the ongoing election pageant or circus or brawl or whatever is high on the list of such "situations" which is rich as a tool to manipulate the psychological climate of the entire nation into a frenzy, on the one hand, and yet demoralize many into apathy, on the other, since there is no sensation of an outstanding presidential winner to represent the nation. Rather, there is the purposely engineered growing frustration with, and suspicion of, the election process.

This is large-scale, very skillfully executed mind control at work toward very practical population-enslavement goals wishing to be advanced by the so-called "elite" would-be controllers. A country in psychological disarray is a mentally weak country whose people are very open to "suggestion"—however planted like hypnotic instructions.

And for those of you who keep in mind the more subtle uses for electronic "broadcasting" systems such as HAARP and all of the many cell phone towers around the country, it is an understatement to suspect that such electronic mind-control avenues may be called upon to work overtime to take advantage of such cranked-up election-induced psychological confusion—when the right moment is reached.

The following information provides an insightful look into various aspects of this manipulation exercise, beginning with how FEMA—an important subject of our September 2000 Front-Page story—plays a central, yet so far subtle, role in the election brawl orchestration machinery.

Sherman Skolnick did not put all of these writing excerpts together as "parts" as they are presented here; however, they build upon each other in such a logical progression as to lend to such an outlay.

Moreover, the first part of this discussion was written and circulated a number of days BEFORE Election Day, and thus provides some rather prophetic background hints about the later, unexpected developments we have all been subjected to in a relentless, stir-up-the-public way, through the well-orchestrated print and broadcast media blatherings.

As Skolnick points out below, if you want to have a pretty good historical idea of the game plan underway, go read author Gore Vidal's recent (coincidental?!) book called 1876, and know that while the crooks in high places may not always be much in the way of original thinkers, they certainly know a good idea when they've found one—and besides, the same old tricks keep working on the sleeping public over and over and over again.

Emergency Provisions For Year-2000 Presidential Election

PART ONE (11/1/00)

This is a story almost too sensitive to be told. What do you really know about FEMA, the Federal Emergency Management Agency?

Our research and investigation group learned a lot about FEMA as a result of an unpublicized federal lawsuit we brought against them in January, 1991. In fact, it was filed on the same day that President George Herbert Walker Bush ordered the bombing of his former, long-time, secret business partner in Baghdad, Saddam Hussein.

We put together upwards of a thousand pages of the secret background of FEMA. Some of the appendix to the lawsuit was in compressed, reduced form, so as to prevent it from being so bulky. Among other things, it pointed out the unconstitutional nature of FEMA. That is, some of the Federal Judges in the U.S. are also secretly officials of FEMA. Wearing two hats like that is unconstitutional.

Various presidents, however, have entered little known dictatorial fiats into the Federal Register, or not recorded at all, mandating that in a so-called "emergency", it is forbidden for federal judges to take jurisdiction of any challenge in court to the fascist-like orders of FEMA, suspending habeas corpus, property ownership, right to travel from place to place, and more.

We identified one of the U.S. District judges in Chicago as being a secret official also of FEMA. A crony of his in the court seized upon our lawsuit, and without legal formality ordered our lawsuit "dismissed" and removed from the courthouse. No lawful citation of authority was given. And we had no legal recourse. Of course, we had no opportunity for "open court" hearing or proceedings of any kind.

The corrupt bench and bar promote the idea that we, as the American people, proceed on the law and the facts. In important cases, it is a complete fantasy—as I, as a court reformer, have discovered in more than 40 years of experiences.

The one good thing that came out of it was that we added to our inside sources, even in FEMA, persons who secretly admire our work and assist us with details as best they can. Over the years I, as the head of our group, Citizen's Committee To Clean Up The Courts, have been jailed—not for committing crimes—but for “contempt of court”, for absolutely refusing to divulge sources of our data. The fact that the “authorities” hauled me away in my wheelchair, as if I were a violent bank robber, repeatedly outraged the public, and after a while each time, I was released.

Key honchos in finance and banking, in international business, and domestic and foreign espionage agencies, have studied the Year-2000 Presidential Election. They have determined that there may be what appears to be an “emergency” as an outgrowth of the election.

As a consequence, they have sent what purport to be “US Government” officials to deal with the situation. These “officials” purport to have authority ABOVE the Presidency, above the Congress, above the Courts, AND ABOVE THE CONSTITUTION. (Do not heckle me with naive protests that such is “unconstitutional”, as if I do not already understand that.)

What they have ordered is the following:

1. If a question remains as to the “Electoral College” vote, as provided under the US Constitution 12th Amendment, then they have ORDERED, under pain of extreme action, that the “electors”—who are to meet after the election and cast their ballots for the one they as “electors” believe should be President—that the “electors” are to, instead, pick a different person as President. A person not on the ballot, but of private wealth and, therefore, supposedly immune from bribery and corrupt deed.

The one who would allegedly fit such a description would be U.S. Senator John D. Rockefeller 4th (D-WV), who calls himself “Jay” like he is just one of the common Americans. I, for one, do not accept that “Jay” is above being “bought” because he already is so rich.

2. The oil-soaked monopoly press is under these same fascist-like orders to hint of an emergency, but give no details, as if they are oblivious to what is going on. It has been more than three decades since I outraged the press-fakers by beginning to identify FBI and CIA “assets” in key places at local and network media outlets. (My public-access weekly cable-TV program from time to time continues identifying the FBI and CIA “assets” within the monopoly press. As a result, the press, if they admit I exist at all, have rotten things to say about our work over 43 years time.)

3. These sinister super-government operatives have contacted key “Electoral College” electors. Informing them what they are ORDERED to do—supposedly for the survival of the nation and the central government—upon the failure to carry out “ORDERS”, what violence will be inflicted upon them as electors. Few in the US even know WHO the electors are.

4. Quietly inserted into the political party slates of ELECTORS have been stooges, order-takers, especially in the key high-Electoral Vote states. They do not have to be threatened into following ORDERS.

A foreign aristocracy is NOT the enemy of the American ultra-rich. The ENEMY is the common American, who looks to his guns for the ultimate guarantee of all the other beautiful sounding rights, privileges, and immunities which the central government is forbidden to take away. The Year-2000 Presidential Election, and what follows, may be the final proof that the American organic law, the US Constitution, is a dead letter after all.

Self-educated in law, in the 1960s and 1970s, in Illinois I brought and won most every federal case to force the re-apportionment of gerry-mandered election districts. I was called “Mr. One Man, One Vote”, a slogan for re-apportionment of districts. For awhile, I benefitted minorities in Chicago. As a result of my suit against the City Government, equal population districts were drawn, giving Blacks and other minorities more representation in the Chicago City Council.

When Chicago's first Black mayor, Harold Washington, was assassinated right before Thanksgiving, 1987, I was the only journalist and commentator of any kind giving out the details about how he was poisoned with a cup of coffee, like done in Italy in the Middle Ages.

As the moderator and producer of our television program, cablecast since 1991, I occasionally outrage some naive viewers by pointing that I, as once “Mr. One Man, One Vote”, feel we as Americans are beyond voting. That what ails America cannot be rectified by the voting machine, now taken over by Votescam secret computers in New York. “None of the above” not being on the ballot, there appears to be no quick cure to revive the beautifully worded Bill of Rights.

The alleged emergency, promoted by sinister FEMA operatives, may later be described as “financial”, “caused by terrorists”, or such. My cynical friends point out that people like me will be the most well-informed inmates in America's built-and-waiting concentration camps. We will know exactly how we got there and why.

Do you really think FEMA will allow the Internet to operate as if nothing is happening?

The fact is, the e-mail and web servers do NOT have the capacity to deal with a flood of communications among ordinary people. Like what happened back when President Kennedy was blown away by a CIA-Oil Industry plot, the phones in the District of Columbia all went dead. Do you really think, if an alleged “emergency” is about to be foisted upon us, that we can send one another e-mails like nothing is happening? Stay tuned, if possible.

* * *

The Alleged “Election” What Is Happening

PART TWO (11/8/00)

In effect, the Year-2000 Presidential Election has been cancelled.

So, to be legally accurate, I prefer to call it the alleged “election”. Here is what is happening as of the time I am writing this posting:

1. Good sources told us long before the alleged “election” that the matter may be resolved in Chicago. The Mayor of Chicago, Richard M. Daley, has his brother, William, as the Gore Presidential Campaign Chief.

In previous stories, I have written about the Federal Emergency Management Agency. FEMA officials, some of whom are also federal judges, such as in Chicago (unconstitutional, right?), have reportedly been communicating with the two Daleys. They demand “co-operation” (implied threat)—that is, that the Mayor and his brother not stand in the way of the FEMA officials orchestrating the outcome.

As we have pointed out in 1991 in federal court, and in my previous posting, FEMA is ABOVE the U.S. Constitution, ABOVE the presidency and the Congress (unconstitutional, right?).

2. The Florida presidential vote matter is to be submitted, under Florida law, making it mandatory, to an automatic recount because of the closeness of the alleged result. Vote fraud has been raised. (What about the TV and radio networks' OWN VOTE FRAUD through their Votescam computer in New York?)

The recount matter could take at least until after February, at the earliest, making the usual Presidential inauguration cancelled. Some thought President Clinton was hallucinating when, months ago, he said he is not leaving the White House—even after the Year-2000 Election.

If the recount is challenged in court, the matter would go on, according to my estimate, to April or June, 2001, at the earliest.

If the matter gets to court, the Democrats may well publicly proclaim that Florida judges are beholden to the American CIA.

Remember how the Florida judge barred testimony implicating George Herbert Walker

Bush in the Manuel Noriega prosecution. Old man Bush, as former head of America's secret political police, the CIA, installed various dictators, including Iraq's Saddam Hussein and Noriega, among others. Revelations about the CIA's domination of the Florida judiciary inevitably may have something to say about the Coca-Cola company and the CIA and the courts, in next door Georgia.

[Editor's note: Go back to last month's issue of The SPECTRUM for the possible Coca-Cola connection to this large and intricate spider's web controlling the presidential election circus.]

3. Like in the Tilden-Hayes mess in the 19th Century, the Bush-Gore matter will most likely be submitted to the Electoral Commission, under the 12th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

In the prior commotion, they reached a compromise as to how post-Civil War reconstruction was to proceed. In the current controversy, they may ORDER a compromise, that is, that a person not on the Year-2000 Presidential Election ballot be selected, by the Electoral College, as the "elected" President. That has been pre-judged to be John D. Rockefeller 4th, who calls himself "Jay" to be cute.

The Democrats have various blackmail bargaining chips when blackmail has traditionally been the criterion as to key matters:

- Documents exist showing the elder Bush was implicated in covering up the plot to assassinate President John F. Kennedy. (One such document is posted in a previous story of mine as to Bush.)

- Documents exist showing the Bush family is directly in business with the Queen of England through her bank, Coutts Bank, London. (See our prior series, Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush.)

Since the War of 1812, the British have vowed to take back this continent as a British puppet colony. William Rockefeller Clinton was sent by the Rhodes Trust to be educated at Oxford. The Rhodes Trust is pledged to overthrowing the American government and restoring British domination.

The Brits played a role in stirring up known hostility between the South and the North, Divide and Conquer, to foment the American Civil War. The Brits ran the Union forces blockade to supply weapons to the Confederacy. One Confederate top official fled this continent and lived out his life in England.

The British played a role in the political assassination of President James Garfield and President William McKinley, who opposed Britain trying to dominate American aspirations and industrial development.

Clinton took a pledge to support the Rhodes Trust. He did not finish his Oxford education, having been ordered, under threat of criminal prosecution, to leave England for having raped a British woman. Later, as President, he twice took an oath at Inaugurations, to support the U.S. Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. Which oath did this pathological liar intend to keep? To the Rhodes Trust or to the U.S. Constitution?

- When he was vice president and later president in the 1980s, the elder Bush arranged to flood the U.S. with dope from Colombia. As v.p. Bush was supposed to be head of the South Florida Dope Interdiction Task Force, or some group with a similar government name. His sons, George W. Bush and Jeb Bush, were implicated in picking up cocaine for their own use in airplanes they flew into a Florida U.S. military base. The Bush family are implicated, through 25 secret bank accounts worldwide, in laundering billions and billions of dollars from the dope traffic. (See our website story with documents attached there.) Greenspan, as czar of the Federal Reserve, authorized this dirty business. (Greenspan's secret authorization codes are shown on some of the posted documents.)

[Editor's note: We shared this important information with you in the March and April 2000 issues of The SPECTRUM and, if there is any point to keep in mind here, it is that this gang is a very busy and diversified group of "entrepreneurs"—at the expense of the hard-working and largely unsuspecting public.]

- A picture exists, made by an undercover team of the Drug Enforcement Administration, showing George W. Bush snorting cocaine with his buddy William Rockefeller Clinton. You have been asleep if you did not know that Clinton and the Bush family are cronies and get together at old man Bush's mansion in Kennebunkport, Maine. The picture has long been suppressed, although in the possession of top news people of the major news networks. The Gore campaign reportedly has, for some time, had the picture. (They would like to show George W. but not Clinton.)

- Greenspan has conferred with Clinton on the matter of whether to close down the stock and commodity exchanges, and even interfere with transactions of U.S. bonds.

(Little known fact: large purchases of U.S. bonds by Japan and Saudi are backed by gold. U.S. purchasers of U.S. bonds have no such benefit.)

Foreign countries may have reason to lose confidence in the American central government. Britain relishes that idea, when, as mentioned, since the War of 1812, England vowed to overthrow the American government.

In its simplest form, Clinton has been a British agent, bringing intentional discredit to the American government through his lying and his sexual predatory episodes, such as raping Juanita Broaddrick, and using the room next to the Oval Office for his episodes with Monica Lewinsky.

(Since Clinton is an illegitimate great-grandson of old John D. Rockefeller, who created the infamous Standard Oil trust, no sensible member of the U.S. Senate would have dared be in favor, at an impeachment trial, of removing Clinton as President. Legitimate great-grandson, John D. Rockefeller 4th, may be foisted as alleged "president" on the American people by blackmail and trickery.)

- Great secrets of the U.S. may come out in the apparent unfolding "emergency". Such as the high-level CIA plots to assassinate President Kennedy, Malcolm X, Kennedy family friend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Robert F. Kennedy, and the airplane-bombing that took the life of John F. Kennedy, Jr., who intended, in 2000, to run for president. The Kennedy family, however, has been silenced by financial benefits awarded them following each assassination. (See my website series titled "What Happened To America's Golden Boy".)

In an era, starting some 40 years ago, when political murder is the unofficial policy of the American secret police, I intend to keep with our strict policy of not risking or revealing sources, even to those who are skeptical despite our four-decade history of exposing profound secrets and corruption.

The Internet may get mysteriously plugged up. Stay tuned, if possible.

The Bush Family, Florida, And The American CIA

PART THREE (11/15/00)

The former head of America's secret political police has three of his sons and their cronies, in and out of state and federal government, in various covert and reputed fraudulent enterprises. Family patriarch, George Herbert Walker Bush, has a lot to answer for, which the oil-soaked monopoly press never seems to question. The elder Bush, as we have demonstrated, together with three of his sons, George W., Jeb, and Neil, have 25 super-secret bank accounts worldwide, through which they have laundered tens of BILLIONS of dollars of illicit funds from the dope traffic, from weapons smuggling, and clandestine and illegal gold smuggling overseas. The commissar of the Federal Reserve, Alan Greenspan (we prefer to label him Redspan), through his secret authorization codes, arranged the clandestine wire transfers for the Bush Family. (See our website series called "Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush" and documents thereto attached.)

The major news networks have not publicized what they already know and have corroborated about the Bush family and their cronies. One of the most active of the family has been Jeb Bush, at the time of this posting governor of Florida. He and his two brothers, and their cronies, have reportedly committed a series of real estate frauds, bank swindles, and other reputed massive rip-offs, for which they should have been prosecuted and imprisoned, and which have caused the taxpayers and innocent parties billions and billions of dollars.

A list of their reputed fraudulent enterprises includes, but is not limited to, the following:

- Marco Island Securities
- Cosmos Development Group
- Destin Country Club Development (Destin, Florida)
- Harken Energy (Bahrain oil development and financial laundry)
- Swissco Management Group
- American Bank and Trust of Pensacola, Florida
- Orange State Bank of Miami, Florida
- Cadillac Development Group, Miami, Florida

Jointly with his father and the American CIA, Jeb Bush used these enterprises as a reputed massive money laundry for illicit funds, including funds for bloody dirty tricks of the spy agency, such as overthrowing foreign governments deemed unworthy or unfriendly to the spy shop and, on occasion, assassinating foreign leaders. Reportedly participating in these schemes has been Porter J. Goss, more recently a Congressman (R-FL), and previously a covert operations officer of the American CIA.

Also interwoven with these fraudulent enterprises has been Henry Hyde, Congressman from Chicago suburbs. In violation of the U.S. Constitution's mandate of Separation of Powers, Hyde is also head of the CIA's "black budget"—using the dope trafficking proceeds to finance dirty tricks. Hyde was supervising authority of the Mena, Arkansas airport dope trafficking for CIA, jointly with George Herbert Walker Bush, Ollie North, and William Rockefeller Clinton. Hyde has reportedly assisted the Bush family in laundering illicit funds through the Paradise Island (Bahamas) gambling casino. (As we have pointed out elsewhere, Hyde has been criminally implicated with the Paradise Island gang since 1969.)

Goss, a Congressman from Florida's 14th Congressional District, has been Chairman of the House Select Committee on Intelligence that, in secret sessions, supervises the American CIA and their murderous dirty tricks. The Majority Staff Director of the Select Committee, John Millis, was murdered, and typical of an intelligence "hit", was disguised as an alleged "suicide". Just prior to being murdered, disgruntled for various reasons, Millis arranged to leak to a certain outspoken independent-minded journalist, lists of CIA proprietary firms, used to disguise CIA dirty tricks. The lists, with accompanying details, criminally implicate George Herbert Walker Bush and his three sons, Jeb, George W., and Neil, and their cronies in Florida state government.

Some of these CIA adjuncts, privatized for "cover", have been owned, in turn, by Caribbean and European tax havens, where local laws guarantee absolute secrecy, and where financial enterprises and "shell companies" launder the illicit proceeds from the dope traffic, weapons smuggling, gold covert traffic, and the sale of nuclear bomb triggers.

(An Italian-based scandal, interwoven with this, was the Roger D'Onofrio Affair, subject of Reuters and other wire service stories not well-publicized in the U.S. These stories, under a Rome dateline, early in December, 1995, mentioned, for example, that the Archbishop of Barcelona, Spain, was accused by Italian authorities of being a kingpin in using the Vatican Bank for these illicit doings, including the sale of osmium nuclear bomb triggers. In our series on Greenspan/Bush, we showed documents of how the Bush family laundered huge sums through a bank in Malaga, Spain.)

Upwards of $75 million of these bloody clandestine funds, of Jeb Bush, brothers George W. and Neil, and their father, reportedly have been parked through the Chicago unit of a major French bank, Credit Lyonnais. Reportedly acting as "laundry lady" and surrogate for these funds, through Credit Lyonnais, has been Katherine Harris, in recent years Florida Secretary of State.

In her position, she controls and supervises the filing—or reportedly, on occasion, the concealing—of corporate data and corporate charters and annual reports, on the basis of corporations considered domestic to Florida or listed as "foreign" corporations, actually meaning corporations domiciled elsewhere in the United States. In that capacity, she has reportedly sought to keep secret records, known however to John Millis, relating to the "shell" companies operated as part of the massive swindling of her boss, Governor Jeb Bush, his two brothers, and their father.

Katherine Harris also reportedly played "laundry lady" and surrogate for her boss, Florida governor Jeb Bush, and the Bush family, in huge amounts of illicit funds laundered through another French bank, Banque Paribas. Katherine Harris has played a key role in the Year-2000 Presidential Election mess centered around Florida.

Long-time sources in retirement in the intelligence community have contended for some time prior to the Year-2000 Presidential Election that it would be orchestrated on a mammoth scale from a prior historical example as a blueprint.

A recent book of Gore Vidal, entitled 1876, is a reconstructed discussion of the 1876 presidential election mess involving Florida and two contenders for the White House, Samuel J. Tilden and Rutherford B. Hayes. Because of complications with the Electoral College and an extremely tight race, a compromise was necessary by which Hayes became a highly-damaged U.S. president, called various names of fraud during his term.

Some contend that the fine hand of the American CIA is evident in the Year-2000 Election ruckus. Through a reported computer "glitch", upwards of 65,000 presidential election ballots "disappeared" in Tennessee, causing presidential candidate Albert Gore, Jr., to be embarrassed by supposedly not carrying his home state in the election.

Did the American CIA play a role in the Year-2000 Presidential Election, using 1876 as a blueprint? Clinton for months prior to the election contended to confidants that he expected to remain in the White House after the election and such, by some kind of an emergency. Did Clinton, early in his career, being a CIA darling, have inside information or was he just hallucinating?

One of the major news networks, despite having corroborated much of the foregoing details, has covered up the role of Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris with respect to Jeb Bush and his reputed fraudulent enterprises, and her role in seeking to apparently block counting of questioned election ballots.

There is more to this story. Stay tuned.

Oil-Soaked Fixer In The Florida Election

PART FOUR (11/22/00)

When the lead of George W. Bush in the crucial Florida Year-2000 Presidential Election slipped beneath 400 votes, the reputed bagman was brought in to help put in the fix. That was James A. Baker III, who had been U.S. Secretary of State in the administration of the Elder Bush.

Baker's apparent job was simple. He had to remind, if necessary, Florida Secretary of State, Katherine Harris, to favor Bush in certifying the election returns. Baker was there to let her know, as if she did not remember, that she might be fingered for reportedly having been the "money laundry lady" in billions and billions of dollars of proceeds from dope trafficking and weapons smuggling for a gang that included her boss, Jeb Bush, Florida Governor.

With the aid of the British monarchy and British counter-intelligence, George Herbert Walker Bush has been a kingpin in the oil cartel. He had a falling-out with his secret private business partner of the decade of the 1980s, Saddam Hussein, the Iraqi strongman. For that decade they shared pay-offs from the weak and degenerate sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf. To keep Saddam, the bully boy of the Gulf, happy with his business partner Bush, the kick-backs from each barrel of crude sent amounted to upwards of a quarter of a trillion dollars for the ten years.

The secret Hussein-Bush partnership was the subject of a little-known federal lawsuit in Chicago in 1990-1991. I was the only journalist attending the federal appeals court hearing, and then interviewing the participants afterwards in the back of the courtroom. Only one news outlet, a Washington, D.C.-based populist newspaper, SPOTLIGHT, dared print my uncensored report.

After all, the Elder Bush, when he was head of America's secret political police, created Saddam by arranging the assassination of his predecessor. By 1988, Bush, as a major stockholder of Pennzoil through a fraudulent bankruptcy, got a stranglehold on Texaco, which obtained much of their oil from Iraq. To facilitate the $12 billion bankruptcy cover-up, the Elder Bush reportedly corrupted both the Texas Supreme Court and the U.S. Supreme Court.

At the close of the Persian Gulf War, President Bush and two of his top generals, Colin Powell and H. Norman Schwarzkopf, were paid millions and millions of dollars in gold and jewels from the Emir of Kuwait. (An apparent indication of discrimination, the Emir gave Colin Powell less than Bush and Sckwarzkopf. Little known, that late in the 20th century, Kuwait still had, according to a United Nations report, Black chattel slaves. By the way, what were Black American GIs doing fighting and dying in the Gulf War for slaveowners?) These pay-offs by the Emir of Kuwait were unlawful to be received by Bush and the two generals, under the U.S. Constitution, Article I, Section 9, which provides:

"No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States. And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, FROM ANY KING, PRINCE, OR FOREIGN STATE." (Emphasis added.)

In Part Two of our exclusive series called Greenspan Aids And Bribes Bush, we showed a portion of the secret report, the hand-written analysis by a senior official of the U.S. Department of the Treasury, Office of Internal Affairs, of the Bush family massive corruption with billions and billions of dollars funneled in and out of their worldwide 25 accounts, proceeds from dope trafficking and weapons smuggling. Attached to our series are some of the secret Federal Reserve wire transfer records showing Alan Greenspan, Commissar of the Fed, using his secret authorization code, facilitating this nefarious business. For example, shown is the Elder Bush's and his son George W. Bush's joint account with the Queen of England in the bank owned by the British monarch, Coutts Bank of London. (The hand-written analysis has the code on it for Vice President/President of the United States: Proteus/Potus.)

Knowledgeable sources, by the way, point out that when the documents refer to "Jorge Bush", they most likely mean his son, George W. Bush, who in speeches to Latinos, refers to himself as "Jorge".

James A. Baker III has been interwoven with many of the oil cartel deals of the Bush family. In a hand-written note on one of the documents, Baker is referred to as the corrupt fixer covering up pay-offs to Bush. (You can see the document on our website at <http://www.skolnicksreport.com/images/ustres3.gif> and also see ustres1.gif as a document.)

The Bush family—including Florida governor Jeb Bush and his gang of swindlers interwoven with the CIA and reputedly Katherine Harris—appear to be angry that their bagman, James A. Baker III, was unable to corrupt the judges on the Florida Supreme Court. Many Florida judges—evidently not those on the Florida high court—are beholden to the American CIA, a consequence of the massive money flow through Florida banks and enterprises from the dope traffic from Colombia, Mexico, Venezuela, Bolivia, and others, all south of the U.S. in this hemisphere. Unlike other key judges, evidently the Florida high court judges are NOT banker/judges—too often, as we have pointed out, typical of judges throughout the nation.

Just another story suppressed by the liars and whores of the Press. You know who—those with the fifty dollar hairdos and the nickel head.

More details as they develop. Stay tuned.

The Big Lie And The Oil-Soaked Monopoly Press

PART FIVE (11/25/00)

Reporters who cover the U.S. Supreme Court are turning in stories they know are the BIG LIE. In items in the New York Times and other major papers, they are stating that the Bush campaign's objections to the manual recount are granted to be heard by the U.S. Supreme Court.

I happen to know a lot about that high court in Washington and their procedures. I hold a record, of sorts—having, in the past, petitioned that court perhaps more times than most anyone else in that court's history.

In the Florida election mess, two petitions for what the high court calls "Certiorari" were filed. Listed on the clerk of the U.S. Supreme Court's records as #836 is George W. Bush, petitioner, versus Palm Beach County Canvassing Board, et al., respondents. In that one, according to the high court's order of Friday, November 24, 2000, certiorari was granted. The court narrowed down the petitioner to argue about the federal statute, Title 3 United States Code Section 5, dealing with the state's appointment of State Electors to the Electoral College. The court order stated: "The parties are directed to brief and argue the following question: What would be the consequences of this Court's finding that the decision of the Supreme Court of Florida does not comply with 3 U.S.C. Sec. 5?"

The procedure, seldom mentioned outside law schools and such, in the U.S. Supreme Court, is that the petitioner is to basically knock on the door and beg to be heard. It is called Petition for Certiorari.

In a recent term of the high court—since the judges are also lazy and indifferent—there were 1600 such begging petitions pending. Guess what? Using only one word, "denied", the nine judges refused to hear each and every one of the pending petitions and gave no reason for refusing them.

The second begging petition filed in the high court was listed as #837, Ned Siegel vs. Theresa LePore. The high-court order stated: "The Petition for a writ of certiorari before judgment is denied without prejudice." This case involves recount issues.

The oil-soaked monopoly press, to favor their CIA darling, George W. Bush, promotes the BIG LIE that ALL the issues mentioned on the TV by Bush's lawyers are going to be heard. Not so.

Hitler's propaganda chief, Joseph Goebels, was an amateur compared to the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Chicago Tribune, the Los Angeles Times, and others among the press-fakers. Among other things, their purpose is to ignore that one of the presidential candidates, Albert Gore, Jr., won the plurality of the POPULAR VOTE, and that Bush is seeking to gain the Electoral College trick through seeking to defeat any kind of manual count. (As Texas governor, Bush signed a manual recount law in his state on close elections.)

I do not appreciate being called a Gore loyalist simply for pointing out the truth. I am an independent.

In the 1960s and 1970s I was called "Mr. One Man, One Vote". Being self-educated in law, in Illinois, in the federal courts, I brought and won, on behalf of all voters and myself, various suits to re-do Illinois' then terribly gerry-mandered election districts, according to the principle of equal numbers of residents in each district. Some districts had 150 thousand more residents than other districts; thus a vote in such a district had less weight than elsewhere.

My suits re-apportioned various districts, giving them equal chance—for the first time, for example, for Latinos and Afro-Americans to have proper representation in Congress, in Chicago City Council, and other elected tribunals. Before the era of plain-paper cheap copiers, I used a high-speed mimeograph stencil machine to crank out stacks of court papers in each case, to combat as many as 50 opposing lawyers in each case. A few corrupt judges got steam-rollered by me, also, when they tried to hold secret proceedings, without me, in some of these publicly important suits.

Over the last ten years, on my weekly public-access cable TV show, I occasionally outrage some naive viewers by proclaiming that we ordinary Americans may be in a permanent post-election period. That what ails America most likely cannot be remedied anymore by elections, since the ruling elite pick only blackmailable types for high office. That the ultra-rich rule us BY THE BULLET, NOT THE BALLOT. Leaders, who some of us thought were charming and possibly good for the people, have been assassinated, and the blame falsely put on lone assassins.

Is this the last presidential election for America?

And from here on in, will ordinary Americans be interested only in the right to bear arms under the 2nd Amendment—a guarantee by force against a central government tyranny to abolish all our other beautifully-worded rights, privileges, and immunities set forth in the Bill Of Rights?

I am often misunderstood as a result of being ahead of the parade. Stay tuned.

The Breakaway States In America

PART SIX (11/29/00)

In the beginning, this nation was referred to as the United States IN America. Somewhere along the way, this country came to be called the United States OF America.

The American Civil War had something to do with it. So did the federal law in 1863 authorizing NATIONAL banks. Then there were the post-Civil War flip-flop decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court regarding Greenbacks, U.S. Currency.

The U.S. Constitution took away from the states any right the inhabitants may have thought they had as independent states. For example, notice these provisions of the Constitution, Article I, Section 9: "No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State. No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another; nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another."

More than whispers. Some are talking about the idea of an illegitimate CENTRAL GOVERNMENT in the United States. The consequence, so far, of the Year 2000 Presidential Election, is that one candidate won the plurality of the popular vote, and the other claims to have won the Electoral Vote.

Even those who are not conspiracy theorists have to recognize historical facts. The ruling elite in New York financed Leon Trotsky and the creation of the Soviet Union, in 1917, with V. Lenin, and later, Josef Stalin.

And following World War II, the American aristocracy spread the anti-Soviet feeling in the U.S. with the Red Scare. It was a way of temporarily strengthening the U.S. central government with the perception of a "foreign enemy". All along, of course, the enemy of the ruling elite was actually the common folk of America.

Among the cross-currents have been other events. Since at least the War of 1812, Great Britain has vowed to overthrow the American central government and return this continent and its inhabitants to being British subjects in puppet colonies. The Brits fanned the flames of a natural and regional hostility between the South and the North, leading to the American Civil War. British ships ran the Union blockade, to bring weapons to the Confederacy. (After the war, a key official of the Confederacy fled to England and lived out his life there.)

The Brits played a role in the political assassination of President Abraham Lincoln. In the 36 years after the War Between The States, as southerners call it, we had two presidents who greatly resisted British interference with the industrial and financial developments and aspirations of the U.S. One President, James Garfield, was assassinated with British connivance, and it was falsely blamed on a lone assassin. The other was President William McKinley, likewise so murdered and blamed on a "lone nut". (I recognize that you may have read otherwise in your high school U.S. history textbook. And maybe relied on the falsely published accounts that a "lone assassin" killed President John F. Kennedy in 1963, his brother Bobby running for President in 1968, and their friend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., murdered as well in 1968.)

By the late 1980s, the World Government promoters, and their secret societies, set about to destroy their creature, the Soviet Union. They did this by attacking their government structure, fomenting natural, ethnic, and religious hostilities between the far-flung provinces. And by attacking their poorly designed banking system and currency.

The Western press began calling the warring pieces of the Soviet Union, as breakaway provinces. These portions of the U.S.S.R. undermined the Central Government in Moscow, by refusing to forward taxes and fees that all along financed the Soviet empire.

The American CIA supplied modern weapons and financing to the opposition to the Soviets in their war against Afghanistan. The outcome, somewhat like the inglorious ending to the U.S. intervention in the Viet Nam civil war, resulted in great loss of confidence in the central government. The result as war-losers, disgruntled, the soldiers of the Red Army at times have gone unpaid and live as vagabonds in tents.

The British Monarchy, carrying out their anti-U.S. Constitution policies, have set about to effectively dismember, dismantle, and discredit the American central government in Washington. In the simplest explanation, William Rockefeller Clinton was chosen by the secret Bilderberg Group of world elitists to be president. As a then rather obscure southern governor, he was invited to be anointed at their 1991 meeting in Germany. A CIA darling since college age, he was put, in 1992, as a massive fraud on the American people, to run against his mentor, the former commissar of America's secret political police, George Herbert Walker Bush.

With America more and more caused to be perceived as a broken window, the anger of Americans seems to be directed against the central government in Washington. This anguish is promoted and fomented by the British, like the North-South mess leading up to the American Civil War. A financial tailspin may be the trigger setting loose a smart-bomb to wreck the Washington government. In a more pedestrian analogy, some call it simply a horrendous foreign-created train wreck. Stay tuned.

A Nation's Destiny In A Time Of Awakening (And Thank You, Too!)

12/1/00 HATONN

Good evening, my scribe. It is I, Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in the Light of, and in Service to, The One Light—Creator God. Be still and be at peace.

You of the United States have a great machinery in place that is designed to bring about a mental attitude and a strong outcry for the “need” for change with respect to your country’s Constitution. As you can well see, there has been a great focus of attention placed upon the presidential elections, and which “puppet-head” will win the nation’s highest seat. There will be appeal after appeal filed, and the “problem” (engineered by the behind-the-scenes shadow government) of the popular vote verses the electoral vote system will give rise to this “need” for amending the U.S. Constitution.

This will eventually lead to a rapid downfall of the control structure so delicately being held in balance at this time. Why?

Because, when the would-be controllers gain access to the Constitution, they fully intend to re-write various parts of it that have NOTHING whatsoever to do with the voting procedure—so as to further usurp the rights of the country’s citizens and place much tighter controls on each of you.

This attempt to further suppress the U.S. citizen will meet with great resistance, and the ENERGY released will eventually destabilize completely the current government, and come as a “shock” (both literally and figuratively) to the arrogant ones who think they have a higher understanding of human nature.

One of their biggest overestimations will be of their control and influence over all of the large media organizations, not to mention the nearly uncontrollable realm of the Internet.

Be the diligent student and watch with the eye of the skeptic. Question all things that you hear, and study very closely what is NOT being talked about. The sleepy members of society will become quite aroused when the realization of what is planned for them impacts their conscious mind. This will awaken many who have never even so much as flinched a muscle in the past when “buckets of water” have been thrown upon them in the form of bureaucratic legislation and laws that have eroded or undermined their basic freedoms.

The United States Constitution was, with the Bill Of Rights, set up to guarantee basic human rights. The framers of the Constitution were all respected and God-loving men who included God in their decision-making and, though there were those who opposed the document, the majority saw the Guiding Hand of Wisdom at work and realized that there was great Reason for it’s creation, as it is an Inspired work—not wholly perfect, but inspired just the same.

The United States Constitution was, with the Bill Of Rights, set up to guarantee basic human rights. The framers of the Constitution were all respected and God-loving men who included God in their decision-making and, though there were those who opposed the document, the majority saw the Guiding Hand of Wisdom at work and realized that there was great Reason for it’s creation, as it is an Inspired work—not wholly perfect, but inspired just the same.

The United States once stood as a torch of freedom that all the world admired, and desired to be a part of, in the early years. Many an immigrant came to the United States in order to find a better life. Many came and found what they sought after. As time has progressed, more and more immigration laws have been passed so as to limit ones’ ability to move to the United States, for with great numbers the issue of control becomes a greater concern.

It had been determined by those who eventually established the League of Nations (later to become the United Nations) that the United States of America had TOO MUCH FREEDOM, and thus would not conform easily to the ideals and control from a One World Government point of view. Thus it has been deemed necessary, over the last 100 or so years, to embark upon a campaign of systematic tearing down of the country to literally bring it to its knees.

This began with removing the country from a gold or silver standard, and introducing income taxation along with the strict governmental control and regulation of all trade and commerce conducted within her borders as well as internationally. So great has this control been perfected that ALL of your country’s major manufacturing companies have either set up business outside the U.S. or they have parallel factories in place as they prepare for the transition to do so.

The raw materials used by the remaining factories come mostly from outside the U.S. now. As the government regulators impose more and more costly regulations upon manufacturers of goods, their costs rose exponentially as they efforted to keep up with the ever increasing demands of “Big Brother”. Most never realized what was actually happening, or the REAL reasons behind their being regulated out of existence.

One only needs to look to the likes of Microsoft and observe the ongoing government meddling in the affairs of big business so as to “protect” the “little guy” from the large “mean” corporate giant. The end result will inevitably be higher prices to the consumer (that’s YOU, the “little guy”) and more sales tax revenue for the government.

Who really wins? Does this sound like a government OF the people, BY the people, and FOR the people?

What ever happened to the basic individual rights of the people to seek and find their own personal prosperity without the threat of government? The answer lies in the business philosophies and regulations that govern these formed relationships called corporations, partnerships, trusts and such, wherein INDIVIDUALS form entities which are NOT HUMAN and therefore fall under a different set of rules. This is the basic story of how such basic concepts of freedom have been circumvented in your country.

Your businesses DO NOT have the same protection as do individuals under the Constitution Of The United States. Your businesses are often granted various tax advantages so that individuals will be greatly enticed to enter into business in such a manner as, say, a corporation, never realizing that by doing so they have created an entity that can more easily be controlled by “Big Brother”—especially in times of EMERGENCY, which is going to be nearly constant in your country.

The United States is destined to be the torch bearer to the world as a symbol of freedom. As she continues to evolve spiritually, as a collective whole, there will come a time when those awakened to the true nature of their spiritual heritage focus great Love and Light upon the travesties designed to enslave the masses of the world, and in doing so will spark within the hearts and minds of all ones a resonance that will align great unseen Energy for the purpose of bringing about this desired end result.

In doing this, the United States will once again return to the respected status and symbol of freedom from oppression that she once held. So moved will be those who bear witness to this unfolding that similar change will eventually spread around the globe, and all ones will enjoy the great time of peace spoken about in many of your world’s prophetic books.

The United States Constitution was designed to serve as a shield of sorts that would guarantee those of your nation TIME and FREEDOM to mature spiritually, as a whole, while the rest of the world for the most part struggled in the ways of old, under various forms of dictatorship. It has taken the eagle’s strength and vision to hold your nation together as long as it has, but in the coming transition it will be the gentle finesse and wisdom of the dove that will carry her forward as a truly lasting nation under God, which truly stands for liberty and justice for ALL.

Let not the distractions of this past month bedazzle you into a hypnotic state of sheer distraction. It is a deliberate and calculated “emergency”—with both the problem and the proposed solution being perpetrated from the same source. Yes, the controllers who pull the puppet strings can and have orchestrated ALL of the events you have witnessed. But, as always, there will be loose ends left dangling and unexpected twists that will unfold as damage control is summoned forth to put out the many “fires” that will be started in the ensuing months. Such is the nature of the “game” when actions are taken that are not born of Goodly (Godly) intent.

Pay attention, please, to the happenings in the Middle East regions. America, in general, is DELIBERATELY being kept in the dark concerning the true happenings in that area so that the citizens do not become too outraged at the atrocities and blatant disregard for basic human rights. No person with a conscience would sleep at night if they knew the truth behind the senseless bloodshed of the Palestinian people—who fight mostly with rocks against well armed Israeli troops.

Where is the United Nations in all of this? You guessed it, backing the Israelis. Even if they do NOTHING, the UN ends up supporting Israel, since the Palestinians have no real power to defend themselves.

Who decides who is “right” and who is “wrong”? Would not great public outcry cause great difficulty for the UN to stand by and do nothing? Yes, it most certainly would—and that is the very reason the United States is being forced to watch election debates, as commentator after commentator swamp you with “logic” and “reasoning” from all sides. The viewer is left in an exhausting state of confusion, as opinion is shifted and swayed from one side to the other, only to be shifted back again.

For those of you who see this deliberate mind control for what it is, and you quickly turn away, you will miss the ten-second news morsel that describes “hundreds killed today as Middle East fighting continues”. You wouldn’t have missed much, but you would miss the confirmations of what I speak if you don’t at least look.

THANK YOU ALL

On a much “Lighter” note, I take this opportunity to express a HEARTFELT THANK YOU to all of you ones who are responding to the call for help to support The SPECTRUM newspaper. I am well aware that many of you simply have not the means to offer monetary support, and offer greatly needed and appreciated Energy in the form of PRAYER. This has not gone unnoted, and your prayers and focus of the God-Force Energy HAS greatly assisted these ones in MANY an untold way. Please continue to offer your support and prayers. See The SPECTRUM flourishing within your mind, and it will be so.

I would especially like to acknowledge those of you who have sent what little extra you do have. The Energy and beautiful, kind letters of thanks and appreciation bring great joy to the hearts of those who make The SPECTRUM a physical reality month after month. Your encouragement lifts them up when they are tired, and Lightens their load a bit as they learn to balance the challenges of the physical while offering a helping hand via their work. THANK YOU, ONE AND ALL, FOR ASSISTING IN THIS MANNER.

I would also offer to you ones that The SPECTRUM has been averaging at least 15 new subscribers each month now, for the last year, with about 200 more subscribers this year than last. This brings great joy to know that there is a measurable increase in circulation, even if it be ever so slight. I thank those of you who share these works with your brethren, for your efforts become GREATLY multiplied, both in the physical and in a non-physical manner.

Though I strongly encourage you to share The SPECTRUM with others, please be mindful of another’s free-will choice and do not force your opinions, beliefs, or viewpoints upon another. There are no absolute end-all sources of Truth in your world, and you each have ample room for growth and understanding. Please be not offended or harbor the feelings of rejection if another “spits” on you for offering your Truth. Not all ones are ready for the level of Truth offered herein, and will, of natural course, reject that which overwhelms them.

Be patient, persistent, and gentle, and go forth knowing that others are actually looking to prove you wrong so that they can place their heads back into the sand rather than confront the personal responsibility of following a more en-Light-ened path.

Never give up your desire to be of assistance to others, for in helping another you greatly help self and the return Energy is multiplied thousands of times and returned to you, especially in your time of need.

God bless you all. And may you all find comfort in reading, herein, a special message from your brother, Esu “Jesus” Sananda, for his great teachings hold powerful keys to unlocking the answers to any conceivable challenge you could possibly face.

I am Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, come in Light and Service to you ones, as a member of the Hosts of Creator God—The One Light. May you never again put your head in the sand or close your eyes to that which is offered in Love, in response to your heart’s petitions for Understanding and Peace.

God bless you, one and ALL! Salu.
